14. A portion of this offering goes to the priest. Another goes to the party who is offering the sacrifice. This sacrifice thus enables the entire community to share a meal with each other and—symbolically—also with God.

15. There is no explanation as to why certain offerings (like thanksgiving or well-being offerings) must be eaten entirely on the first day, while others (like votive and freewill offerings, see next verse) can be kept for a couple of days. Health factors do not account for the difference.

16. votive or a freewill offering. These types of well-being sacrifices are also shared between the priest and the offering party. Their meat may be eaten for two days.

18. Leftover sacrificial meat must be destroyed by fire when not consumed within the designated time period. Keeping meat for three days in the climactic conditions of Israel would have been a health hazard and may underlie the concern in this case. However, this reason alone cannot explain why the other well-being sacrifice—the one for thanksgiving—cannot be kept even for one day.

19. Flesh that touches anything impure. Because the meat of this sacrifice is eaten in a public place, it is not necessarily subject to the carefully flesh, only one who is pure may eat such flesh.²⁰ But the person who, in a state of impurity, eats flesh from יהוה's sacrifices of well-being, that person shall be cut off from kin.²¹ When a person touches anything impure, be it human impurity or an impure animal or any impure creature, and eats flesh from יהוה's sacrifices of well-being, that person shall be cut off from kin.

²²And spoke to Moses, saying: ²³Speak to the Israelite people thus: You shall eat no fat of ox or sheep or goat.²⁴ Fat from animals that died or were torn by beasts may be put to any use, but you must not eat it.²⁵ If anyone eats the fat of animals from which offerings by fire may be made to יהוה, the person who eats it shall be cut off from kin.²⁶ And you must not consume any blood, either of monitored conditions of the Tabernacle; therefore, the Torah specifies the care that a person must take when eating this offering.

only one who is pure. The requirement of ritual purity (see Leviticus 15) means that a woman may not bring this sacrifice or eat from it during her term of menstrual impurity (niddah), nor for several weeks following childbirth (40 days after the birth of a son, and 80 days after the birth of a daughter; see at Leviticus 12). Likewise, a man who has an emission of semen or other discharges cannot offer the sacrifice or eat from it until he regains a state of ritual purity.

20. cut off from kin. This punishment of being “cut off” (Heb. kareit) can be understood in a number of ways. The expression could mean that the individual should be ostracized, that is, deliberately excluded from the community. The term could also refer to divinely inflicted childlessness, a condition that in time will “cut” that person’s bloodline from the community (a consequence that does not entail communal punishment). Jacob Milgrom suggests in addition that kareit could mean that such a person will not be buried with the ancestors—and thus be denied the kind of reunification that marks a full life (Leviticus, 2004, p. 66). There are eighteen cases in the Torah that prescribe kareit (see Milgrom, p. 65). The verb form of the root k-r-t also appears as the term for making a covenant, such as when God makes a covenant with Abram (karat... b’rit) in Genesis 15:18.

בָשָׂר : ²⁰ וְהַנֶּפֶשׁ אֲשֶׁר-תִּאכְלֶל בַּשָּׂר מִזְבֵּחַ הַשְׁלָמִים אֲשֶׁר לִיהוָה וְטֻמְאָתוֹ עַלְיוֹ נִכְרְתָה הַנֶּפֶשׁ הַהּוּא מַעֲמִיקָה : ²¹ וְנֶפֶשׁ בִּיתְתַּגֵּעַ בְּכָל-טָמֵא בְּטָמֵאת אָדָם אֲוֹ וְ בְּבָהָמָה טָמֵאה אֲוֹ בְּכָל-שְׁקִין טָמֵא וְאֲכֵל מִבְשָׁר-זְבַח הַשְׁלָמִים אֲשֶׁר לִיהוָה נִכְרְתָה הַנֶּפֶשׁ הַהּוּא מַעֲמִיקָה : פ

²² וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים שָׁלֹשׁ דָבָר אֲלֹבְנִי יִשְׁرָאֵל לְאָמֵר בְּלַחְלָב שׂוֹר וּכְשֵׁב וְעַזּוֹ לֹא תִאכְלֵוּ וְחַלֵב גְּבַלָה וְחַלֵב טְרָפָה יִשְׁשָׁה לְכָל-מִלְאָכָה וְאֲכֵל לֹא תִאכְלֵהוּ : ²³ כִּי בְּלַאכְלֵל חַלֵב מִן-הַבָּהָמָה אֲשֶׁר יִקְרִיב מִפְנֵה אֲשֶׁר לִיהוָה נִכְרְתָה הַנֶּפֶשׁ הַאֲכָלָת מַעֲמִיקָה : ²⁴ וְכָל-דָם לֹא תִאכְלֵוּ בְּכָל מַוְשְׁבָתֵיכֶם לְעוֹף

kin. Heb. ammim, which in this expression the text’s intended audience would have understood in a gender-inclusive sense, as the translation reflects. Despite the Bible’s penchant for patrilineal genealogies and patronyms, female relatives also counted as kin. See at Genesis 10:1. (See also “predecessors” in The Contemporary Torah, 2006, p. 408.)

PROHIBITIONS REGARDING THE FAT AND THE BLOOD (7:22–27)

Leviticus 3:17 prohibits eating the blood and certain types of fat of the sacrificed animal. The present section adds a punishment for violating this command. The rationale for not consuming blood (according to 17:10–12) is that the life of a living being is in the blood. No explanation is given for bird or of animal, in any of your settlements.²⁷ Any-one who eats blood shall be cut off from kin.

²⁸ And spoke to Moses, saying: ²⁹ Speak to the Israelite people thus: The offering to יְהוָה from a sacrifice of well-being must be presented by the one who offers that sacrifice of well-being to יְהוָה: ³⁰ one's own hands shall present one's offerings by fire. The offerer shall present the fat with the breast, the breast to be elevated as an elevation offering before יְהוָה; ³¹ the priest shall turn the fat into smoke on the altar, and the breast shall go to Aaron and his sons. ³² And the right thigh from your sacrifices of well-being you shall present to the priest as a gift; ³³ he from among Aaron's sons who offers the blood and the fat of the offering of well-being shall get the right thigh as his portion. ³⁴ For I have taken the breast of elevation offering and the thigh of gift offering from the Israelites, from their sacrifices of well-being, and given them to Aaron the priest and to his sons as their due from the Israelites for all time.

³⁵ Those shall be the perquisites of Aaron and the perquisites of his sons from יְהוָה's offerings by fire, once they have been inducted to serve יְהוָה as priests; ³⁶ these commanded to be given them,

not eating the fat. However, references to “fat” elsewhere as especially valuable (for example, Genesis 45:18), suggest that burning fat completely might represent offering a precious gift to God. Here end the instructions to the priests.

FURTHER DETAILS REGARDING THE WELL-BEING SACRIFICE (7:28–36)

This section, addressed to all, describes a division of labor between those who bring the offering and the officiating priest. It specifies which portion of the sacrifice goes to the officiating priest (the breast and the right thigh) and which to the party making the offering (the rest of the offering).

30. one's own hands shall present. Those mak-

וְלֹבֶה מֵהֶם: ²⁷ בְּלִנְפָשׁ אֲשֶׁר-תַּאכְלֶל בְּלִדָּם
וְנִכְרְתָה הַנֶּפֶשׁ הַהְוָא מַעֲמִיקָה: פ

²⁸ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים לְאֹמֶר: ²⁹ הִנֵּה
אֱלֹהִים יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאֹמֶר הַמְקֻרְבֵּב אֶת-זִבְחָה
שְׁלָמִים לְיְהוָה יִבְיא אֶת-קְרֵבָנוּ לְיְהוָה
מְזֻבָּח שְׁלָמִים: ³⁰ יָדוֹ תַּبְיא אֶת אֲשֶׁר
יְהוָה אֶת-הַחֶלֶב עַל-הַחֶזֶל יִבְיא נָנוֹת:
הַחֶזֶל לְהַנִּיף אֶת-תוֹתְנוֹפָה לְפָנֵי יְהוָה:
³¹ וְהַקְטִיר הַפְּתָן אֶת-הַחֶלֶב הַמְזֻבָּח
וְהִיא הַחֶזֶל לְאַהֲרֹן וּלְבָנָיו: ³² וְאֶת שָׁוֹק
שְׁלָמִיכֶם: ³³ הַמְקֻרְבֵּב אֶת-זִבְחָה הַשְּׁלָמִים
וְאֶת-הַחֶלֶב מִבְנֵי אַהֲרֹן לוֹ תַּהֲיוּ שָׁוֹק
הַיְמִין לְמִנְחָה: ³⁴ כִּי אֶת-חֶזֶל הַתְּנוּפָה וְאֶת
שָׁוֹק הַתְּרוּמָה לְקַחְתִּי מֵאֶת בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל
מְזֻבָּח שְׁלָמִיהם וְאֶת-אֶתֶּם לְאַהֲרֹן הַפְּתָן
וּלְבָנָיו לְחַק-עוֹלָם מֵאֶת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל:
³⁵ זֹאת מְשִׁיחָת אַהֲרֹן וִימְשִׁיחָת בְּנֵי מֹשֶׁא
יְהוָה בַּיּוֹם הַקָּרֵיב אֶתֶּם לְכָהֵן לְיְהוָה:
³⁶ אֲשֶׁר צֹהֵר יְהוָה לְתַת לְהָם בַּיּוֹם מְשִׁיחָה

ing a sacrifice physically bring the offering to the altar. We learn from Numbers 30 that women make vows, and we learn from Leviticus 7:16 that vows often entailed making an offering. The present law implies that Israelite women, like Israelite men, would have access to the altar on these occasions if they were in a state of ritual purity. Note the story of Hannah: she vows to dedicate her son; then she brings him to the sanctuary where she also slaughters a sacrifice (I Samuel 1:11, 24–25).

34. the breast . . . and the thigh. These large portions of the animal provide economic compensation to the priests, who did not usually own land and therefore could not produce their own food like other Israelites (Numbers 18:20; but see Joshua 21, where priests do seem to get some pasture land).

once they had been anointed, as a due from the Israelites for all time throughout the ages.

³⁷Such are the rituals of the burnt offering, the meal offering, the purgation offering, the reparation offering, the offering of ordination, and the sacrifice of well-being,³⁸with which charged Moses on Mount Sinai, when commanding that the Israelites present their offerings to יהוה, in the wilderness of Sinai.

8 spoke to Moses, saying: ²Take Aaron along with his sons, and the vestments, the anoint-

אתם מְאַת בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל חֲקַת עוֹלָם לְדָרְתֶּם:

³⁷זֹאת הַתּוֹרָה לְעַלָּה לְמִנְחָה וְלְחַטָּאת וְלְאַשְׁם וְלְמַלְוָאִים וְלִזְבָּחָה הַשְׁלָמִים:

³⁸אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֱתִ-מְשָׁה בְּהַר סִינַי בַּיּוֹם צוֹתָו אֶת-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְהַקְרִיב אֶת-

קָרְבָּנִים לְיְהוָה בְּמִקְדָּשָׁר סִינַי: פ

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹמֶשֶׁ לְאָמֵר: ² קְחַ אֶת-אַהֲרֹן וְאֶת-בָּנָיו אֶתְוָ וְאֶת-הַבָּנִים

AFFIRMATION OF THE SINAITIC ORIGIN OF THE SACRIFICIAL PRACTICES (7:37–38)

This concluding section brings to a close the extensive instructions about sacrifices that began in Leviticus 1:2. These verses specify that the anointed priests must come from the line of Aaron.

37. rituals. Heb. torah; see at 6:2.

38. on Mount Sinai . . . in the wilderness of Sinai. The opening of Leviticus specified that God spoke to Moses from the Tent of Meeting (1:1) when commanding these sacrifices. The reference to Mount Sinai here stands in tension with that earlier mention of the Tent of Meeting. Contemporary critical scholars acknowledge the probability that various laws were assembled at different historical periods before reaching their final form. The attribution to Sinai aims to unify such traditions and communicate their antiquity and authority.

The Ordination of the Priests (8:1–36)

Detailed instructions for the ordination of the priests appeared in Exodus 28. The present passage describes the execution of these instructions. The account of the ordination, like that of building the Tabernacle itself, emphasizes that the instructions were carried out precisely (even if some of the details vary slightly). The ceremony entails the formal dressing of Aaron and his four sons. In English, the words “investment” and “investiture” refer (among other things) to the ritual of placing clothing—vestments—upon the priest. (Nowadays the term “invested” also applies to the official status conferred on a cantor, analogous to an “ordained” rabbi.)

Two issues in this section pertain indirectly to women. First, the priesthood in Leviticus is bestowed exclusively upon Aaron and his sons. Although it is common for priests in the ancient world to come from specifically designated families, it is unusual to have only a single family serve exclusively for generations. Moreover, whereas women in ancient Mesopotamia could be priests, the Torah authorizes only males from the line of Aaron to supervise and formally officiate at the communal sanctuary. The reason for this difference is not clear; see T'zaveh, Another View, p. 489. As for the women in priestly families—wives, daughters, and sisters—Leviticus 21–22 indicate that women are beneficiaries of certain privileges and also accountable to special standards (see especially at 22:12–13).

Second, the emphasis on the priests’ garments raises the question as to who made (and also who repaired) them. Did women in the priests’ household participate by spinning the yarn, weaving the fabric, and fashioning the garments? The Torah ing oil, the bull of purgation offering, the two rams, and the basket of unleavened bread;³ and assemble the community leadership at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting.⁴ Moses did as YHWH commanded him. And when the leadership was assembled at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting,⁵ Moses said to the leadership, “This is what YHWH has commanded to be done.”

⁶Then Moses brought Aaron and his sons forward and washed them with water.⁷ He put the tunic on him, girded him with the sash, clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod on him, girding

וְאַתָּה שְׁמֹן הַמְשֻׁחָה וְאַתָּה | פָּר הַחֲטֹאת
וְאַתָּה שְׁנִי הַעֲלִים וְאַתָּה סֶל הַמְצֹות: ³ וְאַתָּה
בְּלִדְבָּרָה הַקְהָל אַל-פְּתַח אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד:
⁴ וַיַּעֲשֶׂה מֹשֶׁה כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֲ�נוּ
וַתִּקְהָל הַעֲלָה אַל-פְּתַח אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד:
⁵ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶל-הָעָדָה זֶה הַדָּבָר אֲשֶׁר-צִוָּה יְהוָה לְעֹשֹׂת:
⁶ וַיָּקָרֵב מֹשֶׁה אֶל-אַהֲרֹן וְאֶת-בָּנָיו וְירְחֵץ
אֹתָם בְּמִים: ⁷ וַיְתַּעֲלֵמָיו אֶת-הַכְּבָתָנָה וַיַּחֲגֹר אֹתָן בְּאַבְנָת וַיְלַבֵּשׂ אֹתָן

does not provide this information here, but see at 6:3. What does appear to be important to the writer of these accounts is that the ordination of the priests—rather than other communal events—constitutes a turning point that deserves close attention.

The ordination ceremony includes sacrifices delineated in Leviticus 1–7. One of the most unusual aspects of the ceremony is the smearing of certain parts of the priest’s body with oil and blood (8:22–24). Such a ritual also marks the purification of a m’tzora—a person afflicted with certain types of skin disease (see 14:9–20 and 23:29).

GOD’S INSTRUCTIONS REGARDING THE ORDINATION OF THE PRIESTS (8:1–3)

The ordination of the priests begins when Moses places upon them their special accoutrements. Only priestly garments, not other clothes, receive an extensive description in the Bible. (Even the book of Esther, with its emphasis on the role of clothing, does not include detailed descriptions of clothes.) On the likelihood that women wove the fabric, see at 6:3.

2. Take Aaron along with his sons, and the vestments. A central feature of the ordination of the priests entails the formal dressing of the priests in “vestments,” an act that is reflected in English by the terms “vesting” and “investiture.” Exodus 28 describes these garments in detail, listing six items that are adorned with expensive material: a breastpiece, an ephod, a robe, a fringed tunic, a head-dress, and a sash.

3. community leadership. Literally, “the whole community,” but the term can also refer to representative adult males, which better fits the present context. See at 4:13.

MOSES’ ORDINATION OF THE PRIESTS (8:4–30)

Moses, who himself is not a priest but only a member of the tribe that claims descent from Levi, has the authority to sanctify and ordain the priests.

6. brought...forward. The Hebrew word is the same one used for offering a sacrifice (the root k-r-b). The priests in this ritual are, in a sense, an offering to God.

washed them. Ritual washing accompanies virtually all acts of purification. See, for example, 14:9.

7. robe. According to the book of Samuel, in the years after Hannah brings her young son to serve in God’s sanctuary, she makes for him “a little robe” (I Samuel 2:19) to go with his linen ephod (2:18).

ephod. This priestly outer garment was made of a variety of materials, including fabric most likely woven by women (see Exodus 28:5–12 for details and at Leviticus 6:3, above).

him with the decorated band with which he tied it to him.⁸ He put the breastpiece on him, and put into the breastpiece the Urim and Thummim.⁹ And he set the headdress on his head; and on the headdress, in front, he put the gold frontlet, the holy diadem—as יהוה had commanded Moses.

¹⁰Moses took the anointing oil and anointed the Tabernacle and all that was in it, thus consecrating them. ¹¹He sprinkled some of it on the altar seven times, anointing the altar, all its utensils, and the laver with its stand, to consecrate them. ¹²He poured some of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head and anointed him, to consecrate him. ¹³Moses then brought Aaron's sons forward, clothed them in tunics, girded them with sashes, and wound turbans upon them, as יהוה had commanded Moses.

¹⁴He led forward the bull of purgation offering. Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the bull of purgation offering, ¹⁵and it was slaughtered. Moses took the blood and with his finger put some on each of the horns of the altar, purifying the altar; then he poured out the blood at the base of the altar. Thus he consecrated it in order to make expiation upon it.

¹⁶Moses then took all the fat that was about the entrails, and the protuberance of the liver, and the two kidneys and their fat, and turned them into smoke on the altar.¹⁷The rest of the bull, its hide,

הפעיל וייתן עליו את־האפס ויחגֶר אותו
בוחשב האפס ויאפס לו בז' ⁸ וישם עליו
את־החוון ויתן אל־חוון את־האוורים
ואת־התמימים ⁹ וישם את־המצנפת על־
ראשו וישם על־המצנפת אל־מול פניו
את ציז הזהב נור הקדש כאשר צויה
יהוה אמרת־משה:

10 וַיָּקֹח מֵשֶׁה אֶת-שְׂמֹן הַמְשֻׁחָה וַיִּמְשַׁח
אֶת-הַמְשֻׁבָּן וְאֶת-כָּל-אֲשֶׁר-בוֹ וַיִּקְרֹדֵש
אֲתֶם: 11 וַיַּעֲמֹד מִפְנֵי עַל-הַמִּזְבֵּחַ שְׁבָע
פָּעָמִים וַיִּמְשַׁח אֶת-הַמִּזְבֵּחַ וְאֶת-כָּל-כָּלִיו
וְאֶת-הַכְּבֵד וְאֶת-כָּבֵן לִקְרָדֵש: 12 וַיַּצְלֵךְ
מִשְׁמָן הַמְשֻׁחָה עַל רֹאשׁ אַהֲרֹן וַיִּמְשַׁח
אָתוֹ לִקְרָדֵשׁ: 13 וַיִּקְרֹב מֵשֶׁה אֶת-בְּנֵי
אַהֲרֹן וַיְلַבֵּשׂ בְּתִנְعָם וַיְחַגֵּר אֲתֶם אֲבִינָט
וַיִּחְבֶּשׂ לְהֶם מְגֻבָּעוֹת בְּאַשְׁר צָוָה יְהוָה
אֶת-מְשֹׁה:

¹⁴ וַיָּגַשׁ אֶת פֶּרֶת הַחֲטֹאת וַיִּסְמֹךְ אֶחָרֶן
וּבְנֵיו אֶת-יִדְיָהֶם עַל-רֹאשׁ פֶּר הַחֲטֹאת:
¹⁵ וַיָּשַׁׁחַט וַיָּקַח מִשְׁהָא אֶת-יְהֻדָּם וַיִּתְּנַعַּל-קְרָנוֹת הַמּוֹזֵבָח סְבִיב בַּאֲצַבָּעַ וַיַּחֲטֹא אֶת-הַמּוֹזֵבָח וְאֶת-יְהֻדָּם יָצַק אֶל-יְסוֹד הַמּוֹזֵבָח
וַיַּקְדְּשָׂהוּ לְכֶפֶר עֲלֵיכֶם:

¹⁶ וַיָּקֹח אֶת-פֶל-הַחֲלֵב אֲשֶׁר עַל-הַקָּרְבָן
וְאֶת יִתְרָת הַכֶּבֶד וְאֶת-שְׂתִי הַכְּלִילָת וְאֶת-חַלְבָתָן וְנִקְטָר מְשָׁה הַמִּזְבֵּחַ: ¹⁷ וְאֶת-
הַפֶּר וְאֶת-עֲרוֹן וְאֶת-בְשָׂרוֹ וְאֶת-פְרָשָׂו שָׁרֶף

8. breastpiece. This is a jeweled metal plate that the priest wears, which lists the tribes of Israel —whom the priest symbolically carries when he officiates; see at Exodus 28:15–30. (Nowadays the metal breastplate or breastpiece on Torah scrolls in many synagogues represents an attempt to reproduce or symbolize this item.)

Urim and Thummim. The reference is to some physical object that priests used for consulting with God. It is unclear what the name means and what the object or objects looked like, although scholars have suggested that it was somewhat like a pair of dice that, when tossed, gave a “yes” or “no” answer to questions posed by the priest. See also at Exodus 28:30. The names suggest the meanings “light” (urim) and “right” or “whole” (tumim).

10-12. As these verses indicate, the act of anointing sanctifies the Tabernacle and its furnishings, as well as the priests.

its flesh, and its dung, he put to the fire outside the camp—as יהוה had commanded Moses.

¹⁸Then he brought forward the ram of burnt offering. Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the ram's head, ¹⁹and it was slaughtered. Moses dashed the blood against all sides of the altar. ²⁰The ram was cut up into sections and Moses turned the head, the sections, and the suet into smoke on the altar; ²¹Moses washed the entrails and the legs with water and turned all of the ram into smoke. That was a burnt offering for a pleasing odor, an offering by fire to יהוה—as יהוה had commanded Moses.

²²He brought forward the second ram, the ram of ordination. Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the ram's head, ²³and it was slaughtered. Moses took some of its blood and put it on the ridge of Aaron's right ear, and on the thumb of his right hand, and on the big toe of his right foot. ²⁴Moses then brought forward the sons of Aaron, and put some of the blood on the ridges of their right ears, and on the thumbs of their right hands, and on the big toes of their right feet; and the rest of the blood Moses dashed against every side of the altar. ²⁵He took the fat—the broad tail, all the fat about the entrails, the protuberance of the liver, and the two kidneys and their fat—and the right thigh. ²⁶From the basket of unleavened bread that was before יהוה, he took one cake of unleavened bread, one cake of oil bread, and one wafer, and placed them on the fat parts and on the right thigh. ²⁷He placed all these on the palms of Aaron and on the palms of

בְּאֵשׁ מִחוֹץ לְמִחְנָה בְּאַשֶּׁר צוֹה יְהוָה
אֲתִ-מְשָׁה:

¹⁸וַיִּקְרַב אַתְּ אַיִל הַעַלְלה וַיִּסְמְכוּ אַהֲרֹן
וּבָנָיו אֲתִ-יְדֵיכֶם עַל-רָאשׁ הַאַיִל:
¹⁹וַיִּשְׁחַט וַיְזַרֵּק מִשְׁה אֲתִ-הַדְקָם עַל-
הַמִּזְבֵּחַ סְבִיב: ²⁰וְאֲתִ-הַאַיִל נִתְחַזֵּק לִנְתְּחִי
וַיִּקְטַּל מִשְׁה אֲתִ-הַרְאֵשׁ וְאֲתִ-הַנְּתָחִים
וְאֲתִ-הַפְּדָר: ²¹וְאֲתִ-הַקְרֵב וְאֲתִ-הַכְּרָעִים
רְחֵץ בְּמִים וַיִּקְטַּל מִשְׁה אֲתִ-כְּבָל-הַאַיִל הַמִּזְבֵּחַ עַלְלה הוּא לְרִיחַ-נִיחָן
אֲשֶׁר הוּא לִיהוָה בְּאַשֶּׁר צוֹה יְהוָה אֲתִ- מִשְׁה:

²²וַיִּקְרַב אֲתִ-הַאַיִל הַשְׁנִי אַיִל הַמְּלָאִים
וַיִּסְמְכוּ אַהֲרֹן וּבָנָיו אֲתִ-יְדֵיכֶם עַל-רָאשׁ
הַאַיִל: ²³וַיִּשְׁחַט וַיִּקְחַח מִשְׁה מִדְמָנוֹ וַיִּתְּנַצֵּל
עַל-תְּנוּךְ אַזְּנֵי-אַהֲרֹן הַיְמָנִית וְעַל-בְּהֵן יְדוֹ
הַיְמָנִית וְעַל-בְּהֵן רְגָלוֹ הַיְמָנִית: ²⁴וַיִּקְרַב
אֲתִ-בְּנֵי אַהֲרֹן וַיִּתְּנַצֵּל מִשְׁה מִן-הַדְקָם עַל-
תְּנוּךְ אַזְּנֵט הַיְמָנִית וְעַל-בְּהֵן יְדֵם הַיְמָנִית
וְעַל-בְּהֵן רְגָלוֹ הַיְמָנִית וַיִּזְרַק מִשְׁה אֲתִ- הַדְקָם עַל-הַמִּזְבֵּחַ סְבִיב: ²⁵וַיִּקְחַח אֲתִ- הַחֲלֵב וְאֲתִ-הַאֱלֵיה וְאֲתִ-כְּלִיל-הַחֲלֵב אֲשֶׁר
עַל-הַקְרֵב וְאֲתִ-יְתְּרַת הַכְּבֵד וְאֲתִ-שְׁתִּי
הַכְּלִילִת וְאֲתִ-חַלְבֵּן וְאֲתִ-שּׂוֹק הַיְמִין:
²⁶וּמְפַל הַמְּלָאִות אֲשֶׁר | לִפְנֵי יְהוָה קָרְבָּן
חִלְתָּ מִצְחָה אַחַת וְחִלְתָּ לְחַם שְׁמַן אַחַת
וְרַקֵּק אַחַד וְיַשֵּׁם עַל-הַחֲלֵבִים וְעַל-שּׂוֹק
הַיְמִין: ²⁷וַיִּתְּנַצֵּל אֲתִ-הַכְּלֵל עַל בְּפִי אַהֲרֹן

22–24. The ordination ritual includes the peculiar act of smearing some of the animal's blood and some oil upon the priest's head, right ear, right thumb, and right toe—parts of the body that seem to represent the circumference of the whole. Leviticus does not explain the meaning of this act. Most likely it symbolizes the dedication and purification of the entire body or person. An identical ritual signals the purification of the m'tzora, the person stricken with a particular skin disease (on account of which he or she has been previously isolated from the community). This ritual is unique to these two occasions. It implies an analogy between the transition that the priest undergoes and that of the healed m'tzora. See Leviticus 14:9–20 and the comments there.

his sons, and elevated them as an elevation offering before יהוה.²⁸ Then Moses took them from their hands and turned them into smoke on the altar with the burnt offering. This was an ordination offering for a pleasing odor; it was an offering by fire to יהוה.²⁹ Moses took the breast and elevated it as an elevation offering before יהוה; it was Moses' portion of the ram of ordination—as יהוה had commanded Moses.

³⁰ And Moses took some of the anointing oil and some of the blood that was on the altar and sprinkled it upon Aaron and upon his vestments, and also upon his sons and upon their vestments. Thus he consecrated Aaron and his vestments, and also his sons and their vestments.

³¹ Moses said to Aaron and his sons: Boil the flesh at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting and eat it there with the bread that is in the basket of ordination—as I commanded: Aaron and his sons shall eat it;³² and what is left over of the flesh and the bread you shall consume in fire.³³ You shall not go outside the entrance of the Tent of Meeting for seven days, until the day that your period of ordination is completed. For your ordination will require seven days.³⁴ Everything done today, יהוה has commanded to be done [seven days], to make expiation for you.³⁵ You shall remain at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting day and night for seven days, keeping יהוה's charge—that you may not die—for so I have been commanded.

³⁶ And Aaron and his sons did all the things that had commanded through Moses.

וְעַל כְּפֵי בָנָיו וַיַּגֵּף אֲתֶם תִּנוֹפָה לִפְנֵי יהוה:²⁸ וַיַּקְרֵב מֹשֶׁה אֲתֶם מִעַל פְּפִיהם וַיַּקְרֵב הַמִּזְבֵּחַ עַל-הַעֲלָה מְלָאכִים הַמְלָאכִים לְרִיחֵךְ אֲשֶׁר הוּא לִיהוה:²⁹ וַיַּקְרֵב מֹשֶׁה אֶת-הַחֹזֶה וַיַּנְפֵּה רְנָנָה לִפְנֵי יהוה מִאֵיל הַמְלָאכִים לְמִשְׁׁה הַיְלֵד לִמְנָה בְּאָשֶׁר צִוָּה יהוה אֶת-מִשְׁׁה:

³⁰ וַיַּקְרֵב מֹשֶׁה מִשְׁמַן הַמְשֻׁתָּה וּמִנְ-הַדָּם אֲשֶׁר עַל-הַמִּזְבֵּחַ וַיַּזְבַּח אֶחָרֶן עַל-בְּגָדָיו וַיַּלְבִּינוּ וַיַּלְבְּגַדְיוּ בָנָיו אֶתְנוֹ וַיִּקְדְּשׁ אֶת-אֶחָרֶן אֶת-בְּגָדָיו וְאֶת-בָנָיו וְאֶת-בְּגָדָיו בָנָיו אֶתְנוֹ:

³¹ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶל-אֶחָרֶן וְאֶל-בָנָיו בְּשָׁלוֹ אֶת-הַבָּשָׂר פָּתַח אֶחָל מוֹעֵד וְשַׁטְתָּה תְּאַכְּלָו אֶתְנוֹ וְאֶת-הַלְּחָם אֲשֶׁר בְּסַל הַמְלָאכִים בְּאָשֶׁר צִוִּיתִי לְאָמֵר אֶחָרֶן וּבָנָיו יַאֲכְלָו: ³² וְהַנּוֹתֵר בְּבָשָׂר וּבְלָחֶם בְּאַש תְּשִׁרְפָּו: ³³ וּמִפְתָּח אֶחָל מוֹעֵד לֹא תִצְאֶה שְׁבָעַת יְמִים עַד יוֹם מְלָאת יְמִינֵיכֶם בַּי שְׁבָעַת יְמִים יְמַלֵּא אֶת-זִיקְרָתְכֶם: ³⁴ בְּאַשְׁר עַשְׂתָּה בַּיּוֹם הַזֶּה צִוָּה יהוה לְעַשֵּׂת לְכֹפֵר עֲלֵיכֶם: ³⁵ וּפְתָח אֶחָל מוֹעֵד תִשְׁבֹּו יוֹמָם וְלִילָה שְׁבָעַת יְמִים וְשְׁמַרְתֶּם אֶת-מִשְׁמָרָת יהוה וְלֹא תִמּוֹתוּ בַּיּוֹם צְוִיתִי:

³⁶ וַיַּעֲשֵׂת אֶחָרֶן וּבָנָיו אֶת כָּל-הַדְבָּרִים אֲשֶׁר-צִוָּה יהוה בְּיַד-מִשְׁׁה: ס

FINAL PREPARATORY STEPS: SEVEN DAYS OF THE PRIESTS' ISOLATION (8:31–36)

The ordination ritual bestows holiness on the priests. Their isolation, which echoes that of menstruating women or persons isolated for skin disease in Leviticus 13–15, emphasizes the power and danger of the holy. Only after these seven days can the priests officiate in sacrificial service. With the completion of this ritual, all is ready for initiating the sacrificial system of the Tabernacle for the benefit of the community. The next parashah begins by describing that event as taking place on the eighth day.

—Tamara Cohn Eskenazi

Another View

MOST LIKELY, Leviticus 6:11 specifies that “only the males” among Aaron’s descendants may eat of certain sacrifices (rather than “every male”). Why can the females in Aaron’s line not partake of these offerings? What determines which priestly portions are restricted to the sons of Aaron, and which may be shared by his daughters as well?

The answer lies in the degree of holiness of the offering. The biblical text distinguishes between sacrifices considered to be “most sacred” (kodesh kodashim) and those considered to be “sacred” (kodesh). Three types of offerings fall under the rubric of “most sacred”: the meal offering (6:10), the purgation offering (6:18) and the reparation offering (7:6). The three most sacred offerings are considered most holy, which means that anyone who touches them—much less partakes of them—must have been previously consecrated, that is, made holy. For this reason, these three sacrifices may be eaten only by Aaron and his sons, that is, the male descendants of the priestly line. Any male of Aaron’s line who has been consecrated—even the blemished priests who are not permitted to officiate—may partake of the most sacred portions within the sanctuary precinct.

In contrast, the priestly portions of offerings labeled simply as “sacred,” rather than “most sacred,” such as the sacrifice of well-being and the first fruits offerings, are not restricted to those who have been consecrated. These offerings can be consumed by all members of the priestly family and household, including both the sons and the daughters of the line of Aaron, as long as they are not in a state of ritual impurity (see Numbers 18:11–19 and Leviticus 22:1–16).

Which sacrificial portions may a priest share with his daughters?

It is interesting to note, however, that the daughter of a priest may eat of the portion of the sacred donations assigned to priests only while she is a member of a priestly household. According to Leviticus 22:12–14, if the daughter of a priest marries a layman, she may no longer eat of the sacred gifts. However, if she is widowed or divorced and without offspring, and she rejoins her father’s household, she can once again partake of the portion of sacred offerings allocated to the priests’ families.

—Hilary Lipka

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

This is the ritual of the burnt offering (6:2). The Rabbis understood the burnt offering as a sacrifice brought for sins of the heart or mind, hirhur halev.

According to Vayikra Rabbah 7.3, this notion was derived from Job’s explanation of his burnt offerings on behalf of his children, when he said, “Perhaps my children have sinned and blasphemed God in their thoughts” (Job 1:5). In an ongoing midrashic discussion as to which sacrifice is divinely preferred, Vayikra Rabbah 7.4 maintains that God favors the burnt offering because it is the only sacrifice that remains on the altar at night as well as during the day. A parable compares the situation to that of a king traveling in the desert. He stops first at one inn and eats and drinks, and then at another inn where he not only eats and drinks but also stays overnight, showing that he favors the latter. Conversely, Vayikra Rabbah 3 argues that God most esteems the meal offering because of its association with poverty.

TZAV

He shall then take off his vestments (6:4). The medieval commentator Rashi explains that this verse is a lesson in etiquette (derekh eretz), teaching that a servant should change clothes between preparing food and serving it.

One who offers it for thanksgiving (7:12). Vayikra Rabbah 9.4 asserts that God favors the thanksgiving offering because it is a freewill offering, rather than an obligatory one brought for the expiation of a sin. According to the Rabbis, the thanksgiving offering is the only sacrifice that will remain in the world-to-come (Vayikra Rabbah 9.7). Rashi comments on this verse (based on BT B'rachot 54b) that the thanksgiving offering is an appropriate response to the following “miraculous” deliverances: a safe journey across an ocean or desert, release from imprisonment, and recovery from a serious illness.

The thanksgiving offering is an appropriate response to recovery from a serious illness.

Such are the rituals of the burnt offering... and the sacrifice of well-being (7:37). Vayikra Rabbah 9.9 suggests that the sacrifice of well-being, the sh'lammim, is last in this list of sacrifices because of the importance of shalom, peace, a theme which also appears at the end of many prayers. The Midrash lists a number of examples where the value of peace is deemed higher than the value of truth. Many of these situations involve women and endorse the value of peace in marriage. The most famous biblical example is that of Sarah and Abraham: When Sarah laughs at the possibility of conceiving a child, she says that it is impossible because of her husband's age. However, when God repeats Sarah's words to Abraham, God reports only that she complained of her own age (Genesis 18). This “lie” is understood by the Rabbis as a sign of the greater importance of marital harmony over truth. A story is also told about Rabbi Meir and a woman who came to hear him preach one Friday night and ended up staying so late that she angered her husband. When her husband swore that she must spit in Rabbi Meir's face, Rabbi Meir miraculously understood this and pretended that he needed her to spit in his face for medical reasons, thereby restoring marital harmony (also Sifrei B'midbar 42; B'reishit Rabbah 48).

Take Aaron (8:2). The Rabbis connect this “taking” of Aaron for his priestly duties with another biblical use of the word “taking” with respect to Aaron—his taking of the people's gold and silver to make the Golden Calf in Exodus 32:4. As Vayikra Rabbah 10.4 puts it, “Let this ‘taking’ come and atone for that ‘taking.’” anointing oil. Vayikra Rabbah 10.8 relates that the original 12 logs of oil (72 rabbinic “eggs” worth) prepared by Moses miraculously sufficed not only to anoint the sanctuary and its vessels, and Aaron and his sons on each of the seven days of the sanctuary's consecration, but also to anoint future generations of high priests and kings.

You shall remain at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting day and night for seven days, keeping הַנְּחִילָה's charge (8:35). Midrash Tanchuma connects this seven-day seclusion of the priests to the customary seven days of mourning after a family member's death: Aaron was unknowingly in mourning for the future death of his two oldest sons on the eighth day—the day of the final consecration of the Tabernacle (see the next parashah). Aaron's period of pre-mourning is compared to the pre-mourning that God is said to have done for seven days prior to the Flood (Tanchuma, ed. Buber II, 21–22).

—Rachel Anisfeld

Contemporary Reflection

ELIZABETH EHRLICH WAS ONCE a comfortable “cultural Jew.” The practice of Jewish religion held little attraction for her. Miriam’s Kitchen: A Memoir (1997) is Ehrlich’s report on a year spent learning from her mother-in-law, Miriam, a Polish Holocaust survivor, the details of domestic religion—the laws and the lore. As the year passed, Ehrlich grew increasingly interested in becoming a ritual specialist in her home. She wanted to “infuse the minutiae of everyday life with something more.” She recognized that someone would have to make this a “priority mission,” and that that someone would be her.

We can draw an arc from Elizabeth Ehrlich’s kitchen back to the Torah portion before us. Many contemporary Jews find this portion among those that make their eyes glaze over. Reform theologian Rachel Adler reports that when she was growing up she never heard the word “ritual” without it being prefaced by the word “meaningless.” Likewise, Arnold Eisen, a scholar of contemporary Judaism, for many years kept his sights on so-called higher things (like faith and covenant) in lieu of studying the sacrificial system (Taking Hold of Torah, 1997, p. 71). If the rituals of sacrifice in the sanctuary (6:1–7:48) seem to be of little interest, the elaborate rites for ordaining priests (8:1–36) appear to be both archaic and problematic in their exclusion of women from spiritual leadership.

Over the years Adler, Eisen, and many others have come to appreciate the power of the rituals described in this parashah. As we learn about ritual as a human phenomenon, we come to understand it as a language of its own, uniquely meaningful. To do justice to the sacrificial system, we need to contextualize Israelite sacrifice with the help of anthropology, sociology, comparative religion, and even neurobiology. We can ask also how this ritual of sacrifice was transformed in Christianity and in Judaism. When we consider the Jewish transformation of the sacrificial system, the question of gender, power, spirituality, and leadership can emerge in a more nuanced light.

Anthropologist Mary Douglas, who has been called “the mother of ritual studies,” shows that Leviticus has a specific way to approach the subject of spirituality and the body in relation to sacrifices (see the introduction to 1:1–3:7, p. 571).

Christianity transformed sacrifices by bringing sacrifices’ symbolism right into the heart of its worship service. Priests prepared and congregants ate and drank the Eucharist, the body and blood of the ultimate “lamb” of God. Carolyn Walker Bynum documents that although women were marginalized, in the Middle Ages nuns and upper-class lay women found their way into this system of sacralized food through rituals of fasting and in ecstatic feasting (Holy Feast and Holy Fast, 1987).

We can draw an arc from our kitchen of today back to the Torah portion before us.

After the destruction of Jerusalem’s Temple, the Rabbis replaced the sacrificial system in two ways. The first was to commune with God through prayer and study. The second was via a system that maintained sacrifices in a new form, hinted at in 7:22–27: The whole complex of laws and rituals around preparing and eating food became another way in which the sacrificial system lived on. With this change, women became the ritual specialists for what was once temple sacrifice in its domestic transformation—because women in traditional Jewish society, as in many cultures, control food resources.

The Talmud says that the table upon which we eat is like the altar of the Temple (BT B'rachot 55a). We are bidden to wash our hands before breaking bread not simply to cleanse them, but because the priests washed their hands before they offered a sacrifice. When making bread, the baker takes a small piece of the dough (challah) and burns it to represent the sacrifice. On the Sabbath, the challot represent the showbreads sacrificed at the Temple.

TZAV

Guarding the traditional food taboos, taking challah, preparing the home for holidays and for the Sabbath (literally “making Sabbath”), and distributing food to the poor—all of these are areas in which women have controlled and executed significant ritual functions. There is an old saying quoted by Hayim Soloveitchik: “A yidishe bale-boste (Jewish home-maker) takes instruction from her mother only.”

Susan Starr Sered, an anthropologist of religion, conducted a study of illiterate Kurdish Jewish women who were living in Jerusalem. That research led her to challenge preconceptions about the nature of spirituality and the holy. In her book Women as Ritual Experts (1992), she reports that these women developed religious culture alongside the Judaism of text and synagogue practiced by the men. As she notes, what anthropologist Robert Redfield calls the “little tradition” was based in the home, where women were the ritual experts. The domestic religion used many of the same symbols and ideas of the “male” Judaism but applied them to sanctify the daily tasks of the women, in the domain that they controlled. In Sered’s study, food preparation loomed large, from maintaining the laws of kashrut in the home to distributing cookies at the graves of ancestors after prayers had been answered. These women had developed what she called a “devotional autonomy.”

During the Holocaust, some Jewish women who were interned in Terezin compiled a cookbook from memory. The Terezin prisoners recalled and wrote down their recipes for chocolate torte, breast of goose, plum strudel, and other traditional dishes while surviving on potato scraps. Their effort was a kind of spiritual revolt, an act of resistance against brutality, calling to mind the everyday world they had known and presided over. These half-forgotten recipes, scribbled on scraps of paper, became the texts that helped them to transcend their situation. Decades later, their book found its way to the daughter of one of the authors who had died in the camps. The book was published as In Memory’s Kitchen in 1996 by Cara de Silva.

Elizabeth Ehrlich—the kitchen apprentice to her mother-in-law—learned something surprising about spiritual leadership. This is not to say that women today should accept exclusion from the realms of study or politics and retreat back to home and hearth. Rather, as we seek lives of spiritual integrity, we would do well to widen our gaze beyond the so-called higher things, to recall the power of the home through which Jewish women—against great odds—have powerfully continued connection to God and community across generations.

—Nancy Fuchs Kreimer

.

Voices

.

from To My Country

Rahel (transl. Robert Friend)

Leviticus 6:12–16

Modest are the gifts I bring you.
 I know this, mother.
 Modest, I know, the offerings of your daughter:
 Only an outburst of song
 on a day when the light flares up, only a silent tear
 for your poverty.

Eating the Bones

Ellen Bass

Leviticus 7:15–18

The women in my family strip the succulent flesh from broiled chicken, scrape the drumstick clean;
 bite off the cartilage, chew the gristle, crush the porous swellings
 at the ends of each slender baton.
 With strong molars
 they split the tibia, sucking out the dense marrow.
 They use up love, they swallow every dark grain,
 so at the end there's nothing left,
 a scant pile of splinters on the empty white plate.

No Sign

Linda Stern Zisquit

Leviticus 7:37

My body moves
 through the flame of yours without a trace of carbon on my skin, no sign
 I burn, no evidence how flammable how charred these sinewy parts are.

When I Melt Down

Naomi Replansky

Leviticus 7:37

When I melt down in your furnace
 I want to take shape in your mold.
 Blast me, cast me, change me,
 Before the wind turns cold.

Look, from the red-hot center
 I lift up my white-hot face.
 My nose finds its bridge as always,
 My eyes flow back into place.

Neither destroyed nor diamond
 I walk from the core of your flame,
 The rain does not hiss when it hits me,
 And I answer to my old name.

TZAV

Celebrating Courage and Vision: An Appreciation of Rabbi Sally Priesand

Jennifer Clayman

Leviticus 8

Because of you, Sally, and those who came after you, I was never told that a woman can't be a rabbi. Because of you and those who came after you, my rabbi was able to stand up on the bimah at my Bat Mitzvah and tell me that he thought I should be a rabbi. And because of you and those who came after you, my colleagues and I have been blessed by the presence of rabbinic mentors, both female and male.

Today, celebrating your retirement, 35 years since you were the first woman ever to be ordained by a rabbinical seminary, I wouldn't say that I take women rabbis for granted, because I don't. And I won't say that we're accepted everywhere, because we're not. But we're not so unusual, either. I was the fourth woman rabbi hired by my congregation, and we've since been joined by the fifth. The congregation is accustomed to women's voices from the pulpit, women's ideas about God, Torah and Israel, and women's authority in difficult times.

We owe you a great deal. Your chesed has changed our lives and changed a world that has missed women rabbis for far too long.

Tzav

Laurie Patton

Leviticus 8:10–12

This was no sprinkling,

It was more majestic,
and thorough.
The desert world stood solemn as Aaron's whole head was oiled;
and then it gleamed,
pink and comforting,
while the sand and stone cooled in the evening.

But however dignified
Aaron was that day,
he must also have thought of a child's bath,
and a woman's hands tracing white rivers of soap down his head.

At once priest and infant, he must have known the strong, safe palms of a mother, and of Moses,
and of God
had become one.

from Clothes My Mother Made

Hanna Zacks

Leviticus 8:7

In the drawer of the bedroom chest
Two dresses and several sweaters
Some crocheted, some knit,
Are carefully folded.
Over thirty years ago my mother made them.
In the evenings, sitting in her armchair,
Tirelessly, with needles or crocheting hooks,
She would interlace loop after loop of yarn,
To create the material for the clothes
She would then send me.

A pleasure, doing this work was,
Not a hardship.
She wrote in answer to my question,
It made her feel closer to me.
Her love, her longing,
The very essence of her soul,
She wove into every stitch.
Permeated by her energy,
Soft and warm like tender caresses,
Like the comforting touch of her hand,
The things she made felt on my skin.

from The Tapestry of Jewish Time

Nina Beth Cardin

Leviticus 8:7

We Jews are a union of weavers. Interlacing our traditions and languages, our rituals and laws, with fibers gathered from the cultures around us, we each weave a personal shawl of Judaism. Some shawls are open and loose, allowing the currents of other cultures to flow in and out easily. Others are fine and tight, holding much of Jewish culture in and foreign cultures out.

The world of Judaism is filled with shawls of different weaves, from loose to fine.... Each adds its flair, its strength, and its warmth to the sacred garment of the Jewish people.... And every now and then we add a thread or two of a new hue and a new texture that serves to enrich and extend our wardrobe.

At the Loom

Linda Pastan

Leviticus 8:7

You sit at the loom, your hands raised
like silhouetted birds, or like a harpist poised at the strings of an instrument whose chords are colors,
their slow accumulation, thread by thread—a kind of bleeding upward the way the sky bleeds from the horizon up after certain sunsets.
Monk's belt and rosepath...
plainweave and twill...
The shuttle moves back and forth, trailing its wake of yarn
as if by accident, and patterns that seem random at first multiply into beauty.
No wonder Penelope burned with patience.
Somewhere a sheep bleats in the night, a silkworm stirs in its cocoon.
You weave a spell,
I wear it on my back,
and though the chilly stars go bone naked
we are clothed.

שְׁמִינִי ◆ Sh'mini

LEVITICUS 9:1–11:47

Purity and Danger in the Sanctuary and the Home

PARASHAT SH'MINI ("eighth," referring to the eighth day of ordination) describes the ritual on the day after Aaron's ordination ceremony. In the previous two parashot, Leviticus 1–7 presented rules for the sacrificial service, while Leviticus 8 described the priestly ordination of Aaron and his sons. In this parashah, Aaron begins to officiate as chief priest.

This parashah includes a strange story of the fire from God which kills Nadab and Abihu, Aaron's oldest sons (10:1–7). It concludes with dietary laws and with the demand that Israel be holy—for God is holy (11:45). In this parashah, the theme of holiness expands from the sanctuary to the priests and to the people.

Contemporary readers are often troubled by the descriptions of the sacrificial service. Nevertheless, sacrifice was an integral part of society in the ancient Near East. Every major city in antiquity had its temple where specially ordained priests conducted animal sacrifices. As elsewhere in antiquity, Leviticus also demands that no one can eat meat unless a portion of it is offered first as a sacrifice to God. The sacrificial altar is God's dining table.

This parashah says practically nothing about women. Many temples in the ancient world included women as priests, but ancient Israel seems to have recognized only males in this role

Women were responsible for applying the dietary laws.

(see T'tzaveh, Another View, p. 489; and at 9:1). Although the priestly laws in the Bible mostly concern men, priests' daughters—and presumably wives—were able to partake of some of the offerings, as 10:14 indicates (see also 22:12–13).

Of special relevance to women are the dietary laws in Leviticus. These apply to all Israelites. However, because women were responsible for food preparation, they were responsible for applying these laws (see at Leviticus 11).

—Lisbeth S. Fried

Outline—

I. RITUAL OFFERINGS BEGIN (9:1–24)

- A. Ritual of purgation for Aaron the priest and his household (vv. 1–14)
- B. Ritual of purgation for the people (vv. 15–21)
- C. Conclusion: appearance of the presence of God (vv. 22–24)

II. THE STRANGE FIRE OF NADAB AND ABIHU (10:1–7)

III. LAWS FOR AARON THE PRIEST AND HIS HOUSEHOLD (10:8–20)

IV. DIETARY LAWS FOR THE ISRAELITE PEOPLE (11:1–47)

- A. Laws regarding animals that walk on land (vv. 1–8)
- B. Laws regarding animals that live in water (vv. 9–12)
- C. Laws regarding animals that fly in the air (vv. 13–19)
- D. Laws regarding animals that swarm in the air (vv. 20–23)
- E. Laws regarding carcasses of non-edible animals (vv. 24–28)
- F. More laws regarding forbidden foods (vv. 29–43)
- G. Summary statement and rationale: you shall be holy (vv. 44–47)

9:1

On the eighth day Moses called Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel. ²He said to Aaron: “Take a calf of the herd for a purgation offering and a ram for a burnt offering, without blemish, and bring them before יהוה. ³And speak to the Israelites, saying: Take a he-goat for a purgation offering; a calf and a lamb, yearlings without blemish, for a burnt offering; ⁴and an ox and a ram for an offering of well-being to sacrifice before יהוה;

וַיְהִי בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁמִינִי קָרָא מֹשֶׁה לְאַהֲרֹן וְלִבְנָיו וְלִזְקָנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ² וַיֹּאמֶר אֱלֹהִים אֶל־אַהֲרֹן קְח־לְךָ עַגֵּל בָּנִי־בָקָר לְחַטָּאת וְאַיִל לְעַלְלה תְּמִימָם וְהַקָּרֵב לִפְנֵי יְהֻדָּה: ³ וְאֶל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל תֹּרֶבֶר לְאָמֹר קְדוּ שְׁעִיר־עִזּוּם לְחַטָּאת וּעַגֵּל וּכְבָשׂ בְּנֵי־שְׁנָה תְּמִימָם לְעַלְלה: ⁴ וְשֹׂר וְאַיִל לְשִׁלְמִים לְזֹבֵחַ לִפְנֵי

Ritual Offerings Begin (9:1–24)

The parashah begins on the eighth day (hence its name), the day after the seven-day ordination ceremony of the priests. Aaron now begins his priestly duties and the Tabernacle's activities commence. The first part of Leviticus provided the rules for the sacrificial system, but only now that the priests have been ordained can the worship itself be inaugurated.

RITUAL OF PURGATION FOR AARON THE PRIEST AND HIS HOUSEHOLD (9:1–14)

Prior to officiating, the priests themselves must undergo a ritual of purification in order to protect both the sanctuary and the people from contaminating elements.

i. Aaron and his sons. Aaron's sons begin now to function as priests, and they will lead the congregation upon his death. According to 10:14, Aaron also has (unnamed) daughters. Do they also participate in running the Tabernacle along with his sons? According to Exodus 38:8, women “perform tasks (tzovot) at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting.” As noted in the comment there, the verb tzovot seems to indicate the work of a support staff. Perhaps that reference to women alludes to, or at least includes, Aaron's daughters. They might prepare the basins, the knives, the water, and other materials needed for the Tabernacle.

2–4. The inauguration involves four different types of sacrifice: a purgation offering (see Leviticus 4); a burnt offering (see Leviticus 1); an offering of well-being (see Leviticus 3); and a meal offering (see Leviticus 2). Every type of offering is brought except the asham, the reparation offering (see 5:15–26). There is no implication that the priests or the people had deliberately trespassed; therefore, perhaps, there is no need for the asham.

- Food prohibitions fit into the historical and sociological realities of the Jews.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 630

- Aaron's silence is the profoundest response to the reality that good people die tragically.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 632

- How did the Israelites conduct the purifying washings that are mentioned in Leviticus?

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 630

- Mourning my son has similarities to labor. . . I feel the pain of him in my belly.

VOICES ► 634

and a meal offering with oil mixed in. For today יְהוָה will appear to you.”

⁵They brought to the front of the Tent of Meeting the things that Moses had commanded, and the community leadership came forward and stood before יְהוָה. ⁶Moses said: “This is what יְהוָה has commanded that you do, that the Presence of יְהוָה may appear to you.” ⁷Then Moses said to Aaron: “Come forward to the altar and sacrifice your purgation offering and your burnt offering, making expiation for yourself and for the people; and sacrifice the people’s offering and make expiation for them, as יְהוָה has commanded.”

⁸Aaron came forward to the altar and slaughtered his calf of purgation offering. ⁹Aaron’s sons brought the blood to him; he dipped his finger in the blood and put it on the horns of the altar; and he poured out the rest of the blood at the base of the altar. ¹⁰The fat, the kidneys, and the protuberance of the liver from the purgation offering he turned into smoke on the altar—as had commanded Moses; ¹¹and the flesh and the skin were consumed in fire outside the camp. ¹²Then he slaughtered the burnt offering. Aaron’s sons passed the blood to him, and he dashed it against all sides of the altar. ¹³They passed the burnt offering to him in sections, as well as the head, and he turned it into smoke on the altar. ¹⁴He washed the entrails and the legs, and turned them into smoke on the altar with the burnt offering.

יְהוָה וּמִנְחָה בְּלֹא לְבָשָׂר בְּשָׁמֶן כִּי הַיּוֹם יְהוָה נִרְאָה אֲלֵיכֶם:
 וַיַּקְרֹב אֶת אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה מֹשֶׁה אֶל-פָּנָי אֲחֶל מַעַד וַיִּקְרֹב בְּלַהֲעָדָה וַיַּעֲמֹד לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: ⁶ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה זֶה הַקְרֵב אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה תְּשַׂחַר וְיָרָא אֲלֵיכֶם בָּבוֹד יְהוָה: ⁷ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶל-אַהֲרֹן קְרֵב אֶל-הַמִּזְבֵּחַ וַיַּעֲשֵׂה אֶת-חַטָּאת הַלְּתָרָה וְאֶת-עַלְתָּרָה וְכַפֵּר בְּעָלָם כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה:
 וַיִּקְרֹב אַהֲרֹן אֶל-הַמִּזְבֵּחַ וַיִּשְׁחַט אֶת-עַגְل הַחַטָּאת אֲשֶׁר-לוֹ: ⁹ וַיִּקְרֹב בְּנֵי אַהֲרֹן אֶת-הַדְּמָם אֶלְיוֹ וַיַּטְבֵּל אֶצְבָּעוֹ בְּדָם וַיִּתְן עַל-קְרֻנוֹת הַמִּזְבֵּחַ וְאֶת-הַדְּמָם יְצַק אֶל-יִסּוּד הַמִּזְבֵּחַ: ¹⁰ וְאֶת-הַחֶלְבָּה וְאֶת-הַבְּלָטָה הַקְטִיר הַמִּזְבֵּחַ כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֶת-מֹשֶׁה:
 וְאֶת-הַבָּשָׂר וְאֶת-הַעֲוֹר שְׁרָף בָּאֵש מְחוּץ לְמִחְנָה: ¹² וַיִּשְׁחַט אֶת-הַעֲלָה וְיָמָצָא בְּנֵי אַהֲרֹן אֶלְיוֹ אֶת-הַדְּמָם וַיַּוְקְהַז עַל-הַמִּזְבֵּחַ סְבִיבָה: ¹³ וְאֶת-הַעֲלָה הַמְצִיאו אֶלְיוֹ לְנִתְחִית וְאֶת-הַרְאָשׁ וַיִּקְטַּר עַל-הַמִּזְבֵּחַ: ¹⁴ וַיַּרְתֵּן אֶת-הַקְרֵב וְאֶת-הַבְּרִיעִים וַיִּקְטַּר עַל-הַעֲלָה הַמִּזְבֵּחַ:

“today יְהוָה will appear to you.” The plural “you” in the Hebrew means that God is to appear to everyone present—men, women, and children.

5. the community leadership. Literally, “the entire congregation,” as in 8:3. [Because the whole community could not fit in the courtyard area in front of the Tent of Meeting, the present translation understands the term in its more restricted sense as representative leaders—presumably referring to the (male) elders mentioned in v. 1. —Ed.]

9. Aaron’s sons. The word “sons” can sometimes be translated “children,” but here—despite the fact that Aaron also has daughters (see 10:14)—the word “sons” must be retained.

brought the blood. Leviticus 4 describes how blood is used in the procedure to be followed when an anointed priest incurs guilt. This sacrifice is in case a sin is committed unintentionally and without the knowledge of either the priest or the congregation (Numbers 15:24).

¹⁵Next he brought forward the people's offering. He took the goat for the people's purgation offering, and slaughtered it, and presented it as a purgation offering like the previous one. ¹⁶He brought forward the burnt offering and sacrificed it according to regulation. ¹⁷He then brought forward the meal offering and, taking a handful of it, he turned it into smoke on the altar—in addition to the burnt offering of the morning. ¹⁸He slaughtered the ox and the ram, the people's sacrifice of well-being. Aaron's sons passed the blood to him—which he dashed against every side of the altar—¹⁹and the fat parts of the ox and the ram: the broad tail, the covering [fat], the kidneys, and the protuberances of the livers. ²⁰They laid these fat parts over the breasts; and Aaron turned the fat parts into smoke on the altar, ²¹and elevated the breasts and the right thighs as an elevation offering before יהוה—
as Moses had commanded.

²²Aaron lifted his hands toward the people and blessed them; and he stepped down after offering the purgation offering, the burnt offering, and the offering of well-being. ²³Moses and Aaron then went inside the Tent of Meeting. When they came out, they blessed the people; and the Presence of יהוה appeared to all the people. ²⁴Fire came forth from before יהוה and consumed the burnt offering and the fat parts on the altar. And all the people saw, and shouted, and fell on their faces.

¹⁵וַיִּקְרֹב אֶת קָרְבֵּן הָעָם וַיַּקְרֹב אֶת-שְׁעִיר הַחֲטֹאת אֲשֶׁר לְעֵם וַיִּשְׁחֹטֵהוּ וַיִּחְטֹאֵהוּ בְּרִאשׁוֹן: ¹⁶וַיִּקְרֹב אֶת-הַעַלְלה וַיַּעֲשֶׂה בְּמִשְׁפָּט: ¹⁷וַיִּקְרֹב אֶת-הַמְנִיחָה וַיִּמְלֹא כֶּפֶל מִפְנֵה וַיִּקְרֹטֶר עַל-הַמְזֹבֵחַ מִלְבָד עַל-הַבָּקָר: ¹⁸וַיִּשְׁחֹטֵט אֶת-הַשּׂוֹר וְאֶת-הַאַיִל זָבֵחַ הַשְּׁלָמִים אֲשֶׁר לְעֵם וַיִּמְצָאוּ בְּנֵי אַהֲרֹן אֶת-הַדָּם אֲלֵיו וַיַּזְרַקֵּה עַל-הַמְזֹבֵחַ סְبִיבָה: ¹⁹וְאֶת-הַחֲלָבִים מִן-הַשּׂוֹר וּמִן-הַאַיִל הַאֲלִיהָ וְהַמְכָסָה וְהַבְּלִית וַיַּתְרַתֵּה הַבָּכָר: ²⁰וַיִּשְׁמַחוּ אֶת-הַחֲלָבִים עַל-הַחֶזֶות וַיִּקְרֹטֶר הַחֲלָבִים הַמְזֻבָּחָה: ²¹וְאֶת הַחֶזֶות וְאֶת שֹׂוק הַחֲלָבִים הַמְזֻבָּחָה: ²²וְאֶת הַחֶזֶות יְהוָה כְּאֶשֶׁר צִוָּה מֹשֶׁה:
וַיָּשָׂא אַהֲרֹן אֶת-ידיו יְדֵיו אֶל-הָעָם וַיִּברְכֵם וַיָּרֶךְ מִעֵשֶׂת הַחֲטֹאת וְהַעַלְלה וְהַשְּׁלָמִים: ²³וַיָּבֹא מֹשֶׁה וְאַהֲרֹן אֶל-אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד וַיֵּצֵא וַיִּבְרֹכוּ אֶת-הָעָם וַיַּרְא בְּבוֹדֵר יהָה אֶל-בְּלֵד הָעָם: ²⁴וַתִּצְא אֶשְׁמָלְפָנֵי יהָה וַתִּאֱכַל עַל-הַמְזֹבֵחַ אֶת-הַעַלְלה וְאֶת-הַחֲלָבִים וַיַּרְא בְּלַעַם וַיַּרְא וַיַּפְלֹא עַל-פְּנֵיהם:

RITUAL OF PURGATION FOR THE PEOPLE (9:15–21)

The people's purgation offering is like Aaron's own purgation offering (vv. 8–11) that he incinerated outside the camp.

CONCLUSION: APPEARANCE OF THE PRESENCE OF GOD (9:22–24)

Witnessing God's presence culminates the week-long ceremony of ordination and the inauguration of the Tabernacle and its personnel; it shows that God has accepted both the priesthood as officiants and the Tent of Meeting as an earthly abode.

22. Aaron lifted his hands. In the Bible, one hand is raised in oath-taking; but two hands are always raised for prayer and blessings.

23. Presence. Heb. kavod, often translated as God's "glory."

24. Fire came forth from before יהוה. The fire is not God, but it came forth from God.

10 Now Aaron's sons Nadab and Abihu each took his fire pan, put fire in it, and laid incense on it; and they offered before יְהוָה alien fire, which had not been enjoined upon them. ²And fire came forth from יְהוָה and consumed them; thus they died at the instance of יְהוָה. ³Then Moses said to Aaron, “This is what is meant by saying:

Through those near to Me I show Myself holy,
And gain glory before all the people.”

And Aaron was silent.

וַיִּקְרֹב בְּנֵי־אַהֲרֹן נֶדֶב וְאַבְיוֹהוּא אִישׁ
מְחֻתָּתוֹ וַיִּתְּנוּ בְּהֵן אֵשׁ וַיִּשְׂמֹחַ עַלְיָה
קָטָרָת וַיִּקְרֹב לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֵשׁ זָרָה אֲשֶׁר
לֹא צָוָה אֲתֶם: ² וַתֵּצֵא אֵשׁ מִלְּפָנֵי יְהוָה
וַתִּאֲכַל אֶתְּנָתָר וַיָּמָתָו לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: ³ וַיֹּאמֶר
מֵשֶׁה אֶל־אַהֲרֹן הַוָּא אֲשֶׁר־דִּבֶּר יְהוָה לְאָמֵר
בְּקָרְבִּי אֶקְדַּש
וְעַל־פָּנֵי כָּל־הָעָם אֶפְבַּד
וַיֹּאמֶר אַהֲרֹן:

The Strange Fire of Nadab and Abihu (10:1–7)

In the tragic story that follows, Nadab and Abihu, Aaron's two oldest sons, offer a ritual fire that God did not command. As a result, fire comes from God and kills them. Like good tragedy everywhere, the story is intended to elicit pity and fear—pity for Nadab, Abihu, their father, mother, and siblings; and fear that God's terrifying power may burst forth again. The world is perceived as a dangerous place, and God can protect but also create harm (Isaiah 45:7). The ancient world's protection is the sacrificial ritual correctly performed according to the prescribed rules. However, contact with the holy must be rigorously safeguarded from illegitimate incursion. If the procedures are performed incorrectly, the sanctuary becomes defiled, with disastrous consequences (15:31). This story, however, leaves the reader uncertain as to what precisely constitutes the sons' transgression.

i. alien fire. Literally, strange or foreign fire. What makes the fire strange is unclear.

which had not been enjoined upon them. The verse implies that the offering might have been fine if it had been ordered by a proper authority. This episode underscores what everyone in the ancient Near East apparently believed: the deity must be worshipped precisely as specified or catastrophe occurs.

2. And fire came forth from יְהוָה and...they died. The exact reasons for this punishment are unclear. The Bible records another story where God destroys a person for touching the ark in an unauthorized manner: King David decides to bring the ark of God to Jerusalem. En route the ark begins to slip off the ox-cart. Unbidden, a man reaches out his hand to steady the ark and God kills him (II Samuel 6:6–7). Both that story and the present one illustrate the danger ascribed to the holy. Indeed, ritual aims to contain and protect against the danger inherent in the holy.

3. “This is what יְהוָה meant by saying.” There is no record of God's having said these words earlier.

“Through those near to Me I show Myself holy.” Or, “I sanctify myself by means of those near to me.” That is, I reveal my holiness among those near to me. The ones “nearest” to God were Nadab and Abihu: when they offered the incense they literally “came near” (10:1; see 16:1); and as priests, they are “nearer” to God than non-priests. These deaths evince God's power as awesome and the Tabernacle's status as holy. According to this reading, then, God uses the deaths of Nadab and Abihu to magnify Godself. The story of Nadab and Abihu may aim, among other things, to illustrate that priestly privilege may not be abused.

“And gain glory before all the people.” All the people saw the fire and the deaths of Nadab and ⁴Moses called Mishael and Elzaphan, sons of Uzziel the uncle of Aaron, and said to them, “Come forward and carry your kinsmen away from the front of the sanctuary to a place outside the camp.” ⁵They came forward and carried them out of the camp by their tunics, as Moses had ordered. ⁶And Moses said to Aaron and to his sons Eleazar and Ithamar, “Do not bare your heads and do not rend your clothes, lest you die and anger strike the whole community. But your kin, all the house of Israel, shall bewail the burning that יהוה has wrought. ⁷And so do not go outside the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, lest you die, for יהוה's anointing oil is upon you.” And they did as Moses had bidden.

⁸And spoke to Aaron, saying: ⁹Drink no wine or other intoxicant, you or your sons, when Abihu. God's awesome power is revealed in God's acts.

Aaron was silent. There is not much that one can say when confronted with the awesome power of God. But what was the reaction of Nadab and Abihu's mother, Elisheba (see Exodus 6:23)? The text does not record her response to this tragedy. On Aaron's silence, see Contemporary Reflection, p. 632.

6. “bare your heads . . . rend your clothes.” Moses describes two of the actions associated elsewhere in the Bible with mourning.

“kin.” Heb. achim, literally “brothers,” has a gender-inclusive sense here. The Bible takes for granted that ancient Israelite women feature in the public bewailing of communal tragedies such as the death of leaders (Jeremiah 9:16–19; II Chronicles 35:25; Exodus 33:4; see Chayei Sarah, Contemporary Reflection, p. 129).

7. “do not go outside.” Aaron must not go out to bury his sons.

*“for יהוה's anointing oil is upon you.”* The anointing oil is holy and must be used in the manner prescribed, that is, by the high priest when he conducts the sacrificial rites (Exodus 30:30–33).

⁴ וַיָּקֹרֶא מֹשֶׁה אֶל-מִישָׁאֵל וְאֶל-אֶלְזָפָן בְּנֵי עֲזִיאָל דֶּد אַהֲרֹן וַיֹּאמֶר אֲלֵיכֶם קָרְבָּו שָׂאוּ אֶת-אֲחֵיכֶם מִאתָת-מִתְּבָרֶכֶת פְּנֵי-הַקְדֵּשׁ אֶל-מְחוֹזָה לְמִחְנָה: ⁵ וַיָּקָרְבָו וַיִּשְׁאַט בְּכַתְּנָתָם אֶל-מְחוֹזָה לְמִחְנָה כַּאֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר מֹשֶׁה: ⁶ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶל-אַהֲרֹן וְלֹא-לְעֹזֶר וְלֹא-יִתְּמַר בְּנֵי ר־אשֵׁיכֶם אֶל-תִּפְרֹעַו וּבְגִדְעַכֶּם לְאַתְּפָרֶמוֹ וְלֹא תִּמְתֹּהוּ וְעַל פְּלִ-הַעֲרָה יִקְצַּפֵּן וְאֲחֵיכֶם בְּלִ-בֵּית יִשְׂרָאֵל יִבְכּוּ אֶת-הַשְּׁרָפָה אֲשֶׁר שָׁרַף יְהֹוָה: ⁷ וּמְפַתֵּח אֲהָל מוֹעֵד לֹא תִּצְאֵן פְּנֵי-תְּמָתוֹ כִּירְשָׁמָן מִשְׁתַּחַת יְהֹוָה עַל-יכֶם וַיַּעֲשֵׂו כְּדִבֶּר מֹשֶׁה: ⁸ פ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֶל-אַהֲרֹן לֵאמֹר: ⁹ יְיַזֵּן וְשָׁכַר אֶל-תִּשְׂתַּחַת אֶתְּהָה וְבְנֵךְ אֶתְּךְ בְּבָאָם

If Aaron is outside the tent or in the presence of the dead, he defiles the oil and also the sanctuary (21:10–12). If the sanctuary becomes defiled, the entire community could perish (15:31). An ordinary priest may defile himself through burial of his son and other members of his immediate family (Leviticus 21:1), but not the chief priest (21:10–12).

Laws for Aaron the Priest and His Household (10:8–20)

The Tent of Meeting must be purged of the contamination of the corpse defilement that occurred with the deaths of Nadab and Abihu, but that report appears only later, in Leviticus 16. Here, following additional instructions to the priests (vv. 8–15), comes an odd story about the purification offering. Moses suddenly chastises Aaron and his remaining sons for erroneously burning the goat rather than eating it (see 9:1–4 for relevant laws). Aaron obliquely asks: if they had eaten it, would his sons have been spared? Moses has no answer.

9. Drink no wine or other intoxicant. The mention of wine and strong drink here leads some you enter the Tent of Meeting, that you may not die. This is a law for all time throughout the ages,¹⁰ for you must distinguish between the sacred and the profane, and between the impure and the pure;¹¹ and you must teach the Israelites all the laws which יהוה has imparted to them through Moses.

¹²Moses spoke to Aaron and to his remaining sons, Eleazar and Ithamar: Take the meal offering that is left over from יהוה's offerings by fire and eat it unleavened beside the altar, for it is most holy.¹³You shall eat it in the sacred precinct, inasmuch as it is your due, and that of your sons, from יהוה's offerings by fire; for so I have been commanded.¹⁴But the breast of elevation offering and the thigh of gift offering you [and your wife], and your sons and daughters with you, may eat in any pure place, for they have been assigned as a due to you and your sons from the Israelites' sacrifices of well-

אֶל־אַهֲלָמֹעֵד וְלֹא תִמְתֹּה חֲקַת עָלָם
לְדָרְתֵיכֶם:¹⁰ וְלֹהַבְדֵיל בֵּין הַקָּדֵשׁ וּבֵין
הַחַל וּבֵין הַטְּמֵא וּבֵין הַטְּהוֹר: ¹¹ וְלֹהַרְתָּ
אֶת־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת כָּל־הַחֲקִים אֲשֶׁר דָבַר
יְהוָה אֲלֵיכֶם בִּידֵמְשָׁה: ¹²

¹² וַיַּדַּבֵּר מֹשֶׁה אֶל־אַהֲרֹן וְאֶל־אֶלְעֹזֶר וְאֶל־
אַיִתְמָר | בְּנֵי הַנּוֹתָרִים קָחוּ אֶת־הַמְנֻחָה
הַנוֹּתְרָת מֵאֲשֶׁר יְהוָה וְאֶלְעֹזֶר מִצְוֹת אֶצְלָם
הַמּוֹבֵח כִּי קָדֵשׁ קָדְשִׁים הוּא: ¹³ וְאֶכְלָתָם
אֶתְה בָּمְקוֹם קָדוֹשׁ כִּי חֲקָה וְחַקְבָּנִיק דָוָא
מֵאֲשֶׁר יְהוָה בִּירְכֵן צְוִיתִי: ¹⁴ וְאֶת חֲנָה
הַתְּנוּפָה וְאֶת | שִׁוק הַתְּרוּמָה תְּאַכְלֶנָה
בָּמְקוֹם טָהוֹר אֶתְה וּבְנֵיךְ אֶתְה כִּי־
חֲקָה וְחַקְבָּנִיק נְתָנוּ מִזְבְּחִי שָׁלְמִי בְּנֵי

to suggest that the placement of this verse implies that strong drink caused Nadab and Abihu to act precipitously. More likely, however, this placement is coincidental.

10. you must distinguish. That is, you must make a separation.

11. and you must teach. The priests are also to teach the people to make a separation themselves between the pure and the impure, the holy and the profane (see Ezekiel 22:26; 42:20; 44:23).

12–13. Two verses describe laws regarding the meal offering (see Leviticus 2).

Eleazar and Ithamar. Citing Aaron's sons specifically by name may indicate that only the chief priest and his male heirs are entitled to the "most holy" offerings—daughters being excluded. As indicated by v. 14 (compare 23:20) and by 22:12–13, a priest's daughter may eat "holy" food, if not the "most holy," so long as she is part of her father's household. (See further at 6:11; Tzav, Another View, p. 608.)

13. your due. The priest's food comes partly from these offerings.

sons. Heb. banim, which can also signify offspring of both genders ("children"). Here, the word refers specifically to "sons" if the injunction regarding this offering in 6:11 means that "only the males ... may eat of it"; see the discussion there. See also at v. 12.

14. The rules for the elevation offerings appear in Exodus 29:22–27 and Leviticus 7:29–34.

you [and your wife]. [This is one of several passages in the Torah where syntax and context together indicate that the Hebrew's second-person masculine singular language implicitly addresses a conjugal pair: the head of household and his wife. See the introduction to the Decalogue, p. 416; Mishpatim, Another View, p. 445. —Ed.]

your sons and daughters. Designated parts of the meal and gift offering may be eaten by women as well as by anyone belonging to the priest's household (22:10–13).

a due to . . . your sons. Here, as in v. 13, the word banim does not include daughters. These donations primarily compensate the (male) priests for their ritual role; only secondarily do they serve being.¹⁵ Together with the fat of fire offering, they must present the thigh of gift offering and the breast of elevation offering, which are to be elevated as an elevation offering before יְהוָה, and which are to be your due and that of your sons with you for all time—as יְהוָה has commanded.

¹⁶ Then Moses inquired about the goat of purgation offering, and it had already been burned! He was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, Aaron's remaining sons, and said,¹⁷ “Why did you not eat the purgation offering in the sacred area? For it is most holy, and it is what was given to you to remove the guilt of the community and to make expiation for them before יְהוָה.¹⁸ Since its blood was not brought inside the sanctuary, you should certainly have eaten it in the sanctuary, as I commanded.”¹⁹ And Aaron spoke to Moses, “See, this day they brought their purgation offering and their burnt offering before יְהוָה, and such things have befallen me! Had I eaten purgation offering today, would have approved?”²⁰ And when Moses heard this, he approved.

11 spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying to them: ² Speak to the Israelite people thus:

to feed members of the family who are not serving as priests.

16. Moses' anger regarding the sacrifice of the goat is puzzling. Was he not there when they burned it? Moses chastises Aaron and his remaining sons for further lack of scrupulousness in carrying out their responsibilities, but perhaps he is passing off his own dereliction of duties onto them.

17–18. Moses' point is that a purgation offering is not complete until the priests have eaten their share of the meat from it. The law requires that it be eaten in a pure place (“in the sacred precinct,” 6:19).

19. “would have approved?” Aaron's rhetorical question implies that God would not have approved. Aaron apparently has reasoned that the death of Nadab and Abihu has polluted the area

ישראל : ¹⁵ שׂוֹק הַתְרוּמָה וְחוֹזֶה הַתְנוֹפָה עַל אֲשֶׁר הַחֲלֹבִים יִבְיאוּ לְהַנִּיף תְנוֹפָה לְפָנֵי יְהוָה וְחַדְדָה לְפָרָן וּלְבְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְחֻקָּה עֹלָם כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה :

16 וְאַתָּה | שְׁעִיר הַחֲטֹאת דָרְשׁ מֹשֶׁה וְהַנֶּה שָׂרֵף יוֹקְצָף עַל־אֲלֹעֲזָר וּלְאִיתְמָר בְּנֵי אַהֲרֹן הַנּוֹתְרִים לְאמֹר : ¹⁷ מִתְּזַעַע לֹא־אֲכַלְתֶּם אֶת־הַחֲטֹאת בָּمְקוּם הַקְדֵשׁ פִּי קָדְשׁ קָדְשִׁים הוּא וְאַתֶּה נְתַנְתֶּן לְכָם לְשָׁאת אֶת־עַזְנֵן הַעֲרָה לְכַפֵּר עֲלֵיכֶם לְפָנֵי יְהוָה : ¹⁸ הַנָּזֵן לְאִיהוּבָא אֶת־דְמָה אֶל־הַקְדֵשׁ פְנִימָה אֶבֶל תְּאַכְלֶנּוּ אֶתְהָ בְקָדֵשׁ כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּתִי : ¹⁹ וַיֹּדַבֵּר אַהֲרֹן אֶל־מֹשֶׁה הַנֶּה הַיּוֹם הַקְרִיבוּ אֶת־חַטֹּאתֶם וְאֶת־עַלְתָּם לְפָנֵי יְהוָה וְתִקְרָא נָהָא אֵתִי בְּאֶלְהָ וְאַכְלָתִי חַטֹּאת הַיּוֹם הַיּוֹטֵב בְּעֵינֵי יְהוָה : ²⁰ וַיִּשְׁמַע מֹשֶׁה וַיַּעֲטֵב בְּעֵינָיו : פ

יא וַיֹּדַבֵּר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל־אַהֲרֹן לְאמֹר אֶלָּהֶם : ² דָבְרוּ אֶל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאמֹר

(compare Numbers 19:14)—and yet Aaron and his sons cannot leave the vicinity (above, v. 7). Thus the priests have no place available where they can eat the meat.

20. Moses is forced to agree.

Dietary Laws for the Israelite People (11:1–47)

At this point in the narrative, the Israelites have set up the Tabernacle (Exodus 40), received specifications for the sacrifices (Leviticus 1–7), ordained the priesthood (Leviticus 8), and initiated formal worship (Leviticus 9–10). God has assigned the priests their task of teaching Israel to distin-

These are the creatures that you may eat from among all the land animals: ³any animal that has

זֶאת הַחַיָּה אֲשֶׁר תְּאכַלُ מִפְּלַחַבְּמָה
אֲשֶׁר עַל־הָאָרֶץ: ³ כֹּל | מִפְּרַסְתָּה פְּרַטָּה

guish between the ritually pure and the impure (10:10–11). This task includes being able to differentiate between pure and impure foods, to which the text now turns. The people must make such distinctions in their daily, household life, not merely in relation to the sanctuary. The practice of differentiating between the pure and the impure in one's eating creates a relationship between the priests' work in the sanctuary and ordinary Israelites at home.

No explanation is offered for what makes these items unfit as food, and none is needed. These specific food prohibitions likely reflect ancient cultural dislikes ("taboos" is too strong a word) that eventually become solidified into law (see also at Deuteronomy 14:3–21). They later become explicit indicators of identity, however. That is, loyalty to one's Judaism and to Judaism's God came to be expressed via resistance to violating the dietary laws. For example, according to II Maccabees 7, a mother instructs her sons to die rather than eat pork publicly. [Some food prohibitions may also have had functional economic reasons behind them (such as an attempt to avoid economic dependence on other groups). Others may have been symbolic, such as avoiding predatory animals (possibly with a rationale that "you are what you eat"). —Ed.]

This unit has special relevance for women. The ancient Israelite diet consisted mostly of grains—supplemented with milk curds, cheese, yogurt, wine, olive oil, legumes, and fruits and vegetables. In ancient Israel preparing those foodstuffs was the domain of women; it was they who typically supervised or performed tasks such as building the fire, drawing water from the well, grinding the grain, kneading the dough, forming the cakes, milking the sheep and goats, making the cheese and yogurt, gathering the olives and dates, and treading the grapes. As a result, we can assume that women were responsible for maintaining the dietary laws.

Meat was reserved for special occasions. Scholars debate the role of women in slaughtering animals for meat in ancient Israel. Some suggest, on the basis of ancient reliefs, that during certain periods, animals were slaughtered domestically. In those periods, women may have participated in the task. (In I Samuel 28:24, the woman of En-dor slaughters a calf on her own initiative and prepares a meal with it.) However, other evidence suggests that women did not slaughter animals. If slaughtering was restricted to the sanctuary—even a local sanctuary—it would have been unlikely that women would perform the actual sacrifice. If women went at all, they would have been accompanied by a man who would have performed the sacrifice rite. (For a different opinion, see at 1:5.).

It has been suggested that women also controlled food distribution in the household. However, it is perhaps more likely that the customs in present-day traditional Arabic and Afghani societies are relevant in this regard. In these societies women do prepare the food, but the men and boys get the lion's share; the women and girls wait in the back room until the men are done eating. The food is not allocated, but simply laid on the floor on platters in front of the men and boys, who eat with their hands from the common pot until they are done. Then the women eat. These customs go back into antiquity; they may also reflect the customs of ancient Israel. (A similar picture may be implicit in Genesis 18.) [It is also possible that the overall role of women in Islamic cultures today is significantly different from that of ancient Israel and thus may not provide a reliable analogy. Some ethnographic evidence indicates that in ancient Palestine the whole family ordinarily ate together, gathered around common dishes. —Ed.] true hoofs, with clefs through the hoofs, and that chews the cud—such you may eat.⁴ The following, however, of those that either chew the cud or have true hoofs, you shall not eat: the camel—although it chews the cud, it has no true hoofs: it is impure for you;⁵ the daman—although it chews the cud, it has no true hoofs: it is impure for you;⁶ the hare—although it chews the cud, it has no true hoofs: it is impure for you;⁷ and the swine—although it has true hoofs, with the hoofs cleft through, it does not chew the cud: it is impure for you.⁸ You shall not eat of their flesh nor touch their carcasses; they are impure for you.

⁹These you may eat of all that live in water: anything in water, whether in the seas or in the streams, that has fins and scales—these you may

וְשָׁעַט שְׁטָע פְּרִסָּת מִעֵלָת גָּרָה בְּבָהָמָה
אֲתָה תַּאכְלֹו: ⁴ אַךְ אֲתִיזָה לֹא תַּאכְלֹו
מִפְּעָלֵי הָגָרָה וּמִפְּרָסִי הַפְּרָסָה אַתְּ
הֶגְמָל בִּימְעָלָה גָּרָה הָוָא וּפְרָסָה אַינְגָנוּ
מִפְּלִיס טָמָא הוּא לְכֶם: ⁵ וְאֲתִידְשָׁפָן בִּידָ
מִעֵלָה גָּרָה הוּא וּפְרָסָה לֹא יִפְרִיס טָמָא
הָוָא לְכֶם: ⁶ וְאֲתִיהָאֲרַנְבָּת בִּימְעָלָת גָּרָה
הָוָא וּפְרָסָה לֹא הַפְּרִיסָה טָמָא הָוָא
לְכֶם: ⁷ וְאֲתִיהָחָזֵיר בִּימְפְּרִיס פְּרָסָה הָוָא
וְשָׁעַט שְׁטָע פְּרָסָה וְהָוָא גָּרָה לְאַיִגָּן טָמָא הוּא לְכֶם: ⁸ מִבְשָׁרָם לֹא תַּאכְלֹו
וּבְנַבְלָתָם לֹא תַגְעַז טָמָאים הֵם לְכֶם:
⁹ אֲתִיזָה תַּאכְלֹו מִכְלָ אֲשֶׁר בְּמִים כָּל
אֲשֶׁר-לוֹ סְנָפֵיר וּקְשָׁקְשָׁת בְּמִים בִּימִים

LAWS REGARDING ANIMALS THAT WALK ON LAND (11:1–8)

3. any animal that has true hooves... and that chews the cud. The text could simply restrict the permitted animals to those that chew (literally “bring up”) the cud, since every true ruminant has cloven hooves.

4. impure for you. That is, not impure intrinsically.

5. the daman. If this identification is correct, then this creature is a member of the hyrax family, which is native to Africa and southwest Asia, including Israel. A hyrax is a brownish-gray mammal that is rabbit-sized and resembles a guinea pig.

6. hare. The species that lives in Israel is a larger relative of the common rabbit. Neither the rabbit nor the hare chews cud, but like ruminants they digest their food more than once.

7. the swine. Pigs were raised in Syria and the Levant in antiquity prior to the advent of the Israelite presence in the Judean highlands. Iron Age Israelite settlements show only very few pig bones, in contrast to earlier settlements there, and in contrast to neighboring areas (of the Philistines, Moabites, and Ammonites) where pig bones are well attested during the same time period. It is thus likely that the prohibition against eating pig among the Israelites is very ancient.

8. touch their carcasses. Anthropologist Mary Douglas suggests that the prohibition of touching the carcass of the inedible mammals protects these animals in their lifetime. Since they cannot be skinned, dismembered, or exploited after death, they need not be hunted or killed. Thus elephants would not be killed for their tusks, alligators for their hides, mink or ermine for their fur, nor turtles for their shells. However, the Rabbis may be right in interpreting this prohibition as applying only to priests serving in the sanctuary (22:8) and not to the laity. The prohibition has meaning only for members of a priestly household: One who touches such a carcass is ritually impure. In order to eat of the sacred donations, he or she must bathe and remain impure until evening. (See further at v. 24.)

LAWS REGARDING ANIMALS THAT LIVE IN WATER (11:9–12)

9. fins and scales. Ancient Israelites would not have known many fish. There were few varieties or numbers of fish in the Sea of Galilee, and the eat.¹⁰ But anything in the seas or in the streams that has no fins and scales, among all the swarming things of the water and among all the other living creatures that are in the water—they are an abomination for you¹¹ and an abomination for you they shall remain: you shall not eat of their flesh and you shall abominate their carcasses.¹² Everything in water that has no fins and scales shall be an abomination for you.

¹³ The following you shall abominate among the birds—they shall not be eaten, they are an abomination: the eagle, the vulture, and the black vulture; ¹⁴ the kite, falcons of every variety; ¹⁵ all varieties of raven; ¹⁶ the ostrich, the nighthawk, the sea gull; hawks of every variety; ¹⁷ the little owl, the cormorant, and the great owl; ¹⁸ the white owl, the pelican, and the bustard; ¹⁹ the stork; herons of every variety; the hoopoe, and the bat.

²⁰ All winged swarming things that walk on fours shall be an abomination for you.²¹ But these you may eat among all the winged swarming things that walk on fours: all that have, above their feet,

וּבְנַחֲלִים אַתֶּם תֹאכְלוּ: ¹⁰ וְכֹל אֲשֶׁר אֵין
לֹא סְנָפֵיר וּקְשָׁקַשְׁת בִּימִים וּבְנַחֲלִים מִפְּלָשָׁת
שְׂרֵץ הַמִּינִים וּמִפְּלָשָׁת נַפְשׁ הַחַיָּה אֲשֶׁר בִּמִּינִים
שְׁקָצָן הַמִּינִים לְכֶם: ¹¹ וּשְׁקָצָן יְהִי לְכֶם
מִבְשָׁרָם לֹא תֹאכְלוּ וְאַתָּה נְבָלָתָם תַּשְׁקַצְוּ:
¹² כָּל אֲשֶׁר אֵין לוֹ סְנָפֵיר וּקְשָׁקַשְׁת בִּמִּינִים
שְׁקָצָן הוּא לְכֶם:
¹³ וְאַתָּה־אֱלֹה תַּשְׁקַצְוּ מִן־הַעֲזֹף לֹא יַאכְלֵל
שְׁקָצָן הַמִּינִה אֲתִיה־גָּשֵׁר וְאַתִּיה־פָּרֶס וְאַתִּיה־
הַעֲנִיה: ¹⁴ וְאַתִּיה־דָּאָה וְאַתִּיה־אַחֲרָה
לְמִינִה: ¹⁵ אֶת בְּלִיעָרְבָ לְמִינָנוּ: ¹⁶ וְאֶת בְּתִ
הַיּוֹנָה וְאַתִּיה־תְּחִמָס וְאַתִּיה־שְׁתִיף וְאַתִּיה־גָּנָז
לְמִינִנָהוּ: ¹⁷ וְאַתִּיה־הַפּוֹס וְאַתִּיה־שְׁלָךְ וְאַתִּיה־
הַינְשׁוֹפֵט: ¹⁸ וְאַתִּיה־תְּנַשְׁמָת וְאַתִּיה־קָאָת וְאַתִּיה־רְחָם: ¹⁹ וְאֶת הַחֲסִידָה הַאֲנָפָה
לְמִינִה וְאַתִּיה־הַוּכִיפָת וְאַתִּיה־עַטְלָף:
²⁰ כָּל שְׂרֵץ הַעֲזֹף הַהְלָךְ עַל־אַרְבָּע שְׁקָצָן
הָוּא לְכֶם: ²¹ אֶךְ אַתִּיזָה תֹאכְלוּ מִפְּלָשָׁת
שְׂרֵץ הַעֲזֹף הַהְלָךְ עַל־אַרְבָּע אֲשֶׁר־לֹא לוֹ
כַּרְעִיל מִפְּעֵל לְרִגְלֵיו לְנַתְּרֵב בְּהַן עַל־ southeastern Mediterranean was practically devoid of fish before the Persian king Darius dug his canal between the Red Sea and the Nile during the 6th century B.C.E. Most fish were purchased from the Phoenicians (Nehemiah 13:16). (Some later rabbinic opinions permit fish that have scales at one point in their life even though they lose them later, such as the swordfish.)

II. abomination. Heb. sheketz (disgusting), not tamei ("impure").

LAWS REGARDING ANIMALS THAT FLY IN THE AIR (11:13-19)

Birds not listed in this section are permitted.

13-15. These prohibited birds (with the possible exception of the bat yaanah, typically translated as "ostrich" but probably a type of owl) either eat carrion or grasp their prey and eat it alive.

19. the bat. This is a mammal, not a bird; but it is classed here because it flies.

LAWS REGARDING ANIMALS THAT SWARM IN THE AIR (11:20-23)

21. above their feet, jointed legs. The locust is the migratory phase of the grasshopper. When conditions become sufficiently crowded, the usually solitary grasshopper undergoes a morphological and behavioral transformation during which it flies in huge swarms. The palace reliefs of Sennacherib at Nineveh (now in the British Museum) show that grasshoppers were delicacies fit for a king. A scene depicting a line of attendants carrying food items includes at least one figure with rows of grasshoppers skewered on two sticks (somewhat like corn dogs).

jointed legs to leap with on the ground—²²of these you may eat the following: locusts of every variety; all varieties of bald locust; crickets of every variety; and all varieties of grasshopper. ²³But all other winged swarming things that have four legs shall be an abomination for you.

²⁴And the following shall make you impure—whoever touches their carcasses shall be impure until evening,²⁵and whoever carries the carcasses of any of them shall wash those clothes and be impure until evening—²⁶every animal that has true hoofs but without clefts through the hoofs, or that does not chew the cud. They are impure for you; whoever touches them shall be impure.²⁷Also all animals that walk on paws, among those that walk on fours, are impure for you; whoever touches their carcasses shall be impure until evening.²⁸And anyone who carries their carcasses shall wash those clothes and remain impure until evening. They are impure for you.

²⁹The following shall be impure for you from among the things that swarm on the earth: the mole, the mouse, and great lizards of every variety;³⁰the gecko, the land crocodile, the lizard, the sand lizard, and the chameleon.³¹Those are for you the impure among all the swarming things; whoever touches them when they are dead shall be impure

הארץ : ²² אַתְּ־אֱלֹהָ מֶהָם תִּאֵכֶל אֶת־
הָאַרְבָּה לְמַיְנוֹ וְאַתְּ־הַסְלָעָם לְמַיְנָהוּ וְאַתְּ־
הַחֲרָגָל לְמַיְנָהוּ וְאַתְּ־הַחַגָּב לְמַיְנָהוּ:
²³ וְכֹל שְׂרֵךְ דַּעֲוָק אֲשֶׁר־לֹו אַרְבָּע רְגָלִים
שְׁקָז הוּא לְכֶם :

²⁴ וְלֹא־לֹה תְּטַמֵּא בַּל־הַגְּנַע בְּנַבְלָתֶם
יַטְמֵא עַד־הָעָרָב : ²⁵ וְכֹל־הַנְּשָׂא מִנְבְּלָתֶם
יַכְבִּס בְּגַדְיוֹ וַטְמֵא עַד־הָעָרָב : ²⁶ לְכֹל־
הַבְּהָמָה אֲשֶׁר הוּא מִפְּלָשָׁת פְּרָתָה וְשָׁסָעָה
אַינְגָה שְׁפָעָת וְגַרְהָ אַינְגָה מִעַלְהָ טְמָאִים
הָם לְכֶם בַּל־הַגְּנַע בְּהָם יַטְמֵא : ²⁷ וְכֹל־
הַזּוֹלָר עַל־כְּפָיו בְּכָל־הַחַיִל הַהֲלִיכָת עַל־
אַרְבָּע טְמָאִים הָם לְכֶם בַּל־הַגְּנַע בְּנַבְלָתֶם
יַטְמֵא עַד־הָעָרָב : ²⁸ וְהַנְּשָׂא אַתְּ־נַבְלָתֶם
יַכְבִּס בְּגַדְיוֹ וַטְמֵא עַד־הָעָרָב טְמָאִים הַפְּמָה לְכֶם : ס

²⁹ וְזֹה לְכֶם הַטְמֵא בְּשֻׁרְץ הַשּׁוֹרֵץ עַל־
הָאָרֶץ הַחֲלֵד וְהַעֲכָר וְהַצְבָּר לְמַיְנָהוּ:
³⁰ וְהַאֲנָקָה וְהַכְּבָחָה וְהַלְּטָאתָה וְהַחֲמַט
וְהַתְּנַשְּׁמָת : ³¹ אַלְהָ הַטְמָאִים לְכֶם בְּכָל־
הַשּׁוֹרֵץ בַּל־הַגְּנַע בְּהָם בְּמַתָּם יַטְמֵא עַד־

LAWS REGARDING CARCASSES OF NON-EDIBLE ANIMALS (11:24–28)

These verses explain the ramifications of v. 8, above. They seem out of place here.

24. carcasses. The term is not defined. In a later era, the Rabbis considered the carcass to be the flesh only and permitted use of the bones, skin, hair, and teeth; the Dead Sea sect took a different position and forbade the use of even these items.

impure until evening. In contrast to carcasses, live animals do not impart impurity.

MORE LAWS REGARDING FORBIDDEN FOODS (11:29–43)

This section describes what happens after prohibited swarming animals come in contact with other household objects.

29–31. The reference is to creatures that enter a household on their own. The exact identifications are not certain.

31. when they are dead. See above at v. 24.

until evening.³² And anything on which one of them falls when dead shall be impure: be it any article of wood, or a cloth, or a skin, or a sack—any such article that can be put to use shall be dipped in water, and it shall remain impure until evening; then it shall be pure.³³ And if any of those falls into an earthen vessel, everything inside it shall be impure and [the vessel] itself you shall break.³⁴ As to any food that may be eaten, it shall become impure if it came in contact with water; as to any liquid that may be drunk, it shall become impure if it was inside any vessel.³⁵ Everything on which the carcass of any of them falls shall be impure: an oven or stove shall be smashed. They are impure—and impure they shall remain for you.³⁶ However, a spring or cistern in which water is collected shall be pure, but whoever touches such a carcass in it shall be impure.³⁷ If such a carcass falls upon seed grain that is to be sown, it is pure;³⁸ but if water is put on the seed and any part of a carcass falls upon it, it shall be impure for you.

הָעֵבֶב: 32 וְכֹל אֲשֶׁר-יִפְלַעַלְיוֹ מִהָּם |
 בָּמְתָּמָם יִטְמָא מִפְלַעַלְיָעָן אָוֹ בְּגַד אָוֹ
 עֹזֶר אָוֹ שָׁק כָּל-בְּלִי אֲשֶׁר-יַעֲשֶׂה מַלְאָכָה
 בָּהֶם בְּמִים יוֹבָא וְתָמָא עֲדַד-עֵבֶב וְטַהֲרָה:
 33 וּכְלַבְּלִי-חָרֵשׁ אֲשֶׁר-יִפְלַעַל מִתְּמָם אֶל-תָּזְכָּוּ
 כָּל אֲשֶׂר בָּתוּכוֹ יִטְמָא וְאַתָּנוּ תְּשִׁבְרוּ:
 34 מִפְלַעַל-הָאָכָל אֲשֶׁר יִאָכֵל אֲשֶׁר יַבּוֹא עַלְיוֹ-
 מִים יִטְמָא וּכְלַמְשָׁקָה אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁתַּחַת בְּכָל-
 בָּלִי יִטְמָא: 35 וּכְל אֲשֶׁר-יִפְלַעַל מַגְבְּלָתָם |
 עַלְיוֹ יִטְמָא תְּנוּר וּכְנִירִים יִתְּצַחַץ טָמָאים הָם
 וְתָמָאים יִהְיוּ לְכֶם: 36 אָהָ מַעַן וּבָור
 מִקְוָה-מִים יִהְיֶה טָהוֹר וּנְגַע בְּגַבְלָתָם
 יִטְמָא: 37 וְכֵי יִפְלַעַל מַגְבְּלָתָם עַל-בְּלִזְבּוּ
 זְרוּעַ אֲשֶׁר יִזְרְעַל טָהוֹר הוּא: 38 וְכֵי יִתְּהַנֵּם
 מִימֵּט עַל-זְרוּעַ וּנְפַל מַגְבְּלָתָם עַלְיוֹ טָמָא
 הוּא לְכֶם: ס

32. Objects like containers, tools, and musical instruments that come into contact with the carcass of these animals must be washed. The prohibition does not apply to surfaces like floors or tables.

33. Because an earthenware vessel cannot be purified, it must be broken. Anything inside it must be discarded. But if the carcass touches only the outside, the vessel is not impure, a provision motivated perhaps by economic considerations.

34. any food...in contact with water. Wet food becomes impure if it comes into contact with the carcass of one of the animals named in vv. 29–30. Dry food and seeds that come into contact with such carcasses are not affected.

any liquid . . . inside any vessel. A liquid that comes into contact with a carcass of one of the animals listed in vv. 29–30 is impure only if the liquid is inside a vessel. Liquids in a lake, stream, or well are not rendered impure.

35. oven or stove. These items were made of earthenware, like the vessels mentioned in v. 33.

36. cistern. A cistern was usually cut into bedrock and used for collecting and storing runoff. It was kept covered with a stone when not in use. If the rock was porous, the cistern was waterproofed by being plastered with lime. Cisterns, in which water could be stored for the dry season, made settled living possible in the Land of Israel, with its dry climate and its few year-round sources of water. A 9th-century-B.C.E. king of Moab boasts on his victory monument that he built a cistern for every house—using the labor of Israelite prisoners of war. [Cisterns near the household would have made women's lives considerably easier, since drawing water was typically the work of women, often girls. (See Genesis 24:11, 13 and I Samuel 9:11.) —Ed.]

37–38. seed grain. Seed to be planted is pure even if it touched a carcass of the forbidden animals. Seed to be eaten is impure if it touches the carcass and it is wet.

³⁹If an animal that you may eat has died, anyone who touches its carcass shall be impure until evening; ⁴⁰anyone who eats of its carcass shall wash those clothes and remain impure until evening; and anyone who carries its carcass shall wash those clothes and remain impure until evening.

⁴¹All the things that swarm upon the earth are an abomination; they shall not be eaten. ⁴²You shall not eat, among all things that swarm upon the earth, anything that crawls on its belly, or anything that walks on fours, or anything that has many legs; for they are an abomination. ⁴³You shall not draw abomination upon yourselves through anything that swarms; you shall not make yourselves impure therewith and thus become impure. ⁴⁴For I יהוה am your God: you shall sanctify yourselves and be holy, for I am holy. You shall not make yourselves impure through any swarming thing that moves upon the earth. ⁴⁵For I יהוה am the One who brought you up from the land of Egypt to be your God: you shall be holy, for I am holy.

⁴⁶These are the instructions concerning animals, birds, all living creatures that move in water, and all creatures that swarm on earth, ⁴⁷for distinguishing between the impure and the pure, between the living things that may be eaten and the living things that may not be eaten.

³⁹וְכִי יָמוֹת מִן־הַבָּהֶמֶת אֲשֶׁר־הִיא לְכָם לְאַכְלָה הַגָּעֵב נְגַלְתָּה יְטַמֵּא עַד־הַעֲרָבָה: ⁴⁰וְהַאֲכֵל מִנְגַּלְתָּה יְכַבֵּס בְּגַדְיוֹ וְטַמֵּא עַד־הַעֲרָבָה וְהַנְשָׁא אֶת־נְגַלְתָּה יְכַבֵּס בְּגַדְיוֹ וְטַמֵּא עַד־הַעֲרָבָה:

⁴¹וְכָל־הַשְׂרֵץ הַשְׁרֵץ עַל־הָאָרֶץ שְׁקֵץ הוּא לֹא יִאֱכֵל: ⁴²כֹּל הַזְּלָקָע עַל־גְּחוֹן וְכָל־הַזְּלָקָע עַל־אַרְבָּע עַד בְּלִמְרַבָּה רְגָלִים לְכָל־הַשְׂרֵץ הַשְׂרֵץ עַל־הָאָרֶץ לֹא תְאַכְלָוּם בִּישְׁקֵץ קָם: ⁴³אֶל־תִּשְׁקַצְוּ אֶת־ינְפְשַׁתְיכֶם בְּכָל־הַשְׂרֵץ הַשְׂרֵץ וְלֹא תְطַמֵּאוּ בָּהֶם וְנוֹטְמַתֶּם בָּם: ⁴⁴כִּי אֲנִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וְהַתְּקִדְשְׁתֶם וְהִיִּתֶם קָדוֹשִׁים בְּיַדְךָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ וְלֹא תְטַמֵּאוּ אֶת־ינְפְשַׁתְיכֶם בְּכָל־הַשְׂרֵץ הַרְמֵשׁ עַל־הָאָרֶץ: ⁴⁵כִּי אֲנִי יְהוָה הַמְּעוֹלָה אֶתְכֶם מִארֶץ מִצְרַיִם לְהִיאֵת לְכָם לְאֱלֹהִים וְהִיִּתֶם קָדוֹשִׁים בְּיַדְךָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ:

⁴⁶זֹאת תֹּורַת הַבָּהֶמֶת וְהַעֲזֹף וְכָל־נְפָשָׁת הַחַיָּה הַרְמֵשׁת בָּמִים וְכָל־נְפָשָׁת הַשְׁרָצָת עַל־הָאָרֶץ: ⁴⁷לְהַבְדֵיל בֵּין הַטָּמֵא וּבֵין הַטָּהוֹר וּבֵין הַחַיָּה הַגְּאַכְלָת וּבֵין הַחַיָּה אֲשֶׁר לֹא תִאֱכֵל: פ

39. has died. That is, without being ritually slaughtered.

41–43. things that swarm upon the earth. That is, the animals discussed in vv. 29–30.

SUMMARY STATEMENT AND RATIONALE: YOU SHALL BE HOLY (11:44–47)

God's holiness is given as the reason for all the dietary restrictions.

The statement in v. 45 suggests that there are parallels between what is offered to God and what Israelites have to do when striving toward holiness. To sanctify oneself is to keep apart from impurities as well as transgressions.

That verse, together with v. 44, are the first clear statements in which Israelites are commanded to emulate God's holiness, an idea that is developed at length beginning with Leviticus 19.

—Lisbeth S. Fried

Another View

PARASHAT SH'MINI CHALLENGES the notion of a rational religion, yet we still seek a logical basis for the food laws in Leviticus 11. Mary Douglas, who examines the food prohibitions in Leviticus from an anthropological perspective, looks for the underlying rationale. In her influential work Purity and Danger (1966), she concludes that the distinctions between pure and impure animals are based on the principle that pure animals are those that stay well within the bounds of their habitat. The qualities of impure animals are seen as unsuitable for their habitat, thereby threatening to blur the boundaries established by pure animals, who possess qualities seen as suitable for that habitat. Douglas's categories rely largely on the means of locomotion appropriate to each sphere: wings for air, cleft hooves for earth, fins and scales for water. Everything that blurs these boundaries is segregated and put into a category of defilement.

Less well known is a brilliant and complex later essay, "Self Evidence" (in her book Implicit Meanings, 1975), in which Douglas suggests how biblical food prohibitions fit into the wider historical and socio-political realities of the Israelites and later of the Jews, throughout their history. This preoccupation with distinguishing what is inside bounds from what is outside bounds is a reflection, according to Douglas, of Israelite history and sociology. Inside Israel's frail boundaries is a small political unit surrounded by powerful enemies. Douglas concludes that here is a people who cherish their boundaries and want nothing better than to keep them strong and high; any attempt to cross them is seen as a hostile intrusion.

The mysteries of the parashah and the rational connection between religion and culture come together here. For biblical Israel, being holy means being set apart. Food prohibitions reflect Israel's preoccupation with clearly defined categories. This preoccupation continues to be expressed when Jews differentiate between the holy and profane, between light and darkness, between Israel and other nations, between Shabbat and the rest of the week. What Douglas illustrates, in both her earlier and later works, is how such religious practices and systems are shaped by socio-political circumstances, and, in turn, shape the norms of the community.

Food prohibitions reflect Israel's preoccupation with clearly defined categories.

—Diane M. Sharon

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

a spring or cistern in which water is collected shall be pure (11:35–36). The biblical phrase "a cistern in which water is collected" (mikvei-mayim) provides the foundation for rabbinic justifications for required immersion in the mikveh, the ritual bathing pool. This phrase, mikvei-mayim, referring to an accumulation of water, also appears in Genesis 1:10 and Exodus 7:19. The Bible does not use the word mikveh by itself except in the form of a variant (mikvah) in Isaiah 22:11. There is no biblical reference to the legislated use of such pools or cisterns for ritual immersion. Since no ritual baths from the time of the First Temple have been found, scholars do not know how the earliest Israelites conducted the purifying washings that are mentioned in such places as Leviticus 15.

SH'MINI

The Rabbis inherited from the Torah a ritual purity system that had involved both priests and laity, and both women and men; those sages assumed that the biblical commandments for ritual purification required full immersion in a mikveh (plural, mikva'ot). In biblical times, however, ritual washing could have been achieved instead by splashing, pouring (affusion), or rinsing. The range of available strategies is illustrated in Greek red- and black-figure pottery from the 6th century B.C.E. onward, where scenes depict men or women showering from spigots in a slightly stooped but standing position, using tubs and basins, or having water from large jugs poured upon them while in a crouched position. Neighboring Near Eastern cultures also had a variety of forms of purification, and there is no reason to think that uniformity was the rule in ancient Israel as well. When rabbinic Judaism eventually emerged as the dominant form of Jewish practice, however, the mikveh would become the only acceptable type of installation for ritual immersion.

The mikveh has been used most frequently by women.

Archeologists have found numerous ritual bathing pools that Jews constructed during the Second Temple period (some two thousand years ago), indicating their practice of full bodily immersion. Since stored rainwater was always a scarce commodity, Jews utilized water diverted from caves, springs, and rivers whenever possible in building ritual baths. The most common use of such mikva'ot during this era was purification prior to entering the area of the Temple. Rabbinic sources indicate that the Jewish court (beit din) supervised the construction, validity, measurements, and cleanliness of these mikva'ot. During Second Temple times, however, it appears that Jews had not achieved uniformity of opinion as to mikveh requirements: the pools found do not all adhere to the same configurations, and surviving texts reveal doctrinal differences.

Mikva'ot is the sixth tractate in the order T'hilot (Purities) of the Mishnah. It discusses the characteristics of a valid mikveh, various ways of constructing a mikveh, and the nature and sources of the water necessary for a valid mikveh. This tractate also explains what constitutes valid immersion.

According to tractate Mikva'ot and other rabbinic sources, a mikveh must be hewn out of rock or built into the ground; it must also be made watertight, usually with plaster, since any leakage invalidates it. A ritual bath must contain a minimum of forty se'ahs (at least two hundred gallons, or more than 750 liters) of free-flowing clean water, sufficient for full immersion either vertically or horizontally. Rain or spring water is valid, as is water diverted from a river, lake, or ocean. Once a mikveh contains the minimum quantity of valid water, drawn water of any amount may be added.

Most biblical laws of ritual purity lapsed with the destruction of the Second Temple in 70 C.E. Since that time, the mikveh has been used most frequently by women. They immerse on a variety of occasions: prior to marriage, at a specified time in each menstrual cycle, and following the birth of children. Traditionally, mikveh immersion is part of conversion to Judaism. Some authorities have encouraged men to immerse in a mikveh on the eve of the Sabbath and festivals. In accordance with Numbers 31:22–23, some Jews also immerse in the mikveh their new metal and glass vessels and vessels purchased from non-Jews.

Rabbinic efforts to justify immersion indicate that the rationale was secondary to the practice. Midrash Sifra connects the ritual immersion of a vessel to another requirement for purification, namely, waiting for the sun to set. The midrash states that just as purification is linked to the simultaneous setting of the entire sun, so purification should be understood to refer to simultaneous immersion of the entire vessel (Sh'mini 8).

—Carol Selkin Wise

Contemporary Reflection

ALL ISRAEL is a kingdom of priests (Exodus 19:6). Some among them are priests of priests. At the top of the priestly pyramid stands Aaron, the kohein gadol (high priest). The kohein gadol is vested with considerable power and responsibility. Though everything is new—and no models exist for him to follow—Aaron carries out his role with great competency and dignity as he offers up the first sacrifices to God.

In parashat Sh'mini, we find ourselves with Aaron and his family at an exhilarating moment. It is the climactic eighth day of dedication of the Tabernacle. Exultant and joyful, Aaron and his sons bless the people—and the glory of God appears before all. A fire of heavenly origin consumes the sacrifices in their entirety; the people fall on their faces in awe and love of God. Aaron's joy must surely be overflowing.

Suddenly, the scene turns into heartbreak. Though not commanded to do so, Nadab and Abihu, Aaron's elder sons, put incense into pans and bring it as an offering. Instantly, a fire of God leaps out and consumes them. Aaron is devastated. These two sons were outstanding young men: they were deemed worthy of ascending Mt. Sinai in a most prestigious order—after Moses and Aaron, and before the 70 elders—and worthy of participating in the festive meal at which God's face was shown (Exodus 24:1, 9–11).

What could have happened? We struggle to understand. Was this a punishment from God, or a random accident? What crime could they have committed that was so heinous as to warrant death by flash fire? Perhaps they were acting out of enthusiasm and desire to serve. Perhaps they were overcome simply by the pure joy of being in the presence of God—and wished only to increase awe in the hearts of the people. And even if they were guilty of not following God's word to the last, did not their father Aaron have credit in the storehouse of good deeds? Was there not some milder punishment that could have been meted out on the scale, such as that meted out to other miscreants in the Torah?

Yet despite the fact that they performed everything else properly and created a glorious Tabernacle celebration, despite their father's merit or their own, they are swiftly cut down.

When I was growing up, my high school Torah teacher, Mar Yerushalmi, communicated unequivocally to his students that Nadab and Abihu were punished for the grave sin of eating in the place where they should not have. Whenever a student would be caught chewing gum in class as we studied Torah with Rashi's commentary, Yerushalmi would remind her of Nadab and Abihu. On the one hand, this devout teacher was implying that the sons were guilty and deserved what they got; on the other, likening their crime to a teenager's act of chewing gum in the wrong setting was his way of subtly suggesting to a class of impressionable teenagers that he, too, felt the punishment did not fit the crime.

Why is there a halachah enjoining the comforting visitor to hold back in silence?

The Torah narrative teaches us that Moses struggles with the same issue, trying to find an explanation. He wants to offer consolation to his beloved brother and closest friend, yet he takes care not to betray his responsibility as the leader who must teach the people to follow God's law. "This is what תִּהְעָרֵב meant by saying, 'Through those near to Me I show Myself holy'" (10:3). Moses' delicate message to the people—and his only consolation to Aaron—is that this was not a random act but a sentence decreed on those closest to God, who are thus held to a higher standard.

What was Aaron's response? Two simple words:

SH'MINI

vayidom Aharon (“And Aaron was silent”). The word vayidom means more than he kept quiet—vayishtok. Aaron responded with a profound, shattering silence, a stunning silence, a shocked silence. He does not justify the cruel decree by blaming his sons and accepting their fate as punishment for their sins. Yet, neither does he revolt or protest God’s action. Total silence.

Aaron’s response is the profoundest human and religious response to the reality that there are times when good people die unjustly or are consumed in tragedies that seem to be arbitrary, shocking, without justification, and with nothing to ameliorate the pain and loss of those who love them.

A few years ago, in 2002, my beloved son JJ, age 36, was killed while riding a bicycle in Israel. He had arrived the night before to celebrate the holidays with the whole family and was bicycling with his brother to visit his sister in Zichron Yaakov, when a young driver ran a yellow light with great speed—and took JJ’s life in an instant. JJ loved Israel, family, Judaism, athletics, God, nature, and life; and he was celebrating all of these loves when his life was snuffed out.

When my husband and I sat shiva, most people came with no forethought agenda or explanation, though a few—out of good intention and compassion—tried to justify God or soften the loss by giving it some meaning. “He was so good that God needed him by His side” was one such attempt, to which on one occasion—unable to hold back my words—I responded, “But we on Earth need him more!” Most people understood at the deepest level that there was nothing that could justify, nothing that could offset the pain or soften the blow, and they wisely remained silent. And we ourselves were silent, as there were no words we could speak that would make any sense of it.

At times, devout members of religions that affirm an afterlife are tempted to say that the deceased is “in a better place—living a better life in a better world”; or they are tempted to suggest that there must be some sin or error or judgment that has brought this fate upon the victim. Such persons cannot tolerate the thought that what has happened is unjustified, for it violates their deepest principles about good and evil, reward and punishment. They need somehow to internally rationalize and justify a reality in order to bring the world back to proper equilibrium.

The Jewish laws of bereavement, so exquisitely tuned to the needs of the mourners, stipulate that the shiva visitor should not speak until the mourner speaks. I had always thought that the point of that precept was to ensure that the conversation would flow to the place the mourner needs it to reach. But I now understand that the halachah enjoining the comforting visitor to hold back in silence serves a different function: to caution against offering a rationale for the decree of death. The deeper human religious response is to be silent, to live with the contradiction, and to affirm that we need not force meaning into tragedy. Sometimes, the deepest response of love is to be silent.

—Blu Greenberg

.
Voices
.

My Dead

Rahel (transl. Robert Friend)

Leviticus 10:1–3

“Only the dead don’t die”

Only they are left me, they are faithful still whom death’s sharpest knife can no longer kill.

At the turn of the highway, at the close of day they silently surround me, they quietly go my way.

A true pact is ours, a tie time cannot disserve.
Only what I have lost is what I possess forever.

from Contractions of Death

Sherri Mandell

Leviticus 10:1–3

Mourning my son has similarities to labor.
The contractions of pain rush through my body like a knot that is tied tighter and tighter so that I am unable to breathe, dead along with my son. My womb becomes a grave. I feel the pain of him in my belly, a pressure bearing down on me. It will always be inside of me. And though I hope and pray that one day I will not be as great with pain as I am now, the pain will never leave me.

If I Only Knew

Nelly Sachs (transl. Ruth and Matthew Mead)

Leviticus 10:1–3

If I only knew
On what your last look rested.
Was it a stone that had drunk
So many last looks that they fell Blindly upon its blindness?

Or was it earth
Enough to fill a shoe,
And black already
With so much parting
And with so much killing?

Or was it your last road
That brought you a farewell from all the roads
You had walked?

A puddle, a bit of shining metal,
Perhaps the buckle of your enemy’s belt,
Or some other small augury
Of heaven?

Or did this earth,
Which lets no one depart unloved,
Send you a bird-sign through the air,
Reminding your soul that it quivered
In the torment of its burnt body?

SH'MINI

A Pure Whole Memory

Dahlia Ravikovitch

(transl. Chana Bloch and Chana Kronfeld)

Leviticus 10:1–3

Only when the face is erased can anything here be remembered whole,
only when the face is erased.
Then the lights go wild,
the colors start from their frames.
Stars plunge from their height like epileptics.
Grasses groan up out of the earth (their growing pains greater than wilting pangs).

All those things that blind our eyes draw back to the shadows.
So too the face.
Something begins to stir in the depths.

How many days,
how many years of wind and weather,
have we waited for it to erupt from the depths of the earth, one pure whole memory like a lily,
pale red.

For the Last Time

Robin Fox

Leviticus 10:1–3

How do you know
when it's the last time?
The last time to ask “How are you?
How was your day?”
The last time to say “I love you.
Good night . . . sweet dreams.”

You don't.
And so you must reach out with love and compassion at every opportunity to show those who love you that you care
you love
and need to be needed . . .
in a world where you suddenly find yourself alone once again
in an achingly painful way because someone you love has left you behind to seek your own paths and truths
in an uncertain place.

The only thing certain is that you're not truly alone because of those who do love you and for that be thankful and grateful and feel blessed that you were able to say “Good night . . . I love you” one last time.

Inheritance

Sue Hubbard

Leviticus 11

Childhood Sundays: the dread, and the polished patina of oak with crimson claret, the snowy linen in initialed silver rings and hexagrams of cutlery on tablemats of hunting scenes—pink coats and fox-hounds braying for the kill and my father skilfully carving the strained lacunae thin as slices of rare beef.

Days when grandma came, the air was sharp as English mustard
—she wouldn't eat the meat, instead brought pots of pickled cucumber, chopped liver, balls of gefite fish in waxy paper-bags which made my mother sigh.

“It’s not kosher” grandma said when I asked why? unlocking clouded memories, three generations’ climb from East End tenement to this wooden Surrey Hill.
This was a house of tea cups,
of cupboards layered with mounds of my father’s crisp starched shirts, of rose beds and clipped lawns,
where I learned to stitch on that elastic tennis-club smile to cover the slow dawning that I was a Jew.

צָרִיא ✦ Tazria

LEVITICUS 12:1–13:59

Purity, Birth, and Illness

TRASHAT TAZRIA continues the theme of ritual purity that extends also to parashat M'tzora (Leviticus 14–15). While Leviticus 12 deals with the impurity of the woman who suffers from bleeding after childbirth, Leviticus 15 will concern women and men who experience other kinds of genital discharge, both normal and abnormal. The intervening passage, Leviticus 13–14, concerns tzaraat—certain growths on skin, fabric, or leather. Traditionally the term has been translated as “leprosy,” but in English “leprosy” nowadays refers to something other than the conditions that the Torah describes.

Parashat Tazria thus includes two different subjects: (1) the impurity from childbirth (Leviticus 12); and (2) the diagnosis of and regulations concerning skin, garments, and leather goods with certain kinds of surface eruptions (Leviticus 13). Common to both, however, is the Israelite notion that physical conditions can produce a pollution that affects not only the party afflicted but also the sanctuary—the abode of the divine Presence. Therefore, the individuals affected must not “touch any consecrated thing, nor enter the sanctuary” during prescribed periods (12:4). Being denied access to holiness extends to all whom the Torah considers impure (tamei). Certain sins also result in the pollution of Israel’s holy place (see, for example, 16:16, 18:24–25, 20:3).

The common denominator regarding all the physical conditions that produce impurity is their association with the nexus of life and death. Numbers 12 shows that the Israelites associated tzaraat with death: when Miriam is stricken with it, Aaron pleads, “Let her not be as a stillbirth [literally “a dead person”] which emerges from its mother’s womb with half its flesh eaten away!” (12:12). In the Torah, blood is synonymous with life (Genesis 9:4; Leviticus 17:14). Vaginal blood had an even greater significance for some of the ancients, who thought that it contained the seed that united with the male seed (semen) to produce a human being (Jacob Milgrom, Leviticus 1–16, 1991, pp. 744, 767, 950). As menstrual fluid, it signified a lost opportunity to create life, thus linked with the process of death. This applied as well to the person who suffered from scale disease.

This legislation has had an enormous impact upon the lives of Jewish women.

The legislation in Leviticus 12 and its focus upon the menstruating woman have had an enormous impact upon the lives of Jewish women. (For the practical consequences of impurity for women in ancient Israel, see the introduction to parashat M'tzora, p. 657.) The view that women—via their normal, recurring bodily functions—generate a pollution antagonistic to holiness served as a justification for women's distance from the sacred throughout Jewish history. Women were disqualified from the Israelite priesthood perhaps because of fear that the sudden onset of menstruation would result in the clash of impurity and holiness, with presumed dire consequences. (For a different perspective, see T'tzaveh, Another View, p. 489.) After the destruction of the Temple, which was the focus for the laws of ritual purity, women were often prevented from having contact with a Torah scroll, for example, because of the fear of giving affront to God by approaching in an impure state. The basis for many of the restrictions imposed upon the menstruant and the woman who gave birth was found not in Jewish law but rather in popular custom, which triumphed despite the objections of some rabbis. In addition to her participation in public religious life, the private life of the Jewish woman was affected: she and her husband were not allowed to engage in sexual relations during extensive periods of time, which greatly impacted her fertility and married life in general.

—Elaine Goodfriend

Outline—

I. LAWS FOR THE IMPURITY OF A WOMAN AFTER GIVING BIRTH (12:1–8)

- A. Impurity after the birth of a male (vv. 1–4)
- B. Impurity after the birth of a female (vv. 5)
- C. Sacrifices by a woman who gave birth (vv. 6–8)

II. LAWS FOR DIAGNOSING AND CONTAINING SKIN DISEASES (13:1–59)

- A. Skin diseases and procedures for diagnosing and containing them (vv. 1–44)
 - 1. Shiny marks (vv. 1–8)
 - 2. Discolorations (vv. 9–17)
 - 3. Boils (vv. 18–23)
 - 4. Burns (vv. 24–28)
 - 5. Infection of the scalp or beard (vv. 29–37)
 - 6. Vitiligo (vv. 38–39)
 - 7. Baldness (vv. 40–44)
- B. Restrictions for the person with scale disease (vv. 45–46)
- C. Infection of fabrics and of articles made of skin (vv. 47–59)

12:1

יְהוָה spoke to Moses, saying: ²Speak to the Israelite people thus: When a woman at childbirth bears a male, she shall be impure seven

יב וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים לֵאמֹר: ² דָבָר
אֲלֹהִים יְשָׁרָאֵל לְאֹמֶר אֲשֶׁר כִּי תִזְרִיעַ
וַיַּלְדָּה זָכָר וְטָמֵאָה שְׁבִעַת יְמִים כִּי מִנְחָת

Laws for the Impurity of a Woman after Giving Birth (12:1–8)

The section that delineates purification rituals for women after childbirth differentiates between the birth of a son and that of a daughter. For the first 7 days after the birth of a son, and for 14 days after that of a daughter, the woman is in a ritual state equivalent to that of a menstruating woman (see Leviticus 15). Afterward she must still abstain from contact with the sacred items or the sanctuary for another 33 days in the case of a son and 66 days in the case of a daughter. Leviticus offers no explanation for the differences in duration.

Despite the fact that Leviticus 12 does not mention bathing, most commentators assume that the act of ritual bathing or immersion marks the end of a woman's period of impurity. Bathing signifies the termination of impurity from other causes (see 14:8, 9). On bathing in a ritual bath (mikveh), which became mandatory for women in subsequent periods, see Sh'mini, Post-biblical Interpretations, p. 630; Contemporary Reflection, p. 652.

IMPURITY AFTER THE BIRTH OF A MALE (12:1–4)

The notion that the woman who gave birth bears

impurity is characteristic of many ancient cultures. Among Israel's neighbors, it was common for the parturient (a woman about to give birth) to be quarantined and taboo, and special purification rituals were performed for the woman and her newborn among some groups. In Leviticus, this period of severe impurity (as opposed to the lesser degree described in v. 4) terminates after seven days when the newborn is male and after fourteen days when the newborn is female; compare v. 5.

2. at childbirth. [Heb. tazria (which becomes the name of the parashah). The verb refers to a woman producing an offspring. In Genesis 1:11–12, it means “produce seed” or “bring forth seed” (regarding trees). The collective noun zera from the same root refers to offspring when used for persons, and to seed when used in agricultural contexts. Several texts mention a woman’s own offspring. See, for example, when an angel promises Hagar that her zera will be numerous (“descendants,” Genesis 16:10; see also the blessing of Rebekah in 24:60). More often the references are to a man’s offspring (as when God makes the covenant with Abraham in Genesis 17:7). Baruch Levine translates the clause with tazria as “when a woman is inseminated” (Leviticus, 1989, p. 72). That rendering, however, does not sufficiently highlight the active role of the woman in this parashah. —Ed.]

- Why must a woman spend twice as long in a state of impurity following the birth of a girl?

ANOTHER VIEW ► 650

- “There are three partners in procreation: the Holy One, the father, and the mother.”

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 650

- To enter the mikveh is to plunge into fresh connections with Creation and spirituality.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 652

- She was the essence of beauty... when the child was placed on her belly.

VOICES ► 654

days; she shall be impure as at the time of her condition of menstrual separation.—³On the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised.—⁴She shall remain in a state of blood purification for thirty-three days: she shall not touch any consecrated thing, nor enter the sanctuary until her

דָוַתָה תְטַמָא: ³ וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁמִינִי יִמְול בָשָׂר
עֲرֵלָתוֹ: ⁴ וּשְׁלִשִים יוֹם וּשְׁלִשָת יָמִים
תָשֶׁב בְּדָמֵי טָהָרָה בְּכָל־קָדֵש לְאַחֲרָנָה וְאַל־הַמִּקְדֵש לֹא תָבֹא עַד־מְלָאת יָמֶיךָ

as at the time of her condition of menstrual separation. Menstruation creates impurity and requires seven days of separation followed by a purification ritual. According to 15:19–24, those who have contact with a menstruating woman, or with any object upon which she lies or sits, become impure and must bathe, launder their garments, and wait till evening before having contact with the sanctuary or items earmarked for it.

condition of. Heb. davah could be associated with the idea of flowing (so Rashi) but also illness (for this sense, see Deuteronomy 7:15, 28:60; Isaiah 1:5).

menstrual separation. Heb. niddah, which designates menstruation. In later Jewish texts, this word expresses the supposedly repulsive state of women with a genital discharge. Here, however, the term designates a kind of impurity that requires attention yet without apparent stigma (see further at Leviticus 15, especially 15:19–24, and at Numbers 19:9).

3. While this verse could be viewed as a sort of parenthetical reminder, a few commentators have suggested that the timing of a boy's circumcision is coordinated with the diminishing of his mother's impure status. It may be that the removal of the foreskin was viewed as a sort of purification ritual, so that both mother and son can achieve purity on consecutive days. Perhaps circumcision is delayed until the eighth day, when mother and (consequently) infant are in a less severe state of impurity, in order to prevent the contamination of the person who performs the circumcision. Therefore, circumcision may have been seen as a postpartum ritual associated with the separation of a male child from the impurity of his mother.

The renowned anthropologist Mary Douglas offers another interpretation of the role of circumcision in the context of postpartum impurity. She writes that circumcision played a protective role for mother and son, so that they were perceived as safer than a mother and daughter. This enhanced protection allowed the new mother and her son to venture out sooner, whereas a mother and her daughter had to lie low to avoid danger. Impurity was viewed as having a protective function. One might ask, “Protection from what?” Douglas’s theory assumes that the people of ancient Israel retained a strong fear of demons (for a possible allusion to such demonic forces, see Exodus 4:24–26). The Torah, however, makes no obvious allusions to such a fear, nor does it make an obvious link between impurity and protection with regard to individuals who become tamei for other reasons.

A baby boy who had completed his first week of life is ready for entrance into the covenant, similar to the acceptability of an animal for sacrifice after it had completed its first week of life (Exodus 22:29, Leviticus 22:27).

4. a state of blood purification for thirty-three days. This period differs from the initial seven-day period in that the woman now has access to the common sphere, including her husband. She remains impure only in regard to the sanctuary and holy objects. Thus, this section prescribes a total of forty days for the purification period following the birth of a boy.

consecrated thing. Heb. kodesh, a reference to items earmarked for donation to the sanctuary and its priesthood: these include first-fruits, tithes, and animals designated for sacrifice.

period of purification is completed.⁵ If she bears a female, she shall be impure two weeks as during her menstruation, and she shall remain in a state of blood purification for sixty-six days.

"On the completion of her period of purification, for either son or daughter, she shall bring to the priest, at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, a lamb in its first year for a burnt offering, and a pigeon or a turtledove for a purgation offering.

IMPURITY AFTER THE BIRTH OF A FEMALE (12:5)

The purification period for a woman after giving birth to a female child is 80 days, twice as long as after a male child. But the provisions follow the same two-step pattern: for the first two weeks, she is in a state of impurity comparable to a menstruating woman; and for sixty-six days she remains impure in regard to the sanctuary and items consecrated to it. The reason for the longer state of impurity after the birth of a girl is unclear. One proposed explanation is that the baby girl is a potential menstruant and mother, and so a future source of impurity. [Nicole Ruane challenges this view in her recent dissertation ("Male without Blemish: Sacrifice and Gender Ideologies in Priestly Ritual Law," 2005). Instead, she argues that the text presumes the following worldview: "While it is imperfect that women give birth to boys, it is even less perfect when a woman bears a girl" (p. 164). Thus a woman who bears a boy is "rewarded" by having the time of her impurity halved. This possible understanding of birth and of gender would apply to certain priestly writings for which patrilineal continuity is a central concern; we have no information as to how widespread this idea might have been, nor how widely practiced this regulation was. —Ed.] See also Another View, p. 650.

Other less likely proposals attribute the longer time following the birth of a girl to the ancients' notion that male embryos were completely formed in forty-one days and females in eighty-two, or posit

טהרה: ^{וְאִם־נָקַבָּה תֵּלֶד וְטָמֵאָה שְׁבֻעִים בְּנָדְתָה וְשְׁשִׁים יוֹם וְשְׁשָׁת יְמִים תִּשְׁבֶּן}
דְּמִי טהָרָה:

^{וּבְמַלְאָת אִימִי טהָרָה לְבָנָן אָוּ לְבָת תְּבִיא בְּבָשָׂר בָּנְשָׁנָתוֹ לְעָלָה וּבְנִירְוָה אֲוֹתָנוֹ לְחַטָּאת אַלְפְּתִיחָה אַחֲלָמּוּעָד אַלְיָחְדָּה:}

that the Torah is accounting to the mother the occasional vaginal bleeding which afflicts newborn females (Jonathan Magonet, "... The Riddle of Leviticus 12:5," in Reading Leviticus, 1996, pp. 144–52), or ascribe a protective function to the state of impurity (see at v. 3).

Some have suggested that the prolonged impurity of the baby girl's mother reflects the social inferiority of females (a judgment not stated in the biblical text). Others counter that the greater potential for defilement does not indicate social status; after all, the handling of a human corpse defiles to a far greater degree than touching a dead lizard (compare 11:29–31 and Numbers 19), yet the status of the human is higher than that of a reptile.

SACRIFICES BY A WOMAN WHO GAVE BIRTH (12:6–8)

6. When the mother reaches either the fortieth or eightieth day post-partum, she must take the necessary ritual steps to regain access to the holy sphere. Leviticus does not prescribe immersion for the woman's post-partum purification (although the Rabbis assume a second immersion at this point, in addition to the ritual bathing at the end of seven or fourteen days). Rather, two sacrifices mark the end of the period of impurity.

burnt offering. Heb. olah, which elsewhere has one of several functions: to atone for sin, to offer thanksgiving, or to pay homage to God (see Leviticus 1).

purgation offering. Heb. chatat, which cleanses

⁷He shall offer it before יהוה and make expiation on her behalf; she shall then be pure from her flow of blood. Such are the rituals concerning her who bears a child, male or female. ⁸If, however, her means do not suffice for a sheep, she shall take two turtledoves or two pigeons, one for a burnt offering and the other for a purgation offering. The priest shall make expiation on her behalf, and she shall be pure.

13 יהוה spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying:

²When a person has on the skin of the body a the sanctuary of the impurity generated by the mother's severe discharge; blood from the sacrifice serves as a ritual detergent (see Leviticus 4). Thus, while human blood or discharge is a source of impurity, the blood of an animal sacrifice is what counteracts its effect on the sphere of holiness.

7. she shall then be pure from her flow of blood.

The passage of time, the offering of sacrifices, and perhaps a ritual bathing (unwritten but apparently assumed) all contribute to her renewed ability to touch and eat sacred food and enter holy space. [To generalize, Leviticus presumes that women have access to sacred space whenever they are ritually pure. —Ed.]

8. Provisions for a reduction in the cost of the sacrifice for the poor are found elsewhere in the Torah as well (5:7, 11; 14:21). Otherwise, poor Israelites would have had no means to eliminate impurity.

Laws for Diagnosing and Containing Skin Diseases (13:1–59)

For a long time, biblical tzaraat has been equated with leprosy (also called Hansen's Disease), but such a view is mistaken. This unit expects the skin eruptions that it describes to change in appearance or disappear at the end of seven or fourteen days (13:6–8, 27, 35–36), unlike what is known as leprosy today. The Torah appears to group together

⁷ וְהִקְרַבֵּו לִפְנֵי יְהוָה וּכְפַר עַלְיהָ וּטְהַרֵּה מִמּוֹקֵר דְמִיחָה זוֹאת תֹוֹתֶת הַלְלָת לְזַכַּר אֲזַלְּנְקָבָה: ⁸ וְאַם־לֹא תִמְצָא יְדָה גַּעַשׁ וְלֹקַחַת שְׁתִי־תְּרִים אוֹ שְׁנִי בְּנֵי יוֹנָה אֶחָד לְעַלְתָּה וְאֶחָד לְחַטָּאת וּכְפַר עַלְיהָ הַפְּנִימִית וּטְהַרֵּה: ב'

ג וַיַּדְבֵּר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל־אַהֲרֹן:

² אֶלָם כִּי־יְהִי בְּעֹור־בָשָׂרו שְׁאַת אָזְן

under the term tzaraat at least three different diseases that cause scaly or discolored skin: probably psoriasis, favus (a fungus infection), and vitiligo. These three conditions, however, do not change appreciably or disappear over the course of a week or two, which leads some scholars to hesitate in making a certain identification with tzaraat.

Modern translations use various terms for tzaraat (sometimes inconsistently), including “scaly affection,” “affection,” “eruption,” “scale disease,” and “leprosy.” Leviticus focuses on the appearance of the disease, not only upon the human body, but also upon fabrics, leather, and houses (13:47–59, 14:33–53). That is, Leviticus is primarily concerned not with the disease but with its manifestation.

Numbers 12 helps explain why the appearance of tzaraat causes its inclusion in the Torah's system of impurities. There, Miriam and Aaron, Moses' older siblings, criticize Moses on account of his Cushite wife and dispute Moses' preeminence as a prophet. God punishes Miriam; and she becomes stricken with tzaraat that is “as snow,” a reference to its whiteness or its flaky nature. Aaron then pleads with Moses on her behalf: “Let her not be as a stillbirth, who emerges from its mother's womb with its flesh half-eaten away!” (12:12). Thus, the person afflicted with tzaraat seems like a decomposing corpse, as the skin has the appearance of wasting away. This accords with the suggestion (see the introduction, p. 637) that the common feature swelling, a rash, or a discoloration, and it develops into a scaly affection on the skin of the body, it shall be reported to Aaron the priest or to one of his sons, the priests.³ The priest shall examine the affliction on the skin of the body: if hair in the affected patch has turned white and the affliction appears to be deeper than the skin of the body, it is a leprous affliction; when the priest sees it, he shall pronounce the person impure.⁴ But if it is a white discoloration on the skin of the body which does not appear to be deeper than the skin and the hair

סְפִיחָת אֹו בְּהַרְתָּ וְהִיָּה בְּעֹרֶב־בָּשָׂרׁ לְגַעַץ
צָרָעָת וְהַוְּבָא אֶל־אַהֲרֹן הַכֹּהֵן אֹו אֶל־
אַחֲרֵיד מִבְנֵי הַכֹּהֲנִים: ³ וְרָאָה הַכֹּהֵן אֶת־
הַגַּעַץ בְּעֹרֶב־הַבָּשָׂר וְשַׁעַר בְּגַעַץ הַפְּרָךְ | לְבָנָן
וּמְرָאָה הַגַּעַץ עַמְקָל מֵעוֹר בְּשָׂרוֹ גַעַץ צָרָעָת
הַוְּא וְרָאָה הַכֹּהֵן וְתִמְאָ אַתָּה: ⁴ וְאָמַר
בְּהַרְתָּ לְבָנָה הַוְּא בְּעֹר בְּשָׂרוֹ וְעַמְקָל אִינֵּן
מְרָאָה מִן־הַעֲוֹר וְשַׁעַרְהָ לְאַ-הַפְּרָךְ לְבָנָן

of all of the physical conditions that generate impurity is their association with death, a force antithetical to holiness.

The religions of the ancient Near East and ancient Greece regarded scale disease, like most maladies, as divine punishment, often for the violation of treaties. Numbers 12, along with II Kings 5 and II Kings 15 (II Chronicles 26), depicts tzaraat as a condition visited by God upon the sinner. In the case of Miriam, the Rabbis deduce that her sin is maligning Moses; they perceive the disease as the punishment for slander, among other sins. However, Leviticus never implies that the disease is a punishment from God. Rather, it refrains from imputing guilt to the affected individual and describes only the affliction and procedures for coping with its effect.

SKIN DISEASES AND PROCEDURES FOR DIAGNOSING AND CONTAINING THEM (13:1–44)

1. Only Moses and Aaron initially receive the information concerning the diagnosis of scale disease. This contrasts with other legislation, which is to be conveyed to the people of Israel (compare 12:1 or 15:1–2). The priests descended from Aaron will be experts in the diagnosis and ritual treatment of tzaraat but not of other diseases, thus confirming the ritual—not medical—nature of the Torah’s concern.

Shiny Marks (13:1–8)

2. person. Heb. adam, which refers to both men and women (see Genesis 5:2, where God identifies both woman and man as adam). Miriam’s case in Numbers 12 demonstrates that women can be afflicted (see also below, vv. 29, 38).

and it develops into a scaly affection. If the initial eruptions grow, they may qualify as a “scaly affection” (nega tzaraat). In Hebrew nega, “affection” (literally “touch”) always refers to a divine punishment in other biblical books (Genesis 12:17; Exodus 11:1; II Kings 15:5), but Leviticus never presents the affliction as punishment.

3. For a positive diagnosis of the disease, the hair in the affected patch of skin must also appear white, while the area must appear sunken compared to the skin around it.

leprosy. [Here the original JPS translators note: “Where a human being is declared impure by reason of tzaraat, the traditional translation ‘leprosy’ has been retained without regard to modern medical terminology.” The reason for doing so, according to a member of the translation committee, was “to convey the horror that the Bible attaches to this affliction.” —Ed.]

in it has not turned white, the priest shall isolate the affected person for seven days.⁵ On the seventh day the priest shall conduct an examination, and if the affection has remained unchanged in color and the disease has not spread on the skin, the priest shall isolate that person for another seven days.⁶ On the seventh day the priest shall again conduct an examination: if the affection has faded and has not spread on the skin, the priest shall pronounce the person pure. It is a rash; after washing those clothes, that person shall be pure.⁷ But if the rash should spread on the skin after the person has been seen by the priest and pronounced pure, that person shall again report to the priest.⁸ And if the priest sees that the rash has spread on the skin, the priest shall pronounce that person impure; it is leprosy.

⁹When a person has a scaly affection, it shall be reported to the priest.¹⁰ If the priest finds on the skin a white swelling which has turned some hair white, with a patch of undисcolored flesh in the swelling,¹¹ it is chronic leprosy on the skin of the body, and the priest shall pronounce the person impure; being impure, that person need not be isolated.¹² If the eruption spreads out over the skin so that it covers all the skin of the affected person from head to foot, wherever the priest can see—¹³if the priest sees that the eruption has covered the whole body—he shall pronounce as pure the affected person, who is pure from having turned all white.¹⁴ But as soon as undiscolored flesh appears in it,

וְהַסְגִּיר הַפָּנִים אֶת־הַגָּגָע שְׁבֻעַת יְמִים: ⁵ וְרָאָהוּ הַפָּנִים בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעֵי וְהַנְּהָה הַגָּגָע עַמְדֶּבֶןְיָנוּ לְאַפְשָׁה הַגָּגָע בָּעוֹר וְהַסְגִּירוּ הַפָּנִים שְׁבֻעַת יְמִים שְׁנִיתִים: ⁶ וְרָאָהוּ הַפָּנִים אָתוּ בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעֵי שְׁנִיתִי וְהַנְּהָה בְּקָה הַגָּגָע וְלְאַפְשָׁה הַגָּגָע בָּעוֹר וְטָהָרוּ הַפָּנִים מִסְפְּחַת הָוָא וְכַבֵּס בָּגְדִין וְטָהָר: ⁷ וְאַמְדֵּפְשָׁה תְּפִשְׁה הַמִּסְפְּחַת בָּעוֹר אֲחֵרָיו הָרָאָתוּ אֶל־הַפָּנִים לְטַהְרָתוֹ וְנִרְאָה שְׁנִיתִה אֶל־הַפָּנִים: ⁸ וְרָאָהוּ הַפָּנִים וְהַנְּהָה פְּשַׂתְתָה הַמִּסְפְּחַת בָּעוֹר וְטַמְאָוָה הַפָּנִים צְרֻעָת הָוָא: ⁹ פְּנִיגָּע צְרֻעָת פִּי תְּהִיה בָּאָדָם וְהַוְּבָא אֶל־הַפָּנִים: ¹⁰ וְרָאָהוּ הַפָּנִים וְהַנְּהָה שְׁאַת־לְבָנָה בָּעוֹר וְלְדִיא הַפְּכָה שֵׁעָר לְבָנָן וּמִחְנִית בְּשָׂר כַּחַי בְּשָׂאת: ¹¹ צְרֻעָת נוֹשָׁנָת הָוָא בָּעוֹר בְּשָׂר וְטַמְאָוָה הַפָּנִים לֹא יִסְגְּרָנוּ כִּי טָמָא הָוָא: ¹² וְאַמְדֵּפְרֹוח תְּפִרְחָה הַצְּרֻעָת בָּעוֹר וּכְסִתְתָה הַצְּרֻעָת אֶת כָּל־עֹז הַגָּגָע מִרְאָשׁוֹ וּעְדָרְגָּלוֹ לְכָל־מִרְאָה עַיִינִי הַפָּנִים: ¹³ וְרָאָהוּ הַפָּנִים וְהַנְּהָה כְּסִתְתָה הַצְּרֻעָת אֶת כָּל־בָּשָׂר וְטָהָר אֶת־הַגָּגָע כָּל־עֹז הַפָּנִים לְכָל־טָהָר הָוָא: ¹⁴ וּבַיּוֹם הַרְאֹות בָּו בְּשָׂר כַּחַי

4. the priest shall isolate the affected person for seven days. If the diagnosis is uncertain, the individual is quarantined. The priestly writers seem to advocate special quarters for the afflicted, probably outside the camp for the wilderness period and other quarters, after Israel's settlement in the land of Canaan.

6. If the infection has not increased, the priest will declare the person ritually pure. Seclusion ends after the laundering of clothes and perhaps immersion.

8. the priest shall pronounce that person impure; it is leprosy. Alternatively, if the infection has spread after the initial examination, the diagnosis is certain; so when the infection ceases, the individual must undergo the complex ritual described in 14:1–32.

Discolorations (13:9–17)

This passage expands the previous criteria for diagnosis but adds a new element, the appearance of a “patch of undiscolored flesh” (v. 10).

that person shall be impure;¹⁵ when the priest sees the undисcolored flesh, he shall pronounce the person impure. The undiscolored flesh is impure; it is leprosy.¹⁶ But if the undiscolored flesh again turns white, that person shall come to the priest,¹⁷ and the priest shall conduct an examination: if the affection has turned white, the priest shall pronounce as pure the affected person, who is then pure.

¹⁸ When an inflammation appears on the skin of one's body and it heals,¹⁹ and a white swelling or a white discoloration streaked with red develops where the inflammation was, that person shall report to the priest.²⁰ If the priest finds that it appears lower than the rest of the skin and that the hair in it has turned white, the priest shall pronounce the person impure; it is a leprous affection that has broken out in the inflammation.²¹ But if the priest finds that there is no white hair in it and it is not lower than the rest of the skin, and it is faded, the priest shall isolate that person for seven days.²² If it should spread in the skin, the priest shall pronounce the person impure; it is an affection.²³ But if the discoloration remains stationary, not having spread, it is the scar of the inflammation; the priest shall pronounce that person pure.

²⁴ When the skin of one's body sustains a burn by fire, and the patch from the burn is a discoloration, either white streaked with red, or white,²⁵ the priest shall examine it. If some hair has turned white in the discoloration, which itself appears to go deeper than the skin, it is leprosy that has broken out in the burn. The priest shall pronounce the person impure; it is a leprous affection.²⁶ But if the priest finds that there is no white hair in the discoloration, and that it is not lower than the rest

יטמא: ¹⁵ וְרָא אֲתֶה הַפְּנֵן אֲתִיהָבֵשׂ הַחַי וְטָמֵא הַבְּשֵׂר הַחַי טָמֵא הוּא צְרֻעַת הַוָּא:
¹⁶ אָוֹ כִּי יִשּׁוֹב הַבְּשֵׂר הַחַי וְנַהֲפֵךְ לְלָבָן וּבָא אֶל-הַפְּנֵן: ¹⁷ וְרָא אֲתֶה הַפְּנֵן נַהֲפֵךְ הַגָּעַם לְלָבָן וְשָׁהָר הַפְּנֵן אֲתִיהָבֵשׂ טָהֹר הַוָּא: פ
¹⁸ וְבָשָׂר בִּירִיהִיה בּוֹבְּעָרוֹ שְׁחִין וְנַרְפָּא:
¹⁹ וְהִיא בָּمְקוֹם הַשְׁחִין שָׁאת לְבָנָה אָוֹ בְּהִרְתַּת לְבָנָה אֶרְדְּמָכָת וְנַרְאָה אֶל-הַפְּנֵן:
²⁰ וְרָא אֲתֶה הַפְּנֵן וְהַנְּהָה מְרָאָה שְׁפֵל מִזְ-הָעוֹר וְשָׁעָרָה הַפְּנֵה לְבָן וְטָמֵא הַפְּנֵן גַּע-צְרֻעַת הַוָּא בְּשְׁחִין פְּרָחָה: ²¹ וְאָם יִרְאָה הַפְּנֵן וְהַנְּהָה אַיִלְבָת שְׁעַר לְבָן וְשְׁפֵלָה אַיִלְבָת הָעוֹר וְהִיא כְּהָה וְהַסְגִּירָה הַפְּנֵן שְׁבָעַת יְמִים: ²² וְאָם-פְּשָׁה תְּפָשָׁה בְּעֹור וְטָמֵא הַפְּנֵן אַתְּ גַּע הַוָּא: ²³ וְאָם-תְּמִפְתִּיחָה תְּעַמֵּד הַפְּנֵרָת לֹא פְּשָׁתָה צְרָבָת הַשְׁחִין הַוָּא וְטָהָרָוּ הַפְּנֵן: ס

²⁴ אָו בָּשָׂר בִּירִיהִיה בּוֹרֹ מְכוֹת-אַשׁ וְהִוְתֵּה מְחִיתַת הַמְּכוֹה בְּהִרְתַּת לְבָנָה אֶרְדְּמָכָת אָו לְבָנָה: ²⁵ וְרָא אֲתֶה אֶתְהָ הַפְּנֵן וְהַנְּהָה נַהֲפֵךְ שְׁעַר לְבָן בְּבִרְתַּת וּמְרָאָה עַמְקָ מִזְ-הָעוֹר צְרֻעַת הַוָּא בְּמְכוֹה פְּרָחָה וְטָמֵא אַתְּ הַפְּנֵן גַּע צְרֻעַת הַוָּא: ²⁶ וְאָם יִרְאָה הַפְּנֵן וְהַנְּהָה אַיִלְבָת שְׁעַר לְבָן

Boils (13:18–23)

In this passage, tzaraat appears as a complication of a boil that has already healed; again, the priest uses criteria similar to the above cases in order to declare the infected individual pure or impure.

Burns (13:24–28)

In this passage, scale disease appears as a secondary development in a burn.

24. patch from the burn. The Hebrew here is uncertain.

of the skin, and it is faded, the priest shall isolate that person for seven days.²⁷ On the seventh day the priest shall conduct an examination: if it has spread in the skin, the priest shall pronounce the person impure; it is a leprous affection.²⁸ But if the discoloration has remained stationary, not having spread on the skin, and it is faded, it is the swelling from the burn. The priest shall pronounce that person pure, for it is the scar of the burn.

²⁹If a man or a woman has an affection on the head or in the beard,³⁰ the priest shall examine the affection. If it appears to go deeper than the skin and there is thin yellow hair in it, the priest shall pronounce the person impure; it is a scall, a scaly eruption in the hair or beard.³¹ But if the priest finds that the scall affection does not appear to go deeper than the skin, yet there is no black hair in it, the priest shall isolate the person with the scall affection for seven days.³² On the seventh day the priest shall examine the affection. If the scall has not spread and no yellow hair has appeared in it, and the scall does not appear to go deeper than the skin,³³ the person with the scall shall shave—but without shaving the scall; the priest shall isolate that person for another seven days.³⁴ On the seventh day the priest shall examine the scall. If the scall has not spread on the skin, and does not appear to go deeper than the skin, the priest shall pronounce the person pure; after washing those clothes, that person shall be pure.³⁵ If, however, the scall should spread on the skin after the person has been pronounced pure,³⁶ the priest shall conduct an exami-

ושפלה איננה מזידעור והוא כהה
והסיגרו הבחן שבעת ימים: ²⁷ וראהו
הבחן ביום השביעי אם-פשה תפשה
בעור וטמא הבחן אותו נגע צרעת הוא:
²⁸ ואם-תחתייה תעמל הבררת לא-פשתה
בעור והוא כהה שאת המכוּה הוא וטהורו
הבחן כי-צראבת המכוּה הוא: פ
²⁹ ואיש אוז אשה ביריה בו נגע בראש
או בזקן: ³⁰ וראה הבחן את-הנגע והנה
מן-אלחו עמק מזידעור ובו שער צהוב דק
וטמא אותו הבחן נתק והוא צרעת הראש
או הזקן הוא: ³¹ וכייראה הבחן את-נגע
הנתק והנה אין-מראלחו עמק מזידעור
ושער שחר אין בו והסיגר הבחן את-נגע
הנתק שבעת ימים: ³² וראה הבחן את-הנגע ביום השביעי והנה לא-פשה הנתק
ולא-דריה בו שער צהוב ומראה הנתק
אין עמק מזידעור: ³³ והתגלח ואת-הנתק לא יגלח והסיגר הבחן את-הנתק
שבעת ימים שנית: ³⁴ וראה הבחן את-הנתק ביום השביעי והנה לא-פשה
הנתק בעור ומראהו איןנו עמק מזידעור
וטהר אותו הבחן וכבש בגדיו וטהור:
³⁵ ואם-פשה יפשה הנתק בעור אחריו
טהרתו: ³⁶ וראהו הבחן והנה פשה הנתק

Infection of the Scalp or Beard (13:29–37)

Some moderns identify the condition with favus, a contagious skin disease caused by a fungus. Another possibility is that chronic protein deficiency has turned the normal hair color to a lighter shade.

³¹. If there were black hair growing in the suspect patch of skin, the priest would have declared the individual pure, as yellow hair is characteristic of the disease. Thus, the priest isolates the person for seven days. Perhaps one can derive from the mention of black hair as the healthy norm that there were few or no blonds or redheads among the ancient Israelites, a possibility suggested by ancient Egyptian wall paintings that depict visiting Semites as black-haired.

nation. If the scall has spread on the skin, the priest need not look for yellow hair: the person is impure.³⁷ But if the scall has remained unchanged in color, and black hair has grown in it, the scall is healed; the person is pure. The priest shall pronounce that person pure.

³⁸If a man or a woman has the skin of the body streaked with white discolorations,³⁹ and the priest sees that the discolorations on the skin of the body are of a dull white, it is a tetter broken out on the skin; that person is pure.

⁴⁰If a man loses the hair of his head and becomes bald, he is pure.⁴¹ If he loses the hair on the front part of his head and becomes bald at the forehead, he is pure.⁴² But if a white affection streaked with red appears on the bald part in the front or at the back of the head, it is a scaly eruption that is spreading over the bald part in the front or at the back of the head.⁴³ The priest shall examine him: if the swollen affection on the bald part in the front or at the back of his head is white streaked with red, like the leprosy of body skin in appearance,⁴⁴ he is among the leprous; he is impure. The priest shall pronounce him impure; he has the affection on his head.

⁴⁵As for the person with a leprous affection: the clothes shall be rent, the head shall be left bare, and

בְּעֹור לְאַיִבָּקֶר הַכֹּהֵן לְשֻׁעַר הַצְּבָב טָמֵא
הוּא: ³⁷ וְאַסְבָּעַנְיוֹ עַמְדַּה הַנְּתָק וְשֻׁעַר
שְׁחַר עַמְחִיבּוֹ נְרָפָא הַגְּתָק טְהֹור הוּא
וְטְהֹרַו הַכֹּהֵן: ס ³⁸
וְאִישׁ אֲוֹדָשָׁה כִּיְיִחְיָה בְּעֹרְבָּשָׂרִים
בְּחַרְתָּה בְּחַרְתָּה לְבָנָת: ³⁹ וְרָאָה הַכֹּהֵן וְהַנָּהָ
בְּעֹרְבָּשָׂרִים בְּחַרְתָּה בְּחַרְתָּה לְבָנָת בְּחַק הוּא פָּרָח בְּעֹור טְהֹור הוּא: ס
⁴⁰ וְאִישׁ בַּיִּפְ০רְט רָאשׁוֹ קָרְחַת הוּא טְהֹור
הוּא: ⁴¹ וְאֶת מִפְאָת פְּנֵיו יְמַרְטֵר רָאשׁוֹ גִּבְחָ
הוּא טְהֹור הוּא: ⁴² וּכִיְיִחְיָה בְּקָרְחָת אֶזְזָ
בְּגַבְּחָת נָגַע לְבָנָן אַדְמָדָם צְרָעָת פְּלָחָת
הוּא בְּקָרְחָתוֹ אוֹ בְּגַבְּחָתוֹ: ⁴³ וְרָאָה אֶתְזָ
הַכֹּהֵן וְהַנָּה שָׁאת-הָנָגָע לְבָנָה אַדְמָדָמָת
בְּקָרְחָתוֹ אוֹ בְּגַבְּחָתוֹ כְּמַרְאָה צְרָעָת עֹזֶר
בְּשָׁר: ⁴⁴ אִישׁ-צְרוּעָהוּ טָמֵא הוּא טָמֵא
יְטָמֵאנוּ הַכֹּהֵן בְּרָאשׁוֹ נָגַע:
⁴⁵ וְהַצְּרוּעָה אֲשֶׁר-בָּבוֹ הָנָגָע בְּגַדְיוֹ יְהִי
פְּרָמִים וְרָאשׁוֹ יְהִי פְּרוּעַ וְעַל-שְׁפָם

Vitiligo (13:38–39)

Some moderns identify this condition with vitiligo or leukoderma, which involves a deficiency in pigment. The Torah cautions the priest, however, that this condition should not be mistaken for tzaraat; and so the individual is declared pure.

Baldness (13:40–44)

Biblical Hebrew has two terms for baldness. One refers to baldness at the top and back of the head, while the other refers to baldness at the front of the head or forehead.

RESTRICTIONS FOR THE PERSON WITH SCALE DISEASE (13:45–46)

We learned above that the person with a suspected case of scale disease is confined or excluded from normal social relations, but now we see additional restrictions placed upon the woman or man judged by the priest to be impure.

45. the clothes shall be rent, the head shall be left bare. The first restriction is that the afflicted person should go about in ripped clothes. The second restriction means that the person's hair shall be parua, that is, disheveled. Both of these are indica-

the upper lip shall be covered over; and that person shall call out, “Impure! Impure!”⁴⁶ The person shall be impure as long as the disease is present. Being impure, that person shall dwell apart—in a dwelling outside the camp.

⁴⁷When an eruptive affection occurs in a cloth of wool or linen fabric,⁴⁸in the warp or in the woof of the linen or the wool, or in a skin or in anything made of skin;⁴⁹if the affection in the cloth or the skin, in the warp or the woof, or in any article of skin, is streaky green or red, it is an eruptive affection. It shall be shown to the priest;⁵⁰and the priest, after examining the affection, shall isolate the affected article for seven days.⁵¹On the seventh day he shall examine the affection: if the affection has spread in the cloth—whether in the warp or the

יְעַתָּה וְטָמֵא | טָמֵא יִקְרָא: ⁴⁶ בֶּלְיָמִי אֲשֶׁר
הַנֶּגֶע בָּו יִטְמָא טָמֵא הוּא בֶּן יִשְׂבֹּט מְחוֹזָק
לְמִחְנָה מוֹשֵׁבּוּ: ס

וְהַבָּגֵד כִּירִיחַה בָּו נֶגֶע צָרָעַת בְּבָגֵד
צָמֵר אָוּ בְּבָגֵד פְּשָׁתִים: ⁴⁸ אָוּ בְּשָׁתִי אָוּ
בְּעָרָב לְפְשָׁתִים וְלְצָמֵר אָוּ בְּעֹרָא אָוּ בְּכָל־
מְלָאָכָת עֹר: ⁴⁹ וְהַיָּה הַנֶּגֶע יַרְקְרָק | אָוּ
אֲדָמָךְם בְּבָגֵד אָוּ בְּעֹר אָוּבְּשָׁתִי אָוּ
בְּעָרָב אָוּ בְּכָל־כָּלִי־עֹר נֶגֶע צָרָעַת הָיוּ
וְרָאָה אֲתִיהָפָהּן: ⁵⁰ וְרָאָה הַפָּהָן אֲתִיהָ
הַנֶּגֶע וְהַסְגִּיר אֲתִיהָנֶגֶע שְׁבָעַת יְמִים:
⁵¹ וְרָאָה אֲתִיהָנֶגֶע בַּיּוֹם הַשְּׁבִיעִי כִּירִיחַ
פְּשָׁה הַנֶּגֶע בְּבָגֵד אָוּבְּשָׁתִי אָוּבְּעָרָב אָוּ

tors of a person in mourning (see 10:6). Compare Numbers 5:18, where a priest dishevels the hair of a woman accused (without evidence) of adultery.

the upper lip shall be covered. This requirement may reflect the belief that the person afflicted with scale disease is able to contaminate others with her or his breath, an indicator of the power attributed to the impurity of tzaraat.

“Impure! Impure!” A warning for people to avoid the afflicted person, presumably so that they will not be rendered impure by touch or breath.

46. The individual’s isolation is not simply because scaly disease is deemed contagious, but also because of the fear that impurity would spread from the afflicted party to pure persons in the same structure. The impurity of scale disease and of corpses share the ability to pollute others under the same roof (see Numbers 19:14). If the afflicted party remains in the community, others unaware of the impurity might enter the same structure. If that second individual then enters the sanctuary or eats sacred food, this would bring ritual impurity into a sacred context, leading to potentially disastrous consequences.

INFECTION OF FABRICS AND OF ARTICLES MADE OF SKIN (13:47–59)

The Torah juxtaposes people with fabric or leather because tzaraat can afflict both. While tzaraat refers to scale disease when it afflicts persons, in the present context it seems appropriate to understand tzaraat as mold or fungus. The Torah nowhere indicates that the infection of the garment is the by-product of its owner’s tzaraat.

47. Wool and linen fabrics are the only types mentioned because these were by far the most common in ancient Israel; cotton and silk were still extremely rare. (The mention of fabric calls women to mind, for typically it was women who produced fabrics; see Trumah, Another View, p. 467; at Exodus 35:25–26; and Pkudei, Another View, p. 560.)

48. in a skin or in anything made of skin. The Israelites used leather for sandals and belts, an occasional loincloth (II Kings 1:8), vessels for liquids (Genesis 21:14), a writing surface (perhaps Jeremiah 36), and a covering for tents (Exodus 26:14).

woof, or in the skin, for whatever purpose the skin may be used—the affection is a malignant eruption; it is impure.⁵²The cloth—whether warp or woof in wool or linen, or any article of skin—in which the affection is found, shall be burned, for it is a malignant eruption; it shall be consumed in fire.⁵³But if the priest sees that the affection in the cloth—whether in warp or in woof, or in any article of skin—has not spread,⁵⁴the priest shall order the affected article washed, and he shall isolate it for another seven days.⁵⁵And if, after the affected article has been washed, the priest sees that the affection has not changed color and that it has not spread, it is impure. It shall be consumed in fire; it is a fret, whether on its inner side or on its outer side.⁵⁶But if the priest sees that the affected part, after it has been washed, is faded, he shall tear it out from the cloth or skin, whether in the warp or in the woof;⁵⁷and if it occurs again in the cloth—whether in warp or in woof—or in any article of skin, it is a wild growth; the affected article shall be consumed in fire.⁵⁸If, however, the affection disappears from the cloth—warp or woof—or from any article of skin that has been washed, it shall be washed again, and it shall be pure.

⁵⁹Such is the procedure for eruptive affections of cloth, woolen or linen, in warp or in woof, or of any article of skin, for pronouncing it pure or impure.

בְּעֹור לְכָל אֲשֶׁר-יִعַשָּׂה הַעֹר לְמַלְאָכָה
צָרֻעַת מִמְּאָרָת הַנֶּגֶע טָמֵא הוּא: ⁵² וְשָׁרֶף
אֲתִ-הַבְּגָד אֲוֹ אֲתִ-הַשְׁתִּין | אֲוֹ אֲתִ-הַעֲרָב
בְּצַמָּר אֲוֹ בְּפִשְׁתִּים אֲוֹ אֲתִ-כְּלָ-כְּלִי הַעֹר
אֲשֶׁר-יִהִיה בְּזֶה הַנֶּגֶע קִרְצָרָעַת מִמְּאָרָת
הַוָּא בְּאַש תְּשִׁרְף: ⁵³ וְאִם יִרְאֶה הַכֹּהֵן
וְהִנֵּה לְאַ-פְּשָׂה הַנֶּגֶע בְּבָגָד אֲוֹ בְּשִׁתִּי אֲוֹ
בְּעֲרָב אֲוֹ בְּכָל-כְּלִי-עֹור: ⁵⁴ וְצַוְהַ הַכֹּהֵן
וְכַבֵּס אֶת אֲשֶׁר-בָּו הַנֶּגֶע וְהַסְּגִירָו שְׁבָעַת-
יָמִים שְׁנִית: ⁵⁵ וְרִאֵה הַכֹּהֵן אֶחָרִי | הַכְּבָס
אֲתִ-הַנֶּגֶע וְהִנֵּה לְאַ-הַפְּרָקָה הַנֶּגֶע אֲתִ-עִינָה
וְהַנֶּגֶע לְאַ-פְּשָׂה טָמֵא הוּא בְּאַש תְּשִׁרְפָּנוּ
פְּחַתָּת הַוָּא בְּקַרְחָתוּ אֲוֹ בְּגַבְּחָתוּ: ⁵⁶ וְאִם
רִאֵה הַכֹּהֵן וְהִנֵּה בְּקַח הַנֶּגֶע אֶחָרִי הַכְּבָס
אָתוֹ וְקָרְעֵוּ אֹתוֹ מִן-הַבָּגָד אֲוֹ מִן-הַעֹר אֲוֹ
מִן-הַשְׁתִּין אֲוֹ מִן-הַעֲרָב: ⁵⁷ וְאִם-תְּרָא אֲוֹ
עוֹד בְּבָגָד אֲוֹ-בְּשִׁתִּי אֲוֹ-כְּלִי-עֹור אֲוֹ בְּכָל-
כְּלִי-עֹור פְּרַחַת הַוָּא בְּאַש תְּשִׁרְפָּנוּ אֶת
אֲשֶׁר-בָּו הַנֶּגֶע: ⁵⁸ וְהַבָּגָד אֲוֹ-הַשְׁתִּין אֲוֹ
הַעֲרָב אֲוֹ-כְּלָ-כְּלִי הַעֹר אֲשֶׁר תְּכַבֵּס וְסַר
מִמֶּם הַנֶּגֶע וְכָבֵס שְׁנִית וְטָהָר:
⁵⁹ אֲזַאת תּוֹרַת נֶגֶע-צָרָעַת בְּגַד הַצְמָר | אֲזַאת
הַפִּשְׁתִּים אֲוֹ הַשְׁתִּין אֲוֹ הַעֲרָב אֲוֹ כְּלָ-כְּלִי-עֹור לְטָהָר אֲוֹ לְטָמֵאוֹ: פ

52. If the mold eruption has spread, it is considered an acute or malignant case, and so the article's owner must destroy it by burning.

56. he shall tear it out from the cloth or skin. If, after laundering, the affected section is faded, this part alone may be torn away and the rest of the article retained. Clearly, economic considerations play a role in this injunction, for there are poor individuals who own only one garment or cloak, which also serves as a blanket for sleep (see Exodus 22:26, Deuteronomy 24:12–13).

—Elaine Goodfriend

Another View

PARASHAT TAZRIA CONTAINS one of the most puzzling, even disturbing, passages in Leviticus, a book concerned with holiness. Tazria challenges us, for it places childbirth among the sources of ritual impurity—from which one then needs purification (12:1–8)—and it reckons the birth of a daughter at twice the length of impurity as the birth of a son (12:2, 4–5). In Leviticus, the commandment of purification after childbirth is consistent with the priestly insistence that blood contains or represents the life force. The priestly authors of Leviticus believe that blood, whether menstrual or post-partum, is so powerful as a source of life that only purification rituals can allow those who come into contact with it to rejoin their community. These rituals serve to contain the life force that places contaminated people outside the normative community, by returning them to a state of purity in which they can reenter God's holy community.

Regardless of whether a woman bears a son or a daughter, the rituals of purification are the same. Why, then must a woman spend twice as long in a state of impurity following the birth of a girl than following the birth of a boy? Traditional interpreters have assumed that this is because the birth of a girl creates a kind of double impurity, possibly because newborn girls contain the latent capacity for menstruation and reproduction. But another point is also important here: in ancient Israel, baby girls arguably faced lives filled with more risks than did baby boys. Israel was a society in which economic value accrued primarily to sons. They remained part of their fathers' households even when they married, inherited their families' ancestral lands, and cared for their aging parents. In contrast, there is evidence to suggest that girls were sometimes thought of as expendable. In times of need, famine, and war, baby girls might suffer hunger and neglect, or even be abandoned and left to die.

This troubling passage can be understood as a way to promote God's loving community.

The priestly authors seem to be concerned about this situation and try to avert such tragedies by ensuring that baby girls stay in their mothers' protective care for an extended period of time. This not only allows mother and daughter to bond tightly, but also ensures that the child is nursed and cared for. Thus, this troubling passage can be understood not as discrimination against women but as a way to promote God's loving community—and to guarantee that women and men, both created in the divine image, are nurtured and protected.

—Beth Alpert Nakhai

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

a woman at childbirth (12:2). The literal meaning of the word tazria, translated here as “at childbirth,” is that the woman “produces seed.” The talmudic rabbis—who had much to say about matters of conception, pregnancy, the formation of the embryo, and birth—played upon such a reading when some of them held that both woman and man can emit “seed.” A statement in the Talmud, frequently repeated in medieval biblical commentaries, asserts that “if the woman emits her ‘seed’ first, she bears a male child; if the man emits his seed [semen] first, she bears a female child” (BT Niddah 25b, 28a, 31a; BT B'rachot 60a). Presumably this comment models female genital secretions after the male seminal emission. Among other proofs, the Rabbis cite the language in this verse (BT Niddah 31a). Based on this theory, some rabbis speculated on how men should conduct their sexual lives in order to produce offspring of the desired gender. These suggestions were later anthologized in the mystically inspired medieval sex manual The Holy Letter. Another area of rabbinic interest was the genetic material from which the embryo is made. One

TAZRIA

*If the woman emits her “seed” first,
she bears a male child.*

opinion in the Talmud suggests that “there are three partners in [the procreation of] a person: the blessed Holy One, the father, and the mother” (BT Niddah 31a). The father is said to supply the seed (mazria) of the body’s white substances, such as bones, sinews, nails, the brain, and the white of the eye. The mother supplies the seed (mazraat) of what the Rabbis consider to be the red substances, such as skin, flesh, blood, and the pupil of the eye. And God gives the child its breath, along with beauty of feature, eyesight, the powers of hearing and speaking, the ability to walk, and intellectual capabilities.

If she bears a female, she shall be impure two weeks (12:5). Like modern commentators, the talmudic rabbis were puzzled by the doubling of the mother’s status of ritual impurity following the birth of a daughter. Mishnah Niddah 3:7 touches on this question in a rabbinic disagreement about embryology. According to the opinion of Rabbi Ishmael, the male embryo is fully fashioned after forty-one days, while the female embryo requires eighty-one days. The Talmud suggests that Rabbi Ishmael deduces these numbers from our verse: 7 plus 33 days for a male embryo, completed on the forty-first day; and 14 plus 66 days for a female embryo, completed on the eighty-first day. (Early Greek scholars, such as Aristotle and Hippocrates, also assumed a slower development of the female embryo.) However, a majority of rabbis in this debate disagree and affirm the equal development of male and female embryos at forty-one days. Elsewhere, the Talmud (BT B'rachot 60a) considers whether, if the sex of the child is already determined at conception, it would be useful during the first forty days of a woman’s pregnancy to pray that the child be male. According to Mishnah B'rachot 9:3, a prayer for a male baby at any point during pregnancy is to be considered “a vain prayer”; the Talmud, however, suggests that it may avail in certain circumstances if it is made in the first forty days of pregnancy.

she shall bring . . . a purgation offering (12:6).

Again, the rabbis of the Talmud wondered why the postpartum woman should have to bring a chatat-offering to the priest and why he would need to make expiation on her behalf. While modern translations and commentaries usually construe this particular chatat-offering as unrelated to prior sin, the Rabbis did not easily dismiss the usual connection of the chatat-offering with sin (see 4:1–5:13), even in the context of birth. As one tradition has it: “Rabbi Simeon ben Yohai was asked by his disciples: Why did the Torah ordain that a woman after childbirth should bring a sacrifice? He replied: When she kneels in bearing she swears spontaneously that she will have no more sex with her husband. The Torah, therefore ordained that she should bring a sacrifice” (BT Niddah 31b). This prompts some talmudic rabbis to a somewhat far-fetched explanation for the double length of the mother’s impurity following the birth of a female child (see 12:5), based on the social attitudes of Jewish antiquity: They suggest that since everyone is happy about the birth of the boy, the mother quickly regrets her oath made while she was suffering the pains of labor; however, for a girl, whose birth prompts little celebration, regret at the oath does not set in for fourteen days (BT Niddah 31b). Elsewhere, however, the Talmud (BT K'ritot 26a) denies that the chatat-offering expiates the mother's supposed sin of an unintended oath, and instead emphasizes its purifying function, thus anticipating contemporary commentators.

—Charlotte Elisheva Fonrobert

• • • • •

Contemporary Reflection

To PLUNGE INTO the mikveh (Jewish ritual bath) is to plunge into fresh connections with Creation and with our spirituality.

The Rabbis derived their laws that require an immersion in the mikveh in large measure from Leviticus (see at 12:1–8, 15:16, and 11:36). They rooted the laws in a need to purify oneself ritually after certain conditions such as menstruation, male seminal emission, certain skin diseases, or contact with the dead. Removing impurities was a precondition for coming into contact with the holy, such as in approaching the sanctuary. With the destruction of the Temple, these laws remained mandatory for women and optional for men (see Sh'mini, Post-biblical Interpretations, p. 630). While traditional Jews continue to use the mikveh for “family purity,” most liberal Jews rarely enter the mikveh. When they do, they often enter the mikveh for different reasons. What might prompt liberal Jews to immerse in the mikveh's waters?

Creation. The mikveh takes us back in time, as we immerse ourselves in the world of Creation. The root k-v-h that forms the word mikveh appears for the first time in Genesis (1:9): “Let the waters beneath the sky be collected [yikavu] in one place.” Further, in the next verse emerges the expression mikveh hamayim, the name given to the seas, where k-v-h connotes “the gathering.” This first mikveh is filled with mayim (water).

In the most archaic Hebrew script, the letter mem is a zigzagging line, drawn like waves that recall water.

It is interesting to note that in many languages, the phoneme “m” is associated with “mother” (ima, umm, mutter, mère, madre, mama, etc.). The person who plunges into the ritual bath of the mikveh—entirely surrounded by water, nude, without any barriers, and without touching its sides—resembles the fetus in the mother’s womb. The immersion in the mikveh becomes a return to the sensations of the uterus, a return to our source and an act of renewal.

You cannot know who you are without knowing whence you came. This return to what happened before is sometimes a way of softening the traumas of the past, to start anew after a difficult life experience. Conversely, sometimes it is a way to celebrate something precious in one’s life or something new. The word kav means “to be strong” or “strength” in Aramaic. The return to our source reinforces us.

The mikveh takes us back in time, as we immerse in the world of Creation.

Spirituality. Water appears first in the second verse of the story of Creation: “God’s spirit (ruach) glided over the face of the waters” (1:2). Thus, from the very beginning, water is forever linked to the divine, to the spiritual. Spirituality in relation to water is not necessarily about “purity.” Purity was originally attached to the mission of the Temple; since the Temple exists no more, purification need not apply to contemporary immersion in the mikveh. Going to a mikveh is not only a means of washing away the past, of removing the legacy of some “sin,” but also of preparing for the future. This is how the mikveh functions when used to prepare for Shabbat and holidays or important moments in life. In this case, mikveh is practiced by both women and men.

TAZRIA

Traditional Jewish law requires that only women go to the mikveh. However, when the immersion in a mikveh is part of a couple’s sexual life, if both partners go to the mikveh, they together assert that they are taking charge of their sex life. Making a visit to the mikveh a regular part of the cycle of a couple’s sexual life does not imply a denial of sexuality, but rather a couple’s decision to set temporal boundaries to their sexuality. Jewish tradition honors sexual impulses. The Talmud (BT Yoma 69b) tells us that without passion the world would cease to exist. However, sexuality, like water, must be channeled in order for life to flourish fully. Passion is exhilarating, but it is not a permanent condition. Moreover, it may gain in intensity when limits are set, as is true with music—where the silent notes underscore the melody. So it goes with sexuality: the downtime (which could be confined to menstruation in the case of women), punctuated by the mikveh utilized by both partners, is a form of suspension—a Sabbath—of sexuality. It can leave the space necessary to discover a different face of the other, in a more disciplined tension.

In Genesis 1, God creates the world by separating the waters and then withdrawing them to make space for earth and life to appear. The Akkadian root ku’u (one of the possible antecedents of the Hebrew word kav) means “to wait for, to stretch, to underscore the tension of enduring or waiting.” Oscar Wilde said: “In this world there are only two tragedies; one is not getting what one wants, the other is getting it.” Expectation is the romantic framework of love and desire. The mikveh reintroduces the other as a friend; the lover becomes a friend again—and the friend, a lover.

The mikveh likewise reintroduces spirituality into our lives in a habitual manner. The rabbinic sages capture the power of habits in their determination that frequently occurring rituals take precedence over infrequently occurring rituals (BT Sukkah 54b, 56a; P’sachim 114a; M’gillah 29b; and elsewhere). We are called upon not to build life upon the exceptional but rather to renew the ordinary; such is perhaps one of the secrets of one’s being together with another in partnership.

When one plunges into the mikveh, the links with Creation and with our spirituality extend even further. When we remember that we are created in the image of God, mikveh becomes a reminder of the infinite within the finite, the immortal within the human, the limitless options offered to humanity. It is not surprising then that the Torah is compared to water in rabbinic literature. To immerse in water is also to plunge into the “Universe of the Torah,” the infinite source of transformation of the world.

—Pauline Bebe

• • • • • • •

Voices

• • • • • • •

We Mothers

Nelly Sachs (transl. Ruth and Matthew Mead)

Leviticus 12

We mothers,
we gather seeds of desire from oceanic night, we are gatherers
of scattered goods,

We mothers,
pacing dreamily
with the constellations, the floods
of past and future,
leave us alone with our birth like an island.

We mothers
who say to death:
blossom in our blood,
We who impel sand to love and bring a mirroring world to the stars—

We mothers,
who rock in the cradles
the shadowy memories of creation's day—
the to and fro of each breath is the melody of our love song.

We mothers
rock into the heart of the world the melody of peace.

Women-Poems VII

Kadya Molodowsky (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

Leviticus 12

These are the spring nights
When up from under a stone, a grass blade
pushes forth from the earth,
And fresh moss makes a green cushion
Under the skull of a dead horse,
And all of a woman's limbs beg for the hurt of childbirth.
And women come and lie down like sick sheep
By wells to heal their bodies,
And their faces are dark
From the long years of thirsting for the cry of a child.

These are the spring nights
When lightning splits the black earth
With silver slaughtering knives,
And pregnant women approach
White tables in the hospital with quiet steps
And smile at the yet-unborn child
And perhaps even at death.
These are the spring nights
When up from under a stone, a grass blade
pushes forth from the earth.

TAZRIA

Believe Me

Esther Ettinger (transl. Mariana Barr)

Leviticus 12

Believe me, she grew more beautiful from moment to moment
her face poised, calm from contraction to contraction, peaks of pleasure and pain known in love.
The air was full and thick and the spotlight upsetting the peace piercing but she was so beautiful, rose of a perfect rose till the child's head broke forth from within her, his shoulders, his body and the umbilical cord wriggled and shone with light bluer
than the bottom of the sea.
I don't want to ease over the agony and the blood only to tell you she was the essence of beauty becoming elation when the child was placed on her belly.
And I who stood there cried with him, a first cry clean of joy, clean of pain,
the purity of crying.
How is it that she went from beauty to beauty like memory to memory to the place of love where you say you grow more beautiful as you go, more beautiful as you go just as it is written “weeping as he goes, weeping . . .”

NOTE

“weeping . . .” From Psalms 126:6.

[This child inside me]

Galit Hasan-Rokem (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

Leviticus 12

This child inside me
sorts my existence into elements:
blood and urine
calcium and iron.
In my sleep I am a quarry where rare treasures are suddenly found.

To a Nursing before Dawn

Lynn Levin

Leviticus 12

My son, you rise before dawn, cat-yowling
at the milky moon,
and you thrash with an anger only food can appease.

I tumble from bed, sleepwalk to your room, put you to my breast. Your little head rests in the crook of my arm,
your eyes close in contentment.
Only your jaw works overtime. You snuffle and sigh.

Let me stroke the pleasing roundness of your face.
How it comforts a hand that time's begun to etch.
Nodding, I cradle your tiny hand in mine.
Hunger fades. Its tight bud unfolds as the rarest flower.

Child, in the life before life we dreamed together.

Hand in hand, we dream again.
The sweet milk of love flows from me to you,
and it gladdens us. Whitening sky blue as milk, moon awash in the early haze—
you look at me, drunk and happy.
A stray drop clings to your cheek like dew.
Let us laze. We wake too soon.

The Blood of Birth

Tikva Frymer-Kensky

Leviticus 12

In the blood of the mother you come, blood washing over you,
purifying you,
cleansing you,
anointing you—
tabernacle of God—
at the moment of your consecration.

In the blood of life you come,
essence of life,
purest of the pure.
The flowing of blood carries us between worlds.
The blood on the child is the blood of the mother.
The mother's blood flows, you come to our land of life.
Her blood stops flowing, she will stay with you here.
Only an instant separates life from death,
only a breath and the flow of blood.

O my child, you are marked with the substance of life itself.
Blood of the covenant,
which bonds us to God,
blood of the lamb,
the blood of delivery.
Blood of redemption,
blood of life.

O Child, my blood of life surrounds you, b'damai chayee: through my blood, may you live.
Today your blood of life flows through your own body,
b'damayich chayee, b'damayich chayee,
through your blood, live!
With your blood, live!

My Friends Baked Cake and We Ordered Lox and Whitefish from the Deli

Merle Feld

Leviticus 12:3

I stood there shoulder to shoulder with the men when they hacked a piece off your little thing—could I really sit in the room next door and let my fantasies run wild when I heard you cry?

And yet, at the crucial moment, I wasn't watching.

I was staring off into space at some invisible focal point.

The same one I'd stared at through the hours of labor?

Maybe.

Maybe the same one Sarah stared at when Abraham took her baby up to the mountain.

I'm not angry, but you know,
you're a little weird, you male Jewish God.
What do you need with all those foreskins anyway?

מֵצָרָה ◆ M'tzora

LEVITICUS 14:1–15:33

Restoring Ritual Purity

PARASHAT M'TZORA ("a person with tzaraat," that is, a skin affliction) completes the laws in Leviticus about impurity. Along with the preceding parashah, Tazria (Leviticus 12–13), this parashah deals with laws about individuals afflicted with nega tzaraat, sometimes translated as "scaly disease" (the traditional translation as "leprosy" is somewhat misleading; see below) and with genital discharges.

Reflected in this passage is the Torah's notion that certain actions and physical conditions produce an invisible, airborne pollution that invades the Sanctuary, the dwelling place of the divine Presence. (The Torah's theology, like that in the extant literature of Israel's ancient neighbors, imagines that the Deity can simultaneously dwell in a temple and in heaven, and that the earthly sanctuary is a smaller replica of its heavenly counterpart.) If the impurity is not disposed of, the accumulated pollution could cause Israel's God to abandon the Sanctuary, an event thought to bring about national disaster.

It should be emphasized, however, that in Leviticus tzaraat does not imply any sin on the part of the individual and that God is not depicted as the cause of tzaraat (except when it strikes the house; see at 14:34). For a rationale for Israel's impurity laws, see the introduction to Leviticus 14.

Leviticus 15 is one among several biblical texts that have played a role in forming the Israelite and Jewish attitudes to menstruation. The perspective in this parashah lacks the stigma attached to menstruation in other biblical passages (see at 15:24). In Leviticus 15, the woman and man are equally impure if they have sexual relations while the woman is menstruating; the purification period and process for each is identical (15:24).

The Hebrew term niddah refers to a menstruant woman or menstruation. Niddah renders a woman impure, just as a man's seminal ejection renders a man impure, and their impurity contaminates whatever they touch or sit on. The major difference, however, between a male's ejaculation and female menstruation is the duration of impurity: since menstruation lasts longer, the woman is in the impure state considerably longer than the man.

This is one of the texts that has formed Jewish attitudes to menstruation.

According to Leviticus, what are the practical consequences for the person who is deemed ritually impure? The impure person may not "touch any consecrated thing, nor enter the sanctuary" (12:4). Parashat M'tzora offers us a detailed account of restrictions placed upon the menstruant as well, but it does not provide a complete picture of the ways that menstruation was viewed in ancient Israel. On the practical impact of menstruation on a woman's life, see at 15:20.

—Elaine Goodfriend

Outline—

I. PURIFICATION RITUAL FOR A PERSON WITH nega tzaraat (14:1–32)

- A. Purification ritual for the afflicted person: days 1–7 (vv. 1–9)
- B. Sacrifice by the afflicted person: day 8 (vv. 10–20)
- C. Sacrifice by the afflicted person of lesser means: day 8 (vv. 21–32)

II. DIAGNOSIS AND PURIFICATION OF A HOUSE WITH nega tzaraat (14:33–53)

III. PURIFICATION LAWS FOR PERSONS WITH GENITAL DISCHARGE (15:1–33)

- A. The Israelite male (vv. 1–18)
 - 1. Laws about abnormal discharges from the penis (vv. 1–15)
 - 2. Laws about normal seminal emissions (vv. 16–18)
- B. The Israelite female (vv. 19–30)
 - 1. Laws about menstruation (vv. 19–24)
 - 2. Laws about abnormal discharge of blood (vv. 25–30)
- C. Conclusion (vv. 31–33)

14:1

לְהֹרֶת spoke to Moses, saying: ²This shall be the ritual for a leper at the time of being purified.

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים לֵאמֹר: ²זֹאת תִּהְיֶה תُורַת הַמְצֻרָּע בַּיּוֹם טֹהָרָתוֹ

Purification Ritual for a Person with nega tzaraat

(14:1–32)

The word tzaraat refers to a skin disease sometimes translated as “scale disease,” “scaly disease,” “eruption,” and (erroneously) “leprosy.” The diagnosis of tzaraat was the concern of the preceding passage at the end of parashat Tazria. There, we were told that the person whom a priest diagnoses as having tzaraat “shall dwell apart—in a dwelling outside the camp” (13:46). The present unit commences with the priest’s exiting the camp to initiate the ritual that will remove the afflicted person’s impurity. The process of rehabilitating the m’tzora (the afflicted person) has three stages: the first phase when the priest verifies that the individual is cured; the second, on the seventh day, when the afflicted person shaves, washes, and launders her or his garments; and the third stage, on the eighth day, when the afflicted brings a combination of sacrifices to the Sanctuary.

Of all the types of persons who become ritually impure, only the m’tzora undergoes such extensive ritual, preceded by exclusion from the community. Numbers 5:2 demands the removal of other categories of impure people from the camp of Israel, but their situation does not apply to the later period, after settlement in the Land of Israel.

The Bible’s ideas about purity are linked to the association of Israel’s God with life—as the Creator of life, whose life is eternal and whose laws give life. Thus the prophet Ezekiel calls the Torah’s legislation “laws of life” (33:15), while according to Psalm 116:9, one who walks with Israel’s God journeys in the “lands of the living.” Impurity, or estrangement from God, results from certain physical states that were associated with death. For example, a human corpse is a potent source of impurity that infects a house and the living people within it (Numbers 19). The association of tzaraat with death is evident from Numbers 12:12, when—after Miriam has been “stricken with snow-white scales”—Aaron implores, “Let her not be as a stillbirth [literally: a dead person], which emerges from its mother’s womb with half its flesh eaten away!” This suggests that the appearance of the person afflicted with tzaraat was—at least in one form of the disease—akin to that of a disintegrating corpse (see at 14:4). The priest in Leviticus is charged with diagnosing no other disease except for tzaraat, which also indicates the symbolic nature of this condition.

- The ability to become pure underlies the prophetic notion of reversing sinful acts.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 672

- “Women’s bodies may be the hardest place for women to find sacredness.”

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 674

- Throughout Jewish history, women have used the laws of niddah for empowerment.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 672

- what is one open sore / when the moment has come / to close the wounds / of the world?

VOICES ► 676

When it has been reported to the priest,³ the priest shall go outside the camp. If the priest sees that the leper has been healed of the scaly affection,⁴ the priest shall order two live pure birds, cedar wood, crimson stuff, and hyssop to be brought for the one to be purified.⁵ The priest shall order one of the birds slaughtered over fresh water in an earthen vessel;⁶ and he shall take the live bird, along with the cedar wood, the crimson stuff, and the hyssop, and dip them together with the live bird in the blood of the bird that was slaughtered over the fresh water.⁷ He shall then sprinkle it seven times on the one to be purified of the eruption and effect the purification; and he shall set the live bird free in

וְהוּא אֶל-הַכֹּהן: ³ וַיֵּצֵא הַכֹּהן אֶל-מִחוֹץ
לִמְחַנָּה וַיַּרְאֶה הַכֹּהן וְהַנֶּה נְרָפָא נְגֻעַת
הַצְּרִיעַת מִן-הַצְּרִיעַ: ⁴ וַיַּצְוֹלֵה הַכֹּהן וְלֹקַח
לְמַטְהָר שְׁתִּינִיצְפָּרִים חַיִת טָהֹרוֹת וְעַזְבָּן
אֲרֹן וְשְׁנִי תּוֹלְעָת וְאוֹזֵב: ⁵ וְצַדְקוֹה הַכֹּהן
וְשְׁחַטֵּת אֶת-הַצְּפֹר הַאֲחַת אֶל-בְּלִיחָרֶשׂ
עַל-מִים חַיִם: ⁶ אֶת-הַצְּפֹר הַחַיָּה יַקְחֶה
אָתָה וְאֶת-עַזְבָּן הָאֲרֹן וְאֶת-שְׁנִי הַתּוֹלְעָת
וְאֶת-הַאֲזֵב וְשְׁבֵל אֲוֹתָם וְאֶת-הַצְּפֹר הַחַיָּה
בְּדַם הַצְּפֹר הַשְׁחַטָּה עַל הַמִּים הַחַיִם:
⁷ וְהַזָּה עַל הַמַּטְהָר מִן-הַצְּרִיעַת שְׁבָעַ פָּעָם וְטָהָר וְשָׁלַח אֶת-הַצְּפֹר הַחַיָּה

PURIFICATION RITUAL FOR THE AFFLICTED PERSON: DAYS 1–7 (14:1–9)

As noted above, scale disease renders the afflicted impure because of its association with death. The purpose of the ritual in vv. 1–9 is to rid the individual of impurity and perhaps symbolically restore the person to life; thus the Hebrew chai or chayim (“alive” or “live”) is a repeated element. As a result of this phase of the ritual, the m'tzora (the afflicted person) may enter the camp but may not yet return home (v. 8).

1. leper. Heb. m'tzora refers to the person suffering from one of several skin diseases. Traditionally the term for those diseases, tzaraat, has been translated as “leprosy,” but in English that word nowadays refers to something other than the conditions that the Torah describes; these are now called “scale disease,” “scaly disease,” or (in this translation) also simply “affection” or “eruption.” [The JPS translators note: “Where a human being is declared impure by reason of tzaraat, the traditional translation ‘leprosy’ has been retained without regard to modern medical terminology.” The reason for doing so, according to a member of the translation committee, was “to convey the horror that the Bible attaches to this affliction.” —Ed.]

3. If the priest sees that the leper has been healed.

The priest is not a healer; rather, he facilitates the removing of ritual impurity once the person is healed.

4. the priest shall order two live pure birds. One of the two birds is intended to carry the impurity out into open country (v. 7). Thus it must be a wild bird, or else it would bring that impurity back to the community. The Rabbis identify the bird as an untamed sparrow. (Note the similarity between the function of the bird here and the scapegoat that in the Day of Atonement ritual bears the accumulated sin of the people; see 16:21.)

cedar wood, crimson stuff, and hyssop. In Numbers 19, the ritual for the person rendered impure by a corpse specifies these same three substances. The similarity of ritual ingredients reinforces the link of tzaraat with death.

5. fresh. Heb. chayim (literally “living”), which refers to perpetually flowing water, such as from a spring or river.

7. He shall then sprinkle it seven times on the one to be purified. The purpose of the process seems to be purification: the effects of the disease are transferred to the bloodied water, then the live bird that is dipped in it seems to carry away the person’s defilement. Why the person is sprinkled with the bloodied water is unclear, but this act is akin to the open country.⁸ The one to be purified shall wash those clothes, shave off all hair, and bathe in water—and then shall be pure. After that, the camp may be entered but one must remain outside one's tent seven days.⁹ On the seventh day all hair shall be shaved off—of head, beard [if any], and eyebrows. Having shaved off all hair, the person shall wash those clothes and bathe the body in water—and then shall be pure.¹⁰ On the eighth day that person shall take two male lambs without blemish, one ewe lamb in its first year without blemish, three-tenths of a measure of choice flour with oil mixed in for a meal offering, and one log of oil.¹¹ These shall be presented before יהוה, with the party to be purified, at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, by the priest who performs the purification.

¹²The priest shall take one of the male lambs and offer it with the log of oil as a reparation offering, and he shall elevate them as an elevation offering before יהוה.¹³ The lamb shall be slaughtered at the spot in the sacred area where the purgation offering and the burnt offering are slaughtered. For the reparation offering, like the purgation offering,

על-פָנֵי הַשְׁדָה: ⁸ וְכִבֵּטْ הַמְطַהֵר אֶת-בְּגָדָיו וְגַלְחָ אֶת-כָּל-שַׁעֲרוֹ וְרָחֵץ בְּמִים וְטַהֵר וְאַחֲרֵ יְבוֹא אֶל-הַמְחַנָּה וְיַשֵּב מְחוֹזָ לְאַהֲלוֹ שְׁבָעַת יְמִים: ⁹ וְהִיא בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעֵי יַגְלֵחַ אֶת-כָּל-שַׁעֲרוֹ אֶת-דְּרָאשׁוֹ וְאֶת-זְקָנוֹ וְאֶת גְּבַת עַיְנוֹ וְאֶת-כָּל-שַׁעֲרוֹ יַגְלֵחַ וְכִבֵּט אֶת-בְּגָדָיו וְרָחֵץ אֶת-בָּשָׂרָוּ בְּמִים וְטַהֵר: ¹⁰ וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁמִינִי יַקְחֵ שְׁנִי בְּכֻשִׁים תְּמִימִם וְכִבְשָׂה אַחַת בְּתִשְׁנָתָה תִּמְיָה וְשְׁלֵשָׁה עַשְׂרִים סְלָתָ מְנֻחָה בְּלֹולָה בְּשָׁמָן וְלֹג אֶחָד שָׁמָן: ¹¹ וְהַעֲמִיד הַכֹּהֵן הַמְטַהֵר אֶת הָאִישׁ הַמְטַהֵר וְאֶתְמָ לְפָנֵי יהָוה פָתֵח אֶהָל מוֹעֵד:

¹² וְלֹקֵח הַכֹּהֵן אֶת-הַכְבֵשׂ הָאָחֵר וְהַקְרֵיב אֹתוֹ לְאֶשֶם וְאֶת-לֹג הַשְׁמָן וְהַנְּזֶבֶת אֶתְמָ תְּנוּפָה לְפָנֵי יהָוה: ¹³ וְשִׁחְטֵת אֶת-הַכְבֵשׂ בָּמְקוּם אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁחַט אֶת-הַחֲטָאת וְאֶת הַעַלְלָה בָּמְקוּם הַקָּדֵש בְּיַיְחַטְאָת הָאֶשֶם

the sprinkling ritual performed on the individual made impure via contact with a corpse (see Numbers 19). In the latter case, the water is mixed with another reddish material, the ashes of a red (or brown) cow. Elsewhere in Leviticus the sprinkling of the blood of a purgation sacrifice removes impurity (4:6, 17).

8. Laundering the garments worn during periods of impurity is a necessary element in rehabilitation (11:25, 40; Leviticus 15; Numbers 19). The person afflicted with tzaraat has to shave all body and head hair before bathing, which reflects the severity of the defilement.

After that, the camp may be entered. The individual may enter the camp—but not her or his tent, as impurity can still be communicated to those in the same dwelling.

9. then shall be pure. After seven days of waiting, and a second round of laundering, shaving, and washing, the individual can now go home.

SACRIFICE BY THE AFFLICTED PERSON: DAY 8 (14:10–20)

The last phase of the process involves the de-contamination of the Sanctuary and the complete rehabilitation of the individual. The ceremony of the final stage includes a procedure (v. 14) similar to the ordination of the priests in Leviticus 8 (see also Exodus 29), the only other case where such a ritual is required. This correspondence of the m'tzora with the initiated priest elevates the formerly excluded person.

goes to the priest; it is most holy.¹⁴ The priest shall take some of the blood of the reparation offering, and the priest shall put it on the ridge of the right ear of the one who is being purified, and on the thumb of the right hand, and on the big toe of the right foot.¹⁵ The priest shall then take some of the log of oil and pour it into the palm of his own left hand.¹⁶ And the priest shall dip his right finger in the oil that is in the palm of his left hand and sprinkle some of the oil with his finger seven times before Yahweh.¹⁷ Some of the oil left in his palm shall be put by the priest on the ridge of the right ear of the one being purified, on the thumb of the right hand, and on the big toe of the right foot—over the blood of the reparation offering.¹⁸ The rest of the oil in his palm the priest shall put on the head of the one being purified. Thus the priest shall make expiation for that person before Yahweh.¹⁹ The priest shall then offer the purgation offering and make expiation for the one being purified of defilement. Last, the burnt offering shall be slaughtered,²⁰ and the priest shall offer the burnt offering and the meal offering on the altar; the priest shall make expiation for that person, who shall then be pure.

²¹If, however, one is poor and without sufficient means, that person shall take one male lamb for a reparation offering, to be elevated in expiation, one-tenth of a measure of choice flour with oil mixed in for a meal offering, and a log of oil;²² and two turtledoves or two pigeons—depending on that person's means—the one to be the purgation offering and the other the burnt offering.²³ On the

14. on the ridge of the right ear . . . on the thumb of the right hand, and on the big toe of the right foot. In the Bible and the cultures that surrounded ancient Israel, the right is the preferred side (see Genesis 48:17–19). The extremities, from head to toe, symbolize the entire individual, whom the ritual both purifies and reintegrates into the community.

19–20. purgation offering. To cleanse the sanc-

14. וְלֹקַח הַפָּהֵן מִדְםֵי הַאֲשָׁם וְנִתְןֵן הַפָּהֵן עַל־תְּנוּךְ אֶזְעָן הַמְטָהָר הַיְמָנִית וְעַל־בְּפַהֵן יְדָוָה הַיְמָנִית: 15. וְלֹקַח הַפָּהֵן מִלְגֵד הַשְּׂמֵן וַיַּצְקֵק עַל־כֶּבֶשׂ הַשְּׁמָאָלִית הַשְּׁמָאָלִית: 16. וְטַבֵּל הַפָּהֵן אֶת־אַצְבָּעָיו הַיְמָנִית מִן־הַשְּׂמֵן אֲשֶׁר עַל־כֶּבֶשׂ הַשְּׁמָאָלִית וְתֹהֶה מִן־הַשְּׂמֵן בְּאַצְבָּעָיו שְׁבַע פָּעֻמִים לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: 17. וּמִתְּרֵר הַשְּׂמֵן אֲשֶׁר עַל־כֶּבֶשׂ וְתַנְתֵּן הַפָּהֵן עַל־הַמְטָהָר אֶזְעָן הַיְמָנִית וְעַל־בְּפַהֵן יְדָוָה הַיְמָנִית עַל־גָּם הַאֲשָׁם: 18. וְהַנּוּרָה בְּשַׂמְן אֲשֶׁר עַל־כֶּבֶשׂ הַפָּהֵן יְתַנֵּן עַל־רָאשׁ הַמְטָהָר וּכְפֵר עַלְיוֹ הַפָּהֵן לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: 19. וְעַשֵּׂה הַפָּהֵן אֶת־חִתְּחָתָה וּכְפֵר עַל־הַמְטָהָר מִטְמָאתוֹ וְאַחֲרֵי יִשְׁחַט אֶת־הָעַלְלה: 20. וְהַעֲלֵה הַפָּהֵן אֶת־הָעַלְלה וְאֶת־הַמְנִיחָה הַמִּזְבְּחָה וּכְפֵר עַלְיוֹ הַפָּהֵן וְשֶׁהָרָה:

21. וְאִם־זָלַל הַוָּא וְאֵין יְדוֹ מִשְׁגַּת וְלֹקַח בְּבָשָׂר אֶחָד אֶשְׁם לְתְנוּפָה לְכַפֵּר עַלְיוֹ וּשְׁרוֹן סָלַת אֶחָד בְּלוֹל בְּשַׂמְן לְמִנְחָה וּלְגַם שְׂמַן: 22. וְשִׁתְּתֵי תְּרֵים אוֹ שְׁנֵי בְּנֵי יוֹנָה אֲשֶׁר תְּשִׁיג יְדוֹ וְהִיא אֶחָד חִטְאָת וְהַאֲחָד עַלְלה: 23. וְחַבֵּיא אֲנָוֶם בְּיֹום הַשְּׁמִינִי לְטֹהֻרָה tuary of any residual impurity (see Leviticus 4).

burnt offering . . . meal offering. These have the general function of atonement (see Leviticus 1–2).

SACRIFICE BY THE AFFLICTED PERSON OF LESSER MEANS: DAY 8 (14:21–32)

A concession is made for those who cannot afford flock animals (see also 5:11).

eighth day of purification, the person shall bring them to the priest at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, before יהוה.²⁴ The priest shall take the lamb of reparation offering and the log of oil, and elevate them as an elevation offering before יהוה.²⁵ When the lamb of reparation offering has been slaughtered, the priest shall take some of the blood of the reparation offering and put it on the ridge of the right ear of the one being purified, on the thumb of the right hand, and on the big toe of the right foot.²⁶ The priest shall then pour some of the oil into the palm of his own left hand,²⁷ and with the finger of his right hand the priest shall sprinkle some of the oil that is in the palm of his left hand seven times before יהוה.²⁸ Some of the oil in his palm shall be put by the priest on the ridge of the right ear of the one being purified, on the thumb of the right hand, and on the big toe of the right foot, over the same places as the blood of the reparation offering;²⁹ and what is left of the oil in his palm the priest shall put on the head of the one being purified, to make expiation for that person before יהוה.³⁰ That person shall then offer one of the turtledoves or pigeons, depending on the person's means—³¹ whichever that person can afford—the one as a purgation offering and the other as a burnt offering, together with the meal offering. Thus the priest shall make expiation before יהוה for the one being purified.³² Such is the ritual for one who has a scaly affection and whose means for purification are limited.

³³ יהוה spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying:

Diagnosis and Purification of a House with nega tzaraat (14:33–53)

*L*eviticus 13 detailed the diagnosis of tzaraat in people, fabric, and leather garments. The same symptoms could also characterize the interior walls of houses (see 13:47–59). Tzaraat in a house seems to be a kind of mold or fungus that attaches itself

אֶל-הַפְּתָח אֶל-מָזֵעַ לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: ²⁴ וְלֹקַח הַכֹּהן אֲתִ-כְבָשׂ הַאַשְׁם וְאַתִּלְגֵּד הַשְּׂמֵן וְהַנִּזְבֵּד אֲתִ-מְלֵאָה הַכֹּהן תְּנוּפָה לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: ²⁵ וְשַׁחַט אֲתִ-כְבָשׂ הַאַשְׁם וְלֹקַח הַכֹּהן מִן-הַאַשְׁם וְנִתְן עַל-תְּנוּנָה אֲזַנְתָּה הַמְשֻׁתָּר הַיְמִינִית וְעַל-בְּחֵן יְדוֹ הַיְמִינִית: ²⁶ וּמִנְ-הַשְּׂמֵן יַצַּק הַכֹּהן עַל-כֶּף הַכֹּהן הַשְׁמָאָלִית: ²⁷ וְהַזָּה הַכֹּהן בָּאַצְבָּעָו הַיְמִינִית מִן-הַשְּׂמֵן אֲשֶׁר עַל-כֶּפוֹ הַשְׁמָאָלִית שְׁבַע פָּעָמִים לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: ²⁸ וּנִתְן הַכֹּהן מִן-הַשְּׂמֵן | אֲשֶׁר עַל-כֶּפוֹ עַל-תְּנוּנָה אֲזַן הַמְשֻׁתָּר הַיְמִינִית וְעַל-בְּחֵן יְדוֹ הַיְמִינִית וְעַל-בְּחֵן רְגָלוֹ הַיְמִינִית עַל-מִקּוּם דֶּם הַאַשְׁם: ²⁹ וְהַנוּתָר מִן-הַשְּׂמֵן אֲשֶׁר עַל-כֶּף הַכֹּהן יִתְן עַל-רָאשָׁה הַמְשֻׁתָּר לְכֹפֵר עַלְיוֹ לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: ³⁰ וְעַשָּׂה אֲתִ-הָאָחָד מִן-הַתְּרִילִים אוֹ מִן-בְּנֵי הַיּוֹנָה מִאֲשֶׁר תְּשִׁיג יְדוֹ: ³¹ אֲתִ אֲשֶׁר-תְּשִׁיג יְדוֹ אֲתִ-הָאָחָד חַטֹּאת וְאֲתִ-הָאָחָד עַלְיהָ עַל-הַמְנִיחָה וּכֹפֵר הַכֹּהן עַל הַמְשֻׁתָּר לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: ³² זֹאת תֹּרַת אֲשֶׁר-בוֹ נִגְעַ צְרָעָת אֲשֶׁר לְאַתְּשִׁיג יְדוֹ בְּטַהֲרָתוֹ: פ

³³ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל-מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל-אַהֲרֹן לֹאמֶר:

to building stones. After a seven-day quarantine, if the fungus has spread, the affected stones and all interior plaster have to be removed and transferred to a dump for impure waste, surely outside the city limits. The house is then repaired, unless the mold returns. If, after the initial seven-day quarantine, the infection has not spread, the priest conducts a purification rite (vv. 49–53) similar to that for an ³⁴When you enter the land of Canaan that I give you as a possession, and I inflict an eruptive plague upon a house in the land you possess, ³⁵the owner of the house shall come and tell the priest, saying, “Something like a plague has appeared upon my house.” ³⁶The priest shall order the house cleared before the priest enters to examine the plague, so that nothing in the house may become impure; after that the priest shall enter to examine the house. ³⁷If, when he examines the plague, the plague in the walls of the house is found to consist of greenish or reddish streaks that appear to go deep into the wall, ³⁸the priest shall come out of the house to the entrance of the house, and close up the house for seven days. ³⁹On the seventh day the priest shall return. If he sees that the plague has spread on the walls of the house, ⁴⁰the priest shall order the stones with the plague in them to be pulled out and cast outside the city into an impure place. ⁴¹The house shall be scraped inside all around, and the coating that is scraped off shall be dumped outside the city in an impure place. ⁴²They shall take other stones and replace those stones with them, and take other coating and plaster the house.

⁴³If the plague again breaks out in the house, after the stones have been pulled out and after the house has been scraped and replastered, ⁴⁴the priest shall come to examine: if the plague has spread in the house, it is a malignant eruption in the house; it is impure. ⁴⁵The house shall be torn down—its stones and timber and all the coating on the house—and taken to an impure place outside the city.

afflicted person on the first day after she or he has been declared healed (vv. 1–7).

34. When...I inflict an eruptive plague upon a house. This is the only case in Leviticus claiming that God causes a form of tzaraat. Even here, the text does not present illness and disease as being divine retribution. Leviticus offers no explanation for the cause of disease. Instead, it focuses only on protecting persons and the sanctuary from contamination once the disease appears.

³⁴כִּי תָבֹא אֶל-אֶרֶץ בְּנֵעַ אֲשֶׁר אָנָי נָתַן לְכֶם לְאַחֲזָה וּנְתַחַלְתִּי נְגֻעַ צְרֻעַת בַּבִּית אֶרֶץ אֲחַזְתֶּכֶם: ³⁵וְבָא אֲשֶׁר-לֹא הַבִּית וְהַגִּיד לְכֶהָן לְאָמֵר כִּנְגֻעַ נְרָאָה לִי בַבִּית: ³⁶וְצַדְּהַהְבֵּן וּפְנֵיו אֶת-הַבִּיטָה בְּטָרֵם יָבֹא הַבְּהֵן לְרָאֹות אֶת-הַבִּיטָה וְאַחֲרֵי כֵן יָבֹא הַכֶּהָן לְרָאֹות אֶת-הַבִּיטָה: ³⁷וְרָאָה אֶת-הַנְּגֻעַ וְהַנְּגֻעַ בְּקִירַת הַבִּיטָה שְׁקָעָרוֹת יַרְקָרְקָת אֲוֹדֵמָdot וּמְרָאֵיהָן שְׁפֵל מַזְדָּקִים: ³⁸וַיֵּצֵא הַכֶּהָן מִזְרָחַת הַבִּיטָה וְהַסְגִּיר אֶת-הַבִּיטָה שְׁבַעַת יְמִים: ³⁹וְשָׁב הַכֶּהָן בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעִי וְרָאָה וְהַנְּגֻעַ חַלְצָלָב אֶת-הַאֲבָנִים אֲשֶׁר בָּהָן הַנְּגֻעַ וְהַשְׁלִיכָו אֶת-הַאֲבָנִים אֲל-מְחוֹזָן לְעֵיר אֶל-מְקוֹם טָמֵא: ⁴⁰וְצַדְּהַהְבֵּן הַנְּגֻעַ בְּקִירַת הַבִּיטָה: ⁴¹וְצַדְּהַהְבֵּן אֶת-הַבִּיטָה יַקְצַע מִבֵּית סְבִיב וּשְׁפָכוֹ אֶת-הַעֲפָר אֲשֶׁר הַקְצָו אֶל-מְחוֹזָן לְעֵיר אֶל-מְקוֹם טָמֵא: ⁴²וְלֹקַח אֲבָנִים אַחֲרוֹת וְהַבְּאוֹ אֶל-תְּחִתַּה הַאֲבָנִים וְעַפְרָא אַחֲרֵי יְקָח וְשָׁחַד אֶת-הַבִּיטָה: ⁴³וְאִסְרִישׁוּב הַנְּגֻעַ וְפָרָח בְּבִיטָה אַחֲרֵי חַלְצָלָב אֶת-הַאֲבָנִים וְאַחֲרֵי הַקְצָות אֶת-הַבִּיטָה וְאַחֲרֵי הַטוֹוחַ: ⁴⁴וְבָא הַכֶּהָן וְרָאָה וְהַנְּגֻעַ פָשָׂה הַנְּגֻעַ בְּבִיטָה עֲרֵית מִמְאָרָת הַתּוֹא בְּבִיטָה טָמֵא הוּא: ⁴⁵וְנִתְחַצֵּץ אֶת-הַבִּיטָה אֶת-אֲבָנָיו וְאֶת-עַצְיוֹן וְאֶת כָּל-עַפְרָא הַבִּיטָה וְהַזְכִיא אֶל-מְחוֹזָן לְעֵיר אֶל-מְקוֹם טָמֵא:

36. The priest shall order the house cleared. The house is emptied prior to its inspection so that the owner incurs no financial loss from the priest's diagnosis. According to vv. 46–47, only those who may have entered the house during the quarantine are considered impure.

⁴⁶Whoever enters the house while it is closed up shall be impure until evening. ⁴⁷Whoever sleeps in the house must wash those clothes, and whoever eats in the house must wash those clothes.

⁴⁸If, however, the priest comes and sees that the plague has not spread in the house after the house was replastered, the priest shall pronounce the house pure, for the plague has healed. ⁴⁹To purge the house, he shall take two birds, cedar wood, crimson stuff, and hyssop. ⁵⁰He shall slaughter the one bird over fresh water in an earthen vessel. ⁵¹He shall take the cedar wood, the hyssop, the crimson stuff, and the live bird, and dip them in the blood of the slaughtered bird and the fresh water, and sprinkle on the house seven times. ⁵²Having purged the house with the blood of the bird, the fresh water, the live bird, the cedar wood, the hyssop, and the crimson stuff, ⁵³he shall set the live bird free outside the city in the open country. Thus he shall make expiation for the house, and it shall be pure.

⁵⁴Such is the ritual for every eruptive affection—for scalls, ⁵⁵for an eruption on a cloth or a house, ⁵⁶for swellings, for rashes, or for discolorations—⁵⁷to determine when they are impure and when they are pure.

Such is the ritual concerning eruptions.

15 spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying:
²Speak to the Israelite people and say to them:

⁴⁶וְהַבָּא אֲלֵ-הַבִּית כָּל-יְמִי הַסְגִּיר אֹתוֹ יִטְמָא עַד-הַעֲרָב: ⁴⁷וְהַשְׁכֵב בַּבָּית יִכְבֵּס אֶת-בְּנֵיו וְהַאֲכֵל בַּבָּית יִכְבֵּס אֹתָה בְּגִידָיו:

⁴⁸וְאִם-בָּא יָבֹא הַפְּנֵן וּרְאֵה וְהַגֵּה לֹא- פְשָׂה הַפְּגֻעַ בַּבָּית אֶחָרִי הַטָּחָאת-הַבִּית וְטוֹהֵר הַפְּנֵן אֶת-הַבִּית כִּי נֶרְפָּא הַפְּגֻעַ: ⁴⁹וְלִקְחַ לְחַטְאָאת-הַבִּית שְׁתִּי צְפָרִים וְעַזְבָּן וְשְׁנִי תִּולְעָת וְאַזְבָּן: ⁵⁰וְשְׁחַטַּת אֶת- הַצְּפָר הָאַחַת אֶל-כָּל-חֶרֶש עַל-מִים חַיִים: ⁵¹וְלִקְחַ אֶת-עַזְבָּן וְאֶת-אַזְבָּן וְאֶת-הַצְּפָר וְאֶת-עַזְבָּן וְאֶת-הַצְּפָר הָחִיה וְטַבֵּל אֶתְכֶם בְּרֵם הַצְּפָר הַשְׁחֹותָה וּבְמִים הַחַיִים וְהַזָּה אֶל-הַבִּית שְׁבַע פָּעָמִים: ⁵²וְחַטְאָאת-הַבִּית בְּרֵם הַצְּפָר וּבְמִים הַחַיִים וּבְצָפָר הַחִיה וּבְעַזְבָּן הָאַזְבָּן וּבְאַזְבָּן וּבְשְׁנִי תִּולְעָת: ⁵³וְשָׁלַח אֶת-הַצְּפָר הַחִיה אֶל-מִחוֹץ לְעֵיר אֶל-פָּנֵי הַשְּׁרָה וּכְפֵר עַל-הַבִּית וְטוֹהֵר:

⁵⁴זֹאת הַתּוֹרָה לְכָל-פְּגֻעַ הַצְּרָעָת וְלַנְּתָק: ⁵⁵וְלִצְרָעָת הַבְּגָד וְלַבִּית: ⁵⁶וְלַשְׁאָת וְלַפְּקָה וְלַבְּהָרָה: ⁵⁷לְהֹזֹת בַּיּוֹם הַטְמָא וּבַיּוֹם הַטָּהָר זֹאת תּוֹרַת הַצְּרָעָת: ב

טו וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל-מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל-אַהֲרֹן לְאֹמֶר: ²כְּבָרוּ אֶל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֶמְרָתֶם אֱלֹהֶם

Purification Laws for Persons with Genital Discharge (15:1–33)

The arrangement of Leviticus 15 is chiastic, meaning that each section of the first half of this unit parallels a passage in the second half, but in reverse order:

Male: abnormal discharge (vv. 1–15)

Male: normal discharge (vv. 16–17)

Concerning male–female intercourse (v. 18)

Female: normal menstruation (vv. 19–24)

Female: abnormal vaginal bleeding (vv. 25–30)

Normal genital discharges (semen or blood) render the individual impure and necessitate laundering,

When any man has a discharge issuing from his member, he is impure.³ The impurity from his discharge shall mean the following—whether his member runs with the discharge or is stopped up so that there is no discharge, his impurity means this:⁴ Any bedding on which the one with the discharge lies shall be impure, and every object on which he sits shall be impure.⁵ All those who touch his bedding shall wash their clothes, bathe in water, and remain impure until evening.⁶ All those who sit on an object on which the one with the discharge has sat shall wash their clothes, bathe in water, and remain impure until evening.⁷ All those who touch the body of the one with the discharge shall wash their clothes, bathe in water, and remain impure until evening.⁸ If the one with a discharge spits on someone who is pure, the latter shall wash those clothes, bathe in water, and remain impure until evening.⁹ Any means for riding that the one with a discharge has mounted shall be impure;¹⁰ all those who touch anything that was under him shall be impure until evening; and all those who carry such

אִישׁ אֲיָשׁ פֶּרְנַתְּה וְבָשָׂרְוֹ וְבָוָרְוֹ טְמֵא
הָוָא: ³ וְזֹאת תְּהִיהׁ טְמֵאָתוֹ בָּזְבוֹן רָר
בְּשָׂרוֹ אֲתִ-זְבוֹן אֲוֹ-חַתְּתִים בְּשָׂרוֹ מְזֻזּוֹן
טְמֵאָתוֹ הָוָא: ⁴ בְּלַ-הַמְּשָׁבֵב אֲשֶׁר יַשְׁכֵּן
עַלְיוֹ הַזְּבָב יַטְמֵא וְכָל-הַבְּלִי אֲשֶׁר יַשְׁכֵּן עַלְיוֹ
יַטְמֵא: ⁵ וְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יַגַּע בְּמִשְׁכָּבָו יַכְבֵּס בְּגִדְיּוֹ וְרַחַץ בְּמִים וְטְמֵא עַד-הָעָרָב:
⁶ וְהַשְּׁבֵב עַל-הַבְּלִי אֲשֶׁר יַשְׁכֵּן עַלְיוֹ הַזְּבָב יַכְבֵּס בְּגִדְיּוֹ וְרַחַץ בְּמִים וְטְמֵא עַד-הָעָרָב:
⁷ וְהַפְּגַע בְּבָשָׂר הַזְּבָב יַכְבֵּס בְּגִדְיּוֹ וְרַחַץ
בְּמִים וְטְמֵא עַד-הָעָרָב: ⁸ וְקִירְבָּקָה הַזְּבָב
בְּטַהּוֹר וְכְבֵּס בְּגִדְיּוֹ וְרַחַץ בְּמִים וְטְמֵא
עַד-הָעָרָב: ⁹ וְכָל-הַמְּרַכְּבָה אֲשֶׁר יַרְכֵּב יַדְיֵה תְּחִנְנוּ יַטְמֵא עַד-הָעָרָב וְהַנּוֹשָׂא

bathing, and waiting till nightfall in order to regain the state of ritual purity; for the male, this means the nightfall after the ejaculation, and for the female, since it involves blood, the evening of the seventh day. No sacrifice need be offered for normal discharges. No sin is imputed to the man with a seminal discharge. In fact, the commandment to “be fruitful and multiply” (Genesis 1:28) necessitates seminal emissions. When a man comes in contact with menstrual blood through intercourse with a menstruating woman, he too must wait seven days before he is ritually pure. Abnormal discharges (those described in vv. 2–15 and vv. 25–30) involve a longer waiting period and necessitate a purgation offering to eliminate the resulting impurity that accumulated in the sanctuary. Leviticus imputes no wrongdoing to the individual who suffers from those maladies.

THE ISRAELITE MALE (15:1–18)

Laws about Abnormal Discharges from the Penis (15:1–15)

3. runs. Heb. zav; when this term applies to a male, it refers only to one with abnormal discharge. The underlying condition might be a form of gonorrhea or an infection of the urinary tract or other organs. The term conveys the idea of “oozing” or “exuding greatly”; the same verb appears in the expression “a land flowing with milk and honey” (see, for example, Exodus 3:8). For the term’s specific application to females, see below (vv. 19, 25).

4–10. The basic principle that emerges is that all articles under a man with abnormal discharge are impure; as such, they in turn disseminate a one-day impurity to all who touch them. This principle also applies to the menstruating woman (v. 21).

5. those. [The Hebrew term is singular but things shall wash their clothes, bathe in water, and remain impure until evening.¹¹ All those whom the one with a discharge touches, without having rinsed his hands in water, shall wash their clothes, bathe in water, and remain impure until evening.¹² An earthen vessel that the one with a discharge touches shall be broken; and any wooden implement shall be rinsed with water.

¹³ When the one with a discharge becomes purified of his discharge, he shall count off seven days for his purification, wash those clothes, and bathe his body in fresh water; then he shall be pure.¹⁴ On the eighth day he shall take two turtledoves or two pigeons and come before יהוה at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting and give them to the priest.¹⁵ The priest shall offer them, the one as a purgation offering and the other as a burnt offering. Thus the priest shall make expiation on his behalf, for his discharge, before יהוה.

¹⁶ When a man has an emission of semen, he shall bathe his whole body in water and remain impure until evening.¹⁷ All cloth or leather on which semen falls shall be washed in water and remain impure. ¹¹ And if any man touches any person who has a discharge, or touches any garment, or any vessel, or any thing wherewith a man touches, he shall be unclean until evening; and when the sun is down he shall bathe himself in water, and his garment shall be washed, and he shall be clean. ¹² But if any man touches any such person, or any garment, or any vessel, or any thing wherewith a man touches, he shall bathe himself in water, and his garment shall be washed, and he shall be clean.

¹³ And when he is clean from his uncleanness, he shall bathe himself in water, and his garment shall be washed, and he shall be clean; and he shall remain seven days in his uncleanness, and shall not go into the sanctuary, nor approach any holy thing, until he is clean. ¹⁴ And on the eighth day he shall bring two turtledoves, or two pigeons, one for a sin offering, and one for a burnt offering, and a grain offering made with oil, and a drink offering.

¹⁵ And the priest shall offer the one dove for a sin offering, and the priest shall make atonement for him before יהוה, and the other dove he shall send away alive, to make atonement for him before יהוה. ¹⁶ And when he is clean from his uncleanness, he shall bathe himself in water, and his garment shall be washed, and he shall be clean.

used collectively. Here and elsewhere in Leviticus 15, the present translation renders such language in the plural, in order to convey the gender-neutral sense. —Ed.]

11. This verse has puzzled commentators since ancient times, because it states that if the zav rinses his hands in water, the person whom he touches will not contract impurity. Most likely this is a concession to allow the person suffering from a chronic discharge to retain somewhat normal social relationships: as long as he rinses his hands on a regular basis, he may have contact with family and community. These rules would seem to apply as well to women with genital discharges, even though such is not stated in the text (see at v. 20).

13. fresh. See at 14:5.

14. On the eighth day he shall take two turtle- doves. Severe impurities necessitate sacrificial offerings. The sacrifice of two birds corresponds to the offering given by the person of insufficient means in 12:8 and 14:21. The reason a zav makes a donation of lesser value is probably due to the correspondence of his title to the zavah (the woman who suffers from irregular bleeding); the Torah tries to minimize the economic burden for her (see at v. 29), and consequently, for him.

Laws about Normal Seminal Emissions (15:16–18)

This section here probably refers to an involuntary ejaculation or nocturnal emission. Deuteronomy 23:11 bars the man who has had a nocturnal emission from remaining in an Israelite military encampment until he has washed and waited till evening.

pure until evening.¹⁸ Likewise for a woman: when a man has carnal relations with her, both shall bathe in water and remain impure until evening.

¹⁹ When a woman has a discharge, her discharge

¹⁸ וְאַשֶּׁה אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁבֶּב אֲישׁ אֶתְךָ שְׁכַבְתָּה־

זְרוּ וְרֹחֵצְוּ בְמִים וְטָמֵא עַד־הָעָרֶב: פ

¹⁹ וְאַשֶּׁה בַּיּוֹתְרָה זְבַח הַם יְדִיה זְבַח

18. Just as seminal emissions render objects impure (vv. 16–17), so they also make a man's sexual partner impure. The key term in each verse is shichvat zera ("emission of semen," literally "a laying down of [what can become] offspring"). Many cultures in the ancient world share the idea that sexual intercourse and participation in religious ritual must be separated by washing and waiting. Earlier in the Torah, Moses anticipated God's descent upon Mount Sinai by prohibiting the Israelites from sexual relations for three days (see at Exodus 19:10, 15).

THE ISRAELITE FEMALE (15:19–30)

Laws about Menstruation (15:19–24)

Frequent menstruation is the product of various factors of modern life that were not relevant to our foremothers. Women in ancient Israel (and the ancient world in general) probably menstruated less frequently than modern women, for several reasons. Due to sparser diet, females in pre-modern times began to menstruate on average at age 14, as opposed to an average of age 12 today. Women married soon after they began to menstruate, and generally they experienced more pregnancies in their lifetime than their average modern Jewish counterparts (see B'reishit, Another View, p. 27). Breast-feeding typically for three years (see at Exodus 2:10) would have further reduced the number of menstrual cycles they experienced. Therefore, the regulations in this passage probably had a smaller practical impact than we might at first imagine.

The original meaning of the key term for menstruation in the Bible, niddah, is unclear, but several Hebrew roots with the letter combination n-d have the general sense of "expel" or "throw." It is possible that the word was used for the expulsion or elimination of the menstrual blood (see also at 12:2). In Leviticus 15, the term is neutral and without any stigma. In contrast to the pragmatic attitude in this parashah, some later biblical texts use the term niddah as a term of abomination and revulsion, including Leviticus 20:21; Lamentations 1:8, 17; Ezra 9:11; and II Chronicles 29:5. Ezekiel, a 6th-century-B.C.E. prophet, justifies the destruction of Jerusalem by saying: "Their ways were in My sight like the impurity of a menstrual woman" (36:17). Note that there and in Ezekiel 18:6 and 22:10, the prophet uses the term niddah for the menstruating woman herself. At the same time, however, the expression mei niddah ("water of lustration") refers to a potion that removes impurity generated by a corpse; it could be translated "water for the elimination of impurity" (Numbers 19:9, 13, 20, 21; see also Zechariah 13:1). On niddah, see also at Numbers 19:9.

[In Leviticus, the menstruant is separated from the sancta (the sacred). The social and ritual isolation of menstruating women is found in many cultures around the world ("Introduction," Thomas Buckley and Alma Gottlieb, eds., Blood Magic, 1988, p. 12). However, the social functions of menstrual taboos are culturally variable and specific. In one society, these taboos function to subordinate women; in another, they give women exclusive ritual powers; and yet another culture views menstruation ambivalently, as both containing and enhancing women's power (Buckley and Gottlieb, p. 14). The legislation in Leviticus can be seen as moderate in that the menstruating woman remains at home and has somewhat normal family and social relationships; see above at v. 11, and below at v. 20. —Ed.]

19. discharge. Heb. zavah, the feminine equivbeing blood from her body, she shall remain in her menstrual separation seven days; whoever touches her shall be impure until evening.²⁰ Anything that she lies on during her menstrual separation shall be impure; and anything that she sits on shall be impure.²¹ All those who touch her bedding shall wash their clothes, bathe in water, and remain impure until evening;²² and all those who touch any object on which she has sat shall wash their clothes, bathe in water, and remain impure until evening.²³ Be it the bedding or be it the object on which she has sat, on touching it one shall be impure until evening.²⁴ And if a man lies with her, her menstrual separation applies to him; he shall be impure seven days, and any bedding on which he lies shall become impure.

alent of the term that in v. 2 referred to the man with an abnormal emission. In women, however, this passage uses the word to refer to both normal and abnormal bleeding. (It is difficult to explain the omission of this term in Leviticus 12, which indirectly discusses postpartum bleeding.) The only identified difference between normal and abnormal female bleeding is timing (v. 25). See further below at v. 33.

seven days. The Torah limits the impurity of the menstruating woman to seven days, as opposed to rabbinic practice, which extends her taboo status seven days beyond the end of her period.

20. What are the practical implications of the regulations in this passage? Leviticus 15 nowhere requires the isolation of the menstruant or her removal from her normal context to some other space. The rules concerning her are similar to those of the (male) zav. Objects under her are impure and impart a one-day impurity to all those who touch them (15:4–6, 20–22). The person who touches her becomes impure (15:7, 19). Two additional rules for the woman in niddah are absent for the zav: anyone who has sexual relations with her is impure for seven days (v. 24), and the person who touches an object on the same bedding or chair where she is sitting becomes ritually polluted (v. 23; the Hebrew is difficult). Thus, the menstruant has to be careful regarding where she lies and sits, and she must avoid the touch of others (although the laws are addressed to others, not the woman herself). According to v. 11, the zav may touch another person without consequence but only if he has rinsed his hands; the text does not say whether this applies to the menstruant, but logic suggests that it does. After all, menstruation, a “normal” cause of impurity, does not require a purgation offering as does the “abnormal” case of the man with a chronic discharge. Further, if the priestly regulations mean to imply that anyone whom she touches would become impure, then all the people for whom she cares in the course of her duties would be affected, whether they be her children or the elders of her household. It therefore seems likely that Leviticus intends that the frequent rinsing of her hands would allow the woman to function in her usual capacity.

בְּשֶׁרֶת שְׁבַעַת יָמִים תְּהִיה בְּנִקְתָּה וְכֵל הַנְּגָע בְּה יִטְמָא עֲדִ-הָעָרָב: ²⁰ וְכֵל אֲשֶׁר-תִּשְׁבַּע עַלְיוֹ בְּנִקְתָּה יִטְמָא וְכֵל אֲשֶׁר-תִּשְׁבַּע עַלְיוֹ יִטְמָא: ²¹ וְכֵל-הַנְּגָע בְּמִשְׁכְּבָה יִכְבֵּס בְּגִדְיוֹ וּרְחֵץ בְּמִים וְטֻמָא עֲדִ-הָעָרָב: ²² וְכֵל-הַנְּגָע בְּכָל-בְּלִי אֲשֶׁר-תִּשְׁבַּע עַלְיוֹ יִכְבֵּס בְּגִדְיוֹ וּרְחֵץ בְּמִים וְטֻמָא עֲדִ-הָעָרָב: ²³ וְאֵם עַל-הַמִּשְׁכֵב הַזֶּה אוֹ עַל-הַבְּלִי אֲשֶׁר-הַזֶּה יִשְׁבַּת-עַלְיוֹ בְּנִגְעָוָבּוֹ יִטְמָא עֲדִ-הָעָרָב: ²⁴ וְאֵם שָׁכֵב יִשְׁבַּב אִישׁ אֶתְהָ וְתַהְיֵי נִקְתָּה עַלְיוֹ וְטֻמָא שְׁבַעַת יָמִים וְכֵל-

הַמִּשְׁכֵב אֲשֶׁר-יִשְׁבַּב עַלְיוֹ יִטְמָא: ס

21. All those. See above at v. 5.

24. The central concern of Leviticus 15 is couched in this verse: the violation of purity rules when a man has sexual contact with a menstruating woman (see the outline in the unit introduction,

²⁵When a woman has had a discharge of blood for many days, not at the time of her menstrual separation, or when she has a discharge beyond her period of menstrual separation, she shall be impure, as though at the time of her menstrual separation, as long as her discharge lasts. ²⁶Any bedding on which she lies while her discharge lasts shall be for her like bedding during her menstrual separation; and any object on which she sits shall become impure, as it does during her menstrual separation: ²⁷All those who touch them shall be impure—and shall wash their clothes, bathe in water, and remain impure until evening.

²⁸When she becomes purified of her discharge, she shall count off seven days, and after that she shall be pure. ²⁹On the eighth day she shall take two turtledoves or two pigeons, and bring them to p. 665). Of all the various kinds of contact with a woman in niddah or her belongings, only sexual contact results in a period of impurity equal to that of the woman herself—seven days. Perhaps this is because the male comes into direct contact with her menstrual fluid. Leviticus 20:18 twice denounces both sexual partners as guilty for revealing “her source [or: flow] (of blood),” so it is the intimate nature of their contact that explains his extended period of pollution.

²⁵וְאֲשֶׁר כִּיְזֹב זָב דְמֹת יָמִים רַבִּים בְּלֹא עַת-נִדְתָּה אָו כִּיְזֹב עַל-נִדְתָּה כָּל-יָמִי זָב טָמֵאתה בַּיּוֹם נִדְתָּה תְּהִיא טָמֵא הָוּא: ²⁶כָּל-הַמְשֻׁבָּב אֲשֶׁר-תִּשְׁבַּע עַלְיוֹ כָּל-יָמִי זָבָה בְּמַשְׁבָּב נִדְתָּה יְהִיא לָהּ וְכָל-הַפְּלִי אֲשֶׁר-תִּשְׁבַּע עַלְיוֹ טָמֵא יְהִיא בְּטָמַאת נִדְתָּה: ²⁷וְכָל-הַנוֹּגֵעַ בָּם יְטָמֵא וּכְפֵס בְּגַדְיוֹ וּרְחַץ בְּמַיִם וּטְמֵא עַד-הַעֲרָבָה:

²⁸וְאַם-תְּהִרָּה מִזְבֵּחַ וּסְפָרָה לְהָ שְׁבֻעָת יָמִים וְאַחֲרָה תְּטַהָּר: ²⁹וּבְיוֹם הַשְׁמִינִי תְּקַח-לָהּ שְׁתִּי תְּרִים אָו שְׁנִי בְּנֵי יוֹנָה

Elsewhere we find more severe consequences for sex with a menstruating woman than simply becoming ritually impure. Leviticus 20:18 decrees that “both of them shall be cut off from among their people.” Both that verse and Leviticus 18:19 place this act in the context of violations of the Covenant that imperil Israel’s tenancy in the land of Canaan. (On niddah, see also Ezekiel 18:6; 22:10.)

Laws about Abnormal Discharge of Blood (15:25–30)

25. This verse defines the zavah as a woman who experiences either genital bleeding that is not consistent with her normal menstrual cycle, or a menstrual period that is prolonged beyond the To-rah’s norm of seven days (v. 18). In both these cases, the rules that apply to the normally menstruating woman apply to the zavah here during the time of her bleeding and for seven additional days after the bleeding stops (v. 28). The Christians’ New Testament mentions a woman who experienced bleeding such as this for twelve years (Matthew 9:20; Mark 5:25; Luke 8:43).

26–27. These rules for the woman with abnormal bleeding correspond to those that apply to the woman in niddah in vv. 20–22. Although the additional strictures for the woman in niddah of vv. 23–24 are not repeated in this passage, it is logical to assume that they apply to the zavah as well: anyone who touches an object that is resting on the bed or chair upon which she sits is polluted; and the man who has intercourse with her is impure for seven days.

29. On the eighth day. Because of her prolonged period of impurity, she must bring a sacrifice, similar to that of the zav of vv. 3–15. Her donation is akin to that of a person of lesser means (12:8, 14:21), probably because of the frequent occurrence of such “abnormal” bleeding.

the priest at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting.
³⁰The priest shall offer the one as a purgation offering and the other as a burnt offering; and the priest shall make expiation on her behalf, for her impure discharge, before יהוה.

³¹You shall put the Israelites on guard against their impurity, lest they die through their impurity by defiling My Tabernacle which is among them.

³²Such is the ritual concerning one who has a discharge: concerning him who has an emission of semen and becomes impure thereby;
³³and concerning her whose condition is that of menstrual separation; and concerning anyone, male or female, who has a discharge; and concerning a man who lies with an impure woman.

CONCLUSION (15:31–33)

31. You shall put the Israelites on guard. The exact force of the rare Hebrew verb here is disputed. The verbal root refers to separation. Thus this clause may well be telling Aaron (see v. 1) and his descendants—whose priestly function it is to “distinguish between . . . the impure and the pure” (10:10)—to “separate” the people of Israel from their impurity.

lest they die. That is, the consequence of allowving impurity to accumulate without taking the necessary remedial steps is national suicide. The “death” threatened here is not the death of the impure individual, but the collective existence of the people among whom God resides.

32. Such is the ritual concerning. Literally, “this is the torah of . . .,” one of several places where the word torah (teaching) has a specific, limited sense (so also 14:2; see at 6:2, Deuteronomy 31:9).

33. condition. Heb. davah; see at 12:2.

—Elaine Goodfriend

Another View

BY MOVING FROM a state of ritual impurity to one of ritual purity, the ever-changing human body serves as the index for the transformation of identity.

The person departing from the state of m'tzora (a person with tzaraat, conventionally translated as a “leper”) follows about ten steps that separate the ritually pure from the ritually impure state. The spectrum between the pure and the impure becomes apparent in the gradations of being outside the camp, then inside the camp but outside one’s tent, and finally inside the community and inside the home. That the ritually impure state is transitional becomes apparent in the time-bound nature of each stage. The body passes through the various stages and is likely to cross several borders between ritually pure and impure over the course of its existence.

As the body undergoes the permutations of ritual purity and impurity, the impure body is sometimes exiled—but not abandoned to its exile. The appearance of a priest outside the camp (14:3) signals that exile is ephemeral and that restoration will begin. No particular priestly category fixes the body, but rather it moves through a full range of categories. This sense of the body as changeable and the potential reversibility of its status are what underlie prophetic notions that sinful actions can be retracted and a dire fate averted.

Focus on the body emphasizes the changes undergone by the self in the process of becoming another self. Signs on the body gauge identity and mark transformation. When the sick are healed, their bodies bear the proof. Yet one’s body is not only an indicator of change but also a vessel of memory. Illness and trauma are remembered by nerves, muscles, and scars. The body that gives birth will forever maintain a link with its offspring. The body attests to change as well as to the indelibility of experience. Therefore descriptions of identity, predicated as they are on the language of body, convey the tension between the possibility of change and the integrity of forms.

The human body is both an indicator of change and a vessel of memory.

—Rachel Havrelock

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

This shall be the ritual for a leper (14:2). In BT Arachin 15b the Rabbis interpreted this biblical word for “leper” (m'tzora, the person afflicted with tzaraat) as an acronym for the Hebrew term for slander (motzi shem ra). Thus, they insisted that tzaraat is a divine punishment for defaming others, a grave transgression in a culture that highly valued oral communication (BT Bava M'tzia 58a). The connection between slander and tzaraat already appears in Numbers 12 when Miriam is afflicted for complaining about her brother Moses. In Midrash Sifra, M'tzora 5.7, the Rabbis emphasize that Miriam’s contraction of tzaraat (Numbers 12:10) was the result of her denunciation of Moses, particularly because she slandered him behind his back.

When... I inflict an eruptive plague upon a house (14:34). From early on, the Rabbis held that the house afflicted by this strange plague never existed and never will exist—and that the only reason that this law exists is for the purpose of theoretical study (Tosefta Ngaim 6:1). The Talmud does not develop the Mishnah tractate devoted to the topic.

M'TZORA

he shall . . . bathe his body in fresh water (15:13). Heb. mayim chayim ("fresh water," literally "living water") is required as a means of purification not only for the man with a discharge but also in the case of tzaraat for both people and houses (14:5–6, 50–52), and in the case of corpse impurity (Numbers 19:8). All of these cases of ritual impurity last for at least

*The Talmud institutes the rabbinic sage
as a sort of gynecological expert.*

seven days. However, the Torah notably does not mention the requirement of immersion in water for cases of impurity of similar duration that are specific to women, such as those resulting from birth, menstruation, or irregular genital bleeding. The Mishnah assumes that immersion in fresh water applies to women's impurities as well (Mikvaot 1:8).

When a woman has a discharge (15:19). This passage establishes the rules of purification concerning a woman's menstrual period. The Rabbis developed these regulations into an entire tractate called Niddah, the "menstruating woman," which is part of the mishnaic order called Purities. Much like the priestly writers of Leviticus, the Rabbis did not consider purity and impurity a matter of morality, but rather a matter of ritual status with regard to access to the Temple in Jerusalem. Thus, many of the rules of purity and impurity detailed in the biblical passage here and in Mishnah Niddah had no application in a post-Temple reality. However, the rules of sexual abstinence during the wife's menstrual period, which the Rabbis derived from Leviticus 18:19 and 20:18, are not dependent on the historical existence of the Temple and continue to regulate the sex life of married couples in traditional Jewish communities to this day. Indeed, many of the rabbinic discussions in BT Niddah focus on the workings of menstruation and on women's physiology in general, instituting the rabbinic sage as a sort of gynecological expert to be consulted when problems arise.

a discharge of blood for many days (15:25). The Torah assumes a menstrual calendar of seven days of bleeding. It considers any bleeding beyond seven days or outside of the seven regular days to be abnormal. It categorizes a woman with an irregular discharge as a zavah, parallel to the male category of zav (15:13). In a tractate called Zavim, the Mishnah discusses both men and women with irregular genital discharges. In biblical law, the rules of purification for the zavah differ from the rules for menstruation. Notably, the afflicted woman must count seven days after the irregular discharge has ceased before purification can take place. The Talmud, however, merges the two categories of regular and irregular bleeding. Accordingly, a woman is to count seven "white" days without discharge after her menses before she immerses in a mikveh and resumes marital intimacy. The Talmud famously attributes this more stringent practice to women: "Rabbi Zera said: The daughters of Israel (b'not Yisrael) have imposed upon themselves the stringency that even where they observe only a drop of blood the size of a mustard seed, they wait on account of it seven clean days" (BT Niddah 66a). One should not dismiss Rabbi Zera's attribution of this legal stringency to women too readily, considering that throughout Jewish history women have used the laws of niddah toward their own spiritual empowerment, as well as for practical purposes, including control over their sex lives.

—Charlotte Elisheva Fonrobert

Contemporary Reflection

THEOLOGIAN ELIZABETH DODSON GRAY notes: “Women’s bodies may be the hardest place for women to find sacredness” (Sacred Dimensions of Women’s Experience, 1988, p. 197). Our society sends negative messages to women from earliest childhood about the expected perfection of their physiques and the disappointments of any flaws in the female form. Parashat Mitzora, then, with its focus on menstrual impurity (15:19–24), seems to impart the same kind of unfavorable sense. Rejecting our own received biases and patriarchal assumptions about menstruation, however, can help us form a contemporary view of these so-called taboos.

What the Torah deems as tamei (“impure”) or tahor (“pure”) is not actually attached to cleanliness, even though they are often translated as “unclean” and “clean.” These Hebrew words are ritual terms, meant to designate those in a physical and spiritual state unable to enter the Mishkan (Tabernacle; and in later times, the Temple), or those able to do so. Those who are considered tamei are taboo (which is not what we think of as “bad”), meaning that they cannot enter the sacred space; and the thing that causes them to be ineligible to enter is also understood to be taboo. Anthropologists note that taboos are the system by which a culture sets aside certain objects or persons as either sacred or accursed. Such objects or persons inspire both fear and respect. Penelope Washbourn writes: “Menstruation symbolizes the advent of a new power that is mana . . . ‘sacred.’ . . . A taboo expresses this feeling that something special, some holy power, is involved, and our response to it must be very careful” (in WomanSpirit Rising, 1989, p. 251). This mixed message of fear and power, contact and avoidance, actually dominates all the Torah’s passages around blood. Blood, which is to be avoided in the realm of eating and sex, is the same substance that atones for the community in the sacrificial system, and it binds the individual male child to the Israelite covenant through circumcision. Blood both sustains and endangers; it is the medium of plague or deliverance. Thus blood—like every potent symbol—has the double quality and the twin potential of birth and decay, purity and impurity.

So too with menstrual blood. We who are often uninspired and unaffected by our bodies should reject the negative connotation of taboo—and explore, instead, the positive and sacred aspect. Surely a religion that has a blessing for an activity as mundane as going to the bathroom should have a blessing for the coming and going of menstruation. Since the male composers of the liturgy, living in a world where modesty was central and women’s bodies were a mystery at best, were not able—or more likely, not willing—to imagine such a blessing, we must be the first generation to do so.

We should recite a blessing for the coming and going of menstruation.

More than thirty years ago, I did just this: I wrote a blessing for menstruation and have been writing about it and teaching it ever since. When I crafted my b’rachah, I reappropriated the difficult and offensive morning blessing in the traditional prayer book, which reads: “Blessed are You, Adonai our God, Ruler of the Universe, who has not made me a woman.” (Traditionally, women say instead, “who has made me according to Your will.”) Each month, when I get my period, I say: “Baruch atah Adonai, eloheinu melech ha-olam, she’asani ishah: Blessed are You, Adonai our God, Ruler of the Universe, who has made me a woman.” Saying the blessing becomes a revolutionary moment, for this slight change in wording—changing the negative “who has not made me a woman” into the positive “who has made me a woman”—affirms my holiness and sanctity within the context of menstruation, not despite it.

M'TZORA

I believe it is possible to rescue the aspects of mystery inherent in menstruation. While we reject menstrual huts, a separation from the sancta, and antiquated notions of cleanliness, we can still emerge with a sense of the overwhelming mystery of life and death that is embodied in our corporeal female selves. While many women associate menstruation with physical pain and discomfort, the experience nonetheless involves a degree of power. We should reject the notion that menstruation makes a woman “unclean” and instead think of this time as a period of intense electrical charges—the charge of life and death—pulsing through our bodies. Blu Greenberg urges us to focus more on the positive, “to restore that element of holiness to our bodies, our selves” (On Women and Judaism, 1981, pp. 118–120).

We can also consider a connection between menstruation and covenant. The prophet Zechariah speaks to “daughter Jerusalem” and “daughter Zion” about “your covenant of blood” as that which releases prisoners from the dry pit (9:9–11). It does not say “the covenant of blood,” as most translations render it, but rather emphasizes that blood is the focus of the covenant. The address to the feminine persona suggests that all “daughters of Zion” have that covenant of blood. It is through menstruation—from puberty when we accept our responsibilities as Jews, through the elder years when bleeding stops and deep wisdom starts—that the entire world is saved from the dry pit of death, in which there is no water, no womb, no regeneration, no rebirth.

See menstrual blood, then, as women’s covenantal blood—just as the blood of b’rit milah (ritual circumcision) is men’s. The possibilities for rituals around this abound. For women too have a b’rit (covenant) inscribed in our flesh as an “everlasting covenant” (Genesis 17:19): not just once, at eight days old, but every single month. And Mitzora, in its ancient and perhaps awkward way, attempts to remind us.

—Elyse Goldstein

Voices

M'tzora

Laurie Patton

Leviticus 14:2

It takes time to clean and wrap leprous bandages.

Elijah told the rabbi that the Messiah was a leper sitting at the gates of the city,
bandaging his wounds
one at a time.

“Ah,” said the rabbi,
“he is being thorough.
He is taking his time.”

“No,” said Elijah.
“This way,
the Messiah can come
any time he is called,
and he will not be delayed.”

He would rush out—no time for cover or cleaning—
what is one open sore
when the moment has come to close the wounds of the world?

Otwock II

Kadya Molodowsky (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

Leviticus 14:1–32

We are sick here—a multitude of locusts
Fallen suddenly upon the whiteness
Of the wintry wood.
With mouths open in putrid breathing,
We draw out a word like hoarse fiddles.
Who still needs us,
Wrapped up in shawls, with feverish eyes?
And what use are we?
Pines raise their branches high
In order not to touch us,
In order to shun us, shun us.
We scream to the woods
And spit blood into their fragrant roots.
That’s why the trees stir at night and tell
How big is the cemetery here,
And mock the dying
To the last shadow of memory
With their tall growth, with their fat trunks
And millennial lives.
I am here, too, solitary,
Sick, wrapped in a shawl,
And I step slowly in the snow among the trees,
And no one knows
That I am still myself.

M'TZORA

Blood

Alicia Suskin Ostriker

Leviticus 15:19–24

Of all bodily fluids, blood is the one most often named, the bravest and most dramatic, the fluid of heroes and of atonement. The fluid of crime. Of shame, when its river floods from a woman's body. It is vivid red, and soon becomes clotted, sticky, stale. The tangy scent of it is a stimulant. Simple people know this. Children dare each other to taste it.

we are connected to earth by our menstrual blood
and the blood of warriors flowing from open wounds like open lips, gratifying the soil moistening dry bones—
without these things, can the earth yield?

The Ritual Bath

Sarah Antine

Leviticus 15:19–30

It takes a tree a year to do what I do in a month;
The moon unfolding its pearl—

At the edge of the night
I peel off layers of myself.

Maple leaves reddens and drop,
limbs shedding their temporary hands.

Full of rainwater, I go to the ritual bath, a room between I am alone and I am together
with you.

May no part of me stay up when I go under—Water closes its ceiling above me.
I am no longer a container for sadness.

from Transforming the Meaning of Purity

Rachel Adler

Leviticus 15

We must keep asking the Torah to speak to us in human language, this crude jargon studded with constraints and distortions, silences and brutalities, that is our only vessel for holiness and truth and peace. We must keep teaching each other, we and our study partner the Torah, all that it means to be human. Human is not whole. Human is full of holes. Human bleeds. Human births its worlds in agonies of blood and bellyaches. Human owns no perfect, timeless texts because human inhabits no perfect, timeless contexts.

from Jewish Feminism: Go to Yourself

Laura Geller

Leviticus 15:19–24

When I was a rabbinical student there were no other women in my class. In Talmud class as we learned about the tradition of occasional blessings, the teacher explained that there is no important moment in the lifetime of a Jew for which there is no blessing. And I thought to myself, this is wonderful, the idea that all of life is holy. Then I thought to myself, wait a second, that is not true. There were moments in my life that weren't sanctified by a blessing. And I remembered, while sitting with my male colleagues and male professors, the moment when I got my period for the first time and what it was like not to have a blessing to sanctify that. I learned then one of the unanticipated consequences of admitting women to rabbinical school. And I began to understand that my experience as a woman begins with the experience of my body, and that I must listen to that experience and respond by creating new rituals to celebrate powerful events in women's lives: menarche, birth, lactation, weaning, menopause, abortion, miscarriage and more. Once we begin to experience and sanctify moments that start with our bodies, we can begin to sanctify other moments in our lives.

The Curse

Sue Hubbard

Leviticus 15:19–24

She is all woman now
daughter become sister spindle-prick of peony smearing her whites.

A butterfly wing of bright crimson surprises her waking, shyly she comes to me bringing her ring-o-roses, her scarlet bouquet.

We are joined in blood
by the slow pull of the moon's waning and the small secrets of darkened bathroom shelves.

How the past echoes. My mother's silent mouthing of those witch-craft words. The Curse, as she taught me to name that first staining.

Have we forgotten those cackle voices; conspiratorial whispers echoing among unguents and tinctures in white-tiled rooms?

And I who was mute, spineless
as a sea-horse, wish you brave and beautiful. Feel your roots, deep and damp, as rusty beets smelling of earth.

אחרי מות ◆ Acharei Mot

LEVITICUS 16:1–18:30

Boundaries of Rituals: The Sanctuary and the Body

AT THE ROOT of parashat Acharei Mot (“after the death [of]”) is the question of change. How is it that a person undergoes a transformation? What does it mean and how does it change her orientation to the Divine? The priestly writers also wonder how the people of Israel can undergo a collective change. The answer they provide is that change comes about through properly performed ritual. The priestly writers credited with much of Leviticus (see p. 567) advocate constant change. According to them, the body itself is an ongoing process of flux.

Fascinated with the body and the body politic, the priests speculate that both have the potential to reach purity and optimal holiness. The converse is also true—the body can become impure and the community tainted by transgression. Neither the state of impurity nor the state of purity is eternal. Both are time-bound and set within a spectrum of gradations between purity and impurity. Priestly ritual mediates between these states, and it demarcates them so that individual and community alike can know where they stand in relation to God and to others.

The body is not at fault for entering the state of impurity, which can be reversed through time and water. As it develops, priestly thought comes to consider the states of purity and impurity as larger than the physical body and affected by moral transgressions as well. This parashah combines two strata of priestly thought that modern critical scholars label as “P” for the Priestly School (Leviticus 16) and “H” for the Holiness School (Leviticus 17–18). The holiness of the sanctuary most concerns the P source, whereas the sacred nature of the land most concerns the H source. Both sources grant contaminating and purifying power to blood. Whereas Leviticus 16 attends to transformation, Leviticus 17 stipulates how people should introduce holiness into their diet.

This portion mentions women only in terms of the dangers posed by their sexuality.

Women must read and write themselves into the holy community presented in the H source. When Leviticus 18 specifically mentions women, it is in terms of the dangerous and potentially contaminating force of their sexuality. They are figures in the household whose bodies require policing. Leviticus 18 circumscribes the bodies of female relatives as forbidden, thus setting up a system of protection within the domestic domain. At the same time, these safeguards designate women as extensions of their husbands, brothers, and grandfathers and thereby restrict them. Such techniques are classic means of limiting women’s freedom.

—Rachel Havrelock

Outline—

I. STEPS TO ENSURE SAFETY IN APPROACHING THE DIVINE (16:1–34)

- A. The expiation and purification of the Shrine (vv. 1–19)
- B. The scapegoat ritual (vv. 20–22)
- C. Post-ritual purification of priest and people (vv. 23–28)
- D. The establishment of the ritual as an annual day of atonement (vv. 29–34)

II. LAWS ABOUT EATING MEAT (17:1–16)

- A. Eating sacrificial meat (vv. 1–9)
- B. Eating non-sacrificial meat (vv. 10–16)

III. LAWS ABOUT SEXUAL LIMITS (18:1–30)

- A. The basic principle and the reason: Don't do as the Canaanites do (vv. 1–5)
- B. Forbidden relations (vv. 6–23)
- C. Reasons and consequences: Don't do as the Canaanites did (vv. 24–30)

16:1

יְהוָה spoke to Moses after the death of the two sons of Aaron who died when they drew too close to the presence of יְהוָה.² יְהוָה said to Moses:

Tell your brother Aaron that he is not to come at will into the Shrine behind the curtain, in front

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵיכֶם מֹת
שְׁנִי בְּנֵי אַהֲרֹן בְּקָרְבָתֶם לִפְנֵי יְהוָה וַיָּמֻתוּ
וְלֹא תֹאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵיכֶם
דָבָר אֲלֵיכֶם אָחִיךָ וְאֲלֵיכֶם בְּכָל־עַת אֲלֵהֶךְ דָקֵשׁ מִבֵּית לִפְנֵי הַכְּפָרָת

Steps to Ensure Safety in Approaching the Divine (16:1–34)

The parashah begins with a reminder about the penalty for the improper execution of ritual and for encroaching on the sanctuary. Aaron's sons, Nadab and Abihu, deviated from sacrificial protocol by offering "alien fire" (10:1) that prompted their deaths. Leviticus 10 pointed to an incorrect way to approach the Divine; Leviticus 16 now details a correct one. Together the two passages function as an envelope enclosing the laws of purity. The priests who execute the purity rituals are themselves subject to the fluctuating states of purity and impurity. The system is upheld on every level.

The key to understanding the often arcane priestly rituals is the notion of boundaries. The priests are invested in maintaining distinctions: Divine and human, Israel and Other, priests and people of Israel. As anthropologist Mary Douglas has shown, those distinctions function as homologies in the interlocking system of priestly boundaries: enforcing one boundary in this tight system simultaneously upholds the others. The conceptual boundaries become real in the social sphere when the people of Israel abide by the laws and perform the rituals.

THE EXPIATION AND PURIFICATION OF THE SHRINE (16:1–19)

The demarcation of a specific area as the dwelling place of the Divine maintains the distinction between the holy and the profane. Other means of upholding this distinction include offering sacrifices at a precise time, and ensuring that all bodies involved in a ritual are in a state of purity—with no life-giving fluids seeping out.

1. after the death of the two sons. See discussion in 10:1–3 for the disturbing story of the death of Aaron's sons.

2. In order to avoid the death of more priests, a spatial boundary is established between the holy shrine and the Holy of Holies behind the curtain. Aaron, as well as his successors as chief priest, must not cross this line except on the Day of Atonement (16:29–33). Crossing at any other time will result in death, since God's Presence is tangible beyond the curtain.

the Shrine. Heb. ha-kodesh; this most interior

- When listing "off-limits" females, why does the Torah not explicitly identify the daughter?

ANOTHER VIEW ▶ 694

- We can use these laws as a starting point for questioning our own sexual values.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ▶ 696

- Rabbi Yehudah suggests that a "back-up" wife must be prepared for the high priest.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ▶ 694

- I tread gently on the alpine meadow, / ... Do I deal as gently with those I love ...?

VOICES ▶ 698

of the cover that is upon the ark, lest he die; for I appear in the cloud over the cover.³ Thus only shall Aaron enter the Shrine: with a bull of the herd for a purgation offering and a ram for a burnt offering.—⁴ He shall be dressed in a sacral linen tunic, with linen breeches next to his flesh, and be girt with a linen sash, and he shall wear a linen turban. They are sacral vestments; he shall bathe his body in water and then put them on.—⁵ And from the Israelite community he shall take two he-goats for a purgation offering and a ram for a burnt offering.

⁶ Aaron is to offer his own bull of purgation offering, to make expiation for himself and for his household. ⁷ Aaron shall take the two he-goats and let them stand before יְהוָה at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting; ⁸ and he shall place lots upon the two goats, one marked for יְהוָה and the other marked for Azazel. ⁹ Aaron shall bring forward the goat designated by lot for יְהוָה, which he is to offer as a purgation offering; ¹⁰ while the goat designated by lot for Azazel shall be left standing alive before יְהוָה, to make expiation with it and to send it off to the wilderness for Azazel.

of sacred spaces that contains the Ark is elsewhere called kodesh ha-kodashim, “the Holy of Holies” (Exodus 26:33–34).

4. sacral linen tunic, with linen breeches. This simple raiment serves as a marker of the body’s purity while also demarcating the boundaries of the body. Similarly, clothing conveys that the body is in a state of ritual purity in the contemporary practices of wearing a white robe on Yom Kippur, and of the Muslim practice of Ihram (wearing white clothing) during the Hajj (pilgrimage to Mecca).

he shall bathe his body in water. Water in the priestly view is a powerful agent—it has the ability to dissolve impurity and usher a body into the state of purity. As he affects the transformation of all the people, the priest himself enters a different state bounded by a ritual bath before and after the rite.

6. to make expiation for himself and for his

אֲשֶׁר עַל־הָאָרֶן וְלֹא יִמּוֹת בַּעֲנֵן אֲרָא
עַל־הַכְּפָרָת: ³ בָּזָאת יָבָא אַהֲרֹן אֶל־
הַקְדָּשָׁה בְּפִרְבָּקָר לְחַטָּאת וְאַיִל
לְעַלְתָּה: ⁴ בְּתִינְתִּיבָד קָדֵשׁ יַלְבָשׁ וּמְכֻנָּסִי
בְּדַיְהָיו עַל־בָּשָׂרוֹ וּבְאַבְגָּנָט בְּלַיְחָלָר
וּבְמַעֲנֵפָת בְּדַיְצָנָף בְּגַדְרִיקָדָשׁ הֵם וּרְחֵץ
בְּמִים אַתִּבְשָׂרוֹ וּלְבָשָׂם: ⁵ וּמְאַת עֲדָת
בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל יַקְחֵ שְׁנִי־שְׁעִירִי עַזְזִים לְחַטָּאת
וְאַיִל אַחֵד לְעַלְתָּה:
⁶ וְהַקָּרֵיב אַהֲרֹן אֶת־פָּר הַחַטָּאת אֲשֶׁר־לֹא
וּכְפֵר בְּעַדוֹ וּבְעַד בֵּיתוֹ: ⁷ וְלֹקֶח אֶת־שְׁנִי
הַשְׁעִירִים וְהַעֲמִיד אֶתְם לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה פָּתָח
אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד: ⁸ וּנְתַנְתֵּן אַהֲרֹן עַל־שְׁנִי הַשְׁעִירִים
גָּרְלוֹת גּוֹרֵל אַחֲל לְיְהֹוָה וּגּוֹרֵל אַחֲד
לְעַזְזָאֵל: ⁹ וְהַקָּרֵיב אַהֲרֹן אֶת־דְּשָׁעֵיד
אֲשֶׁר עַלְתָּה עַלְיוֹ הַגּוֹרֵל לְיְהֹוָה וּעַשְׂחוֹ
חַטָּאת: ¹⁰ וְהַשְׁעִיר אֲשֶׁר עַלְתָּה עַלְיוֹ הַגּוֹרֵל
לְעַזְזָאֵל יַעֲמֹד־תְּחִי לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה לְכִפֵּר עַלְיוֹ לְשִׁלְוח אַתָּה לְעַזְזָאֵל הַמְּדִבְרָה:

household. The premise here is that the chief priest can externalize misdeeds and transfer them to a sacrificial animal. As he sacrifices the animal, he removes the transgressions from an individual or from the community. (After the destruction of the Temple and the end of the sacrificial system, individuals became responsible for articulating their mistakes and separating from them through the language of repentance and prayer.)

8. Azazel. This is the name of the wilderness beyond the boundaries of settled life; most likely it originated as the name of a demon. Azazel in this case is best imagined as the antithesis of the Tabernacle/sanctuary, a place of disorder devoid of the relevant priestly distinctions. By carrying Israel’s impurities to such a wilderness, the scapegoat effectively conveys the chaotic aspects of human life back to a place of origin.

¹¹Aaron shall then offer his bull of purgation offering, to make expiation for himself and his household. He shall slaughter his bull of purgation offering, ¹²and he shall take a panful of glowing coals scooped from the altar before the curtain. ¹³He shall put the incense on the fire before יהוה, so that the cloud from the incense screens the cover that is over [the Ark of] the Pact, lest he die. ¹⁴He shall take some of the blood of the bull and sprinkle it with his finger over the cover on the east side; and in front of the cover he shall sprinkle some of the blood with his finger seven times. ¹⁵He shall then slaughter the people's goat of purgation offering, bring its blood behind the curtain, and do with its blood as he has done with the blood of the bull: he shall sprinkle it over the cover and in front of the cover.

¹⁶Thus he shall purge the Shrine of the impurity and transgression of the Israelites, whatever their sins; and he shall do the same for the Tent of Meeting, which abides with them in the midst of their impurity. ¹⁷When he goes in to make expiation in the Shrine, nobody else shall be in the Tent of Meeting until he comes out.

When he has made expiation for himself and his household, and for the whole congregation of Israel, ¹⁸he shall go out to the altar that is before יהוה and purge it: he shall take some of the blood of the bull and of the goat and apply it to each of

¹¹ וְהִקְרַב אָהָרֹן אֶת־פְּרִזְבֵּת הַחֲטֹאת אֲשֶׁר־לֹו
וּכְפֵר בְּעַד וּבְעַד בֵּיתוֹ וְשַׁחַט אֶת־פְּרִזְבֵּת
הַחֲטֹאת אֲשֶׁר־לֹו: ¹² וְלֹכַח מִלְאָדָה מִחְתָּה
גְּחִילִי־אֲשֶׁר מִעַל הַמִּזְבֵּחַ מִלֶּפֶנִי יְהָוָה וּמִלֶּא
חַפְנֵיו קָטָרָת סְמִים דְּקָה וְהַבִּיא מִבֵּית
לְפָרָכָת: ¹³ וְנֹתַן אֶת־הַקְּטָרָת עַל־הָאָש
לִפְנֵי יְהָוָה וּכְסָה | עַבְנֵן הַקְּטָרָת אֶת־הַפְּרָת
אֲשֶׁר עַל־הָעֲדֹות וְלֹא יִמּוֹת: ¹⁴ וְלֹכַח מִדְם
הַפְּרָת וְהַזָּה בְּאַצְבָּעָו עַל־פִּנְיוֹן הַכְּפֹרָת קְרֻמָּה
וּלְפִנֵּי הַכְּפֹרָת וְזֹה שְׁבָע־פָּעָם מִן־הַקְּדָם
בְּאַצְבָּעָו: ¹⁵ וְשַׁחַט אֶת־שְׂעִיר הַחֲטֹאת
אֲשֶׁר לְעַם וְהַבִּיא אֶת־דְּמוֹ אֶל־מִבֵּית
לְפָרָכָת וְעַשָּׂה אֶת־דְּמוֹ בְּאַשְׁר עָשָׂה לִדְם
הַפְּרָת וְהַזָּה אָתוֹ עַל־הַכְּפֹרָת וּלְפִנֵּי
הַכְּפֹרָת:

¹⁶ וּכְפֵר עַל־הַקְּדָשׁ מִטְמָאֹת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
וּמִפְשָׁעָיהם לְכָל־חֲטֹאתָם וּכְנֵי יִעָשָׂה
לְאַחֲלָמָעָד הַשְׁכִּין אַתֶּם בְּתוֹךְ טָמָאָתָם:
¹⁷ וְכָל־אָדָם לְאַיִלָּה | בְּאַחֲלָמָעָד בְּבָאוֹ
לְכְפֵר בְּקָדְשׁ עַד־צָאתָהוּ
וּכְפֵר בְּעַד וּבְעַד בֵּיתוֹ וּבְעַד בְּלִקְתָּל
יִשְׂרָאֵל: ¹⁸ וַיָּצֹא אֶל־הַמִּזְבֵּחַ אֲשֶׁר לְפִנֵּי
יְהָוָה וּכְפֵר עַלְיוֹן וְלֹכַח מִדְם חַפְרָת וּמִדְם
הַשְּׁעִיר וְנֹתַן עַל־קְרֻנוֹת הַמִּזְבֵּחַ סְקִיבָּה:

14. As the sacrifice of the animals dispenses with the people's transgressions, the sacrificial blood serves as a purifying agent that transforms the inner sanctum.

seven times. The number seven alludes to the restoration of order and wholeness by recalling the seven days of Creation.

16. the Tent of Meeting, which abides with them in the midst of their impurity. In the priestly view, the body exists in a constant state of flux, moving in and out of various states. On one end of the spectrum rests the state of impurity. Although specific practices dissolve physical impurities, the residue of impurity accumulates at the central ritual site. Misdeeds also cause a kind of moral impurity that individuals must purge through acts of atonement. Since Israel's actions impact its sacred space, the Tent of Meeting—like the body—must undergo a period of purification and subsequent transformation. In this sense, the body and sacred space are parallel domains.

the horns of the altar;¹⁹ and the rest of the blood he shall sprinkle on it with his finger seven times. Thus he shall purify it of the defilement of the Israelites and consecrate it.

²⁰When he has finished purging the Shrine, the Tent of Meeting, and the altar, the live goat shall be brought forward. ²¹Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat and confess over it all the iniquities and transgressions of the Israelites, whatever their sins, putting them on the head of the goat; and it shall be sent off to the wilderness through a designated agent. ²²Thus the goat shall carry on it all their iniquities to an inaccessible region; and the goat shall be set free in the wilderness.

²³And Aaron shall go into the Tent of Meeting, take off the linen vestments that he put on when he entered the Shrine, and leave them there. ²⁴He shall bathe his body in water in the holy precinct and put on his vestments; then he shall come out and offer his burnt offering and the burnt offering of the people, making expiation for himself and for the people. ²⁵The fat of the purgation offering he shall turn into smoke on the altar.

19. The priest brings the sanctuary into a state of purity and consecration. It is possible to see these two states as a result of all the actions performed by the priest (sacrifice, sprinkling of blood, and smearing blood on the horns of the altar). Jacob Milgrom sees the daubing of the altar horns as enacting purification, and the sprinkling as an act of consecration (Leviticus 1–16, 1991, p. 1040). Another perspective is that the sprinkling of blood absorbs the taint of the people's misdeeds from the Shrine and thereby purifies it.

THE SCAPEGOAT RITUAL (16:20–22)

Removed from the corporate body of the community and from the space of the Shrine, the people's transgressions must be transferred elsewhere. The scapegoat is the vehicle of this transference.

¹⁹ וְהִזְבַּח עַלְיוֹ מִן־הַדָּם בְּאַצְבֵּעַ שֶׁבֻע פָּעָמִים וְטַהֲרוֹ וְקִדְשֹׁ מִطְמָאת בְּנֵי
יִשְׂרָאֵל :

²⁰ וּכְלָה מִפְּגַּר אַתְּ־הַקָּדֵש וְאַתְּ־אַהֲלָ
מוֹעֵד וְאַתְּ־הַמִּזְבֵּחַ וְהַקָּרֵיב אַתְּ־הַשְׁעִיר
הַחַי : ²¹ וְסָמֵךְ אַהֲרֹן אַתְּ־שְׁתִּי יְדוֹ יָדַיו עַל
רָאשׁ הַשְׁעִיר הַחַי וְהַתְוֹדָה עַלְיוֹ אַתְּ־כָּל־
עֲונֹת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאַתְּ־כָּל־פְּשָׁעֵיכֶם לְכָל־ חֶטְאֶתְמָ וְנִתְןָ אַתְּ עַל־רָאשׁ הַשְׁעִיר
גּוֹרָה וְשָׁלַח אַתְּ־הַשְׁעִיר בַּמְדָבֵר :

²³ וּבָא אַהֲרֹן אַל־אַהֲלָ מוֹעֵד וְפָשַׁט אַתְּ־
בְּגִדֵּי הַבָּד אֲשֶׁר לְבָשׁ בְּבָאוֹ אַל־הַקָּדֵש
וְהַנִּקְדָּם שָׁם : ²⁴ וּרְחֵץ אַתְּ־בִּשְׁרוֹ בְּמִלְתָּ
בְּמִקְוּם קָדוֹשׁ וְלִבְשׁ אַתְּ־בְּגִדֵּיו וַיֵּצֵא וְעָשָׂה
אַתְּ־עַלְתוֹ וְאַתְּ־עַלְתָּה הַעַם וּכְפַר בְּعֵדוֹ
וּבְעֵד הַעַם : ²⁵ וְאַתְּ חַלֵּב הַחַטֹּאת יִקְטַּנֵּה
הַמִּבְחָה :

First the chief priest conveys the transgressions to the goat by laying his hands upon it; then, through the priest's speech-act of confession, the goat carries this load into a distant wilderness.

POST-RITUAL PURIFICATION OF PRIEST AND PEOPLE (16:23–28)

As discussed above at v. 4, the priests perceived water as a powerful annulling agent with the ability to dissolve physical states and usher the body into a new state of being. In priestly ritual, contact with water marks the place between the states of impurity and purity. Its cleansing power removes visible dirt as well as invisible impurities.

In prophetic thought, water has the ability to transform not only physical states, but also a moral state of impurity. The prophet Isaiah says: "Your ²⁶The one who set the Azazel-goat free shall wash those clothes and bathe the body in water—and after that may reenter the camp.

²⁷The bull of purgation offering and the goat of purgation offering whose blood was brought in to purge the Shrine shall be taken outside the camp; and their hides, flesh, and dung shall be consumed in fire. ²⁸The one who burned them shall wash those clothes and bathe the body in water—and after that may re-enter the camp.

²⁹And this shall be to you a law for all time: In the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, you shall practice self-denial; and you shall do no manner of work, neither the citizen nor the alien who resides among you. ³⁰For on this day atonement shall be made for you to purify you of all your sins; you shall be pure before יהוה. ³¹It shall be a sabbath of complete rest for you, and you shall practice self-denial; it is a law for all time. ³²The priest who has been anointed and ordained to serve as priest in place of his father shall make expiation. He shall put on the linen vestments, the sacral vestments. ³³He shall purge the innermost Shrine; he

וְהַמֶּלֶךְ אֲתִיהָשָׁעֵיר לְעֹזָאָל יַכְבֵּס
בְּגָדָיו וּרְחֵץ אֲתִיבְשָׂרוּ בְמִים וְאַחֲרִיכָן
יַבּוּא אֶל-הַמִּחְנָה:

²⁷וְאַתְּ פָר הַחֲטָאת וְאַתְּ | שְׁעִיר הַחֲטָאת
אֲשֶׁר הוֹבֵא אֲתִידְמָט לְכִפֵּר בְּקָדֵשׁ יוֹצִיא
אֶל-מִחוֹן לְמִחְנָה וּשְׁרָפוּ בְּאֵשׁ אֶת-עֲרָתָם
וְאֲתִיבְשָׂרָם וְאֲתִיפְרָשָׂם: ²⁸וְהַשְׁרֵף אֶתְּ
יַכְבֵּס בְּגָדָיו וּרְחֵץ אֲתִיבְשָׂרוּ בְמִים וְאַחֲרִיכָן כָּן יַבּוּא אֶל-הַמִּחְנָה:

²⁹וְהִיְתָה לְכֶם לְחַקָּת עַולְם בְּחַדְשָׁ
הַשְׁבִּיעִי בְּעַשָּׂור לְחַדְשָׁ תְּעַנֵּי אֶת-נְפָשָׁתְכֶם וּכְל-מַלְאָכָה לֹא תַעֲשֶׂה הַזְּרָח
וְהַגָּר בְּתוֹכְכֶם: ³⁰כִּי-בַיּוֹם הַזֶּה יַכִּפֵּר
עֲלֵיכֶם לְתַהַר אֲתֶכָּם מִכָּל חַטְאֵיכֶם לִפְנֵי
יְהָוָה תְּהַרְרֹה: ³¹שְׁבַת שְׁבָתוֹן הִיא לְכֶם
וְעַנְיָתֶם אֲתִינְפָּשָׁתְכֶם חַקָּת עַולְם:
³²וְכִפֵּר הַכֹּהֵן אֲשֶׁר-יִמְשַׁח אֹתוֹ וְאֲשֶׁר
יִמְלָא אֲתִידָוּ לְכֹהֵן תְּחַת אָבִיו וְלִבְשֵׂ אֹתָהּ
בְּגָדֵי הַפְּדָר בְּגָדֵי הַקָּדֵש: ³³וְכִפֵּר אֲתִמְקָדֵש

hands are filled with blood / Wash yourselves; cleanse yourselves” (Isaiah 1:15–16). A combination of priestly and prophetic perceptions of the transforming power of water rests in the background of the immersion ritual that effects conversion in Judaism as well as the Christian ritual of baptism (see Sh'mini, Post-biblical Interpretations, p. 630).

27. consumed in fire. Burning the remnants of the offerings beyond the boundaries of the community disposes of the remnants of human iniquities.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE RITUAL AS AN ANNUAL DAY OF ATONEMENT (16:29–34)

29. in the seventh month. The seventh month ushers the people into an annual period of renewal and redemption, much as the seventh day does in the weekly cycle.

practice self-denial. Self-denial pertains to the abstention from food. As water cleanses the surface of the body from transgression, so fasting cleanses the internal organs.

30. you shall be pure before יהוה. The cleansing transforms the people in the eyes of God. It also maintains a good relationship between Israel and the Divine by restoring the people and the Shrine to a state of purity. Whereas an impure community exists in a precarious relationship to the Divine, a pure community can enjoy a proximate, reciprocal relationship.

33. He shall purge the innermost Shrine. After the priest removes past taint and transgression from Israel’s sacred sites, the priests and people alike enjoy safety and a new standing before the divine Presence in their midst. This tenth day serves as a day of collective transformation when all enter a shall purge the Tent of Meeting and the altar; and he shall make expiation for the priests and for all the people of the congregation.

³⁴This shall be to you a law for all time: to make atonement for the Israelites for all their sins once a year.

And Moses did as יְהוָה had commanded him.

17 יְהוָה spoke to Moses, saying: ²Speak to Aaron and his sons and to all the Israelite people and say to them:

This is what has commanded: ³if anyone of the house of Israel slaughters an ox or sheep or goat in the camp, or does so outside the camp, ⁴and does not bring it to the entrance of the Tent of Meeting to present it as an offering to יְהוָה, before יְהוָה's Tabernacle, bloodguilt shall be imputed to that party: having shed blood, that person shall be cut off from among this people. ⁵This is in order that the Israelites may bring the sacrifices which they have been making in the open—that they may bring them before יְהוָה, to the priest, at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, and offer them as sacrifices of well-being to יְהוָה; ⁶that the priest may dash the blood against the altar of יְהוָה at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, and turn the fat into

הַקֹּדֶשׁ וְאַתִּזְבֵּחַ מְוִעֵד וְאַתִּזְבֵּחַ יְכֹפֵר
וְעַל הַפְּהָנִים וְעַל־כָּל־עַם הַקָּהָל יְכֹפֵר:
³⁴ וְהִיא תִּהְזֹאת לְכֶם לְחַקְתָּם עַלְמָם לְכֹפֵר
עַל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל מִכָּל־חַטָּאתֶם אֲחֵת בָּשָׂנָה
וַיַּעֲשֵׂה כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֶת־מְשֹׁה: פ

ז וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים לְאָמֵר: ² דָבָר
אֶל־אַהֲרֹן וְאֶל־בָּנָיו וְאֶל־כָּל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמַרְתָּ אֲלֵיכֶם
וְזֶה הַדָּבָר אֲשֶׁר־צִוָּה יְהוָה לְאָמֵר: ³ אִישׁ
אִישׁ מִבֵּית יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁחַט שׂוֹר אוֹ
כַּשְׁבָּא אוֹעֵז בְּמִחְנָה אָוֹ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁחַט מְחוֹזֵךְ
לְמִחְנָה: ⁴ וְאֶל־פְּתַח אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד לְאָוֹ
הַבָּיאוֹ לְהַקְרִיב קָרְבָּן לְיְהוָה לִפְנֵי מִשְׁבֵּן
יְהוָה רָם יִחְשַׁב לְאִישׁ הַהוּא רָם שָׁפֵךְ
וְגַדְלַת הָאִישׁ הַהוּא מִקְרָב עָפוֹ: ⁵ לְמַעַן
אֲשֶׁר יִבְיאוּ בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת־זְבּוּחָהֶם אֲשֶׁר
הֵם זְבּוּחִים עַל־פְּנֵי הַשְׁדָה וְהַבְּיאָם לְיְהוָה
אֶל־פְּתַח אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד אֶל־הַפְּהָנָה וְזֹבֵחַ
זְבּוּחַ שָׁלְמִים לְיְהוָה אֹוֹתָם: ⁶ וְזֹרֶק הַפְּהָנָה
אֶת־חֶדֶם עַל־מִזְבֵּחַ יְהוָה פָּתַח אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד

renewed state of purity. All assume some responsibility for tainting the shrine and the community, and they release themselves from the consequences through the chief priest's confessions and the symbolic rites of sacrifice.

Laws about Eating Meat (17:1–16)

According to Leviticus, one must acknowledge and sanctify at all occasions the life-giving force of blood through precise adherence to the laws of sacrifice and of eating meat.

EATING SACRIFICIAL MEAT (17:1–9)

This section opens the Holiness Code (Leviticus 17–26), a biblical source concerned with defining the proper conduct for all Israelites as a holy people. (See at 19:2.)

sacrifices which they have been making in the open. In terms of the history of religion, a timeline becomes evident. In an early period of Israelite religion, people slaughtered animals in the fields or at local religious sites as part of regional festivals where the offering and eating of meat had ritual significance. As the priests began to assert smoke as a pleasing odor to Yahweh; ⁷and that they may offer their sacrifices no more to the goat-demons after whom they stray. This shall be to them a law for all time, throughout the ages.

⁸Say to them further: If anyone of the house of Israel or of the strangers who reside among them offers a burnt offering or a sacrifice, ⁹and does not bring it to the entrance of the Tent of Meeting to offer it to Yahweh, that person shall be cut off from this people.

¹⁰And if anyone of the house of Israel or of the strangers who reside among them partakes of any blood, I will set My face against the person who partakes of the blood; I will cut that person off from among kin. ¹¹For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have assigned it to you for making expiation for your lives upon the altar; it is the blood, as life, that effects expiation. ¹²Therefore I say to the Israelite people: No person among you shall partake of blood, nor shall the stranger who resides among you partake of blood.

¹³And if any Israelite or any stranger who resides among them hunts down an animal or a bird that may be eaten, that person shall pour out its blood and cover it with earth. ¹⁴For the life of all flesh—its blood is its life. Therefore I say to the Israelite people: You shall not partake of the blood of any

וְהַקְרֵב הַחֶלֶב לְרִיחָה נִיחָח לִיהְוֹה: ⁷ וְלֹא־יַזְבְּחוּ עוֹל אֲתִזְבְּחִיהם לְשָׁעֵילִם אֲשֶׁר הֵם צְנִים אַחֲרֵיכֶם חֲקַת עוֹלָם תְּהִיא־זֶאת:
לָהֶם לִדְרֶתֶם:

⁸ וְאַלְהָם תָּאמֶר אִישׁ אִישׁ מִבֵּית יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיַּמְצֵא־הָגָר אֲשֶׁר־יִגְּנֹור בְּתוֹכָם אֲשֶׁר־יַעֲלֵה עַלָּה אֲזַבְּחָה: ⁹ וְאַל־פָּתַח אַهֲלָ מָזֵעַלָּא יִבְרִיאנוּ לְעַשׂוֹת אֲתָה לִיהְוֹה וְגַבְרַת הָאִישׁ הַהוּא מַעֲמִיקָה:

¹⁰ וְאִישׁ אִישׁ מִבֵּית יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיַּמְצֵא־הָגָר הַגָּן בְּתוֹכָם אֲשֶׁר יַאֲכֵל בְּלִקְדָּם וַיַּתְּחַנֵּן פָּנָי בְּגַפֵּשׁ הַאֲכָלָת אֲתִ-הָדָם וְהַכְּרָתִי אַתָּה מַקְרֵב עַמָּה: ¹¹ כִּי נֶפֶשׁ הַבָּשָׂר בְּדָם הוּא וְאַנְּיָ נִתְּתִּיו לִכְטֵם עַל־הַמִּזְבֵּחַ לְכַפֵּר עַל־נֶפֶשׁ תִּבְעַר כִּי־הָקָם הוּא בְּנֶפֶשׁ יַכְפֵּר: ¹² עַל־בָּן אָמְרָתִי לְבָנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּנֶפֶשׁ מִכֶּם לְאִתְאַכֵּל דָם וְתַגֵּר הָגָר בְּתוֹכָכֶם לְאִתְאַכֵּל דָם: ס

¹³ וְאִישׁ אִישׁ מִבֵּנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיַּמְצֵא־הָגָר בְּתוֹכָם אֲשֶׁר יַצֹּד צִדְחָה אֲוֹעֵז אֲשֶׁר יַאֲכֵל וּשְׁפֵל אֲתִ-דָמוֹ וּבְסָחוֹ בְּעֵפֶר: ¹⁴ כִּי נֶפֶשׁ בְּלִבְשָׂר דָמוֹ בְּנֶפֶשׁ הוּא וְאָמַר לְבָנִי

centralized power, they outlawed such offerings and mandated sacrifice officiated by a priest at a specific site. (Compare to Deuteronomy 12:20–25.)

7. the goat-demons after whom they stray. Eating, sex, and worship are interrelated aspects of life in the biblical imagination. In the ancient world, meals and feasts alike were dedicated to deities. Thus the book of Numbers recounts an episode when the Israelite men go astray in the wilderness by eating contraband food, having sex with Moabite women, and thus drawing close to the god Baal-peor (25:1–3). Likewise, according to the present verse, eating meat whose blood does not come into contact with the altar of Israel's God counts as an illicit tryst with goat-demons.

EATING NON-SACRIFICIAL MEAT (17:10–16)

II. For the life of the flesh is in the blood. The ingestion of blood crosses the boundary between life and death and thus mixes two discrete forces. When spilled, blood—the very force of life—represents death. Thus by consuming blood, a person eats death while also ingesting the life force of another being.

13. After hunting an animal or bird, a person flesh, for the life of all flesh is its blood. Anyone who partakes of it shall be cut off.

¹⁵ Any person, whether citizen or stranger, who eats what has died or has been torn by beasts shall wash those clothes, bathe in water, remain impure until evening—and shall then be pure. ¹⁶ But if the clothes are not washed and the body is not bathed, that person shall bear the guilt.

18 יהוה spoke to Moses, saying: ² Speak to the Israelite people and say to them:

I am your God. ³ You shall not copy the practices of the land of Egypt where you dwelt, or of the land of Canaan to which I am taking you;

ישָׁרֵל כְּם בֶּלְבָשָׂר לֹא תִּאכְלֹי כַּי נֶפֶשׁ
בֶּלְבָשָׂר דָמוֹ הוּא בֶלְאֲכָלוֹ יִכְרֹת:
¹⁵ וְכָל-נֶפֶשׁ אֲשֶׁר תִּאכְלֶנּוּ נְגַלֵּה וְטִרְפָּה
בָּאוֹרָח וְבָגָר וְכָבֵס בְּגַדְיוֹ וְרַחַץ בְּמַעַם
וְטָמֵא עֲדִ-דָּעֵב וְטָהָר: ¹⁶ וְאִם לֹא יִכְבְּשׁוּ
וּבְשֻׁרוּ לֹא יְרַחֵץ וְנִשְׁאָעָנוּ: פ

יח וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹמֶשֶׁ לְאֹמֵר: ² דַבָּר
אֶל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמְרָת אֶלָּהֶם
אָנָי יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיכֶם: ³ כְּמַעַשָּׂה אָרֶץ
מִצְרָיִם אֲשֶׁר יִשְׂבְּתִים-בָּה לֹא תַעֲשֶׂה
וְכְמַעַשָּׂה אָרֶץ-בְּנֵעַן אֲשֶׁר אָנָי מַבְיא
אֶתְכֶם שָׁמָה לֹא תַעֲשֶׂה וּבְחַקְתֵּיכֶם לֹא

must drain and bury the prey's blood before enjoying the yield.

15. Ingestion of the flesh of an animal found dead will render a person impure. Dissolving the impurity then requires the washing, bathing, and time restraints of the basic purification ritual.

Laws about Sexual Limits

(18:1–30)

The book of Leviticus maps an elaborate terrain of states and objects both pure and impure, placing clear borders between them. As leading scholars of Leviticus emphasize, the states of “ritually pure” or “ritually impure” are not moral categories, but rather indices of how close a particular body can draw to the spaces demarcated as repositories of the holy. As the holy is bounded and separated from the profane, so must the body adhere to boundaries when approaching the holy. Leviticus defines geography and physicality by corresponding conceptions of boundaries. As collective recognition of limits uphold sacred space, so individuals maintain the sanctity of the body by policing what goes into and comes out of it.

THE BASIC PRINCIPLE AND THE REASON: DON'T DO AS THE CANAANITES DO

(18:1–5)

The distinction that concerns the writers in Leviticus 18 is that of Israel versus other nations: the people of Israel are not to behave like Egyptians or Canaanites. Although the unit distinctly deals with prohibited sexual couplings, the issue here is one of geography and identity more than physicality. In this respect, the laws establish geographic and cultural borders between the people of Israel and the Egyptian empire, as well between Israel and the Canaanites among whom they live. Israel is different, according to Leviticus, in not allowing the perverse couplings permitted among the other peoples. This does not prove that the sexual practices forbidden to the Israelites were ones actually practiced by the Egyptians or Canaanites; rather, these laws help to produce the categories of Israel and Other. Geography is at stake because Israel's most powerful memory is the exodus from Egypt. As for Canaan, in addition to divine promise, Israel's land claim derives from the Canaanites' having made the land odious by their practice, which requires the redemptive purification of Israelite settlement. By nor shall you follow their laws. ⁴My rules alone shall you observe, and faithfully follow My laws: I am your God.

⁵You shall keep My laws and My rules, by the pursuit of which human beings shall live: I am יְהוָה.

⁶None of you men shall come near anyone of his own flesh to uncover nakedness: I am יְהוָה.

⁷Your father's nakedness, that is, the nakedness of your mother, you shall not uncover; she is your mother—you shall not uncover her nakedness.

תַּלְכֹּו: ⁴ אֶת־מִשְׁפָטֵי תַּעֲשֶׂו וְאֶת־חֲקָתֵי

תִּשְׁמְרוּ לְלַכְתָּ בְּהֶם אֲנִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם:

⁵ וְשִׁמְרָתֶם אֶת־חֲקָתֵי וְאֶת־מִשְׁפָטֵי אֲשֶׁר

יַעֲשֶׂה אַתֶּם הָאָדָם וְתַיִן בְּהֶם אֲנִי

יְהוָה: ס

⁶ אִישׁ אִישׁ אֶל־בֶּל־שָׁאֵר בְּשָׁרָו לֹא תִּקְרְבוּ

לְגָלוֹת עֲרוֹה אֲנִי יְהוָה: ס

⁷ עֲרוֹת אָבִיךְ וְעֲרוֹת אִמֶּךָ לֹא תִּגְלִיל אִמֶּךָ

הַוָּא לֹא תִּגְלַל עֲרוֹתָה: ס outlining the forbidden limits of Israelite sexuality, the priestly writers symbolically establish an ideal set of “geographic” borders that definitively separate Israel from other nations.

5. human beings shall live. The common thread through Leviticus 16–18 concerns how to live and stay alive alongside the powerful Presence of the Divine. The priests prescribe a lifestyle in which upholding distinctions maintains purity while ritual practice sheds impurity.

FORBIDDEN RELATIONS (18:6–23)

The sexual laws, addressed to men as normative, begin with the prohibition of incest and sexual relations among close kin relations. Anthropologists maintain that prohibitions to establish distinctions in the familial realm are the very basis of culture. The prohibitions against incest—an act that effaces the difference between family members—are consistent with the priestly agenda of maintaining categories. This section outlines who an Israelite man cannot have sexual relations with because they are too close, while at the same time it points out bodies that are forbidden because they are too far from being Israelite. The nuclear family, even step and half-members, is too close, while members of nations such as Egypt and Canaan are too far. Setting such internal and external borders carves out a sexual identity for Israel in the space between.

With the exception of the law forbidding coupling with animals (18:23), this litany of sexual laws does not address women. Rather than subjects, women are objects to be or not be “uncovered.” One wonders how the laws might be different had they been addressed to women and men as equal sexual partners and also what unwritten codes determined the sexual practices of Israelite women.

6. None of you men. The overriding principle is that no man should pursue intimate relations with his family members. The family is thus defined in relation to a virile man positioned at the center.

7. Your father's nakedness. The “uncovering” of nakedness refers to different types of sexual interactions. According to a story early in Genesis, Noah “exposed himself” in a drunken stupor after the Flood; his son Ham saw his “father’s nakedness” and related the observation to his brothers (Genesis 9:21–22). Noah cursed Ham’s Canaanite descendants as a result.

your mother. As in the commandment to honor one’s parents (Exodus 20:12; Deuteronomy 5:16), mother and father are grouped together in the law forbidding incest. A mother’s status is emphasized through repetition. The law prohibits the maternal body because it belongs to the father and because it is the site of birth. [It is noteworthy, however, that the mother’s nakedness is not explicitly tied to the father, unlike the case of the father’s wife (v. 8). —Ed.]

⁸Do not uncover the nakedness of your father's wife; it is the nakedness of your father.

⁹The nakedness of your sister—your father's daughter or your mother's, whether born into the household or outside—do not uncover their nakedness.

¹⁰The nakedness of your son's daughter, or of your daughter's daughter—do not uncover their nakedness; for their nakedness is yours.

¹¹The nakedness of your father's wife's daughter, who was born into your father's household—she is your sister; do not uncover her nakedness.

¹²Do not uncover the nakedness of your father's sister; she is your father's flesh.

¹³Do not uncover the nakedness of your mother's sister; for she is your mother's flesh.

¹⁴Do not uncover the nakedness of your father's brother: do not approach his wife; she is your aunt.

¹⁵Do not uncover the nakedness of your daughter-in-law: she is your son's wife; you shall not uncover her nakedness.

⁸עֲרוֹת אִשְׁתַּאֲבִיךְ לֹא תָגַלְהֵה עֲרוֹת אִבֵּיךְ הוּא: ס

⁹עֲרוֹת אֶחָותֶךָ בְּתִאֲבִיךְ אוֹ בְּתִאֱמֹר
מוֹלַדָּת בֵּית אָוּז מַולְדָּת חַוֵּץ לֹא תָגַלְהֵה עֲרוֹת: ס

¹⁰עֲרוֹת בְּתִבְנֶךָ אוֹ בְּתִבְתְּחֶךָ לֹא תָגַלְהֵה
עֲרוֹת כִּי עֲרוֹת הַנֶּה: ס

¹¹עֲרוֹת בְּתִאָשָׁת אִבֵּיךְ מוֹלַדָּת אִבֵּיךְ
אֶחָותֶךָ הוּא לֹא תָגַלְהֵה עֲרוֹתָה: ס

¹²עֲרוֹת אֶחָותַאֲבִיךְ לֹא תָגַלְהֵה שָׁאָר אִבֵּיךְ הוּא: ס

¹³עֲרוֹת אֶחָותַאֱמֹר לֹא תָגַלְהֵה כִּישָׁאָר אֱמֹר הוּא: ס

¹⁴עֲרוֹת אֶחָיַאֲבִיךְ לֹא תָגַלְהֵה אֶל-אָשָׁתָךְ
לֹא תִקְרַב דְּקַרְבָּךְ הוּא: ס

¹⁵עֲרוֹת פְּלַתְחָךְ לֹא תָגַלְהֵה אֶשְׁתַּבְנֶךָ
לֹא תָגַלְהֵה עֲרוֹתָה: ס

8. your father's wife. As noted earlier, in this section's litany of sexual laws, women are objects to be or not be “uncovered.” Here, the prohibition against intimacy with a stepmother follows that of parental incest because a stepmother is seen as an extension of the father. Marriage, in the biblical view, conjoins two bodies as one flesh (Genesis 2:24).

In contrast to the sexual prohibitions enumerated in Leviticus 20, here there are no attendant penalties for perpetrating such acts. In Leviticus 20:11 a man who lies with his father's wife is put to death along with the woman; here, it is simply forbidden. Reuben, who slept with his father's concubine, Bilhah, is cursed by Jacob on his deathbed (Genesis 49:4).

9. your sister. A polygamous family in antiquity likely hosted siblings close in age born to different mothers. The verse makes clear that a sister, even a half-sister or one raised elsewhere, is always off-limits. The destructive effects of sibling incest and rape emerge in full force in the story of Amnon's rape of his half-sister Tamar, both the offspring of King David (II Samuel 13).

10. your son's daughter. The palpable absence here is the prohibition of intercourse with one's own daughter. Although some scholars claim such a ban to be implicit, it is unsettling not to find it expressly stated. (See also Another View, p. 694.) The nakedness of grandchildren is classified as “your” nakedness, perhaps conveying the sense that they are a man's lineage and bearers of his name.

your daughter's daughter. [This phrase reminds us that in the Bible, patrilineal relationships are not the only ones that count. Here, close kinship is defined via a woman, namely, the man's daughter. On women and kinship, see further at Genesis 10:1. —Ed.]

15. your daughter-in-law. In Genesis 38, Judah transgresses this law by unknowingly having sex

¹⁶Do not uncover the nakedness of your brother's wife; it is the nakedness of your brother.

¹⁷Do not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter; nor shall you marry her son's daughter or her daughter's daughter and uncover her nakedness: they are kindred; it is depravity.

¹⁸Do not marry a woman as a rival to her sister and uncover her nakedness in the other's lifetime.

¹⁹Do not come near a woman during her menstrual period of impurity to uncover her nakedness.

²⁰Do not have carnal relations with your neighbor's wife and defile yourself with her.

²¹Do not allow any of your offspring to be offered up to Molech, and do not profane the name of your God: I am יהוה.

with his daughter-in-law, Tamar. Instead of punishment, Tamar's action results in the birth of twins who are part of the Davidic line. A fascinating tension that arises from the combination of law and narrative in the Tanach is that characters in the stories sometimes violate the dictates of the laws. Many commentators claim that the laws are later than the narratives and seek to clarify some of the ambiguously ethical decisions made by biblical characters. However, it is best to view the tension between law and narrative as that which arises between principles and their execution in family and social life.

16. your brother's wife. To a certain extent, this law contradicts the procedure of levirate marriage as stipulated in Deuteronomy 25:5–10.

17. a woman and her daughter. This prohibition alone emphasizes that it outlaws depraved actions. While having relations with a woman as well as with her daughter or granddaughter does not seem worse than the other forms of incest, perhaps the writers call it depravity since it injures two parties: the woman herself and her descendant.

18. According to Genesis, Jacob marries two sisters, Leah and Rachel, who at an early point in the narrative engage in a fierce rivalry (Genesis 29)—although Jacob does not knowingly marry Leah or ¹⁶עֲרֹות אֲשֶׁת-אָחִיך לֹא תַגְלֵה עֲרֹות אָחִיך הוּא: ס

¹⁷עֲרֹות אָשָׁה וּבָתָה לֹא תַגְלֵה אֶת-בָתָה
בָנָה וְאֶת-בָת-בָתָה לֹא תַקְה לְגָלוֹת
עֲרֹותה שָׁאָרָה הָנָה וּמָה הוּא:

¹⁸וְאָשָׁה אַל-אַחֲתָה לֹא תַקְח לְצָרָר
לְגָלוֹת עֲרֹותה עַלְיה בְּחִיָּה:

¹⁹וְאַל-אָשָׁה בְּנָדָת טָמָאתה לֹא תִקְרַב
לְגָלוֹת עֲרֹותה:

²⁰וְאַל-אָשָׁה עַמִּיתָךְ לֹא-תַתְנוּ שְׁכָבָתָה
לֹזֶר לְטָמָאתָה:

²¹וּמְזֻרָעָה לֹא-תַתְנוּ לְהַעֲבֵיר לְמֶלֶך וְלֹא תַחַל אֶת-שָׁם אַל-הָיָה אָנָי יְהֹוָה:

intend for her to be a rival to Rachel. On the tension between law and narrative, see at v. 15.

19. The topic shifts in this verse from incest to other kinds of forbidden sexual acts. In Leviticus, the body in its pure state is discrete and bounded, with no internal fluids seeping out. In the creation story of Genesis 1, God orders the primordial chaos into distinct categories with boundaries between the elements. The blending of categories on the cosmic or the human level is a movement out of order and into chaos—or, in other words, from life to death. The impure body has sores or oozes fluids that transgress physical boundaries (Leviticus 14–15). That which the body should contain flows out and mixes with the external world. Priestly authorities disqualify such a body from participation in ritual. This, as well as an interest that sex result in procreation, lies behind the interdiction against approaching a menstruating woman in order to “uncover her nakedness.” Sex with a menstruating woman becomes an increasingly grave transgression in the sequence of Leviticus: In 15:24 the man who thus has sex with a menstruating woman enters a parallel state of impurity that lasts for seven days; in our verse, such a mingling is expressly forbidden; and in 20:18, the offense is grounds enough for the expulsion of both partners.

²²Do not lie with a male as one lies with a woman; it is an abhorrence.

²³Do not have carnal relations with any beast and defile yourself thereby. Likewise for a woman: she shall not lend herself to a beast to mate with it; it is perversion.

²⁴Do not defile yourselves in any of those ways, for it is by such that the nations that I am casting out before you defiled themselves. ²⁵Thus the land

²²וְאַתִּזְכֶּר לֹא תַשְׁבֵּב מִשְׁכְּבִי אֲשָׁה תֹּעֲבָה הַוָּא :

²³וּבְכָל־בָּהָמָה לֹא־תִתְעַתֵּן שְׁכַבְתֶּךָ לְטָמֵא־בָּה וְאֲשָׁה לֹא־תִתְعַמֵּד לִפְנֵי בָּהָמָה לְרַבְעָה תָּבֵל הוּא :

²⁴אַל־תְּטַמֵּן אֶת־בָּנָיו בְּכָל־אֱלֹהִים כִּי בְּכָל־אֱלֹהִים נְטָמֵא הַגּוֹלִים אֲשֶׁר־אָנִי מְשֻׁלָּח מִפְנֵיכֶם וּמְתֻמֵּן הָאָרֶץ וְאֶפְקַד עֲונָה עֲלָיו וְתַקְאַת

22. In the early 21st century, this is one of the most misinterpreted, abused, and decontextualized verses in the Torah. This verse, ripped from its place in the system of levitical laws, is often mobilized to justify discriminatory legislation and behavior against homosexuals and their families. While the act of anal intercourse would present a problem to the person who organized his life according to the levitical laws, it has no place in judicial systems not governed by the total system of Leviticus—and does not cohere with contemporary sexual notions of mutual consent and sexual preference.

In Leviticus, the priestly writers want to prevent the mixture of different types of fluid, as well as uphold distinctions. In terms of blending fluids, anal intercourse is problematic for the same reason as is intercourse with a menstruating woman: semen, an agent of life, potentially mixes with feces, a substance that symbolizes decay and death. This is similar to the mixture of semen and menstrual blood that indicates the absence of conception. In addition, the priestly writers want to avoid the blending of gender categories, as evident in their choice of language. They do not command “do not lie with a male,” but rather “do not lie with a male as one lies with a woman.” The problem arises when someone treats a male body like a female one. Indeed, such distinctions between the male and the female body define women as those who are penetrated during sexual intercourse and dominated during social intercourse. While treating a man in this manner is odious behavior, it is construed as the natural way to engage women. (See also at 20:13.)

it is an abhorrence. That is, homosexual sex transgresses the boundary between male and female by penetrating the male body as one does the female body. The priestly writers speak of it as an act of mixture that confused categories in the same way that combining certain foods, seeds, or fabrics confuse categories (see 19:19).

23. Likewise for a woman. Where the previous verse speaks of lying with a woman, this verse speaks of a woman directly. Unlike the male subject addressed as “you,” the female subject appears in the third person. Curiously, the only law directed to women is that forbidding bestiality. Perhaps this expresses a chain of sexual command in the priestly imagination, in which a man always has power over a woman and a woman is only more powerful than animals. (In the more severe context of Leviticus 20, woman and man alike who have carnal relations with a beast are slated for death.) However, this law also places a woman in charge of her own sexuality. Rather than holding men responsible for women who engage in bestiality, this law depicts women as commanding their own sexual actions in this instance.

REASONS AND CONSEQUENCES: DON'T DO AS THE CANAANITES DID (18:24–30)

The writers justify Israelite penetration into the land because the other inhabitants have defiled it. The issue of which bodies can be penetrated (the topic of vv. 6–23) now finds its corollary in why became defiled; and I called it to account for its iniquity, and the land spewed out its inhabitants.²⁶ But you must keep My laws and My rules, and you must not do any of those abhorrent things, neither the citizen nor the stranger who resides among you;²⁷ for all those abhorrent things were done by the people who were in the land before you, and the land became defiled.²⁸ So let not the land spew you out for defiling it, as it spewed out the nation that came before you.²⁹ All who do any of those abhorrent things—such persons shall be cut off from their people.³⁰ You shall keep My charge not to engage in any of the abhorrent practices that were carried on before you, and you shall not defile yourselves through them: I יהוה am your God.

הָאָרֶץ אֲתִי־שְׁבַיָּה²⁶ וּשְׁמַרְתֶּם אֶתְכֶם אֶת־
חֲקֹתֵי וְאֶת־מְשֻׁפְטֵי וְלֹא תַעֲשُ מְכֻלָּל
הַתּוֹעֵבָת הָאֱלֹהָה הַזָּוָר וְהַגָּר הַגָּר
בְּתוֹכָכֶם:²⁷ כִּי אֲתִ-בְּלִ-הַתּוֹעֵבָת הָאָלָל
עָשָׂו אֲנָשִׁי־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר לְפָנֵיכֶם וְתַטְמָא
הָאָרֶץ:²⁸ וְלֹא־תַקְרִיא הָאָרֶץ אֶתְכֶם
בְּטַמְאָכָם אֶתְתֶּה כַּאֲשֶׁר קָאָה אֲתִ-הָגָוי
אֲשֶׁר לְפָנֵיכֶם:²⁹ כִּי בְּלִ-אֲשֶׁר יַעֲשֶׂה מְכֻלָּל
הַתּוֹעֵבָת הָאֱלֹהָה וְנִכְרְטוּ הַנִּפְשׁוֹת הַעֲשָׂת
מַקְרָב עַמָּם:³⁰ וּשְׁמַרְתֶּם אֶת־מְשֻׁרְתֵּי
לְבָלָתִי עֲשָׂות מְחֻקּוֹת הַתּוֹעֵבָת אֲשֶׁר
עָשָׂו לְפָנֵיכֶם וְלֹא תַטְמָאוּ בָּהֶם אַנְּיִ יהָנָה אֲלֹהֵיכֶם:³¹ פ

the Israelites must penetrate and conquer the land. The land appears as a kind of geographic female body that rejects the practitioners of impure acts by spewing them out.

28. So let not the land spew you out. Adherence to the laws is the safeguard against rejection by the land. While Israel elsewhere figures as the bride in its relationship to God (see, for example, Hosea 2), it figures here as the groom in its relationship to the land. If Israel contaminates the land with non-sanctioned mixtures and couplings, then she will throw him out as she has earlier partners.

—Rachel Havrelock

Another View

 LEVITICUS 18 LISTS twelve categories of females who are sexually off-limits to men, based on blood and marital connection. Strikingly, a man's natural daughter is absent from the list (and from the parallel list in Leviticus 20). Interpreters have approached this glaring omission in a variety of ways. For example:

1. Some readers argue that she is in fact included in the list. Leviticus 18:17 prohibits a man from sexual intercourse with a woman and her daughter; the rabbinic sages extended this to apply to all daughters. Others have argued that Leviticus 18:6, the introductory statement banning men from sexually approaching sh'er b'saro, one's own flesh, naturally implies daughters. This explanation is unsatisfactory because the other relations are enumerated; the author does not explicitly identify the daughter, as he does the sister.
2. Some argue that it was not necessary to write about the daughter, either because the taboo against father-daughter sexual contact was so ingrained in society that it did not need to be listed, or because fathers supposedly would never approach their daughters sexually. Some interpreters have suggested that a father would not have sex with his daughter because he would lose the ability to garner a generous bride-price for a non-virgin.

3. Finally, some argue that the Torah does not legislate what one does with one's personal property, and a daughter was considered the property of her father (until transferred to another man).

However, each of these attempts at explanation is problematic. The omission of the daughter is even

Our task today is to take seriously the daughter's absence from the list.

more troublesome when we note that Israel's neighbors did explicitly ban father-daughter sexual relations in their law collections; in fact, the Laws of Hammurabi (¶ 154) goes so far as to banish a man who lies with his daughter.

To this date, nobody has made a convincing argument to demonstrate that the daughter is implicitly included in the list. Our task today is to take her absence seriously. We know all too well the startling number of fathers who sexually abuse their daughters in our society. Even if we do not know the real situation for daughters in the biblical period, we must be sensitive to the current message that the daughter's omission may have for today's survivors and perpetrators.

—S. Tamar Kamionkowski

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

Thus only shall Aaron enter the Shrine (16:3). According to Midrash Vayikra Rabbah 21.11, the three animals sacrificed on the Day of Atonement together evoke the merits of the patriarchs who will intercede on Israel's behalf. Thus, the bull represents Abraham, who prepared a calf for his visitors (Genesis 18:7), while the ram stands for Isaac, in whose place a ram was sacrificed (22:13). The two goats recall Jacob, who deceived Isaac into giving him Esau's blessing with goat meat and skins (27:9–29). According to the Rabbis, the high priest also calls upon the merit of the matriarchs in 16:4, when he replaces his usual ornate vestments with four linen garments (tunic, breeches, sash, and turban), one for each Mother of Israel.

ACHAREI MOT

Aaron is... to make expiation for himself and for his household (16:6). According to rabbinic law, the high priest who officiates on the Day of Atonement must be married. The Hebrew word beito (“his household,” literally “his house”) is said to mean “his wife.” In Mishnah Yoma 1:1, Rabbi Yehudah suggests that a

The high priest's Yom Kippur garments evoke the merit of the four matriarchs.

“back-up” wife must be prepared for the high priest—lest something happen to the first and the priest be disqualified. Other Rabbis respond, however, “If so, there would be no end to the matter!” JT Yoma 1:1 and BT Yoma 13a–b (also Midrash Sifra, Acharei Mot 8.6), consider the possibility that the high priest is forbidden to have more than one wife, noting that the verse demands that he atone for his “house,” in the singular.

For the life of all flesh—its blood is its life (17:14). Discussing this verse, the 13th-century commentator Nachmanides notes that the relationship between life (nefesh) and blood (dam) is referred to three times in this unit. According to 17:11, the life is “in” the blood (ki nefesh habasar b'dam hi) while the beginning of 17:14 teaches that the blood is “in” the life (ki nefesh kol basar damo b'nafsho hu). Using the analogy of wine mixed with water, Nachmanides suggests that one can equally say that the water is “in” the wine or the wine is “in” the water. Thus, the end of v. 14 states that the life “is” the blood (ki nefesh kol-basar damo hu). Ultimately, he claims, the two are inseparable; one cannot be found without the other.

None of you men shall come near anyone of his own flesh to uncover nakedness (18:6). Translated hyperliterally, this verse reads, “A man, a man (ish ish), to any of his near flesh, you (plural) shall not come near (lo tikr'vu).” Although one might think that these incest prohibitions are directed only at men, the Sifra (Acharei Mot 13.1) explains that the verse applies to everyone: the repetition of “man” (ish) is said to include non-Jews, while the second-person plural (tikr'vu) includes women.

Do not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter; nor shall you marry her son's daughter or her daughter's daughter (18:17). Mishnah Sanhedrin 9:1 makes clear that although the Torah in this passage does not explicitly mention incestuous relations with a daughter or step-daughter, it prohibits such relations as well, and deems them punishable by death. The Talmud points to this verse as the source for these prohibitions (JT Sanhedrin 9:1, BT Sanhedrin 76a). The Rabbis understood this verse to prohibit a man from sexual relations with a woman when he is married to her daughter or to her mother (based on the parallel verse in Leviticus 20:14, which forbids a man from marrying a mother and daughter). Thus, a man’s sexual connection with his own daughter by his wife or with his wife’s daughter by another man also means that he has violated this prohibition. As for incest between a man and his daughter by a woman to whom he was not married, the Rabbis derived the prohibition by logical inference: since this verse (and similarly in v. 10) forbids relations with a granddaughter, then all the more so it must forbid relations with a daughter.

Do not marry a woman as a rival to her sister (18:18). In his commentary on this verse, Nachmanides observes that sisters should not be rivals since they are meant to love each other. In their interpretations, Rashi and Sforno both note that following his wife’s death, a husband may marry her surviving sister. According to BT P'sachim 119b, at the end of days God will reward the righteous with a great banquet. The patriarch Jacob will decline the honor of leading the blessings after the meal, because his marriages to Leah and Rachel violated this prohibition.

—Gail Labovitz

Contemporary Reflection

LEVITICUS 18 is one of two passages in the Torah (the other being Leviticus 20) that consists of sexual regulations meant to distinguish Israel from the surrounding nations and make it a holy people. Although the prohibitions in our passage have had a profound impact on Western sexual morality, its assumptions are remote from—and in some cases even abhorrent to—contemporary sensibilities.

First of all, Leviticus evaluates sexual behaviors not in terms of the emotional and relational dimensions of sexual experience that are so central to judgments about sexual morality today, but in terms of the categories of purity and pollution. The purpose of anti-pollution laws is to impose structure on the chaos of experience by ensuring that social and symbolic boundaries are respected and that things conform to their proper class. Leviticus 18 forbids a series of discrete behaviors that supposedly cause defilement and thus disrupt the social/religious world, but it offers no positive understanding of holy sexuality.

Second, if we look at the social order that the Levitical anti-pollution laws protect, it seems to consist of extended patriarchal families in which the honor and authority of male heads of household is the primary social value. Verses 7 and 8 do not forbid the father to sexually violate his child but rather forbid the son to violate the sexuality of his father by committing incestuous adultery with the father's wife. The verses instruct the less powerful party not to dishonor the powerful by treating the wife's sexuality simply as her husband's possession. Some of the incest prohibitions, such as the outlawing of marriage with two sisters (v. 18), work to the benefit of women, but it is not women's concerns and interests that animate the text. The striking absence of the most prevalent incest violation, namely that between father and daughter, makes clear that it is not the purpose of Leviticus in this case to protect the weak and defenseless.

Third, the marginalization of women within the social world presupposed by Leviticus 18 is underscored by the prohibition of sex with a menstruant in v. 19. On one level, this prohibition fits quite seamlessly into the purity-related concerns of Leviticus. The book earlier defines many bodily emissions as defiling, placing menstrual blood in a similar category with semen and other discharges from the penis, as well as nonmenstrual discharges from the vagina (Leviticus 15). On another level, however, the proscription of sex with a menstruating woman is part of a larger symbolic complex in which menstrual blood has particularly negative associations. The prophets liken adultery, idolatry, and murder to menstrual impurity (see Ezekiel 36:17, for example), while the book of Lamentations describes conquered Jerusalem as a menstruating woman whose “impurity clings to her skirts” (1:9).

A contemporary response to Leviticus 18 requires both criticism and transformation.

Fourth, the passage in Leviticus 18 most often cited today, namely the prohibition of male anal intercourse in v. 22, serves as a major justification for homophobia in current religious and political debates and also helps to maintain gender hierarchy. A man who penetrates another man “as one lies with a woman” is guilty of mixing or confusing kinds. He treats another man as one should treat only a woman, thereby moving a male body into the category of female. In the world of Leviticus, doing so both unmans the particular man who is the penetrated partner and threatens the notion of penetrative intercourse as a defining aspect of gender difference.

ACHAREI MOT

It seems then that, despite its attempts to promote holiness, Leviticus 18, far from fostering holiness in sexual relations, reflects and reinforces many of the structures of domination that support sexual and family violence. The passage contains important insights that contemporary Jews can affirm: we need some boundaries in sexual relationships; sexual behavior is not simply a private matter; individual behavior is connected with the ethical character of our social world. Leviticus 18 seeks to implement these ideas in its own time and place. But we need to find ways to express these insights in the context of an ethic of sexual holiness appropriate for the 21st century.

We can see Leviticus 18 not as a static document that we must either accept or reject but as a part of Jewish tradition that grapples problematically with ongoing human problems. If so, we can also use it as a starting point for raising hard questions about our own sexual values. What should be included on a list of forbidden and permitted relationships today? Are there certain “bottom lines” that we would want to be part of any statement of sexual norms? How do we balance the need to safeguard those with less power in sexual relationships with the desire to lay out a constructive vision of holy sexuality? How might we articulate a person-centered ethic that focuses on qualities of human connection rather than on the intrinsic nature of particular sexual behaviors? How do we ensure that our sexual values reflect fundamental ethical values such as honesty and justice that ought to guide all human interactions? What place do we give to feelings as a dimension of holy sex? How should pleasure figure into our ethic, for example? How do we attend to the social structures that undergird and make possible holy and sustainable relationships? What social rights and obligations might we see as fundamentally connected to the ability to create satisfying relationships?

A contemporary response to Leviticus 18, in other words, requires both criticism and transformation. It requires careful examination and rejection of those presuppositions of Leviticus that produce and support sexual injustice. But it also involves imagining an alternative ethic that brings in the concerns and questions of those whose perspectives are erased or marginalized by Leviticus itself—as well as by our culture today. Such a response seeks to create the foundation for a sexuality and sensuality that is life-giving for all.

—Judith Plaskow

Voices

from yom kippur

Alicia Suskin Ostriker

Leviticus 16

we destroy we break we are broken and this is the fast you have chosen on rosh hashanah it is written on yom kippur it is sealed who shall live and who shall die which goat will have his throat cut like an unlucky isaac spitting a red thread and which goat will be sent alive to the pit where the crazies are thread tied lightly around its neck who will possess diamonds and pearls and who will be killed

by an addicted lover

who shall voyage the web of the world like an eagle, and who shall curl to sleep over a steam grate like a worm who shall be photographed and whose face will disappear like smoke

this is the fast you have chosen, turn return how to turn like leaves like a page like a corner

what is our knowledge, what is our strength

In Everything

Lea Goldberg (transl. Rachel Tzvia Back)

Leviticus 16:1

In everything there is at least an eighth part that is death. Its weight is not great.
With what secret and carefree grace
we carry it everywhere we go.
On lovely awakenings, on journeys,
in lovers' words, in our distraction forgotten at the edges of our affairs it is always with us. Weighing hardly anything at all.

Yom Kippur Prayer

Shirley Blumberg

Leviticus 16

I tread gently on the alpine meadow, and the blue lake does not suffer from my presence.
Do I deal as gently with those I love and who love me?
I scorn those who leave rutted scars
on tender mountain earth.
Have I left scars on the souls of those who put their trust in me?
I hope not, oh how I hope not,
but what I meant to be justice may have been felt as harshness, and all my warm interest as unwelcome intrusion,
and my kind helpful guidance
as unpleasant nagging,
as perhaps it really was.

ACHAREI MOT

For the Sin . . .

Shirley Kaufman

Leviticus 16

Day of Atonement and the long walk at sundown to the Wall.
What the sun does to itself,
beating its chest all day,
is already forgotten,
and the goat has gone out of the Dung Gate with our sins.

The old man lifts his shofar toward the gates of heaven, blowing the notes to swing them wide
for the last time
before they are bolted for another year.

Now all our days are measured in the book against our repentance.

That's a small comfort.
A prayer is not a bird.

Elu

Linda Stern Zisquit

Leviticus 16

Welts across my chest are a sign. I who so wantonly clamored anarchic

against you, bare myself repentant, resplendent this time. Turning toward you and blemished in these days set aside for a body's climb.

Acharei Mot

Laurie Patton

Leviticus 16:21

Ish iti,
the rabbis say, is “outside of time,” walking with all our sins into a swathe
of beetles and branches—no past, no present, no future.

Are sins outside of time?
Consider the stain on my great-great-grandmother’s tablecloth.
It congealed in a moment.
I don’t know whose moment it was.

No one got divorced then.
Before the decree,
Mr. Grandmother was jailed for disorderly conduct.
She walked with a limp.

The stain I see every sweet Sabbath is the same as the sadness still falling from her picture,

like some stray warning light from the street that awakes us
from an uneasy dream.

NOTE

Ish iti. This obscure Hebrew phrase in 16:21 is translated in this commentary as “designated agent.” The word iti seems to be related to the word for “time.”

White Petticoats

Chana Bloch

Leviticus 18:6–22

If the egg had one spot of blood on it
the rabbis said, Throw it away!
As if they could legislate perfection.
Dress the bride in white petticoats! Let there be no stain on your ceremony! As if we could keep our lives from spilling onto our new clothes. That night we came home

strangers, too tired
for words,
fog in the high trees
and a trunk full of shiny boxes
we didn't unwrap.
There's a bravery

in being naked.
We left our clothes
on the doorknob, the floor, the bed, and a live moon opened its arms around the dark.

Annunciation

Karen Alkalay-Gut

Leviticus 18:6–22

Through the open window
the desert breeze pauses at naked bodies on the bed, promises
new beginnings.

Whatever In Me Is of Heaven

Deborah Ascarelli

Leviticus 18:6–22

Whatever in me is of heaven
Is born because from your blossoms
I collect the gentle honeydew
And I find delight and satisfaction
In feasting eagerly on your Ambrosia.
From you comes the sweet liquid
From you issues the true Love
And your thoughts and your words
Awaken the soul to the Creator of the Sun.

[When this old body]

Grace Paley

Leviticus 18:6–22

When this old body
finds that old body what a nice day it is when that old body loves this old body

it's dreamless to sleep and busy to wake up

when this old body says you're a little lumpy here and there but you're the same old body after all old body old body in which somewhere between crooked toe and forgetful head the flesh encounters soul and whispers you

קְדָשִׁים ◆ K'doshim

LEVITICUS 19:1–20:27

A Call to Holiness

PARASHAT K'DOSHIM ("holy") stands at the physical center of the Torah, coming roughly at the midway point between Genesis 1 and Deuteronomy 34. We move into this Torah portion on the heels of a series of sexual taboos (Leviticus 18), and we will end the parashah with a parallel list of taboos (Leviticus 20). Between these two sections, we encounter one of the most beautiful and inspiring passages in the Torah, Leviticus 19. This passage contains a series of seemingly disparate laws covering the gamut from ritual, criminal, and civil legislation to commandments addressing attitudes. The laws touch upon what people do in the privacy of their own homes, how they conduct their business, what they are thinking, and how they worship together. The modern distinctions between criminal, civil, and religious law have absolutely no application in this text.

The primary theme that emerges time and again in Leviticus 19 is the preservation of holiness. "You shall be holy, for I, your God יְהוָה, am holy." All the commandments are set within the context that God is holy and that we ought to strive toward holiness in every aspect of our lives.

Holiness here differs radically from what we have encountered in previous Torah texts. Leviticus 19 offers a fundamentally new vision of holiness, one that has the potential to bring women and other disenfranchised populations within Israel into the realm of holiness. No longer limited to the male, hereditary priesthood, parashat K'doshim democratizes access to and relationship with the Divine in a new way.

Within the particular laws of this parashah, women figure rather prominently as we hear about mothers, daughters, wives, and slaves. The tendency is to protect the rights of women in particularly vulnerable positions. We might wish for equality, and thus a complete dismantling of the practice of categorizing women only in relation to men in the biblical period. The Holiness Code (Leviticus 17–26) does not go that far; however, it is somewhat progressive given its ancient context.

This portion contains one of the Torah's most beautiful and inspiring passages.

—S. Tamar Kamionkowski

Outline—

I. A COMPENDIUM OF PATHS TO HOLINESS (19:1–37)

- A. The holiness formula (vv. 1–2)
- B. On parents and idols (vv. 3–4)
- C. Democratization of sacrifice (vv. 5–8)
- D. Rights of the poor (vv. 9–10)
- E. Theft, deceit and fair courts of law (vv. 11–16)
- F. Handling anger in action and thought (vv. 17–18)
- G. Maintaining distinct categories (v. 19)
- H. Ambiguous status of the slave woman (vv. 20–22)
- I. First fruits (vv. 23–25)
- J. What we do with our bodies (vv. 26–28)
- K. The sacred status of daughters (vv. 29–30)
- L. Consulting ghosts and spirits (v. 31)
- M. Respect for elders (v. 32)
- N. Care for the stranger (vv. 33–34)
- O. Fair commerce practices (vv. 35–36a)
- P. Conclusion (vv. 36b–37)

II. DANGER TO HOLINESS AND THE DYNAMICS OF HOLINESS (20:1–8)

- A. Desecrating God's name through Molech worship (vv. 1–5)
- B. Consulting ghosts and spirits (v. 6)
- C. The dynamics of holiness (vv. 7–8)

III. FAMILY AND SEX ETHICS (20:9–21)

IV. HOLINESS OF THE LAND (20:22–27)

19:1

יְהוָה

spoke to Moses, saying: ²Speak to the whole Israelite community and say to them:

You shall be holy, for I, your God, am holy.

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים לְאֹמֶר : ² דָבָר
אֲלֵיכֶם עַדְתְּ בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֶמְرָתְ אֱלֹהִים
קָדְשִׁים תִּהְיוּ כִּי קָדוֹשׁ אֲנִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיכֶם :

A Compendium of Paths to Holiness (19:1–37)

Within the framework of holiness, parashat K'doshim groups together laws that, in the main, appear elsewhere in the Torah. Why do the biblical writers repeat and enumerate these particular laws at this point in Leviticus? A number of Jewish biblical scholars recently have argued that these units were written by priests who were influenced by the work of the prophet Isaiah. If this is correct, then Leviticus 17–26 can be read as a response by reform-minded priests (a group of anonymous writers) to an earlier group of priests whose writings are preserved in Leviticus 1–16 and elsewhere in the Torah. (Modern critical scholars refer to Leviticus 17–26 as “H,” which stands for the Holiness Code, in contrast to “P,” which stands for the earlier priestly writings.) Parashat K'doshim expresses, clearly and beautifully, the theological position of these presumed religious reformers.

Parashat K'doshim begins with echoes of three of the Ten Commandments, in laws that address respect for one's parents, observance of Shabbat, and a prohibition against the worship of other gods. There may be further traces of the Decalogue elsewhere in this unit: the prohibition against murder has been likened to v. 16; the commandment against adultery, to v. 29; the law against stealing, to v. 11; the admonition against bearing false witness, to v. 11 or v. 16; and the commandment concerning coveting, to v. 18. But note a significant difference in the order of the commandments: the laws in this collection start with an emphasis on the relationships between human beings (in rabbinic parlance, bein adam lachavero), whereas the Decalogue begins with a focus on laws between people and God (bein adam lamakom). This arrangement suggests that Israel brings holiness into its communities with attention to the realm of everyday life, particularly the family.

THE HOLINESS FORMULA (19:1–2)

2. Speak to the whole Israelite community. The entire community is addressed, women and men.

You shall be holy, for I . . . am holy. The call to holiness and the identification of this deity as Israel's God frame Leviticus 19, and these elements are intended to impact our understanding of our obligations in following these laws. The term k'doshim (holy), although familiar, is a difficult term

- In parashat K'doshim, holiness comes from cultivating relationships.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 716

- Confrontation can clear up misunderstandings and obviate resentment or even hatred.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 716

- How do women experience holiness?

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 718

- When my father died, my mother would not permit others to take her daughters' place in saying the Kaddish.

VOICES ► 720

³You shall each revere your mother and your father, and keep My sabbaths: I יהוה am your God.

⁴Do not turn to idols or make molten gods for yourselves: I יהוה am your God.

⁵When you sacrifice an offering of well-being to יהוה, sacrifice it so that it may be accepted on your behalf. ⁶It shall be eaten on the day you sacrifice it,

³אִישׁ אָמוֹן וְאָבִיו תִּרְאֹו וְאַתְּ שְׁבַתְתֵּנִי תִּשְׁמַרְתָּנוּ אֱלֹהֶיךָ אֱלֹהִים וְאֱלֹהִי מִסְכָּה לְךָ

⁴אֱלֹהֶת פָּנֶינוּ אֱלֹהֶה אֱלֹילִים וְאֱלֹהִי מִסְכָּה לְךָ תִּעֲשֶׂו לְכֶם אֲנִי יהֹה אֱלֹהִיכֶם:

⁵וְכִי תִזְבְּחוּ וְבָכְחַ שְׁלֹמִים לִיהְוָה לְרָצְנָכֶם תִזְבְּחָהוּ: ⁶בַיּוֹם זְבָחָכֶם יַאֲכֵל וּמִמְחֻרָת to define. The basic word, in its varying formulations, appears fifty-nine times in the Holiness Code (Leviticus 17–26).

Our ancestors understood this notion of holiness in varying ways. The Holiness Code offers a distinct (and complex) understanding of holiness. In the book of Deuteronomy (see 7:6), all of Israel is considered holy by the fact of its covenantal relationship with God. Yet in most priestly writings (for example, in Leviticus 1–16), holiness is defined in cultic terms: the priestly writers ascribed holiness to God's sancta (the sanctuary and its contents), to time—namely, Shabbat and holy days—and to the priests from the family line of Aaron. The priestly writers viewed holiness as a primary attribute of God; they believed, however, that certain people, places, and times could share the condition or status of holiness. Israel is commanded to follow God's laws in order to maintain the boundaries between the holy and the not-holy, which thus assures God's presence (kavod) in the sanctuary. Whereas the notion of holiness in the earlier priestly writings is highly static, the Holiness Code offers a radically new view of holiness that is dynamic and constantly shifting according to our actions in the world. Holiness is also democratized; it extends beyond the priesthood and the sanctuary to the entire community and the whole Land of Israel. Anyone in Israel can strive toward the holy through right action.

ON PARENTS AND IDOLS (19:3–4)

These two verses together echo three of the Decalogue's precepts.

3. your mother and your father. In other biblical passages that mention both of these parental roles, the father is listed before the mother (for example, Exodus 20:12; 21:15, 17; Deuteronomy 5:16; 21:18; Proverbs 1:8; 20:20). The inverted order here gives special honor to the mother.

4. to idols or . . . molten gods. Both elilim ("idols") and elohei maseichah ("molten gods") refer specifically to tangible, human-made representations of gods.

DEMOCRATIZATION OF SACRIFICE (19:5–8)

Modern critical scholars believe that most of Leviticus 1–16 was originally intended as a priestly manual regarding procedures for communal sanctuaries. Leviticus 19:5–8 is an excerpt from that priestly manual, with modifications introduced for the laity. This passage conveys the message that holiness must attend to all aspects of life. By now applying the material that already appeared in Leviticus 7 to a wider audience, this writer communicates to the Israelites in general that they have a larger role in the complex system of sacrifice. They cannot rely completely on the priests but must themselves be invested in the rituals.

5. offering of well-being. Leviticus 7:11–21 breaks down the offering of well-being into different sub-categories. The Holiness Code writers are not concerned with expounding the details of each type of sacrifice. They are interested in the broad category of the well-being offering because it is the only holy object that a lay person may handle and even consume.

be accepted on your behalf. The writers of the Holiness Code added this phrase to the earlier for-or on the day following; but what is left by the third day must be consumed in fire.⁷ If it should be eaten on the third day, it is an offensive thing, it will not be acceptable.⁸ And one who eats of it shall bear the guilt for having profaned what is sacred to יהוה; that person shall be cut off from kin.

⁹When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field, or gather the gleanings of your harvest.¹⁰ You shall not pick your vineyard bare, or gather the fallen fruit of your vineyard; you shall leave them for the poor and the stranger: I יהוה am your God.

¹¹You shall not steal; you shall not deal deceit-mulation of the well-being offering, and they apparently did so for a specific theological purpose. By its form, the Hebrew word lirtzonchem is ambiguous; it means both “be sure that the offering is acceptable (to God) on your behalf” and “be sure that the sacrifice is offered by you willingly and with full heart.” The usage of the plural emphasizes that the writer addresses all Israel, not just the priests. This seemingly minor addition actually demands that the entire population become invested in what had become the domain of the priests alone.

8. that person shall be cut off from kin. This formulaic expression (which appears frequently in the Torah) probably indicates that the offender will suffer an untimely death, not excommunication (but see at 7:20).

RIGHTS OF THE POOR (19:9–10)

This section moves from ritual duty to the domain of economic justice. The writers of the text acknowledge the uneven distribution of wealth, and they put measures into place to ensure that these inequalities are addressed, even if only in some small measure. The rationale for the precepts is neither mercy nor pity, but rather duty and justice. Deuteronomy 24:19–20 adds to this teaching, emphasizing that whatever falls to the ground during the reaping season cannot be picked up again in a וְהַנּוֹתֶר עַד־יּוֹם הַשְׁלִישִׁי בְּאַשְׁר יִשְׁרָף:

⁷ וְאֵם הַאֲכֵל יִאֱכֵל בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁלִישִׁי פָגֹל
 הוּא לֹא יִרְאֶה: ⁸ וְאַבְלֵיו עָנוֹ יִשְׂא בַּיּ
 אֲתִיכְדָּש יְהוָה חֶלְל וְנִכְרַתָּה הַנֶּפֶש הַהּוּא
 מְעֻמִּיה:

⁹ וּבְקָצְרָכֶם אֲתִיכְזִיר אֶרְצְכֶם לֹא תִּכְלֶה:
 פָּאַת שְׂדֵךְ לְקַצֵּר וּלְקַטֵּן קַצְרָקְךָ לֹא תִּלְקַט:
¹⁰ וּכְרַמְךָ לֹא תִּעְזְלֵל וּפְרַט כְּרַמְךָ לֹא
 תִּלְקַט לְעֵנִי וּלְגַלְלֵת תִּعְזֹב אַתָּם אָנָי יְהוָה
 אֱלֹהֵיכֶם:

¹¹ לֹא תִּגְנְבֵו וְלֹא־תִּכְחַשׁו וְלֹא־תִּתְשְׁקַרְוּ

second sweep. The book of Ruth describes the practice mandated in our passage. In Ruth 2 we find an example of women participating in this program. Ruth stands behind the reapers as they cut and gather the sheaves. Whatever they do not grab by hand is left on the ground for Ruth and others to pick up. Ruth 2 also mentions that Boaz, the property owner, orders his workers not to touch Ruth.

10. pick... bare. Although the meaning of the Hebrew verb t'olel is not entirely clear, the sense is that some grapes were to be left on the vine, in parallel to leaving a furrow of the field for the poor to harvest. In both cases, the poor were to have the opportunity to pick what had been dropped or left by regular workers.

THEFT, DECEIT, AND FAIR COURTS OF LAW (19:11–16)

This collection of laws addresses potential opportunities for exploitation between neighbors and within courts of law. Justice is the central theme, whether the justice is to be carried out in courts of law or only in the eyes of God.

11. steal. Heb. ganav, a term that refers to kidnapping and not only to theft of property. There are only two cases in the Bible of women stealing: the matriarch Rachel stealing her father's t'rafim (the household religious figurines) when she leaves fully or falsely with one another. ¹²You shall not swear falsely by My name, profaning the name of your God: I am יהוה.

¹³You shall not defraud your fellow [Israelite]. You shall not commit robbery. The wages of a laborer shall not remain with you until morning.

¹⁴You shall not insult the deaf, or place a stumbling block before the blind. You shall fear your God: I am יהוה.

¹⁵You shall not render an unfair decision: do not favor the poor or show deference to the rich; judge your kin fairly. ¹⁶Do not deal basely with members of your people. Do not profit by the blood of your fellow [Israelite]: I am יהוה.

¹⁷You shall not hate your kinsfolk in your heart. Reprove your kin but incur no guilt on their ac-

אִישׁ בְּעַמִּיתוֹ: ¹² וְלֹא־תִשְׁבֹּעַ בְּשָׁמֵי לְשָׁקָר וְחַלְלָתֶת אֲתִ־שֵּׁם אֱלֹהִיךְ אָנִי יהֹה:

¹³ לֹא־תִּתְعַשֵּׂק אֲתִ־רְעָךְ וְלֹא תִגְזֹל לֹא־תִּלְזֹן פְּעֻלַּת שְׁכִיר אֲתֶךָ עַד־בָּקָר:

¹⁴ לֹא־תִּתְקַלֵּל חֶרֶשׁ וְלֹפֶנִי עֹור לֹא תִּמְכַשֵּׁל וְיַרְאָתָ מְאֹלָהִיךְ אָנִי יהֹה:

¹⁵ לֹא־תִּתְعַשֵּׂו עֹולֶ בְּמִשְׁפָט לֹא־תִּתְשְׁאַפְנֵי רָל וְלֹא תִּהְהַרְפֵּנִי גָּדוֹל בְּצָדָק תִּשְׁפַּט עַמִּיתֶךָ: ¹⁶ לֹא־תִּלְקַלֵּה רְכִילָ בְּעַמִּיק תִּעְמַד עַל־דִּם רְעֵךְ אָנִי יהֹה:

¹⁷ לֹא־תִּשְׁנַא אֲתִ־אֲחִיךְ בְּלִבְבָךְ הַוְכָחָת תַּזְכִּיחַ אֲתִ־עַמִּיתֶךָ וְלֹא־תִּתְשְׁאַעֲלֵיו חַטָּאת:

her father's household (see at Genesis 31:19), and the princess Jehoshabeath, who steals away the young prince Joash to protect him from a military coup and slaughter (II Chronicles 22:11; she is named Jehosheba in II Kings 11:2). In both cases, the act of theft is motivated by a desire to protect the continuity of the family line.

14. insult. Literally, “utter a curse.” Just as the blind cannot see a physical obstacle in their path, so the deaf cannot hear a curse and take precautions against it.

You shall fear your God. This phrase serves as a warning against haughtiness, reminding each individual that there is a force far beyond one’s understanding. Proper perspective helps persons to treat others with compassion.

16. basely. The corresponding Hebrew word is also associated with gossip, the misuse of speech. In this particular context, the Torah teaches that unfair accusations and rumors may have dire consequences. (Nowhere does the Bible explicitly associate women with gossip. It is only in rabbinic literature that gossip, l'shon hara, comes to be connected with women, through a midrash on Numbers 12 and Miriam.)

Do not profit by the blood of your fellow. Two other translations for this clause are “do not stand by idly” and “do not conspire against” your fellow.

HANDLING ANGER IN ACTION AND THOUGHT (19:17–18)

The commandments in these two verses are particularly striking insofar as they command what one ought to feel. These laws deal with intentions and emotions. The biblical writers make no distinction between those laws that other people could monitor and enforce, and those that only God could watch, so to speak.

17. hate. The corresponding Hebrew term denotes both an emotion and a cognitive state of being. Our ancestors recognized that it is difficult to separate one’s emotions from one’s attitudes and actions.

incur no guilt on their account. There are a multitude of interpretations for this clause. Some suggest that if you do not reprove the offending individuals, you become an accomplice in their wrongdoing. Others believe that if you do not face the source of your disquiet, it may grow into rage and possibly result in injury.

count. ¹⁸You shall not take vengeance or bear a grudge against members of your people. Love your fellow [Israelite] as yourself: I am יהוה.

¹⁹You shall observe My laws.

You shall not let your cattle mate with a different kind; you shall not sow your field with two kinds of seed; you shall not put on cloth from a mixture of two kinds of material.

²⁰If a man has carnal relations with a woman who is a slave and has been designated for another

¹⁸ לֹא־תִקְרַב וְלֹא־תִתְטַר אֶת־בָנֵי עַמֶךְ וְאֶחָבָת לְرַעָךְ כִּמְזָר אֲנִי יְהוָה:

¹⁹ אַתְּחַקְתִּי תִשְׁמַרְוֹ

בְּהַמְתָל לְאַתְרֵבֵע בְּלֹאִים שָׁרֵךְ לֹא־תִזְרֻע בְּלֹאִים וּבְגַד בְּלֹאִים שְׁעַטְנוֹ לֹא־יַעֲלֵה עַלְיוֹ:

²⁰ וְאִישׁ קִידְשֵׁב אֶת־אִשָּׁה שְׁכַבְתְּ־רֹעֶה הוּא שְׁפֵחָה נְחַרְפָת לְאִישׁ וְהַפְּדָה לֹא־

18. not take vengeance or bear a grudge. Taking vengeance means a deed, and bearing a grudge reflects thought. Again, deed and thought—act and intention—are interwoven.

Love your fellow. The verb for love, ahav, is here followed by the preposition using the letter lamed (“l” in English). This form is found in only four cases in the Bible; Abraham Malamat notes that in all four cases, there is an implication of action, not just feeling (“You Shall Love . . .,” 1990). See, for example, Leviticus 19:34, where Israelites are commanded to love the foreigner in their midst, which implies merciful and kind action.

MAINTAINING DISTINCT CATEGORIES (19:19)

This verse forbids the breeding or mixing of animals, seeds, or cloths of different species or categories (see also Deuteronomy 22:9–11). The rationale behind this prohibition is connected to the rationale behind the dietary laws (Leviticus 11, Deuteronomy 14), the law that forbids cross-dressing (Deuteronomy 22:5), and the law requiring that animals die for killing human beings (Exodus 21:29). Our ancestors believed that species and gender were set out at creation and were to be maintained as distinct categories. Genesis 1:20–30 describes the creation of trees according to their kind, and animals according to their place in the world; Genesis 1:27 states that God created human beings, male and female. Mary Douglas has shown that the dietary laws are an attempt to maintain these clear categories and differentiations. It is this kind of thinking, in sharp categories and distinctions, that leads to the banning of same-sex sexual relations in the Bible (see at Leviticus 20:13) and in other ancient texts—and that assigns different dress, behavior, and social roles for women and men.

19. mixture. Heb. shaatnez; the word’s precise meaning is unclear. It appears in the Bible only here and in Deuteronomy 22:11 (which clarifies that this term refers to a combination of wool and linen). Languages related to Hebrew seem to lack a similar word.

AMBIGUOUS STATUS OF THE SLAVE WOMAN (19:20–22)

The transition to this topic is rooted in the idea that it is problematic to mix categories. In this case, the “mixing” involves sexual relations, and the complication concerns a woman who is both a slave and an intended wife. The slave woman has been designated for a man (who is not her owner) when another man has sexual relations with her. This passage portrays the woman as an object: the man performs the sexual act upon her (on this idiom, see at Exodus 19:15); and the guilty party is the man who has offended both her current owner and God, to whom the offender must make amends through a ritual sacrifice. The fate of the woman is not the primary concern of the writers of this text. They do not address whether she is likely to remain a slave man, but has not been redeemed or given her freedom, there shall be an indemnity; they shall not, however, be put to death, since she has not been freed.²¹ But he must bring to the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, as his reparation offering to יהוה, a ram of reparation offering.²² With the ram of reparation offering the priest shall make expiation for him before יהוה for the sin that he committed; and the sin that he committed will be forgiven him.

²³ When you enter the land and plant any tree for food, you shall regard its fruit as forbidden. Three years it shall be forbidden for you, not to be or to become the wife of the prospective husband. (See also Exodus 21:7–11 for laws about women sold into slavery.)

20. has carnal relations. The verb shachav, “to lie down” or “to engage in sexual intercourse,” can take either the direct-object marker et or the preposition im (“with”). In this case, the writer has used the former. This grammatical form—in which the object is relatively passive—may be a linguistic convention, or it may be a clue to the priestly understanding of the relationship between the sexes in this case.

slave. In Leviticus 25, also part of the Holiness Code, the writers abolish slavery completely for all Israelites. This contradiction suggests that Leviticus 19 is a compilation of laws from various sources whose purpose was to express the specific concerns of this particular school of ancient Israel (see at 19:2). If the woman in this case had not been a slave, Deuteronomy 22:23–27 would have applied, prescribing the death penalty for the woman and man. But the woman here is in an ambiguous state, for she is both a slave woman and a nearly betrothed woman. As seen in v. 19, the Holiness Code writers are particularly interested in liminal states and concerned about confusion caused by overlapping categories.

indemnity. The corresponding Hebrew word appears only here in the Bible; others translate it as “inquisition.” The question is whether an investiga-

נִפְרַתָּה אֲוֹחֶפְשָׁה לֹא נְתַנְּלָה בְּקַרְתָּה
תְּהִיה לֹא יוּמְתָה פִּילָּא חֲפֵשָׁה: ²¹ וְהַבְיאָ
אֶת־אַשְׁמוֹ לִיהְוָה אֶל־פְּתַח אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד
אַיִל אַשְׁם: ²² וְכַפֵּר עַלְיוֹ הַכֹּהֵן בְּאַיִל
הָאָשָׂט לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה עַל־חַטָּאתוֹ אֲשֶׁר חָטָא
וְנִסְלַח לֹא מִתְחַטְּאָתוֹ אֲשֶׁר חָטָא: פ
²³ וְכִי־תַּבְאֵו אֶל־הָאָרֶץ וַיַּנְטַעַתָּם בְּלָעֵץ
מִאָכֵל וּרְלָתָם עַרְלָתוֹ אֲתִ־פְּרִיו שֶׁלֶש
שָׁנִים יְהֹוָה לְכֶם עַרְלִים לֹא יִאָכֵל:

tion to clarify her status is required or whether the offender is required simply to pay a fine to the man who owns the woman (either the current master or the future husband).

21. reparation offering. Since this illicit sexual act is not subject to the death penalty (v. 20), the offender must appease God through a sacrificial offering.

FIRST FRUITS (19:23–25)

The Holiness Code writers believed that the community of Israel maintains holiness not only by the way it treats its members and the sancta (the sacred things), but also by the way it cares for the fruit of the land. One was not to pick fruit from new fruit-bearing trees for three years. In the fourth year, Israelites would dedicate the first fruits to God.

23. you shall regard its fruit as forbidden. Literally, “you shall treat as foreskin its foreskin with its fruit.” As Jacob Milgrom has argued, the foreskin refers to the fruit while it is still in its bud; therefore the text commands the removal of the buds—with the incipient fruit inside—from juvenile trees during their first few years (Leviticus 17–22, 2000, p. 1679). Thus, the term arel (“foreskin” or “uncircumcised”) here has both a literal meaning (referring to the bud) and a metaphoric meaning (referring to its forbidden nature).

eaten.²⁴ In the fourth year all its fruit shall be set aside for jubilation before יהוה;²⁵ and only in the fifth year may you use its fruit—that its yield to you may be increased: I יהוה am your God.

²⁶You shall not eat anything with its blood. You shall not practice divination or soothsaying.²⁷ You [men] shall not round off the side-growth on your head, or destroy the side-growth of your beard.²⁸ You shall not make gashes in your flesh for the dead, or incise any marks on yourselves: I am יהוה.

²⁹Do not degrade your daughter and make her a harlot, lest the land fall into harlotry and the land be filled with depravity.³⁰ You shall keep My sabbaths and venerate My sanctuary: I am יהוה.

²⁴ וְבָשֵׂנָה הַרְבִּיעָת יְהוָה בֶּלְפָרִיו קָדֵשׁ הַלְוִלִּים לִיהוָה: ²⁵ וְבָשֵׂנָה הַחֲמִישָׁת תְּאַכְּלוּ אֶת־פָּרִיו לְהוֹסִיף לְכֶם תְּבוֹאָתוֹ:

אָנָּי יהוָה אֶלְהֵיכֶם:²⁶ לֹא תְּאַכְּלוּ עַל־הַדָּם לֹא תִּנְחַשׁוּ וְלֹא תִּעֲזַבְנָנוּ: ²⁷ לֹא תִּקְפֹּא פָּאַת רָאשְׂכֶם וְלֹא תִּשְׁחַת אֶת פָּאַת זָקָנֶךָ: ²⁸ וְשָׁרַט לְנֶפֶשׁ לֹא תְּתַנּוּ בְּבָשָׂרְכֶם וְכִתְבַּת קָעָקָעׁ לֹא תִּתְּנוּ בְּכֶם אָנָּי יהוָה:

²⁹ אַל־תְּחַלֵּל אֶת־בְּתָךְ לְהַזְונָתָה וְלֹא־תִּזְנַחַת הָאָרֶץ וְמַלְאָה הָאָרֶץ זָמָה: ³⁰ אֶת־שְׁבָתָתִי תִּשְׁמַרְוּ וְמִקְדְּשֵׁי תִּירְאֹו אָנָּי יהוָה:

24. set aside. Heb. kodesh; that is, the fruit is to be considered kadosh (holy). This designation is no coincidence; biblical literature commonly distinguishes between “the uncircumcised” (see at v. 23) as foreign to God and “the holy” as a part of God.

WHAT WE DO WITH OUR BODIES (19:26–28)

These prohibitions refer to practices that the writers associated with non-Israelite worship.

26. You shall not eat...blood. In Leviticus, meat may not be consumed until the blood has been drained and offered to God. The biblical writers understood blood as being the life-source of a being (as in 17:11; Deuteronomy 12:23).

27–28. These prohibitions refer to certain acts of mourning in the ancient Near East (see also at Deuteronomy 14:1–2). Mourning acts that the Bible considers appropriate include wearing sackcloth and ashes, and fasting.

28. incise any marks. The corresponding Hebrew term appears nowhere else and, in this context, is assumed to refer to tattoos.

THE SACRED STATUS OF DAUGHTERS (19:29–30)

These verses reflect one of the central themes in the Holiness Code as a whole: the Israelite role in the maintenance and expansion of holiness. On the surface, v. 29 simply seems to prohibit the use of daughters as prostitutes. The key word in this verse is “degrade,” which should be rendered more accurately as “desecrate.” The verb ch-l-l is a technical term in the Holiness Code indicating a decrease in the level of holiness. The use of this verb implies that the daughter is not only a member of society, but also bears the responsibility for aspects of holiness in the community. If a father puts his daughter in a position that diminishes her holiness, that action affects the entire land negatively. This point is made even more strongly by coupling this teaching with a reminder to observe Shabbat and to keep watch over God’s holy space. To some degree, the holiness of a daughter is akin to the holiness of the sanctuary.

³¹Do not turn to ghosts and do not inquire of familiar spirits, to be defiled by them: I יהוה am your God.

³²You shall rise before the aged and show deference to the old; you shall fear your God: I יהוה.

³³When strangers reside with you in your land, you shall not wrong them. ³⁴The strangers who reside with you shall be to you as your citizens; you shall love each one as yourself, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt: I יהוה am your God.

³⁵You shall not falsify measures of length, weight, or capacity. ³⁶You shall have an honest balance, honest weights, an honest eifah, and an honest bin.

I יהוה am your God who freed you from the ³¹אֲלֵתְפָנָנוּ אֲלֵהָאֶבֶת וְאֲלֵהִיְקָעַנִים

אֲלֵתְבָקָשׁוּ לְטַמֵּאָה בָּהֶם אֲנִי יְהֹוָה:
אֲלֵהִיכֶם:

³²מִפְנֵי שִׁיבָה תָּקֻום וְהַדְרָתָ פָנֵי זָכוֹן
וַיַּרְאֶת מְאֹלְהִיךְ אֲנִי יְהֹוָה: ס

³³וְכִירְגֹּר אֲתָךְ גָּר בָּאֲרָצָם לֹא תַזְנוֹ
אָתָּה: ³⁴בָּאוֹרָח מִכְטָם יְהֹוָה לְכָם הָגָר | הָגָר
אֲתָכֶם וְאֲהַבֶּת לֹא בָמֹזֵק בִּגְגָרִים הַיִתְּמַמֵּם
בָּאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם אֲנִי יְהֹוָה אֲלֵהִיכֶם:

³⁵לְאַתְעַשׂ עַל בְּמִשְׁפָט בְּמִקְדָּשׁ בְּמִשְׁקָל
וּבְמִשְׁוֹרָה: ³⁶מִازְנִי צְדָק אֲבֹנִירְצָדָק אִיפָת
צְדָק וְהַנִּין צְדָק יְהֹוָה לְכָם
אֲנִי יְהֹוָה אֲלֵהִיכֶם אֲשֶׁר־הָזָאתִי אֲתָכֶם

CONSULTING GHOSTS AND SPIRITS (19:31)

Some scholars argue that consulting ghosts and using divination was problematic because of their inherent magical tendencies, that is, the attempt to manipulate the divine realm. Others assert that there were bans on such practices because they were considered too pagan-like. These conclusions fail, however, given the use of Urim and Thummim by the biblical priests (see Exodus 28:30), for this was a pagan-like device that arguably manipulates the divine. Therefore, one might conclude that the prohibition was motivated in part by the desire to curtail women's access to the divine. (See further at 20:6.)

RESPECT FOR ELDERS (19:32)

The biblical tradition is consistent in its call for respect and care for the elderly.

CARE FOR THE STRANGER (19:33–34)

Every law collection in the Bible advocates care for the foreigner who resides in the land of Israel (for example, Exodus 22:20; 23:9; Deuteronomy 14:29; 24:14, 17). These admonitions frequently remind the reader that our ancestors were once strangers in the land of Egypt and that we should remember the vulnerability of the outsider. Elsewhere in the Bible, the stranger is mentioned alongside the widow and orphan.

33. strangers. The ger was the non-Israelite who lived either temporarily or long-term in the Land of Israel but did not belong to the ethnic (later political) body of Israel. [Because the ger's situation and responsibilities do not require that only a male could have such a status, the present translation construes the Hebrew term as gender inclusive and renders the Hebrew masculine form in the plural. —Ed.]

FAIR COMMERCE PRACTICES (19:35–36a)

The use of fair weights and measures is also discussed in Deuteronomy 25:13–16.

CONCLUSION (19:36b–37)

36. I יהוה am your God who freed you from the land of Egypt. The formula ani ("I יהוה" or "I am") which appears fifteen times in Leviticus 19, is an abbreviation for the full text that is now provided as a conclusion. This clause encourages the reader to remember that one must emulate

LEVITICUS 19:37–20:5

K'DOSHIM

land of Egypt.³⁷ You shall faithfully observe all My laws and all My rules: I am יהוה.

20 And spoke to Moses: ²Say further to the Israelite people:

Anyone among the Israelites, or among the strangers residing in Israel, who gives any offspring to Molech, shall be put to death; the people of the land shall pelt the person with stones.³ And I will set My face against that person, whom I will cut off from among the people for having given offspring to Molech and so defiled My sanctuary and profaned My holy name.⁴ And if the people of the land should shut their eyes to that person's giving offspring to Molech, and should not put the person to death,⁵ I Myself will set My face against that person's kin as well; and I will cut off from among מִארֶץ מִצְרָיִם: ³⁷ וְשִׁמְרַתֶּם אֶת־כָּל־חֲקֹתִי

וְאֶת־כָּל־מִשְׁפָטִי וְעַשֵּׂתֶם אַתֶּם אַנְּכִי יְהֹוָה: פ

כ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵי מֹשֶׁה לֵאמֹר: ² וְאֶל־
בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל תֹּאמֶר אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וּמִצְרָאֵר | הָגָר
בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר יַתֵּן מִזְרָעָו לְמִלְחָמָה מוֹת יוֹמָת
עִם הָאָרֶץ יַרְגַּמְהוּ בָּאָבִן: ³ וְאַנְּכִי אֶתְתִּן אֶת־
פְּנֵי בְּאִישׁ הַהוּא וְהַכְּרַתִּי אֹתוֹ מִקְרָב עַמּוֹ
כִּי מִזְרָעָו נָתַן לְמִלְחָמָה לְמַעַן טָמֵא אֶת־
מִקְדָּשִׁי וְלֹחֵל אֶת־שֵׁם קָדוֹשִׁי: ⁴ וְאֶת־
הָעָלָם יַעֲלִימָו עִם הָאָרֶץ אֶת־עִינֵיכֶם
מִן־הָאִישׁ הַהוּא בַּתְּחֻנוֹ מִזְרָעָו לְמִלְחָמָה
לְבָלְתִּי הַמִּיתָה אֹתוֹ: ⁵ וְשִׁמְמַתִּי אַנְּכִי אֶת־
פְּנֵי בְּאִישׁ הַהוּא וּבְמִשְׁפָחָתוֹ וְהַכְּרַתִּי אֹתוֹ

God and seek to become holy because God saved Israel in the past.

Danger to Holiness and the Dynamics of Holiness (20:1–8)

This unit warns against the practices that desecrate God's sanctity.

DESECRAZING GOD'S NAME THROUGH MOLECH WORSHIP (20:1–5)

The book of Kings mentions a practice wherein individuals (including kings) would sacrifice their children by putting them to the fire for the worship of Molech, the god of the Ammonites, who are Israel's neighbors to the east (I Kings 11:7; II Kings 23:10). Although some extra-biblical evidence suggests that such practices did take place, the biblical writers—as anti-pagan polemic—probably exaggerate their extent (see also Leviticus 18:21 and Jeremiah 7:31 on child sacrifice).

3. profaned My holy name. Traditional Jewish commentators have interpreted this phrase to mean that one can damage God's reputation among the nations of the world through wrong actions. The concept is still current today in describing public acts that can bring shame upon the people Israel and its God as acts of chillul haShem. However, in the context of the Holiness Code, the teaching is much more profound, for the message is that wrong human actions can actually have an impact upon that aspect of God known as shem, name. One can increase God's holiness through right actions, and one can diminish God's presence in the world through wrong actions. Holiness, being pliable and malleable (see 19:2), is the arena in which persons are in relationship with the Divine. God is affected by human actions—both the good and the bad. According to the Holiness Code, God does not remove the divine Presence (kavod) from Israel's midst, nor does God act out of great wrath. God may detach an individual from the covenantal promises ("I will set My face against X... whom I will cut off from among the people," 17:10; 20:3; 20:6); but more often, wrongdoing simply diminishes God's shem.

their people both that person and all who follow in going astray after Molech.⁶ And if any person turns to ghosts and familiar spirits and goes astray after them, I will set My face against that person, whom I will cut off from among the people.

⁷You shall sanctify yourselves and be holy, for I am your God. ⁸You shall faithfully observe My laws: I make you holy.

⁹If anyone insults either father or mother, that person shall be put to death; that person has insulted father and mother—and retains the blood-guilt.

¹⁰If a man commits adultery with another's wife

וְאַתָּה כָּל־הָזֶנים אֲחֶרְיוֹ לִזְנוֹת אֶחָרֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ מִקְרָב עַמָּם: ⁶ וְהַנֶּפֶשׁ אֲשֶׁר תִּפְנַה אֶל־הָאֱבֹת וְאֶל־הַיְדָעָנִים לִזְנוֹת אֶחָרֵיהֶם וְנִתְתַּתִּי אֶת־פָּנַי בְּנֶפֶשׁ הַהְוָא וְהַכְּרַתִּי אֶתְךָ מִקְרָב עַמָּו: ⁷ וְהַתְּקִדְשָׂתֶם וְהִיִּתֶם קְדָשִׁים כִּי אֲנִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיכֶם: ⁸ וְשִׁמְרָתֶם אֶת־חֲקֻמָּתִי וְשִׁלְחוּתֶם אֶתְכֶם אֲנִי יְהוָה מֶקְדְּשָׁכֶם: ⁹ בַּיּוֹם אֲשֶׁר יָקַל אֶת־אָבִיו וְאֶת־אָמוֹן מוֹת יוּמַת אָבִיו וְאָמוֹן קָלְל דָמָיו בָּו: ¹⁰ וְאֶישׁ אֲשֶׁר יִגְאַל אֶת־אָשָׁת אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר

CONSULTING GHOSTS AND SPIRITS (20:6)

The ban on practicing necromancy and certain types of divination appears three times in this parashah (19:31; here; and 20:27). With every prohibition against divination, the punishment becomes more severe, moving from impurity, to being cut off from one's people, to the death penalty. See also at 19:31, 20:27, and Exodus 22:17.

THE DYNAMICS OF HOLINESS (20:7–8)

These two verses express the heart of the Holiness Code. The ultimate goal is for the community to sanctify itself by observing the precepts outlined in the Code and to strive for holiness at all times. The reason behind this goal is that God is holy and that the proper medium for a connection between God and Israel is holy action. Through proper action, the people come closer to God, and God reaches out toward the community.

Family and Sex Ethics (20:9–21)

This unit closely parallels the material found in Leviticus 18. Both units list incest taboos, laws against male anal penetration, and prohibitions against adultery, bestiality, and Molech worship. The present unit adds prohibitions against cursing parents and the use of seers. Leviticus 20 organizes these laws by the severity of the punishment, whereas Leviticus 18 orders its material according to family relationships. The wording of some of the specific laws differs, but the basic sense of the prohibitions is similar in the two units.

9. This verse introduces the new unit on sexual taboos; see further at Leviticus 18. Illicit sexual relationships, especially incest, are understood to be destructive to the family and clan.

shall be put to death. Heb. mot yumat, the technical term for the death penalty as prescribed by a court of law. In most cases within Torah, capital punishment was to be carried out by stoning.

10. The parallel passage in Leviticus 18:20 indicates that when a man has sexual relations with his neighbor's wife, it makes both parties impure. In contrast, this verse and Deuteronomy 22:22 specify that both the man and the woman are to be put to death. These passages focus on the man as the subject and provide no information about the woman's complicity in the illicit sexual act. Some have argued that killing the woman makes the woman accountable for her own actions and therefore grants her a level of personhood that is absent from the text in Leviticus. It is also possible that the —committing adultery with the wife of his fellow [Israelite]—the adulterer and the adulteress shall be put to death.¹¹ If a man lies with his father's wife, it is the nakedness of his father that he has uncovered; the two shall be put to death—and they retain the bloodguilt.¹² If a man lies with his daughter-in-law, both of them shall be put to death; they have committed incest—and they retain the bloodguilt.¹³ If a man lies with a male as one lies with a woman, the two of them have done an abhorrent thing; they shall be put to death—and they retain the bloodguilt.¹⁴ If a man marries a woman and her mother, it is depravity; both he and they shall be put to the fire, that there be no depravity among you.¹⁵ If a man has carnal relations with a beast, he shall be put to death; and you shall kill the beast.¹⁶ If a woman approaches any beast to mate with it, you shall kill the woman and the beast; they shall be put to death—and they retain the bloodguilt.

¹⁷If a man marries his sister, the daughter of either his father or his mother, so that he sees her nakedness and she sees his nakedness, it is a disgrace; they shall be excommunicated in the sight of their kinsfolk. He has uncovered the nakedness of his sister, he shall bear the guilt.¹⁸ If a man lies with a woman during her menstrual condition and un-woman is to be put to death to avoid paternity confusion.

If a man commits adultery. Adultery in the Bible pertains to a sex act between a man and a married or betrothed woman; sex between a married man and a woman not designated to another man is not considered adultery.

12. If a man lies with his daughter-in-law.

Both here and in Leviticus 18, there is no prohibition against a man having sexual relations with his own blood daughter, which is highly problematic. See Acharei Mot, Another View, p. 694.

13. If a man lies with a male. Penile penetration with emission of semen defines the sexual act, so it is not surprising that there is no prohibition

יְנַאָּפֶת אֲתִ-אָשָׁת רְעֵהוּ מוֹתִיּוֹמָת הַנְּאָפֶת וְהַנְּאָפֶת: ¹¹ וְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁבֶּב אֲתִ-אָשָׁת אָבִיו עֲרוֹתָא אֲבִיו גָּלָה מוֹתִיּוֹמָתוֹ שְׁנֵיהֶם דְּמִיָּהָם בָּם: ¹² וְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁבֶּב אֲתִ-כְּלָתוֹ מוֹת יוֹמְתָו שְׁנֵיהֶם תְּבֵל עַשְׂוֹ דְּמִיָּהָם בָּם: ¹³ וְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁבֶּב אֲתִ-זָּכָר מְשֻׁבְּכִי אֲשֶׁה תֹּועֶבֶת עַשְׂוֹ שְׁנֵיהֶם מוֹת יוֹמְתָו דְּמִיָּהָם בָּם: ¹⁴ וְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יִקְחֶה אֲתִ-אָשָׁה וְאֲתִ-אָמָה זָמָה הַוָּא בְּאָשָׁה יִשְׁרָפֵן אָתָן וְאָתָה וְלְאַתְּהָיָה זָמָה בְּתֻוכָּם: ¹⁵ וְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יִתְּן שְׁכְבָתוֹ בְּבָהָמָה מוֹת יוֹמָת וְאֲתִ-הַבָּהָמָה תִּהְרֹגֵנוּ: ¹⁶ וְאֲשֶׁה אֲשֶׁר תִּקְרַב אֶל-כָּל-בָּהָמָה לְרַבָּעָה אָתָה וְהַרְגַּת אֲתִ-הָאָשָׁה וְאָתָה הַבָּהָמָה מוֹת יוֹמְתָו דְּמִיָּהָם בָּם: ¹⁷ וְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר-יִקְחֶה אֲתִ-אָחָתָו בְּתִ-אָבִיו אוֹ בְּתִ-אָמָנוֹ וּרְאָה אֲתִ-עֲרוֹתָה וְהַיְאָתְרָה אֲתִ-עֲרוֹתָו חֶסֶד הַוָּא וְנִכְרְתָו לְעַיְנִי בְּנֵי עַמּוֹ שְׁרֹות אֲחָתָנוֹ גָּלָה עָנוֹ יִשָּׁא: ¹⁸ וְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר-יִשְׁבֶּב אֲתִ-אָשָׁה גָּזָה וְגָלָה אָתָה

against female-with-female sex acts. What we today might define as sexual or erotic activity between two women was not a category of thought in the biblical mind-set. The “problem” with male-with-male sex acts apparently was that it put one man in the receptive position, thus emasculating him and confusing sex roles (see at 19:19 regarding the importance of maintaining category distinctions). (See also at 18:22.)

16. If a woman approaches any beast. This is the only verse in the unit in which the woman is the subject and agent of the action.

18. menstrual condition. Heb. davah, a relatively rare term that elsewhere conveys a sense of physical and emotional vulnerability (see also at covers her nakedness, he has laid bare her flow and she has exposed her blood flow; both of them shall be cut off from among their people.¹⁹ You [males] shall not uncover the nakedness of your mother's sister or of your father's sister, for that is laying bare one's own flesh; they shall bear their guilt.²⁰ If a man lies with his uncle's wife, it is his uncle's nakedness that he has uncovered. They shall bear their guilt: they shall die childless.²¹ If a man marries the wife of his brother, it is indecency. It is the nakedness of his brother that he has uncovered; they shall remain childless.

²²You shall faithfully observe all My laws and all My regulations, lest the land to which I bring you to settle in spew you out.²³ You shall not follow the practices of the nation that I am driving out before you. For it is because they did all these things that I abhorred them²⁴ and said to you: You shall possess their land, for I will give it to you to possess, a land flowing with milk and honey. I יהוה am your God who has set you apart from other peoples.²⁵ So you shall set apart the pure beast from the impure, the impure bird from the pure. You shall not draw abomination upon yourselves through beast or bird or anything with which the ground is alive, which I have set apart for you to treat as impure.²⁶ You shall

עֲרָוֹתֶת אֶת-מִקְרָה הַעֲרָה וְהַוָּא גָּלְתָה
אֶת-מִקְרָה דְמִיחָה וְגִכְרָתוֹ שְׁנֵיהֶם מִקְרָב
עַמִּים : ¹⁹ וְעַרְוָת אֲחֹות אַפְּנָה וְאֲחֹות אֲבָיךְ
לֹא תְגַלֵּה כִּי אֶת-שְׂאָרוֹ הַעֲרָה עֲוֹנָם
יִשְׁאוּ: ²⁰ וְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁבֶּל אֶת-זְדֹתָו
עֲרָוֹת דָּזָן גָּלָה חֲטָאת יִשְׁאוּ עָרִירִים
יִמְתֹּהוּ: ²¹ וְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יִקְחֶה אֶת-אֲשֶׁת אֲחִיו
נֶהָה הָוָה עֲרָוֹת אֲחִיו גָּלָה עָרִירִים יִהְיוּ:
²² וְשִׁמְרָתָם אֶת-בְּלִחְקָתִי וְאֶת-בְּלִ
מִשְׁפְּטִי וְעַשְׂיוֹתָם אֶתְכֶם וְלֹא-תְקַיֵּא אֶתְכֶם
הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אָנָי מִבֵּיא אֶתְכֶם שָׁמָה
לְשִׁבְתָה בָהּ: ²³ וְלֹא תַלְכֹו בְּחֻקֹת הָגָוי
אֲשֶׁר-אָנָי מְשַׁלֵּח מִפְנִיכֶם כִּי אֶת-בְּלִ
אַלְהָה עָשָׂו וְאַקְצֹז בָם : ²⁴ וְאָמַר לְכֶם אֶתְכֶם
תִּרְשֹׁו אֶתְהָ אָרֶץ זֹבֵת חַלְבָן וְדַבֵּשׁ אָנָי
לְרֹשֶׁת אֶתְהָ אָרֶץ זֹבֵת חַלְבָן לְכֶם
יְהָוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר-הַבָּלָתִי אֶתְכֶם
מִן-הָעָםִים : ²⁵ וְהַבְּדַלְתֶם בֵּין-הַבָּהָמָה
הַטְּהוֹרָה לְטָמָא וּבֵין-הָעוֹף הַטָּמֵא לְטוֹהָר
וְלֹא-תְשַׁקְעֵו אֶת-נְפָשָׁתְיכֶם בְּבָהָמָה וּבְעוֹף
וּבְכָל אֲשֶׁר תָרְמֶשׁ הָאָדָמָה אֲשֶׁר-הַבָּלָתִי
לְכֶם לְטָמָא: ²⁶ וְהִיִּתְם לֹא קָדְשִׁים כִּי

12:2 and 15:33). Possibly the primary concern behind this verse's prohibition is not sexual intercourse with a menstruant (since it does not say niddah, “menstruant”), but sexual intercourse with a woman who is not well. This may include a woman's discomfort during menstruation and other conditions in which there is a genital flow due to illness. Leviticus 15:24 establishes a period of seven days of impurity for a man who lies with a menstruant. Our passage prescribes kareit, a cutting off from the community—either as an untimely death or some other form of exclusion (see at 7:20). Leviticus 15 is concerned with impurities and their contagion, while the present unit attempts to curtail certain sexual acts. In other words, the same act is viewed differently through two different social (or theological) lenses.

Holiness of the Land (20:22–27)

The parashah concludes with a theme that appears many times in the Torah: inheritance of the land. However, this passage offers an interesting and unique angle on the divine promise: if the people fail to observe the teachings of God, the land itself will spew them out. For the Holiness Code writers, the entire Land of Israel is God's holy sancbe holy to Me, for I יהוה am holy, and I have set you apart from other peoples to be Mine.

²⁷A man or a woman who has a ghost or a familiar spirit shall be put to death; they shall be pelted with stones—and they shall retain the bloodguilt.

קדוש אני יהוה ואבדל אתכם מזיהעמים
להיות לי:
וְאִישׁ אָוֶן־אֲשָׁה כִּי־יַחֲרֵה בָּהּ אֹוב אָוֶן
יַדְעֵנִי מוות יוּמָתוּ בָּאָבִן יַרְגְּמוּ אֹתָם דְּמִיקָּם בָּם: ב

tuary. As such, all of the people throughout the land must maintain holiness and purity in order to allow for the holy community and the holy land to co-exist.

²⁷The placement of this rule here appears to connect necromancy with the holiness of the land.

a man or a woman. In contrast to the Covenant Collection in Exodus (parashat Mishpatim), the Holiness Code rarely includes women explicitly. Such mention here suggests that one of the priestly writers' concerns is with women's accessing the divine realm. I Samuel 28 tells the story of King

Saul's consultation with the woman of En-dor, who provides him with access to the ghost of the prophet Samuel. The woman fears for her life because she knows that necromancy is banned, yet Saul has recognized that some Israelites must nevertheless be practicing it and that he needs the woman's assistance. In a world in which only men could enter into the priesthood and in which men dominated the prophetic guilds, it is likely that women used other forms of divination to access the divine realm. (See also at 19:31 and 20:6.)

—S. Tamar Kamionkowski

Another View

PARASHAT K'DOSHIM ARTICULATES more comprehensively than any other portion of the Torah what it means for persons and community to be holy. Dictionary definitions of the Bible's concept of holiness emphasize the notion of separation. In parashat K'doshim, however, holiness comes from cultivating relationships. Connections—not only separations—define the holy community: the connection to parents whom one must honor, to the poor and the disadvantaged whom one must protect, to the neighbor and stranger whom one must love, and of course to God.

God commands Israel to “love” three times in the Torah. One case is in the text that follows the Sh'ma (“You shall love your God ייְהוָה with all your heart,” Deuteronomy 6:5), known as the V'ahavta. Our parashah mentions the other two commands: to love the one who is a member of one's group (“Love your fellow [Israelite] as yourself,” 19:18); and finally, to love the stranger (19:34). Loving the stranger is a unique notion in the ancient world. The verse's rationale for loving the stranger—“for you were strangers in the land of Egypt”—has continuing ramifications that are often overlooked: the proper response to having suffered abuse is not vengeance or special entitlement, but rather sensitivity and determination to prevent such an abuse of others, including strangers. The three commandments are three dimensions of a single, deep connection: to love God is to love others, those like us and those who are not.

Ruth the Moabit stands as the exemplar of what it means to love, including loving the stranger. While still in the land of Moab, Ruth vows an undying loyalty to Naomi, Naomi's people, and Naomi's God (Ruth 1:16–17). After she arrives in Bethlehem, Ruth's behavior and commitment become a model for others: Boaz acknowledges that his kindness to Ruth is prompted by her prior generosity to Naomi (2:11); and the women of the town proclaim that Naomi's eventual reversal of fortune came about because of “your daughter-in-law, who loves you” (4:15). Even without using the word kadosh (“holy”), the story of Ruth points to the transformation that the “love commandments” in this parashah can bring about—and to the ways that these precepts serve to sanctify life and community.

Ruth the Moabit stands as the exemplar of what it means to love.

—Tamara Cohn Eskenazi

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

You shall be holy (19:1). Commentators have been challenged by the interweaving of ritual and civil commandments in parashat K'doshim. Observing that both Leviticus 18 and 20 list prohibited sexual partners, Rashi suggests that 19:1 teaches that separating ourselves from forbidden sexual relations and transgressions is the path to holiness, “for every place (in the Torah) you find instruction to fence yourself in against such relations, you also find mention of holiness.” Nachmanides views this verse as commanding moderation in satisfying physical urges such as eating, drinking, and sexual relations.

Do not deal basely with members of your people

K'DOSHIM

(19:16). The Rabbis identify these words as the source for the prohibition against l'shon hara (evil speech or gossip). Even if what we are saying is true, if it is negative and the person is not present to defend herself, it is prohibited (Maimonides, Mishneh Torah, Hilchot De'ot 7.2). The Talmud teaches that l'shon hara kills three parties: the person speaking, the person listening, and the person against whom the comment is being made (BT Arachin 15b–16a).

Reprove your kin... incur no guilt on their account (19:17). The double verb in the command hochei-ach tochi-ach (whose plain sense is: “you shall [surely] reprove”) has inspired much commentary. According to BT Arachin 16b, the first part of this verse teaches that when someone has done something offensive, confrontation is essential. While many people might hesitate out of fear of stirring up conflict and resentment, Midrash B'reishit Rabbah 54.3 urges confrontation as a way to improve understanding and increase caring. BT Arachin 16b also suggests that the command to rebuke is doubled in order to teach us that when we do confront the offending individuals, if they do not correct their behavior we must go back and confront them again. But—the Talmud continues—we must not embarrass such persons, making sure that we “incur no guilt on their account.” Rashi advises that we avoid causing embarrassment by making sure not to confront others in public.

Confrontation can be a way to improve understanding and increase caring.

In BT Bava M'tzia 31a, Rava teaches that the Torah’s double verb in the command means that we must rebuke even an authority figure, such as a teacher, parent, or employer. Ibn Ezra comments that confrontation can clear up misunderstandings and obviate resentment or even hatred. BT Shabbat 54b insists that we speak out to prevent wrongdoing; failing to do so leaves us partly responsible for injustice, whether in our family, our community, or even the world at large. Our sources are divided on what to do about the person who will not listen. BT Shabbat 55a suggests that only God really knows how a person will respond, and so we are always obligated to confront the person who is doing something wrong.

Love your fellow [Israelite] as yourself (19:18). Rabbi Akiba said that this is the most important teaching in the Torah. For Ibn Ezra, this verse teaches us to treat others the way we want to be treated (so also Midrash Sifra, K'doshim 2.4). Other rabbis suggest we should express this love by being a good friend and neighbor, and by accepting the rebuke of others in a loving way.

If a man lies with a male as one lies with a woman ... they retain the bloodguilt (20:13). While Rashi and others understood this verse as specifically prohibiting anal intercourse, BT Sanhedrin 54a–b saw it (along with 18:22) as prohibiting male homosexual acts in general. While Rabbi Judah forbade two bachelors to sleep under the same blanket, a majority of the Rabbis of the Talmud permit it (BT Kiddushin 82a). Maimonides agreed, stating that “Jews are not suspected of engaging in homosexual relations” (Mishneh Torah, Laws of Forbidden Intercourse 22.2). This disagreement persists in later codes, with some, like the Shulchan Aruch, counseling against two men sleeping under the same blanket.

The Rabbis limited their reading of this verse to male homosexual acts, noting that the Torah nowhere explicitly prohibits sex between two women. However, in BT Y'vemot 76a, Rav Huna argued that women who engage in lesbian sex cannot marry priests. Rabbi Eliezer urged leniency, on the grounds that sex between women does not involve penetration and therefore is “mere indecency.” Sifra, Acharei Mot 9.8, prohibits marriage between women as something done by the Egyptians that, based on Leviticus 18:3, we must not imitate. Maimonides combined these two teachings in his Mishneh Torah (Laws of Forbidden Intercourse 21.8), noting that sexual relations between women are prohibited because they are among the “ways of the Egyptians,” but that such acts are not punished with stoning or even lashes, as there is no act of penetration and the women violate no explicit biblical prohibition. A woman who has engaged in lesbian sex would be permitted to marry or stay married, even to a priest. Still, Maimonides says that such a woman should be punished with lashes for breaking a rabbinic law, and he advises husbands not to allow their wives to spend time with women known as lesbians, to avoid their being tempted to engage in sexual relations with another woman.

—Ruth H. Sohn

• • • • •

Contemporary Reflection

PARASHAT K'DOSHIM PLACES before us one of the most difficult commandments in the whole Torah—not kashrut or Shabbat, nor even the rules of sexual conduct, but rather the admonition and expectation to “be holy.” Throughout the Torah, we are given rules and statutes that tell us what to do. Here we are told what to be. We find a similar statement in Exodus 19:6, commanding us to be a “kingdom of priests and a holy people.” But what does it mean to be holy? K'doshim does not tell us. The guidance that the parashah gives us is in the specifics: the “who, when, why, and how” of the injunction.

First, who is to be holy? The entire people is addressed: kol adat b'nei yisrael; all Israel is told: “You shall be holy, for I, your God הָאֵל, am holy” (19:2). Not just the priests or Levites, not only the women or men, but everyone is part of this command to be holy. The 16th-century commentator Rabbi Moshe Alshech asks why such important rules as the ones that follow upon this verse are not taught person by person, group by group, rather than to one large assembly. He suggests that the opening of K'doshim emphasizes the ability of any Jew to attain even the highest and noblest principles of Judaism; thus these laws, and the paradigm of “holiness,” are not only for a select few, but for everyone.

When are we to be holy? The verb tih'yu in verse 2 can be read—and is often read—as a command (“be holy!”). But it is grammatically a future form (“you shall be holy”). The implications are: “Be holy—now! And you shall be holy—in the future.” Thus holiness is a daily struggle, in the here and now, as well as a future yearning.

Why are we to be holy? Because God is holy. The 16th-century commentator Rabbi Obadiah Sforno notes that this verse teaches us that we are to remember and act “in the image of our Creator,” as much as

*What does it mean to be holy?
Is the answer different for women?*

that is possible. Philosophers refer to this concept via the Latin term imitatio dei. We try and “imitate” the Divine. As God cares for the widow and orphan, so do we. As God rests on the seventh day, so do we. In imitating God we can achieve a higher sense of purpose and our actions will reflect the ongoing concern of the Divine for the world. In imitating God’s holiness we make holiness our behavioral ideal.

In much of the Torah, it is God who sanctifies—as we read in Genesis 2:3: “Then God blessed the seventh day and made it holy.” But in K'doshim, the command to make things holy is addressed to humanity. The task of sanctifying our lives is placed upon us, as an act of partnership between human beings and God. This is one way that we strive to act in God’s image.

K'DOSHIM

The how to be holy is what follows—as the parashah lists a wide-ranging series of ethical laws, including honoring one's parents, respecting the elderly, justice for the stranger, love of one's fellow human, and more. But note that even though the parashah enumerates the specifics of holy behavior, it never defines what it means by the word kadosh ("holy"). Many commentators have tried to understand the term kadosh as indicating a state of being. Rashi (11th century) and Ramban (13th century) both interpret "you shall be holy" as meaning "you shall be separate." For them, holiness requires standing apart as Jews, with a firm set of boundaries. The end of K'doshim underscores their point: "You shall be holy to Me, for I קָדוֹשׁ am holy, and I have set you apart from other peoples to be Mine" (20:26).

This concept of separation is critical to understanding Jewish spirituality. For example, in the classic Jewish marriage formula, the phrase harei at m'kudeshet li means "you are set apart for me from others." (Wedding officiants are fond of claiming that it means "you are sanctified to me," which is a more midrashic derivation.) In the Talmud, hekdesh is money or goods set aside or separated for tithing or donation. Holiness seems intrinsically linked in Judaism to separation (havdalah), making distinctions: milk or meat, Shabbat or weekday, Jew or gentile, female or male.

But does this concept of spirituality ring true for women? Would there be a different kind of imitatio dei for women? Do women experience holiness differently? For those women who carry life inside, attached to another being who is—at the same time—part of them, separateness does not equal spirituality. For those women who breastfeed—who nurture and sustain from their very own bodies—connection is more at the root of holiness. For those women who form bonded friendships from earliest memory, or who bring the family together, who are the cohesive force in a group, a definition of holiness is needed that does not imply building fences. Thus, though parashat K'doshim demands holiness, it is up to us to define holiness in a way that is truthful for both women and men.

As is apparent, then, Rashi's definition of kadosh as "separate" presents a fundamental feminist challenge. The challenge is evident as well throughout rabbinic Judaism where authorities have portrayed the mitzvot as drawing lines between "us" and "them," lines that demarcate who is in (for example, circumcision marking a Jewish boy) and who is out (for example, the halachah of not counting women in a minyan). While feminists have challenged specific mitzvot, finding a way "in" through creative rereading and even reinventing, we have not yet sufficiently challenged the very notion of mitzvot that rest upon the "spirituality of separation." This notion is at the heart of much that Jews do—including kashrut, Shabbat, and the marriage ceremony, just to name a few. Redefining the mitzvot as connectors rather than as boundaries, as dialogue rather than as answers, is a first step toward addressing the question of how we as women will be kadosh. Although we are still at the beginning of exploring what a fully developed feminist notion of being holy might look like, the opening words of this parashah—k'doshim tih'yu—carry both a command for now and promise for the future: we can and we will find ways to be holy.

—Elyse Goldstein

Voices

Weathering

Rachel Hadas

Leviticus 19:3, 32

My mother had, I thought,
when I was growing up,
a uniform smooth surface like a rock polished by waves. Or like a flight of steps worn concave at the center of each tread
she had been hollowed out.
This weathering, it took me years to see,
was neither luck nor personality.
Motherhood and years wear women down.
Either can alone;
but motherhood, although it saves no one,
mitigates the wear and tear somehow with kindness—or with blindness. Take my hand
before we both are ground back into sand.

Gravity, Death

Agi Mishol (transl. Lisa Katz)

Leviticus 19:3, 32

How resistance to the force of gravity has weakened:
hair falls out, jaws drop, and legs don't step off the earth anymore.
The spent body stoops over the ground,
only a walking stick separates them like a kind of extension.

He sits opposite me in a cloud of unraveling sentences,
his skin like clothing hastily left behind on a chair.

For a moment I sit with my father, for a moment with my death
fraternizing with me through my crumbling father who begins to return spirit unto spirit and dust unto dust.

Letter to Haym Peretz

Henrietta Szold

Leviticus 19:3

It is impossible for me to find words in which to tell you how deeply I was touched by your offer to act as "Kaddish" for my dear mother. I cannot even thank you—it is something that goes beyond thanks. It is beautiful, what you have offered to do—and I shall never forget it.

You will wonder, then, that I cannot accept your offer. Perhaps it would be best for me not to try to explain to you in writing, but to wait until I see you to tell you why it is so. I know well, and appreciate what you say about, the Jewish custom; and Jewish custom is very dear and sacred to me. And yet I cannot ask you to say Kaddish after my mother. The Kaddish means to me that the survivor publicly and markedly manifests his wish and intention to assume the relation to the Jewish community which his parent had, and that so the chain of tradition remains unbroken from generation to generation, each adding its own link. You can do that for the generations of your family, I must do that for the generations of my family.

I believe that the elimination of women from such duties was never intended by our law and custom—women were freed from positive duties when they could not perform them, but not when they could. It was never intended that, if they could perform them, their performance of them should not be considered as valuable and valid as when one of the male sex performed them. And of the Kaddish I feel sure this is particularly true.

My mother had eight daughters and no son; and yet never did I hear a word of regret pass the lips of either my mother or my father that one of us was not a son. When my father died, my mother would not permit others to take her daughters' place in saying the Kaddish, and so I am sure I am acting in her spirit when I am moved to decline your offer. But beautiful your offer remains nevertheless, and, I repeat, I know full well that it is much more in consonance with the generally accepted Jewish tradition than is my or my family's conception. You understand, don't you?

NOTE

Jewish custom. After a parent's death, Jewish law obliges a male child to recite Kaddish at synagogue services. The usual duration of this practice is one year less thirty days. A female child is exempt from this mourning practice, and in traditional communities women have customarily not recited Kaddish. When no child survives the deceased and in the absence of another male relative to take on the obligation, occasionally a male friend will recite Kaddish out of love or loyalty.

Gray Hairs

Naomi Replansky

Leviticus 19:32

Gray hairs
crowd out the black.
Not one of them
brings me wisdom.

Wrinkles
provide no armor.
I still quiver to anyone's dart.

Age

Esther Raab

Leviticus 19:32

The old lady in the mirror—who is she?
Seventy-one years old—whose?
She plucks wild daffodil
in the mud, gathers mushrooms
after rain,
in the fat black slit of the wadi-slope leaps on “Hans”— at sundown,
for a last gallop
before nightfall;
catches leaves in flight crushes them to release their fragrance

a thousand pranks and one
lurk in her eyes,
in her heart:
scorn, fury, affection—
and now she falls asleep in crests of pine clasped in their perfumed arms.
Seventy-one — — —

Turning to Rest in Sappho's Poems

Agi Mishol (transl. Tsipi Keller)

Leviticus 20:10–21

We're sprawled across the cool stone under glittering stars bite into an apple
honoring all the loved ones
women and men
who came to rest between our thighs

We talk about love its smallest detail

talk about life that makes us thirsty about the tree that is a green fountain

her beautiful head is next to mine her curls in mine

she says
I say
and our giggles escape into the vine whose scent spreads out from us

אֱמֹר ◆ Emor

LEVITICUS 21:1–24:23

Preserving the Holiness of Priests, Times, and Spaces

PARASHAT EMOR (“say”) continues the holiness-centered legislation of the previous parashah. It, too, is part of the Holiness Code—the collection of laws in Leviticus 17–26, which modern critical scholars refer to as “H” and attribute to a specific group of reform-minded priests.

This parashah contains instructions concerning the sanctity of the priests and the sacrificial offerings, the weekly Sabbath and annual festivals, and the maintenance of the Tabernacle lamp and showbread. The parashah ends with a story about the crime and punishment of a blasphemer. It also includes brief legal conclusions about damages governed by the retaliation principle (Latin: lex talionis; sometimes referred to via the biblical expression “eye for an eye”). In discussing the priests, the writers distinguish between three types: the chief priest, other priests who may officiate, and those who may receive some of the benefits but cannot carry out public roles because of disqualifying circumstances.

Several issues related to women arise in parashat Emor. Leviticus 21 provides strict guidelines for priests regarding various areas of family life, including which women in their family they can bury, which women they can marry, and how they must respond to a daughter’s sexual misbehavior. Leviticus 22, discussing who may partake of the priest’s portion of the sacred donations, addresses the question of when a priest’s daughter is considered a part of his household and would thus be entitled to part of her father’s share. Additionally, 24:10–14 mentions Shelomith, daughter of Dibri of the tribe of Dan, one of the few named individuals in all of Leviticus, and the only named woman. Shelomith’s unnamed son, whose father is an unnamed Egyptian, commits an act of blasphemy, and the Israelite judicial system must determine how to respond to this crime. This episode raises the question of who in the community must comply with the divine commandments.

Shelomith daughter of Dibri is the only named woman in all of Leviticus.

—Hilary Lipka

Outline—

I. HOLINESS AND WORSHIP

Regulations for the Priests' Holiness and for the Offerings (21:1–22:33)

- A. Regulations for priests' families (21:1–9)
- B. Regulations for the chief priest, including choice of a wife (21:10–15)
- C. Regulations for disqualified priests (21:16–24)
- D. Regulations for sacred food (22:1–16)
- E. Regulations for blemished sacrificial animals (22:17–25)
- F. Additional criteria for sacrificial animals (22:26–30)
- G. Concluding exhortation (22:31–33)

II. SACRED TIMES

Regulations for the Sabbath and Festivals (23:1–44)

- A. Introduction (vv. 1–2)
- B. The Sabbath and festivals, and conclusion (vv. 3–44)

III. THE TABERNACLE (24:1–9)

IV. THE CASE OF THE BLASPHEMER (24:10–23)

- A. The story of the blasphemer (vv. 10–16)
- B. The retaliation laws (lex talionis) (vv. 17–22)
- C. The punishment of the blasphemer (v. 23)

21:1

לְהֹווֹה said to Moses: Speak to the priests, the sons of Aaron, and say to them:

None shall defile himself for any [dead] person among his kin,² except for the relatives that are closest to him: his mother, his father, his son, his

כא וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹמֶשֶׁה אָמַר אֵל־ הַפְּהֻנִים בְּנֵי אַהֲרֹן וְאָמְرָת אֶלָּהֶם
לְנֶפֶשׁ לְאִיטְמָא בְּעַמְּיוֹ: ² בַּי אַס־לְשָׁאָרוֹ
הַקָּרְבָּן אֶלְיוֹ לְאָמוֹ וְלְאָבָיו וְלְבָנָיו וְלְבָתָיו

Holiness and Worship

REGULATIONS FOR THE PRIESTS' HOLINESS AND FOR THE OFFERINGS (21:1–22:33)

Parashat Emor opens with guidelines regarding the holiness of priests (Leviticus 21) and sacrificial offerings (Leviticus 22). Unlike parashat K'doshim (Leviticus 19–20), which addressed the entire people, Leviticus 21 and 22 primarily address the priests. The text places emphasis on avoiding desecration of the sanctuary by keeping the holy from coming into contact with impurity or with disqualifying imperfections.

REGULATIONS FOR PRIESTS' FAMILIES (21:1–9)

Because the priests are charged with the performance of sacred rites, they must observe strict codes of purity, lest any sort of impurity profane the sanctuary or its sacred objects and thus drive out God's Presence. This section addresses two primary issues regarding priests: defilement by corpses and the purity of their wives and daughters. In both instances there are obvious ramifications concerning women.

1. None shall defile himself for any [dead] person. While lay people may come into contact with corpses, priests must restrict such contact, since dead bodies are considered highly defiling. Although priests are generally prohibited from such exposure, a concession allows them to defile themselves for their closest blood relatives—but not for kinfolk related by marriage. The list of exemptions does not mention the wife. This raises the question: is a priest allowed to participate in the burial of his own wife? Although the topic is not addressed explicitly, this passage seems to preclude a priest from touching his dead wife and attending her burial. Presumably, he can supervise the burial from a certain distance. (See further at v. 4.)

2. relatives. Heb. sh'eir (literally “flesh”) is a kinship term that denotes what in English are known as “blood” ties. [The present translation renders the term literally in 18:12–13, which prohibit a man from sexual relations with his aunt because she is his parent’s “flesh.” —Ed.] The priest may defile himself only for certain “flesh and blood” relatives.

bis mother, his father. The mother precedes the father in the list of blood relatives. Later, in

- If a priest may not bury his wife, who then buries her?

ANOTHER VIEW ► 741

- Women are considered responsible for obeying most of Judaism's positive commandments.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 741

- The Bible and much of Western culture frequently equate beauty with goodness.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 743

- The yahrzeit flame / is beating its wings in a cup / on the edge of my kitchen sink.

VOICES ► 745

daughter, and his brother; ³also for a virgin sister, close to him because she has not married, for her he may defile himself. ⁴But he shall not defile himself as a kinsman by marriage, and so profane himself.

⁵They shall not shave smooth any part of their heads, or cut the side-growth of their beards, or make gashes in their flesh. ⁶They shall be holy to their God and not profane the name of their God;

v. 11, the father precedes the mother in a similar list. The inversion is most likely a literary device.

3. virgin. Heb. b'tulah is better understood here in a more general sense to refer to a stage in a woman's life characterized by youth and nubility. A more accurate translation might be "adolescent," since there are contexts in which a b'tulah evidently is not a virgin (Esther 2:17–19). Moreover, sometimes the term b'tulah is qualified by the clause "whom no man had yet known [sexually]" or its variant, "who had not [sexually] known a man" (as in Judges 11:37–39; 21:12; Genesis 24:16), further indicating that b'tulah is not always synonymous with what we mean by "virgin." An adolescent girl who was not yet married in ancient Israel would have been presumed to be a virgin, since girls were married very young and bridal virginity was the expected norm. In certain cases (including vv. 13–14, below), the context dictates that the translation "virgin" is most appropriate. In the present verse, however, as in the great majority of cases, such a specific translation would be inappropriate.

close to him because she has not married. A sister is considered "close" until she marries and leaves the household to live with her husband's family. Once she is living with her husband's family, the concession that permits the priest to attend a sister's burial no longer applies in her case because the wording presumes that her husband's family will attend to her. However, if his sister is still living within the priest's household when she dies, the priest is responsible for attending to her burial.

4. as a kinsman by marriage. Literally, "as a husband among his kin." This obscure wording

וְלֹא חָמֵן: ³ וְלֹא אַחֲתָה הַבְּתוֹלָה הַקְּרוּבָה
אֲלֹיו אֲשֶׁר לְאִיהִתָּה לְאִישׁ לְהָיָה יְטֻמָּא:
⁴ לֹא יְטֻמָּא בֶּעָל בְּעָמֵיו לְהַחְלֹו:
⁵ לְאִירְכָּה יִקְרְחֶה קְרָחָה בְּרָאָשָׁם וּפְאָתָה
זְקָנָם לֹא יְגַלְּחוּ וּבְבָשָׂרָם לֹא יְשַׁרְטָו שְׁرַטְתָּה: ⁶ קְדָשָׁים יִהְיוּ לְאֱלֹהֵיכֶם וְלֹא

appears to prohibit a priest from attending to the burial of his wife or coming close to her place of burial, since she is kin by marriage, not by blood. In ancient Israel a husband normally would have been responsible for the burial of his wife; since priests were prohibited from burying anyone other than blood kin (v. 1), presumably they were expected to arrange for others—members of the household or designated agents—to bury her. (At a later period, the Rabbis, reading sh'eiro in v. 2 as "his wife," found a way to interpret the law so as to include the priest's wife among those members of the family that he could personally bury.)

5. They shall not shave smooth . . . or make gashes in their flesh. The law does not prohibit priests from all displays of mourning. However, this verse outlaws these particular mourning rites, perhaps because they were associated with Canaanite funerary practices (see at Deuteronomy 14:1–2).

6. They shall . . . not profane the name of their God. What does it mean to profane the name of God? In the Holiness Code (see the parashah introduction), God's name stands for God's reality and therefore has the power to sanctify the people and the priests, bringing the lay population closer to their aspired level of holiness. The concern with profaning God's name runs throughout the parashah (for example, 21:6; 22:32; 24:10–16). Profaning the divine name takes away its power to sanctify and thus nullifies whatever holiness has been achieved through the observance of God's laws and regulations. Why does the concern about desecration focus on God's name, rather than on God? The Holiness Code carefully avoids anthropomorfor they offer יְהוָה's offerings by fire, the food of their God, and so must be holy.

⁷They shall not marry a woman defiled by harlotry, nor shall they marry one divorced from her husband. For they are holy to their God ⁸and you must treat them as holy, since they offer the food of your God; they shall be holy to you, for יְהוָה I who sanctify you am holy.

יְחִילְלוּ שֵׁם אֱלֹהִים בַּיְמֵינֶיכֶם וְיְהֹוָה
לְחַמֵּן אֱלֹהִים הַמִּקְרֵבָם וְתִהְיוּ קָדְשָׁה:
7 אֲשֶׁר זָנָה וְחַלְלָה לֹא יִקְחֶה וְאֲשֶׁר גְּרוּשָׁה
מַאֲיָשָׁה לֹא יִקְחֶה בִּיְקָדְשָׁה הוּא לְאֱלֹהִים:
8 וְקָדְשָׁתֶנוּ בִּיְמֵינֶיכֶם אֱלֹהִיךְ הוּא
מִקְרֵב קָדְשָׁה יְהִי קָדְשָׁךְ בַּיְמֵינֶיכֶם:
מִקְדְּשָׁכֶם:

phic images of God (compare Deuteronomy 32). The priests responsible for this material hold that God cannot possibly be contaminated, desecrated, or directly affected in a way that diminishes God's own holiness. Therefore it speaks in terms of the desecration of God's name—rather than God's self.

7–8. The restrictions concerning whom priests may marry reflect a concern with protecting both the priests' lineage and their reputation. On the one hand, the priesthood passes down from father to son, and thus the marriage restrictions can assure priests that their sons are of their own line. On the other hand, priests—who are charged with the care and maintenance of the sanctuary—are most likely expected to behave in a way appropriate to their esteemed station. Since the members of a priest's family partake of his portion of the holy sacrifices and live in his household, the Holiness Code (see the parashah introduction) likewise expects them to conduct themselves with a certain level of propriety; thus, only women of good repute are considered appropriate wives. For the same reason, a priest's daughter comes under close scrutiny, and her father should take action if her behavior is inappropriate for one of her station.

7. a woman defiled by harlotry. This phrase, literally “a harlot woman and one defiled,” is a hendiadys (the use of two words to express a single concept). Here the term “defiled” is probably intended in a figurative rather than a literal sense, and thus we should understand it as “degraded by harlotry.” According to the Holiness Code (see the parashah introduction), a man who makes his daughter into a prostitute “defiles” (that is, degrades) her; moreover, his action results in the land's being filled with depravity—since other fathers, following his example, will prostitute their daughters (19:29). The reason for the disqualification of a harlot as an appropriate wife for a priest is two-fold. First, pragmatically speaking, the priest would never be sure that the harlot's offspring would be his own. Second, given that the Holiness Code considers prostitution to be a form of depravity, having a harlot for a wife would be highly inappropriate. The very existence of this prohibition raises the possibility that the Holiness Code does not object to lay members of the community marrying prostitutes.

nor...one divorced from her husband. There are only a few references to men divorcing their wives in biblical texts. Deuteronomy 22:13–14 presents the case of a man, apparently seeking to divorce his wife after taking an aversion to her, who makes up charges of sexual misconduct against her (claiming that she was not a virgin when they married). In Deuteronomy 24:1, a man divorces his wife because he finds in her ervat davar, literally “the nakedness of the thing,” a term whose meaning is unclear, but could refer to some type of behavioral impropriety, possibly sexual in nature. (Deuteronomy 23:15, the only other place where this expression appears, seems to support this interpretation.) In Hosea 2:4–7, God's metaphoric wife Israel is threatened with divorce because of her infidelities. Each of these cases involves either improper behavior or false charges of improper behavior on the part of the wife, mainly of a sexual nature. This pattern or assumption might explain ⁹When the daughter of a priest defiles herself through harlotry, it is her father whom she defiles; she shall be put to the fire.

¹⁰The priest who is exalted above his fellows, on whose head the anointing oil has been poured and who has been ordained to wear the vestments, shall not bare his head or rend his vestments.

¹¹He shall not go in where there is any dead body;

וְבַת אִישׁ כֹּהֵן כִּי תָּחַל לִזְנוֹת אֶת־אֲבִיךָ
הִיא מִחְלָלָת בְּאַשׁ תְּשַׂרְפָּה:

וְהַכֹּהֵן הַגָּדוֹל מִאֲרוֹן אֲשֶׁר־יוֹצֵק עַל־
רָאשׁוֹ שֶׁמֶן הַמְשֻׁחָה וּמִלְאָאתִידּוֹ לְלִבְשָׁ
אֶת־הַבְּגָדִים אֶת־רִאשׁוֹ לֹא יִפְרַע וּבְגָדוֹ
לֹא יִפְרַם: ¹¹ וְעַל כָּל־גִּנְפָּשָׁת מֵת לֹא יִבָּא

why the present verse prohibits a priest from marrying a divorcee. Marriage to a woman possibly prone to sexual promiscuity is problematic for priests, who must be sure that their progeny is their own, and whose family must maintain a certain level of propriety. Note that widows, who generally were above such suspicions, are acceptable marital candidates for priests, except for the chief priest (see v. 14). [As for divorce, Jewish documents from Elephantine, Egypt, dating to the 5th century B.C.E., show that a woman could divorce her husband. Either partner could initiate a “no-fault” divorce, indicating that moral failing was not necessarily an integral part of divorce for either party. —Ed.]

9. harlotry. There are two possible interpretations of the verbal root z-n-h (“harlotry”) in this passage. The term could refer to the actual practice of prostitution, as it does in Genesis 38:15 and Leviticus 19:29; or it could be used in a metaphoric sense to denote illicit sexual activity by a woman (premarital sex or adultery), as it does in Genesis 38:24 and Deuteronomy 22:21. Both interpretations would work equally well in this context. A priest’s daughter, like his wife, is expected to maintain a high level of propriety, since her behavior reflects upon her father. As noted above (v. 7), although the Holiness Code does not prohibit prostitution outright, it considers the practice to be degrading and thus inappropriate for the daughter of a priest. Either prostitution or promiscuity would have brought shame and disgrace to the woman’s family.

it is her father whom she defiles. The unity of the household means that a daughter’s action is not an independent action but an extension of the father. Impropriety on her part profanes the father and interferes with his ability to carry out his priestly duties.

she shall be put to the fire. There are only three other cases in the Bible in which we read of such a punishment, and two of them involve sexual offenses. In Genesis 38:24, Judah demands that his daughter-in-law, Tamar, be put to death by fire for committing adultery while awaiting levirate marriage, although in the end she avoids punishment. Leviticus 20:14 states that if a man marries both a woman and her mother, all three are to be put to the fire. In Joshua 7:25, the Israelites stone and burn Achan (a certain member of the tribe of Judah) and his household for his violating the sacred ban (cherem), a prohibition against taking enemy property that was dedicated to God. Since fire is often regarded as a purifying substance, it may have been reserved for offenses where a form of purification was deemed necessary due to the level of pollution incurred by the offender.

REGULATIONS FOR THE CHIEF PRIEST, INCLUDING CHOICE OF A WIFE (21:10–15)

Even stricter regulations follow for the chief priest concerning matters of defilement by corpses, mourning practices, and whom he may marry. (On the more common English designation “high priest,” see at Exodus 28:1.)

he shall not defile himself even for his father or mother.¹² He shall not go outside the sanctuary and profane the sanctuary of his God, for upon him is the distinction of the anointing oil of his God, Mine יהוה's.¹³ He may marry only a woman who is a virgin.¹⁴ A widow, or a divorced woman, or one who is degraded by harlotry—such he may not marry. Only a virgin of his own kin may he take to wife—¹⁵that he may not profane his offspring among his kin, for I יהוה have sanctified him.

¹⁶ יהוה spoke further to Moses:¹⁷ Speak to Aaron and say: No man of your offspring throughout the ages who has a defect shall be qualified to offer the food of his God.¹⁸ No one at all who has a defect shall be qualified: no man who is blind, or lame, or has a limb too short or too long;¹⁹ no man who has a broken leg or a broken arm;²⁰ or who is a hunchback, or a dwarf, or who has a growth in his eye, or

לֹא בְּאָבִיו וְלֹא בְּאָמוֹ לֹא יִטְמָא: ¹² וּמִן־הַמִּקְדֵּשׁ לֹא יֵצֵא וְלֹא יַחֲלֵל אֶת מִקְדֵּשׁ אֱלֹהִים
כִּי גַּזְרָ שְׂמִן מְשֻׁחָת אֱלֹהִים עַלְיוֹ אֲנִי יהוָה:
¹³ וְהַוָּא אֲשָׁה בְּבַתּוֹלִיחָ יִקְחֶה: ¹⁴ אֲלִמְנָה
וְגַרְושָׁה וְחַלְלָה זֹנָה אֶת־אֱלֹהָה לֹא יִקְחֶה:
כִּי אִם־בַּתּוֹלִיחָ מַעֲפָיו יִקְחֶה אֲשָׁה:
¹⁵ וְלֹא־יִחְלֵל זָרָעָו בְּעַמְיוֹ כִּי אֲנִי יהוָה מִקְדֵּשׁוֹ: ס

¹⁶ וַיֹּאמֶר יהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאָמֹר: ¹⁷ דָבָר
אֶל־אַהֲרֹן לְאֹמֵר אִישׁ מִזְרָעָה לְדוֹתָם
אֲשֶׁר יהוָה בָּו מַוִּם לֹא יִקְרַב לְהַקְרִיב לְחַמֵּן
אֱלֹהִים: ¹⁸ כִּי בְּלִאֵישׁ אֲשֶׁר־בָּבוֹ מַוִּם לֹא
יִקְרַב אִישׁ עֹזֶר אוֹ פְּלַח אוֹ חָרֵם אוֹ שְׁרוּעִים:
¹⁹ אוֹ אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר־יְהוָה בָּו שְׁבָר רֶגֶל אוֹ
שְׁבָר יָד: ²⁰ אוֹ־גָבֵן אוֹ־לְקָבֵל בְּעַינָּיו

11. he shall not defile himself even for his father or mother. While a concession allows ordinary priests to defile themselves for their immediate blood relatives (vv. 1–3), no such concession is made for the chief priest. Note the order of father and mother here: a reversal of the reference to mother and father in v. 2.

13. virgin. Heb. b'tulim is an abstract noun derived from b'tulah (see at v. 3). In some biblical passages such as the reference to Jephthah's daughter in Judges 11:37–38, the word seems to simply refer to a young woman's adolescence, that is, the stage of her life characterized by youth and nubility. Other passages, such as Deuteronomy 22:13–21 and the verse at hand, appear to use the noun as a technical term for virginity.

14. A widow...he may not marry. In contrast to ordinary priests, the chief priest is not permitted to marry a widow.

virgin. Heb. b'tulah in this context is best translated as “virgin” (see at v. 3), since it appears that the chief priest cannot marry any woman who has had prior sexual relations. Since the chief priest must maintain the highest level of purity, it is logical that the purest possible woman is required for his wife. A virgin has not been “defiled” by sex with another man.

of his own kin. This added restriction is probably out of concern for the purity of his line by assurance of paternity. That is, it seeks to ensure that the chief priest will unquestionably be descended from Aaron.

REGULATIONS FOR DISQUALIFIED PRIESTS (21:16–24)

This section stipulates that only priests with no physical defects are able to approach the altar and make sacrifices. Priests with physical impairments, whether as a result of a birth defect or accident, are ineligible to approach the altar to make offerings because they are not considered whole. Although they may not officiate, disqualified priests still are considered priests—and thus entitled to eat the priestly portions of the sacrifices.

who has a boil-scar, or scurvy, or crushed testes.²¹ No man among the offspring of Aaron the priest who has a defect shall be qualified to offer Yahweh's offering by fire; having a defect, he shall not be qualified to offer the food of his God.²² He may eat of the food of his God, of the most holy as well as of the holy;²³ but he shall not enter behind the curtain or come near the altar, for he has a defect. He shall not profane these places sacred to Me, for I have sanctified them.

²⁴ Thus Moses spoke to Aaron and his sons and to all the Israelites.

22 Yahweh spoke to Moses, saying: ²Instruct Aaron and his sons to be scrupulous about the sacred donations that the Israelite people consecrate to Me, lest they profane My holy name, Mine Yahweh's.³ Say to them:

Throughout the ages, if any man among your offspring, while in a state of impurity, partakes of any sacred donation that the Israelite people may consecrate to Yahweh, that person shall be cut off from before Me: I am Yahweh.⁴ No man of Aaron's offspring who has an eruption or a discharge shall eat of the sacred donations until he is pure. If one touches anything made impure by a corpse, or if a man has an emission of semen,⁵ or if a man touches any swarming thing by which he is made impure or any human being by whom he is made impure—whatever his impurity—⁶the person who touches such shall be impure until evening and shall not eat of the sacred donations unless he has washed his body

או גָּרְבַּן אֲוֹ יְלִפְתָּח אֲוֹ מְרוֹחַ אֲשֶׁר: ²¹ בְּלַי־אֵישׁ אֲשֶׁר־בָּו מָוֹם מִזְרָע אַהֲרֹן הַכְּהֻנָּה לֹא־יָגַשׁ לְהַקְרִיב אֶת־אֱשֹׁר יְהֹוָה מָוֹם בָּו אֶת־לְחֵם אַלְמָיו לֹא יָגַשׁ לְהַקְרִיב: ²² לְחֵם אַלְמָיו מִקְדְּשֵׁי הַקְדְּשִׁים וּמִזְרָעָה קָדְשִׁים יָאַכֵּל: ²³ אֲךָ אֶל־הַפְּרִכָּת לֹא יָבֹא וְאֶל־הַמְּזֻבָּח לֹא יָגַשׁ בִּירְמָיו בָּו וְלֹא יְחַלֵּל אֶת־מִקְדְּשֵׁי פִּי אֲנִי יְהֹוָה מִקְדְּשָׁם: ²⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶל־אַהֲרֹן וְאֶל־בָּנָיו וְאֶל־בָּנָיו יְהֹוָה כָּל־בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ב'

כְּבָדֵבָר יְהֹוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לִאמְרָה: ² דָּבָר אֶל־אַהֲרֹן וְאֶל־בָּנָיו וַיֹּאמֶר מִקְדְּשֵׁי בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְלֹא יְחַלֵּל אֶת־שְׁם קָדְשִׁי אֲשֶׁר הֵם מִקְדְּשִׁים לִי אֲנִי יְהֹוָה: ³ אָמָר אַלְמָם לְדוֹתֵיכֶם כָּל־אִישׁ | אֲשֶׁר־יִקְרַב מִבְּלַי וּרְעַבְמָם אֶל־הַקְדְּשִׁים אֲשֶׁר נִקְרִישׁוּ בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לִיהְוָה וְטַמְאָתוֹ עַלְיוֹ וְגַכְתָּה הַנֶּפֶשׁ הַהְוָא מִלְּפָנֵי אֲנִי יְהֹוָה: ⁴ אִישׁ אֲנִי מִזְרָע אַהֲרֹן וְהָוָא צְרוּעָ אוֹ זָב בְּקָדְשִׁים לֹא יָאַכֵּל עַד אֲשֶׁר יִתְהַרְתֵּא מִמְּנָנוֹ בְּכָל־טְמֵא־נָפֶשׁ אֲוֹ אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר־תִּצְאָ מִמְּנָנוֹ שְׁבַבְתִּזְרַע: ⁵ אֲוֹ אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יִגְעַן בְּכָל־שְׁرֵץ אֲשֶׁר יִטְמָא־לּוֹ אֲוֹ בְּאֶדֶם אֲשֶׁר יִטְמָא־לּוֹ לְכָל טְמָאָתוֹ: ⁶ נָפֶשׁ אֲשֶׁר תַּגְעִיבֶּה וְטַמְאָה עַד־הַעֲרָב וְלֹא יָאַכֵּל מִן־

REGULATIONS FOR SACRED FOOD (22:1–16)

This section addresses questions regarding who may partake of the sacred donations, which portions of the sacrifices are assigned to the priests, and who among the lay population may share in these portions. The passage ends with a discussion of what to do if a lay person accidentally partakes of the sacred donation.

2. sacred donations. This phrase refers to the portions of sacrifices assigned to the priests. Some sacred donations only the priests may eat, while others, such as gift offerings, they may share with their household. See Leviticus 6–7; regarding women's access to this food, see Tzav, Another View, p. 608.

3. cut off from before Me. See at 7:20 for a similar expression and its implications.

in water. ⁷As soon as the sun sets, he shall be pure; and afterward he may eat of the sacred donations, for they are his food. ⁸He shall not eat anything that died or was torn by beasts, thereby becoming impure: I am יהוה. ⁹They shall keep My charge, lest they incur guilt thereby and die for it, having committed profanation: I יהוה consecrate them.

¹⁰No lay person shall eat of the sacred donations. No bound or hired laborer of a priest shall eat of the sacred donations; ¹¹but a person who is a priest's property by purchase may eat of them; and those that are born into his household may eat of his food. ¹²If a priest's daughter marries a layman, she may not eat of the sacred gifts; ¹³but if the priest's daughter is widowed or divorced and without offspring, and is back in her father's house as in her youth, she may eat of her father's food. No lay person may eat of it: ¹⁴but if a person eats of a sacred donation unwittingly, the priest shall be paid for the sacred donation, adding one-fifth of its value. ¹⁵But [the priests] must not allow the Israelites to profane the sacred donations that they set aside for me, ¹⁶or to incur guilt requiring a penalty

הַקְרָבָה כִּי אָמֵרְתָּךְ בְּשֶׁרְאֹל בְּמִנְיָם : ⁷ וְבָא
הַשְׁמָשׁ וְטָהָר וְאַחֲרֵי יִאֱכָל מִן־הַקְרָבָה כִּי
לְחַמּוֹ הָוֹא : ⁸ נְגַלֵּה וְטִירָפָה לֹא יִאֱכָל
לְטַמְמָא־הַבָּה אָנָּי יהָוה : ⁹ וְשִׁמְרָרָתִי וְלֹא־יִשְׂאֹו עַלְיוֹ חָטָא וְמִתּוֹ בָּו
כִּי יְחִילָה אָנָּי יהָוה מִקְדָּשָׁם :

¹⁰ וְכָל־זָר לֹא־יִאֱכָל קָדֵשׁ תּוֹשֵׁב בְּדָעֵן
וּשְׁכִיר לֹא־יִאֱכָל קָדֵשׁ : ¹¹ וְכָהֵן קִיְּרָנָה
נְפָשָׁל קְנִין בְּסָפוֹ הָוֹא יִאֱכָל בָּו וְלִיד בֵּיתוֹ
הָם יִאֱכָלוּ בְּלְחַמּוֹ : ¹² וּבְתִּיכְּחֵן כִּי תְּהִיה
לְאִישׁ זֶר הָוֹא בְּתֻרּוֹמַת הַקְרָבָה לֹא
תִּאֱכָל : ¹³ וּבְתִּיכְּחֵן כִּי תְּהִיה אַלְמָנָה
וְגַרְוּשָׁה וּוּרְעָה אֵין לָהּ וְשָׁבָה אַל־בֵּית
אָבִיךְ בְּנְעוֹרִיךְ מְלָחָם אָבִיךְ תִּאֱכָל וּכְלָ—
זֶר לֹא־יִאֱכָל בָּו : ¹⁴ וְאִישׁ קִיְּרָנָה קָדֵשׁ
בְּשָׁגָגָה וַיְסַף חַמְשִׁיתוֹ עַלְיוֹ וְנִתְןָ לְכָהֵן
אַתְּ-הַקְדָּשָׁ : ¹⁵ וְלֹא יְחִילָל אַתְּ-קְדָשֵׁי בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת אֲשֶׁר־יָרִימָה לִיהָוה : ¹⁶ וְהַשְׁיוֹא

i2–i3. These verses give special attention to the question of when a priest's daughter may partake of the sacred offerings. A priest's daughter is entitled to partake of her father's portion of the sacred donations so long as she is part of his household. If she marries a member of the priesthood, her entitlement then derives from her husband. If she marries outside the priesthood, she becomes a part of the lay community and thus loses her entitlement to partake of the sacred donations. This passage indirectly sheds light on the status of daughters and is consistent with intimations elsewhere (see v. 9).

i3. without offspring, and is back in her father's house as in her youth. It is not clear under what conditions a widow in ancient Israel would inherit her husband's estate. A widow or divorcée without children might well have no claim to that estate, in which case she would likely have to go back to her father's household, since she would have no other means of support (see the story of Tamar in Genesis 38). Here, when a priest's daughter who has married a lay person re-enters her father's household under such circumstances, she regains her entitlement to partake of her father's portion of the sacred donations.

Some widows or divorcees may have had independent means of support. According to biblical law, when a householder dies without making a will, his sons inherit his estate; if he has no sons, his daughters inherit—as in the case of the daughters of Zelophehad, Numbers 27:7–9. If he has no children, the estate stays within his family. Furthermore, a householder apparently could either will his property to his wife or gift it to his daughter, as with Achsah in Joshua 15:16–19.

payment, by eating such sacred donations: for it is I who make them sacred.

¹⁷ spoke to Moses, saying: ¹⁸ Speak to Aaron and his sons, and to all the Israelite people, and say to them:

When any person of the house of Israel or of the strangers in Israel presents a burnt offering as the offering for any of the votive or any of the freewill offerings that they offer to יְהוָה, ¹⁹it must, to be acceptable in your favor, be a male without blemish, from cattle or sheep or goats. ²⁰You shall not offer any that has a defect, for it will not be accepted in your favor.

²¹And when a person offers, from the herd or the flock, a sacrifice of well-being to יְהוָה for an explicit vow or as a freewill offering, it must, to be acceptable, be without blemish; there must be no defect in it. ²²Anything blind, or injured, or maimed, or with a wen, boil-scar, or scurvy—such you shall not offer to יְהוָה; you shall not put any of them on the altar as offerings by fire to יְהוָה. ²³You may, however, present as a freewill offering an ox or a sheep with a limb extended or contracted; but it will not be accepted for a vow. ²⁴You shall not offer to יְהוָה anything [with its testes] bruised or crushed or torn or cut. You shall have no such practices in your own land, ²⁵nor shall you accept such [animals] from a foreigner for offering as food for your God, for they are mutilated, they have a defect; they shall not be accepted in your favor.

²⁶ spoke to Moses, saying: ²⁷When an ox or a sheep or a goat is born, it shall stay seven days

אֹתָם עַזְנֵן אֲשֶׁר מִבְּלַעַד בְּאַכְלָם אֶת-קְרֻשֵׁיהם כִּי אֲנִי יְהוָה מֶקְדְּשֶׁם: פ
¹⁷ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵיכֶם לְאֹמֶר: ¹⁸ דָבָר
אֶל-אַהֲרֹן וְאֶל-בָּנָיו וְאֶל-בָּנָי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמַרְתָּ אֲלֵהֶם

אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר מִבְּלַעַד יִשְׂרָאֵל וּמִנְ-הָגָר בַּיִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר יִקְרַב קָרְבָּנוּ לְכָל-נְדָרֵיהֶם וְלְכָל-נְדֹבָתָם אֲשֶׁר-יִקְרַב לְיְהוָה לְעֹלָה:
¹⁹ לְרָצְנָכֶם תְּמִימִים זָכָר בְּבָكָר בְּבָשָׂר
וּבְעוֹזִים: ²⁰ כֹּל אֲשֶׁר-בוּ מָום לֹא תִּקְרַיב
בִּילָא לְרָצֹן יְהוָה לְכֶם:

²¹ וְאִישׁ כִּי-יִקְרַב זָבְחֵ-שְׁלָמִים לִיהוָה
לְפָלָא-נְדָר אוֹ לְנְדָבָה בְּבָקָר אוֹ בְּצָאן
תְּמִימִים יְהִי לְרָצֹן בְּלִמְמוּם לֹא יְהִי-בָּבוּ:
²² עִירָתָן אוֹ שְׁבָור אֲוֹ-חֲרוֹזָן אֲוֹ-יִנְבָּלָת אוֹ
גָּרָב אוֹ יְלָפָת לְאַתְקָרְבָו אֱלֹהָה לִיהוָה:
וְאָשָׁה לְאִתְתְּנוּ מִתְּמָם עַל-הַמִּזְבֵּחַ לִיהוָה:
²³ וְשָׂרֵר וְשָׁה שְׁרוּעַ וְקָלוֹת נְדָבָה תַּעֲשֶׂה
אָתוֹ וְלִנְדָר לֹא יַרְצָח: ²⁴ וּמְעֻזָּר וּכְתוֹת
וּנְתִיק וּכְבוֹת לֹא תִּקְרַיב לִיהוָה וּבְאַרְצָכֶם
לֹא תַעֲשֵׂו: ²⁵ וַיֹּאמֶר בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל לֹא תִּקְרַיב
אֶת-לְחֵם אֶל-הַיּוֹם מִפֶּלֶא-אֱלֹהָה כִּי מְשֻׁתָּחַט
בְּהָם מָום בָּם לֹא יַרְצַח לְכֶם: ס

²⁶ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵיכֶם לְאֹמֶר: ²⁷ שׂוֹר
אוֹ-כְּשֵׁב אוֹ-עִזּוֹן כִּי יַנְדֵד וְחִיה שְׁבָעַת יְמִים

REGULATIONS FOR BLEMISHED SACRIFICIAL ANIMALS (22:17–25)

The instructions shift to identifying acceptable animals for two types of sacrifices: the burnt offering and the sacrifice of well-being. The list of disqualifying defects for sacrificial offerings has twelve items, just like the list of disqualifying defects of a priest in Leviticus 21:18–20; there is a close correspondence between the two passages.

ADDITIONAL CRITERIA FOR SACRIFICIAL ANIMALS (22:26–30)

This section gives three additional regulations concerning sacrificial animals.

with its mother, and from the eighth day on it shall be acceptable as an offering by fire to the Lord.²⁸ However, no animal from the herd or from the flock shall be slaughtered on the same day with its young.

²⁹When you sacrifice a thanksgiving offering to the Lord, sacrifice it so that it may be acceptable in your favor.³⁰It shall be eaten on the same day; you shall not leave any of it until morning: I am the Lord.

³¹You shall faithfully observe My commandments: I am the Lord.³²You shall not profane My holy name, that I may be sanctified in the midst of the Israelite people—I who sanctify you,³³I who brought you out of the land of Egypt to be your God, I am the Lord.

23 spoke to Moses, saying:²Speak to the Israelite people and say to them:

These are My fixed times, the fixed times of the Lord, which you shall proclaim as sacred occasions.

28. This verse's restriction is similar to the teaching about the mother bird in Deuteronomy 22:6–7. Such laws appear to stem from a perception that animals have an emotional attachment to their young, and from a humane concern to limit their distress.

CONCLUDING EXHORTATION (22:31–33)

The reminder that Israel's God brought the people out of Egypt serves as the basis of the demand for obedience to God's commandments.

Sacred Times

REGULATIONS FOR THE SABBATH AND FESTIVALS (23:1–44)

Leviticus 23 presents a calendar of sacred occasions—dates set apart and designated as belonging to God. This calendar includes the weekly

תְּחִתָּה אֲפֹו וּמִיּוֹם הַשְׁמִינִי וְהַלְאָה יַרְצֵחַ לְקַרְבָּן אֲשֶׁה לִיהְוֹה: ²⁸ וְשֹׂר אֲוֹשֶׁה אָתוֹ וְאַתְּבָנוֹ לֹא תְשַׁחַטו בַּיּוֹם אֲחֵד: ²⁹ וְכִירִזְבָּחוּ זְבַח־תֹּודָה לִיהְוֹה לְרַצְנֵיכֶם תִּזְבְּחוּ: ³⁰ בַּיּוֹם הַהוּא יִאֱכַל לְאַתְּתֵּרוּ מִפְנֵי עֲדָבָקָר אֲנִי יהָוָה: ³¹ וְשִׁמְרַתֶּם מִצְוָתִי וְעַשְׂתֶּם אֶתְכֶם אֲנִי יהָוָה: ³² וְלֹא תְחִלְלוּ אֶת־שְׁמֵם קָדְשֵׁיכֶם וְנִקְדְּשֵׁתִי בְּתֻ�ָה בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲנִי יהָוָה מֶקְדְּשָׁכֶם: ³³ הַמּוֹצִיא אֶתְכֶם מִארֶץ מִצְרָיִם לְהִזְמִין לְכֶם לְאֶלְהִים אֲנִי יהָוָה: פ

כג וַיֹּאמֶר יהָוָה אֲלֵי־מֹשֶׁה לְאָמֵר: ² דָבָר אֲלֵיכֶם יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמַרְתֶּן אֲלֵיכֶם מוֹעֵדי יהָוָה אֲשֶׁר־תִּקְרָא אֶתְכֶם מֶקְדָּשִׁי קָדֵשׁ אֱלֹהִים הָם מוֹעֵדי:

Sabbath, as well as the annual festivals, beginning in the spring with the paschal offering and ending in the fall with Sukkot and Sh'mini Atzeret. The parallel calendar in Numbers 28–29 focuses on the required sacrificial offerings for each sacred occasion, information provided in some of the instructions here. The present passage focuses mainly on explicating the times of the sacred occasions and prohibiting work on certain days. For a discussion of women's roles in these sacred times, see "Women in Ancient Israel—An Overview," p. xli.

INTRODUCTION (23:1–2)

Leviticus 21–22 largely addressed the priests and dealt with priestly matters. But the regulations for sacred times concern the community at large and thus are addressed to the entire people. Women are not specifically mentioned in these laws, yet there is no reason to presume that they are excluded from this legislation.

³On six days work may be done, but on the seventh day there shall be a sabbath of complete rest, a sacred occasion. You shall do no work; it shall be a sabbath of יהוה throughout your settlements.

⁴These are the set times of יהוה, the sacred occasions, which you shall celebrate each at its appointed time: ⁵In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, at twilight, there shall be a passover offering to יהוה, ⁶and on the fifteenth day of that month יהוה's Feast of Unleavened Bread. You shall eat unleavened bread for seven days. ⁷On the first day you shall celebrate a sacred occasion: you shall not work at your occupations. ⁸Seven days you shall make offerings by fire to יהוה. The seventh day shall be a sacred occasion: you shall not work at your occupations.

⁹ spoke to Moses, saying: ¹⁰Speak to the Israelite people and say to them:

When you enter the land that I am giving to you and you reap its harvest, you shall bring the first sheaf of your harvest to the priest. ¹¹He shall elevate the sheaf before יהוה for acceptance in your behalf; the priest shall elevate it on the day after the sabbath. ¹²On the day that you elevate the sheaf,

³ שְׁשָׁת יְמִים תַּעֲשֶׂה מְלָאכָה וּבָיוֹם הַשְׁבִּיעִי שְׁבָת שְׁבָתוֹן מִקְרָא־קָדֵש בְּלַיְלָה לֹא תַעֲשֶׂה שְׁבָת הוּא לִיהְוָה בְּכָל מַוְשְׁבָתֵיכֶם: פ

⁴ אֱלֹהִים מוֹעֵדי יְהֹוָה מִקְרָא־קָדֵש אֲשֶׁר־תִּקְרָאוּ אֶתְכֶם בְּמוֹעֵדים: ⁵ בְּחִדְשׁ הַרְאָשׁוֹן בְּאַרְבָּעָה עָשָׂר לְחִדְשׁ בֵּין הַעֲרָבִים פֶּסֶח לִיהְוָה: ⁶ וּבְחִמְשָׁה עָשָׂר יוֹם לְחִדְשׁ הַרְאָשׁוֹן חִג הַמְצֻוֹת לִיהְוָה שְׁבָעַת יְמִים מִצּוֹת הַאֲכֵל: ⁷ בַּיּוֹם הַרְאָשׁוֹן מִקְרָא־קָדֵש יְהֹוָה לְכֶם בְּלִמְלָאכָת עֲבָדָה לֹא תַעֲשֶׂו: ⁸ וְהַקְרְבָתֶם אֶשֶּׁה לִיהְוָה שְׁבָעַת יְמִים בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁבִּיעִי מִקְרָא־קָדֵש בְּלִמְלָאכָת עֲבָדָה לֹא תַעֲשֶׂו: פ

⁹ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאַמְرָה: ¹⁰ דָבָר אֶל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמַרְתָּ אֶל־הֶם בַּיּוֹם אֲלֹהֵי הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אָנָי נְתַנְתִּי לְכֶם וּקְצַרְתֶּם אֶת־קָצִירָה וְהַבָּאתֶם אֶת־עַמְרָה רְאִשִּׁית קָצִירָכֶם אֲלֵהֶיכֶן: ¹¹ וְהַנִּיף אֶת־הַעֲמָר לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה לְרַצְנֶם מִמְּחֹרֶת הַשְׁבָת יְנִיפְנוּ הַפְּהָן: ¹² וְעַשְׂתֶּם בַּיּוֹם

THE SABBATH AND FESTIVALS, AND CONCLUSION (23:3–44)

The sequence in this section is as follows: the Sabbath (v. 3); the Passover Offering and the Feast of Unleavened Bread (vv. 5–8); the First Barley Offering (vv. 9–14); the First Wheat Offering (Shavuot) (vv. 15–22); the Festival of Alarm Blasts (Rosh HaShanah) (vv. 23–25); the Day of Atonement (Yom Kippur) (vv. 26–32); the Festival of Booths (Sukkot) (vv. 33–35); the Solemn Gathering (Sh'mini Atzeret) (v. 36); conclusion (vv. 37–38); and further laws for the Festival of Booths (vv. 39–43).

3. The Sabbath is described as a day without work. In contrast to Numbers 28:9–10, there is no reference to sacrifices here. The passage does not specify what counts as “work,” although other passages do supply some details (see Exodus 35:1–3 and Numbers 15:32–36). On the meaning of the Sabbath, see Exodus 31:12–17.

7. you shall not work at your occupations. This clause, which is also used in vv. 8, 21, 25, 35, and 36, is apparently distinct from “you shall do no work,” which is commanded for the Sabbath and Day of Atonement (vv. 3 and 28). Rabbinic law accordingly holds that work required for the preparation of food is permissible on festival days, but not on the Sabbath or Day of Atonement; see also Exodus 12:16 (Mishnah Beitzah 5:2; M'gillah 1:5).

you shall offer as a burnt offering to יהוה a lamb of the first year without blemish.¹³ The meal offering with it shall be two-tenths of a measure of choice flour with oil mixed in, an offering by fire of pleasing odor to יהוה; and the libation with it shall be of wine, a quarter of a hin.¹⁴ Until that very day, until you have brought the offering of your God, you shall eat no bread or parched grain or fresh ears; it is a law for all time throughout the ages in all your settlements.

¹⁵ And from the day on which you bring the sheaf of elevation offering—the day after the sabbath—you shall count off seven weeks. They must be complete:¹⁶ you must count until the day after the seventh week—fifty days; then you shall bring an offering of new grain to יהוה.¹⁷ You shall bring from your settlements two loaves of bread as an elevation offering; each shall be made of two-tenths of a measure of choice flour, baked after leavening, as first fruits to יהוה.¹⁸ With the bread you shall present, as burnt offerings to יהוה, seven yearling lambs without blemish, one bull of the herd, and two rams, with their meal offerings and libations, an offering by fire of pleasing odor to יהוה.¹⁹ You shall also offer one he-goat as a purgation offering and two yearling lambs as a sacrifice of well-being.²⁰ The priest shall elevate these—the two lambs—together with the bread of first fruits as an elevation offering before יהוה; they shall be holy to יהוד, for the priest.²¹ On that same day you shall hold a celebration; it shall be a sacred occasion for you; you shall not work at your occupations. This is a law for all time in all your settlements, throughout the ages.

²² And when you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field, or gather the gleanings of your harvest; you shall leave them for the poor and the stranger: I יהוה am your God.

²³ spoke to Moses, saying:²⁴ Speak to the Israelite people thus: In the seventh month, on the first day of the month, you shall observe complete

הנִיפְכָם אֶת־הַעֲמֵר בְבֵשׂ תְמִימִם בְּנִשְׁנָתוֹ לְעַלְלה לִיהְוָה: ¹³ וּמִנְחָתָן שְׁנִי עַשְׂרָנִים סָלַת בְּלוֹלָה בְשָׂמֵן אֲשֶׁר לִיהְוָה רִיחַ נִיחַח וְנִסְכָה וְנִסְכּוֹ יְיַזְנָה רְבִיעַת הַחַיִן: ¹⁴ וְלֹחָם וּקְלִי וּכְרָמֵל לֹא תִאכְלֶה עַד־עַצְם הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה עַד הַבְּיאָכָם אֶת־קְרָבָן אֶלְחִיכָם חֲקַת עַולְם לְדָרְתֵיכֶם בְּכָל מִשְׁבְתֵיכֶם: ס ¹⁵ וְסִפְרַתְמָ לְכֶם מִמְחֻרָת הַשְׁבָת מִיּוֹט הַבְּיאָכָם אֶת־עֲמֵר הַתְנוּפָה שְׁבַע שְׁבָתוֹת תִּמְיוֹנָת תְּהִינָה: ¹⁶ עַד מִמְחֻרָת הַשְׁבָת הַשְׁבִיעַת תְסִפְרוּ חֲמִשִים יוֹם וְהַקְרְבָתָם מִנְחָה חֲדָשָה לִיהְוָה: ¹⁷ מִמּוֹשְׁבְתֵיכֶם תְבִיאוּ וּלְחָם תְנוּפָה שְׁתִים שְׁנִי עַשְׂרָנִים סָלַת תְהִינָה חָמֵץ תְאַפֵּנָה בְכוּרִים לִיהְוָה: ¹⁸ וְהַקְרְבָתָם עַל־הַלְּחֵם שְׁבָעַת בְּכָשִׂים תִמְיוֹם בְנִי שָׁנָה וְפֶרֶג בְנִזְבָּךְ אֶחָד וְאַיִלִם שְׁנִים יְהִיוּ עַלְלה לִיהְוָה וְמִנְחָתָן וְנִסְכִּיהם אֲשֶׁר רִיחַ נִיחַח לִיהְוָה: ¹⁹ וְעַשְׁיַתְמָ שְׁעִיר־עַזִים אֶחָד לְחַטָאת וְשְׁנִי כְבָשִׂים בְנִי שָׁנָה לְזֹבֶח שְׁלָמִים: ²⁰ וְשְׁנִי כְבָשִׂים בְנִי שָׁנָה לְזֹבֶח הַבְּפָרִים תְנוּפָה לְפָנֵי יהָוָה עַל־שְׁנִי כְבָשִׂים קְדֹשָׁ יְהִיוּ לִיהְוָה לְפָנֵן: ²¹ וְקָרְאָתָם בְּעַצְם הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה מִקְרָא־קְדֹשׁ וְיִהְיֶה לְכֶם בָּלְמִלְאָכָת עַבְדָה לֹא תַעֲשֶׂה חֲקַת עַולְם בְּכָל־מוֹשְׁבְתֵיכֶם לְדָרְתֵיכֶם: פ ²² וּבְקָצְרָלֶם אֶת־קָצִיר אַרְצָכֶם לְאַתְכָלָה פָאַת שְׁرֵך בְּקָצִיר וְלִקְטָה קָצִיר לֹא תַלְקְטָה לְעֵנִי וְלַגְלָל תַעֲזֹב אַתֶם אֲנִי יהָוָה אֱלֹהִים: פ ²³ וַיֹּאמֶר יהָוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאָמֹר: דָבָר אֶל־בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאָמֹר בְחַדֵש הַשְׁבִיעִי בְאַחֲרֵל חַדֵש יְהִי לְכֶם שְׁבָתוֹן וּבְרוֹן rest, a sacred occasion commemorated with loud blasts.²⁵ You shall not work at your occupations; and you shall bring an offering by fire to יְהוָה.

²⁶ spoke to Moses, saying: ²⁷Mark, the tenth day of this seventh month is the Day of Atonement. It shall be a sacred occasion for you: you shall practice self-denial, and you shall bring an offering by fire to יְהוָה; ²⁸you shall do no work throughout that day. For it is a Day of Atonement, on which expiation is made on your behalf before your God. ²⁹Indeed, any person who does not practice self-denial throughout that day shall be cut off from kin;³⁰and whoever does any work throughout that day, I will cause that person to perish from among the people. ³¹Do no work whatever; it is a law for all time, throughout the ages in all your settlements.³²It shall be a sabbath of complete rest for you, and you shall practice self-denial; on the ninth day of the month at evening, from evening to evening, you shall observe this your sabbath.

³³ spoke to Moses, saying: ³⁴Say to the Israelite people:

On the fifteenth day of this seventh month there shall be the Feast of Booths to יְהוָה, [to last] seven days. ³⁵The first day shall be a sacred occasion: you shall not work at your occupations; ³⁶seven days you shall bring offerings by fire to יְהוָה. On the eighth day you shall observe a sacred occasion and bring an offering by fire to יְהוָה; it is a solemn gathering: you shall not work at your occupations.

³⁷Those are the set times of יְהוָה that you shall celebrate as sacred occasions, bringing offerings by fire to יְהוָה—burnt offerings, meal offerings, sacrifices, and libations, on each day what is proper to

תְּרוּעָה מִקְרָא־קָדֵשׁ :²⁵ בְּלִמְלָאכַת עֲבֹדָה
לֹא תַעֲשׂו וְהַקְרְבָתֶם אֲשֶׁר לְיְהוָה : ס וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאֹמֶר : אָרֶךְ
בְּעֶשֶׂר לְחַדְשָׁ הַשְׁבִּיעִי הַזֶּה יוֹם הַכְּפָרִים
הַוָּא מִקְרָא־קָדֵשׁ יְהוָה לְכָם וְעַנְיוֹנָם
אַתִּינְפְּשָׁתֶיכֶם וְהַקְרְבָתֶם אֲשֶׁר לְיְהוָה :
וְכָל־מְלָאכַה לֹא תַעֲשׂו בְּעֵצֶם הַיּוֹם
הַזֶּה כִּי יוֹם כְּפָרִים הוּא לְכֹבֵד עַלְיכֶם
לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם :²⁹ כִּי בְּלִהְנְפָשָׁת אֲשֶׁר
לְאַתְעָנָה בְּעֵצֶם הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה וְגַנְגְּרָתָה
מֻמְעַמְּדָה :³⁰ וּבְלִהְנְפָשָׁת אֲשֶׁר תַּעֲשֶׂה בְּלִ
מְלָאכַה בְּעֵצֶם הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה וְהַאֲבָדָתָ
אַתִּיהְנְפָשָׁת הַהְוָא מִקְרָב עַמָּה :³¹ בְּלִ
מְלָאכַה לֹא תַעֲשׂו חֲקַת עַולְט לְדָרְתֵיכֶם
בְּכָל מִשְׁבְּתֵיכֶם :³² שְׁבַת שְׁבָתוֹן הַוָּא
לְכָם וְעַנְיוֹנָם אַתִּינְפְּשָׁתֶיכֶם בְּתִשְׁעָה
לְחַדְשָׁ בְּעָרָב מָעָרָב עַד־עָרָב תִּשְׁבְּטוּ
שְׁבָתוֹם : פ

³³ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאֹמֶר :³⁴ קָרְבָּן
אֶל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאֹמֶר
בְּחִמְשָׁה עָשָׂר יוֹם לְחַדְשָׁ הַשְׁבִּיעִי הַזֶּה חַג
הַסְּפָרוֹת שְׁבָעַת יְמִים לְיְהוָה :³⁵ בַּיּוֹם
הַרְאָשׁוֹן מִקְרָא־קָדֵשׁ בְּלִמְלָאכַת עֲבֹדָה
לֹא תַעֲשׂו :³⁶ שְׁבָעַת יְמִים תִּקְרִיבוּ אֲשֶׁר
לְיְהוָה בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁמִינִי מִקְרָא־קָדֵשׁ יְהוָה
לְכָם וְהַקְרְבָתֶם אֲשֶׁר לְיְהוָה עַצְרָת הַוָּא
בְּלִמְלָאכַת עֲבֹדָה לֹא תַעֲשׂו :

³⁷ אֶלְהָ מוֹעֵדי יְהוָה אֲשֶׁר־תִּקְרָאוּ אַתֶּם
מִקְרָאי קָדֵשׁ לְהַקְרִיב אֲשֶׁר לְיְהוָה עַלְתָּה
וּמִנְחָה זָבֵח וְנַסְכִּים דְּבָרִיּוֹם בַּיּוֹמוֹ :

27. Day of Atonement. Leviticus 16 gives further detailed instructions for the chief priest on this occasion.

29. practice self-denial. See at Numbers 30 for regulations about women who individually undertake vows of self-denial.

it—³⁸ apart from the sabbaths of יְהוָה, and apart from your gifts and from all your votive offerings and from all your freewill offerings that you give to יְהוָה.

³⁹Mark, on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when you have gathered in the yield of your land, you shall observe the festival of יְהוָה [to last] seven days: a complete rest on the first day, and a complete rest on the eighth day. ⁴⁰On the first day you shall take the product of hadar trees, branches of palm trees, boughs of leafy trees, and willows of the brook, and you shall rejoice before your God יְהוָה seven days. ⁴¹You shall observe it as a festival of יְהוָה for seven days in the year; you shall observe it in the seventh month as a law for all time, throughout the ages. ⁴²You shall live in booths seven days; all citizens in Israel shall live in booths, ⁴³in order that future generations may know that I made the Israelite people live in booths when I brought them out of the land of Egypt, I your God יְהוָה.

⁴⁴So Moses declared to the Israelites the set times of יְהוָה.

24 spoke to Moses, saying:

²Command the Israelite people to bring you clear oil of beaten olives for lighting, for kindling lamps regularly. ³Aaron shall set them up in the Tent of Meeting outside the curtain of the Pact [to burn] from evening to morning before יְהוָה regularly; it is a law for all time throughout the ages. ⁴He

40. hadar trees. Heb. hadar may have been a general descriptive term denoting majesty or stateliness, in which case the identification of the tree's fruit as the citron may date to rabbinic times.

43. that future generations may know. This commemorative explanation for the requirement to dwell in booths during the festival is unique to Leviticus in the Torah. Numbers 29:12–34 and Deuteronomy 16:13–15 also deal with Sukkot.

³⁸ מִלְבָד שְׁבַתּוֹת יְהוָה וּמִלְבָד מִתְנֻזְתִּיכֶם וּמִלְבָד בְּלִנְדְּרִיכֶם וּמִלְבָד בְּלִנְדְּבָתִיכֶם אֲשֶׁר תָּתַנוּ לִיהְוָה:

³⁹ אֵךְ בְּקָמָשָׂה עָשָׂר יוֹם לְחַדְשָׁה הַשְּׁבִיעִי בְּאַסְפָּכֶל אֶת-תִּתְבוֹאָת הָאָרֶץ תְּחַגּוּ אֶת-חַגְיַהָּנָה שְׁבָעַת יְמִים בַּיּוֹם הַרְאָשׁוֹן שְׁבָתוֹן וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁמִינִי שְׁבָתוֹן: ⁴⁰ וּלְקַחְתֶּם לְכֶם בַּיּוֹם הַרְאָשׁוֹן פְּרִי עַזׂ הַדָּר בְּפָתָת תְּמָרִים וְעֵנֶף עַזְּ-עֵבֶת וּעֲרָבִי-נָחֶל וּשְׁמַחְתֶּם לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם שְׁבָעַת יְמִים בְּשָׁנָה חֲקַת עוֹלָם לְדָרְתִּיכֶם בְּחַדְשָׁה הַשְּׁבִיעִי תְּחַגּוּ אֶת-זֶה: ⁴² בְּסֶפֶת תְּשִׁבוּ שְׁבָעַת יְמִים בְּלִ-הָאוֹרֶת בִּישראל יִשְׁבּוּ בְּسֶכֶת: ⁴³ לְמַעַן יַדְעُו דָרְתִּיכֶם כִּי בְּסֶכֶת הַוּשְׁבָתִיל אֶת-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּהֹצִיאֵי אֶתְכֶם מִאֶרֶץ מִצְרָיִם אֲנִי יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם:

⁴⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶת-מְعֹדֵרִי יִשְׂרָאֵל יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ יִשְׂרָאֵל: פ

כד וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ מֹשֶׁה לֵאמֹר:

² צְאוּ אֶת-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיַּקְהֵל אֶלְיךָ שְׁמַנִּין זִיתָ וְעֵגֶל בְּתִית לְפָנָיו לְמַאֲוֹר לְהַעֲלָת נֶר תְּמִיד: ³ מְחוֹזֵן לְפִרְכַּת הַעֲלָת בְּאַהֲלָם מָוֶעֶד יִעֲרֶה אָתָּה אֶתְכֶם מִעָרֵב עַד-בָּקָר לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה תְּמִיד חֲקַת עוֹלָם לְדָרְתִּיכֶם: ⁴ עַל הַמִּנְרָה

The Tabernacle (24:1–9)

Much of the book of Exodus focused on aspects of the Tabernacle, the portable sanctuary that the Israelites construct while encamped at Mount Sinai. The present unit contains further regulations concerning the Tabernacle's lamp and bread of display, focusing on their maintenance. Perhaps these instructions appear here because the shall set up the lamps on the pure lampstand before יְהוָה [to burn] regularly.

⁵You shall take choice flour and bake of it twelve loaves, two-tenths of a measure for each loaf. ⁶Place them on the pure table before יְהוָה in two rows, six to a row. ⁷With each row you shall place pure frankincense, which is to be a token offering for the bread, as an offering by fire to יְהוָה. ⁸He shall arrange them before יְהוָה regularly every sabbath day—it is a commitment for all time on the part of the Israelites. ⁹They shall belong to Aaron and his sons, who shall eat them in the sacred precinct; for they are his as most holy things from יְהוָה's offerings by fire, a due for all time.

¹⁰There came out among the Israelites a man whose mother was Israelite and whose father was Egyptian. And a fight broke out in the camp be-

הַטְהָרָה יִעֲשֶׂת אֶת־הַנּוֹרָת לִפְנֵי יְהוָה תָמִיד : פ

וְלֹקַחַת תְּלַת וְאַפִּת אֲתָה שְׁתִים עִשְׂרָה
חַלוֹת שְׁנִי עִשְׂרָנִים יְהִי הַחֶלֶה הַאַחַת:
וְשִׁמְתָּ אֶתְכֶם שְׁתִים מֻעָרכֹת שְׁשָׁה
הַמֻּעָרְכָת עַל הַשְּׁלֹחַן הַטְהָרָה לִפְנֵי יְהוָה:
וְנִתְתַּן עַל־הַמֻּעָרְכָת לְבָנָה זָבֵחַ וְהִינְתַּה
לְלִפְנֵם לְאַזְפָּרָה אֲשֶׁר לְיְהִי: ⁸ בַּיּוֹם
הַשְׁבַּת בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁבַּת יִעֲרְכָנוּ לִפְנֵי יְהוָה
תָמִיד מֵאַת בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּרִית עוֹלָם:
⁹ וְהִתְהַלֵּל לְאַהֲרֹן וְלִבְנֵיו וְאֶכְלָלָהוּ בָמָקוּם
קָדֵשׁ בַּיּוֹם קָדְשִׁים הוּא לוּ מַאֲשִׁי יְהוָה חַקִּיעָלִם: ס

¹⁰ וַיַּצֵּא בֶן־אָשֶׁר יִשְׂרָאֵל וְהִוא בֶן־אִישׁ
מִצְרַיִם בֶּתוֹךְ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיַּגְּזֹעַ בְּמִחְנָה בָּן

daily maintenance of the Tabernacle objects was considered supplementary to the observation of sacred times addressed in the previous unit.

1–4. Similar instructions regarding oil for the Tabernacle lamps, which must remain lit throughout the night, appear in Exodus 27:20–21.

5–9. The instructions regarding the displaying of the twelve loaves, known as the “bread of display” or “bread of the Presence” (Exodus 25:30), do not mention who bakes the loaves. Possibly women were responsible for making this bread; see at Leviticus 7:12.

The Case of the Blasphemer (24:10–23)

The parashah closes with the second of two narratives in Leviticus that interrupt laws (the first being the story of Nadab and Abihu in Leviticus 10). This passage recounts the crime of the blasphemer and its resolution. A man whose mother is Israelite and whose father is Egyptian utters God’s name in blasphemy, meaning that he may have done something such as curse God, saying, for example, “May such and such befall יְהוָה!” An unusual facet of this story is that it records the name of the mother, Shelemith (an Israelite), along with her tribal ancestry, information not provided for the father (see v. ii).

THE STORY OF THE BLASPHEMER (24:10–16)

The story of the blasphemer touches on a number of issues in addition to the desecration of God’s name: What is the status of a person from a “mixed marriage” of an Israelite woman and an Egyptian man? To what extent do Israelite laws apply to such a person?

10. a man whose mother was Israelite and whose father was Egyptian. The Hebrew identifies the offender first as “a son of an Israelite woman,” then adds, “and he is a son of an Egyptian man.” The blasphemer’s mixed ancestry seems central to this tween that half-Israelite and a certain Israelite man.

 11 The son of the Israelite woman pronounced the Name in blasphemy, and he was brought to Moses—now his mother's name was Shelomith daughter of Dibri of the tribe of Dan—¹²and he was placed in custody, until the decision of יהוה should be made clear to them.

¹³ And spoke to Moses, saying: ¹⁴Take the blasphemer outside the camp; and let all who were within hearing lay their hands upon his head, and let the community leadership stone him.

¹⁵ And to the Israelite people speak thus: Anyone who blasphemes God shall bear the guilt; ¹⁶and one who also pronounces the name Eternal shall be put to death. The community leadership shall stone that person; stranger or citizen—having thus pronounced the Name—shall be put to death.

episode. Since his mother is Israelite but not his father, he has become a member of the clan but is not considered a full-fledged Israelite (Deuteronomy 23:8–9). The man's mixed ancestry raises the question of whether those not considered full-fledged Israelites can be held liable for blasphemy as Israelite citizens. It is noteworthy that no overt criticism is made about the marriage itself.

11. pronounced the Name in blasphemy.

Blasphemy consists of pronouncing the divine name in a curse against God, that is, uttering an imprecation against the Deity that includes God's name (see Exodus 22:27, which prohibits it). In I Kings 21:1–16, Queen Jezebel frames a landowner named Naboth for the crime of blasphemy in order to have him stoned to death so that her husband can obtain Naboth's land.

his mother's name was Shelomith daughter of Dibri of the tribe of Dan. The author takes great care to note the name, lineage, and tribe of the blasphemer's mother—the only place in the Bible where her name appears. This unusual attention to the lineage of the blasphemer's mother may be part of a subtle condemnation of the tribe of Dan and their

הַיִשְׂרָאֵלִית וְאִישׁ הַיִשְׂרָאֵלִי: ¹¹ וַיַּקְרֹב בֶּן־
 הָאֲשָׁה הַיִשְׂרָאֵלִית אֶת־הַשְׁמָם וַיַּקְلֵל
 וַיַּבְאַו אֹתוֹ אֶל־מֹשֶׁה וְשֵׁם אָמוֹן שְׁלֹמִית
 בֶּת־דָבְרִי לְמַטְהִזֵּן: ¹² וַיַּנִּיחַהוּ בְּמִשְׁמָר לְפָרֵשׁ לְהָם עַל־פִּי יְהוָה: ¹³ פְּנֵי
 וַיַּדְבֵּר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאמֹר: ¹⁴ הַזֹּאת
 אֶת־הַמְּקָלֵל אֶל־מְחוֹזָל לְמַחְנָה וְסָמְכוּ כָּל־
 הַשְׁמֻעִים אֶת־יִדֵּיכֶם עַל־רָאשׁוֹ וְרַגְמוֹ
 אֹתוֹ בְּלַהֲעֵדָה:
¹⁵ וְאֶל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל תַּעֲבֹר לְאמֹר אִישׁ אִישׁ
 כִּי־יַקְלֵל אֱלֹהִיו וְנִשְׁאָחַת אֹתוֹ: ¹⁶ וַיַּקְרֹב שְׁמָר
 יְהוָה מֹות יוֹמָת רְגֹם יְרָגָם וּרְגָם בְּלַהֲעֵדָה
 פְּגַר בְּאָזְרָח בְּנַקְבּוֹשִׁים יוֹמָת:

northern Israelite temple, which the Jerusalemitic priesthood considered illegitimate. The mention of her lineage could also indicate Shelomith's prominence in the community.

14. lay their hands upon his head. By laying their hands on the blasphemer's head, those who heard the blasphemous words transfer onto the blasphemer the guilt they incurred from hearing God's name desecrated.

community leadership. On this translation, see at 8:3 and compare at 4:13.

16. This verse establishes the principle that the desecration of the divine name is a capital offense, whether committed by an Israelite or a resident alien (ger).

community leadership. See at v. 14.

stone that person. The public, communal, and visually arresting nature of stoning aims to discourage others from engaging in such activities and also serves to unify the community in a common stance against such behavior. In addition, this form of punishment, reserved for especially serious offenses, allows people to express their outrage as a unified group.

¹⁷If anyone kills any human being, that person shall be put to death. ¹⁸One who kills a beast shall make restitution for it: life for life. ¹⁹If anyone maims another [person]: what was done shall be done in return—²⁰fracture for fracture, eye for eye, tooth for tooth. The injury inflicted on a human being shall be inflicted in return. ²¹One who kills a beast shall make restitution for it; but one who kills a human being shall be put to death. ²²You shall have one standard for stranger and citizen alike: for I יְהוָה am your God.

²³Moses spoke thus to the Israelites. And they took the blasphemer outside the camp and pelted him with stones. The Israelites did as had commanded Moses.

¹⁷ וְאִישׁ כִּי יַבְּחֵה בֶּלְגַּנְפֵּשׁ אָדָם מֹות יוֹמָת:
¹⁸ וּמִבָּה נֶפֶשׁ־בְּהָמָה יַשְׁלַמְנָה נֶפֶשׁ תְּחַת
¹⁹ נֶפֶשׁ: ²⁰ וְאִישׁ כִּי־יַרְאָתָן מָוֵם בְּעַמְּיוֹתָו כִּי־אָשָׁר
²¹ עָשָׂה כֵּן יַעֲשֵׂה לוֹ: ²² שְׁבָר תְּחַת שְׁבָר עֵין
²³ תְּחַת עֵין שֵׁן תְּחַת שֵׁן כִּי־אָשָׁר יַתְּנוּ מָוֵם
²⁴ בְּאָדָם כֵּן יַנְתַּנוּ בָוֹ: ²⁵ וּמִבָּה בְּהָמָה
²⁶ יַשְׁלַמְנָה וּמִבָּה אָדָם יוֹמָת: ²⁷ מִשְׁפָט אֶחָד
יְהוָה לְכֶם בְּגָר בְּאוֹרֶה יְהוָה כִּי אָנָּי יְהוָה
אֶלְهֵיכֶם:
²⁸ וַיַּדַּבֵּר מֹשֶׁה אֶל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיֹּאמֶר
אֶת־הַמִּקְלָל אֶל־מְחוֹזָה לְמַחְנָה וַיַּרְגִּמוּ
אֹתוֹ אֶבֶן וּבְנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל עַשׂ כִּי־אָשָׁר צִוָּה
יְהוָה אֶת־מֹשֶׁה: פ

THE RETALIATION LAWS (lex talionis) (24:17–22)

The message of this parenthetical collection of laws is simply that with regard to retaliation (eye-for-an-eye) laws, the resident alien is under the same obligations as the citizen.

20. eye for eye. See at Exodus 21:24 for the same law and its elaboration.

THE PUNISHMENT OF THE BLASPHEMER (24:23)

The parashah concludes with the communal stoning of the blasphemer.

—Hilary Lipka

Another View

A PRIEST MAY NOT come in contact with a corpse except when the deceased is a close relative (21:1–3). The list of relatives does not mention the wife.

How do we account for the text's silence concerning the wife? The Torah gives two examples of a husband's burying a wife: Abraham buries Sarah (Genesis 23), and Jacob buries Rachel (Genesis 35). But these cases do not pertain to priests and thus do not shed light on this law.

One could claim that the wife's absence from the list of relatives reflects her more marginal status. As Katarzyna Grosz observes after studying documents from the 14th century B.C.E., "women do not become members of their husband's lineage—only their children do.... [The women] could be termed as a 'foreign element' in their husbands' families" ("Some Aspects of the Position of Women in Nuzi," in Women's Earliest Records, ed. B. S. Lesko, 1989, p. 178).

Yet one could also argue the reverse: no mention is made because none is necessary—because the wife is included ipso facto. Three lines of evidence support this interpretation. First is the idea that Leviticus 20:11 expresses about a unity between husband and wife. According to this verse, the nakedness of the mother is equivalent to that of the father, implying that the two are as one. Second, Genesis 2:24 expresses the unity of the couple by stating that the two become one flesh. Third, the Torah in several places includes a wife without mentioning her (see at Leviticus 10:14); in other words, the writer expects readers to keep wives in mind.

How do we account for the text's silence concerning the wife?

While both interpretations remain plausible in parashat Emor, neither can be confirmed.

If a priest may not bury his wife, who then buries her? The law in parashat Emor permits the priest to bury his mother, and thus a priest's wife can definitely be buried by her son. If there is no son, then the female members of the household, or members of her family of origin (if they are not priests) can still come in contact with her corpse and bury her.

—Tamara Cohn Eskenazi

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

None shall defile himself (21:1–2). These verses stipulate that kohanim (priests) may not come into contact with a corpse, with the exception of close relatives. The Rabbis of the Talmud later applied this list of close relatives to all mourners. That is, the relatives for whom a Jew sits shivah are those enumerated in Emor, with the Rabbis' additions of wives and married sisters (BT Mo'ed Katan 20b). The Rabbis interpreted the clause "except for the relatives that are closest (literally 'flesh') to him... he may defile himself" as a veiled reference to a wife (Midrash Sifra, Emor 1.4).

In spelling out the rabbinic definition of marriage, the Mishnah obliges a husband to bury his deceased wife—and then raises the issue of what constitutes a proper burial. One rabbi's answer takes for granted the vital role of women professionals in public mourning:

"Even the poorest husband in Israel must hire at least two flute-players and one wailing woman" (K'tubot 4:4).

In general, the laws of mourning treat men and women with parity. Women mourn, and are mourned, with only minor differences from men.

A widow...such he may not marry (21:14). The Rabbis preserved these biblical prohibitions limiting which women a man of priestly origin could marry. In fact, they went so far as to say that kohanim are hot-headed and sometimes divorce their wives without good reason; upon calming down, they then discover they cannot take their divorced wives back. To save kohanim from this predicament, the Rabbis instituted a special bill of divorce for kohanim that takes longer to prepare and would not be completed until the kohein has regained his composure. This would give him an opportunity to call off the divorce proceedings before it is too late (BT Bava Batra 16ob).

These are My fixed times (23:2). Leviticus 23 provides information about the Sabbath, the New Moon, Pesach, Shavuot, New Year, Yom Kippur, and Sukkot. These verses address the people in the second person masculine plural and nowhere is there any reference to women. Thus, one must inquire: were women, too, expected to offer a paschal lamb, blow the shofar, dwell in a sukkah, refrain from work on the Sabbath and holy days, and afflict themselves on Yom Kippur?

The Rabbis answered these questions in different ways and they also discussed women's obligations for Purim and Chanukah, two festivals that are not mentioned in the Torah. The basic premise is that women are considered responsible for obeying all of Judaism's negative commandments and for observing most of the positive commandments, including celebrating Shabbat and the festivals. A man should cause his children and household to rejoice on a festival (BT P'sachim 109a). However, the Rabbis explicitly exempted women from hearing the shofar on Rosh HaShanah; dwelling in a sukkah during the Sukkot festival; waving the lulav on Sukkot; and counting the Omer between Pesach and Shavuot. Since these are all commandments to be performed at fixed times of the year, they conform to the exemption of women from time-bound commandments prescribed in Mishnah Kiddushin 1:7.

However, the Talmud specifically obligated women to other time-bound festival observances. These included Kiddush (sanctification of wine) on the Sabbath (BT B'rachot 20b) and, according to most authorities, on the festivals as well; kindling Sabbath

Women must obey all of the negative commandments regarding sacred times.

and festival lights and the Chanukah lamp (BT Shabbat 23a); listening to M'gillat Esther on Purim (BT M'gillah 4a); and eating matzah (BT P'sachim 43b) and drinking four cups of wine at the Passover seder. Rabbi Joshua ben Levi justified women's inclusion in these Chanukah (BT Shabbat 23a), Pesach, and Purim rituals (BT M'gillah 4a), on the grounds that women, too, were included in these miracles. Women, like men, are required to fast and afflict themselves in various ways on the Day of Atonement and to refrain from doing any work (BT Sukkah 28b); they are also obligated to observe all other mandated fast days. [In the course of the 20th century, liberal movements in Judaism fostered women's equal participation in all aspects of festival and holiday observance and introduced a number of new rituals, some of which focus specifically on women and female experience. —Ed.]

There came out . . . a man whose mother (24:10). This narrative, by noting the Egyptian lineage of the father of the man who cursed God, implies that his mother was responsible for her son's horrendous behavior because she had married an Egyptian. Some of the Rabbis disagreed and exempted her from wrongdoing, suggesting that the Egyptian man slipped into her bed unbeknownst to her, and this was why her offspring was tainted (Tanchuma, Sh'mot 9). Others said the Torah recorded her name in full because she alone behaved in a promiscuous manner, whereas the other Israelite women acted modestly and did not consort with foreign men (Midrash B'midbar Rabbah 20).

EMOR

—Judith Hauptman

Contemporary Reflection

ALTHOUGH THE DESTRUCTION of the Temple (70 C.E.) eliminated the conditions that required priests to preserve certain laws of purity, the influence of such laws nevertheless continues. According to Emor, a priest (kohein) has to guard against possible defilement at all times. A movie produced by several religiously observant students at the Ma'ale School of Television, Film, and the Arts in Jerusalem illustrates some consequences of these laws for their contemporary circles.

Entitled "Cohen's Wife," this film concerns Rivki Cohen, a young ultra-orthodox woman who opens the door slightly for a strange man who has come asking for tzedakah (charity). The stranger then forces his way in and rapes her. This crime renders Rivki ritually impure to her husband. The film deals with how the husband approaches the rabbinical court as to whether he—a kohein—must divorce his wife because she is now defiled.

This deeply moving film depicts a loving couple that desperately wants to remain married, while at the same time wanting to observe Jewish law. The wife turns out to have the key to saving the marriage—by not saying the words "I was raped," and certainly not to her husband. Thus, since there was no witness, the husband could seek a sympathetic set of rabbis who simply would pretend that the rape had not taken place, thus allowing the couple to remain intact.

The problem, of course, is the guilt and confusion that both the wife and husband feel after the rabbinic decision; have they themselves resolved the problem or not? Will they be able to live their lives in peace with their guilty secret? This movie, like most made at Ma'ale, exposes viewers to the human conflicts, tragedies, and even comic situations that arise when people wish to live both according to Jewish law and to their honest feelings.

While we can expect the laws of Leviticus to have a strong impact primarily in certain religious circles, other ideas in Emor continue to have subtle ramifications for general society. One example is the stress found in Emor on the ideal of physical "perfection."

Some of the ideas behind priestly laws of ritual purity still influence our lives.

Leviticus 21:17–20 disqualifies a descendant of Aaron from carrying out the rituals of the priesthood if he is subject to certain physical deficiencies or disfigurements. Physical imperfection, it seems, impairs holiness.

While the priest's bodily perfection may no longer be a Jewish necessity, the idea and expectation of bodily perfection have become a cultural goal of the wider American Jewish population, with terrible consequences—particularly for women, regardless of age. By now most people are aware that many American Jewish girls starve themselves or over-exercise to become thin, or they have surgery on their noses and elsewhere to be more beautiful. So too, older Jewish women undergo a wide range of plastic surgery to remain attractive. On this drive among young girls to be pretty at all costs—and to be intolerant of those who are not—see The JGirl's Guide: The Young Jewish Woman's Handbook for Coming of Age (co-authored by me, Penina Adelman, and Ali Feldman, 2005). Mothers pass the goal of beauty on to their daughters, and men reinforce it. By manipulating women's self-confidence about their appearance, the beauty industry has become a highly lucrative business. The point is that each girl or woman considers herself to be defective or imperfect, no matter what she does. This idea derives from the notion that there is such a thing as bodily perfection, a concept presented in Emor.

The motivation to be beautiful by any means should not be dismissed out of hand as misguided, however. After all, the Bible and much of Western culture frequently equate beauty with goodness.

Several admired matriarchs—Sarah and Rebekah, for example—are beautiful, even “very beautiful.” In fact, one term for beauty in the Bible actually uses forms of the word tov (good), further promoting such associations. Thus, kindly Rebekah is tovat mar'eh (“exceedingly beautiful,” Genesis 24:16). And Esther is touted for her beauty, which enables her to carry out later virtuous deeds. Based on these cases and many others, I suggest that the Torah’s preference for beauty is a clear theme that appears in many places, including the Emor section on the necessity for physical perfection among priests.

By and large it is not only the preference for beauty that has spilled into Western culture, but also the equation between beauty and goodness. Children’s fairy tales typically feature the beautiful princess who is good, the handsome prince who is also good, and the ugly witch who is evil. Psychologists have found that people who are attractive are trusted more than those who are not; handsome people are likely to rise in the ranks of their organizations and be elected to office. Physically attractive individuals, research shows, are perceived as more intelligent, sociable, talented, and moral. There is even a term for this prejudice: beautyism—the idea that what is beautiful is good, and what is not beautiful is bad. Beautyism is a danger to the self-esteem of those who are not physically attractive and can lead to arrogance among those who are. While efforts to urge children to look beyond physical appearance may address race and disability, they almost never deal with beauty. This silent prejudice is thus able to persist and be reinforced throughout popular culture, religious instruction, and the education system.

Some passages in the Bible, however, do not equate beauty with goodness, possibly in an attempt to counteract the heavy emphasis on the subtle equation elsewhere. Ruth, for example, is a model of goodness but is never called beautiful. More notable is the description of the “woman of valor” (eshet chayil) in Proverbs 31, which explicitly repudiates beauty as a criterion for virtue: “Grace is deceptive, and beauty is illusory; it is for her fear of פָּנָים that a woman is to be praised” (31:30). Yet the negation can be also read as an admission that the cultural norm is otherwise.

Emor’s implication that a priest must not remain married to his wife if she is raped is a case of punishing the victim. So, too, Emor’s exclusion of a blind descendant of Aaron from priestly activities punishes the handicapped. Contemporary society tries not to punish rape victims or disabled individuals. While it is true that we have tried to distance ourselves from these two ancient ideas, we have made hardly any progress with regard to the obverse, that is, unfairly rewarding those who are physically beautiful and punishing those who are not.

—Shulamit Reinharz

Voices

from The Kohain's Wife

Shulamith Surnamer

Leviticus 21:1–4

*In the month of Av month of mourning
my rabbi-father yet alive but my mother newly-gone...*

It is lonely to be the wife of a kohain
at funeral time
by myself I sit in the front row
at the funeral chapel listening to the eulogy over my nearest flesh and blood knowing that my husband and sons are standing in the parking lot of the funeral home listening to the same eulogy piped over a loudspeaker outside just for them
who may not be in the same room with death

Yahrzeit

Enid Dame

Leviticus 21:1–3

The yahrzeit flame is beating its wings in a cup on the edge of my kitchen sink.

Its stealthy gold shadow breathing along the wall
suddenly terrifies me:
like finding a bird in my bedroom still alive pulsating nervous, changing the shape of the day.

No intruder is ever harmless.
And, Mother, I've got you cornered, fierce memory pacing your glass cage,
houseguest with nowhere to go.
I'll lock myself in alongside you.
Today, we'll remind each other of old connections, old journeys, from muddy, sincere Indiana to ragged-edged Brooklyn with all its stray cats, its ecstatic vegetable stands.

from A Prayer for Parents of Babies with Disabilities

Debra Orenstein

Leviticus 21:16–23

Our fantasy of birth is that all goes well,... that mother and child emerge healthy and “perfect.” For parents who have a child with disabilities, many of the standard phrases and clichés—the counting of toes and fingers, the wish for a future filled with Torah learning—ring hollow, or even sound cruel. Yet the exceptional child is created in God’s image, and tradition teaches that God’s chesed (steadfast love) for us has nothing to do with physical prowess or mental agility, and everything to do with the simple fact that we are.

Looking toward Shabbat

Shelly Goldman, Lara Laufer, Shari Lore

Leviticus 23:3

The week is done...
 I washed 7 loads of laundry,
 I filed 15 briefs with the courts,
 I prepared 21 meals,
 I listened to 30 customer complaints,
 I carried 60 pounds of groceries,
 I graded 100 spelling tests,
 I drove 200 miles in carpools,
 I dried buckets of tears.

All my hours have been Used up by others' needs, others' demands,
 others' priorities.

When the week is done, and I light the Shabbat candles, my time begins.
 I take a deep breath and let go.
 I embrace the peace of Shabbat,
 Standing with the women who came before me and those who will follow.

The candles' flames draw me in,
 Allowing me to lay down
 the burdens of the week,
 In order to restore and refresh my soul.

This is my time to take in Shabbat, and keep it with me
 for the rest of the week—Giving me strength to Wash 7 loads of laundry
 File 15 briefs with the courts
 Prepare 21 meals...

The Sabbath Song

Kadya Molodowsky (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

Leviticus 23:3

I fought until Sabbath eve
 With the six emperors
 Of the six days of the week.
 Sunday they confiscated my sleep.
 Monday they scattered my salt.
 And on the third day, my God,
 They flung away my bread
 And, above my face, they fenced with knights.
 They caught my flying dove
 And slaughtered her.
 And so forth, until Friday dawn.
 And this, you see, ends my whole week,
 With the dying of my dove-flying.

At dusk, I kindled four candles
 And the Sabbath Queen came to me.
 Her countenance shone
 And the whole world became Sabbath.
 My scattered salt
 Glittered in the saltshaker,
 And my dove, my flying dove,
 Flapped her wings
 And groomed her throat.

The Sabbath Queen blessed my candles.
 They shone with a clear flame.
 The light covered the days of the week
 And the battle with the six emperors.
 The greenness of mountains—
 Is the greenness of Sabbath.
 The silver of a river—
 Is the silver of Sabbath.
 The song of the wind—
 Is the singing of Sabbath.
 And the song of my heart
 Is the eternal Sabbath.

בְּהָר ◆ B'har

LEVITICUS 25:1–26:2

Proclaiming and Protecting Liberty

PARASHAT B'HAR ("at the mountain [of]") contains laws that aim to protect economically disadvantaged members of the community from permanently losing their freedom and means of livelihood. In Israel, as in other parts of the ancient Near East, those households that fell into economically precarious situations risked losing their land; moreover, their members might become indentured servants or slaves. Israel, like its neighbors, developed legislation to prevent the rich from exploiting the poor. This parashah highlights economic and social concerns through a theological lens. In the process, it expresses what it means for the Israelites to be both a holy people and God's freed servants. Ethics and social justice do not constitute a separate sphere from ritual in the book of Leviticus but are integral to it. See, for example, the laws at the end of parashat Vayikra (5:20–26). Parashat B'har illustrates how the demand for holiness needs to be implemented in socio-economic practices, making it possible for economically disadvantaged Israelites to "come back home" to family and land.

Leviticus 25, like Exodus 21 and Deuteronomy 15, seeks to provide a safety net to preserve and protect land-holdings and economic stability. In other parts of the ancient Near East, kings issued royal edicts in an attempt to restore economic balance by canceling certain debts, especially when the rulers ascended to the throne. The jubilee legislation envisions a permanently regulated system for adjusting economic imbalance every 50 years, independently of the goodwill of rulers. The legislation also serves to protect the land itself from exploitation. The rationale for land protection is theological: the land belongs to God; moreover, the destiny of the land and of the people are intertwined.

The laws include the following: (1) land must lie fallow every seventh year and in the fiftieth (jubilee) year; (2) land holdings must return to their original owners at the jubilee year or be redeemed earlier; (3) indentured servants or slaves must be released at the jubilee year or be redeemed earlier. Leviticus 25 is the only place in the Torah that describes the jubilee laws. Its laws, however, stand in tension with those in Exodus and Deuteronomy that institute release in the seventh year.

In the book of Leviticus, ethics and social justice are integrated with ritual.

The only women explicitly mentioned in this parashah are slaves or servants (the Hebrew amah could mean either; see at v. 44). Leviticus 25:6–7 states that female slaves or servants, like male ones, are to benefit from the land's Sabbath; vv. 44–46 state that foreign slaves, including women, are to remain slaves in perpetuity (unlike Israelite slaves).

The language of release and redemption in the parashah takes the masculine form but functions inclusively to refer to both women and men. Other biblical texts illuminate how such laws would apply to women. Narratives such as Numbers 27 and 36 describe women inheriting land; II Kings 4, 6, and Nehemiah 5 depict situations in which women are subject to loss of freedom and land due to destitution; Jeremiah 34 refers to the release of female slaves; and Ruth 4 describes the redemption of land sold by Naomi. Clearly, conditions that drive persons into servitude—and the resolutions of those conditions that Leviticus requires—apply to women as well as to men.

—*Tamara Cohn Eskenazi
Jocelyn Hudson*

Outline—

I. INTRODUCTION

Additional Teachings from Sinai (25:1)

II. LAWS REGARDING THE LAND'S SABBATH (25:2–7)

III. THE FIFTIETH-YEAR JUBILEE (25:8–54)

- A. Jubilee laws for the land (vv. 8–22)
- B. Reasons for the jubilee: proclamation of liberty (vv. 23–24)
- C. Laws protecting Israelites from permanent poverty and servitude (vv. 25–54)
 - 1. Laws to protect land holdings (vv. 25–28)
 - 2. Laws to protect homes (vv. 29–34)
 - 3. Laws to protect Israelites from debt-slavery (vv. 35–54)

IV. CONCLUSION

God's Ownership of the Israelites as Basis for Jubilee Laws (25:55–26:2)

25:1

יְהוָה spoke to Moses on Mount Sinai:
²Speak to the Israelite people and say to them:

When you enter the land that I assign to you, the land shall observe a sabbath of יְהוָה. ³Six years you may sow your field and six years you may prune your vineyard and gather in the yield. ⁴But in the seventh year the land shall have a sabbath of

כִּי וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים בְּהָר סִינַי
 לְאָמֵר: ²דָּבָר אֲלֹהִים יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמַרְתָּ אֲלֹהִים
 כִּי תָבֹא אֲלֹהָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אָנָי נָתַן לְכֶם
 וְשִׁבְתָה הָאָרֶץ שְׁבָת לְיְהוָה: ³שָׁשׁ שָׁנִים
 תּוֹרֵע שְׁדָך וְשָׁשׁ שָׁנִים תִּזְמַר בְּרָמֶה
 וְאָסְפָת אֶת-תְּבוֹאתָה: ⁴ וּבְשָׁנָה הַשְׁבִיעָת

Introduction

ADDITIONAL TEACHINGS FROM SINAI (25:1)

Leviticus 1:1 states that God spoke to Moses “from the Tent of Meeting”; but here, God speaks to Moses “on Mount Sinai.” According to many scholars, Leviticus 25 represents an independent tradition that concludes in 26:46. The attribution to Sinai emphasizes the critical importance of ensuring freedom and combating social and economic injustice: breaking these rules constitutes breaking the Sinai covenant.

Laws Regarding the Land's Sabbath (25:2–7)

The land, like the people, must have a sabbath rest, and therefore it must lie fallow every seventh year. The idea may seem like a utopian fantasy, but Baruch Levine points out that letting the land lie fallow was a practical aspect of ancient agriculture, especially where extensive irrigation was utilized. He explains that it “served to reduce the quantity of alkalines, sodium and calcium deposited in the soil” (Leviticus, 1989, p. 272) and thus helped preserve the land’s fertility. Practical considerations aside, for Leviticus this law expresses the supremacy of God, to whom Israel and the land ultimately belong.

2. When you enter the land. Unlike the weekly Shabbat that the Israelites are to observe in all places and at all times, the land’s shabbat is to be observed only in the Land of Israel.

4. in the seventh year. Exodus 23:10–11 also mandates letting the land lie fallow every seventh year. Scholars suggest that Exodus refers to a rotating fallow year; each Israeli farmer would calculate every seventh year individually for his or her own parcel of land. Our parashah, however, describes a uniform calendar in which every farmer must observe the fallow year at the same seventh year, as part of a fiftieth-year jubilee. Josephus, the 1st-century Jewish historian, reports that the Jews

- The text does not appear to address many questions regarding the status of women.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 760

- We learn that a husband should honor his wife more than he honors himself.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 760

- What regulations do we require today to help us nurture ourselves and the planet?

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 762

- Gruel was a great luxury in our home, and I bitterly resented having to share any of it.

VOICES ► 764

complete rest, a sabbath of יהוה: you shall not sow your field or prune your vineyard.⁵ You shall not reap the aftergrowth of your harvest or gather the grapes of your untrimmed vines; it shall be a year of complete rest for the land.⁶ But you may eat whatever the land during its sabbath will produce—you, your male and female slaves, the hired and bound laborers who live with you,⁷ and your cattle and the beasts in your land may eat all its yield.

⁸You shall count off seven weeks of years—seven times seven years—so that the period of seven weeks of years gives you a total of forty-nine

שְׁבַת שְׁבָתוֹן יְהוָה לְאָרֶץ שְׁבַת לְיְהוָה
שְׂדָה לֹא תִזְרַע וְכַרְמֶל לֹא תִזְמַר: ⁵ אַתָּה
סְפִיחַ קָצִירָל לֹא תִקְצַר וְאַתְּ עֲנֵבִי נְוִירָה:
לֹא תִבְצַר שְׁנַת שְׁבָתוֹן יְהוָה לְאָרֶץ:
⁶ וְהִרְתָּה שְׁבַת הָאָרֶץ לְכֶט לְאַכְלָה לְכֶ
וְלִעְבָּדָה וְלְאַמְתָּחָה וְלְשִׁכְרָתָה וְלִתְוֹשְׁבָה
הַגְּרִים עַמָּךְ: ⁷ וְלִבְהַמְתָּחָה וְלִחְיָה אֲשֶׁר
בְּאַרְצָךְ תְּהִי בְּלִתְבוֹאָתָה לְאַכְלָה: ⁸
⁸ וְסְפִירָתָךְ לֹכֶד שְׁבֻעָת שְׁנַיִם שְׁבֻעָ
שְׁנַיִם שְׁבֻעָ פְּעָמִים וְהִיוּ לֹכֶד יְמִיל שְׁבֻעָ
שְׁבֻעָת הַשְׁנִים תִּשְׁעָ וְאֶרְבעָם שְׁנָה:

were exempt from a certain imperial tax on the seventh year “which they call the Sabbatical Year, because thereon they neither receive the fruits of their trees, nor do they sow their land” (Antiquities of the Jews 14.10.6).

5–6. Israelite farmers and their households may eat from the aftergrowth of their fields—making it possible for families to live off the land. With a fixed seventh-year land rest, only fallow land would be available every seven years. Because this system would not provide a social network for the poor, Leviticus 19:9–10 and 23:22 state that one must leave the edges of one’s field and the gleanings of one’s harvest for the poor and the stranger, and not pick one’s vineyards bare or gather fallen fruit. (Exodus 23 does not specify these provisions but implies a rotation of fallow land; see the previous comment.)

you, your male and female slaves, the hired and bound laborers. Here the Hebrew term for “you” is masculine singular, yet it clearly includes the entire extended family. This usage confirms that elsewhere the text’s second-person masculine language does not necessarily exclude women from its audience.

This phrase contains one of only two explicit references to females in the parashah (see also vv. 44–46). The language echoes the Sabbath ruling in Deuteronomy 5:14 in which the entire household is to rest. Here the goal is to provide food for these otherwise vulnerable members of the household.

Landowners are responsible for feeding those individuals directly under their control, but not the poor or disenfranchised at large, perhaps because the predictable aftergrowth was not abundant (see Jacob Milgrom, Leviticus 23–27, 2001, p. 2162).

The Fiftieth-Year Jubilee

(25:8–54)

Jubilee laws demand the release of land and persons every fifty years. The purpose of the laws is to ensure the economic and social freedom of the Israelites, whom God collectively redeemed from slavery in Egypt. These statutes attempt to preserve land tenure. (In Numbers 36, clan leaders—concerned about land transfer to another tribe—invoke the laws of the jubilee when they raise questions about the land granted to Zelophehad’s daughters, Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.) The laws also aim to guarantee that no Israelite will be permanently destitute. Land and people constitute the most basic resources necessary to ensure livelihood. Therefore, the jubilee laws address these issues together—and in doing so, solidify the claim that only God can own Israelite people and land.

years. ⁹Then you shall sound the horn loud; in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month—the Day of Atonement—you shall have the horn sounded throughout your land ¹⁰and you shall hallow the fiftieth year. You shall proclaim release throughout the land for all its inhabitants. It shall be a jubilee for you: each of you shall return to your holding and each of you shall return to your family. ¹¹That fiftieth year shall be a jubilee for you: you shall not sow, neither shall you reap the aftergrowth or harvest the untrimmed vines, ¹²for it is a jubilee. It shall be holy to you: you may only eat the growth direct from the field.

¹³In this year of jubilee, each of you shall return to your holding. ¹⁴When you sell property to your

9 וְהַעֲבֹרֶת שׁוֹפֵר תָּרוּעָה בְּחִדְשָׁה הַשְׁבָעִי
בְּעַשֶׂר לְחִדְשָׁה בַּיּוֹם הַכְּפָרִים תִּعֲבִירוּ
שׁוֹפֵר בְּכָל־אֶרְצָכֶם: ¹⁰ וְקִדְשָׁתֶם אֶת שְׁנִית
הַחֲמִשִׁים שָׁנָה וּקְרָאתֶם דָּרוֹר בְּאָרֶץ
לְכָל־יֹשְׁבֵיהָ יּוֹבֵל הוּא תְּהִיא לְכֶם וּשְׁבַתֶּם
אִישׁ אַל־אֲחֹזֶת וְאִישׁ אַל־מְשֻׁפְחוֹת
תִּשְׁבוּ: ¹¹ יוֹבֵל הוּא שְׁנִית הַחֲמִשִׁים שָׁנָה
תְּהִיא לְכֶם לֹא תְזַרְעוּ וְלֹא תְקַצְרוּ אֶת־
סְפִיחַתְּךָ וְלֹא תְבַצְרוּ אֶת־ינּוֹרְךָ: ¹² בַּיּוֹבֵל
הוּא קְדֹשָׁה תְּהִיא לְכֶם מִן־הַשְׁלָדָה
תִּאֲכִלוּ אֶת־תְּבָאָתָה:

¹³ בְּשְׁנִית הַיּוֹבֵל הַזֹּאת תִּשְׁבוּ אִישׁ אַל־
¹⁴ אֲחֹזֶת: ¹⁴ וְכִירְתְּמִבְרוּ מִמֶּרְךָ לְעַמִּיתְךָ אַל־

JUBILEE LAWS FOR THE LAND (25:8–22)

Leviticus 25 demands that the land, like the people, have a Shabbat in the fiftieth year (in addition to every seventh year). Such legislation symbolizes the intimate bond between the Land of Israel, the people, and God. Some scholars question whether Jews actually observed these laws in ancient times—and if so, to what extent. Josephus, when discussing the jubilee year, does not mention any land lying fallow (Antiquities of the Jews 3.12.3).

9. seventh month. The jubilee and sabbatical years begin in the month of Tishrei. (Nisan remains the first month, commemorating the exodus from Egypt.)

10. hallow. The Hebrew verbal root is k-d-sh. Just like the seventh day (see for example, Genesis 2:3), so too the jubilee year is sanctified. See also v. 12.

proclaim release throughout the land for all its inhabitants. This verse sums up the goal of the laws in the parashah: to ensure the fundamental freedom from economic oppression. Heb. dror (“release”) has often been translated as “freedom” or “liberty.” In 1751, the Pennsylvania Assembly ordered a bronze bell to be cast with an English translation of this clause inscribed on it, to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of that American colony’s constitution; the inscription on that bell, now known as the Liberty Bell, is: “Proclaim Liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof.”

jubilee. Heb. yovel, a word that in the Torah is confined to Leviticus 25 and 27 (seventeen times), with one exception (Numbers 36:4; see the introduction to this unit on p. 750, above). The word also means “a ram” or “a ram’s horn.”

return to your holding...return to your family. The jubilee system aims principally at reuniting families and allowing them to live on their land.

13. your holding. Land holdings are inalienable, meaning that persons who sell such holdings regain them automatically and freely at the time of the jubilee. Holdings that have been sold can be redeemed prior to the jubilee by paying for them.

Several biblical texts take for granted that Israelite women sometimes own land. In Numbers 27, five sisters—Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah—demand and inherit their father’s land. From Joshua 15:16–19 and Judges 1:12–15, it seems that a certain Achsah requested and received land from her father after she had married. In addition, II Kings 4:8–37 and 8:1–6 describe a wealthy woman who owns land.

neighbor, or buy any from your neighbor, you shall not wrong one another.¹⁵ In buying from your neighbor, you shall deduct only for the number of years since the jubilee; and in selling to you, that person shall charge you only for the remaining crop years:¹⁶ the more such years, the higher the price you pay; the fewer such years, the lower the price; for what is being sold to you is a number of harvests.¹⁷ Do not wrong one another, but fear your God; for I יהוה am your God.

¹⁸You shall observe My laws and faithfully keep My rules, that you may live upon the land in security;¹⁹ the land shall yield its fruit and you shall eat your fill, and you shall live upon it in security.²⁰ And should you ask, “What are we to eat in the seventh year, if we may neither sow nor gather in our crops?”²¹ I will ordain My blessing for you in the sixth year, so that it shall yield a crop sufficient for three years.²² When you sow in the eighth year, you will still be eating old grain of that crop; you will be eating the old until the ninth year, until its crops come in.

14–22. Persons with little or no reserve food sources become especially vulnerable when they cannot raise crops. Leviticus repeatedly warns against exploiting these vulnerable Israelites, and it promises sufficient produce for all if the society follows these laws and reveres God.

14. neighbor. Heb. amit, which refers to a fellow Israelite.

you shall not wrong one another. In this verse, the assumed relationship is between one Israelite and another—a relationship of equals. Elsewhere, the Torah commands the Israelites not to wrong a stranger, a foreigner (Exodus 22:20, Leviticus 19:33), or a runaway slave (Deuteronomy 23:17).

15–16. The number of years to the jubilee's release determines the price of redemption.

17. Do not wrong one another. This repeated

קָנָה מֵיד עַמִּיתָךְ אֶל-תֹּנוּ אִישׁ אֲתִ-אָחִיו:
¹⁵ בְּמִסְפֵּר שָׁנִים אַחֲרֵי יְיוּבֵל תִּקְנֹה מֵאתָ
 עַמִּיתָךְ בְּמִסְפֵּר שָׁנִים תִּקְנֹה מֵאתָ
¹⁶ לְפִי | רַב הַשָּׁנִים תִּרְבֹּה מִקְנָתוֹ וְלֹפֶל
 מַעַט הַשָּׁנִים תִּמְעִיט מִקְנָתוֹ כִּי מִסְפֵּר
 תִּבְואָתָה הוּא מְכַר לְךָ: ¹⁷ וְלֹא תֹנוּ אִישׁ
 אֲתִ-עֲמִיתָה וַיַּרְאָתָה מַאֲלָה-יְהִיךְ פִּי אֲנִי יְהֹוָה
 אֱלֹהֵיכֶם:

¹⁸ וְעַשְׂתֶּם אֶת-חֲקָתִי וְאֶת-מִשְׁפָּטִי
 תִּשְׁמְרוּ וְעַשְׂתֶּם אֶתְם וַיֵּשְׁבַּתֶּם עַל-הָאָרֶץ לְבָטֵח: ¹⁹ וַיִּתְגַּנֵּה הָאָרֶץ פָּרִיה
 וְאֶכְלַתֶּם לְשָׁבָע וַיֵּשְׁבַּתֶּם לְבָטֵח עַלְיהָ:
²⁰ וְכִי תֹאמְרוּ מַה-ינָאכֶל בְּשָׁנָה הַשְׁבִּיעָת
 הָنָן לֹא גָּרָע וְלֹא נָאָסָף אֶת-תִּבְואָתָנוּ:
²¹ וְצִוִּיתִי אֶת-בְּרָכָתִי לְכֶם בְּשָׁנָה הַשְׁבִּיעָת
 וְעַשְׂתֶּם אֶת-הַתְּבוֹאָה לְשָׁלֵש הַשָּׁנִים:
²² וּזְרֻעָתֶם אֶת הַשָּׁנָה הַשְׁמִינִית וְאֶכְלַתֶּם
 מִן-הַתְּבוֹאָה יִשְׁן עַד | הַשָּׁנָה הַתְּשִׁיעָת עַד-
 בּוֹא תִּבְואָתָה תְּאַכְּלוּ יִשְׁן:

prohibition (see v. 14) links ethical behavior between Israelites with their relationship to the Divine.

but fear your God. Fearing God stands in direct contrast to wronging another person.

18–19. These verses promise security to the people if they follow God's rules. Security includes having ample food—enough to satisfy (sova). It also includes living securely in the land—being safe from enemies.

20–22. These verses address pragmatic concerns regarding the economic viability of the jubilee system. God promises agricultural surplus and instructs the Israelites how to prepare for it and use it. This passage underscores the convictions that the land belongs solely to God and that God controls its productivity. Assurance is given that God will provide for those who observe the jubilee laws.

²³But the land must not be sold beyond reclaim, for the land is Mine; you are but strangers resident with Me. ²⁴Throughout the land that you hold, you must provide for the redemption of the land.

²⁵If one of your kin is in straits and has to sell part of a holding, the nearest redeemer shall come and redeem what that relative has sold. ²⁶If a person has no one to be redeemer but prospers and

²³וְהַאֲرֹץ לֹא תִמְכֵר לֶצְמָתָה בַּיּוֹלֵד הָאָרֶץ כִּי־גְּרוּם וְתוֹשְׁבָים אַפְּסָם עַמְקִי :

²⁴וְבָכֶל אָרֶץ אֲחֹזֹתְכֶם גָּאֵלָה תִּתְנַזֵּן לְאָרֶץ : ס

²⁵כִּי־יִמּוֹה אֲלֹיָךְ וּמִכֶּר מִאֲחֹזָתוֹ וּבָא גָּאֵלוֹ הַקָּרְבָּן אֲלֹיָךְ וְגָאֵל אֵת מִמְכֵר אֲחֹיו :

²⁶וְאִישׁ כִּי לֹא יִהְיֶה־לְךָ גָּאֵל וְהַשִּׁגָּה

REASONS FOR THE JUBILEE: PROCLAMATION OF LIBERTY (25:23–24)

These verses articulate the rationale for the jubilee laws that preceded, and they set the stage for the ones that are to follow: The land, like the people (see also v. 55), belongs exclusively to God. People's claim to the land and to each other cannot supersede God's claim. The jubilee's laws of redemption are an expression of God's ultimate ownership of the land (and of the people).

LAWS PROTECTING ISRAELITES FROM PERMANENT POVERTY AND SERVITUDE (25:25–54)

Jubilee regulations stipulate both the return of land and the release of Israelites who were indentured on account of insolvency. The laws in this section apply to persons compelled to sell their land, home, and persons—three related stages of decline into poverty. Initial responsibility to help falls on relatives of the impoverished seller. If they do not do so, chances are that the seller will fall victim to further stages of destitution. The laws that follow aim to prevent the decline from becoming irreversible.

Laws to Protect Land Holdings (25:25–28)

Once the ancient Israelites are established in the Land of Israel, they live in an agricultural society—in which land equals life. Selling a portion of one's inherited holding would mean giving up a vital source of livelihood, because most Israelites are members of farm families that depend on the land's produce. Such a sale would be a first step in the slippery slope toward potential destitution. Jubilee laws presume that agricultural land holdings are inalienable: they belong to God, who gave each one to a particular Israelite clan in perpetuity.

25. If one of your kin. Verses 48–49 list genealogical relationships from nearest to the more distant. Generally speaking, kinship ties in the Bible include female as well as male relations. For example, Jacob goes to the family of his mother Rebekah to escape his brother's wrath (Genesis 28; see further at Genesis 10:1). Leviticus 25, however, seems to extend the notion of kinship to embrace the entire Israelite community.

redeemer. Heb. goel, meaning a family member with means, who is obligated to "bail out" destitute relatives. Since Leviticus 25 extends the notion of kinship, it fundamentally makes all members of the Israelite community responsible for the economic welfare of the disadvantaged. The book of Ruth illustrates a redemption process: Boaz, a relative of impoverished Naomi, informs a closer relative that Naomi had sold or is selling land. Boaz invites the other man to redeem the land, though he proposes to redeem it himself if this potential redeemer does not (4:1–12). The land is presumably expected to revert back to Naomi's (or Ruth's) heir, which may explain why the less affluent relative lets wealthy Boaz acquire the land. It is noteworthy that Naomi sells the land but that Boaz negotiates on her behalf.

acquires enough to redeem with,²⁷ the years since its sale shall be computed and the difference shall be refunded to the party to whom it was sold, so that the person returns to that holding.²⁸ If that person lacks sufficient means to recover it, what was sold shall remain with the purchaser until the jubilee; in the jubilee year it shall be released, so that the person returns to that holding.

²⁹If someone sells a dwelling house in a walled city, it may be redeemed until a year has elapsed since its sale; the redemption period shall be a year.³⁰ If it is not redeemed before a full year has elapsed, the house in the walled city shall pass to the purchaser beyond reclaim throughout the ages; it shall not be released in the jubilee.³¹ But houses in villages that have no encircling walls shall be classed as open country: they may be redeemed, and they shall be released through the jubilee.³² As for the cities of Levi, the houses in the cities it holds: Levi shall forever have the right of redemption.³³ Such property as may be redeemed from Levi—houses sold in a city it holds—shall be released through the jubilee; for the houses in the cities of Levi are its holding among the Israelites.³⁴ But the unenclosed land about its cities cannot be sold, for that is its holding for all time.

27–28. The original owner has the right to redeem the holding at any point. If that does not happen, the holding reverts back to the original owner in the jubilee year. The price for redeeming the land early must be computed fairly, taking into account the value that the buyer already received and the number of harvests (years) to the next jubilee.

Laws to Protect Homes (25:29–34)

Loss of a home through foreclosure or sale represents the next step in the economic decline. Nehemiah 5:1–5 describes persons mortgaging their fields and homes in order to get food—and even losing them due to insolvency. The laws of jubilee seek to enable persons to reposess their homes.

יְדוֹ וַיַּמְצֵא בָּדִי גָּאָלָתוֹ: ²⁷ וְחַשְׁבֶּן אֶת־שְׁנִי מִמְפְּרוֹ וְהַשְׁבֵּן אֶת־הַעֲדָף לְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר מִכְרָלָו וְשַׁבֵּן לְאַחֲרָתוֹ: ²⁸ וְאֵם לְאַמְצָא הַיְהּוּדִים דַּיְעַשְׂבֵּן לוֹ וְהַיְהּ מִמְפְּרוֹ בִּידֵךְ הַקָּנָה אָתוֹ עַד שָׁנַת הַיּוֹבֵל וַיֵּצֵא בִּיבֵּל וְשַׁבֵּן לְאַחֲרָתוֹ:

²⁹ וְאִישׁ כִּי־יִמְכַר בֵּית־מוֹשֵׁב עִיר חֻמָּה וְהַיְתָה גָּאָלָתוֹ עַד־תָּמַם שָׁנַת מִמְפְּרוֹ יָמִים תְּהִיּוּ גָּאָלָתוֹ: ³⁰ וְאֵם לְאַיְגָל עַד־מְלָאת לֹא שָׁנָה תִּמְמָה וְקִם הַבַּיִת אֲשֶׁר־בָּעֵיר אֲשֶׁר־לֹא לֹא חֻמָּה לְצִמְתָּה לְקָנָה אָתוֹ לְדַרְתָּיו לֹא יֵצֵא בִּיבֵּל: ³¹ וּבְתִּי הַחֲצִירִים אֲשֶׁר אַיִן־לָהֶם חַמָּה סְבִיב עַל־שָׁהָה הָאָרֶץ יִחְשַׁב גָּאָלָה תְּהִיּוּ הַלְּוִיּוֹם וּבִבֵּל יֵצֵא: ³² וּעֲרֵי הַלְּוִיּוֹם בְּתִי עָרִי אֲחַזָּתָם גָּאָלָת עַולְם תְּהִיּוּ לְלִוִּים: ³³ וְאַשְׁר יִגְאַל מִן־הַלְּוִיּוֹם וַיֵּצֵא מִמְפְּרִבִּית וּעִיר אֲחַזָּתָם בִּיבֵּל כִּי בְּתִי עָרֵי הַלְּוִיּוֹם הוּא אֲחַזָּתָם בְּתוֹךְ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ³⁴ וּשְׂהָה מִגְּרָשׁ עִירֵיהֶם לֹא יִמְכַר פִּי־אֲחַזָּתָם עַולְם הִיא לָהֶם: ס

29–31. Leviticus 25 reflects the different economic realities of urban and rural communities. Urban dwellings are not as protected by jubilee laws and do not revert back to the owner. They can, however, be redeemed within a year. Possibly these dwellings were not perceived as integral to a person's work.

32–34. This is the only mention of Levites in the book of Leviticus. The Levites function as sanctuary personnel for all Israelites and therefore do not have their own tribal land. Instead, they receive 48 towns scattered among other tribe's portions (see Numbers 35:1–18). Their urban holdings are therefore inalienable (like farm holdings), remaining theirs in perpetuity.

³⁵If your kin, being in straits, come under your authority, and are held by you as though resident aliens, let them live by your side: ³⁶do not exact advance or accrued interest, but fear your God. Let

³⁵וְקִרְבָּנוֹת אֶחָיו וַמְתָה יְדוֹ עַמְּךָ וְהַחֲזָקָתָ
בָּו גֵּר וְתוֹשֵׁב וְחַי עַמְּךָ : ³⁶אַל-תַּקְחֵ מִאֶת
גַּשֵּׁר וְתַרְבֵּית וְרַאֲתָ מְאַלְמָנָה וְתַיְ אֶחָיךְ

Laws to Protect Israelites from Debt-Slavery (25:35–54)

Debt-slavery represents the most severe consequence of insolvency. Some biblical evidence suggests that daughters may have been especially vulnerable to being used as indentured labor for the household's debts (see at Exodus 21:7–11). Thus indenture may have been particularly unfortunate for nubile females, whose virginity (and thus marriageability) may have been at risk in an indentured context. At the same time, it is possible that children benefited from access to food in the more affluent household to which they were indentured.

Several laws in the Torah seek to regulate and ameliorate the conditions of Israelite debt-slaves. Exodus 21:2–11 and Deuteronomy 15:12–18 demand the release of slaves in the seventh year, and Deuteronomy 15:1–3 requires canceling debts in the seventh year. These laws stand in tension with Leviticus 25, which mentions mandatory release only in the fiftieth year.

Some scholars attempt to account for the inconsistency by claiming that Exodus and Deuteronomy refer to selling a dependent member of the household, whereas Leviticus 25 pertains to the head of the household (so Gregory C. Chirichigno, Debt-Slavery in Israel and the Ancient Near East, 1993, pp. 352–54). More likely, however, the tradition preserves diverse perspectives in the attempt to cope with complex issues and changing circumstances.

35–46. The Hebrew that refers to impoverished kin is couched mostly in the singular. To reflect the gender-inclusive sense here, the present translation extends the plural language of the summary statement in v. 42 to the rest of the passage, as needed.

35–38. These laws attempt to protect Israelites from irreversible poverty by prohibiting Israelites from charging interest on loans to other Israelites in distress.

35. If your kin. Scholars debate whether the reference pertains only to a blood relative or extends to any member of the Israelite community.

let them live by your side. Immediate relatives are urged to support the poor member of the family. A 21st-century analogy might be finding the person a job in one's own business so as to prevent homelessness and starvation.

36. A drought, a bad harvest, or an illness might force a farmer to seek loans. To help prevent decline into irreversible poverty, these verses permit only interest-free loans to fellow Israelites (a practice that is still maintained today through the “Hebrew Free Loan” associations). Ancient Mesopotamian documents show interest rates for loans of money, seed, or food as high as 60 percent. Such rates would make repayment impossible and push the debtor deeper into destitution.

do not exact. Israelite lenders may not take advantage of the economically vulnerable members of the community when misfortune strikes.

advance...interest. That is, taking a “bite”—a discount—from the loan. (The Hebrew for “advance” relates to the verb for “bite.”) See also Deuteronomy 23:20–21 (but unlike Deuteronomy 15, Leviticus does not mention cancellation of debt). The prohibition also applies to confiscating a pledge (person or property) when the loan is delinquent. The book of Kings mentions a widow who begs the prophet Elisha to help her: “a creditor is coming to take away my two sons to be his slaves” (II Kings 4:1; Elisha provides a miraculous source of oil, which enables her to pay off the creditor and keep her family intact, 4:7).

your kin live by your side as such.³⁷ Do not lend your money at advance interest, nor give your food at accrued interest.³⁸ I יהוה am your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, to give you the land of Canaan, to be your God.

³⁹If your kin under you continue in straits and must be given over to you, do not subject them to the treatment of a slave.⁴⁰ Remaining with you as a hired or bound laborer, they shall serve with you only until the jubilee year.⁴¹ Then they, along with any children, shall be free of your authority; they shall go back to their family and return to the ancestral holding.—⁴² For they are My servants, whom I freed from the land of Egypt; they may not give

עַמְקָה: ³⁷ אַתִּיכְסֹפֶךְ לְאַתְתָּן לוֹ בְּנֵשֶׁךְ וּבְמְרֻבִּית לְאַתְתָּן אֲכָלֶךְ: ³⁸ אָנָּי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכְם אֲשֶׁר־הָזֹעֲצָתִי אֲתֶכְם מִארֶץ מִצְרָיִם לְתַתְתַּלְכֵט אֶת־אָרֶץ בְּנֵעַן לְהִיּוֹת לְכֶם לְאֱלֹהִים: ס

³⁹ וְקִיְמָמוֹךְ אֲחִיךְ עַמְקָה וּגְמַבְרִילֶךְ לֹא־תַעֲבֶד בָּו עֲבָדָת עֲבָד: ⁴⁰ פְּשָׁכִיר פְּתוּשָׁב יְהִי עַמְקָה עַד־שָׁנָת הַיּוֹלֵד יְעַבֵּד עַמְקָה: ⁴¹ וְיַצֵּא מַעֲבָךְ הוּא וּבְנֵיו עַמְקָה וּשְׁבֵאל־מִשְׁפְּחָתָנוּ וְאֶל־אֲחִזָּת אֲבָתָנוּ יְשֻׁוב: ⁴² קַיְרָעָבְרִי הָמָם אֲשֶׁר־הָזֹעֲצָתִי אֲתֶם מִארֶץ

39–43. These verses address the next stage of economic decline: insolvency that forces persons into debt-servitude. The children of the widow in II Kings 4:1 (see previous comment) are subject to such servitude. Likewise, Nehemiah 5 describes the predicament of Judeans in the 5th century B.C.E.: “There was a great outcry by the common people and their wives against their fellow Jews. Some said, ‘Our sons and daughters are numerous; we must get grain to eat in order that we may live!’ Others said, ‘We must pawn our fields, our vineyards, and our homes to get grain to stave off hunger.’ Yet others said, ‘We have borrowed money against our fields... we are subjecting our sons and daughters to slavery—some of our daughters are already subjected—and we are powerless’” (Nehemiah 5:1–5). For insight into the complex circumstances of women slaves, see also at Leviticus 19:20–22 and Exodus 21:7–11.

Indentured Israelites must be treated as day laborers or hired hands, not as slaves. Chirichigno, basing his view on Mesopotamian laws, suggests that this includes providing them with housing and fair allowances (Debt-Slavery, p. 343).

40. until the jubilee year. Unlike Exodus 21 and Deuteronomy 15, Leviticus does not mention slaves’ release in the seventh year but only in the jubilee year. The fiftieth year is part of the national calendar. According to this law, one who begins service in the forty-sixth year of the jubilee’s cycle would be released less than four years later.

41. they, along with any children. The Hebrew uses masculine language (which, in its most restricted sense, means “he and his sons with him”), raising the question whether wives and other female members of the family are to receive their freedom (see Another View, p. 760). Presumably a daughter, if she became sexually attached to a man in the “owner’s” house, did not have the option of release; however, she might have other legal protections (see at Exodus 21:7–11). In Jeremiah 34:12–16, a law about slavery formulated in masculine language explicitly applies to women as well as men. (That passage describes the release of slave women and men in a time of siege. Jeremiah also notes, however, that these released slaves are repossessed shortly after, and he condemns the repossession as profaning God’s name.) Here, too, there is no reason to exclude women from view; war, famine, plague, and the like could easily put women in the position of becoming debt-slaves if they (or their husbands) suddenly found themselves without the normal protection of a household or clan and its access to land. To convey the gender-inclusive sense of the Hebrew wording, the translation here uses plural language.

themselves over into servitude.—⁴³You shall not rule over them ruthlessly; you shall fear your God.⁴⁴Such male and female slaves as you may have—it is from the nations round about you that you may acquire male and female slaves.⁴⁵You may also buy them from among the children of aliens resident among you, or from their families that are among you, whom they begot in your land. These shall become your property:⁴⁶you may keep them as a possession for your children after you, for them to inherit as property for all time. Such you may treat as slaves. But as for your Israelite kin, no one shall rule ruthlessly over another.

⁴⁷If a resident alien among you has prospered, and your kin, being in straits, comes under that one's authority and is given over to the resident alien among you, or to an offshoot of an alien's

מִצְרִים לֹא יָמְכְרוּ מִמְכָרֶת עָבֵד : ⁴³ לֹא־
תַּرְדֹּה בָּעֲפָרָה וַיְרָאֶת מְאֹלָהִיךְ : ⁴⁴ וְעַבְדָּה
וְאַמְתָּה אֲשֶׁר יְהִיוּ לָךְ מֵאַת הָגּוֹיִם אֲשֶׁר
סְבִיבָתֵיכֶם מֵהֶם תִּקְנֹן עָבֵד וְאַמָּה : ⁴⁵ וְגֹם
מִבְנֵי הַתּוֹשְׁבִים הַקְּרִים עַמְקָם מֵהֶם
תִּקְנֹן וּמִמְשֻׁפְחָתֶם אֲשֶׁר עַמְקָם אֲשֶׁר
הַוּלִידוּ בָּאָרֶצֶם וְהַיּוּ לָכֶם לְאַחֲזָה :
⁴⁶ וְהַתְּנַחַלְתֶּם אֶתְכֶם לְבָנֵיכֶם אַחֲרֵיכֶם
לְרִשְׁת אַחֲרָה לְעָלָם בָּהֶם תַּעֲבֹדוּ
וּבָאַחֲרֵיכֶם בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל אִישׁ בָּאַחֲרָיו לֹא־

תַּרְדֹּה בָּעֲפָרָה :

⁴⁷ וְקַיִם תְּשִׁיג יָד גָּר וְתוֹשֵׁב עַמְקָה וּמֶה אַחֲרָה
עַמְקָה וּגְמַפֵּר לְגַם תֹּשֵׁב עַמְקָה אוֹ לְעַקָּר

43. ruthlessly. The same Hebrew word describes the abuse that the Israelites suffered in Egypt (Exodus 1:13). They are not to perpetuate such oppression.

44–46. Indentured foreign females and males do not go free. When sold into slavery, foreigners become the Israelites' possession “for all time” (v. 46). This harsh ruling contradicts other laws in Leviticus that specify an identical law for the Israelite, the foreigner, and the resident alien (as 24:22 states: “you shall have one standard for stranger and citizen alike”; see also Exodus 12:49 and Numbers 15:16). Later rabbinic traditions attempt to ameliorate this legislation by interpreting “for all time” to mean “until the jubilee year,” but such a generous reading contradicts the plain sense of this passage.

44. male and female slaves. This is the second place in this parashah that mentions women explicitly (see also females slaves in vv. 6–7). The specification of females at this juncture may serve to emphasize that there is no special treatment for women slaves when they are foreign (whereas other biblical laws such as Exodus 21:2–11 do distinguish between the fate of female and male slaves). Verse

46 makes it clear that a foreign female (or male) slave was to have no automatic chance of regaining freedom. | The term for “female slave,” amah, is best translated as “handmaid” because amah also refers to the forearm (and, like “foot” in English, also functions as a measuring unit—namely, in this case, the cubit). Sarah refers to Hagar the Egyptian as amah when she demands her expulsion (Genesis 21:10), and both Bilhah and Zilpah receive this title on occasion (see Genesis 30:3), although the more common term for all three women is shifchah. Free women can use amah to express deference, as when Ruth the Moabite calls herself an amah when addressing Boaz in Ruth 3:9.

47–54. A family member must redeem an Israelite whom a resident alien purchases or seizes to cover a debt. The price of redemption is to be determined fairly on the basis of expected years of servitude until the year of the jubilee. These laws apply only within Israelite settlements in the Land of Israel. The Bible meanwhile includes some stories about Israelite slaves in non-Israelite households outside the land. One such anecdote in II Kings 5:1–4 mentions a young Israelite slave girl (a war family,⁴⁸ [your kin] shall have the right of redemption even after having been given over. [Typically,] a brother shall do the redeeming,⁴⁹ or an uncle or an uncle's son shall do the redeeming—anyone in the family who is of the same flesh shall do the redeeming; or, having prospered, [your formerly impoverished kin] may do the redeeming.⁵⁰ The total shall be computed with the purchaser as from the year of being given over to the other until the jubilee year; the price of sale shall be applied to the number of years, as though it were for a term as a hired laborer under the other's authority.⁵¹ If many years remain, [your kin] shall pay back for the redemption in proportion to the purchase price;⁵² and if few years remain until the jubilee year, so shall it be computed: payment shall be made for the redemption according to the years involved.⁵³ One shall be under the other's authority as a laborer hired by the year; the other shall not rule ruthlessly in your sight.⁵⁴ If not redeemed in any of those ways, that person, along with any children, shall go free in the jubilee year.⁵⁵ For it is to Me that the

מְשֻׁפְחָת גָּר :⁴⁸ אֶחָרִי נַמֵּר גָּאֵלָה תְּהִיה־
לוֹ אֶחָד מֵאֲחֵיכוּ יַגְאַלְנוּ :⁴⁹ אֲוֹדֶדֶן אֲוֹבָנֶן־
הַדָּוִ יַגְאַלְנוּ אֲוֹדֶשֶׁאָר בְּשָׁרוֹ מִמְשֻׁפְחָתוֹ
יַגְאַלְנוּ אֲוֹדֶשֶׁיגָה יְדוֹ וְנִגְאַל :⁵⁰ וְחַשְׁבָּ
עַמְקִינְהוּ מִשְׁנֶת הַמְכָרְוּ לֹא עַד שְׁנָת
הַיּוֹלֵד וְהִיא בְּסֶף מִמְפָרָן בְּמִסְפָּר שְׁנִים
בִּימֵי שְׁכִיר יְהִיה עָמוֹ :⁵¹ אֲמִיעָד רְבּוֹת
בְּשְׁנִים לְפִיהָן יִשְׁבַּגְאַלְתוֹ מִכְסָף
מִקְנָתוֹ :⁵² וְאַמְ-מַעַט נַשְּׁאָר בְּשְׁנִים עַד־
שְׁנָת הַיּוֹלֵד וְחַשְׁבַּלְוֹ בְּפִי שְׁנִיוֹ יִשְׁבַּ
אַתְּ-גָאֵלָתוֹ :⁵³ בְּשְׁכִיר שְׁנָה בְּשָׁנָה יְהִיה
עָמוֹ לְאִירְדָּנו בְּפֶרֶך לְעִינִיק :⁵⁴ וְאַמְ-לָא
יַגְאַל בְּאֶלְהָ וְצָא בְּשְׁנָת הַיּוֹלֵד הוּא וּבְנָיו עָמוֹ :⁵⁵ בְּרִילִי בְּנִי-יִשְׂרָאֵל עֲבָדִים captive) serving a household in a neighboring country. Seeing that her mistress's husband—the general Naaman—had contracted a skin disease (tzaraat), the Israelite slave girl informs the wife that a prophet in Israel could cure the husband. Grace Aguilar, the English Jewish poet, novelist, and theologian (1817–1847), claimed that this story was proof that even a young slave girl in biblical times knew about her “Jewish” tradition and resources. Aguilar used this story to campaign for extending Jewish education to women in her own time.

48. right of redemption. Implicitly, the foreign owner cannot reject an offer of redemption.

48–49. [Typically,] a brother... or an uncle... anyone in the family. The line of kinship bond of those who must redeem an indentured Israelite extends to all blood relatives.

49. same flesh. From how Leviticus 21:2–4 defines this term, we can suppose that the line of potential redeemers here includes mothers, sisters, and daughters.

50–51. The redeemer must offer a fair price. The redeemed is obligated to repay the redeemer and can do so by working for the redeemer as a hired hand until the year of the jubilee.

53. ruthlessly. See at v. 43.

Conclusion

GOD'S OWNERSHIP OF THE ISRAELITES AS BASIS FOR JUBILEE LAWS (25:55–26:2)

The conclusion of the parashah expresses the theological or religious underpinning of the jubilee and slavery legislation: Israelites are God's servants and therefore may not belong to others. In keeping God's sabbaths, both people and land experience the freedom that service to God entails.

Israelites are servants: they are My servants, whom I freed from the land of Egypt, I your God. יְהוָה

עֲבָדִי הֵם אֲשֶׁר־הָצַאְתִּי אֶתְכֶם מִמָּרֵץ
מִצְרָיִם אֱנִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם:

26 You shall not make idols for yourselves, or set up for yourselves carved images or pillars, or place figured stones in your land to worship upon, for I יְהוָה am your God. ²You shall keep My sabbaths and venerate My sanctuary, Mine, יְהוָה's.

כְּזֶה לֹא־תַּעֲשֶׂה לְכֶם אֱלִילִים וּפְסָלִים וּמִצְבָּה
לְאִתְקִימָיו לְכֶם וְאַבָּן מִשְׁבֵּית לֹא תַּתְנִזְבֶּן
בָּאָרֶצְכֶם לְהַשְׁתִּחוֹת עַלְيָה כִּי אֱנִי יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֵיכֶם: ² אֶת־שְׁבָתָתִי תָּשִׁמְרוּ וּמִקְדְּשֵׁי
תִּירְאֻוּ אֱנִי יְהוָה: פ

55. My servants. Heb. avadim (eved in the singular) can refer variously to servants, slaves, and worshippers. In the Torah, the difference between servitude and freedom depends on whom one serves. God instructed Moses to tell Pharaoh not merely “Let My people go!” but “Let My people go so that they may serve Me!” (Exodus 7:16). Significantly, many editions translate the verb e-v-d in Exodus 7:16 and elsewhere as “worship,” which highlights the nuanced ways in which that verb functions.

26:2. My sabbaths. In Deuteronomy 5:15, the purpose of the Sabbath is to enable female and male slaves to rest because “you were a slave in the land of Egypt.” The entire jubilee system is rooted in the multiple ways in which the observance of the Sabbath is to be implemented.

venerate My sanctuary. In the context of this parashah, the sanctuary appears to include not only the Tabernacle but also the Land of Israel and the people of Israel. (See also at 26:11.)

—Tamara Cohn Eskenazi
Jocelyn Hudson

Another View

THE BIBLICAL SYSTEM of a jubilee year has been described as utopian in its vision, promoting a system whereby lands sold under financial distress would be returned to the original owners every fifty years. Under this system, there are checks and balances ensuring a redistribution of wealth at set intervals. This is indeed a utopian vision, grounded both in the religious belief that only God owns the land and people are but tenants on it, and in the socio-economic vision of a remission of debts at set periods.

One would like to think that if this legislation had been in force during some period in history, it would have had a beneficial impact on women and other vulnerable members of society. However, the text does not seem to address many questions regarding the status of women under this system. For example, Leviticus 25:41 uses only grammatically masculine language and male terms to refer to an Israelite who becomes the debt-slave of a fellow Israelite. The text forbids that individual from being treated as a (non-Israelite) slave. The text literally reads that at the year of the jubilee, “he and his children with him shall be free” (25:41). Where is the wife? Commentators often argue that she must be included here, but it is striking that she is missing. According to Exodus 21:2–6, a male Hebrew slave is released after six years of service, but a female slave apparently remains with her master forever—presumably, according to some interpreters, because she has become the sexual property of the owner (21:7–11). The law in Exodus 21, in conjunction with the absence of women in the jubilee laws, prompts disturbing questions.

Similarly, Leviticus 25:47–49 spells out the order of kinsfolk who are required to redeem relatives sold

Would this legislation have had a beneficial impact on women?

to non-Israelites. The order begins with brothers, uncles, and then male cousins. Again the text is silent on women, suggesting that only men were active participants in this utopian vision of release from servitude and reclamation of ancestral lands.

However, a close reading of the text, along with a study of other sources, demonstrates that despite the seeming omission of women in this account, women were in fact recognized as active participants in all these cases. Jeremiah 34 mentions the release of women slaves; and Numbers 27 and 36 show that women could own land and thus have resources to redeem relatives.

—S. Tamar Kamionkowski

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

*you shall not wrong one another...
Do not wrong one another, but fear your God* (25:14, 17). The discussion of this passage in the midrash collection Sifra leads us to one of the most important passages in rabbinic literature, one in which women play central roles. The Rabbis explain the apparent repetition of the command not to oppress one's neighbor as follows: Each verse speaks of a different kind of oppression; the oppression of v. 14 is economic oppression, while that in v. 17 is inflicted psychologically. The Tosefta repeats this interpretation in Bava Mitzia 3:25–29, and the Talmud deeply explores the issues in BT Bava M'tzia 58b–6ob. There we learn how important feelings are, and how critical it is for us not to hurt them. According to the Rabbis, the archetypal example of someone who preferred death to hurting another person's feelings is Tamar (Genesis 38). The Rabbis maintain that rather than shame her father-in-law in public, she was willing to be burned to death. We then learn that it is especially important not to distress one's wife (BT Bava M'tzia 59a and subsequently in Shulchan Aruch, Choshen Mishpat 228:3). A husband can easily wound his wife's feelings because she is close to him, and he also has many opportunities to hurt her. He must therefore take proportionately more care not to do so. We learn, too, of the counter-example of Rav's difficult marriage. Rav asserted that anyone who followed his wife's advice would descend into Geihinom (the place of eternal punishment). When we examine a description of his married life, we can see why he might say this. His wife is said to have constantly tormented him and contradicted his smallest wish (BT Y'vamot 63a). Of course, this androcentric text does not consider how Rav's treatment of his spouse may have contributed to such behavior.

B'HAR

This discussion leads to one of the most important passages in rabbinic literature.

Rav Pappa seems to have had a good marriage, since he quotes the folk saying that if one's wife is short, one should bend down and listen to her opinion. Other teachings are likewise designed to increase marital harmony. One such teaching urges that grain always be available in the home, as lack of food is often the cause of marital strife. We learn, too, that a husband should be careful to honor his wife more than he honors himself. He should show this by dressing her in better clothes than he himself wears (BT Bava M'tzia 59a and subsequently in Mishneh Torah, Sefer Nashim, Hilchot Ishut 15:19). In the same passage, Rav Helbo asserts that blessings are found in a man's house only on account of his wife; and Rava opines that honoring one's wife is the road to wealth.

What follows is one of the most famous legends in all of rabbinic literature. It appears in BT Bava M'tzia 59b and concerns Rabbi Eliezer and his wife, Imma Shalom (which means "Mother of Peace"). Imma Shalom came from a distinguished family of Davidic heritage. Her brother was Rabban Gamliel, who, at that time, presided over the academy in which her husband, Rabbi Eliezer, was one of the greatest sages. Her husband had a strong disagreement of opinion with the rest of the academy. When they would not accept his opinion he brought all sorts of supernatural proofs that his was the correct view. Even a voice out of heaven was summoned, which duly testified that he was, in fact, right. At this, Rabbi Yehoshua, Rabbi Eliezer's study partner, stood up and said, "The Torah is no longer in heaven" (Deuteronomy 30:12). In other words, we decide law and practice here on earth and do not take heavenly voices into account. Finally, Rabban Gamliel expelled Rabbi Eliezer from the academy, and he was excommunicated. Imma Shalom, knowing what harm her husband could do out of the pain of his humiliation, kept watch on Rabbi Eliezer day and night, so that he would not have the opportunity to pray for Rabban Gamliel's death. One day her attention was diverted, and she saw afterward that Rabbi Eliezer was prostrated on the ground, supplicating God for succor from his hurt feelings. Seeing this, she said, "Rise. You have killed my brother!" At that moment a shofar blast was heard, signaling that Rabban Gamliel had died. Rabbi Eliezer then asked his wife, "How did you know my prayer worked, and I had killed him?" She replied, quoting learning as easily and with as much authority as her husband, "I learned it from my grandfather's house: All the gates of heaven are locked except for the gates of hurt feelings."

—Judith Z. Abrams

Contemporary Reflection

IN PARASHAT B'HAR, God declares to Moses that the land is a sacred trust and commands the people to observe periods of comprehensive release. This parashah invites us to consider how, in each generation, we can best serve as guarantors of this trust, respect the duty to rest ourselves and our natural resources, and experience “release.” The legislation in B'har presumes the value of balance and regulates a balance among productivity, rest, and relinquishment. Inasmuch as punctuating productivity with long pauses lends perspective to life and encourages us to express gratitude for the earth’s bounty, we may wonder what regulations we require today to help us nurture ourselves, one another, and the planet. As women join men in leadership positions and in the work force, it is becoming a Jewish communal priority to effect social and institutional adjustments that allow for a healthy balance between people’s needs and obligations.

B'har affirms that the land belongs to God, and it must be permitted to observe its Sabbaths. The sensibility that the Land of Israel has a responsibility all its own to the Creator recognizes nature’s independence from humanity. The land must be permitted, just like human servants, to praise creation through Shabbat. In the psalmist’s words: kol han'shamah t'halel Yah, “All that breathes praises God” (Psalm 150). The earth must speak its own gratitude.

In the Torah, the earth is an expressive organism. We read that when Miriam died, “the community was without water” (Numbers 20:2). Observing, as it were, its mourning for a heroine whose miracles were all associated with water, the earth dries up. To hear the speech of the earth is a blessing; but if we do not listen, the consequences of our deafness to the planet are traumatic. The ecology movement reminds us of what our biblical forebears understood: the independent consciousness of nature.

Nature’s independence is trumpeted on Yom Kippur after a fifty-year countdown. This is when we must (as the Liberty Bell translates the verse) “proclaim Liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof” (Leviticus 25:10). We more closely translate dror (“Liberty”) as a proclamation of “release,” a letting go. Counting toward release, we can celebrate release—or we can live in fear of it. And so the liturgy tells us limnot yameinu, to count our days

We must seek a balanced definition of adulthood, with sabbatical and jubilation.

(Psalm 90:12), by which we are meant to understand that since our days are numbered, the trick is to make them count. Our duty is not to scramble tirelessly, but to be grateful and generous, to assume our small place in creation, and to join the trees in praise. Underlying the laws of B'har is an obligation to take care of each other, to leave no one homeless: “Do not wrong one another, but fear your God” (Leviticus 25:17).

The laws of the sabbatical year echo biblical Creation. The rhythm of the work week undergoes a cosmic magnification: people, imitating the Creator, are productive for six days and then rest. Nature is productive for six years and rests; and then geometrically, after the land has maintained this rhythm for seven cycles of seven: jubilee. The yovel, the jubilee, is a call to restore primal order: indentured servants are freed, debts are forgiven, and property is restored to its original owners. Here is a caution against struggling to amass more, and against warring over real estate—reminding us that all things are, eventually, released (one way or another) from our possession and control. After the divine promise to Noah that humanity would never again be destroyed by flood, God devises the jubilee as a peaceful strategy for restoring the world to its original state.

B'HAR

Appreciating that freedom must be learned, a midrash teaches that the Israelites wandered in desert circles for forty years to make the short trip from Egypt to Canaan because it took that long for the slave population to learn how to manage its freedom. Today, it behooves us to reflect on the substantial gains of the women's movement and admit that, as B'har teaches, we suffer the consequences of depletion if we do not adequately regulate our hard-won freedoms. Not only do many of us live unbalanced lives, but schools and charities have not corrected for the absence of an earlier generation of volunteer women, to the detriment of children and the poor. Society needs to effect adjustments so as to make two-career families more viable; and we risk perpetuating conditions of stress at work and home if we do not emphasize to rising generations the need to change existing institutional structures and correct continued gender inequities. One wonders whether, in the years since the onset of the contemporary women's movement, we have been panting from exertion without having paused often enough to ask about the meaning of life. High-achieving adolescents too often suffer from depression, and teenage girls suffer from diminished self-worth. Perhaps we have been communicating an unbalanced definition of adulthood—adulthood without sabbatical and jubilation.

The land, our possessions, our bodies, our children, and we ourselves are a sacred trust, and it is not our right to be infinitely demanding on them. We are commanded to rest, not when we are exhausted or having a breakdown, but regularly, as we count the days to Shabbat, to the seven years to the land's sabbatical, and to the forty-nine years to the releases of jubilee.

Organizations such as Ma'yan: The Jewish Women's Project (at the JCC in Manhattan) and Advancing Women Professionals and the Jewish Community (AWP, founded by Shifra Bronznick) are addressing unhealthy patterns by exploring how to create humane workplaces that foster living balanced lives. Projects like these articulate demands for institutional change and new regulations that honor the spirit that informs parashat B'har.

—Lori Lefkovitz

Voices

Childhood in the Shtetl

Golda Meir

Leviticus 25:25–28

There was never enough of anything, not food, not warm clothing, not heat at home. I was always a little too cold outside and a little too empty inside. Even now, from that very distant past, I can summon up with no effort at all, almost intact, the picture of myself sitting in tears in the kitchen, watching my mother feed some of the gruel that rightfully belonged to me to my younger sister, Zipke. Gruel was a great luxury in our home in those days, and I bitterly resented having to share any of it, even with the baby. Years later I was to experience the dread of my own children's hunger and to learn for myself what it is like to have to decide which child is to receive more food, but, of course, in that kitchen in Kiev, I knew only that life was hard and that there was no justice anywhere. I am glad that no one told me then that my older sister, Sheyna, often fainted from hunger in school.

The First Wriggle

Elaine Feinstein

Leviticus 25:10

Going to buy milk from the corner shop on a Tuesday in August with the warm rain tasting of roses, I suddenly felt an illicit moment of good fortune: a freedom in which poems could happen.

It's rather like the grander forms of creation.
Worms on Mars should surprise nobody;
life will form, wherever there's opportunity.

At Blue Dawn II

Kadya Molodowsky (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

Leviticus 25:25–28

For what I own there is no weight or measure.
Strewn on streets, unburied treasure,
It hides in all the crevices, in every crack.
Caresses by the thousands on my neck,
Kisses as hot as sunlight on my cheeks.
Bound up with fraying strings
And concealed at the corners of streets
Lie my tender heartbeats.
And dreams floating up from all
The beds at night in cities and towns
Beat their white and fragile wings
Against the hard brick wall.
For what I own there's no weight
Or measure.

All the Winds

Rachel Korn (transl. Marcia Falk)

Leviticus 25:25–55

All the winds have grown still as though someone rocked them softly to sleep between naked branches of the trees on a rainy autumn night.

All the sorrows have made their home at my doorstep, as though—in all the world—they had no other harbor
but my eyes, my hands, my smile, my word.

בְּחֻקֹּתָא ✦ B'chukotai

LEVITICUS 26:3–27:34

Ensuring Obedience to God, and the Sanctuary's Welfare

PARASHAT B'CHUKOTAI ("my laws") concludes Leviticus, a book devoted to instructing the people of Israel how to conduct their lives in keeping with their status as God's people. The first part of the parashah seeks to ensure obedience to these instructions by providing strong motivation in the form of a series of blessings and curses. God, through Moses, promises the people prosperity and peace if they follow the path laid out by God; and God threatens them with famine, war, and eventually exile, if they choose to spurn God's laws and commandments (26:3–46). The second part of the parashah (27:1–34) is an appendix that addresses issues related to communal funding, especially of the priesthood and of the sanctuary.

Explicit information about women in these passages, while scant, does shed some additional light on their status and the nature of their household responsibilities in ancient Israel. Especially significant for our understanding of the status of women in this culture is the material in 27:3–7, which lists monetary equivalents for the worth of individuals whose services are vowed to the temple. Leviticus, we learn, bases these assessments and values on a combination of the factors of age and gender (see also Another View, p. 780).

In addition, the content of 27:1–25, which deals with vows and gifts of property to the temple, touches upon several other issues that relate to the lives of women in ancient Israel, such as whose vows were binding and under what conditions, who could partake in the priests' portion of sacrificial animals (a major source of food for priests and their households), and who could inherit and possess property. While Leviticus 27 does not directly deal with these issues, all of them are crucial for those wishing to understand the significance of the instruction in this text for women in ancient Israel.

This parashah sheds light on women's status and responsibilities in ancient Israel.

The explicit reference in 26:26 to women who bake bread further highlights the lives of women.

—Hilary Lipka

Outline

I. EPILOGUE

Ensuring Obedience to God (26:3–46)

- A. Blessings for obedience (vv. 3–13)
- B. Curses for disobedience (vv. 14–45)
- C. Conclusion (v. 46)

II. APPENDIX

The Sanctuary: Funding, Gifts, and Dues (27:1–34)

- A. Votary pledges of people (vv. 1–8)
- B. Votary pledges of animals (vv. 9–13)
- C. Consecrations of property (vv. 14–25)
- D. Firstlings (vv. 26–27)
- E. Proscriptions (vv. 28–29)
- F. Tithes (vv. 30–33)
- G. Conclusion (v. 34)

26:3

If you follow My laws and faithfully observe My commandments,⁴ I will grant your rains in their season, so that the earth shall yield its produce and the trees of the field their fruit.⁵ Your threshing shall overtake the vintage, and your vintage shall overtake the sowing; you shall eat your fill of bread and dwell securely in your land.

כ וְאִם־בָּקַרְתִּי תָּלַכְוּ וְאַתֶּם־מִצּוֹתִי
תִשְׁמַרְתֶּם וְעִשְׂתֶּם אֶתְכֶם:⁴ וְנִתְתִּי גַּשְׁמֵיכֶם
בְּעַתֶּם וְנִתְנַהֲהֵה הָאָרֶץ יְבוּלָה וְעֵץ הַשְׂדָה
יִתְןֵן פְּרוּיוֹ:⁵ וְהַשְׁגֵּג לְכֶם לְיִשְׁאָל אֶת־בְּצִיר
וּבְצִיר יִשְׁגַּג אֶת־זָרָע וְאֶכְלַתֶּם לְחַמְכָתֶם
לְשָׁבָע וַיִּשְׁבַּתֶּם לְבַטְחָה בָּאָרֶץ כֶּם:

Epilogue
ENSURING OBEDIENCE TO GOD
(26:3–46)

The opening unit of the parashah presents an epilogue to the book of Leviticus as a whole. God addresses the Israelites who are about to enter the Promised Land, assuring them of great rewards if they follow God's instructions, and threatening them with a series of increasingly severe punishments if they disobey. The laws pertain to women and men together as a community. The rewards and the punishments are symmetrical: the punishments reverse each of the promised rewards via a contrasting threat. For example, a promise of fertility of the land (vv. 4–5 and 10) contrasts with the threat of a barren and fruitless land (vv. 16, 19–20). The symmetry, among other things, expresses a balanced and ordered universe, a theme that is important in priestly writings (see Genesis 1). These blessings and curses resemble those that conclude Deuteronomy's laws (Deuteronomy 28–30) and many ancient Near Eastern treaties. In all of these instances, the curses section tends to be much longer and more detailed than the blessings section, most likely to frighten the hearers into obedience through the threat of divine enforcement.

BLESSINGS FOR OBEDIENCE (26:3–13)

The blessings that will be bestowed upon Israel if the people follow God's laws include: peace, prosperity, safety from wild beasts, fertility of both the people and the land, and victory over their enemies. God will uphold the covenant and reside in Israel's midst, ensuring that the people will flourish and prosper and be free from all oppression.

4. rains in their season. Survival in this agricultural economy depended on timely rain. Too much at the wrong time or too little devastated crops and resulted in famine. (See also Deuteronomy 11:11, 33:13.)

5. The blessing will consist of having such bountiful harvests that the harvesting season will last until the next planting season.

- The table of valuations in 27:2–8 provides evidence of a positive estimation of women.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 780

- Our ancestors regarded the litany of blessings and curses as a prayer for justice.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 782

- Rabbinic literature records the names of women who made vows of various kinds.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 780

- My greatest challenge in ballroom dance has been learning to follow.

VOICES ► 784

⁶I will grant peace in the land, and you shall lie down untroubled by anyone; I will give the land respite from vicious beasts, and no sword shall cross your land. ⁷[Your army] shall give chase to your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword. ⁸Five of you shall give chase to a hundred, and a hundred of you shall give chase to ten thousand; your enemies shall fall before you by the sword.

⁹I will look with favor upon you, and make you fertile and multiply you; and I will maintain My covenant with you. ¹⁰You shall eat old grain long stored, and you shall have to clear out the old to make room for the new.

¹¹I will establish My abode in your midst, and I will not spurn you. ¹²I will be ever present in your midst: I will be your God, and you shall be My people. ¹³I am your God who brought you out from the land of the Egyptians to be their slaves no more, who broke the bars of your yoke and made you walk erect.

וְנַתֵּן לְךָ שָׁלוֹם בָּאָרֶץ וְשִׁכְבָּתֶם וְאַזְּנָן
מְחֻרְיד וְהַשְׁבַּתִּי חַיָּה רָעָה מִן־הָאָרֶץ וְחַרְבָּה
לְאַתְּעַבֵּר בְּאֶרְצְכֶם: ⁷וְרָדַפְתֶּם אֶת־
אַיִבְיכֶם וְנִפְלֹא לִפְנֵיכֶם לְחַרְבָּה: ⁸וְרָדַפְתֶּם
מִקְבֵּם חַמְשָׁה מֵאָה וּמִמֵּאָה מִקְבֵּם רְבָבָה
וְרָדַפְתֶּם וְנִפְלֹא אַיִבְיכֶם לִפְנֵיכֶם לְחַרְבָּה:
⁹וְפִנְתַּחֲתִי אֶלְכֶם וְהַפְרִתִּי אֶתְכֶם וְהַרְבִּתִּי
אֶתְכֶם וְהַקִּימֵתִי אֶת־בְּרִיתִי אֶתְכֶם:
¹⁰וְאֶכְלַתְכֶם יִשְׁן נֹשֵׁן וַיִּשְׁן מִפְנֵי חֶדֶש
הַזְּמִיאוֹן:
¹¹וְנַתֵּן מִשְׁכָנִי בְּתוֹכְכֶם וְלֹא־תִגְעַל נֶפֶשִׁי
אֶתְכֶם: ¹²וְהַתְּהַלְּכָתִי בְּתוֹכְכֶם וְהִיִּתִי
לְכֶם לְאֱלֹהִים וְאַתֶּם תְּהִוּ לִי לָעֵם:
¹³אָנִי יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר הָזַאת
אֶתְכֶם מִאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם מִקְהָת לָהֶם עֲבָדִים
וְאָשֵׁבָר מִטְּהָר עַלְכֶם וְאַוְלָה אֶתְכֶם
קוּמִים: פ

9. I will...make you fertile. On God's role in fertility, see the introduction to Genesis 16:1–6 and at Deuteronomy 33:13.

I will maintain My covenant with you. God's covenantal faithfulness serves as guarantee that these promises will come true.

11. abode. Heb. mishkan is translated elsewhere as "Tabernacle" (as in Exodus 25:9 and Leviticus 8:10); here, however, the term carries a much broader sense. God assures the people that the Deity will reside with Israel in the land. The text emphasizes the presence of God with the people as a whole, not confined to the sanctuary.

I will not spurn you. Spurning (or rejecting) is something of a leitmotif in this unit. First, God promises never to spurn Israel if the people follow the laws and commandments (v. 11). Next, if the people choose to spurn these laws and commandments (v. 15), the punishments will begin. Finally, God will spurn Israel temporarily should the people fail to return to God after a series of increasingly severe punishments (v. 30; but see v. 44, when God relents nonetheless).

12. I will be ever present in your midst. Literally, "I will walk about in your midst." This description might refer back to the story of the Garden of Eden when God is depicted as walking about the Garden (see Genesis 3:8). The establishment of God's abode in Israel's midst will ensure a period of prosperity and peace—as well as a palpable relationship with God.

I will be your God, and you shall be My people. This expression refers back to the covenantal promise made at Sinai (Exodus 6:2–8) and reiterates mutual commitment.

13. The blessings' section concludes by reminding Israel of their special relationship to God, and of what God has done for them in the past, thereby also alluding to what God is capable of doing for them in the future.

¹⁴But if you do not obey Me and do not observe all these commandments, ¹⁵if you reject My laws and spurn My rules, so that you do not observe all My commandments and you break My covenant, ¹⁶I in turn will do this to you: I will wreak misery upon you—consumption and fever, which cause the eyes to pine and the body to languish; you shall sow your seed to no purpose, for your enemies shall eat it. ¹⁷I will set My face against you: you shall be routed by your enemies, and your foes shall dominate you. You shall flee though none pursues.

¹⁸And if, for all that, you do not obey Me, I will go on to discipline you sevenfold for your sins, ¹⁹and I will break your proud glory. I will make your skies like iron and your earth like copper,²⁰so that your strength shall be spent to no purpose. Your land shall not yield its produce, nor shall the trees of the land yield their fruit.

²¹And if you remain hostile toward Me and refuse to obey Me, I will go on smiting you sevenfold for your sins. ²²I will loose wild beasts against you, and they shall bereave you of your children and wipe out your cattle. They shall decimate you, and your roads shall be deserted.

²³And if these things fail to discipline you for Me, and you remain hostile to Me, ²⁴I too will remain hostile to you: I in turn will smite you seven-

CURSES FOR DISOBEDIENCE (26:14–45)

In contrast to the rather brief section of blessings, the list of curses is longer and more detailed. It threatens Israel with the consequences that will follow if the people spurn God's rules and fail to observe God's laws. The curses in Leviticus 26:14–45 largely mirror the blessings in the previous section and also have many similarities to the curses in Deuteronomy 28:15–68. However, in Deuteronomy the curses appear as punishment, while here they are presented also as God's attempt to influence

14 וְאִם־לֹא תָשִׁמְעוּ לֵי וְלֹא תַעֲשׂו אֶת־כֵּל־
הַמְצֻוֹת הָאֶלְهָה: ¹⁵ וְאִם־בִּחְקֻרְתִּי תִּמְאָסוּ
וְאִם אַתְּ־מִשְׁפְּטִי תְּגַעַל נַפְשָׁכֶם לְבָלְתִּי
עֲשָׂוֹת אַתְּ־כֶּל־מְצֻוֹתִי לְהַפְּرָכָם אַתְּ־ בִּרְיתִי: ¹⁶ אַף־אָנִי עָשָׂה־זֶאת לְכֶם
וְהַפְּקֹדֶתִי עֲלֵיכֶם בְּחֵלֶה אַתְּ־הַשְׁׁחַפֶּת
וְאַתְּ־הַקְּדַחַת מִכְלֹות עַיִנִים וּמִדִּבֶּת נַפְשׁ
וּרְעָתֶם לְרִיק וּרְעָלֶם וְאַכְלָלוּהוּ אִיבִּיכֶם:
17 וְנִתְתִּי פָנֵיל בְּכֶם וְנִגְפְּתֶם לִפְנֵי אִיבִּיכֶם
וּרְדוּ בְכֶם שְׁנָאִיכֶם וְנִסְתֶּם וְאַינְדוֹרְךָפָן
אַתֶּכֶם:

18 וְאַם־עַד־אֱלֹהָ לֹא תִשְׁמַעַ לִי וַיַּסְפְּתֵי

¹⁹ ושברתי את־גאונו עזם ונתתי את־
ליסרה אתכם שבע על־חטאיכם:

שְׁמֵיכֶם כְּבָרֶל וְאַתִּירָצֶם כְּנַחֲשָׁה:
וְתִּמְמָם לְרִיבָה גְּפָרָה וְלְאַ-הַפְּנוּ אַרְצָתֶם²⁰

אתם יירוחלה ועת הארץ לא יתנו פרינו:

21 וְאַמְתָלְכֹו עִמֵּי קָרִי וְלֹא תָבֹו לְשֻׁמְעָרֶת עַל-מִלְחָמָה שָׁרֵב בְּחַנּוּאַמְרָתָם:

22 וְהַשְׁלָחָתִי בָּכֶם אֶת-יִחִית הַשְׂדָה וְשִׁכְלָה
אֲחֵלָה וְהַרְבוֹתָל אֶבְיוֹנָה וְהַמְּנוֹנָה

אתכם ונשemo דרכיכם:

²³ וְאַם־בָּאֵלָה לֹא תֹוֹסְרוּ לִי וְהַלְכִתֶּם עַמִּי
²⁴ קָרִי: וְהַלְכַתִּי אַפְ-אֲנִי עַמְּכֶם בְּקָרִי

וְהַפִּתְתֵּי אֶתְכֶם גָּמַדָּנִי שְׁבֻעָה עַל-

the people to return to the right path (see vv. 18, 21, 23, and 27). With each increasingly severe measure, God hopes that Israel will have learned its lesson. The punishments will stop at any point when the Israelites relent and turn back to God.

These writings probably gave hope to the people of Israel after the Babylonian Exile (597/587–538 B.C.E.) because they provide an explanation for how God could have allowed the downfall of Jerusalem and the Exile to come about; Leviticus 26 also emphasizes the promise of restoration once the people repent.

fold for your sins.²⁵ I will bring a sword against you to wreak vengeance for the covenant; and if you withdraw into your cities, I will send pestilence among you, and you shall be delivered into enemy hands.²⁶ When I break your staff of bread, ten women shall bake your bread in a single oven; they shall dole out your bread by weight, and though you eat, you shall not be satisfied.

²⁷ But if, despite this, you disobey Me and remain hostile to Me,²⁸ I will act against you in wrathful hostility; I, for My part, will discipline you sevenfold for your sins.²⁹ You shall eat the flesh

חַטָּאתֵיכֶם :²⁵ וְהַבָּא תִּי עַל־יכֶם חֲרֵב נַקְמָת
נַקְמַת־בָּרְית וְנַאֲסֹפֶתֶם אֶל־עָרֵיכֶם וְשַׁלְחוּתִי
דָּבָר בְּתוֹכֶיכֶם וְנִתְפַּתְּמָן בַּיּוֹם אֲזֹבֵךְ:²⁶ בְּשָׂבָרִי
לְכֶם מְطֻהָה־לְחֵם וְאָפָו עַשֶּׂר נְשִׁים לְחַמְכָם
בְּתִינּוֹר אָחָד וְהַשְׁיבָו לְחַמְכָם בְּמִשְׁקָלֶל
וְאַכְלָתֶם וְלֹא תִשְׁבַּעוּ:²⁷
וְאַם־בְּזֹאת לֹא תִשְׁמַעוּ לִי וְהַלְכָתֶם
עַפְנֵי בָּקָרִי:²⁸ וְהַלְכָתִי עַמְכָם בְּחַמְתָּה־
קָרֵי וְיִסְרָתִי אַתֶּכֶם אַף־אָנִי שְׁבָע עַל־
חַטָּאתֵיכֶם:²⁹ וְאַכְלָתֶם בְּשָׂר בְּנֵיכֶם וּבְשָׂר

26. ten women shall bake your bread in a single oven. Many women will all share one oven, whether for lack of dough or for lack of wood to fuel the oven. Either way, the threat is that of famine. Variations on this theme are common in ancient Near Eastern curses. For example, a curse in the Aramaic Sefire inscription (mid-8th century B.C.E.) reads: “And may his seven daughters bake bread in an oven but not fill it”; and a curse in the bilingual Assyrian-Aramaic Tell Fekheriyeh inscription (9th century B.C.E.) reads, “May a hundred women bake bread in an oven and not fill it.”

[It appears that ovens were beehive-shaped forms, made of a mixture of chopped clay and straw, sometimes with broken shards pressed onto the oven. They could be slightly recessed into the ground. (See P. King and L. Stager, Life in Biblical Israel, 2001, p. 67.) They were generally in the courtyard and probably served several adjacent dwellings. But they could also be in interior space; a baker would more likely fire up an interior oven in cold rainy weather. The bread could be baked on a baking tray, set over the fire inside the oven.—Ed.] Oven fuel consisted of branches or dung (see Malachi 3:19; Jacob Milgrom, Leviticus 23–27, 2001, p. 2314).

Here the text specifies women as the ones who bake the bread. This provides some insight into the division of labor in the ancient Israelite household. While women were the ones responsible for childbearing and childrearing, they also divided with men the other duties necessary to sustain and support the household. This text, then, provides evidence that women were predominantly responsible for tasks related to food production, that is, the transformation of raw foodstuffs into consumable goods. In the ancient world this was a very important and time-consuming task. Other biblical texts, through their association of women and food production in various forms, support this conclusion. For example, in I Samuel 28:24, the medium of En-dor prepares a calf and makes bread for King Saul. In Jeremiah 7:17–18, women are described as kneading dough for cakes to offer to the Queen of Heaven. In I Samuel 8:13, the prophet Samuel warns the people that monarchy will make many demands of them, including that the king “will take your daughters as perfumers, cooks, and bakers.” This last text implies that women indeed served those functions at the royal palace, as well as in ordinary households. See further at Exodus 16:3.

29. You shall eat the flesh of your sons and the flesh of your daughters. The horrific prospect of cannibalism as a result of siege, extreme famine, or both is a recurrent theme in Israelite and other ancient Near Eastern curses. An extreme version of this theme appears in II Kings 6:28–29, when a king in besieged and famine-struck Samaria must decide between two women who had agreed to eat their respective children, first one and then the other, to stave off starvation. A conflict erupts when, after of your sons and the flesh of your daughters.³⁰ I will destroy your cult places and cut down your incense stands, and I will heap your carcasses upon your lifeless fetishes.

I will spurn you.³¹ I will lay your cities in ruin and make your sanctuaries desolate, and I will not savor your pleasing odors.³² I will make the land desolate, so that your enemies who settle in it shall

בְּנֹתֶיכֶם תִּאכְלוּ: ³⁰ וְהַשְׁמְךָתִי אֶת־
בָּמֹתֶיכֶם וְהַכְרֵתִי אֶת־חֲפֹנֶיכֶם וְנַתְנֵתִי
אֶת־פְּגָרִיכֶם עַל־פְּנֵרִי גָּלוּלִיכֶם
וְגַעֲלָה נְפָשֵׁיךֶם: ³¹ וְנַתְנֵתִי אֶת־עִירִיכֶם
חָרֶבֶת וְהַשְׁמֹוּתִי אֶת־מִקְדְּשֶׁיכֶם וְלֹא
אָרַיחַ בְּרוּחַ נִיחָחֶיכֶם: ³² וְהַשְׁמַתִּי אֶת־
אֶת־הָאָרֶץ וְשָׁמְמוּ עַלְיָה אַיִבְיכֶם הַיּוֹשְׁבִים

having shared in eating the first woman's child, the second mother hides her son. (The story is an ironic twist on the episode in which King Solomon demonstrates his superb wisdom by determining which harlot is the rightful mother of a baby; see I Kings 3:16–28.) In Lamentations 2:20 and 4:10, references to women desperate enough to eat their own children show how terrible the situation for the people of Judah has become. In both of these texts, the image of women eating their children exemplifies a crisis so severe that it reverses even the maternal instinct: instead of being willing to sacrifice everything—even themselves—for their children, these mothers sacrifice their children in the most horrific way possible, so that they may live. The image is that of a world turned tragically upside down by the horrors of wartime siege and famine.

30. I will destroy your cult places and cut down your incense stands. Biblical references use neutral terms for cult places (sometimes translated as “high places”) or local shrines in early stages of Israelite life but criticize these for the period after the building of the temple in Jerusalem (in the 10th or 9th century B.C.E.). For example, I Kings 22:44 and II Kings 15:35 mention people worshiping God at such high places; that author does not approve of the practice yet apparently tolerates it. More so than men, women most likely depended on local shrines to enable them to participate in communal events. (They probably also had home shrines.) The Bible—and probably the Israelites in general—apparently considered worship of God at these local shrines to be a legitimate religious outlet until centralization of worship at the Temple began to be enforced (see at Deuteronomy 12:2–14). The Bible suggests that this centralization began around the 7th century B.C.E., in the reigns of King Hezekiah and, later, Josiah. The Bible associates worship at local shrines after that time with idolatry, regardless of who was worshiped there.

Centralization of worship probably had a huge impact on women, who would have been less able than men were to leave their families and their domestic and reproductive responsibilities in order to travel to Jerusalem. Once the worship of God at local shrines ceased to be legitimate, women lost important communal religious practices. When the Bible mentions women’s worship from the period of the monarchy on, it mostly categorizes it as worship of false deities, probably considered noteworthy because such practices undermined the central sanctuary. See, for example, the association of women with the worship of Asherah (I Kings 15:13 = II Chronicles 15:16; I Kings 18:19; and II Kings 23:4); references to female worship of the Queen of Heaven (Jeremiah 7:18 and 44:15–25); and women weeping for Tammuz (Ezekiel 8:14). From an Israelite woman’s perspective, many of these practices were probably traditional and legitimate (see women’s defense of the worship in Jeremiah 44).

32. Those who will replace the deported or destroyed Israelites will be so horrified by the level of desolation and destruction of the land that they will wonder what the inhabitants had done to incur such divine wrath against them (see also Deuteronomy 29:21–23).

be appalled by it.³³ And you I will scatter among the nations, and I will unsheathe the sword against you. Your land shall become a desolation and your cities a ruin.

³⁴ Then shall the land make up for its sabbath years throughout the time that it is desolate and you are in the land of your enemies; then shall the land rest and make up for its sabbath years.³⁵ Throughout the time that it is desolate, it shall observe the rest that it did not observe in your sabbath years while you were dwelling upon it.³⁶ As for those of you who survive, I will cast a faintness into their hearts in the land of their enemies. The sound of a driven leaf shall put them to flight. Fleeing as though from the sword, they shall fall though none pursues.³⁷ With no one pursuing, they shall stumble over one another as before the sword. You shall not be able to stand your ground before your enemies,³⁸ but shall perish among the nations; and the land of your enemies shall consume you.

³⁹ Those of you who survive shall be heartsick over their iniquity in the land of your enemies; more, they shall be heartsick over the iniquities of their forebears;⁴⁰ and they shall confess their iniquity and the iniquity of their forebears, in that they trespassed against Me, yea, were hostile to Me.⁴¹ When I, in turn, have been hostile to them and have removed them into the land of their enemies, then at last shall their obdurate heart humble itself, and they shall atone for their iniquity.⁴² Then will I remember My covenant with Jacob; I will remem-

בר: 33 וְאַתֶּם אָזְרָה בָּגּוֹים וְהַרִּקְעִתִּי
אַחֲרֵיכֶם חָרֵב וְהַתֵּה אָרְצֶם שְׁמֶמֶת
וְעַרְבֶּיכֶם יִהְיוּ חִרְפָּה:
³⁴ אָז תִּرְצַח הָאָרֶץ אֶת-שְׁבָתָתֶךָ בְּלֵי
יְמִי הַשְּׁמָמָה וְאַתָּם בָּאָרֶץ אַיִבְיכֶם אֶזְרָח
תִּשְׁבַּת הָאָרֶץ וְהַרְצַת אֶת-שְׁבָתָתֶךָ:
³⁵ בְּלִי-מִי הַשְּׁמָמָה תִּשְׁבַּת אֶת אַשְׁר לֹא-שְׁבַּתָּה בְּשְׁבָתָתֶיכֶם בְּשְׁבָתָתֶיכֶם עַלְיהָ:
³⁶ וְהַנְּשָׁאָרִים בְּלֵם וְהַבָּאָתִי מִרְקֵל בְּלַבְבָּם
בָּאָרֶץ אַיִבְיכֶם וּרְקֵף אַתָּם קָול עַלְהָ נָּקָף
וּנְסֹעַ מְנֻסְתִּיחָרֵב וּנְפָלוּ וְאֵין רְקֵף:³⁷ וּכְשָׁלוֹן
אִישׁ-בָּאָחִיו כִּמְפַנְּיִיחָרֵב וּרְקֵף אֵין וְלֹא-תְּהִיא לְכֶם תְּקוֹמָה לִפְנֵי אַיִבְיכֶם:
³⁸ וְאַבְרָתָם בָּגּוֹים וְאַכְלָה אַתָּלָם אָרֶץ
אַיִבְיכֶם:

³⁹ וְהַנְּשָׁאָרִים בְּלֵם יִמְקֹד בְּעוֹנוֹם בָּאָרֶץ
אַיִבְיכֶם וְאֶפְ בְּעוֹנוֹת אַבְתָּם אַתָּם יִמְקֹדוּ:
⁴⁰ וְהַתְּרוּ אֶת-עֲוֹנוֹת וְאֶת-עֲוֹן אַבְתָּם
בְּמַעְלָם אֲשֶׁר מַעֲלוֹבִי וְאֶפְ אֲשֶׁר-הַלְּכוֹ
עַמִּי בְּקָרְבֵי:⁴¹ אֲחִ-אָנִי אֶלְךָ עַמִּט בְּקָרְבֵי
וְהַבָּאָתִי אַתָּם בָּאָרֶץ אַיִבְיכֶם אָז-אָז
יִפְנַע לְכֶם הַעֲרֵל וְאֹז יְרַצֵּוּ אֶת-עֲוֹנוֹם:
⁴² וּזְכַרְתִּי אֶת-בְּרִיתִי יַעֲקֹב וְאֶפְ אֶת-

34. Then shall the land make up for its sabbath years. In a case of poetic justice, the land in its desolation will at last lie fallow. This will make up for all of the years that the Israelites abused it by continuous cultivation, contravening laws such as Leviticus 25.

41. obdurate heart. Literally, “uncircumcised heart.” The metaphor implies that their heart is covered as if by uncircumcised foreskin: it is unresponsive and unfeeling.

42. Then will I remember My covenant. This theme of God recalling the covenant and responding in compassion appears in Exodus 6:5 (in the context of the liberation from Egypt) and throughout the Bible. Especially interesting is Isaiah 54:1–10, where God addresses Israel as a wife and promises “her” eternal covenant faithfulness (in the context of restoration).

Jacob...Isaac...Abraham. The reversed order of the patriarchs may reflect God’s looking ber also My covenant with Isaac, and also My covenant with Abraham; and I will remember the land.

⁴³For the land shall be forsaken of them, making up for its sabbath years by being desolate of them, while they atone for their iniquity; for the abundant reason that they rejected My rules and spurned My laws. ⁴⁴Yet, even then, when they are in the land of their enemies, I will not reject them or spurn them so as to destroy them, annulling My covenant with them: for I יהוה am their God. ⁴⁵I will remember in their favor the covenant with the ancients, whom I freed from the land of Egypt in the sight of the nations to be their God: I, יהוה.

⁴⁶These are the laws, rules, and instructions that established, through Moses on Mount Sinai, with the Israelite people.

27 יהוה spoke to Moses, saying:

²Speak to the Israelite people and say to them:

backward in time to the very first commitment to this people.

44. I will not reject them or spurn them. That is, even though Israel spurned God, God will never spurn Israel completely by annulling the covenant.

45. the covenant with the ancients, whom I freed from the land of Egypt. Reference to the generation of the Exodus includes those who took part in the Sinai covenant.

CONCLUSION (26:46)

The book of Leviticus probably ended with this verse at one point. The reference to Sinai aims to emphasize the authority of these laws (see also at 25:1). The subsequent unit most likely is a later addition to this earlier conclusion.

בריתִי יְצַחֵק וְאֶפְאָתִיבְרִיתִי אֲבָרְהָם אֹזֶכֶר
וְהָאָרֶץ אֹזֶכֶר :

⁴³ וְהָאָרֶץ תִּעְזֹב מֵהֶם וַתָּרֶצֶן אֶת־שְׁבַתְתְּיָה
בְּהַשְׁמָה מִקְרָם וְהֵם יַרְצִוּ אֶת־עֲוֹנָם יְעַן
וּבְעַזְבָּן בְּמִשְׁפְּטֵי מַאֲסָוִי וְאֶת־חַקְתֵּי גָּעַלה
נְפָשָׁם : ⁴⁴ וְאֶקְרָבְגָּמְזָאת בְּהַיּוֹתָם בָּאָרֶץ
אַיִבְיהָם לְאַמְּסָתִים וּלְאַגְּעָלִים
לְכָלְתָם לְהַפֵּר בְּרִיתִי אַתֶּם כִּי אֲנִי יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֵיכֶם : ⁴⁵ וְזִכְרָתִי לְהֵם בְּרִיתַת רָאשָׁנִים
אֲשֶׁר הַזְּצָאָתִי־אֶתֶּם מִאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם לְעַיִן
הָגּוֹיִם לְהִיוֹת לְהֵם לְאֱלֹהִים אֲנִי יְהוָה :

⁴⁶ אֶלָּה הַחֲקִים וְהַמִּשְׁפְּטִים וְהַתּוֹרָת אֲשֶׁר
נִתְן יְהוָה בֵּין וּבֵין בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּהַר סִינְיָה
בִּידֵ־מֹשֶׁה : פ

כז וַיַּדְבֵּר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאמֹר : ² דָבָר
אֶל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֹמֶרֶת אֱלֹהִים אֵישׁ כִּי

Appendix

THE SANCTUARY: FUNDING, GIFTS, AND DUES (27:1–34)

This last unit of Leviticus specifies how to make various dedications to the sanctuary, how their value is determined, and whether they can be redeemed (that is, whether a monetary substitute is acceptable). These details supplement the laws about sacrifices with which the book began (Leviticus 1–7). [Monetary valuation may also be related to the redemption laws of Leviticus 25 in that, like “actuary tables,” they help estimate what redemption costs might entail. —Ed.]

Vows are essentially conditional promises to God, to be fulfilled if and when the requested conditions come to pass. According to biblical portrayals, one

When anyone explicitly vows to יהוה the equivalent for a human being,³ the following scale shall apply: If it is a male from twenty to sixty years of age, the equivalent is fifty shekels of silver by the sanctuary

יְפָלָא נֶדֶר בְּעַרְבָּקָנֶפְשָׁת לִיהוָה: ³ וְהִיא
עַרְבָּקָה הַזָּכָר מִבֵּן עֲשָׂרִים שָׁנָה וְעַד בָּנָן
שְׁשִׁים שָׁנָה וְהִיא עַרְבָּקָחַמְשִׁים שֶׁקֶל כֹּסֶף

is most likely to utter a vow at a time of great distress, when direct appeal to God seems the only option left. A person often promises to dedicate or sacrifice an animal; but sometimes one offers service to the shrine, either by oneself or one's child, such as in the case of Hannah (I Samuel 1:1–11), who promises God that if granted a son, she will dedicate his service to the sanctuary at Shiloh. The warrior Jephthah vows to sacrifice what comes from his house; it turns out to be his daughter (Judges 11:29–40; see at Numbers 30:10). As an act of individual piety or desperation, one could utter a vow anywhere; therefore, vows were a popular form of religious devotion, one in which women could participate freely. (See additional references to women making vows in Numbers 6:2, 30:4–17; Jeremiah 44:15–25; and Proverbs 31:2.)

VOTARY PLEDGES OF PEOPLE (27:1–8)

Leviticus 27 opens with instructions concerning the fulfillment of vows. There is evidence that at certain periods vows could be fulfilled at any sanctuary. In I Samuel 1–2, Hannah appeals to God at the sanctuary at Shiloh, and that is where she brings her son Samuel for the vowed service. However, at some point the priesthood set limitations regarding whose vows were binding, what one could promise, and where payment could be made. Often these regulations limited the ability of women to make and keep vows. According to Numbers 30:10, vows made by independent women, whether divorcees or widows, are binding. However, the vow of a woman who is under a male's authority can be annulled by that father or husband upon first hearing of it (Numbers 30:4–9; see further at Numbers 30:2–17). The centralization of worship further limited the ability of women to partake fully in this form of religious devotion by restricting the payment of vows to a central location (Deuteronomy 12:5–6, 11, 17, and 26).

Leviticus 27 lists fixed monetary equivalents for pledges to the sanctuary according to age and gender. Noteworthy is the lower value assigned to females in each age group. Carol Meyers suggests that the Leviticus valuation may accurately reflect the relative potential for economic productivity of each gender at various stages of life (see below) and does not reflect a notion that men are inherently more valuable than women. A high mortality rate is also no doubt a factor. Carol Meyers reports that skeletal remains in some ancient tombs help to determine mortality rates among different age and gender groups in ancient Israel. These remains indicate that the death rate was highest among the pre-adult population. In one tomb group, for example, nearly half the population did not survive to the age of 18 ("The Roots of Restriction: Women in Early Israel," 1978, p. 95).

2. When anyone explicitly vows to יהוה. The practice of vowing the value of a person to the sanctuary presumably has its roots in the earlier practice of dedicating people for lifelong service to the sanctuary (such as the vow made by Hannah in I Samuel 1:1–11). The monetary value in Leviticus 27 represents the amount of money that a vowed person's service to the sanctuary would be worth. Thus, instead of using the services of the vowed person, the priests can use the money, presumably for the maintenance of the sanctuary. The option of dedicating materials to the sanctuary not only seeks to fill a vower's personal need but also provides resources for maintaining the national sanctuary—including its personnel, especially priests (see also Numbers 6:2–21 and 30:3–15).

3. If it is a male from twenty to sixty. There weight; ⁴if it is a female, the equivalent is thirty shekels. ⁵If the age is from five years to twenty years, the equivalent is twenty shekels for a male and ten shekels for a female. ⁶If the age is from one month to five years, the equivalent for a male is five shekels of silver, and the equivalent for a female is three shekels of silver. ⁷If the age is sixty years or over, the equivalent is fifteen shekels in the case of a male and ten shekels for a female. ⁸But if one cannot afford the equivalent, that person shall be presented before the priest, and the priest shall make an assessment; the priest shall make the assessment according to what the vower can afford.

בשֶׁקֶל הַקָּדֵשׁ: ⁴ וְאִמְרָכֶתֶת הַוָּא וְהִיא עֲרָבֶת שֶׁלְשִׁים שֶׁקֶל: ⁵ וְאִם מִבְנֵי-חַמֵּשׁ שָׁנִים וְעַד בָּנָי-עֲשָׂרִים שָׁנָה וְהִיא עֲרָבֶת הַזָּכָר עֲשָׂרִים שֶׁקְלִים וְלֹנְכֶת עֲשָׂרֶת שֶׁקְלִים: ⁶ וְאִם מִבְנֵי-חַדְשָׁה וְעַל בָּנָי-חַמֵּשׁ שָׁנִים וְהִיא עֲרָבֶת הַזָּכָר חַמְשָׁה שֶׁקְלִים בְּסֶף וְלֹנְכֶת עֲרָבֶת שֶׁלְשָׁת שֶׁקְלִים בְּסֶף: ⁷ וְאִם מִבְנֵי-שָׁשִׁים שָׁנָה וּמַעַלָּה אִמְצָרֶת וְהִיא עֲרָבֶת חַמְשָׁה עָשָׂר שֶׁקֶל וְלֹנְכֶת עָשָׂרֶת שֶׁקְלִים: ⁸ וְאִם-מִזֶּה הַוָּא מִעֲרָבֶת וְהַעֲמִידָה לִפְנֵי הַכְּבָנָה וְהַעֲרִיף אֶתְךָ הַכְּבָנָה עַל-פִּי אֲשֶׁר תִּשְׁׁלַג יְדֵךְ הַנִּדְרָה יַעֲרִיכָנוּ הַכְּבָנָה:

is some biblical evidence that men, at least, were considered to be most productive between twenty to sixty years of age. The book of Numbers legislates military conscription at twenty (Numbers 1:3) and service in the Tabernacle to between twenty and fifty (4:3, 23).

4. if it is a female. The calculated 30 shekels for a woman in this category, when compared with 50 shekels for the male, places the woman's relative economic worth in this age category at 38% of the total contribution of both genders. As Meyers notes, sociological studies show that when women contribute 40% to the economy's productive labor, their status is at its highest. Their status diminishes if their contribution is higher ("Procreation, Production, and Protection: Male-Female Balance in Early Israel," 1983, pp. 569–93, especially p. 575). See further Another View, p. 780.

5. If the age is from five years to twenty. The relative valuation of females in comparison with males is lowest in the five to twenty age group (for the female, 33% of the total contribution of both genders). Meyers observes that this period coincides with peak childbearing years, when women, occupied with childbearing and childrearing, could not provide as much in the way of other economic productivity. In addition, the fact that many women died in childbirth would also explain a devaluation of women's economic worth relative to men in this age group.

6. If the age is from one month to five years. A child could not be dedicated before it was one month old, most likely reflecting a high newborn mortality rate. This also accounts for the relatively low monetary value. Only at one month was a child considered viable and more likely to survive.

7. If the age is sixty years or over. The woman's relative economic worth is highest in the over sixty category (40% of the total contribution of both genders), when male efficiency declines, while females are able to continue their domestic responsibilities with only a minimal decrease in productivity ("Procreation, Production, and Protection," pp. 584–93).

8. But if one cannot afford the equivalent. This flexibility allows poor people who wish to make dedications of this kind to the sanctuary even if they cannot afford the listed amounts. The sacrificial system incorporates similar concessions to the poor (see 12:6–8).

⁹If [the vow concerns] any animal that may be brought as an offering to יְהוָה, any such that may be given to יְהוָה shall be holy. ¹⁰One may not exchange or substitute another for it, either good for bad, or bad for good; if one does substitute one animal for another, the thing vowed and its substitute shall both be holy. ¹¹If [the vow concerns] any impure animal that may not be brought as an offering to יְהוָה, the animal shall be presented before the priest, ¹²and the priest shall assess it. Whether high or low, whatever assessment is set by the priest shall stand; ¹³and if one wishes to redeem it, one-fifth must be added to its assessment.

¹⁴If anyone consecrates a house to יְהוָה, the

⁹וְאִם־בַּהֲמָה אֲשֶׁר יִקְרֵיבוּ מִפְנֵה קָרְבָּן
לִיהוָה כֹּל אֲשֶׁר יִתְנַצֵּע מִפְנֵוּ לִיהוָה יִהְיֶה
קָדֵשׁ: ¹⁰לَا יִחְלִיפֵנוּ וְלَا יִמְרֵא אָתוֹ טָוב
בָּרָע אָזְרָע בְּטָוב וְאִם־הַמְּרָא יִמְרֵא בַּהֲמָה
בַּבְּהֲמָה וְהַיְהִידָּה וְתִמְרוֹתָה יִהְיֶה־קָדֵשׁ:
¹¹וְאִם בַּל־בַּהֲמָה טָמֵא אֲשֶׁר לִיאַקְרֵיבּוּ
מִפְנֵה קָרְבָּן לִיהוָה וְהַעֲמִיד אֶת־הַבַּהֲמָה
לִפְנֵי הַפְּנִים: ¹²וְהַעֲרִיר הַפְּנִים אֶת־הַבִּין
טוֹב וּבִין רָע בְּעַרְבָּה הַפְּנִים כִּי יִהְיֶה:
¹³וְאִם־גָּאֵל יִגְאַלְנָה וַיְסַף חַמִּישָׁתָו עַל־
עַרְבָּה:
¹⁴וְאִישׁ קִיְּדַשׁ אֶת־בֵּיתוֹ קָדֵשׁ לִיהְיָה

VOTARY PLEDGES OF ANIMALS (27:9–13)

The next section concerns two categories of animal offerings: those that are fit for sacrifice (vv. 9–10) and those that are not (vv. 11–13). Once a sacrificable animal is pledged, it must be brought in to fulfill the vow and cannot be replaced by another animal. However, a pledged animal that is unfit for sacrifice because it is ritually impure (see Leviticus 11 for a list of animals) is brought to the priest, who assigns it a value, for which the Tabernacle's staff will sell it to raise money for the sanctuary. The owner can also choose to redeem the animal, for twenty percent more than the value assessed by the priest.

The ritually pure sacrificial animals that are vowed are eaten by the priests and their households (after certain parts are burned entirely as God's portion). Leviticus 22:1–16 indicates who may partake of the priest's portion of the sacred donations. Of special interest is the question of when a priest's daughter is entitled to part of her father's share. Verses 12–13 of that passage determine that she is entitled to partake of her father's portion of the sacred donations so long as she is part of his household. If she marries a member of the priesthood, her entitlement then derives from her husband. If she marries outside the priesthood, she becomes part of the lay community and thus loses her entitlement to partake of the sacred donations. However, if she is then widowed or divorced without children, and thus has no claim to her husband's estate, she can go back to her father's household and regain her entitlement to partake of her father's portion of the sacred donations.

CONSECRATIONS OF PROPERTY (27:14–25)

This section treats three types of property pledges: dwellings (vv. 14–15), personal land holdings (vv. 16–20), and acquired land (vv. 22–25). Personal landholdings, that is, parcels of farmland, are assessed at a fixed rate according to how much seed it takes to plant them, which probably measures their size rather than how much the land has produced. The assessed value also depends on the timing of the jubilee (see 25:29–34), decreasing every year as the jubilee approaches. Several biblical texts mention women's holding land, including Zelophehad's daughters, Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah (see at Numbers 27:1–11 and 36:1–12); the wealthy woman from Shunem (II Kings 4:8–37 and 8:1–6); Achsah, whose father apparently gave her land as a dowry (Joshua 15:16–19 = Judges 1:12–15); and Naomi (Ruth 4:3–11), who is selling priest shall assess it. Whether high or low, as the priest assesses it, so it shall stand;¹⁵ and if the one who has consecrated the house wishes to redeem it, one-fifth must be added to the sum at which it was assessed, and then it shall be returned.

¹⁶If anyone consecrates to any land-holding, its assessment shall be in accordance with its seed requirement: fifty shekels of silver to a chomer of barley seed.¹⁷ If the land is consecrated as of the jubilee year, its assessment stands.¹⁸ But if the land is consecrated after the jubilee, the priest shall compute the price according to the years that are left until the jubilee year, and its assessment shall be so reduced;¹⁹ and if the one who consecrated the land wishes to redeem it, one-fifth must be added to the sum at which it was assessed, and it shall be passed back.²⁰ But if the one [who consecrated it] does not redeem the land, and the land is sold to another, it shall no longer be redeemable:²¹ when it is released in the jubilee, the land shall be holy to Yahweh, as land proscribed; it becomes the priest's holding.

²²If one consecrates to Yahweh land that was purchased, which is not one's land-holding,²³ the priest shall compute the proportionate assessment up to the jubilee year, and the assessment shall be paid as of that day, a sacred donation to Yahweh.²⁴ In the jubilee year the land shall revert to the one from whom it was bought, whose holding the land is.²⁵ All assessments shall be by the sanctuary weight, the shekel being twenty gerahs.

²⁶A firstling of animals, however, which—as a

her dead husband's land, which seems to indicate that under certain circumstances widows could inherit and sell their husband's property. Presumably a female landholder could consecrate land to the sanctuary.

14. consecrates. The verbal root is k-d-sh ("holy" or "set apart"). Here the verb means dedicating something to God, thus making it holy.

house. This probably refers to urban dwellings,

והעריכו הפקה בין טוב ובין רע באשר יעריך אותו הפקה בן יקום: ¹⁵ ואמ' המקדיש יגאל את-ביתו ויטף חמישית בסוף-ערבק עלייו והיה לו:

¹⁶ ואם משדה אחזרתו יקדים איש ליהוה והננה ערבק לפני זרע זרע חמץ שערום בחמשים שקל בסוף: ¹⁷ אם-משנת היבל יקדים שדהו ערבק יקים: ¹⁸ ואם-אחר היבל יקדים שדהו וחשב-לו הפקה את-הפסוף על-פני השנית הנותרת עד שנת היבל ונגרע מערבק: ¹⁹ ואם-גאל את-השדה המקדיש אותו ויטף חמישית בסוף-ערבק עלייו וקם לו: ²⁰ ואם-לא יגאל את-השדה ואם-מבר את-השדה לאיש אחר לא יגאל עוד: ²¹ ויהה השדה בוצאתו ביבל קדש ליהוה בשדה החרם לפכה תהיה אחזרתו:

²² ואם את-השדה מקנתו אשר לא משדה את מכתת ערבק עד שנת היבל וננתן את-הערבק ביום ההוא קדש ליהוה: את-השדה בירוק ישוב השדה לאיש ²⁴ בשנת היבל לאשרלו אחוזת הארץ: קנהו מאותו לאשרלו אחוזת הארץ: ²⁵ ובל-ערבק יהיה ב שקל הקדש עשרים גרא יהיה השקל:

²⁶ ארבענין אשורי-יבקר ליהוה בבהמה for houses located elsewhere are subject to being returned to their owner in the jubilee year (see 25:29–31).

FIRSTLINGS (27:26–27)

The Torah's legislation views all firstlings as automatically consecrated to God; their owners cannot dedicate them to the sanctuary, since they are

firstling—is יְהוָה's, cannot be consecrated by anybody; whether ox or sheep, it is יְהוָה's.²⁷ But if it is of impure animals, it may be ransomed at its assessment, with one-fifth added; if it is not redeemed, it shall be sold at its assessment.

²⁸But of all that anyone owns, be it human or beast or land-holding, nothing that has been proscribed for יְהוָה may be sold or redeemed; every proscribed thing is totally consecrated to יְהוָה.²⁹ No human being who has been proscribed can be ransomed: that person shall be put to death.

³⁰All tithes from the land, whether seed from the ground or fruit from the tree, are יְהוָה's; they are holy to יְהוָה.³¹ If anyone wishes to redeem any tithes, one-fifth must be added to them.³² All tithes of the herd or flock—of all that passes under the shepherd's staff, every tenth one—shall be holy to יְהוָה.³³ One must not look out for good as against bad, or make substitution for it. If one does make substitution for it, then it and its substitute shall both be holy: it cannot be redeemed.

already God's property (see, for example, Exodus 13:2). Animals that are not fit for sacrifice can be redeemed by the owner. Otherwise, the sanctuary may sell them as a source of income.

PROSCRIPTIONS (27:28–29)

While most references to cherem (proscription) in the Bible deal with the proscription of Israel's enemies and their property at times of war (for example, Numbers 21:2–3), Leviticus 27 seems to be addressing cases within the Israelite community. Proscribed property becomes the permanent property of the sanctuary.

These verses seem to presume a distinction between two types of persons. Verse 28 treats non-Israelite slaves who are proscribed as part of an owner's property and then become the permanent

לֹא-יִקְרַב אֲשֶׁר אָמַר שׂוֹר אֲמִשָּׁה
לִיהוָה הוּא: ²⁷ וְאֵם בְּבִמְהָה הַטְמָאָה
וְפְרָה בְּעַרְכָּה וַיְסַף חַמְשָׁתָן עַלְיוֹ וְאַמְלָאָה
יִגְאַל וְנִמְכֵר בְּעַרְכָּה:

²⁸ אֲנָה-בְּל-חֶרְם אֲשֶׁר יִחְרַם אִישׁ לִיהוָה
מִכְלָא-אָשְׁר-לֹו מִאָדָם וּבְמָמוֹן וּמִשְׁדָּה
אֲחַזְתָּו לֹא יִמְכֵר וְלֹא יִגְאַל בְּל-חֶרְם
קְדֻשָּׁ-קְדֻשִּׁים הוּא לִיהוָה: ²⁹ בְּל-חֶרְם
אֲשֶׁר יִחְרַם מִן-הָאָדָם לֹא יִפְרָה מוֹתָה יוֹמָה:

³⁰ וּכְל-מָעֵשָׂר הָאָרֶץ מִזְרָע הָאָרֶץ מִפְרִי
הָעַז לִיהוָה הוּא קָדֵש לִיהוָה: ³¹ וְאֵם-
גָּאֵל יִגְאַל אִישׁ מִפְנֵשָׂרוֹ חַמְשִׁיתוֹ יַסְף
עַלְיוֹ: ³² וּכְל-מָעֵשָׂר בָּקָר וְצָאן כָּל אֲשֶׁר-יעַבְרֶר תְּחִת הַשְׁבָט הַעֲשֵׂרִי וְהַיָּה-קָדֵש
לִיהוָה: ³³ לֹא יִבְקַר בִּינְטוּב לְרֹעַ וְלֹא
יִמְירַנו וְאַמְחַמֵּר יִמְרַנְנו וְהַיָּה-הָאָהָר
וְתִמְוֹרְתָו יְהִי-קָדֵש לֹא יִגְאַל:

property of the sanctuary. Verse 29 applies to individuals whom some authorized communal body (probably a court) has proscribed, and who are thus under a death sentence.

28. totally consecrated. Heb. kodesh kodashim. Objects permanently dedicated to God have the status of most holy; they are immutably sacred.

TITHES (27:30–33)

These laws about two categories of tithes, agricultural and livestock, diverge from other biblical sources on tithes (see, for example, Numbers 18:21–24). As such, this section may represent either a very old tradition or a radical attempt at reform.

33. The tenth animal, whatever its condition, is designated for the tithe. It is unclear how in practice the status of tenth animal was to be assigned.

³⁴These are the commandments that יְהוָה gave Moses for the Israelite people on Mount Sinai.

אֱלֹהִים הַמְצֻוֹת אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֲתִיכָּמֹשָׁה
אֲלֵבָנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּהַר סִינַי:

CONCLUSION (27:34)

The final verse functions as a new conclusion to the book of Leviticus, complementing and completing the one in 26:46, which it closely resembles.

Leviticus concludes by claiming that God gave these commandments to Moses on Mount Sinai. That is, even the material that seems to be appended has its origin in the original revelation and is essential to the covenant at Sinai.

—Hilary Lipka

Another View

THE CONCLUDING UNIT of Leviticus concerns the economic support base, in the form of vowed resources, for ancient Israel's central shrine. The first set of such votary pledges, Leviticus 27:2–8, involves the equivalence in silver of persons according to categories of gender and age, with separate assessments listed for females and males in four age groups. Because of the greater monetary values assigned to males in each age category, scholars have sometimes understood this table of valuations as an expression of gender bias, with females considered inherently less valuable than males.

However, many commentators now understand that this table relates mainly to labor potential rather than to intrinsic worth. The highest monetary values appear for persons of ages twenty to sixty; such people would be considered mature adults, given the fact that biblical census texts list males of age twenty and above (namely, those who might be conscripted into military service; see Numbers 1:3). That the youngest age category is that of one- to five-year-olds can be explained by presuming that ancient Israel was like many pre-modern agrarian societies in expecting children of very young ages to perform simple household tasks. Perhaps because of average differences in physical strength, women or girls were deemed to have a lower productive capacity than males of the same age, and thus Leviticus 27 assigns them a somewhat lower valuation in all categories.

The differential shekel values attached to females and males provide an insight into the labor patterns in Israelite households and the associated status of women. The best way to view the table is to sum the value of the two genders in each age bracket, thus obtaining the combined labor value of a female-male pair of workers in each category; then we can compare the contribution of each gender to this total amount. Except for the five to twenty category, in which child-bearing (presumably beginning at puberty) might reduce the labor potential of females, the female percentage of that combined female-male amount is at or near 40 percent. Social scientists who study the relative contributions of women and men to household labor in various cultures have noted that a 2:3 female-to-male ratio, with women supplying 40 percent of the subsistence labor, correlates with the maximum prestige for women. Thus the table of valuations in Leviticus 27 is hardly a reflection of female inferiority but rather provides evidence of a positive estimation of women.

This ratio of labor contribution correlates with maximum prestige for women.

—Carol Meyers

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

When anyone explicitly vows to יהוה (27:2). The Hebrew noun translated here as “anyone” is ish, which in some contexts refers only to males. This verse’s formulation contrasts with the nazirite vow in Numbers 6:2 and with the general vows and oaths in Numbers 30:3–4, which both specify also the female counterpart noun, ishah, as a potential oath taker (see commentaries there). Nonetheless, the Rabbis (Mishnah Arachin 1:1) explicate that both men and women can make the type of vow presumed by this biblical unit, implying that ish as used here is to be read inclusively.

B'CHUKOTAI

In several different places, Mishnah Arachin records the names of women who made vows of various kinds, mostly related to their children. In the current context, it mentions the mother of a girl by the name of Yirmatia (or Domitia in a manuscript version) who vowed her daughter's weight, although it is unclear to what purpose (5:1). Elsewhere in the Mishnah, Helena—the queen of Adiabene, a convert to Judaism who is also mentioned by the 1st-century-C.E. historian Josephus—is said to have vowed to become a nazirite for seven years if her son returned “in safety from the war” (Mishnah Nazir 3:6). Also a certain Miriam of Palmyra brings offerings to fulfill a vow related to her dying daughter (Nazir 6:11). Josephus further mentions that his contemporary Berenice—sister of the Jewish Herodian ruler Agrippa II, and lover of Titus (the Roman general and later emperor)—made a vow of abstention.

Both women and men can make the type of vow presumed by Leviticus 27.

Nonetheless, even though women appear prominently as autonomous oath takers in rabbinic aggadic literature, halachically a woman's oaths were subject to a father's or husband's annulment, much as specified already in biblical law (Numbers 30:4–17). Only widows, divorcees, or unmarried women above the age of 12½ could make vows as freely as any adult male.

the equivalent for a human being (27:2). Although the vows of dedication to the Temple lost their relevance after its destruction in 70 C.E., the Rabbis developed the regulations outlined in Leviticus 27 into a special mishnaic tractate called Arachin (Valuations), derived from the biblical word translated here as “equivalent” (erech). Indeed, the subject of vows and oaths occupied the Rabbis greatly as they set about organizing their formulation of Jewish law. Indeed, the Mishnah devoted three additional tractates to this topic—N'darim (Vows), Nazir (Nazirite), and Sh'vuot (Oaths)—all of which received extensive talmudic discussion. Perhaps this indicates the popularity of oaths and vows as an expression of religiosity, extending into rabbinic times. Other evidence of this propensity is found in the words of the 4th-century Christian leader John Chrysostom of Antioch and Constantinople, known for his anti-Jewish sermons, who chastised his audience for flocking to the synagogues to take oaths.

if it is a female, the equivalent is thirty shekels (27:4). The scale of fixed human value established here remains uncontested and unchanged in rabbinic tradition and does not receive much further commentary. The Rabbis devoted much more attention to regulating individualized vows such as vowing someone's weight, or even the weight of a particular body part (Mishnah Arachin 5:1–2). Interestingly, the Rabbis take note that the Torah differentiates between the weight of male (zachar) and female (n'kevah), and they therefore insist that this refers to those who are “definitely male” and “definitely female.” This is one of the many contexts in Jewish law where the Rabbis introduce the concept of indeterminable sexual identity, namely the hermaphrodite (androginos) and the non-sexed person (tumtum), only to exclude such people from the scale of human valuation. However, the Mishnah considers both the androginos and the tumtum fully human and therefore able to make vows of valuation on someone who is of unambiguous sexual identity (Arachin 1:1).

If the age is from one month to five years, the equivalent for a male is five shekels of silver (27:6). Numbers 18:15–16 likewise prescribe five shekels for the redemption of a month-old first-born son from the priest. Since this practice persisted in Jewish communities beyond Temple times (pidyon haben), the Rabbis in Mishnah B'chorot 8:7 attempted to determine the contemporary coinage that contained the equivalent amount of silver. The talmudic Rabbis emphasize that women are exempt from the commandment of redeeming the first-born son, just as they are not obligated to circumcise their infant sons (BT Kidushin 29a).

—Charlotte Elisheva Fonrobert

• • • • •

Contemporary Reflection

THERE IS SOMETHING profoundly unsettling about B'chukotai. It seems to posit a world that we know, empirically, does not exist. It claims that there is a direct correlation between our actions and the natural order of the universe. Leviticus 26:3–5 promises unambiguously: “If you follow My laws and faithfully observe My commandments, I will grant you rains in their season . . . you shall eat your fill of bread. . . .” Verses 14–16 warn just as clearly: “But if you do not obey Me and do not observe all these commandments . . . I will wreak misery upon you. . . .” The seeming system of reward and punishment that these biblical passages proclaim appears to contradict the troubling reality that we witness, in which good people suffer, and evil people often prosper.

Passages like these seem to provide justification for those who reject both faith and God. How often do we hear, in the face of personal trauma or tragedy, “I can no longer believe in God” or “I can’t believe in a God who would do this”? How are we to understand God’s threats and promises?

According to the biblical scholar Nehama Leibowitz, our ancestors regarded blessings and curses, such as those in B'chukotai, as forms of prayer: these are the things that people hoped for, even willed to happen, in their longing for a world in which justice would visibly prevail. Perhaps this parashah is telling us, in its own theological language, that there is a moral order to the universe that is intrinsically connected to the natural order of the universe—and that the two orders are mutually dependent. In these teachings, it is as if God gives humankind every opportunity to discern that human action is intrinsic, and essential, to the proper functioning of the cosmos. Over and over again, the Torah enjoins us to act, to do, and to be because we “were slaves to Pharaoh in Egypt” (Deuteronomy 6:21), because we “know the feelings of the stranger” (Exodus 23:9), and through these experiences have been given the opportunity to glimpse this truth. This is why we were chosen to bear witness to

The physical and ethical dimensions of Creation are dependent upon each other.

God’s revelation that “I, your God יְהוָה, am holy” (Leviticus 19:2). We are created in God’s image and we, as God’s partners, were chosen for a sacred task. This is our heritage and our responsibility; this is what it means to complete the work of Creation. But what if we forget, neglect, or ignore our sacred task of following the commandments?

The catalogue of threats and promises is a biblical way to explain how intimate the connection of the natural realm of the universe is to the moral realm. The two realms do not function independently of each other. There is a moral order to the universe as surely as there is a more easily observable natural order of “rains in their season.”

And it is in the moral realm where God cannot function alone. God never could—and so kept looking for partners. What did we expect of a God who created the natural universe? That the moral dimension was an afterthought? Our sages believed it pre-existed. God did not neglect the moral realm. On the contrary, humankind did. God kept expecting humankind to behave morally and was constantly disappointed—with Adam, with Noah, with the generations after the Flood. Finally, God found Abraham, the person who engaged God as an equal on ethical ground: “Must not the Judge of all the earth do justly?” (Genesis 18:25), and the process of Revelation began.

B'CHUKOTAI

The essential unity of all aspects of God’s Creation appears as well in Lurianic Kabbalah’s formulation of the universe. Isaac Luria’s theory of Sh’virat Hakeilim (Shattering of the Vessels) seeks to explain the brokenness of our world, and to advance the means to restore it to its original unity. For Luria in the 16th century, it was the great cosmic shattering that had brought about our exile from God and from God’s Creation. Luria not only understood the primordial unity of God’s intention but also yearned for a return to it. In God’s promise of “rains in their season [and presence] in your midst,” Luria could see the opportunity for humankind to repair the world, to release the sparks, to play a role in the restoration of the universe through the performance of mitzvot.

In Judaism, the mystic does not seek to transcend or deny the material world. Rather, the mystic’s goal is the objective of this Torah portion: to restore the world, materially and spiritually, to a “single divine reality.” As Lawrence Fine describes that goal in his study of Luria, Physician of the Soul, Healer of the Cosmos (2003), it is the “dream that collective human effort can mend a broken world.” This is the vision of B’chukotai.

In these final verses of the book of Leviticus, God describes—in the most tactile, physical, understandable terms possible—the relationship between God’s Creation and humankind’s responsibility. It is simultaneously bribe and promise, exhortation and encouragement. At the foundation of it all is the essential understanding of Torah: the physical and ethical dimensions of God’s Creation are wholly dependent upon each other, and we ignore that relationship at our peril. There is no quid pro quo for individuals in the world—God’s scheme is far grander and more subtle than that. The issue is not one of personal reward and punishment. It is the unity of God, the unity of the prophetic vision as rendered in the Reform liturgy: “On that day, all the world shall be One and God’s name shall be One” (Zechariah 14:9). It is the ultimate fulfillment of Torah—as expressed in Leviticus 26:46: “These are the laws, rules, and torot that תִּרְאֶה established beino uvein b’nei Israel (in relationship with the Children of Israel).” This is the partnership that must one day bring about the fulfillment of our hopes, dreams, and strivings—the sparks released as heaven and earth, heart and mind and soul are united at last.

—Sarah Sager

Voices

from You are Wondrous

Lea Goldberg (transl. Rachel Tzvia Back)

Leviticus 26:4–10

By law I am not entitled to this joy. I know, by law
I do not deserve the splendor of bridal clothes
but the sackcloth of the penitent.

But I am guilty that at my journey's end,
my eyes toward the wasteland, happiness caught me like a downpour and I had no time to cover my head.

Ever since I have been like a tree in the heart of the desert
on which a thousand birds have descended, its dry branches filling with song.

Ever since I have been a pool in the heart of night—
in their randomness, generous skies have scattered in it all the stars.

The Dance of the Reform Jew

Myra Soifer

Leviticus 26:3

Though the translation renders the word teileichu as “follow,” the usual meaning of its root, h-l-ch, is actually “to walk.” Jewish law is known as halachah, “the walking path.” As a Reform Jew, walking in God’s laws is not for me. I’d rather dance them. Lately, I’ve become a passionate dancer. I tap dance for fun, but ballroom dance is my unbridled joy. And on the dance floor, I’ve learned quite a bit about God and mitzvot. Dancing is a whole new way of being in the world. While I live pretty rationally, I dance best when I’m least cerebral. I’m not too bad at learning Torah and Talmud, but learning dance steps uses a whole different sort of memory. It’s muscle memory, body memory—a kind of memory that goes deeper and far beyond the scope of my intellect. My greatest challenge in ballroom dance has been learning to follow. I am used to being in control and trust my own abilities more easily than I trust my partners. It took me a long time to understand that following is a real blessing; trusting someone else to lead when I can anticipate and know the steps to come has become an important part of my joy as I whirl around the dance floor. Is God the supreme dance partner who invites me to join the dance of life, and to follow a rhythm that engages my body and my spirit?

B'CHUKOTAI

Broken Prayer

Yerra Sugarman

Leviticus 26:14–45

Dear God of Israel, my heart is a ship on high swells, a reed cradle. Lapis lit with affliction.

You, who made the heart whole, why do you unfasten from it the soul—so glass—

so broken—

That Very Night

Rivka Miriam (transl. Linda Stern Zisquit)

Leviticus 27:1–8

1

That very night it became clear to him that I'm a man
a heavy man with strict countenance whose talk is mixed with strange dialects and until now when he was touching me otherwise
he was wrong.
I'm a man.

So he saw.

"She's a man," he said,
for he was used to calling me "she"
all those years.

Together we'll go to the store and buy matching hats and speak to each other in thick voices.

2

Now that it is clear that I'm a man
it turns out that I'm the father of my children and their growth was in a father's womb warm and hairy and tearless.
Children, call me mother and when I speak to you I'll try my thinnest voice bonnets and aprons I'll continue to embroider with my large fingers.
Children, call me mother
even if the milk froze at the tip of my nipples.

3

All the words I've written till now—
a man wrote.
Once I thought they were like a woman swelling and shrinking with the seasons, like her.
It's not so.
They were straight and set, void of curves.
When a girl approaches them with a confident arm, they'll embrace her and she'll open up wide.

Packing Slip

Jessica Greenbaum

Leviticus 27:3–4

White, Jewish female, 5' 4 1/2", 112 lbs, brown eyes, brown hair, from hirsute tribes in Poland and Russia, Tay-Sachs positive, HIV negative, anemia prevents selling blood for pocket money when traveling in Greece or other countries, Raynaud's disease causes numbness in digits when cold, often followed by sense of homesickness for some place as yet unnamed; fallen arches from thirty years of running the streets of Roslyn, Manhattan, Houston, Brooklyn, and wherever she woke up; aversion to cilantro, and violent response to tickling; wide scar down belly from amateurish removal of ovarian cyst ("who did that, a butcher?" asked the gynecologist); slight knife-fight scar on shoulder from lung surgery, with side-effect of permanent tenderness in left breast; pregnancies to term: 2; abortions for medical reasons: 2; for non-medical: 1; miscarriage followed by d&c's: 3; able to swim a mile without shortness of breath and lift heavy packages in single heave; fine sense of smell though Semitic nose reflects, through complexion, emotional climate, intake of hot drinks, alcohol, spices and chocolate; can sit cross-legged and touch toes (separate times), stalled lifelong at 11 push-ups; legally blind without specs, sensitivity to sunlight has bred the wearing of sunglasses indoors in such places as rude brightness requires; no fear of bats, snakes or spiders, but scurrying rodents evoke generic screech. In general, however, heart seems unafraid: shows buds, rings, and other surprising signs of new growth and heartiness for winter months; flowers and fruit collected last spring still out for analysis; lab technicians have reported falling into dream-like faint upon attempt to decode spell and provide explanations. Contents, which may have settled during living, contain live cultures.

Inspector # 9

Nearing 80

Bracha Kopstein

Leviticus 27:7

I look into the mirror and smile,
Laugh not at myself, but at the calendar—
Have never been eighty before.

I was frightened at the thought of eighty,
Here I am, the calendar says—
Reaching the shore.

I am a living book, a pageless book
That I could never re-read Within eighty years.

I need more years.
I am so busy with life and with words
That I cannot pronounce, like a newborn baby.

I want to understand myself,
Neighbors, family, country—
I desire a great number of years.

Will I ever learn at all?
Never!
I want to feel, as I do:
Numberless, young old, I am I.

I can see, I can hear, I can cry,
I can smile
The same as yesterday, a century ago
With all the pages of the book unopened,
I have new ones yet to write.

What a delight
Nearing eighty,
To say to the calendar:
Forgive me, But I doubt your power—
I feel, and I am.

במדבר ◆ B'midbar

NUMBERS

THE BOOK OF NUMBERS records the Israelites' forty years' journey from Sinai to the plains (or steppes) of Moab, their last stop before entering the Promised Land. The book begins with a census that numbers the eligible fighting men among the people who left Egypt—hence the English name “Numbers.” Yet it is the Hebrew name of the book, B'midbar (“in the wilderness [of]”), that aptly captures the challenges the book describes. Wilderness is a place—or time—with-out orienting landmarks or structure. Numbers charts the journey through a wilderness and attempts to create new structures in this intermediary space for future life in the land.

The book is itself a kind of wilderness, a seemingly chaotic combination of narratives, laws, and lists that can be roughly divided into three parts. Numbers’ narrative begins where Exodus 40 left off. The first part describes orderly preparations and departure from Sinai, where the Israelites had camped for two years (Numbers 1–10). The second part describes descent into chaos, with the Israelites’ (mis)-adventures during the journey. This section is marked by “murmurings” and rebellions, and their dire consequences (Numbers 11–25), including God’s decision to doom the generation of the Exodus to die in the wilderness. The third part describes the preparation of the new generation for life in the Promised Land (Numbers 26–37).

This book treats women as a force to contend with, and as a source of Torah.

The book’s major themes include: conflicts and decisions over leadership, worship and sanctuary, and land inheritance. Numbers reflects competition over legitimate priesthood between the line of Aaron and other members from the tribe of Levi, to which Moses and Miriam also belong. The book grants the priesthood solely to men of the line of Aaron and only secondary responsibilities for the sanctuary to the rest of the men of Levi, known as Levites. Like Leviticus, Numbers is also concerned with ritual purity and thus it likewise prescribes steps to guard the sanctity of the sanctuary as well as the purity of all who approach it. Critical scholars typically question the book's historical accuracy as a depiction of life in the wilderness; they conclude that Israel's memory of this period was shaped over a long period of time, and that the laws and narratives in Numbers come primarily from priestly sources (see Women and Interpretation of the Torah, p. xxxvi).

Women appear more prominently in Numbers than in Leviticus—both as those to whom laws apply and as active figures in narratives; they play a significant role in nine out of thirty-six chapters.

Although most of the laws in Numbers pertain to women and men alike, some specifically concern women. These include the case of the wife suspected of adultery (Numbers 5:11–31), which describes the ordeal she must undergo in such a situation; the laws about vows (Numbers 30) that delineate who determines what vows a woman must honor; and laws of inheritance for when a man dies without a will and has daughters but no sons (Numbers 27 and 36).

Whereas the case of the suspected wife and that of vows have women as their object of concern, the stories about inheritance present women as subjects: women who take action and initiate a new ruling that enables them as well as future women to inherit their ancestral land if their father has no sons. Here, five sisters named Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah (also known as Zelophehad's daughters) argue their case before Israel's leaders and the larger community, thereby effecting change. Perhaps most astonishing, their story also depicts a situation in which a Torah law emerges not from Sinai but from the women themselves (for details, see at Numbers 27 and 36).

Other stories include Miriam's (and Aaron's) challenge to Moses in Numbers 12 and the stories about dangerous women, especially foreign women (see the case of the Moabite/Midianite women in Numbers 25 and 33 who are depicted as luring Israel away from God). Ultimately, little can be determined from Numbers about the actual lives of women in ancient Israel. Yet one can conclude from this book that women were perceived as a force to contend with, as well as a source for Torah.

—Tamara Cohn Eskenazi

• • • • •

במדבר ◆ B'midbar

NUMBERS 1:1–4:20

The Architecture of a Count and the Architecture of Account

THE SACRED SPACE described in parashat B'midbar bridges the end of Exodus and the beginning of Numbers. Exodus concludes with a magisterial description of the Tabernacle and the priests—both resplendent in the colorful handiwork of Israelite women. Once God's presence fills the Tabernacle and not even Moses can enter, a distinction between Divine and human becomes clear. Leviticus follows, with laws concerning how to negotiate this boundary between Divine and human. Numbers then returns to the topic with which Exodus ends. In Numbers the perspective is widened to include the formation in which Israel camps with the Tabernacle at its center. The Tabernacle complex, with its collapsible boundaries and open spaces, creates a sense of order in the unfamiliar chaos of the wilderness. The Tabernacle also helps orient the Israelites in the vast expanse of that wilderness, since they stay or go based on the ascent and descent of the cloud of God's Presence. In this sense, God lives amidst the Israelites throughout their journey to the Promised Land.

"Numbers," the English name of the book, alludes to the social organization of the Israelites and the two censuses that frame the book (Numbers 1 and 26); the Hebrew title, B'midbar (from the first distinctive word, meaning "in the wilderness [of]"), highlights the transitory setting of the narrative. The contrast between these two titles reflects a tension between order and chaos, culture and nature, obedience and rebellion that characterizes the book and drives its plot. This type of tension also suffuses the concept of holiness that operates in this book, in which one recognizes both the creative and the destructive power of God.

Ordering the community creates the space for encounters with the Divine.

While contact with God makes Israel holy, encountering God without preparation is potentially lethal.

Although the scrupulous detail of this parasha and other parts of the book may not immediately grip the reader, the underlying idea is that the ordering of the community—and by extension, one's life—creates the space for encounters with the Divine. The power of this book emerges from the image of the encampment's concentric rectangles radiating inward to a core of supreme holiness. In this geometry of moving from the periphery to the center, the tribes encamp around the Levites, who encircle the high priestly family, who surround the Tabernacle's curtained walls that enclose the court that buffers the Holy of Holies. This symmetry—constructed on the ground as well as in prose—is a collective act of ordering chaos that emulates the creation of the world in Genesis 1:1–2:4.

Parashat B'midbar illustrates how hierarchies in a given society are “spatialized,” meaning that its power structures are evident in the physical spaces of the society, such as city plans or religious architecture. In Numbers, for example, the arrangement of the camp favors the sons of Aaron as kohanim (priests), whereas the marching order gives prominence to the sons of Judah. Military language and concepts infuse the description of the camp’s arrangement. It is not surprising, therefore, that women do not appear in this parashah; counting conceals the female presence in the community. (For a somewhat different perspective on women’s apparent absence, see Another View, p. 808.)

—Rachel Havrelock

Outline—

I. NAMES AND NUMBERS

The Israelites in the Wilderness (1:1–54)

- A. The tribes (vv. 1–19)
- B. The census (vv. 20–46)
- C. The Levites (vv. 47–54)

II. THE GEOMETRY OF THE HOLY (2:1–34)

- A. The east (vv. 1–9)
- B. The south (vv. 10–16)
- C. The center (v. 17)
- D. The west (vv. 18–24)
- E. The north (vv. 25–31)
- F. Conclusion (vv. 32–34)

III. THE LEVITES (3:1–4:20)

- A. The election of the priests (3:1–10)
- B. The election of the Levites (3:11–22)
- C. The organization of the Levites (3:23–39)
- D. The price of redemption (3:40–51)
- E. The service of the Levites (4:1–20)

1:1

On the first day of the second month, in the second year following the exodus from the land of Egypt, יְהוָה spoke to Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the Tent of Meeting, saying:

²Take a census of the whole Israelite company

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה בְּמִדְבָּר סִינְיָן
בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד בְּאֶחָד לְחֹדֶש הַשְׁנִי בְּשָׁנָה
הַשְׁנִית לְצִאתְךָ מִאֶרֶץ מִצְרַיִם לְאמֹר:
²שָׂאו אֶת־רַאשׁ כָּל־עַדְתְּ בְנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל

Names and Numbers

THE ISRAELITES IN THE WILDERNESS (1:1–54)

B'midbar opens by setting the date of the census: Rosh Chodesh Iyar, the start of the second month of the second year since Israel departed from Egypt. Although the Israelites are more than a year deep in their journey, this date marks something of a new beginning since they are now in possession of laws as well as the Tabernacle. A central theme of the book of Numbers is transition; the census relates to this theme by depicting the transition of the tribes into a national body.

How are we to understand the litany of names that fill this parashah? The ordering of the camp is akin to the necessary preparations that precede any expedition or long trip, as departure requires taking stock of what one brings along. The dominant motivation of this census is to organize Israel into battalions in order to begin the march toward Canaan. As the Torah reminds us, other nations inhabit the Promised Land; so before Israel claims the destination as home, it will have to reconstitute itself as a nation of warriors.

But the census also represents a point reached in every community when the group takes stock of who stands in its ranks. This, then, is a moment of Israel's self-assessment, where the generation previously numbered only as slaves in Egypt perceives itself as a unified nation. However, in an important sense, the opening of Numbers is utopian; as the rest of the book demonstrates, the generation that once knew slavery in Egypt proves incapable of remaking itself into a nation of warriors and reaching the Promised Land. Their fate instead will be to perish in the wilderness and find consolation in the fact that their children will achieve what they could not.

THE TRIBES (1:1–19)

2. Take a census. A census is a practical tool but also a mode of enforcing power. Who does the recording and who is recorded are not incidental issues; rather, the answers provide a form of centralizing authority and of creating a definitive hierarchy. The Tanach records several censuses and (in its characteristic way) includes examples that express ambivalence about this practice. While there is something rousing about the emergence of organized troops from the newly liberated and still somewhat

- The Israelite encampment is structured according to four important women.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 808

- One reason for the deaths of Aaron's sons was their arrogance in refusing to marry.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 809

- The question is not whether everyone is counted, but whether everyone matters.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 810

- I am a wandering girl. / My heart is practiced in longing....

VOICES ► 812

[of fighters] by the clans of its ancestral houses, listing the names, every male, head by head.³ You and Aaron shall record them by their groups, from the age of twenty years up, all those in Israel who are able to bear arms.⁴ Associated with you shall be a representative of each tribe, each one the head of his ancestral house.

⁵These are the names of the representatives who shall assist you:

From Reuben, Elizur son of Shedeur.

⁶From Simeon, Shelumiel son of Zurishaddai.

לִמְשֹׁפְחֹתֶם לְבֵית אֲבָתֶם בְּמִסְפֵּר שְׁמוֹת
כָּל־זָכָר לְגַלְגָּלָתֶם: ³ מִבּוֹן עֲשָׂרִים שָׁנָה
וּמִעַלָּה כָּל־יִצְאָא צָבָא בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל תִּפְקֹדוּ
אֲתֶם לְצָבָאֲתֶם אַתֶּה וְאַתֶּן: ⁴ וְאַתֶּכְם֙
וְהַיּוּ אִישׁ אִישׁ לִמְטָה אִישׁ רָאשׁ לְבֵית־
אֲבָתְּיוֹ הוּא: ⁵ וְאֶלְךָ שְׁמוֹת הָאָנָשִׁים אֲשֶׁר יַעֲמֹדְךָ לְרִאשָׁן אֶלְيִצְׁוֹר בֶּן־שְׁדִיאֹור: ⁶ לְשָׁמְעוֹן שְׁלֹמִיָּאל בֶּן־צּוּרִישָׁהִי:

beleaguered people of Israel, other occasions of census taking unleash chaos on the Israelites (II Samuel 24:1–10; I Chronicles 21:1–8; 27:23–24). There is thematic tension between the idea that Israel should be numberless (Genesis 15:5; I Kings 3:8) and the occasions of census taking.

ancestral houses. Heb. beit avot. The tribes are made up of clans comprised of families, and the family unit in turn includes a cluster of households. The “ancestral house” (extended family) is the core institution of the agricultural and tribal system of ancient Israel. This unit claims a specific tract of land as well as its yield and workers. The beit avot (also called beit av, as when Rachel and Leah speak in Genesis 31:14) is an extended-family structure made up of all the descendants of a living ancestor, whereas the larger clan and tribal units rally around the memory of a more distant patriarchal figure. When a female member of the beit avot marries, she generally departs from her beit avot and joins that of her husband. At no level in this parashah are women recorded, but the very notion of a family or a household as a basis of society demands recognition of female power and agency.

every male. The hierarchy at work becomes apparent as only men are counted as Israelites at this juncture, and as priests and Levites secure exemptions. The census regroups Israel along military lines, yet we note that all of the potential fighting men of Israel comprise less than half of the community, not the whole.

3. groups... bear arms. Heb. tz'vaot... tzava. These terms refer here to military roles fulfilled by men. However, the same root (tz-v-a) is used elsewhere to describe the women who served at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting (see at Exodus 38:8; I Samuel 2:22). In Isaiah 40:2 the same term, referring to conscript service, is ascribed to Jerusalem personified as a woman. When the prophet Deborah commands the Israelites to go to war, she appoints a man, Barak, to lead the troops. (Upon Barak’s insistence, however, Deborah accompanies him in battle; see Judges 4:1–10.)

4. representative of each tribe. At certain junctures in the wilderness, it becomes apparent that Israel comprises twelve tribes. Each tribe adheres to an internal order while participating in the larger community. Maintaining tribal boundaries with respect to land inheritance will later prompt one group to challenge the unqualified grant of land to the daughters of Zelophehad: Mahlah, Tirzah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Noah. See at 36:1–13.

5. These are the names. The list of tribal chieftains groups the tribes according to their ancestral mothers (Genesis 35:22–26). The Leah tribes appear first, followed by the Rachel tribes; the Bilhah and Zilpah tribes are then interspersed.

- ⁷From Judah, Nahshon son of Amminadab.
⁸From Issachar, Nethanel son of Zuar.
⁹From Zebulun, Eliab son of Helon.
¹⁰From the sons of Joseph:
 from Ephraim, Elishama son of Ammihud;
 from Manasseh, Gamaliel son of Pedahzur.
¹¹From Benjamin, Abidan son of Gideoni.
¹²From Dan, Ahiezer son of Ammishaddai.
¹³From Asher, Pagiel son of Ochran.
¹⁴From Gad, Eliasaph son of Deuel.
¹⁵From Naphtali, Ahira son of Enan.
¹⁶Those are the elected of the assembly, the chieftains of their ancestral tribes: they are the heads of the contingents of Israel.

¹⁷So Moses and Aaron took those representatives, who were designated by name,¹⁸and on the first day of the second month they convoked the whole company [of fighters], who were registered by the clans of their ancestral houses—the names of those aged twenty years and over being listed head by head.¹⁹As יהוה had commanded Moses, so he recorded them in the wilderness of Sinai.

7. Nahshon son of Amminadab. The tribal representative from Judah is the nephew of Eliesheba, wife to Aaron the chief priest and mother of the priests Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar (Exodus 6:23). The tribes of Judah and Levi were thus allied when a prominent woman of Judah married Aaron. This foreshadows the fact that the Temple will be built in the territory of Judah. The book of Ruth also enumerates Nahshon in its genealogy (Ruth 4:20).

16. the heads of the contingents of Israel. The tribal heads simultaneously command military contingents.

18. they convoked the whole company [of fighters]. Following the census, those listed in the ranks gather under the banner or “standard” of their tribes and stand proud as the army of Israel. The army that here appears well poised for battle will not prove psycho-

- ⁷לִיהוָה נְחַזּוֹן בֶּן־עֲמִינְדָּב:
⁸לִישְׁכָר לֵישְׁכָר נְתַנְּאֵל בֶּן־צֹעַר:
⁹לִזְבוֹלֵן אֱלִיאָב בֶּן־חַלְּן:
¹⁰לְבָנֵי יוֹסֵף לְאַפְרִים אַלְיָשְׁמָעַ בֶּן־עַמִּיחֹוד:
 לִמְנַשָּׁה גִּמְלִיאָל בֶּן־פְּרַחַצּוֹר:
¹¹לְבָנִימָן אֲבִיכָן בֶּן־גָּדָעַנִּי:
¹²לְדָן אֲחִיעָזָר בֶּן־עַמִּישָׂדִי:
¹³לְאַשְׁר פְּגַעִיאָל בֶּן־עַכְרָן:
¹⁴לְגָד אַלְטָף בֶּן־דָּעוֹאָל:
¹⁵לְנַפְתָּלִי אֲחִירָע בֶּן־עִינָנִן:
¹⁶אֱלֹה קָרְיאִי קָרוֹאִי הָעֶדֶה נְשִׁיאִי מִטוֹתָה
 אֲבוֹתָם רָאשָׁי אַלְפִי יִשְׂרָאֵל הֵם:
¹⁷וַיַּקְרֵךְ מִשָּׁה וְאַהֲרֹן אֶת הָאָנָשִׁים הָאַלְהָה
 אֲשֶׁר נִקְרָבוּ בְּשִׁמּוֹת: ¹⁸ וְאֶת כָּל־הָעָזָה
 הַקְּהִילָה בְּאַחֲלָל חַזְרָשׁ הַשְׁנִי וַיַּתְּלִדוּ עַל־
 מִשְׁפָחֹתָם לְבֵית אֲבוֹתָם בְּמִסְפָר שִׁמּוֹת:
 מִבֵּן עֲשָׂרִים שָׁנָה וּמַעַלָה לְגַלְגָּלָתָם:
¹⁹כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֶת־מִשָּׁה וַיַּפְקִרְבֵּם
 בְּמִדְבָּר סִינְיָן:

logically ready, so invasion is postponed for a generation (see Deuteronomy 2:14–16). The representation of the people Israel as an army renders women invisible.

who were registered. [The Hebrew word that is uniquely translated here as “registered” is a form of the verbal root y-l-d, which elsewhere means “to give birth.” The self-reflexive nature of the verb here almost suggests that this army gave birth to itself. —Ed.]

19. As יהוה had commanded Moses, so he recorded them in the wilderness of Sinai. This summation of the command closes this section, which began, “God spoke to Moses in the wilderness of Sinai” (1:1). Divine speech frames this section and legitimizes the subsequent census by marking it as a reflection of divine will. This emphasis is important in light of God’s reported opposition elsewhere

²⁰They totaled as follows:

The descendants of Reuben, Israel's first-born, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house, as listed by name, head by head, all males aged twenty years and over, all who were able to bear arms—²¹those enrolled from the tribe of Reuben: 46,500.

²²Of the descendants of Simeon, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house, their enrollment as listed by name, head by head, all males aged twenty years and over, all who were able to bear arms—²³those enrolled from the tribe of Simeon: 59,300.

²⁴Of the descendants of Gad, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house, as listed by name, aged twenty years and over, all who were able to bear arms—²⁵those enrolled from the tribe of Gad: 45,650.

²⁶Of the descendants of Judah, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house, as listed by name, aged twenty years and over, all who were able to bear arms—²⁷those enrolled from the tribe of Judah: 74,600.

²⁸Of the descendants of Issachar, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house, as listed by name, aged twenty years and over, all who were

²⁰וַיְהִי

בָּנֵי־רְאוּבֵן בֶּן־יִשְׂרָאֵל תֹּולְדָתָם לְמִשְׁפָחֹתָם לְבֵית אֲבֹתָם בְּמִסְפֵּר שְׁמוֹת לְגִלְגָּלָתָם בְּלִזְכָּר מִבֵּן עֲשָׂרִים שָׁנָה וּמֵעֶלֶת כָּל יָצָא עַבָּא: ²¹פְּקֻדֵּיהֶם לִמְטוֹה רָאוּבֵן שְׁשָׁה וְאֶרְבָּעִים אֶלָף וּמְשִׁים מֵאוֹת: פ

²²לְבָנֵי שְׁמֹעוֹן תֹּולְדָתָם לְמִשְׁפָחֹתָם לְבֵית אֲבֹתָם פְּקֻדֵּיו בְּמִסְפֵּר שְׁמוֹת לְגִלְגָּלָתָם בְּלִזְכָּר מִבֵּן עֲשָׂרִים שָׁנָה וּמֵעֶלֶת כָּל יָצָא עַבָּא: ²³פְּקֻדֵּיהֶם לִמְטוֹה שְׁמֹעוֹן תְּשֵׁעה וּמְשִׁים אֶלָף וּשְׁלֹשׁ מֵאוֹת: פ

²⁴לְבָנֵי גָּד תֹּולְדָתָם לְמִשְׁפָחֹתָם לְבֵית אֲבֹתָם בְּמִסְפֵּר שְׁמוֹת מִבֵּן עֲשָׂרִים שָׁנָה וּמֵעֶלֶת כָּל יָצָא עַבָּא: ²⁵פְּקֻדֵּיהֶם לִמְטוֹה גָּד חִמְשָׁה וְאֶרְבָּעִים אֶלָף וָשָׁשׁ מֵאוֹת וּמְשִׁים: פ

²⁶לְבָנֵי יְהוּדָה תֹּולְדָתָם לְמִשְׁפָחֹתָם לְבֵית אֲבֹתָם בְּמִסְפֵּר שְׁמוֹת מִבֵּן עֲשָׂרִים שָׁנָה וּמֵעֶלֶת כָּל יָצָא עַבָּא: ²⁷פְּקֻדֵּיהֶם לִמְטוֹה יְהוּדָה אֶרְבָּעָה וְשְׁבָעִים אֶלָף וָשָׁשׁ מֵאוֹת: פ

²⁸לְבָנֵי יְשָׁכְרֵר יְשָׁכְרֵר תֹּולְדָתָם לְמִשְׁפָחֹתָם לְבֵית אֲבֹתָם בְּמִסְפֵּר שְׁמוֹת מִבֵּן עֲשָׂרִים to taking a census (see, for example, II Samuel 24:1–10, where God punishes Israel for King David's decision to take a census).

THE CENSUS (1:20–46)

In military formation, the twelve tribes of Israel are Reuben, Simon, Gad, Judah, Issachar, Zebulun, Ephraim, Manasseh, Benjamin, Dan, Asher, and Naphtali. (The tribe of Levi is counted separately; see below at 1:47–54.) Rachel's son Joseph is represented in terms of his and Asenath's two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh. According to this parashah, the men of Israel over twenty years of age number 603,550; but the sum is more impressive when one thinks of more than double the number of women and children. Exodus 12:37 counts the number of men who leave Egypt as roughly six hundred thousand. Jacob Milgrom suggests that the tribal numbers may symbolize astronomical calculations intended to present Israel as God's battalions (Exodus 7:4; 12:41) corresponding to the astral bodies metaphorically understood as God's celestial troops (Numbers, 1990, p. 338).

NUMBERS 1:29–42

B'MIDBAR

able to bear arms—²⁹those enrolled from the tribe of Issachar: 54,400.

³⁰Of the descendants of Zebulun, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house, as listed by name, aged twenty years and over, all who were able to bear arms—³¹those enrolled from the tribe of Zebulun: 57,400.

³²Of the descendants of Joseph:

Of the descendants of Ephraim, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house, as listed by name, aged twenty years and over, all who were able to bear arms—³³those enrolled from the tribe of Ephraim: 40,500.

³⁴Of the descendants of Manasseh, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house, as listed by name, aged twenty years and over, all who were able to bear arms—³⁵those enrolled from the tribe of Manasseh: 32,200.

³⁶Of the descendants of Benjamin, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house, as listed by name, aged twenty years and over, all who were able to bear arms—³⁷those enrolled from the tribe of Benjamin: 35,400.

³⁸Of the descendants of Dan, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house, as listed by name, aged twenty years and over, all who were able to bear arms—³⁹those enrolled from the tribe of Dan: 62,700.

⁴⁰Of the descendants of Asher, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house, as listed by name, aged twenty years and over, all who were able to bear arms—⁴¹those enrolled from the tribe of Asher: 41,500.

⁴²[Of] the descendants of Naphtali, the registration of the clans of their ancestral house as listed by name, aged twenty years and over, all who were

שנה ומעלה כל יצא צבא: ²⁹ פקדיהם למטה ישכר ישבאר ארבעה וחמשים אלף וארבע מאות: פ

³⁰ לבני זבולון תולדתם למשפחותם לבית אבתם במספר שמota מבן עשרים שנה ומעלה כל יצא צבא: ³¹ פקדיהם למטה זבולון שבעה וחמשים אלף וארבע

מאות: פ
³² לבני יוסף

לבני אפרים תולדתם למשפחותם לבית אבתם במספר שמota מבן עשרים שנה ומעלה כל יצא צבא: ³³ פקדיהם למטה אפרים ארבעים אלף וחמש מאות: פ

³⁴ לבני מנשה תולדתם למשפחותם לבית אבתם במספר שמota מבן עשרים שנה ומעלה כל יצא צבא: ³⁵ פקדיהם למטה מנשה שנים ושלשים אלף ומאתיים: פ

³⁶ לבני בנימין תולדתם למשפחותם לבית אבתם במספר שמota מבן עשרים שנה ומעלה כל יצא צבא: ³⁷ פקדיהם למטה בנימין חמשה ושלשים אלף וארבע מאות: פ

³⁸ לבני דן תולדתם למשפחותם לቤת אבתם במספר שמota מבן עשרים שנה ומעלה כל יצא צבא: ³⁹ פקדיהם למטה דן שנים וששים אלף ושבע מאות: פ

⁴⁰ לבני אשר תולדתם למשפחותם לቤת אבתם במספר שמota מבן עשרים שנה ומעלה כל יצא צבא: ⁴¹ פקדיהם למטה אשר אחד וארבעים אלף וחמש מאות: פ

⁴² בני נפתלי תולדתם למשפחותם לቤת אבתם במספר שמota מבן עשרים שנה able to bear arms—⁴³those enrolled from the tribe of Naphtali: 53,400.

⁴⁴Those are the enrollments recorded by Moses and Aaron and by the chieftains of Israel, who were twelve in number, one representative of each ancestral house. ⁴⁵All the Israelite males, aged twenty years and over, enrolled by ancestral houses, all those in Israel who were able to bear arms—⁴⁶all who were enrolled came to 603,550.

⁴⁷The Levites, however, were not recorded among them by their ancestral tribe. ⁴⁸For יהוה had spoken to Moses, saying: ⁴⁹Do not on any account enroll the tribe of Levi or take a census of them with the Israelites. ⁵⁰You shall put the Levites in charge of the Tabernacle of the Pact, all its furnishings, and everything that pertains to it: they shall carry the Tabernacle and all its furnishings, and they shall tend it; and they shall camp around the Tabernacle. ⁵¹When the Tabernacle is to set out, the Levites shall take it down, and when the Tabernacle is to be pitched, the Levites shall set it up; any outsider who encroaches shall be put to death.

וּמְעָלָה כֹּל יִצְאֵצֶבָא: ⁴³ פְּקֻדִים לְמַטָּה נְפִתְלִי שֶׁלֶשֶׁה וְחַמְשִׁים אֶלָף וְאֶרְבֶּעָ מְאוֹת: פָּ 44 אֶלָה הַפְּקֻדִים אֲשֶׁר פָּלַךְ מֹשֶׁה וְאֶחָרֶן וּנְשִׂיאֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל שְׁנַיִם עַשֶּׂר אִישׁ אִישׁ־אֶחָד לְבִתְתַּ-אַבְתָיו הֵיו: ⁴⁵ וַיְהִי בְּ-פָקֹדִי בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְבֵית אֲבָתֶם מִבֵּן עָשָׂרִים שָׁנָה וּמְעָלָה בְּ-יִצְאֵצֶבָא בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁴⁶ וַיְהִי בְּ-הַפְּקֻדִים שְׁשִׁמְאוֹת אֶלָף וְשֶׁלֶשֶׁת אֶלָפִים וְחַמְשֶׁת מֵאוֹת וְחַמְשִׁים: ⁴⁷ וְהַלְלִים לְמַטָּה אֲבָתֶם לֹא הַתִּפְקֹדוּ בְתֹוכֶם: פָּ ⁴⁸ וַיְדַבֵּר יהָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאמֹר: ⁴⁹ אֶךְ אַתְ-מַטָּה לֹוּ לֹא תִּפְקֹד וְאַתְּ-רִאשָׁם לֹא תְשָׁא בְּתוּר בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁵⁰ וְאַתְּה הַפְּקֹד אַתְּ-הַלְלִים עַל-מִשְׁבֵן הַעֲדָת וְעַל בְּ-בָלִי וְעַל בְּ-אָשְׁר-לִי הַמָּה יִשְׂאו אַתְּ-מִשְׁבֵן וְאַתְּ-בְּ-לִי וְהֵם יִשְׂרָתָהו וְסַבֵּב לִמְשֵׁבֵן יִחְנוּ: ⁵¹ וּבְנֹסֶע הַמִּשְׁבֵן יוֹרִדוּ אֶתְן הַלְוִיִּם וּבְחַנּוּת הַמִּשְׁבֵן יִקְמוּ אֶתְן הַלְוִיִּם וְהֵן

THE LEVITES (1:47–54)

The book of Numbers divides the men of the tribe of Levi into subordinate Levites and superior priests (the latter being of direct descent from Aaron). The Levites were not listed among the other tribes previously counted since they are exempt from military service. The Levites will not inherit territory in the land, claiming their patrimony instead in the sphere of Tabernacle service (see Numbers 3–4 and 8). Although Levites will not face the dangers of war, they must contend with the dangers of the holy, for if they do not maintain optimal holiness, they risk being destroyed by proximity to the Divine.

50. the Levites in charge of the Tabernacle. Levites set up the portable shrine, maintain its various components, dismantle it when it is time for Israel to journey forward, and carry it to the next encampment. After they set up the Tabernacle at a certain place, the Levites camp around it, in order to buffer divine power.

Tabernacle. See at Exodus 25:9.

Pact. See at Exodus 25:16.

51. any outsider who encroaches shall be put to death. This severe prohibition aims to maintain boundaries. The Levites buffer and protect the Tabernacle from outside encroachment. The severe penalty of death is meant less as an assurance of inevitable violence and more as a means of maintaining the definitive boundaries between the holy and the profane, as well as between Levites and Israelites. An analogue is at work between the Israelite body and the Tabernacle. As the body undergoes purification rituals when interior fluids seep out, so the priests sanctify the Tabernacle interiors. As the ⁵²The Israelites shall encamp troop by troop, each man with his division and each under his standard.

⁵³The Levites, however, shall camp around the Tabernacle of the Pact, that wrath may not strike the Israelite community; the Levites shall stand guard around the Tabernacle of the Pact.

⁵⁴The Israelites did accordingly; just as had commanded Moses, so they did.

2 spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying:
²The Israelites shall camp each man with his stan-body must be protected from foreign organisms, so the Levites shield the Tabernacle margins.

52. each man with his division. [The translator notes: Or “each [household] with its division.” (Similarly in 2:2, 34.) —Ed.]

standard. Heb. degel. This military term can be translated as “banner.” We know that in the ancient Jewish colony at Elephantine, Egypt, degel designated a military unit. So the term means not only a standard but also the force that marches beneath the standard. (In modern Hebrew it refers to a flag.) The twelve tribes will be organized under four such standards or banners.

53. around the Tabernacle. This literary unit ends with an image of the Tabernacle encircled by the Levites, who are surrounded by a perimeter of Israelite tribes unified under their banners.

The Geometry of the Holy (2:1–34)

The sacred structure houses a Tent of Meeting or Tabernacle (the terms appear to be used interchangeably in this parashah) at its center. Priests sacrifice in the court and offer incense inside as a way of communicating with God. Four groups of Levites surround the Tent, one group on each side, with Moses and Aaron’s family in the most privileged position (see below). The tribes of Israel appear around the Levites’ camp in four groups, each composed of three tribes united under a single הַקָּרְבָּן יוֹמָת: ⁵² וְחַנּוּ בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אִישׁ עַל־מְחֻנָּהוּ וְאִישׁ עַל־דְּגָלָוּ לְצַבָּאתֶם: ⁵³ וְהַלּוּם יְחַנּוּ סְבִיב לְמִשְׁכַּן הַעֲדָת וְלֹא־יְהִי לְקָצֶף עַל־עֲדרָת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְשִׁמְרוּ הַלְּלוּם אֶת־מִשְׁמִירַת מִשְׁכַּן הַעֲדָות:

⁵⁴ וַיַּעֲשֻׂוּ בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל כִּלְבָד אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהֹוָה אֶת־מִשְׁמָה בֶּן־עַשּׂוֹ: פ

ב וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל־אַהֲרֹן לֹאמֶר: ² אִישׁ עַל־דְּגָלָוּ בָּאתָת לְבֵית standard or division. When Israel marches through the wilderness, the eastern (Judah) and southern (Reuben) divisions lead, followed by the Levites transporting the Tabernacle and backed up by the western (Ephraim) and northern (Dan) divisions.

It is most likely that such a configuration never actually existed in the historical past. Instead, the Tabernacle is the mythic structure behind Israelite—and later, Jewish—sacred space. According to the book of Kings, it is this structure—with concentric spheres of increasing holiness—that King Solomon employs when building the Temple in Jerusalem. The synagogue, which after the Temple’s destruction (70 C.E.) would stand at the center of Jewish life, realizes this myth by placing the Ark that holds the Torah in a prominent place in the sanctuary. The biblical Ark of the Torah signifies the Ark of the Covenant, and the shared contents bind contemporary Jews to their ancient ancestors. (For more on the Tabernacle, see the introduction to T’rumah, p. 451; and Vayak’heil, Another View, p. 538.)

THE EAST (2:1–9)

The notion that the cardinal directions provide orientation assumes a double meaning here. Not only do the directions augment a geographic sensibility, but they also determine the marching order of the Israelite tribes.

The Judah tribe leads the eastern division, which includes Issachar and Zebulun, all offspring of Leah.

dard, under the banners of their ancestral house; they shall camp around the Tent of Meeting at a distance.

³Camped on the front, or east side: the standard of the division of Judah, troop by troop.

Chieftain of the Judites: Nahshon son of Amminadab. ⁴His troop, as enrolled: 74,600.

⁵Camping next to it:

The tribe of Issachar.

Chieftain of the Issacharites: Nethanel son of Zuar. ⁶His troop, as enrolled: 54,400.

⁷The tribe of Zebulun.

Chieftain of the Zebulunites: Eliab son of Helon. ⁸His troop, as enrolled: 57,400.

⁹The total enrolled in the division of Judah: 186,400, for all troops. These shall march first.

¹⁰On the south: the standard of the division of Reuben, troop by troop.

Chieftain of the Reubenites: Elizur son of Shedeur. ¹¹His troop, as enrolled: 46,500.

¹²Camping next to it:

The tribe of Simeon.

Chieftain of the Simeonites: Shelumiel son of Zurishaddai. ¹³His troop, as enrolled: 59,300.

אַבְתָּם יְחִינֵּו בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל מִפְּגַד סְבִיב
לְאַהֲלִמּוֹעֵד יְחִינֵּו:

³וְהַחֲנִים קָרְמָה מִזְרָחָה דָּגֶל מִחְנָה יְהוָה לְצְבָאתָם

וְנִשְׁיאָ לְבָנֵי יְהוָה נִחְשׁוֹן בָּנִיםִנְקָבָה:

⁴וְצְבָאוֹ וּפְקֻדֵּיהם אַרְבָּעָה וְשְׁבָעִים אַלְף
רַשְׁשָׁ מִאַות: ⁵וְהַחֲנִים עַלְיוֹ מַטָּה יְשַׁכֵּר

יְשַׁכֵּר וְנִשְׁיאָ לְבָנֵי יְשַׁכֵּר יְשַׁכֵּר נִתְנָאֵל בָּנָ-

צָוָעָר: ⁶וְצְבָאוֹ וּפְקֻדֵּיו אַרְבָּעָה וְחַמְשִׁים
אַלְף וְאַרְבָּעָ מִאַות: ⁷מַטָּה זְבוּלֹן וְנִשְׁיאָ
לְבָנֵי זְבוּלֹן אַלְיאָב בָּנִיחָלָן: ⁸וְצְבָאוֹ

וּפְקֻדֵּיו שְׁבָעָה וְחַמְשִׁים אַלְף וְאַרְבָּעָ
מִאַות:

⁹כָּל־הַפְּקָדִים לְמִחְנָה יְהוָה מֵאת אַלְף
וּשְׁמִינִים אַלְף וְשָׁשֶׁת־אַלְפִים וְאַרְבָּע־מִאַות

לְצְבָאתָם רָאשָׁה יִסְעוֹ: ¹⁰

¹⁰דָּגֶל מִחְנָה רָאוּבֵן תִּימְנָה לְצְבָאתָם
וְנִשְׁיאָ לְבָנֵי רָאוּבֵן אַלְיָזָר בָּנִי־שְׁדִיאָוָר:

¹¹וְצְבָאוֹ וּפְקֻדֵּיו שָׁשָׁה וְאַרְבָּעִים אַלְף
וְחַמְשָׁ מִאַות: ¹²וְהַחֲנִים עַלְיוֹ מַטָּה
שְׁמַעֲון וְנִשְׁיאָ לְבָנֵי שְׁמַעֲון שְׁלֹמִיָּאֵל בָּנָ-

צְוּרִישָׁן: ¹³וְצְבָאוֹ וּפְקֻדֵּיהם תְּשֻׁעָה

2. camp around the Tent of Meeting at a distance. The God who spoke to the Israelites from atop Mount Sinai now dwells in their midst and travels with them. The distance between the divine dwelling and the rest of Israel's camp is determined and mediated by the Levites and priests.

Tent of Meeting. See at Exodus 27:21.

3. Camped on the... east side. The east side is favored. The Tabernacle's entrance is located on this side. This is where Aaron and the Judah tribes are positioned.

9. These shall march first. When the camp marches forward, the tribes who hold the position of the rising sun (the east) move first. The configuration of the camp has both ritual and military implications. During periods of encampment, the band of tribes surrounding the Tabernacle serves as a line of defense protecting the sanctuary; and during the march, the infantry tribes are reinforced by God's presence hovering over the sacred items of the Tent.

THE SOUTH (2:10–16)

The Reuben tribe leads the southern division, which includes two Leah tribes, Reuben and Simeon, and one Zilpah tribe, Gad. In the formation, the tribes that predominate are the descendants of the less-loved sister, Leah, whose sons were not as beloved by Jacob as Rachel's. (See also Another View, p. 808.)

¹⁴And the tribe of Gad.

Chieftain of the Gadites: Eliasaph son of Reuel. ¹⁵His troop, as enrolled: 45,650.

¹⁶The total enrolled in the division of Reuben: 151,450, for all troops. These shall march second.

¹⁷Then, midway between the divisions, the Tent of Meeting, the division of the Levites, shall move. As they camp, so they shall march, each in position, by their standards.

¹⁸On the west: the standard of the division of Ephraim, troop by troop.

Chieftain of the Ephraimites: Elishama son of Ammihud. ¹⁹His troop, as enrolled: 40,500.

²⁰Next to it:

The tribe of Manasseh.

Chieftain of the Manassites: Gamaliel son of Pedahzur. ²¹His troop, as enrolled: 32,200.

²²And the tribe of Benjamin.

Chieftain of the Benjaminites: Abidan son of Gideoni. ²³His troop, as enrolled: 35,400.

²⁴The total enrolled in the division of Ephraim: 108,100 for all troops. These shall march third.

²⁵On the north: the standard of the division of Dan, troop by troop.

וחמשים אלף ושלש מאות: ¹⁴ ומיטה גדר ונשיא לבני גָּד אֶלְيָשָׁף בֶּן־רְעוּוֹאֵל: ¹⁵ וצָבָאוּ ופקדיהם חמשה וארבעים אלף ותשע מאות וחמשים:

¹⁶ כל-הפקדים למחנה ראובן מאת אלף ואחד וחמשים אלף וארבעים-מאות וחמשים לצבאותם ושנים יסעו: ס

¹⁷ ונסע אַהֲלָמוֹעַד ממחנה הלוים בתרז'ה המלחנת כאשר יחננו כן יטעו איש על-ידי'ו לדגלייהם: ס

¹⁸ דגל מלחנה אפרים לצבאותם ימה ונשיא לבני אפרים אלישמע בן-עמי'הוד:

¹⁹ וצָבָאוּ ופקדיהם ארבעים אלף וחמש מאות: ²⁰ ועליו מיטה מנשה ונשיא לבני מנשה גמליאל בן-פדרהצור: ²¹ וצָבָאוּ ופקדיהם שניים ושלשים אלף ומאתים: ²² ומיטה בנימן ונשיא לבני בנימן אביכן בן-גדרען: ²³ וצָבָאוּ ופקדיהם חמשה ושלשים אלף וארבע מאות:

²⁴ כל-הפקדים למחנה אפרים מאת אלף ושמנת-אלפים ומאה לצבאותם ושלשים יטעו: ס

²⁵ דגל מלחנה דן צפנה לצבאותם

THE CENTER (2:17)

When the people of Israel travel, the levitical Merari and Gershon clans carry the Tent of Meeting. They buffer the privileged Kohath clan that transports the sanctuary furnishings. The sacred center is maintained in transit and well as in encampment.

are Rachel tribes, as Ephraim and Manasseh are the two tribal divisions stemming from Joseph and his Egyptian wife, Asenath. The tribes descended from Rachel are stationed farthest from the Tabernacle entrance, perhaps referencing Rachel's untimely death outside the entrance of the town of Ephrath (Genesis 35:16).

THE WEST (2:18–24)

The western, or “seaward” (yamah), tribes include Benjamin, Ephraim, and Manasseh. All three

THE NORTH (2:25–31)

The Dan tribe leads the northern division, which includes Asher, an offspring of Zilpah (Leah's hand-

Chieftain of the Danites: Ahiezer son of Ammishaddai. ²⁶His troop, as enrolled: 62,700.

²⁷Camping next to it:
The tribe of Asher.

Chieftain of the Asherites: Pagiël son of Ochran. ²⁸His troop, as enrolled: 41,500.

²⁹And the tribe of Naphtali.

Chieftain of the Naphtalites: Ahira son of Enan. ³⁰His troop, as enrolled: 53,400.

³¹The total enrolled in the division of Dan: 157,600. These shall march last, by their standards.

³²Those are the enrollments of the Israelites by ancestral houses. The total enrolled in the divisions, for all troops: 603,550. ³³The Levites, however, were not recorded among the Israelites, as had commanded Moses.

³⁴The Israelites did accordingly; just as had commanded Moses, so they camped by their standards, and so they marched, each man with his clan according to his ancestral house.

3 This is the line of Aaron and Moses at the time that spoke with Moses on Mount Sinai.
²These were the names of Aaron's sons: Nadab, the maid), as well as Naphtali and Dan, the two offspring of Bilhah (Rachel's handmaid).

CONCLUSION (2:32–34)

The concluding summary reports that Israel carries out God's instructions, maintaining this tribal order and sacred geometry when they camp and when they march.

The Levites

(3:1–4:20)

The tribe of the Levites, to which both Moses and Aaron belong, was barely mentioned in וְנַשִּׂיא לְבָנֵי דָן אֲחִיעֹזֶר בֶּן־עֲמִישָׁדִי :

²⁶ וְצַבָּאֹו וּפְקֻדִּיהם שְׁנִים וְשִׁשִּׁים אֶלָף
 וְשֶׁבַע מֵאוֹת : ²⁷ וְהַחֲנִים עַלְיוֹ מַטָּה אֲשֶׁר
 וְנַשִּׂיא לְבָנֵי אָשֶׁר פְּגֻעִיאֵל בֶּן־עֲכָרֶן :
²⁸ וְצַבָּאֹו וּפְקֻדִּיהם אֶחָד וְאֶרֶבְעִים אֶלָף
 וְחַמְשִׁים מֵאוֹת : ²⁹ וְמַטָּה נְפָתְלִי וְנַשִּׂיא לְבָנֵי
 נְפָתְלִי אֲחִירָע בֶּן־עִינָן : ³⁰ וְצַבָּאֹו וּפְקֻדִּיהם
 שְׁלִשָּׁה וְחַמְשִׁים אֶלָף וְאֶרֶבְעִים מֵאוֹת :
³¹ כָּל־הַפְּקָדִים לְמִחְנָה דָן מֵאת אֶלָף
 וְשֶׁבַע וְחַמְשִׁים אֶלָף וְשִׁשִּׁים מֵאוֹת לְאַחֲרָנָה יִסְעוּ לְדַגְלִיהֶם : פ
³² אֱלֹהֶ פְּקוּדִי בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְבֵית אֲבָתָם
 בְּלַ-פְּקוּדִי הַמִּחְנָת לְעַבְדָתְךָ שְׁשִׁ-מֵאוֹת
 אֶלָף וְשֶׁלְשָׁת אֶלָפִים וְחַמְשִׁים מֵאוֹת
 וְחַמְשִׁים : ³³ וְנַלְלוֹת לֹא הַתְּפִקְדוּ בְּתוֹךְ
 בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּאַשְׁר צֹוָה יְהוָה אֶת־מְשָׁה :
³⁴ וַיַּעֲשֵׂה בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל כָּל אֲשֶׁר־צֹוָה יְהוָה
 אֶת־מְשָׁה כְּנָחָנוּ לְדַגְלִיהֶם וּכְנָסְעוּ אִישׁ
 לְמַשְׁפָחָתוֹ עַל־בֵּית אֲבָתָיו : פ

ג וְאֱלֹהֶ תּוֹלֶת אַהֲרֹן וּמֹשֶׁה בְּזַמָּן דְּבָר
 יְהוָה אֶת־מְשָׁה בְּהַר סִינֵי : ² וְאֱלֹהֶ שְׁמוֹת

Leviticus, which focuses on the priests. In Numbers, however, the Levites receive privileges that set them apart from other tribes. This step enlarges the structure of those who officiate at the Tabernacle. This broader circle of official personnel does not seem to include women. On women and Israel's priesthood, see Tzavah, Another View, p. 489.

The tribe of Levi is favored in this parashah. For example, the priests and Levites who camp around the Tabernacle are also elected to maintain it. In addition, the Levites stand in for Israel's first-born sons, who belong to God as an eternal ransom for the first-born sons who were not killed during the tenth plague on Egypt (see vv. 12–13). Such features suggest that it was priests who edited or authored the first part of the book of Numbers.

first-born, and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar;³ those were the names of Aaron's sons, the anointed priests who were ordained for priesthood.⁴ But Nadab and Abihu died by the will of יהוה, when they offered alien fire before in the wilderness of Sinai; and they left no sons. So it was Eleazar and Ithamar who served as priests in the lifetime of their father Aaron.

⁵ יהוה spoke to Moses, saying: "Advance the tribe of Levi and place its [men] in attendance upon Aaron the priest to serve him. ⁷ They shall perform duties for him and for the whole community before the Tent of Meeting, doing the work of the Tabernacle. ⁸ They shall take charge of all the

בְּנֵי-אַהֲרֹן הַבָּכָר | נֶדֶב וְאַבִּיהוֹא אֶלְעֹזֶר
וְאַיתָּמָר: ³ אֶלְהָ שְׁמוֹת בְּנֵי אַהֲרֹן הַפְּהָנִים
הַמְּשִׁיחִים אֲשֶׁר-מֶלֶא יְדֵם לְכָהֵן: ⁴ וַיִּמְתַּחַת
נֶדֶב וְאַבִּיהוֹא לִפְנֵי יְהָוָה בְּהַקְרְבָּם אֲשֶׁר
וְרָאָה לִפְנֵי יְהָוָה בְּמִדְבָּר סִינֵי וּבְנִים לְאַדְּ�יוֹ
לְהָם וַיְכָהֵן אֶלְעֹזֶר וְאַיתָּמָר עַל-פָּנֵי אַהֲרֹן אֲבִיהֶם: ⁵ פ

וַיַּדְבֵּר יְהָוָה אֶל-מֹשֶׁה לְאמֹר: ⁶ תִּקְרַב
אֶת-מִטְהָה לְיוֹן וְהַעֲמִיקָת אֹתוֹ לִפְנֵי אַהֲרֹן
הַכֹּהֵן וּשְׁרִתוֹ אֹתוֹ: ⁷ וְשִׁמְרוּ אֶת-מִשְׁמָרָתוֹ
וְאֶת-מִשְׁמָרָת בְּל-הָעֲדָה לִפְנֵי אֱלֹהִים מָעוֹד
לְעַבְדַּת אֶת-עֲבָדָת הַמֶּשֶׁבֶן: ⁸ וְשִׁמְרוּ אֹת-

THE ELECTION OF THE PRIESTS (3:1–10)

In this section, the text's composers—presumably Aaron's descendants—give first priority to the authority of the priests. However, they are not apologists. Their honored ancestor, Aaron, is recorded later in Numbers as transgressing (20:1–13) and dies far from the Promised Land (20:22–29).

1. This is the line of Aaron and Moses. The priestly writers are invested in a kind of deterministic genealogy. In other words, they see social position as arising from one's station at birth. Such a hereditary principle supports the idea of priestly distinction. Although they are brothers, only Aaron, not Moses, transmits the priesthood. Aaron's sons become the religious elite.

2. These were the names of Aaron's sons. The book of Numbers distinguishes Aaron's family as the only legitimate priests among the tribe of Levi.

3. anointed. As a standard of hygiene and often as a form of luxury, people in the ancient Near East—including women—used to anoint themselves and their children with oil (I Samuel 14:2; Ezekiel 16:9; Ruth 3:3). But here the Hebrew uses a special verb that, when applied to persons, refers to pouring oil on the head in order to signal the assumption of an office, usually the kingship or the priesthood. That verbal root (m-sh-ch) also forms the noun mashiach, which later becomes the title "Messiah." (See also at Exodus 27:20 and 29:7.)

4. Nadab and Abihu. These two sons of Aaron and Elisheba (Exodus 6:23) were instantly annihilated when they encroached upon the Holy with the wrong sort of offering (see at Leviticus 10:1–2). Since they had no sons, no trace of them remains except in their substitution by their younger brothers Eleazar and Ithamar.

6. the tribe of Levi...Aaron the priest. Just as the Levites have a distinct position within Israel, so the kohanim (priests) of the family of Aaron have a preferred position within the tribe of Levi. This social configuration parallels that of the Tabernacle by recognizing a particularly holy family within a holy tribe that is within a holy people.

7. before the Tent of Meeting. The priestly hierarchy is realized in the system of access to the various interiors of the Tent of Meeting. As the priests perform their sacred duties inside it, the Levites stand watch around the perimeter; all other members of Israel may approach the Divine at the threshold at specified times when they are in the correct state of purity. The priests supervise Israel's access to the Tent of Meeting.

furnishings of the Tent of Meeting—a duty on behalf of the Israelites—doing the work of the Tabernacle.⁹ You shall assign the Levites to Aaron and to his sons: they are formally assigned to him from among the Israelites.¹⁰ You shall make Aaron and his sons responsible for observing their priestly duties; and any outsider who encroaches shall be put to death.

¹¹ spoke to Moses, saying: ¹²I hereby take the Levites from among the Israelites in place of all the male first-born, the first issue of the womb among the Israelites: the Levites shall be Mine.¹³ For every male first-born is Mine: at the time that I smote every [male] first-born in the land of Egypt, I consecrated every male first-born in Israel, human and beast, to Myself, to be Mine, יהוה's.

¹⁴ spoke to Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, saying: ¹⁵Record the descendants of Levi by ancestral house and by clan; record every male among them from the age of one month up.¹⁶ So Moses recorded them at the command of יהוה, as he was

כָל-כָלֵי אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד וְאַת-מִשְׁמְרָת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְעָבֵד אֲתִ-עֲבָדָת הַמִּשְׁכָּן: 9 וְנִתְתַּחַל אֲת-הָלוּם לְאַהֲרֹן וּלְבָנָיו וּתְוָנָם נְתוּנָם הַמֶּה לֹא מִתְּאַת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ¹⁰ וְאַת- אַהֲרֹן וְאַת-בָּנָיו תִּפְקֹד וְשִׁמְרוּ אֲת-בְּנָתָם וְהַזָּר הַקָּרְבָּן יוֹמָת: פ

¹¹ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים לְאַמְرָה: ¹² וְאַנְיִי הַנֹּה לְקַחְתִּי אֲת-הָלוּם מִתְוָלֵב בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל תִּתְחַת כָּל-בְּכֹור פָּטֵר רַחֲם מִבְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְהַיּוּ לִי הַלְּלִיִּם: ¹³ כִּי לֹא כָל-בְּכֹור בַּיּוֹת הַפְּתִי כָל-בְּכֹר בָּאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם הַקְדָּשָׁתִי לְכָל-בְּכֹור בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל מֵאֶתְمָ עַד-בָּהָמָה לִי יהָיָה אָנָי יְהוָה: פ

¹⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים בַּמִּדְבָּר סִינְיָה לְאַמְרָה: ¹⁵ פָּקֹד אֲת-בָּנִי לְזִי לְבִית אֲבָנָתָם לְמִשְׁפְּחָתָם כָּל-זִקְרָע מִפְנִיחָדָשׁ וּמַעַלְתָּה תִּפְקֹדָם: ¹⁶ וַיִּפְקֹד אֶתְכֶם מֹשֶׁה עַל-פִּי

10. any outsider who encroaches shall be put to death. The border lines of the holy are not to be breached; the severe penalty associates these borders with the boundary that separates life and death.

THE ELECTION OF THE LEVITES (3:11–22)

The Levites replace first-born Israelites who would otherwise belong to God (according to Exodus 13:12–13). The male members of the tribe of Levi now function as a hereditary caste of personnel dedicated to God's service but serving under the priests.

12. the first issue of the womb. This verse defines who exactly counts as first-born for the purpose of this legislation. The definition refers specifically to a woman's first-born (not a man's first-born). By speaking of the womb rather than the woman, the fertile womb is disassociated from the mother. The image is of a womb magically yielding offspring in the absence of female reproductive agency. (See also at Exodus 13:2.)

13. For every male first-born is Mine. This verse explains that all first-born males belong to God as an eternal ransom for the sparing of Israel's first-born males at the tenth plague (Exodus 11:1–10; 12:29–36). According to this passage, God is willing to accept the substitution of the Levites for all of Israel's first-born males. The status of the first-born male is unstable in the Tanach; although first-born sons have the right of predominant inheritance, they are constantly being supplanted (see Jacob's supplanting of Esau in Genesis 25–27).

15. from the age of one month up. A Levite is recognized after one month of life. However, scholars dispute at what age a Levite is to actually begin his service.

bidden.¹⁷ These were the sons of Levi by name: Gershon, Kohath, and Merari.¹⁸ These were the names of the sons of Gershon by clan: Libni and Shimei.¹⁹ The sons of Kohath by clan: Amram and Izhar, Hebron and Uzziel.²⁰ The sons of Merari by clan: Mahli and Mushi.

These were the clans of the Levites within their ancestral houses:

²¹To Gershon belonged the clan of the Libnites and the clan of the Shimeites; those were the clans of the Gershonites.²² The recorded entries of all their males from the age of one month up, as recorded, came to 7,500.²³ The clans of the Gershonites were to camp behind the Tabernacle, to the west.²⁴ The chieftain of the ancestral house of the Gershonites was Eliasaph son of Lael.²⁵ The duties of the Gershonites in the Tent of Meeting comprised: the tabernacle, the tent, its covering, and the screen for the entrance of the Tent of Meeting;²⁶ the hangings of the enclosure, the screen for the entrance of the enclosure which surrounds the Tabernacle, the cords thereof, and the altar—all the service connected with these.

²⁷To Kohath belonged the clan of the Amramites, the clan of the Izharites, the clan of the Hebronites, and the clan of the Uzzielites; those were the clans of the Kohathites.²⁸ All the listed males from the age of one month up came to 8,600, attending to the duties of the sanctuary.²⁹ The clans of the Kohathites were to camp along the

יהוה באֲשֶׁר עָזָה:¹⁷ וַיְהִי־אֶלָּה בְּנֵי־לְוִי
בְּשְׂמַתְמָם גַּרְשֹׁן וְקַהַת וּמְרָרִי:¹⁸ וְאֶלָּה
שְׁמוֹת בְּנֵי־גַּרְשֹׁן לְמִשְׁפְּחֹתָם לְבָנִי
וּשְׁמַעִי:¹⁹ וּבָנִי קַהַת לְמִשְׁפְּחֹתָם עַמְרָם
וּצְדָרָ חֶבְרוֹן וּעֲיָאלָל:²⁰ וּבָנִי מָרָרִי
לְמִשְׁפְּחֹתָם מְחָלִי וּמוֹשִׁי
אֶלָּה הֵם מִשְׁפְּחֹתָם הַלְוִי לְבֵית אֲבָתָם:
²¹ לְגַרְשֹׁן מִשְׁפְּחֹתָם הַלְבָנִי וּמִשְׁפְּחֹתָם
הַשְּׁמַעִי אֶלָּה הֵם מִשְׁפְּחֹתָם הַגְּרָשָׁנִי:
²² פְּקֻדִּיהם בְּמִסְפֵּר בְּלִזְכָּר מִבְּנִי־חֶדֶש
וּמִעַלָּה פְּקֻדִּיהם שְׁבָעַת אַלְפִים וּחַמֵּשׁ
מִאוֹת:²³ מִשְׁפְּחֹתָם הַגְּרָשָׁנִי אַחֲרֵי הַמִּשְׁבֵּן
יְחִינָּנוּ יְמָה:²⁴ וּנְשִׁיא בֵּית־אָב לְגַרְשָׁנִי
אַלְיטָף בֶּן־לְאָלָל:²⁵ וּמִשְׁמָרָת בְּנֵי־גַּרְשֹׁן
בְּאַחֲלָ מָוֶעֶד הַמִּשְׁבֵּן וְהַאֲדָל מִבְּתָהוּ וּמִטָּה
פְּתָח אַחֲלָ מָוֶעֶד:²⁶ וּקְלָעִי הַחֶצֶר וְאַתְּ
מִסְלָ פְּתָח הַחֶצֶר אֲשֶׁר עַל־הַמִּשְׁבֵּן
וּעַל־הַמִּזְבֵּחַ סְבִיב וְאֶת מִתְּרוּיוֹ לְכָל
עַבְדוֹתָו:²⁷

וְלְקַהַת מִשְׁפְּחֹת הַעֲמָרְמִי וּמִשְׁפְּחֹת
הַיְצָחִיר וּמִשְׁפְּחֹת הַחֶבְרִי וּמִשְׁפְּחֹת
הַעֲזַיְאָלִי אֶלָּה הֵם מִשְׁפְּחֹת הַקְּהַתִּי:
²⁸ בְּמִסְפֵּר בְּלִזְכָּר מִבְּנִי־חֶדֶש וּמִעַלָּה
שְׁמַנִּית אַלְפִים וּשְׁשׁ מִאוֹת שְׁמִרִי מִשְׁמָרָת
הַקְּדֹשׁ:²⁹ מִשְׁפְּחֹת בְּנֵי־קַהַת יְחִינָּנוּ עַל

THE ORGANIZATION OF THE LEVITES (3:23-39)

As the outer ring of the encampment follows a hierarchy, so does the inner ring of levitical families.

23. The clans of the Gershonites. The Gershon clan represents the first-born of Levi, who was the third son of Jacob.

25-26. The Gershonites not only guard the western side of the Tabernacle but also transport its curtains, fabrics, and screens. In other words, the Gershonites carry and set up the flexible boundaries that define the sacred space. Numbers 4:21-49 delineates their duties more fully.

29. The Kohath clan carries the most holy objects on the journey—including the Ark, the table, the menorah, the altars, and the sacred utensils. They set up their own camp on the south side. The Kohath clan represents the second-born of Levi. According to Exodus 6:17-21 and Numbers 3:19, south side of the Tabernacle.³⁰ The chieftain of the ancestral house of the Kohathite clans was Eli-zaphan son of Uzziel.³¹ Their duties comprised: the ark, the table, the lampstand, the altars, and the sacred utensils that were used with them, and the screen—all the service connected with these.³² The head chieftain of the Levites was Eleazar son of Aaron the priest, in charge of those attending to the duties of the sanctuary.

³³To Merari belonged the clan of the Mahlites and the clan of the Mushites; those were the clans of Merari.³⁴ The recorded entries of all their males from the age of one month up came to 6,200.³⁵ The chieftain of the ancestral house of the clans of Merari was Zuriel son of Abihail. They were to camp along the north side of the Tabernacle.³⁶ The assigned duties of the Merarites comprised: the planks of the Tabernacle, its bars, posts, and sockets, and all its furnishings—all the service connected with these;³⁷ also the posts around the enclosure and their sockets, pegs, and cords.

³⁸Those who were to camp before the Tabernacle, in front—before the Tent of Meeting, on the east—were Moses and Aaron and his sons, attending to the duties of the sanctuary, as a duty on behalf of the Israelites; and any outsider who encroached was to be put to death.³⁹ All the Levites who were recorded, whom at יהוה's command Moses and Aaron recorded by their clans, all the males from the age of one month up, came to 22,000.

this clan includes Aaron and Moses, who are Kohath's grandsons.

33–37. The Merari clan carries the structure of the Tabernacle, including bars, posts, sockets, and planks. While they carry the tent poles, their cousins—the Gershonites—carry the coverings. The Merari clan represents the third son of Levi.

38. before the Tent of Meeting, on the east. While all sides of the Tabernacle are recognized as

יְרֵה הַמִּשְׁכָּן תִּימְנָה: ³⁰ וּנְשִׂיא בֵּית־אָב לְמִשְׁפְּחָת הַקְּהָלִי אֶלְيָצָפֹן בֶּן־עֲזִיזָאֵל: ³¹ וּמִשְׁמְרָתָם הָאָרֶן וְהַשְּׁלֹחַ וְהַמְּנִירָה וְהַמְּנִבְחָת וּכְלֵי הַקְדֵּשׁ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּהָמִזְבֵּחַ וְכָל עֲבָדָתוֹ: ³² וּנְשִׂיא נְשִׂיאי הַלְוִיִּים אֶלְעָזָר בֶּן־אַהֲרֹן הַפְּנֵן פְּקֻדָּת שְׁמִרִּי מִשְׁמְרָת הַקְדֵשׁ: ³³ לְמִרְרֵי מִשְׁפְּחָת הַמְחָלִי וּמִשְׁפְּחָת הַמוֹשֵׁי אֶלְהָה הֵם מִשְׁפְּחָת מִרְרֵי: ³⁴ וּפְקֻדִּיהֶם בְּמִסְפֵּר כָּל־זָכָר מִבֶּן־חַדְשָׁה וּמִעַלָּה שְׁשָׁת אַלְפִים וּמִאַתִּים ³⁵ וּנְשִׂיא בֵּית־אָב לְמִשְׁפְּחָת מִרְרֵי צְוּרִיאֵל בֶּן־אַבְיכְּחֵיל עַל יְרֵה הַמִּשְׁכָּן יִחְנֹן צְפָנָה: ³⁶ וּפְקֻדָּת מִשְׁמָרָת בְּנֵי מִרְרֵי קְרִישָׁל הַמִּשְׁבָּן וּבְרִיחֵיו וּעֲמָרוֹן וְאַדְנִיו וּכְלַ-כְּלֵיו וְכָל עֲבָדָתוֹ: ³⁷ וּעֲמָרִי הַחֲצֵר סְבִיב וְאַדְנִיָּם וַיְתָרְתָּם וַיְמִתְרִיחָם: ³⁸ וְהַחֲנִים לְפָנֵי הַמִּשְׁכָּן קָרְמָה לְפָנֵי אֲהָל־מוּעֵד | מִזְרָחָה מִשָּׁה | וְאַהֲרֹן וּבָנָיו שְׁמֹרִים מִשְׁמְרָת הַמִּקְדֵּשׁ לְמִשְׁמְרָת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְהַזָּר הַקָּרְבָּן יוֹמָת: ³⁹ כָּל־פְּקוּדִי הַלְוִיִּים אֲשֶׁר פָּקַד מִשָּׁה וְאַהֲרֹן עַל־פִּי יהָה לְמִשְׁפְּחָתָם כָּל־זָכָר מִבֶּן־חַדְשָׁה וּמִעַלָּה שָׁנִים וּעַשְׁרִים אַלְפִים: ס

holy, nothing tops the elite east—opposite the Tabernacle entrance where Moses, Aaron, and Aaron's offspring dwell. The administration of the Tabernacle as well as the entire camp is in their hands, and anyone who approaches without invitation can be put to death. Prohibition as well as position maintain the status of the Aaronide family. We are left to wonder about the role of women on the east, as well as on the other sides of the Tabernacle complex.

⁴⁰ said to Moses: Record every first-born male of the Israelite people from the age of one month up, and make a list of their names; ⁴¹and take the Levites for Me, יהוה, in place of every male first-born among the Israelite people, and the cattle of the Levites in place of every male first-born among the cattle of the Israelites. ⁴²So Moses recorded all the male first-born among the Israelites, as had commanded him. ⁴³All the first-born males as listed by name, recorded from the age of one month up, came to 22,273.

⁴⁴ spoke to Moses, saying: ⁴⁵Take the Levites in place of all the male first-born among the Israelite people, and the cattle of the Levites in place of their cattle; and the Levites shall be Mine, יהוה's. ⁴⁶And as the redemption price of the 273 Israelite male first-born over and above the number of the Levites, ⁴⁷take five shekels per head—take this by the sanctuary weight, twenty gerahs to the shekel—⁴⁸and give the money to Aaron and his sons as the redemption price for those who are in excess. ⁴⁹So Moses took the redemption money from those over and above the ones redeemed by the Levites; ⁵⁰he took the money from the male first-born of the Israelites, 1,365 sanctuary shekels. ⁵¹And Moses gave the redemption money to Aaron and his sons at יהוה's bidding, as had commanded Moses.

THE PRICE OF REDEMPTION (3:40–51)

In this parashah, the title of “first-born” applies to a woman’s first-born male alone. Genesis 29–30 provides glimpses of how an Israelite mother celebrated his birth—and that of her other children as well. There, mothers Leah and Rachel named their children in ways that reflected their experiences of fertility, conception, pregnancy, and birth. One wonders whether women had specific rituals to cel-⁴⁰ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹמֶשֶׁה פָּקֹד בָּלְבָכָר זֶכֶר לְבָנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל מִבְּנֵי-חֶדֶשׁ וּמִעַלָּה וּשְׁאָתָה מִסְפֵּר שְׁמָתָם: ⁴¹ וְלִקְחַת אֲתִ-הֶלְלוּם לִי אֲנִי יְהוָה תְּחַת בָּלְבָכָר בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֲתִ בְּהַמֶּת הַלְוִים תְּחַת בָּלְבָכָר בְּבָהָמָת בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁴² וַיַּפְקֹד מִשְׁה בְּאָשֶׁר צְוָה יְהוָה אֲתָה אֲתִ-בָּלְבָכָר בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁴³ וַיְהִי בָּלְבָכָר זֶכֶר בְּמִסְפֵּר שְׁמָתָם מִבְּנֵי-חֶדֶשׁ וּמִעַלָּה לְפִקְרִיהָם שְׁנִים וּשְׁנִים אֲלָף שְׁלֹשָׁה וּשְׁבָעִים וּמֵאוֹתִים: פ ⁴⁴ וַיֹּדַבֵּר יְהוָה אֱלֹמֶשֶׁה לְאָמֵר: קָח אֲתִ-הֶלְלוּם תְּחַת בָּלְבָכָר בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֲתִ-בְּהַמֶּת הַלְוִים תְּחַת בָּהָמָת וְהַיוֹלֵדִים הַלְוִים אֲנִי יְהוָה: ⁴⁶ וְאֶת פְּדוּיִי הַשְּׁלֹשָׁה וּהַשְּׁבָעִים וּהַמֵּאוֹתִים הַעֲדָפִים עַל-הַלְוִים מִבְּכָר בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁴⁷ וְלִקְחַת חִמְשָׁת שְׁקָלִים לְגַלְגָּלָת בְּשֶׂקֶל הַקָּדֵשׁ תְּקַח עֲשָׂרִים גְּרָה הַשְּׂקֵל: ⁴⁸ וְנַתְתָּה הַכְּסָף לְאַהֲרֹן וּלְבָנָיו פְּדוּיִי הַעֲדָפִים בְּהָם: ⁴⁹ וַיַּקְרַב מִשְׁה אֲתָה בְּסֻף הַפְּרוּזִים מֵאֶתֶּן הַעֲדָפִים עַל פְּדוּיִי הַלְוִים: ⁵⁰ מֵאֶת בָּכָר בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְקַח אֲתִ-הַכְּסָף חִמְשָׁה וּשְׁשִׁים וְשָׁלַשׁ מֵאוֹת וְאֶלָף בְּשֶׂקֶל הַקָּדֵשׁ: ⁵¹ וַיִּתְן מִשְׁה אֲתִ-הַכְּסָף הַפְּרוּזִים לְאַהֲרֹן וּלְבָנָיו עַל-פִּי יְהוָה בְּאָשֶׁר צְוָה יְהוָה אֲתָה מִשְׁה: פ

brate the birth of a first child, and also about what roles levitical mothers played in rearing and raising the clerical class.

48. give the money to Aaron and his sons as the redemption price. The practice of redemption in this section grants special benefits to the priests who receive money. It also exempts Israelites from special service at the sanctuary. This exchange confers 1,365 shekels on Aaron and his sons. On redemption, see also at Exodus 13:15.

4 יהוה spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying:

2Take a [separate] census of the Kohathites among the Levites, by the clans of their ancestral house, 3from the age of thirty years up to the age of fifty, all who are subject to service, to perform tasks for the Tent of Meeting. 4This is the responsibility of the Kohathites in the Tent of Meeting: the most sacred objects.

5At the breaking of camp, Aaron and his sons shall go in and take down the screening curtain and cover the Ark of the Pact with it. 6They shall lay a covering of dolphin skin over it and spread a cloth of pure blue on top; and they shall put its poles in place.

7Over the table of display they shall spread a blue cloth; they shall place upon it the bowls, the ladles, the jars, and the libation jugs; and the regular bread shall rest upon it. 8They shall spread over these a crimson cloth which they shall cover with a covering of dolphin skin; and they shall put the poles in place.

9Then they shall take a blue cloth and cover the lampstand for lighting, with its lamps, its tongs, and its fire pans, as well as all the oil vessels that are used in its service. 10They shall put it and all its

ד וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵיכֶם וְאַל־אַהֲרֹן:

2נְשָׁא אֶת־רִאשׁ בְּנֵי קֹהַת מִתּוֹךְ בְּנֵי לְוִי
לְמִשְׁפְּחֹתָם לְבֵית אֲבֹתָם: 3מִבֵּן שְׁלַשִּׁים
שָׁנָה וּמַעַלָּה וְעַד בִּנְתְּמִשִּׁים שָׁנָה כָּל־בָּא
4לְאַבָּא לְעַשּׂוֹת מְלָאכָה בְּאַהֲלֵי מוֹעֵד:
זֹאת עַבְדַּת בְּנֵי־קֹהַת בְּאַהֲלֵי מוֹעֵד קְדוּשָׁים:

5וּבָא אַהֲרֹן וּבָנָיו בְּנֵסֶע הַמִּחְנָה וְהַוְּרָדוֹ
אַתְּ פְּרֹכֶת הַמִּסְךָ וּבְסֻרוּבָה אַתְּ אַהֲרֹן
הַעֲדָת: 6וַיְנַתְּנוּ עַלְיוֹ בְּסִוי עֹור תְּחַשׁ
וּפְרַשׁ בְּגִד־בְּלִיל תְּכִלָּת מְלֻמָּעָה וְשָׁמָוֹ
בְּדִיוֹ:

7וְעַל שְׁלֹחַן הַפְּנִים יַפְרַשׁ בְּגִד תְּכִלָּת
וַיְנַתְּנוּ עַלְיוֹ אַתְּ־הַקָּרְבָּן וְאַתְּ־הַכְּפָת וְאַתְּ
הַמְּנִקְרֵית וְאַתְּ קְשׁוֹת הַנֵּסֶף וְלִחְם הַתְּמִיד
עַלְיוֹ יְהִי: 8וַיַּפְרַשׁ עַלְיָהֶם בְּגִד תְּולֻעָה
שָׁנִי וּכְסִוי אֲתָוּ בְּמִכְסָה עֹור תְּחַשׁ וְשָׁמָוֹ
אַתְּ־בְּדִיוֹ:

9וְלִקְרָבוּ וּבְגִד תְּכִלָּת וּכְסִוי אַתְּ־מִנְחָת
הַפְּאָרָר וְאַתְּ־גְּרָתִיהָ וְאַתְּ־מְלָקְתִּיהָ וְאַתְּ
מְחַתְּתִּיהָ וְאַתְּ בְּלִיל שְׁמָנָה אֲשֶׁר
יִשְׂרָאֵל וְלֹא בְּהָם: 10וַיְנַתְּנוּ אֲתָה וְאַתְּ־בְּלִיל

THE SERVICE OF THE LEVITES (4:1–20)

This section describes the work of the Levites as caretakers of the Tabernacle—"housekeepers," as it were—in contrast to the priests, who officiate and conduct the sacrifices (see also Vayikra, Contemporary Reflection, p. 589).

2. Kohathites. When the people of Israel travel, the Kohath clan is to carry the sacred Ark. In addition, they are to transport the table on which the bread of display is laid, the menorah, the lamps and oils for Tabernacle lighting, and the altar (see Exodus 25:10–40 for descriptions of these objects). Because Aaron and his sons wrap each instrument of worship in blue or purple cloths and skins, the Kohathites never touch them. Should a Kohathite come into direct contact with any of the items, then he is to be killed (v. 15, below).

4. the most sacred objects. Heb. kodesh hakodashim usually designates either the innermost room of the Tabernacle or the status of certain sacrificial offerings, but in this section the term refers to the objects inside the Tent.

5. cover the Ark of the Pact. Only Aaronite hands ever touch the Ark when they wrap it for transport, and no one ever looks at it.

7–8. cloth. On women as spinners and weavers of the Tabernacle's furnishing, see at Exodus 35:25–26; T'rumbah, Another View, p. 467; and P'kudei, Another View, p. 560.

furnishings into a covering of dolphin skin, which they shall then place on a carrying frame.

¹¹Next they shall spread a blue cloth over the altar of gold and cover it with a covering of dolphin skin; and they shall put its poles in place. ¹²They shall take all the service vessels with which the service in the sanctuary is performed, put them into a blue cloth and cover them with a covering of dolphin skin, which they shall then place on a carrying frame. ¹³They shall remove the ashes from the [copper] altar and spread a purple cloth over it. ¹⁴Upon it they shall place all the vessels that are used in its service: the fire pans, the flesh hooks, the scrapers, and the basins—all the vessels of the altar—and over it they shall spread a covering of dolphin skin; and they shall put its poles in place.

¹⁵When Aaron and his sons have finished covering the sacred objects and all the furnishings of the sacred objects at the breaking of camp, only then shall the Kohathites come and lift them, so that they do not come in contact with the sacred objects and die. These things in the Tent of Meeting shall be the portage of the Kohathites.

¹⁶Responsibility shall rest with Eleazar son of Aaron the priest for the lighting oil, the aromatic incense, the regular meal offering, and the anointing oil—responsibility for the whole Tabernacle and for everything consecrated that is in it or in its vessels.

¹⁷YHWH spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying: ¹⁸Do not let the group of Kohathite clans be cut off from the Levites. ¹⁹Do this with them, that they may live and not die when they approach the most sacred objects: let Aaron and his sons go in and assign each of them to his duties and to his portage. ²⁰But let not [the Kohathites] go inside and witness the dismantling of the sanctuary, lest they die.

20. The Tent of Meeting retains its sanctity even when dismantled, and therefore it endangers all but Aaron and his descendants. As each Tabernacle piece remains part of the whole even when wrapped בְּלִיה אֶל-מַכְסָה עֹור תְּחֵשׁ וַנְתַּנוּ עַל-הַמּוֹת :

¹¹ וְעַל | מִזְבֵּח הַזָּהָב יִפְרַשׁ בְּגַד תְּבִלָּת
וּכְסֹו אֲתָּו בְּמַכְסָה עֹור תְּחֵשׁ וַשְׁמוֹ אֶת-בְּדִיו : ¹² וְלֹקְחוּ אֶת-כֶּלֶבֶל כָּלִי הַשְׁלָת אֲשֶׁר
יִשְׂרָתוּבָם בְּקֶדֶשׁ וַנְתַּנוּ אֶל-בְּגַד תְּבִלָּת
וּכְסֹו אֲוֹתָם בְּמַכְסָה עֹור תְּחֵשׁ וַנְתַּנוּ עַל-הַמּוֹת : ¹³ וְרָשְׁנוּ אֶת-הַמִּזְבֵּח וְפִרְשָׁו עַלְיוֹ
בְּגַד אַרְגְּמָן : ¹⁴ וַנְתַּנוּ עַלְיוֹ אֶת-כֶּלֶבֶל כָּלִי
אֲשֶׁר יִשְׂרַתּוּ עַלְיוֹ בְּהָם אֶת-הַמִּזְבֵּחַ אֶת-
הַמִּזְלָגָת וְאֶת-הַיּוּם וְאֶת-הַמִּזְרָקָת כָּל
כָּלִי הַמִּזְבֵּח וְפִרְשָׁו עַלְיוֹ בְּסֻוי עֹור תְּחֵשׁ וַשְׁמוֹ בְּדִיו :

¹⁵ וּכְלָה אֶחָרֶן זָבְנֵיו לְכַטֵּת אֶת-הַקְדֵּשׁ
וּאֶת-כֶּלֶבֶל כָּלִי הַקְדֵּשׁ בְּנֵסֶע הַמְּחֻנָּה
וְאֶחָרֵי-בָן יִבּאוּ בְּנֵי-קָהָת לְשֵאת וְלֹא-יִגּוּ אֶל-הַקְדֵּשׁ וְמִתְוָא לְהָמָשׁ בְּנֵי-קָהָת
בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד :

¹⁶ וּפְקָדֵת אֶל-עַזְרָר | בֶּן-אֶחָרֶן הַכֹּהֵן שְׁמָנִין
הַמְּאֹול וְקַטְרָת הַסְּפִילִים וּמִנְחָת הַתְּמִידִים
וּשְׁמָנִין הַמְּשִׁיחָה פְּקָדָת כָּל-הַמִּשְׁבָּן וּכְלָיָה
אֲשֶׁר-בָּפָקְדָשׁ יִבְכְּלִיו : פ

¹⁷ וַיֹּדַבֵּר יְהֹוָה אֶל-מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל-אֶחָרֶן
לְאֹמֶר: ¹⁸ אֶל-תִּתְכְּרִיתָ אֶת-שְׁבָט מִשְׁפָחָת
הַקָּהָתִי מִתּוֹךְ הַלּוּיִם: ¹⁹ וְזֹאת | עֲשֵׂו
לְהָם וְחוּיו וְלֹא יִמְתַּהוּ בְּגַשְׁתָּם אֶת-קָדֵשׁ
הַקָּדְשִׁים אֶחָרֶן זָבְנֵיו יִבּאוּ וַשְׁמוֹ אֲוֹתָם
אִיש אִיש עַל-עֲבָדָתוֹ וְאֶל-מִשְׁאָו: ²⁰ וְלֹא-יִבּאוּ לְרֹאֹת בְּלֹע אֶת-הַקָּדֵשׁ וְמִתְוָא: פ

in its own cover, so are Kohathites and priests part of the tribe of Levi even when distinguished by individual roles. The boundaries of the holy reverberate on every level.

—Rachel Havrelock

Another View

AS THE ISRAELITES PREPARE to resume their journey, Moses leads the community in organizational activities: census-taking and the placement of tribal units in preparation for the march. The principles of organization are value-laden; they count only able-bodied men of fighting age in the initial census, and they divide the Levites into units with unequal privileges concerning the holy sanctuary. Though all of the members of the community are traveling to the same place, they do so in a structured fashion in which the boundaries of tribal units are carefully maintained, and in which some groups have more responsibility—and more access to the divine sphere—than others. The overarching tone of the parashah is subsequently patriarchal and hierarchical.

Patriarchy as a cultural system is based on power differentials; able-bodied men are defined as the powerful and active members of the community. (See, for example, bell hooks, Feminist Theory from Margin to Center, 1984.) This is evident in the notable absence of women and other marginal figures from this parashah. What is the place allotted in the Israelite encampment for women, children, or the infirm? Even when the men of Levi are assigned to be Tabernacle functionaries, God states that they are taken for this role as redemption for the Israelite first-born males (3:12). Again, it is men who are the focus of the narrative, and all important tasks in this parashah are done by men.

It is possible, however, to glean from this text a lesson about a handful of important women: Jacob's wives and the wives' handmaids. The structure of the Israelite encampment is not random; rather, it groups together certain tribes while separating others. Leah's descendants—Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun—have pride of place within the Israelite encampment, on the east side closest to the entrance to the Tabernacle. Her other descendants—Reuben, Simeon, and Gad—

This parashah makes a strong statement about the matriarchs of Israel.

are located on the south side of the Tabernacle. Their placement can be explained by Genesis 49: all three of these tribal ancestors committed acts that drew harsh criticism from Jacob, and subsequently they are held in lower esteem than their full brothers. The children of the handmaids Bilhah and Zilpah are represented on the northern side of the encampment, and Rachel's offspring are located on the western side, farthest from the Tabernacle entrance. Hence the descendants of Jacob's most beloved wife are in a position of less honor than the children of the long-suffering Leah. Even while ignoring the roles of women in defining the community, this parashah still makes a strong statement about the matriarchs of Israel. (See further Mary Douglas, In the Wilderness, 1993, pp. 172–95.)

—Beatrice Lawrence

הָיָה יְהוָה spoke to Moses in the wilderness of Sinai (1:1). Midrash B'midbar Rabbah 1.2 connects this verse with Jeremiah 2:31: “O generation, behold the word of תְּהִלָּה! Have I been like a wilderness to Israel?” and explains that compared to slavery in Egypt, the wilderness experience was luxurious. Furthermore, according to this midrash, God assigned three mentors to sustain Israel in the wilderness: Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. Due to the merits of Moses, the people ate manna; due to the merits of Aaron, God encircled Israel with clouds of glory; and due to the merits of Miriam, a miraculous well accompanied them. The passage continues, “How was the well constructed? It was rock-shaped like a kind of beehive, and wherever they journeyed it rolled along and came with them.” When the Israelites stopped and the portable Tabernacle was erected, the well would establish itself in the Tent of Meeting. “Then the leaders of the tribes would come and stand upon it and say, ‘Spring up, O well!’ (21:17) and it would rise.”

The Israelites shall camp each man with his standard, under the banners of their ancestral house (2:2). B'midbar Rabbah 2.7 relates that each tribe had a different colored flag, corresponding to the precious stones on Aaron's breastplate. For example, “Reuben's stone was ruby and the color of his flag was red, and embroidered on it were mandrakes.” (On mandrakes, see Genesis 30:14–15.) “Judah's stone was a carbuncle and the color of his flag was something like the heavens; embroidered on it was a lion.” This midrash adds that the nations of the world provided themselves with distinctive flags based on Israel's example.

But Nadab and Abihu died by the will of תְּהִלָּה... and they left no sons (3:4). Midrash P'sikta D'Rav Kahana 26.9 explains that one of the reasons for the mysterious deaths of Aaron's sons was their arrogance in refusing to marry, even though the chief priest was commanded to make atonement for himself and “his household” (Leviticus 16:6). The midrash explains that “his household” (literally “his house”) signifies “his wife” and relates that “many young women sat grieving, waiting in vain to be asked in marriage by Nadab or Abihu.” But the young men said, “Our father's brother [Moses] is king (Deuteronomy 33:5),

Due to the merits of Miriam, a miraculous well accompanied the Israelites.

our mother's brother [Nahshon] is prince (Exodus 6:23; Numbers 2:3), our father is chief priest; we are adjutants of the chief priest. What women are worthy of us?”

So it was Eleazar and Ithamar who served as priests in the lifetime of their father Aaron (3:4). The Rabbis were interested in how Aaron, Eleazar, and Ithamar shared their duties as priests. B'midbar Rabbah 2.26 reports that when one of those men was incapacitated, one of the others took on the role of chief priest in his stead. This text goes on to discuss a woman named Kimhith who lived many centuries later: she had seven sons and each of them served in the office of chief priest. On one occasion, two sons served as chief priest on the same day. The Rabbis paid her a visit and asked her, “What good deeds have you performed to merit such an honor?” She responded, “So help me Heaven! In all my life the rafters of my house have never looked upon the hair of my head.” Rabbinic society, like many surrounding cultures, believed that married women should cover their heads when they went out in public. Kimhith's modesty was such that she did not uncover her hair, even in the privacy of her own home. Punning on her name, the Rabbis observed, “All flours (kimha) are flour; but the flour of Kimhith is fine flour,” and they applied to her Psalm 45:14, “All glorious is the king’s daughter within the palace,” as an indication that the domestic domain is the best place for a praiseworthy and virtuous woman.

record every male among them (3:15). The Rabbis asked, “Why every male, without mentioning every female?” and they responded, “Because the glory of the blessed Holy One is derived from the males.” This is proven by Psalm 127:3, “Sons are the provision of תִּדְבָּר; the fruit of the womb, [God’s] reward.” The midrash explains that “provision of תִּדְבָּר” refers to males, while if females come, they are also “a reward” (B'midbar Rabbah 3.8). Rabbinic Judaism valued males over females but recognized that women, too, have multiple virtues and are essential for human society and human continuity.

—Judith R. Baskin

• • • • •

Contemporary Reflection

THERE IS POWER in taking a census. When God commands Moses to do so at the beginning of parashat B'midbar, only male Israelites over the age of 20 who are able to bear arms are considered. In the text, Moses is told to tally up kol adat b'nei yisrael, literally “the whole community of the Children of Israel.” But do able-bodied males over 20 years old represent the whole community? While adat is often translated as “community,” it can also refer to an “assembly, band, company, or faction,” hence only one segment of the larger population. This nuance allows us to recognize all who are not counted: women, minors, the elderly, and the physically, mentally, or emotionally challenged. In Torah, these people are usually missing from numerations as well as narrations. Those who are counted have a special worth to the society, while those who are not may be considered less valuable and are, therefore, less visible.

There is also danger in taking a census. This parashah is all about enumerating people, as the English name of the book, “Numbers,” suggests. However, the Talmud asserts that “it is forbidden to count [the nation of] Israel even for the sake of a commandment . . . [because] whoever counts Israel transgresses a prohibition, as it is written, ‘The number of the children of Israel shall be like the sands of the sea, not to be measured’ (Hosea 2:1)” (BT Yoma 22b). Rashi explains that we must count something each person gives (like the half-shekel) rather than count actual people, because then “there will not be a plague among them, for the evil eye can affect that which is counted—and a plague may come upon them as we found in the days of David” (Rashi on Exodus 30:1). Is Rashi merely superstitious, or is he suggesting that it is dangerous to trivialize a person’s essence? His comment teaches us that we must value each human as one who is made b'tzelem Elohim, in God’s image (Genesis 1:27). A number can measure whether an army has enough people, but it can never measure the worth of the individual people in that army.

Is being counted what makes us count?

Today, American society is obsessed with numbers, censuses, and demographic studies. Now when we calculate our Temple membership, for instance, we include everybody: the women and the men, the young and the old, the “typical” and the challenged. We can look at sum totals, categories, and sub-categories of these studies; and while they provide valuable information, they still may not show us who or what really counts. Can we say that all people matter when our Jewish institutions are not accessible to every individual? Taking the synagogue as an example, do we value each person when a member in a wheelchair cannot come up to the Ark to take the Torah? Do we include everyone in worship services when we do not offer large-print prayer books or when we do not provide hearing aids to those who need them? Do we validate those with different learning styles and abilities when we hire inexperienced educators for our Religious School classes? If we compare our raw data with the facts within the synagogue walls, who really matters—the ones who are counted, or the ones for whom we take extra measures? While numbers may be essential, they do not represent the sum total of what is truly important. But what does?

B'MIDBAR

In B'midbar, one could argue that the number of troops is what really counts, since they are the ones included in the census. But when we read between the lines, when we ask who is not included, we can see how the untold stories of the unmentioned people matter too. For instance, what about the woman who might have wished to fight? Or how about the 19-year-old man, just months short of his 20th birthday, eager to serve God and his people? And how about the 23-year-old male Israelite who can count the right number of years but not the right number of limbs since one of his was lost in a childhood accident? And the pregnant soldier's wife who calculates the number of weeks until her baby arrives, knowing that the baby's father's days may be numbered? There may be contextually legitimate reasons why these people are omitted from the census, and, ultimately, from the Torah text, but their exclusion means we miss the opportunity to see what they can offer the community.

We all hear stories about those who lose one thing and gain something even greater through their loss. There is an urban legend about violin virtuoso Itzhak Perlman, who taught that lesson by happenstance when he played a concerto at Avery Fisher Hall in New York City with a broken string. One might think it impossible to play with just three strings a concerto written for violin, but Perlman did it and did so with great fervor. Upon completing his dazzling performance, he (so the story goes) said humbly to the audience, “You know, sometimes it is the artist’s task to find out how much music you can still make with what you have left.” Perhaps this is true for all of us, not only artists. Losses can lead to inner strengths and life changes that we did not dream were possible. We are more than the sum total of our parts.

The Israelites may have needed parameters for whom to include and whom to exclude from the census described in B'midbar, but we must remember why even those not tallied do, in fact, matter. Today we may count every individual in our community, but may still discount how much they have to offer. The missing members in this parashah can teach us to reconsider what it means to count. As the numerous stories in the Bible and in our lives remind us, even those not included are important, and all those we now seek to include genuinely are individuals with much to gain from and offer to our communities.

—Rachel Stock Spilker

Voices

Otwock VI

Kadya Molodowsky (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

I am a wandering girl.
My heart is practiced in longing.
And when the day eats up the dew of the night,
I tuck up the small white curtain from my window pane,
And look upon a new street.
There lies coiled up
In a little corner of my heart
Such a singular, trembling idea:
Maybe no one here will love me.
Maybe no one here will want to know me!
But God forbid!
Like the threat of rain always hanging in the air
And falling in unexpected abundance on the earth,
That's how each new city is for me,
Each new place.
And I don't know how manifold my flesh is.
Every year a new ring
Grows in me, as on a tree,
I am mazily woven of rising and setting.
I am a wandering girl,
My heart is practiced in longing.

I Say

Malka Heifetz Tussman (transl. Marcia Falk)

I say to the Almighty:
Ever-homeless Wanderer,
I would—
if but my heart were pure—invite you in, to spend the night.

The Window

Irena Klepfisz

She looks out the window.
All is present.
The shadows of the past fall elsewhere.

This is the wilderness
she thinks.

And our tongues have become dry the wilderness has dried out our tongues and we have forgotten speech.

She looks out the window.
All is present.

from Every City Has a Soul

Jill Hammer

...wilderness is not a place it is a time
longing to mend
what cannot be mended longing to break
what cannot be broken wilderness is a name
you call in the ear of a lover
but you are speaking to someone else

Forgotten

Lisa Levine

Numbers 1:2

I wondered
On the day of the counting
Why my husband
And his brothers
And their sons
Were numbered among
The stars of heaven
But my daughters and I
Were not even noticed Doing the washing
Baking the bread
Raising our children
I wondered Why I
The womb that held them
Was Forgotten.

A Prayer for the Journey

Sheila Peltz Weinberg

A prayer for the journey
We could say it every day
When we first leave the soft warmth of our beds
And don't know for sure if we'll return at night
When we get in the trains, planes and automobiles
And put our lives in the hands of many strangers.
Or when we leave our homes for a day, a week,
a month or more—
Will we return to a peaceful home? Untouched by fire, flood or crime?
How will our travels change us?
What gives us the courage to go through that door?

A prayer for the journey
For the journey we take in this fragile vessel of flesh.

A finite number of years and we will reach
The unknown, where it all began.
Every life, every day, every hour is a journey.
In the travel is the discovery,
the wisdom, the joy.
Every life, every day, every hour is a journey.
In the travel is the reward,
the peace, the blessing.

They Had Names

Susan Glickman

Numbers 1:5

They had names like Auntie Bea and Aunt Laura and wore tight corsets.
When you put your arms around them you could feel the wires.

They had papery skins; cheeks like moths' wings that trembled when you kissed them. Their husbands were dead, or they were called Sam, or Arthur, and wore hats even in summer.

They smoked cigars that always went out and they let them go out.

The old people had candies in their pockets, and Kleenex; they carried pictures of grandchildren and knew all the stories about who was related to whom, and why, and remembered them.

When I was a child I was told all the stories again and again, who was related to whom, and why, and who died and why but I always forgot.

Years later, I have no one to tell me the stories. I remember the ladies' perfumes: lilac, carnation and rose; they smelled like sachets.

And I remember arthritic fingers, wedding bands sunk in the flesh; I always imagined they'd have to cut them off.

They kept trying to decide whose eyes I had, whose nose, and what were my talents. I didn't listen.

Now I want to know, I want to know where I fit in that long line of descendants from the country of the old.

Each of Us Has a Name

Zelda (transl. Marcia Falk)

Numbers 1:5

Each of us has a name given by God and given by our parents

Each of us has a name given by our stature and our smile and given by what we wear

Each of us has a name given by the mountains and given by our walls

Each of us has a name given by the stars and given by our neighbors

Each of us has a name given by our sins and given by our longing

Each of us has a name given by our enemies and given by our love

Each of us has a name given by our celebrations and given by our work

Each of us has a name given by the seasons and given by our blindness

Each of us has a name given by the sea and given by our death.

Naso

NUMBERS 4:21–7:89

Suspicion and Sanctity

TN THE OPENING UNITS of the book of Numbers, the Israelites organize themselves for their trek to the Promised Land. Not only must they navigate through the wilderness a group that the Torah claims to include more than two million individuals (600,000 fighting men—plus women, children, and other males), but also they must maintain the proper worship of God throughout their journey.

Parashat Naso (“lift up”) focuses on the Israelite cultic structures throughout the journey. Two detailed administrative accounts frame this parashah: the Levite census (4:21–49) and the record of the tribal chiefs’ gifts for the dedication of the altar (7:1–88). Whereas Leviticus typically focuses on the ritual purity of the sanctuary, Numbers is concerned with maintaining the purity of the camp as a whole.

The Israelites can protect this purity through the service of sanctified individuals like the nazir (6:1–21) or the priests (6:22–27), as well as through responses to threats of perversion, exemplified by the ritual of the wife accused by her husband of adultery (5:21–31). (Rabbinic literature uses the term sotah to refer to aspects of this case, although the word itself—meaning “a woman who strayed”—does not actually appear in the Bible. This commentary will employ the rabbinic term, which has come to be used widely when discussing this passage.)

The structure of this parashah reflects well the role of women within the Israelite community. Women, like most men, could not be cultic officials—neither priests, Levites, nor tribal chiefs—and therefore they remain absent from the administrative framework of the parashah. Yet they occupy a central place within the Women remain absent from administration, yet their place in the religion is central.

religion, either as cause for concern, such as the sotah, or, more surprisingly, as devotional exemplars such as the nazir—the individual who dedicates herself or himself to God. (The specifically feminine form is n’zirah, although only the generic form nazir appears in the Bible.)

At first glance, the sotah and the nazir seem to represent mutually exclusive ends of the spectrum for a woman’s place within Israelite society. A woman could either find herself tottering on the margins of society—accused, vulnerable, and at the mercy of her husband or priest—or she could establish her place among the elite of society by dedicating her life to God. Yet the juxtaposition of these figures within the parashah, and the linguistic links between the passages describing them, together suggest an intrinsic relationship between the sotah and the nazir. Read together, these figures inform, challenge, and broaden our perceptions of women’s roles within the religion and society of ancient Israel.

—Amy Kalmanofsky

Outline—

I. CULTIC ADMINISTRATION

Census of the Levites (4:21–49)

II. MAINTAINING COMMUNITY SANCTITY BY COUNTERING THREATS OF IMPURITY (5:1–31)

- A. Procedure for the physically impure (vv. 1–4)
- B. Procedure for a person who betrays another (vv. 5–10)
- C. Procedure for a wife accused of adultery (vv. 11–31)

III. MAINTAINING COMMUNITY SANCTITY THROUGH RELIGIOUS LEADERS (6:1–27)

- A. Laws of the nazir (vv. 1–21)
- B. Priestly blessing (vv. 22–27)

IV. RECORD OF THE TRIBAL CHIEFS' GIFTS (7:1–89)

- A. Gifts for the Levites (vv. 1–9)
- B. Gifts for the dedication of the altar (vv. 10–88)
- C. Conclusion (v. 89)

4:21

יְהוָה spoke to Moses: ²²Take a census of the Gershonites also, by their ancestral house and by their clans. ²³Record them from the age of thirty years up to the age of fifty, all who are subject to service in the performance of tasks for the Tent of Meeting. ²⁴These are the duties of the Gershonite clans as to labor and portage: ²⁵they shall carry the cloths of the Tabernacle, the Tent of Meeting with its covering, the covering of dolphin skin that is on top of it, and the screen for the entrance of the Tent of Meeting; ²⁶the hangings of the enclosure, the screen at the entrance of the gate of the enclosure that surrounds the Tabernacle, the cords thereof, and the altar, and all their service equipment and all their accessories; and they shall perform the service. ²⁷All the duties of the Ger-

לִאמֶר: ²¹ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים לֵאמֹר:
²² נְשָׂא אֶת־רָאשׁ בְּנֵי גְּರֹשֹׁן גַּם־הַמִּלְחָמִים
 לְבִתְּהַטְּרָה אֲבֹתֶם לְמִשְׁפְּחוֹתֶם: ²³ מִבְּנֵי שְׁלֹשִׁים
 שָׁנָה וּמִעַלָּה עַד בִּנְיִחְמָשִׁים שָׁנָה תִּפְקֹד
 אֹתָם בְּלַהֲבָא לְצַבָּא צַבָּא לְעַבְדָּה עַבְדָּה
 בָּאָהֶל מוֹעֵד: ²⁴ זֹאת עַבְדָּת מִשְׁפְּחַת
 הַגְּרָשִׁי לְעַבְדָּה וּלְמִשְׁאָה: ²⁵ וּנְשָׂא אֶת־
 יְרִיעָת הַמִּשְׁבֵּן וְאֶת־אָהֶל מוֹעֵד מִכְלָהוּ
 וּמִבְּסָה הַתְּחִשׁ אֲשֶׁר־עָלָיו מִלְמָעָלָה
 וְאֶת־יְמִלְךָ פֻּתָּח אָהֶל מוֹעֵד: ²⁶ וְאֶת־
 קָלְעֵי הַחֶזֶר וְאֶת־מִסְּרוֹן פֻּתָּח | פֻּתָּח | שַׁעַר
 הַחֶזֶר אֲשֶׁר עַל־הַמִּשְׁבֵּן וּעַל־הַמִּזְבֵּחַ
 סְבִיב וְאֶת מִיתְרֵיהֶם וְאֶת־כָּל־כָּלִיל עַבְדָּתֶם
 וְאֶת כָּל־אֲשֶׁר יַעֲשֶׂה לָהֶם וְעַבְדוּ: ²⁷ עַל־
 פִּי אָהֶן וּבְנֵי תְּהִיה בְּלַעֲבָדָת

Cultic Administration

CENSUS OF THE LEVITES (4:21–49)

According to Numbers 1:48–49, the tribe of Levi is subject to a census separate from the greater Israelite community. Although the Torah does not provide a clear reason for this, one explanation is that the men of this tribe are exempt from regular military service and assigned to protect the Tabernacle. The Torah records two levitical censuses: one counts males older than one month (3:15), and the other counts men aged 30 to 50, presumably, the work force (see 4:1–3). The Torah does not explain why Levites could not begin service before the age of 30 nor work past 50. The mandated retirement age makes sense given the physical demands.

22. Gershonites. Gershon was Levi's eldest son (Exodus 6:16). His descendants comprise one of the three levitical clans who care for the Tabernacle and its associated sacred objects (Numbers 18).

23. from the age of thirty years up to the age of fifty. This census is concerned only with those eligible for the work force. The starting age for a Levite's service is given as 30 years (Numbers 4:3, 23, and 30), and as 25 years (Numbers 8:23–24).

- The case involves a pregnant woman whose husband suspects that he is not the father.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 836

- The sotah ritual's history teaches us that change is a way to be true to Jewish tradition.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 838

- The Rabbis viewed the “errant wife” as a metaphor for the entire Jewish people.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 836

- Daughters of the tribe of Dinah... brought a silver bowl, / to hold the flow of birth....

VOICES ► 840

shonites, all their portage and all their service, shall be performed on orders from Aaron and his sons; you shall make them responsible for attending to all their portage.²⁸ Those are the duties of the Gershonite clans for the Tent of Meeting; they shall attend to them under the direction of Ithamar son of Aaron the priest.

²⁹ As for the Merarites, you shall record them by the clans of their ancestral house;³⁰ you shall record them from the age of thirty years up to the age of fifty, all who are subject to service in the performance of the duties for the Tent of Meeting.³¹ These are their portage tasks in connection with their various duties for the Tent of Meeting: the planks, the bars, the posts, and the sockets of the Tabernacle;³² the posts around the enclosure and their sockets, pegs, and cords—all these furnishings and their service: you shall list by name the objects that are their portage tasks.³³ Those are the duties of the Merarite clans, pertaining to their various duties in the Tent of Meeting under the direction of Ithamar son of Aaron the priest.

³⁴ So Moses, Aaron, and the chieftains of the community recorded the Kohathites by the clans of their ancestral house,³⁵ from the age of thirty years up to the age of fifty, all who were subject to service for work relating to the Tent of Meeting.³⁶ Those recorded by their clans came to 2,750.³⁷ That was the enrollment of the Kohathite clans, all those who performed duties relating to the Tent of Meeting, whom Moses and Aaron recorded at the command of יהוה through Moses.

³⁸ The Gershonites who were recorded by the clans of their ancestral house,³⁹ from the age of

בְּנֵי הִגְרָשֶׁנִי לְכָל-מִשְׁאָם וְלֹכֶל עֲבָדָתָם
וּפְקַדְתֶם עַלְהֶם בִּמְשֻׂרָת אֶת פָּל-מִשְׁאָם:
²⁸ זֹאת עֲבָדָת מִשְׁפָחָת בְּנֵי הִגְרָשֶׁנִי בְּאַهֲלָם
מוֹעֵד וּמִשְׁמְרָתָם בַּיָּד אִיתָמָר בְּן-אַהֲרֹן הַכֹּהֵן: ס

²⁹ בְּנֵי מְרָרִי לִמְשֻׁפְחָתָם לִבְיַת-אַבָּתָם
תִּפְקֹד אֶתְתָם: ³⁰ מִבֵּן שֶׁלְשִׁים שָׁנָה וּמַעַלָה
וְעַד בְּנֵי-חֲמִשִּׁים שָׁנָה תִּפְקֹדֶם בְּל-הַבָּא
לְצֹבָא לְעַבֶד אֶת-עֲבָדָת אַהֲלָם מוֹעֵד:
³¹ וְזֹאת מִשְׂרָת מִשְׁאָם לְכָל-עֲבָדָתָם
בְּאַהֲלָם מוֹעֵד קְרָשִׁי הַמְשָׁבֵן וּבְרִיחִיו
וּעֲמֹדוֹיו וְאַדְנוֹיו: ³² וּעֲמֹדוֹיו הַחֲצֵר סְבִיב
וְאַדְנוֹיהם וַיַּתְלַחַט וּמִתְרִירָהָם לְכָל-בְּלִיהָם
וְלֹכֶל עֲבָדָתָם וּבְשָׁמָות תִּפְקֹדֶו אֶת-בְּלִי
מִשְׂרָת מִשְׁאָם: ³³ זֹאת עֲבָדָת מִשְׁפָחָת
בְּנֵי מְרָרִי לְכָל-עֲבָדָתָם בְּאַהֲלָם מוֹעֵד בַּיָּד
אִיתָמָר בְּן-אַהֲרֹן הַכֹּהֵן:

³⁴ וַיִּפְקֹד מֹשֶׁה וְאַהֲרֹן וּנְשִׁיאֵי הָעֵדָה אֶתְתָם:
בְּנֵי הַקְהָתִי לִמְשֻׁפְחָתָם וְלִבְיַת אַבָּתָם:
³⁵ מִבֵּן שֶׁלְשִׁים שָׁנָה וּמַעַלָה וְעַד בְּנֵי
חֲמִשִּׁים שָׁנָה בְּל-הַבָּא לְצֹבָא
בְּאַהֲלָם מוֹעֵד: ³⁶ וַיְהִי פְקָדֵיהֶם
לִמְשֻׁפְחָתָם אֶלָּפִים שְׁבַע מֵאוֹת וּחֱמִשִּׁים:
³⁷ אֶלָּה פְקוּדִי מִשְׁפָחָת הַקְהָתִי בְּל-הַעֲבָדָת
בְּאַהֲלָם מוֹעֵד אֲשֶׁר פָקַד מֹשֶׁה וְאַהֲרֹן עַל-פַּי יְהֹוָה בִּיד-מֹשֶׁה: ס

³⁸ וַיִּפְקֹד יְהֹוָה בְּנֵי גַּרְשֹׁן לִמְשֻׁפְחָתָם וְלִבְיַת
אַבָּתָם: ³⁹ מִבֵּן שֶׁלְשִׁים שָׁנָה וּמַעַלָה

27. on orders from Aaron and his sons. That is, Levites are subordinate to priests—the direct descendants of Aaron. Whereas Numbers 8 portrays a harmonious relationship between Levites and priests, tension is evident in the story of Korah (Numbers 16). Deuteronomy 18:1–8 portrays the status of the Levites as more on a par with that of the priests.

29. Merarites. Merari was Levi's third son (Exodus 6:16).

34. Kohathites. Kohath was Levi's second son (Exodus 6:16) and an ancestor of Aaron. The Kohathites are designated to care for the Tabernacle's most sacred objects (4:4–15).

thirty years up to the age of fifty, all who were subject to service for work relating to the Tent of Meeting—⁴⁰those recorded by the clans of their ancestral house came to 2,630. ⁴¹That was the enrollment of the Gershonite clans, all those performing duties relating to the Tent of Meeting whom Moses and Aaron recorded at the command of יהוה.

⁴²The enrollment of the Merarite clans by the clans of their ancestral house, ⁴³from the age of thirty years up to the age of fifty, all who were subject to service for work relating to the Tent of Meeting—⁴⁴those recorded by their clans came to 3,200. ⁴⁵That was the enrollment of the Merarite clans which Moses and Aaron recorded at the command of יהוה through Moses.

⁴⁶All the Levites whom Moses, Aaron, and the chieftains of Israel recorded by the clans of their ancestral houses, ⁴⁷from the age of thirty years up to the age of fifty, all who were subject to duties of service and portage relating to the Tent of Meeting—⁴⁸those recorded came to 8,580. ⁴⁹Each one was given responsibility for his service and portage at the command of יהוה through Moses, and each was recorded as יהוה had commanded Moses.

5 יהוה spoke to Moses, saying: ²Instruct the Israelites to remove from camp anyone with an

וְעַד בָּנִים חֲמִשִּׁים שָׁנָה כָּל-הַבָּא לְצֹבָא לְעַבְדָה בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד: ⁴⁰ וַיֹּהּי פְקֻדֵּיהם לְמִשְׁפְּחָתָם לְבֵית אֲבֹתָם אֲלֹפִים וְשָׁשִׁים וְמֵאוֹת וְשָׁלְשִׁים: ⁴¹ אֱלֹהָ פְקוּדִי מִשְׁפָּחָת בְּנֵי גֵּרְשֹׁן כָּל-הַעֲבָד בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד אֲשֶׁר

פְקָד מֹשֶׁה וְאֶחָרֶن עַל-פִּי יהָה:

⁴² וְפְקוּדִי מִשְׁפָּחָת בְּנֵי מְרָרִי לְמִשְׁפְּחָתָם לְבֵית אֲבֹתָם: ⁴³ מִבּוּנְשָׁלְשִׁים שָׁנָה וּמַעַלָּה וְעַד בָּנִים חֲמִשִּׁים שָׁנָה כָּל-הַבָּא לְצֹבָא לְעַבְדָה בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד: ⁴⁴ וַיֹּהּי פְקֻדֵּיהם לְמִשְׁפְּחָת שֶׁלֶשׁ אֲלֹפִים וּמֵאתִים: ⁴⁵ אֱלֹהָ פְקוּדִי מִשְׁפָּחָת בְּנֵי מְרָרִי אֲשֶׁר

פְקָד מֹשֶׁה וְאֶחָרֶן עַל-פִּי יהָה בִּידָה:

⁴⁶ כָּל-הַפְּקֻדִים אֲשֶׁר פְקָד מֹשֶׁה וְאֶחָרֶן וַיֹּשִׁיבָה יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת-הַלּוּיִם לְמִשְׁפְּחָתָם וְלְבֵית אֲבֹתָם: ⁴⁷ מִבּוּנְשָׁלְשִׁים שָׁנָה כָּל-הַבָּא וּמַעַלָּה וְעַד בָּנִים חֲמִשִּׁים שָׁנָה כָּל-הַבָּא לְעַבְדָה עַבְדָת עַבְדָה וּעַבְדָת מֹשֶׁה בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד: ⁴⁸ וַיֹּהּי פְקֻדֵּיהם שְׁמִינִית אֲלֹפִים וְחַמֵּשׁ מֵאוֹת וְשָׁמְנִים: ⁴⁹ עַל-פִּי יהָה פְקָד אֹתָם בִּידָמֹשֶׁה אִישׁ אִישׁ עַל-עַבְדָתוֹ וְעַל-מֹשֶׁאוֹ וְפְקוּדִיו אֲשֶׁר-צִוָּה יהָה אֶת-

מֹשֶׁה: פ

ה וַיֹּדַבֵּר יהָה אֶל-מֹשֶׁה לֵאמֹר: ² צִוּ אֶת-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְיִשְׁלַחּוּ מִן-הַמִּקְדָּשׁ כָּל-

Maintaining Community Sanctity by Countering Threats of Impurity (5:1–31)

No matter how well organized the Tabernacle and surrounding camp may be, the community remains vulnerable to physical and spiritual impurities. In Leviticus and Numbers, women often figure prominently in discussions of impurity.

Therefore, it is no surprise that women are mentioned in each of the cases described in Numbers 5. Although the situations appear unrelated, they all reflect a concern for communal purity.

PROCEDURE FOR THE PHYSICALLY IMPURE (5:1–4)

The first threat addressed is that of accidental impurity: individuals who are blameless—perhaps eruption or a discharge and anyone defiled by a corpse.³ Remove male and female alike; put them outside the camp so that they do not defile the camp of those in whose midst I dwell.

⁴The Israelites did so, putting them outside the camp; as יהוה had spoken to Moses, so the Israelites did.

⁵ spoke to Moses, saying: “Speak to the Israelites: When men or women individually commit any wrong toward a fellow human being, thus breaking faith with יהוה, and they realize their even passive—recipients of physical impurity resulting from disease, or from contact with the dead. Such individuals must be expelled physically before their impurity penetrates and thus defiles the sacred camp; and they must remain outside the camp until purification takes place.

2. eruption. This refers to the ailment detailed in Leviticus 13–14. It is translated there as “scaly affection” and as “leprosy” (to convey the horror attached to the condition in question), but the actual disease remains unknown.

discharge. This refers to an abnormal genital discharge, not a typical menstrual flow. The laws relating to this condition are found in Leviticus 15, though that passage does not mandate expulsion from the camp. Note that neither the impurity resulting from menstruation (Leviticus 15:19–24) nor from giving birth (Leviticus 12) is mentioned here. The absence of these more common impurities emphasizes the unexpected and irregular nature of the conditions that the text does mention.

anyone defiled by a corpse. Numbers 19 details the purification ritual for someone who comes in contact with a dead body.

3. male and female alike. Heb. mi-zachar ad n'kevah. Everyone is subject to these temporary impurities. What is the difference between this expression and the expression ish o ishah (“men or women,” literally “man or woman”) in Numbers 5:6 and 6:2? The first expression is applied to animals more often (Genesis 6:19; 7:3, 9, 16; Leviticus 3:1) and seems to identify sexuality as opposed to gender. The primordial humans were created as “male and female” (biological categories) in the image of God in Genesis 1:27, but become gendered as “man and woman” (social categories) in the Garden of Eden in Genesis 2:23–24.

צְרוּעַ וּכְלִזְבָּד וּכְלִטְמָא לְנֶפֶשׁ :³ מִזְכָּר עֵד־ נְקֻבָּה תְּשַׁלְּחוּ אֶל־מְחוֹזָן לְמַחְנָה תְּשַׁלְּחוּ וְלֹא יִטְמָא אֲתִ-מְחַנִּים אֲשֶׁר אָנָּי שָׂכְנָה בְּתוֹכְם :

⁴ וַיַּעֲשׂוּ כָּנָן בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיְשַׁלְּחוּ אֶתְחָמָן אֶל־ מְחוֹזָן לְמַחְנָה בְּאָשָׁר דִּבֶּר יְהֹוָה אֶל־מְשָׁה בֶּן עָשָׂו בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל :⁵ פ

⁵ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֶל־מְשָׁה לְאָמֵר :⁶ דִּבֶּר אֶל־ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אִישׁ אָוֹרָשָׁה כִּי יִعַשׂ מִכְלָחָת הָאָדָם לְמַעַל מִעַל בִּיהּוָה וְאַשְׁמָה

in whose midst I dwell. This rationale for the expulsion of these individuals from the camp makes it clear that the goal of removing the infected individuals is to protect the sanctity of the Israelite camp and maintain the divine Presence there.

PROCEDURE FOR A PERSON WHO BETRAYS ANOTHER (5:5–10)

The crime of betrayal that here is called maal is illuminated by Leviticus 5:14–16 and 5:20–26, where the term maal refers to the inadvertent and intentional misappropriation of property. According to Leviticus, the penalty for this crime is a form of economic restitution.

6. When men or women. Having moved away from the clinical language used in the preceding section to describe impure bodies, the inclusive phrase “male and female” becomes “men or women” (see at v. 3). The specific mention of “women” presumes that women could commit this type of crime, and some probably did.

breaking faith. Heb. maal, which has both the guilt,⁷ they shall confess the wrong that they have done. They shall make restitution in the principal amount and add one-fifth to it, giving it to the one who was wronged.⁸ If that party [is deceased and] has no kin to whom restitution can be made, the amount repaid shall go to the priest—in addition to the ram of expiation with which expiation is made on their behalf.⁹ So, too, any gift among the sacred donations that the Israelites offer shall be the priest's.¹⁰ And each shall retain his sacred donations: each priest shall keep what is given to him.

¹¹ Yahweh spoke to Moses, saying:¹² Speak to the Israelite people and say to them:

• •

technical or legal meaning of misappropriation of property as well as a broader idiomatic meaning of betrayal. The next section in this parashah will apply the idiomatic meaning of maal to a faithless wife. This use of the identical term for crimes against both God and other people (5:6) indicates that both varieties of maal may have been considered acts of betrayal against God.

7. they shall confess. Unlike the Leviticus passages describing maal (Leviticus 5:14–16, 20–26), this verse demands that the guilty party confess before making restitution. As in the case of the sotah (5:22), maal (“breaking faith”) requires a potent ritual including a verbal expression and a physical action.

PROCEDURE FOR A WIFE ACCUSED OF ADULTERY (5:11–31)

One of the most enigmatic passages in the Torah, this description of the ritual inflicted upon a suspected wayward wife (whom rabbinic literature refers to as a sotah; see at v. 12) has elicited a wide range of reactions. It has inspired enormous efforts at interpretation extending from rabbinic to contemporary times. Some readers consider the ritual to be unforgivably misogynistic, demonstrating the vulnerability of women and the privileged position of men in Israelite society. Others believe this ritual works to protect accused women.

הנֶּפֶשׁ הַהוּא: ⁷ וְהִתְנוֹדוּ אֶת־חֲטֹאתֶם אֲשֶׁר עָשׂוּ וְהַשֵּׁב אֶת־אַשְׁמוֹ בָּרָאשׁוֹ וְחַמִּישׁוֹ יִסְף עַלְיוֹ וְנִתְן לְאַשְׁר אַשְׁם לוֹ: ⁸ וְאַם־אֵין לְאִישׁ גָּאֵל לְהַשֵּׁב הַאַשְׁם אֲלֵיו הַאַשְׁם הַמּוֹשֵׁב לִיהְוֹה לְבָהָן מִלְבָד אִיל הַכְּפָרִים אֲשֶׁר יִכְפְּרֶבּוּ עַלְיוֹ: ⁹ וְכָל־תְּרוּמָה לְכָל־קְדֻשָּׁי בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר־יִקְרִיבוּ לְבָהָן לוֹ יְהִי: ¹⁰ וְאִישׁ אֶת־קְדָשָׁיו לוֹ יְהִי אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר־יִתְּעַתֵּן לְבָהָן לוֹ יְהִי: ¹¹ פָּ

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֱלֹמֶשֶׁה לְאָמָר: ¹² דָּבָר אֲלֹבֶנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמְרָתִי אֱלֹהֶם

The ritual of the sotah is unique in the Tanach. Perhaps the closest analogue is the ritual used in response to an unsolved murder (Deuteronomy 21:1–9). Both rituals are to be performed when the community faces the possibility of a capital crime without the necessary evidence to determine innocence or guilt. The sotah ritual may be a biblical example of a “trial by ordeal.” Used throughout the ancient Near East, such trials helped to decide cases in which witnesses were conflicted or lacking. The Laws of Hammurabi (see ¶ 132) provide a relevant example in which a woman is accused of adultery without evidence and must undergo a trial by ordeal in a river to determine her fate. The sotah ritual is likewise administered to a woman accused by her husband of adultery (5:13–15).

If found innocent, the vindicated woman will remain fertile. If guilty, her body will swell grotesquely; and she will presumably be rendered infertile (5:19–22). [Note that there is no mention of, or procedure for, the man who is a necessary suspect along with the woman; he is never formally confronted or tested. —Ed.]

In biblical law, the crime of adultery warranted

If any wife has gone astray and broken faith with her husband,¹³ in that a man has had carnal relations with her unbeknown to her husband, and she keeps secret the fact that she has defiled herself without being forced, and there is no witness against her—¹⁴ but a fit of jealousy comes over him

אִישׁ אִישׁ כִּי-תְשַׁטֵּה אֲשָׁתוֹ וּמַעַלָּה בָּו
מַעַל :¹³ וְשָׁבֶב אִישׁ אֶתְהָ שְׁכַבְתִּי־זָרָעָ
וּנוּעַלְמָם מַעַנְיָנִי אִישָׁה וּגְסֻתָּה וְהִיא
נְטַמָּאָה וְעַד אֵין בָּהּ וְהִוא לֹא נְתַפֵּשָׁה :
וְעַבְרַ עַלְיוֹ רְזִיכְקָנָה וּקְנָא אֶת־אֲשָׁתוֹ¹⁴

death (Leviticus 20:10; Deuteronomy 22:22). Therefore this ritual, which does not result in death even of the guilty woman, may reflect a more compassionate form of punishment. The question “Whom does the ritual protect, the suspicious husband or the accused wife?” receives no easy answer. Because of linguistic difficulties that riddle this passage, an accurate understanding of the details of the ritual and the motivation behind them may forever elude readers. Yet the ambiguity of the passage, if not intentional, is a gift for interpreters who value indeterminate meaning in a text. Particularly for feminist readers, the ritual of the sotah reflects the ambiguity of women’s roles in the Bible and the vulnerability of women within ancient Israelite society.

12. gone astray. Heb. tisteh. The verbal root s-t-h appears four times in this passage (5:12, 19, 20, 29), but only twice more in the rest of the Tanach, when Proverbs 4:15 and 7:25 warn young men to remain righteous and resist the seductions of dangerous women. In both Numbers and Proverbs, the verb connotes illicit sex. Yet it is interesting to note that the more explicit term used for adultery, naaf, is missing in this passage. Perhaps the vagueness of the accusation due to the lack of concrete evidence explains the use of a less exacting, more suggestive term for the alleged crime. (From this verbal root the Rabbis derived their term for the woman in question, sotah.)

broken faith. Heb. maal. The repetition of this word links the sotah with the preceding passage (see at v. 6).

One might imagine that the Torah would say that a man who has sexual relations with a married woman has, in effect, taken what belongs to another man. In this passage, however, it is the woman, and not her lover, who is accused of the crime of maal, misappropriation of property. Certainly, an act of adultery would be an act of betrayal. Yet the use of this term may also carry its legal meaning and suggest that the errant wife has taken something belonging to her husband—perhaps his honor, her fidelity, or the exclusive right to her sexuality.

13. a man has had carnal relations with her. When referring to sexual intercourse, the subject switches from the wife to the adulterous man; grammatically, the woman thus assumes a passive position. On this idiom, see at Exodus 19:15.

she keeps secret. The accused woman again becomes the subject of the verse. Her silence perpetuates his ignorance of the crime.

she has defiled herself. The mention of her defilement reflects one of the central concerns of this parashah: the purity of the camp depends on the purity of its members. A woman’s self-defilement suggests ethical, not ritual defilement. It was not the semen that rendered her impure, but rather her unethical betrayal of her husband.

without being forced. There are two possible readings of this phrase. One interpretation is that the phrase refers to the woman’s sexual consent, meaning that she was not raped (see how this verb is used in Deuteronomy 22:28). Another reading understands the verb tapas as meaning “caught,” which would indicate that she escaped detection.

there is no witness against her. The lack of a witness is what necessitates the ritual. According to Deuteronomy 22:22, if there is a witness, the court is to execute the woman and her lover.

14. fit of jealousy. The husband’s suspicions trigger the ordeal, in order to determine whether and he is wrought up about the wife who has defiled herself; or if a fit of jealousy comes over one and he is wrought up about his wife although she has not defiled herself—¹⁵the husband shall bring his wife to the priest. And he shall bring as an offering for her one-tenth of an eifah of barley flour. No oil shall be poured upon it and no frankincense shall be laid on it, for it is a meal offering of jealousy, a meal offering of remembrance which recalls wrongdoing.

¹⁶The priest shall bring her forward and have her stand before Yahweh. ¹⁷The priest shall take sacral water in an earthen vessel and, taking some of the earth that is on the floor of the Tabernacle, the priest shall put it into the water. ¹⁸After he has made the wife stand before Yahweh, the priest shall bare the wife's head and place upon her hands the meal offering of remembrance, which is a meal offering of jealousy. And in the priest's hands shall be the water of bitterness that induces the spell.

the woman is guilty or not. Perhaps the sotah trial serves mainly to allay the husband's jealousy, in which case he, not she, is the true focus of this ritual, as some scholars suggest. Proverbs 6:34–35 describes a husband's jealousy, kinah, as a powerful and violent force.

although she has not defiled herself. The text does not assume that the woman is guilty. The stated possibility that the woman is innocent supports the interpretation that the ritual works to protect her from her husband's unfounded jealousy and restore some semblance of emotional stability to the household.

15. the husband shall bring his wife to the priest. From this point on, the narration of the ritual depicts the woman as a passive participant. The husband brings her and her “meal offering of jealousy” (v. 15) to the priest. The priest loosens her hair (v. 18) and offers her a liquid that enters her body and apparently affects her fertility (v. 22).

16. before Yahweh. The ritual must take place in וזהו נטמאה או-עָבֵר עַלְיוֹ רוח-קִנָּאָה

וקפָא אֶת-אֲשָׁתוֹ וְהִיא לֹא נטמאה:
¹⁵ וְהַבִּיא הָאִיש אֶת-אֲשָׁתוֹ אֶל-הַכְּהֵן
וְהַבִּיא אֶת-קְרֻבָּנָה עַלְיהָ עַשְׂירָת הַאֲיפָה
קָמָח שְׁעָרִים לְאִזְקָעַלְיוֹ שְׁמָן וְלְאִיטָן
עַלְיוֹ לְבָנָה כִּימְנָחָת קָנָאת הַוָּא מִנְחָת
זְבָרּוֹן מִזְבְּחָת עַזָּן:

¹⁶ וְהַקְרִיב אֶתְהָה הַכְּהֵן וְהַעֲמִד לִפְנֵי
יְהוָה: ¹⁷ וְלַקְח הַכְּהֵן מִים קְדָשִׁים בְּכָל-חֶרֶשׁ וּמִן-הַעֲפָר אֲשֶׁר יָחַיל בְּקָרְקָעָ
הַמְשָׁבֵן יַקְח הַכְּהֵן וְנָתַן אֶל-הַמִּים:
¹⁸ וְהַעֲמִיד הַכְּהֵן אֶת-הָאָשָׁה לִפְנֵי יְהוָה
וּפְרֹעֵל אֶת-רָאש הָאָשָׁה וְנָתַן עַל-כְּפַרְיָה
אֶת מִנְחָת הַזְּבָרּוֹן מִנְחָת קָנָאת הַוָּא
וּבְינֵד הַכְּהֵן וְהִיו מִי הַמְּרוּם הַמְּאָרָרִים:

front of the Tabernacle, the place where adjudication usually takes place (see 12:5). The public location adds to the woman's humiliation.

18. the priest shall bare the wife's head. Baring her head further humiliates the woman. The sotah's bare head links this passage with the subsequent section describing the nazir (see at 6:1–21).

the water of bitterness. Heb. mei ha-marim. The precise meaning of this expression eludes translators, who contend that a little earth does not make water bitter. Alternative translations based on different or cognate roots are “water of blessing,” “water of contention,” and “water of revelation.” Tikva Frymer-Kensky translates the phrase in vv. 18, 19, and 24, as “the ‘spell-effecting revelation waters,’ indicating that the ‘spell-effecting waters’ would enter the woman to effect the revelation of guilt or innocence” (“The Strange Case of the Suspected Sotah: Numbers V 11–31” in A. Bach, ed., Women in the Hebrew Bible: A Reader, 1999, p. 472). The potion mixes sanctified water and earth from ¹⁹The priest shall adjure the wife, saying to her, “If no other party has lain with you, if you have not gone astray in defilement while married to your husband, be immune to harm from this water of bitterness that induces the spell. ²⁰But if you have gone astray while married to your husband and have defiled yourself, if a man other than your husband has had carnal relations with you”—²¹here the priest shall administer the curse of adjuration to the wife, as the priest goes on to say to the wife—“may make you a curse and an imprecation among your people, as Yahweh causes your thigh to sag and your belly to distend; ²²may this water that induces the spell enter your body, causing the belly to distend and the thigh to sag.” And the wife shall say, “Amen, amen!”

²³The priest shall put these curses down in writing and rub it off into the water of bitterness. ²⁴He is to make the wife drink the water of bitterness

¹⁹ וְהַשְׁבִּיעַ אֶתְהָ הַכֹּהֵן וְאָמַר אֶל־הָאֲשָׁה אֶמְלָא שְׁכָב אִישׁ אֶתְךָ וְאֶמְלָא שְׂטִית טָמֵאָה תְּחַת אִישָׁךְ חֲנִקִּי מִפְעֵי הַמְּרוּם הַמְּאָרְקִים הָאֱלֹהִים: ²⁰ וְאַתְּ בַּיִשְׁעֵית תְּחַת אִישׁ וְכַיְשְׁמָאת וַיְתַנֵּן אִישׁ כֶּל אֶת־שְׁכָבְתוֹ מִבְלָעֵדִי אִישׁ: ²¹ וְהַשְׁבִּיעַ הַכֹּהֵן אֶת־הָאֲשָׁה בְּשָׁבֻעַת הָאֱלֹהִים וְאָמַר הַכֹּהֵן לְאַשְׁהָ יַתֵּן יְהוָה אָוֹתֶךָ לְאֵלָה וְלִשְׁבָעָה בְּתוֹךְ עַמְּךָ בַּתְּחַת יְהוָה אֶת־יְרִכְךָ נְפָלָת וְאַתְּבְּטַנָּה צְבָה: ²² וְבָאוּ הַמִּים הַמְּאָרְקִים הָאֲלֹהִים בְּמִיעֵר לְצִבּוֹת בְּטַן וְלִנְפָלֵל יְרָה וְאָמְרָה הָאֲשָׁה אָמֵן | אָמֵן: ²³ וְכַתֵּב אֶת־הָאֱלֹהִים הָאֱלֹהִים הַכֹּהֵן בְּסֶפֶר וּמְחַה אֶל־מִי הַמְּרוּם: ²⁴ וְהַשְׁקֵה אֶת־הָאֲשָׁה אֶת־מִי הַמְּרוּם הַמְּאָרְקִים וְבָאוּ

the Tabernacle floor inside a clay vessel (5:17). The symbolism of combining holy water with holy earth is clear: the possibly impure woman ingests a pure and holy liquid to see if her body rejects it. Yet the potion’s purported physical impact on the body remains unclear.

19. The priest shall adjure the wife. The priest presents two possible outcomes, indicating that the woman is presumed neither innocent nor guilty.

be immune. This verb, literally “be cleansed,” appears elsewhere as a legal term for innocence (Exodus 21:19; 23:7).

22. causing the belly to distend and the thigh to sag. Although the exact nature of the potential affliction remains unclear, the damage appears to relate to the woman’s fertility. Most likely the thigh, used frequently as a euphemism for male genitalia (Genesis 24:2, 9; 46:26; Exodus 1:5), is here a euphemism for female genitalia. Since an innocent woman will be able to conceive (5:28), the implied contrast suggests that a guilty woman will be rendered infertile. There is no reason to restrict this ritual to cases where the guilty woman is already pregnant and promptly miscarries. (For a different interpretation, see Another View, p. 836.) Identifying an apt illness seems beside the point; what matters more is recognizing that the ritual targets the woman’s reproductive system—the part of her that belongs to her husband, nurtures his heirs, and secures her value within her community.

22. “Amen, amen!” When the woman finally speaks, her simple acceptance of the oath contrasts with the passage’s repetitiousness and the priest’s verbosity. Though her verbal consenting to the oath is formulaic (see Deuteronomy 27:15–26), her voice momentarily draws attention to herself as a flesh-and-blood human being who is suffering an ordeal.

23. rub it off into the water of bitterness. After the priest dissolves the writing in the “bitter” waters, the sotah must ingest the oath to release its magic potency within her body (compare Jeremiah 51:59–64).

24. He is to make the wife drink. As the verbs in this passage demonstrate, the priest is the central actor in the ritual.

that induces the spell, so that the spell-inducing water may enter into her to bring on bitterness.

²⁵Then the priest shall take from the wife's hand the meal offering of jealousy, elevate the meal offering before Yahweh, and present it on the altar. ²⁶The priest shall scoop out of the meal offering a token part of it and turn it into smoke on the altar. Last, he shall make the wife drink the water.

²⁷Once he has made her drink the water—if she has defiled herself by breaking faith with her husband, the spell-inducing water shall enter into her to bring on bitterness, so that her belly shall distend and her thigh shall sag; and the wife shall become a curse among her people. ²⁸But if the wife has not defiled herself and is pure, she shall be unharmed and able to retain seed.

²⁹This is the ritual in cases of jealousy, when a wife goes astray while married to her husband and defiles herself, ³⁰or when a fit of jealousy comes over a husband and he is wrought up over his wife: the wife shall be made to stand before him and the priest shall carry out all this ritual with her. ³¹The husband shall be clear of guilt; but that wife shall suffer for her guilt.

6 spoke to Moses, saying: ²Speak to the Israelites and say to them: If any men or women

28. able to retain seed. This expression refers to her ability to conceive.

31. The husband shall be clear of guilt. If the husband's accusations prove false, he suffers no punishment. Yet the lack of repercussions for the wrongly suspicious husband also may protect his wife by convincing him to initiate the ritual. Assuming the “bitter” waters are humiliating but harmless, it may be better for the wife to undergo the trial than to live with a jealous husband.

but that wife shall suffer for her guilt. If the woman is guilty, she is not executed, as an adulteress would be. Without a witness to the crime, the woman cannot be put to death. The expression “suffer for her guilt” indicates that God, not the court, determines the punishment (Leviticus 5:1, 17; 20:17; Numbers 9:13).

בָּה הַפִּים הַמְּאֻרְרִים לִמְרִים: ²⁵ וְלֹקַח הַכֹּהן מֵיד הָאֲשָׁה אֶת מִנְחַת הַקְּנָאת וְהַגִּנְיף אֶת-הַמִּנְחָה לְפָנֵי יְהוָה וְהַקָּרֵיב אֲתָה אֶל-הַמִּזְבֵּחַ: ²⁶ וְקָמַץ הַפְּתַח מִן-הַמִּנְחָה אֶת-אַזְבְּרָתָה וְהַקְּטִיר כְּמִזְבְּחָה וְאַחֲרֵי יָשְׁקָה אֶת-הָאֲשָׁה אֶת-הַמִּים: ²⁷ וְהַשְׁקָה אֶת-הַמִּים וְהִיְתָה אַמְּנַטְמָה וְתִמְעֵל מַעַל בָּאִישָׁה וּבָאו בָּה הַפִּים הַמְּאֻרְרִים לְמֹרִים וְצַבְתָּה בְּטָנָה וּנְפָלָה יְרַכָּה וְהִיְתָה הָאֲשָׁה לְאֶלְלה בְּקָרְב עַמָּה: ²⁸ וְאִם-לֹא נִטְמָא הָאֲשָׁה וְטוֹרָה הָוֹא וְנִקְתָּה וְנוֹרָעָה זָרָע: ²⁹ זֹאת תּוֹרַת הַקְּנָאת אֲשֶׁר תְּשִׂטֵּה אֲשָׁה תְּחַת אִישָׁה וּנִטְמָא: ³⁰ אָוֶן אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר תְּעַבֵּר עַלְיוֹ רُוח קָנָאָה וּקְנָא אֶת-אֲשָׁתוֹ וְהַעֲמִיד אֶת-הָאֲשָׁה לְפָנֵי יְהוָה וְעָשָׂה לְה הַכֹּהן אֶת בְּלִתְהוֹרָה זוֹאת: ³¹ וְנִקְתָּה הָאִיש מַעַן וְהָאֲשָׁה הַהּוּא תְשִׁא אֶת-עֲונָה: פ

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל-מֹשֶׁה לִאמְרָה: ² דָבָר אֶל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמַרְתָּ אֶל-הָם אִיש אָוֶן

Maintaining Community Sanctity through Religious Leaders (6:1–27)

Moving beyond concerns with threats to the sanctity of the Israelite community, the parashah now focuses upon individuals who enhance and maintain that sanctity. Strikingly, women are explicitly utter a nazirite's vow, to set themselves apart for God,³ they shall abstain from wine and any other intoxicant; they shall not drink vinegar of wine or of any other intoxicant, neither shall they drink anything in which grapes have been steeped, nor eat grapes fresh or dried.⁴ Throughout their term as nazirite, they may not eat anything that is obtained from the grapevine, even seeds or skin.

⁵Throughout the term of their vow as nazirite, no razor shall touch their head; it shall remain consecrated until the completion of their term as nazirite of God, the hair of their head being left included among those individuals. By dedicating themselves as nazirites, women are able to contribute to the holiness of Israel.

LAWS OF THE NAZIR (6:1–21)

With the introduction of the nazir, an individual who dedicates herself or himself to God, the parashah shifts its focus from a problematic woman to a respectable, if not honored, woman or man. Yet, the shared mention of bare or untrimmed hair (5:18, 6:5) suggests an implicit relationship between the sotah and the nazir. Both are marginal, set apart from the community-at-large. However, while the nazir chooses to distinguish herself or himself, the sotah is at the mercy of her husband. Placed together, these figures represent a typology, albeit extreme, of women within Israelite society that issues a message. A disciplined woman who controls her wildness and dedicates herself (and her wildness) to God may become a n'zirah (the specifically feminine form of nazir). One who does not discipline her wildness may become a sotah.

The Bible distinguishes between the life-long nazir, such as Samson (Judges 13–16) and Samuel (I Samuel 1), and the temporary nazir of this passage. Because the laws of the nazir pertain to prohibitions, they reveal little about whether or how the nazir functioned within the community. Although nazirites behaved similarly to priests in certain ways,

אֲשֶׁה כִּי יַפְלָא לְנֹדֵר נֹזֵר לְהַנְּזֵר
לִיהוָה: ³ מִין וּשְׂכָר יֹזֵר חַמְץ יִין וְחַמְץ
שְׂכָר לֹא יִשְׂתַּחַ וְכָל-מְשֻׁרָת עֲנָבִים לֹא
יִשְׂתַּחַ וְעֲנָבִים לְחַיִם וַיְבַשִּׁים לֹא יִאֱכַל:
⁴ כָּל יִמְיָן נֹזֵר מִכָּל אֲשֶׁר יַעֲשֶׂה מִגְפָּן הָיוֹן
מְחַרְצָנִים וְעַד-זָג לֹא יִאֱכַל:
⁵ כָּל-יִמְלָאת הַיּוֹם אֲשֶׁר-יִזְהָר לִיהוָה
רָאשׁוֹ עַד-מְלָאת הַיּוֹם אֲשֶׁר-יִזְהָר לִיהוָה

there is no indication that they served alongside them in the sanctuary. Still, the existence of female nazirites illustrates that women, like men, could and did dedicate themselves to God.

2. If any men or women explicitly utter a nazirite's vow. The word nazir comes from the root n-z-r, meaning to “dedicate” or “to set aside,” and may be related to the root n-d-r, meaning “vow.” Women can make binding vows; according to Numbers 30, either their fathers or their husbands can annul them, but only upon first hearing of them (30:4–16). Thus, a married woman or a daughter in her father’s house—unlike a widow or a divorcee living on her own—depends on the consent of a man in order to become a nazir. The two biblical nazirites, Samuel and Samson, are designated as nazirites by their mothers. During her pregnancy, Samson’s unnamed mother follows the prohibitions for the nazir in Numbers and effectively becomes a temporary nazirite herself (Judges 13:3–5, 13–14).

3. All intoxicants and grape products are forbidden to the nazir. This prohibition resembles a less severe version imposed on priests, who are forbidden intoxicants when they enter the sanctuary (Leviticus 10:9; Ezekiel 44:21), but otherwise are allowed to drink (Isaiah 28:7).

5. Untrimmed hair is the defining physical characteristic of the nazir and reflects the vitality of an individual dedicated to God. In ancient cultures, hair—which grows throughout life and appears to

to grow untrimmed.⁶ Throughout the term that they have set apart for their God, they shall not go in where there is a dead person.⁷ Even if their father or mother, or their brother or sister should die, they must not become defiled for any of them, since hair set apart for their God is upon their head:⁸ throughout their term as nazirite they are consecrated to יהוה.

⁹If someone dies suddenly nearby, defiling the consecrated hair, [the nazirite] shall shave the head at the time of becoming pure, shaving it on the seventh day.¹⁰ On the eighth day that person shall bring two turtledoves or two pigeons to the priest, at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting.¹¹ The priest shall offer one as a purgation offering and the other as a burnt offering, and make expiation on the person's behalf for the guilt incurred through the corpse. That same day the head shall be reconsecrated;¹² and that person shall rededicate to יהוה the term as nazirite, bringing a lamb in its first year as a penalty offering. The previous period shall be void, since the consecrated hair was defiled.

¹³This is the ritual for the nazirite: On the day that the term as nazirite is completed, the person shall be brought to the entrance of the Tent of grow even in death—represented vitality and was often offered as a gift to one's deity. In the Bible, hair also reflects a character's strength. A haircut renders mighty Samson impotent (Judges 16:17); the hair of a captive woman must be shaved at first as a sign of mourning (Deuteronomy 21:12).

7. The nazir is forbidden to bury even immediate family members; in this respect a nazirite is like only the chief priest (compare Leviticus 21:1–4, 11). Contact with a corpse contaminates anyone temporarily (Numbers 5:2; 19:11), but such contact in addition disrupts the status of nazir (below, vv. 9–12), just as it can ruin a priest's ability to function. (Note that the list of deceased family members does not mention a spouse. Regarding spousal death, see the analogous case of a priest at Leviticus 21:1–4.)

קָרְשׁ יְהוָה גָּדֵל פֶּרֶע שַׁעַר רָאשׁוֹ: ⁶ בְּלִימִי
הַזְּרוּ לִיהוָה עַל־נֶפֶשׁ מֵת לֹא יָבֹא:
⁷ לְאָבִיו וּלְאָמָנוּ לְאָחִיו וּלְאֲחֹתוֹ לֹא־
יִטְמַא לְהָם בָּמֹתָם כִּי נֹרֶא אֶלְחָיו עַל־
רָאשׁוֹ: ⁸ בְּלִימִי נֹרֶא קָרְשׁ הַוָּא לִיהוָה:
⁹ וּכְרִימּוֹת מֵת עַלְיוֹ בִּפְתֻעַ פָּתָאָם וּטְמַא
רָאשׁ נֹרֶא וְגָלֵח רָאשׁ בַּיּוֹם טָהָרָתוֹ בַּיּוֹם
הַשְׁבִּיעִי יִגְלְחָנוּ: ¹⁰ וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁמִינִי יִבָּא
שְׁתִי תְּלִים אָוֹשָׂנִי בְּנֵי יוֹנָה אֶל־הַפְּהָן אֶל־
פָּתָח אֶדְלָ מָוֶעֶד: ¹¹ וְעַשֵּׂה הַפְּהָן אֶחָד
לְחַטָּאת וְאֶחָד לְעַלְלה וּכְפָר עַלְיוֹ מִאֲשֶׁר
חַטָּא עַל־הַנֶּפֶשׁ וּכְפָר אֶת־רָאשׁוֹ בַּיּוֹם
הַהוּא: ¹² וְהַזְּרִיר לִיהוָה אֶת־יִמְיָה נֹרֶא
וְהַבְּיא כְּבָשׂ בְּנֵשְׁנָתוֹ לְאֶשֶּׁם וְהַיְמִים
הַרְאָשָׁנִיט וּפְלִי כִּי טָמֵא נֹרֶא:
¹³ וְזֹאת תֹּורַת הַנֶּזֶר בַּיּוֹם מֶלֶאָת יִמְיָה
נֹרֶא יִבְיא אֶתְהוּ אֶל־פָּתָח אֶדְלָ מָוֶעֶד:

8. they are consecrated to יהוה. Priests are also described as “consecrated to יהוה” (Leviticus 21:7).

9. shall shave the head. If the nazir becomes contaminated by unexpected exposure to a corpse, she or he must first observe the rite of purification (Numbers 19) before shaving the hair. The requirement to shave after purification suggests that hair cannot be purified and so it must be removed.

12. since the consecrated hair was defiled. Although one should be cautious about drawing conclusions from silence, it must be observed that other sources of contamination are not mentioned, particularly those incurred via menstruation or the emission of bodily fluids. It is interesting to consider what may have happened to female nazirites when they menstruated.

Meeting.¹⁴ As an offering to יְהוָה that person shall present: one male lamb in its first year, without blemish, for a burnt offering; one ewe lamb in its first year, without blemish, for a purgation offering; one ram without blemish for an offering of well-being;¹⁵ a basket of unleavened cakes of choice flour with oil mixed in, and unleavened wafers spread with oil; and the proper meal offerings and libations.

¹⁶The priest shall present them before יְהוָה and offer the purgation offering and the burnt offering.

¹⁷He shall offer the ram as a sacrifice of well-being to יְהוָה, together with the basket of unleavened cakes; the priest shall also offer the meal offerings and the libations.¹⁸ The nazirite shall then shave the consecrated hair, at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, and take those locks of consecrated hair and put them on the fire that is under the sacrifice of well-being.

¹⁹The priest shall take the shoulder of the ram when it has been boiled, one unleavened cake from the basket, and one unleavened wafer, and place them on the hands of the nazirite after the consecrated hair has been shaved.²⁰ The priest shall elevate them as an elevation offering before יְהוָה; and this shall be a sacred donation for the priest, in addition to the breast of the elevation offering and the thigh of gift offering. After that the nazirite may drink wine.

²¹Such is the obligation of a nazirite; except that those who vow an offering to יְהוָה of what they can afford, beyond their nazirite requirements, must do exactly according to the vow that they have made beyond their obligation as nazirites.

16. The priest shall present them. Just as the priest brings the sotah before God (5:16), the priest assumes the active role and presents the nazir and the offering before God. Despite a seemingly common passivity of these two figures (in contrast to the active priest), their differences stand out. Through an act of dedication and religious desire, the nazir

¹⁴ וְהִקְרִיב אֶת-קָרְבָּנוֹ לִיהְוָה בְּבָשָׂר בָּנֵן שְׁנַתּוֹ תָּמִים אֶחָד לְעַלְלה וּכְבָשָׂה אֶחָת בְּת-שְׁנַתּוֹ תָּמִימָה לְחַטָּאת וְאַיִל-אֶחָד תָּמִים לְשְׁלָמִים: ¹⁵ וְסֶל מִצּוֹת סֶלֶת חֲלָת בְּלֹולֶת בְּשָׂמִן וּרְקִיקִי מִצּוֹת מִשְׁתְּחִים בְּשָׂמִן וּמִנְחָתָם וּגְסֻפִּיהָם:

¹⁶ וְהִקְרִיב הַכֹּהֵן לִפְנֵי יְהוָה וַעֲשֵׂה אֶת-חַטָּאתוֹ וְאֶת-עַלְתָוֹ: ¹⁷ וְאֶת-הָאַיִל יַעֲשֵׂה זָבֵח שְׁלָמִים לִיהְוָה עַל סֶל הַמִּצּוֹת וַעֲשֵׂה הַכֹּהֵן אֶת-מִנְחָתוֹ וְאֶת-נִסְכּוֹ: ¹⁸ וְגַלְחַת הַנּוֹזֵר פָּתֵח אֶחָל מִזְעֵד אֶת-רָאשׁ נְזֹרוֹ וְלֹקֶח אֶת-שָׁעֵל רָאשׁ נְזֹרוֹ וְנָתֵן עַל-הַאַשְׁדָה אֲשֶׁר-תִּתְחַתֵּת זָבֵח הַשְּׁלָמִים:

¹⁹ וְלֹקֶח הַכֹּהֵן אֶת-הַזְּרֹעַ בְּשָׁלָה מִן-הָאַיִל וְחַלְתָ מִצְחָה אֶחָת מִן-הַשְּׁלָל וּרְקִיק מִצּוֹה אֶחָד וְנָתֵן עַל-פְּפי הַנּוֹזֵר אַחֲר הַתְּגִלְחוֹת אֶת-נְזֹרוֹ: ²⁰ וְהַנִּיק אֹתָם הַכְּבָשׂוֹן | תְּנוּפָה הַנּוֹזֵר יָין:

²¹ זֹאת תּוֹרַת הַנּוֹזֵר אֲשֶׁר יַדַּר קָרְבָּנוֹ לִיהְוָה עַל-נְזֹרוֹ מִלְכָד אֲשֶׁר-תִשְׁׁגַ יְדוֹ בְּפִי נְדֹרֹ אֲשֶׁר יַדַּר בֶּן יַעֲשֵׂה עַל תּוֹרַת נְזֹרוֹ: פ

comes willingly before God. Charged with deception and sexual desire, the sotah is forcibly brought before God.

18. put them on the fire that is under the sacrifice. The placement of the nazirite's consecrated locks directly under the ram suggests that the nazir's hair is considered one of the offerings.

²² spoke to Moses: ²³Speak to Aaron and his sons: Thus shall you bless the people of Israel. Say to them:

²⁴bless you and protect you!

²⁵deal kindly and graciously with you!

²⁶bestow [divine] favor upon you and grant you peace!

²⁷Thus they shall link My name with the people of Israel, and I will bless them.

7 On the day that Moses finished setting up the Tabernacle, he anointed and consecrated it and all its furnishings, as well as the altar and its utensils. When he had anointed and consecrated them,

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵיכָם לֵאמֹר: ²³דְּבָר
אֲלֵהֶיךָ וְאֶל־בָּנֶיךָ לְאֹמֶר בָּהּ תִּבְרְכֵי אֶת־ בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אָמֹר לָהֶם: ס

²⁴וְבָרְכֵךְ יְהוָה וְיִשְׁמְרֶךָ: ס

²⁵יְאֵר יְהוָה | פְּנֵיו אֲלֵיכָם וַיִּחְנַּן: ס

²⁶יְשַׁא יְהוָה | פְּנֵיו אֲלֵיכָם וַיִּשְׁמַם לְכָל־
שָׁלוֹם: ס

²⁷וְשָׁמוֹ אֶת־שְׁמֵי עַל־בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֶת־ אֶבְרָכָם: ס

PRIESTLY BLESSING (6:22–27)

According to Leviticus 9:22, at the conclusion of the ceremony consecrating the priests and the Tabernacle, Aaron raises his hands and blesses the community of Israel. Although the text does not report Aaron's words, rabbinic commentators suggest that he recites Numbers 6:24–27, which has become known as the "Priestly Blessing." Its words affirm that God blesses and protects, deals kindly and graciously, bestows favor, and grants peace. Each of its three verses contains two blessings, yet the verses expand in length from three to five to seven words, suggesting that God's blessing expands. Verse 27 echoes both the form and content of v. 23, creating an envelope structure for the blessing.

In 1979, archaeologists discovered in Jerusalem two small silver scrolls dated to the late 7th or early 6th century B.C.E., inscribed with a text nearly identical to the Priestly Blessing. Although their function remains unknown, these silver scrolls provide the earliest known parallel to a biblical text and probably served as protective amulets. The blessing as found in the Torah remains an integral part of Jewish liturgy and is recited as part of the Amidah prayer.

²⁵וְיֹהָי בַּיּוֹם כְּלֹות מֶשֶׁה לְהַקִּים אֶת־
הַמִּשְׁכָּן וַיִּמְשַׁח אֶתְךָ וַיִּקְדַּשׁ אֶתְךָ וְאֶת־כָּל־
כָּלְיוֹ וְאֶת־הַמִּזְבֵּחַ וְאֶת־כָּל־כָּלְיוֹ וַיִּמְשַׁחֵךְ

²⁷. Thus they shall link My name with. Literally, "they shall place my name on," which perhaps refers to amulets hung on one's body—as with the silver scrolls mentioned above, which were designed to be worn.

Record of the Tribal Chiefs' Gifts (7:1–89)

Having addressed matters related to the sanctity of the camp, the parashah concludes as it began—with administrative records.

²the chieftains of Israel, the heads of ancestral houses, namely, the chieftains of the tribes, those who were in charge of enrollment, drew near ³and brought their offering before ⁴Yahweh: six draught carts and twelve oxen, a cart for every two chieftains and an ox for each one.

When they had brought them before the Tabernacle, ⁴said to Moses: ⁵Accept these from them for use in the service of the Tent of Meeting, and give them to the Levites according to their respective services.

⁶Moses took the carts and the oxen and gave them to the Levites. ⁷Two carts and four oxen he gave to the Gershonites, as required for their service, ⁸and four carts and eight oxen he gave to the Merarites, as required for their service—under the direction of Ithamar son of Aaron the priest. ⁹But to the Kohathites he did not give any; since theirs was the service of the [most] sacred objects, their portage was by shoulder.

¹⁰The chieftains also brought the dedication offering for the altar upon its being anointed. As the chieftains were presenting their offerings before the altar, ¹¹said to Moses: Let them present their offerings for the dedication of the altar, one chieftain each day.

¹²The one who presented his offering on the first day was Nahshon son of Amminadab of the tribe of Judah. ¹³His offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary weight, both filled with

וַיִּקְרֹשׁ אֲתֶם: ² וַיִּקְרֹבוּ נְשֵׂיִאֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל רָאשֵׁי בֵּית אֲבֹתֶם הֵם נְשֵׂיִאֵי הַמְּטָה הַזֶּה הָעָמְדִים עַל-הַפְּקֻדִים: ³ וַיָּבֹאוּ אֲתֶם קָרְבָּנִים לִפְנֵי יְהוָה שְׁשׁ-עֲגָלָת צָב וְשָׁנִי עֲשָׂר בָּקָר עֲגָלָה עַל-שְׁנִי הַנְּשָׂאִים וְשׂוֹר לְאֶחָד

וַיִּקְרֹבוּ אֲוֹתֶם לִפְנֵי הַמְּשִׁבְנָן: ⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים לְאָמֹר: ⁵ קָח מִאֲתֶם וְהִנֵּה לְעָבֵד אֶת-עֲבֹדָת אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד וְנִתְתָּה אֲוֹתֶם אֶל-הַלְּיוֹם אִיש בְּפִי עֲבֹדָתוֹ:

⁶ וַיֹּקַח מְשָׁה אֶת-הַעֲגָלָת וְאֶת-הַבָּקָר וַיְתַנוּ אֲוֹתֶם אֶל-הַלְּיוֹם: ⁷ אֶת | שְׁתִי הַעֲגָלוֹת וְאֶת אֶרְבּוּת הַבָּקָר נָתַן לְבָנֵי גַּרְשּׁוֹן בְּפִי עֲבֹדָתָם: ⁸ וְאֶת | אֶרְבּוּת הַעֲגָלָת וְאֶת שְׁמִינִית הַבָּקָר נָתַן לְבָנֵי מֹרְיָה בְּפִי עֲבֹדָתָם בִּיד אִתְּמָר בֶּן-אַהֲרֹן הַפְּהָנָה: ⁹ וְלְבָנֵי קָהָת לֹא נָתַן כִּי-עֲבֹדָת הַקְּדֵשׁ עַל-הָם בְּפִתְחָה יְשָׁאוֹ:

¹⁰ וַיִּקְרֹבוּ הַנְּשָׂאִים אֶת חַנְכָת הַמִּזְבֵּחַ בַּיּוֹם הַמְּשִׁחָה אָתָה וַיִּקְרֹבוּ הַנְּשָׂאִים אֶת-קָרְבָּנִים לִפְנֵי הַמִּזְבֵּחַ: ¹¹ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים נְשֵׂיא אֶחָד לַיּוֹם נְשֵׂיא אֶחָד לַיּוֹם וַיִּקְרֹב אֶת-קָרְבָּנִים לְחַנְכָת הַמִּזְבֵּחַ: ¹²

¹² וַיָּנוֹן הַמְּקֹרֵב בַּיּוֹם הַרְאֵשׁ אֶת-קָרְבָּנוֹ נְחַשֵּׁן בֶּן-עַמִּינְדָּב לְמַטְהָ יְהוָה: ¹³ וַיָּרֶבֶן קָרְבָּת-בְּסֶף אֶחָת שְׁלֹשִׁים וּמִאַה מִשְׁקָלָה מִזְרָק אֶחָד בְּסֶף שְׁבעִים שָׁקֶל

GIFTS FOR THE LEVITES (7:1–9)

From the tribal chiefs' gifts in honor of the consecration of the Tabernacle, Moses allocates carts and oxen to be used by the Gershonites and the Merarites. (The Kohathites, who are responsible for the most sacred objects, carry them on their shoulders.)

GIFTS FOR THE DEDICATION OF THE ALTAR (7:10–88)

The lengthy, repetitive record of the tribal chiefs' gifts appears to reflect a form of ancient Near Eastern accounting, in which items were listed horizontally according to genre. This record's style is that of an administrative as opposed to a cultic account.

choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal offering;
¹⁴one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense;
¹⁵one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ¹⁶one goat for a purgation offering; ¹⁷and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Nahshon son of Amminadab.

¹⁸On the second day, Nethanel son of Zuar, chieftain of Issachar, made his offering. ¹⁹He presented as his offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary weight, both filled with choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal offering; ²⁰one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense; ²¹one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ²²one goat for a purgation offering; ²³and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Nethanel son of Zuar.

²⁴On the third day, it was the chieftain of the Zebulunites, Eliab son of Helon. ²⁵His offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary weight, both filled with choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal offering; ²⁶one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense; ²⁷one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ²⁸one goat for a purgation offering; ²⁹and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Eliab son of Helon.

³⁰On the fourth day, it was the chieftain of the Reubenites, Elizur son of Shedeur. ³¹His offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary weight, both filled with choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal

בשקל הקדש שניהם ו מלאים סלת בוללה בשמן למנה: ¹⁴ בף אחת עשרה זקב מלאה קטרת: ¹⁵ פר אחד בון-בקר איל אחד כבש-אחד בון-שנינו לעלה: ¹⁶ שעיר-עזים אחד לחטאת: ולובח השלמים בקר שניים אילם ¹⁷ חמישה עתודים חמשה בשים בני-שנה

חַמְשָׁה זוּ קָרְבָּן נְחַשּׁוֹן בְּנֵעֲמִינְדָּב: פ
18 בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁנִי הַקָּרֵיב נְתַנָּאֶל בְּנֵצְעָר
בְּשִׂיא יִשְׁכָּר יִשְׁכָּר: 19 הַקָּרֵב אֶת־קָרְבָּנוֹ
קָעָרֶת־בְּסָף אַחֲת שְׁלָשִׁים וִמֵּאה מִשְׁקָלָה
מִזְרָק אֶחָד פְּסָף שְׁבָעִים שָׁקֵל בְּשֶׁkel
הַקָּדֵשׁ שְׁנִיהם מִלְּאָים סְלָת בְּלוּלָה בְּשָׁמְנוֹ
לִמְנַחָּה: 20 כְּפָר אַחֲת עַשְׂרָה זָהָב מִלְּאָה קְטָרָת: 21 פָּר אֶחָד בְּנֵבֶךְ אַיִל אֶחָד
בְּבָשָׂר־אֶחָד בְּנֵשְׁנְתוֹ לְעֵלה: 22 שְׁעִיר־עַזִּים
אֶחָד לְחַטָּאת: 23 וּלְזָבֵחַ הַשְּׁלָמִים בְּקָרָב
שְׁנִים אַיִלִם חַמְשָׁה עֲתָדִים חַמְשָׁה
בְּשִׁים בְּנֵי־שָׁנָה חַמְשָׁה זוּ קָרְבָּן נְתַנָּאֶל
בְּנֵצְעָר: פ

ב' יומם השלישי נשיא לבני זבולון אליאב
בן-חלוץ: ²⁵ קרבנו קערת-בسف אחית
שלשים ומאה משקלה מזוקן אוחל בسف
שבעים שקל בשקל הקדש שניהם
מלאים סלת בוללה בשמן למנחה:
כפ' אחית עשרה זהב מלאה קטרת:
פר אחד בן-בקר איל אחד כבש-אחד
בן-שנתו לעלה: ²⁸ שעיר-עדים אחד
לחטאת: ²⁹ ולובח השלמים בקר שניים
אלים חמישה עתרים חמישה בבשים
בנישנה חמישה זה קרבנו אליאב ב-

³⁰ ביזום הריבייני נשייא לבני ראנגן אליזור
בן-שדייאור: ³¹ קרבנו קערת-בסק אחת
שלשים ומאה משקלה מזוקן אחד בסק
שבעים שקל בסקל הקדש שניהם |

offering; ³²one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense; ³³one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ³⁴one goat for a purgation offering; ³⁵and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Elizur son of Shedeur.

³⁶On the fifth day, it was the chieftain of the Simeonites, Shelumiel son of Zurishaddai. ³⁷His offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary weight, both filled with choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal offering; ³⁸one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense; ³⁹one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ⁴⁰one goat for a purgation offering; ⁴¹and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Shelumiel son of Zurishaddai.

⁴²On the sixth day, it was the chieftain of the Gadites, Eliasaph son of Deuel. ⁴³His offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary weight, both filled with choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal offering; ⁴⁴one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense; ⁴⁵one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ⁴⁶one goat for a purgation offering; ⁴⁷and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Eli-asaph son of Deuel.

⁴⁸On the seventh day, it was the chieftain of the Ephraimites, Elishama son of Ammihud. ⁴⁹His offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary

מְלָאִים סְלַת בְּלוֹלָה בְּשָׁמֶן לְמַנְחָה: ³² כַּף
אַחֲת עֲשָׂרָה זָהָב מְלָאָה קְטָרָת: ³³ פָּר
אֶחָד בְּנֵבֶר אַיִל אֶחָד בְּבָשָׂר אֶחָד בָּן-שְׁנִתוֹ לְעַלָּה: ³⁴ שְׁעִיר-עִזִּים אֶחָד
לְחַטָּאת: ³⁵ וְלוֹזֵב הַשְּׁלָמִים בָּקָר שְׁנִית
אִילָם חַמְשָׁה עֲתָרִים חַמְשָׁה בְּבָשִׂים
בְּנֵי-שָׁנָה חַמְשָׁה זוֹה קָרְבָּן אֶלְيָצָר בָּנ-שְׁדִיאָוָר: פ

³⁶ בַּיּוֹם הַחַמִּישִׁי נָשִׂיא לְבָנִי שְׁמֻעוֹן
שְׁלָמִיאָל בְּנֵצְוִירִישָׁדִי: ³⁷ קָרְבָּנוֹ קָעָרָת
בְּסֶף אַחֲת שְׁלָשִׁים וּמִאָה מִשְׁקָלָה מִזְרָק
אֶחָד בְּסֶף שְׁבָעִים שֶׁקְלָבָן בְּשָׁקָל הַקְדָּש
שְׁנִיהם | מְלָאִים סְלַת בְּלוֹלָה בְּשָׁמֶן
לְמַנְחָה: ³⁸ כַּף אַחֲת עֲשָׂרָה זָהָב מְלָאָה קְטָרָת: ³⁹ פָּר אֶחָד בְּנֵבֶר אַיִל אֶחָד
בְּבָשָׂר-אֶחָד בְּנֵי-שָׁנָה לְעַלָּה: ⁴⁰ שְׁעִיר-עִזִּים
אֶחָד לְחַטָּאת: ⁴¹ וְלוֹזֵב הַשְּׁלָמִים בָּקָר
שְׁנִים אִילָם חַמְשָׁה עֲתָרִים חַמְשָׁה
בְּבָשִׂים בְּנֵי-שָׁנָה חַמְשָׁה זוֹה קָרְבָּן
שְׁלָמִיאָל בְּנֵצְוִירִישָׁדִי: פ

⁴² בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁשִׁי נָשִׂיא לְבָנִי גָּד אֶלְיָסָף
בְּנֵי-עֲוֹלָל: ⁴³ קָרְבָּנוֹ קָעָרָת-בְּסֶף אַחֲת
שְׁלָשִׁים וּמִאָה מִשְׁקָלָה מִזְרָק אֶחָד בְּסֶף
שְׁבָעִים שֶׁקְלָבָן בְּשָׁקָל הַקְדָּש שְׁנִיהם |
מְלָאִים סְלַת בְּלוֹלָה בְּשָׁמֶן לְמַנְחָה:
⁴⁴ כַּף אַחֲת עֲשָׂרָה זָהָב מְלָאָה קְטָרָת:
⁴⁵ פָּר אֶחָד בְּנֵבֶר אַיִל אֶחָד בְּבָשָׂר-אֶחָד
בְּנֵי-שָׁנָה לְעַלָּה: ⁴⁶ שְׁעִיר-עִזִּים אֶחָד
לְחַטָּאת: ⁴⁷ וְלוֹזֵב הַשְּׁלָמִים בָּקָר שְׁנִים
אִילָם חַמְשָׁה עֲתָרִים חַמְשָׁה בְּבָשִׂים
בְּנֵי-שָׁנָה חַמְשָׁה זוֹה קָרְבָּן אֶלְיָסָף בָּנ-דָּעָוָל: פ

⁴⁸ בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁבִּיעִי נָשִׂיא לְבָנִי אַפְרִים
אֶלְישָׁמָע בְּנֵעִמְיהּוֹ: ⁴⁹ קָרְבָּנוֹ קָעָרָת-
בְּסֶף אַחֲת שְׁלָשִׁים וּמִאָה מִשְׁקָלָה מִזְרָק
אֶחָד בְּסֶף שְׁבָעִים שֶׁקְלָבָן בְּשָׁקָל הַקְדָּש

weight, both filled with choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal offering;⁵⁰ one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense; ⁵¹ one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ⁵² one goat for a purgation offering; ⁵³ and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Elishama son of Ammihud.

⁵⁴On the eighth day, it was the chieftain of the Manassites, Gamaliel son of Pedahzur. ⁵⁵His offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary weight, both filled with choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal offering; ⁵⁶ one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense; ⁵⁷ one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ⁵⁸ one goat for a purgation offering; ⁵⁹ and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Gamaliel son of Pedahzur.

⁶⁰On the ninth day, it was the chieftain of the Benjaminites, Abidan son of Gideoni. ⁶¹His offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary weight, both filled with choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal offering; ⁶² one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense; ⁶³ one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ⁶⁴ one goat for a purgation offering; ⁶⁵ and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Abidan son of Gideoni.

⁶⁶On the tenth day, it was the chieftain of the Danites, Ahiezer son of Ammishaddai. ⁶⁷His offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary weight,

שְׁנֵיהֶם | מְלָאִים סֻלָּת בְּלוֹלָה בְּשֶׁמֶן לְמַנְחָה :⁵⁰ כַּפּ אַחֲת עַשְׂרֵה זָהָב מְלָאָה קָטְרָת :⁵¹ פָּר אַחֲד בְּן־בָּקָר אַיִל אַחֲד בְּבָשָׂר־אַחֲר בְּנֵשֶׁנְתָו לְעַלְה :⁵² שְׂעִיר־עַזִּים אַחֲד לְחַטָּאת :⁵³ וְלֹבֶח הַשְּׁלָמִים בָּקָר שְׁנֵיָם אַיִלָּם חַמְשָׁה עֲתָרִים חַמְשָׁה בְּבָשִׂים בְּנֵי־שָׁנָה חַמְשָׁה זָהָב קָרְבָּן אַלְיָשְׁמָע בְּנֵי־עֲמִידָה : פ

⁵⁴ בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁמִינִי נְשִׁיא לְבָנִי מְנַשָּׁה גַּמְלִיאָל בְּן־פְּדָחָצָר :⁵⁵ קָרְבָּנו קָעָרָת בְּסֶף אַחֲת שְׁלָשִׁים וּמִמְּאָה מְשֻׁקָּלָה מִזְרָק אַחֲד כְּסֶף שְׁבָעִים שֶׁקֵּל בְּשֶׁקֵּל הַקְּדָש שְׁנֵיהֶם | מְלָאִים סֻלָּת בְּלוֹלָה בְּשֶׁמֶן לְמַנְחָה :⁵⁶ כַּפּ אַחֲת עַשְׂרֵה זָהָב מְלָאָה קָטְרָת :⁵⁷ פָּר אַחֲד בְּן־בָּקָר אַיִל אַחֲד בְּבָשָׂר־אַחֲר בְּנֵשֶׁנְתָו לְעַלְה :⁵⁸ שְׂעִיר־עַזִּים אַחֲד לְחַטָּאת :⁵⁹ וְלֹבֶח הַשְּׁלָמִים בָּקָר שְׁנֵיָם אַיִלָּם חַמְשָׁה עֲתָרִים חַמְשָׁה בְּבָשִׂים בְּנֵי־שָׁנָה חַמְשָׁה זָהָב קָרְבָּן גַּמְלִיאָל בְּן־פְּדָחָצָר : פ

⁶⁰ בַּיּוֹם הַתְּשִׁיעִי נְשִׁיא לְבָנִי בְּנֵימָן אֲבִיכָן בְּנֵי־גָדָעָנִי :⁶¹ קָרְבָּנו קָעָרָת־כְּסֶף אַחֲת שְׁלָשִׁים וּמִמְּאָה מְשֻׁקָּלָה מִזְרָק אַחֲד כְּסֶף שְׁבָעִים שֶׁקֵּל בְּשֶׁקֵּל הַקְּדָש שְׁנֵיהֶם | מְלָאִים סֻלָּת בְּלוֹלָה בְּשֶׁמֶן לְמַנְחָה :⁶² כַּפּ אַחֲת עַשְׂרֵה זָהָב מְלָאָה קָטְרָת :⁶³ פָּר אַחֲד בְּן־בָּקָר אַיִל אַחֲד בְּבָשָׂר־אַחֲר בְּנֵשֶׁנְתָו לְעַלְה :⁶⁴ שְׂעִיר־עַזִּים אַחֲד לְחַטָּאת :⁶⁵ וְלֹבֶח הַשְּׁלָמִים בָּקָר שְׁנֵיָם אַיִלָּם חַמְשָׁה עֲתָרִים חַמְשָׁה בְּבָשִׂים בְּנֵי־שָׁנָה חַמְשָׁה זָהָב קָרְבָּן אֲבִיכָן בְּנֵי־גָדָעָנִי : פ

⁶⁶ בַּיּוֹם הַעֲשֵׂרִי נְשִׁיא לְבָנִי דָן אֲחִיעָזָר בְּנֵי־עֲמִימָשָׁד :⁶⁷ קָרְבָּנו קָעָרָת־כְּסֶף אַחֲת שְׁלָשִׁים וּמִמְּאָה מְשֻׁקָּלָה מִזְרָק אַחֲד כְּסֶף שְׁבָעִים שֶׁקֵּל בְּשֶׁקֵּל הַקְּדָש שְׁנֵיהֶם |

both filled with choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal offering;⁶⁸ one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense; ⁶⁹ one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ⁷⁰ one goat for a purgation offering; ⁷¹ and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Ahiezer son of Ammishaddai.

⁷²On the eleventh day, it was the chieftain of the Asherites, Pagiël son of Ochran. ⁷³His offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary weight, both filled with choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal offering; ⁷⁴ one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense; ⁷⁵ one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ⁷⁶ one goat for a purgation offering; ⁷⁷ and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Pagiël son of Ochran.

⁷⁸On the twelfth day, it was the chieftain of the Naphtalites, Ahira son of Enan. ⁷⁹His offering: one silver bowl weighing 130 shekels and one silver basin of 70 shekels by the sanctuary weight, both filled with choice flour with oil mixed in, for a meal offering; ⁸⁰ one gold ladle of 10 shekels, filled with incense; ⁸¹ one bull of the herd, one ram, and one lamb in its first year, for a burnt offering; ⁸² one goat for a purgation offering; ⁸³ and for his sacrifice of well-being: two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five yearling lambs. That was the offering of Ahira son of Enan.

⁸⁴This was the dedication offering for the altar from the chieftains of Israel upon its being anointed: silver bowls, 12; silver basins, 12; gold

מְלָאִים סְלָת בְּלוֹלָה בְּשָׁמֶן לְמַנְחָה: ⁶⁸ כִּי
אַחֲת עֲשָׂרָה זָהָב מְלָאָה קְטָרָת: ⁶⁹ פָּר
אֶחָד בְּנוֹבָר אֵיל אֶחָד בְּבָשָׂר אֶחָד בְּנָזֶ
שְׁנִתוֹ לְעַלָּה: ⁷⁰ שְׁעִיר-עִזִּים אֶחָד
לְחַטָּאת: ⁷¹ וְלֹזֶבֶח הַשְּׁלָמִים בָּקָר שְׁנִית
אֵילִם חַמְשָׁה עֲתָדִים חַמְשָׁה בְּבָשִׂים בְּנֵי
שְׁנָה חַמְשָׁה זֶה קָרְבָּן אֲחִישָׁר בְּנָ עֲמִירָשִׁדי: פ

⁷² בַּיּוֹם עֲשָׂתִי עָשָׂר יוֹם נִשְׁיא לְבָנִי אֲשֶׁר
פְּגֻעִיאָל בְּנֵי עֲבָרָן: ⁷³ קָרְבָּנו קְעִרְתִּיבָּסֶף
אַחֲת שְׁלָשִׁים וּמִאָה מְשָׁקָלָה מַזְרָק אֶחָד
בְּסֶף שְׁבָעִים שָׁקֵל בְּשֶׁקְלָל הַקְדָּש שְׁנִיהם
מְלָאִים סְלָת בְּלוֹלָה בְּשָׁמֶן לְמַנְחָה:
⁷⁴ כִּי אַחֲת עֲשָׂרָה זָהָב מְלָאָה קְטָרָת:
⁷⁵ פָּר אֶחָד בְּנוֹבָר אֵיל אֶחָד בְּבָשָׂר אֶחָד
בְּנוֹשְׁנִתוֹ לְעַלָּה: ⁷⁶ שְׁעִיר-עִזִּים אֶחָד
לְחַטָּאת: ⁷⁷ וְלֹזֶבֶח הַשְּׁלָמִים בָּקָר שְׁנִית
אֵילִם חַמְשָׁה עֲתָדִים חַמְשָׁה בְּבָשִׂים
בְּנֵי-שְׁנָה חַמְשָׁה זֶה קָרְבָּן פְּגֻעִיאָל בְּנָ עֲבָרָן: פ

⁷⁸ בַּיּוֹם שְׁנִים עָשָׂר יוֹם נִשְׁיא לְבָנִי נְפָתָלִי
אֲחִירָע בְּנֵי עֲיָנָן: ⁷⁹ קָרְבָּנו קְעִרְתִּיבָּסֶף
אַחֲת שְׁלָשִׁים וּמִאָה מְשָׁקָלָה מַזְרָק אֶחָד
בְּסֶף שְׁבָעִים שָׁקֵל בְּשֶׁקְלָל הַקְדָּש שְׁנִיהם
מְלָאִים סְלָת בְּלוֹלָה בְּשָׁמֶן לְמַנְחָה:
⁸⁰ כִּי אַחֲת עֲשָׂרָה זָהָב מְלָאָה קְטָרָת:
⁸¹ פָּר אֶחָד בְּנוֹבָר אֵיל אֶחָד בְּבָשָׂר אֶחָד
בְּנוֹשְׁנִתוֹ לְעַלָּה: ⁸² שְׁעִיר-עִזִּים אֶחָד
לְחַטָּאת: ⁸³ וְלֹזֶבֶח הַשְּׁלָמִים בָּקָר שְׁנִית
אֵילִם חַמְשָׁה עֲתָדִים חַמְשָׁה בְּבָשִׂים
בְּנֵי-שְׁנָה חַמְשָׁה זֶה קָרְבָּן אֲחִירָע בְּנָ עֲיָנָן: פ

⁸⁴ זוֹאת וְחַנְכָת הַמִּזְבֵּח בַּיּוֹם הַמִּשְׁח אֲתָה
מִאָה נְשִׁיאִי יִשְׂרָאֵל קְעִרְתִּיבָּסֶף שְׁתִים
עֲשָׂרָה מַזְרָק-בְּסֶף שְׁנִים עָשָׂר פְּפֹת זָהָב

ladles, 12.⁸⁵ Silver per bowl, 130; per basin, 70. Total silver of vessels, 2,400 sanctuary shekels.⁸⁶ The 12 gold ladles filled with incense—10 sanctuary shekels per ladle—total gold of the ladles, 120.

⁸⁷Total of herd animals for burnt offerings, 12 bulls; of rams, 12; of yearling lambs, 12—with their proper meal offerings; of goats for purgation offerings, 12.⁸⁸ Total of herd animals for sacrifices of well-being, 24 bulls; of rams, 60; of he-goats, 60; of yearling lambs, 60. That was the dedication offering for the altar after its anointing.

⁸⁹When Moses went into the Tent of Meeting to speak with [God], he would hear the Voice addressing him from above the cover that was on top of the Ark of the Pact between the two cherubim; thus [God] spoke to him.

שְׁתִים עֲשָׂרָה: ⁸⁵ שְׁלֹשִׁים וּמֵאָה הַקָּעֶרֶת
הַאֲחָת פֶּסֶף וּשְׁבָעִים הַמּוֹרֵק הַאֲחָד בְּלִ
פֶּסֶף הַבְּלִים אֶלְפִים וְאֶרְבַּעַם מֵאוֹת בְּשֶׂקֶל
הַקְדֵּשׁ: ⁸⁶ בְּפֶזֶת זָהָב שְׁתִים עֲשָׂרָה מֵלוֹאת
קְטֻרֶת עֲשָׂרָה עֲשָׂרָה הַכֶּפֶת בְּשֶׂקֶל הַקְדֵּשׁ
בְּלִזְהָב הַפְּטוּת עֲשָׂרָים וּמֵאָה:
⁸⁷ בְּלִי־בָּקָר לְעַלְלה שְׁנִים עָשָׂר פְּרִים
אַיִלִים שְׁנִים עָשָׂר בְּבָשָׂר בְּנִי־שְׁנָה שְׁנִים
עַשְׂרֵה וּמִנְחָתָם וּשְׁעִירִי עַזְבִּים שְׁנִים עָשָׂר
לְחַטָּאת: ⁸⁸ וְכָל בָּקָר וְזָבֵחַ הַשְּׁלָמִים
עֲשָׂרָים וְאֶרְבַּעַם פְּרִים אַיִלִים שְׁשִׁים
עַתְּדִים שְׁשִׁים בְּבָשָׂר בְּנִי־שְׁנָה שְׁשִׁים
זֹאת חֲנַכְתָּה הַמּוֹבֵחַ אַחֲרֵי הַמֶּשֶׁחַ אָתוֹ:

⁸⁹ וּבָבָא מֹשֶׁה אֶל־אַחֲלָיו מַזְעֵד לְדִבֶּר אָתוֹ
וַיְשִׁמְעוּ אֶת־הַקּוֹל מִדִּבֶּר אֱלֹהִים מִעַל
הַכְּפֹרֶת אֲשֶׁר עַל־אַרְן הַעֲלָת מִבֵּין שְׁנִים
הַכְּרָבִים וַיְדִיבֶר אֱלֹהִים: פ

CONCLUSION (7:89)

Although the parashah is concerned mostly with the sanctity of the community at large and with the individuals responsible for that sanctity, it concludes by describing a private moment between God and Moses. Whereas the moment appears intimate, the verse makes clear that even Moses stands at an appropriate distance from the Divine when he enters the Tabernacle's interior. Despite the promise in the Priestly Blessing that God's "face" will shine down upon Israel (see at 6:25), Moses' experience of revelation is purely auditory. Even Israel's greatest leader, the only one who elsewhere speaks to God face-to-face or mouth-to-mouth (Exodus 33:11; Numbers 12:8; Deuteronomy 34:10), listens in the Tent of Meeting to a disembodied voice emanating from above the cover of the Ark.

—Amy Kalmanofsky

Another View

NUMBERS 5:12–31 DESCRIBES the ordeal of the sotah, the so-called errant wife or “woman accused of adultery.” If a man suspects that his wife has been unfaithful but lacks proof, she is brought to the priest, who puts her through a magical trial or ordeal to ascertain her innocence or guilt. We are not told what brings about the husband’s “fit of jealousy” (v. 14) nor is the spell-induced outcome for the guilty wife plainly described. The text simply states: “if she has defiled herself by breaking faith with her husband . . . her belly shall distend and her thigh shall sag; and the wife shall become a curse among her people” (v. 27). However, if the woman is innocent, she will be “unharmed and able to retain seed” (v. 28). This verse provides the clue to the entire passage; it helps us understand why the husband suspects his wife in the first place, and how to interpret the symptoms that the guilty woman will suffer.

Verse 28 is best understood to mean that the innocent wife will be able to maintain her pregnancy. If so, then the context of the sotah ritual can be seen as involving a pregnant woman whose husband suspects that he is not the father. It is the husband’s distrust of the origin of his wife’s pregnancy that causes the “fit of jealousy.” Therefore, the central issue is paternity: if the wife is innocent and the husband is truly the unborn child’s father, then the fetus will grow to term. It follows, therefore, that if the wife is guilty and the

If the wife is guilty, then the fetus inside her will not grow to term.

husband is not the father, then the wife will not be able “to retain seed.” That is, the spell of the ordeal will induce a miscarriage: “if she has defiled herself by breaking faith with her husband . . . her belly shall distend and her thigh shall sag” (v. 27). Ultimately, regardless of how we today might assess paternity, in the biblical context an intact pregnancy after this ritual is sufficient proof that the husband had indeed fathered this child.

—Sharon Keller

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

When men or women individually commit any wrong (5:6). This is one of only a few places in the Torah where a woman is mentioned as committing a wrong and being punished for it. The Rabbis of the Talmud derive from this passage the principle that men and women are to be treated alike with regard to punishment for all kinds of misbehavior (BT Bava Kama 15a).

If any wife has gone astray (5:12). This passage speaks of a woman whom her husband accuses of adultery, even though he has insufficient evidence to convict her. The Rabbis later developed Numbers 5:11–31 into an entire tractate in the Talmud, called Sotah, “the errant wife.” It describes in detail the ordeal that she will endure, filling in much that the Torah does not mention, but also encasing this ritual in a set of rules that transform it into an unusual and infrequent event. According to Mishnah Sotah 1:1, only if a husband warns his wife in advance not to seclude herself with a particular man, and only if there are witnesses to the warning and to the act of seclusion, only then may he force her to go with him to the Temple. Since such a complex sequence of events is unlikely to happen, the chances of administering this degrading ritual decrease dramatically. The Rabbis also stipulate, based on close readings of the biblical verses, that the waters would test not only the woman suspected of infidelity but also her supposed partner. They add that if a jealous husband had himself committed adultery in the past, then the waters would not be able to harm his wife (BT Sotah 47b).

NASO

According to Mishnah Sotah 9:9, this ritual was abolished toward the end of the Second Temple period. [That mishnah attributes the suspension of the

Men and women are to be treated alike with regard to punishments.

ritual to Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai, who acted in light of a proliferation in adultery during that era. He cited the prophet Hosea to explain why it was no longer meaningful to accuse wives of unfaithfulness in an atmosphere of widespread dissipation: “I will not punish their daughters for fornicating / Nor their daughters-in-law for committing adultery; / For they themselves turn aside with whores / And sacrifice with prostitutes, / And a people that is without sense must stumble” (4:14). —Ed.] The Rabbis viewed the errant wife as a metaphor for the entire Jewish people, whose betrayal of God and divine commandments was understood to have led to the destruction of the Second Temple in 70 C.E.

If any... women explicitly utter a nazirite's vow (6:2). Since a female nazirite was required to bring the sacrifice, just like a male, the Torah implies that women owned and controlled property. Mishnah Nazir refers to two women who took nazirite vows: Miriam of Tadmor became a nazirite to pray for her sick daughter (6:11), and Queen Helena of Adiabene, a 1st-century-C.E. convert to Judaism, vowed to become a nazirite for seven years if her son returned safely from war (3:6). Josephus mentions the nazirite vow of Berenice of the Herodian royal family (Wars of the Jews 2, 15:1). Thus, we learn that becoming a nazirite in the rabbinic period was viewed as a way of prompting God to answer one’s prayers, often on behalf of family members in difficult circumstances. Clearly, these traditions presume that women chose this option when they found themselves in situations of personal duress.

Thus shall you bless the people of Israel (6:23). The three-fold priestly blessing appears immediately after a number of other topics, such as the sotah and the nazirite, that require the involvement of priests. Women could not serve as priests and hence did not utter this blessing. Although the verses that frame the blessing appear in the plural (6:23, 27), the words of the blessing themselves are all in the singular. The priest does not himself bless the people but serves as a vehicle for transmitting God’s blessing to them. According to the talmudic sources, the main venue for the recitation of the priestly blessing was the Temple in Jerusalem, until it was destroyed in 70 C.E. If recited in a communal context, the blessing is addressed to the entire congregation, men and women alike.

—Judith Hauptman

Contemporary Reflection

THE SOTAH RITUAL (5:ii–31), in which a man suspects his wife of adultery and subjects her to an ordeal, has been notoriously difficult for contemporary readers, especially from a feminist perspective. The unequal application of the ritual to women and not men, the lack of due process, the physical and emotional humiliation—all of these combine to make this passage a challenging place in which to find meaning.

As such, this passage keeps company with a number of other biblical texts that are problematic, even painful, to read. Rabbi Rebecca Alpert offers a valuable model for confronting such troubling teachings. In her book Like Bread on a Seder Plate: Jewish Lesbians and the Transformation of Tradition (1997), Alpert presents a number of approaches for dealing with traditional texts on homosexuality. She suggests that we can understand these texts by interpreting them in the context of their own time and place. We also can try to wrest new meaning from them, or we can simply acknowledge the pain that they have caused—and continue to cause. These approaches are not, of course, mutually exclusive, and they can apply also to this parashah.

Certainly in the case of the sotah, we can analyze it in light of its historical context. Comparing this passage with other ancient Near Eastern texts reveals it to be in keeping with other laws contemporary to Torah times.

In terms of the pain the passage has caused, we can easily imagine its effect on women thousands of years ago, but we ourselves are spared direct impact. Modern readers have long taken solace in the fact that this practice is no longer in force—and thus is far from the purview of synagogue ritual committees. In fact, it is unclear whether this ritual ever took place. Even in the Torah, the law is given without a connection to any particular incident. The Mishnah states that an early rabbinic leader discontinued the ritual of the sotah (Sotah 9:9). The entire body of rabbinic literature cites only one example of its implementation. Regarding the medieval period, a little-known fragment from the Cairo Geniza still gives instructions as to how to perform the ritual in one's neighborhood synagogue; but there too, no record has been found of anyone actually doing so. (For details, see Lisa Grushcow, Writing the Wayward Wife: Rabbinic Interpretations of Sotah, 2006, pp. 297–300.)

When we try to understand the sotah ritual in context, we can be relieved that it has not been implemented for at least two thousand years. But how can we wrest meaning from this difficult text? Interestingly, the very discontinuation of the ritual—and the rabbinic explanation of its abandonment—may give us a way to find meaning. The official suspension of the sotah ritual provides an example of how religious and legal change happens, and how such change is explained. For those of us who are committed to the Torah and also see Judaism as a path that embraces change, this is a crucial issue.

How does religious change happen, and how is it explained?

Some modern scholars assume that the ritual of the sotah disappeared because of the destruction of the Temple. Others argue that the ritual was abolished as a bold rabbinic move, to remove a practice that was seen to be unfair. But when one looks closely at the rabbinic texts, neither of these reasons is found. Rather, the explanation given is that things were getting worse—either more people were openly committing adultery, or more husbands were sinning in such a way that the sotah ritual did not then work on their wives. The Rabbis account for these and other examples of decline by claiming that the deaths of certain sages led to the disappearance of certain qualities from the world (see for example, Mishnah Sotah 9:9).

NASO

Thus, in these rabbinic texts, change results from a world that is getting worse. It is also worth noting that we find a similar outlook in the Greco-Roman world that surrounded the ancient rabbis. From that perspective, religious and legal changes were a response to moral, sexual, intellectual, or political collapse.

Coming back to the sotah ritual, then, it seems that our ancestors did not abolish the ritual because they found it morally objectionable. Instead, they used the best conceptual tools of their time to make sense of why change had happened, and those tools explained change as the product of decline.

Our modern paradigm, in contrast, is fundamentally based on the assumptions of science, the Enlightenment, and Emancipation: we believe that it is possible for humanity to make changes based on progress, not decline. The optimism of the Enlightenment has been tempered by the Holocaust and other tragedies of modern times, but the fundamental shift remains. For us, change can be positive, even holy. We believe that God continues to speak to us. Living in accordance with our new understandings of gender and sexual identity has enriched our clergy and communities. Living in a world more openly diverse has taught us the importance of outreach and inreach for our communities, in all their diversity. Scientific insights spur us to find new ethical and spiritual answers to questions of life and death. The existence of the modern state of Israel challenges us to live richer Jewish lives, wherever we are in the world. These changes and others are celebrated, not lamented as evidence of decline.

Ultimately, then, the sotah ritual is most powerful as a teacher of change: how we understood change in the past, and how we might understand it now. Just as the Rabbis of the Mishnah and Talmud used the best conceptual tools of their time to understand change, so must we—with the tools of our own time. Such an approach is not abandoning our tradition; it is being true to it.

The end of the Babylonian Talmud's tractate on sotah gives us a glimmer of possibility: some of our ancestors might also have had a different perspective on change and decline. Mishnah Sotah 9:9 ends with the statement that with the death of Rabbi Judah haNasi, humility and the fear of sin disappeared. In the Talmud's commentary, this statement is challenged. "Do not teach that humility is gone," says Rav Joseph, "for I am still here!" "Do not teach that the fear of sin is gone," says Rav Nachman, "for I am still here!" (BT Sotah 49b). Rav Nachman's self-proclaimed fear of sin—not to mention Rav Joseph's self-proclaimed humility—suggests that our ancestors, like ourselves, thought that they still had something to add.

—Lisa J. Grushcow

.
Voices
.

Precious Gifts

Anne Ebersman

Numbers 4:22

God tells Moses to take a census, literally, to raise the heads of the Levites. But aren't the Levites already weighed down? After all, their job is to carry the Tabernacle through the wilderness. From this we learn that the things that we carry—the things that weigh us down—actually raise us up. These are our most precious gifts.

How to Resist Temptation

Linda Stern Zisquit

Numbers 5:11–31

Read the notes from the morning's class on the Sota and the winds of folly that blow through the secret place where God is asked to vacate and no witness sees.
Don't mention it to a soul.
Try to imagine the ink in which all of his names are erased
and the swallowing
and the fumes that rise
through the mouth of flesh.
Then take a human step back.

I Am Accursed

Lisa Levine

Numbers 5:11–31

Accused out of jealousy
Humiliated and tormented
By the Priest of my people
What is this curse
Brought on by my husband?
I have done nothing
Nothing
Have I not always Served him well?
What is this bitter spell
Forced upon me in rage?
I drink of the potion
Hoping for death
Instead, I live,
To be tormented
Again

While Three Men Sit in the Next Room Discussing the Talmudic Tractate on How to Prove a Woman Adulterous

Linda Stern Zisquit

Numbers 5:11–31

Before the poison works its fever before the regrets begin and I melt in the shadow of their presence,
I'll treat them to a taste of sweet division and lock the remains in a vial
just as green.

NASO

Naso

Laurie Patton

Numbers 5:15–16

The rite is forgotten—
reviled and left behind like a dusty wrapping of a simpler antiquity—

Yet there are still those words:
offering and jealousy set against each other

jealousy—
the dark colors
of bitter water, hands holding grain
without the joys of incense—

offering—
an altar-like embrace, or Aaron's measured cubits—
the breastplates of ancestors loved and imagined
as simple and sincere—

we have wondered for millennia
how the exactitude of hate so closely mirrors
the exactitude of love:

And Your offering of jealousy—
Your gift of remembered wrongs—
only makes us wonder this with more precision

The Butcher's Wife

Shelley Savren

Numbers 5:15–31

The year was round with zeros, 1900, and they lived in a Lithuanian shtetl
where her garden smelled like roses and mint and she collected eggs each day from fifteen chickens to sell at the market stand.

Her husband was a butcher,
a moyl really, but who could make a living doing circumcisions?
He had a shop and knives, lots of knives.

A peddler came to the farm one day and showed her how to open her mouth and kiss. When he left,
she ran her tongue along the surface of her teeth and smiled.

It took three days for her husband to spill her confession.
Why else would a peddler spend a sunny afternoon at one farm?
So she fasted, a full week, as he ordered,
and scrubbed her mouth with soap.

She had no words that week.
Nothing passed between her lips.
But when she stepped into her garden her whole mouth blossomed like roses, like the taste of mint.

A Blessing

Leila Gal Berner

Numbers 6:22–27

May the Shechinah, the Holy Presence, that brings forth the female in the Divine, spread Her wings over you and protect you.
May Her light shine upon you with compassion,
And may Her countenance illumine your lives
With wholeness and peace.

Gifts

Jill Hammer

Numbers 7:10–11

Each of the twelve princes brought one silver bowl:
twelve shining moons for the months of the year,
twelve mirrors to reflect the spirit of each tribe.
The tribe of Judah brought, and Naftali and Zebulun, and Issachar and Dan and all the rest,
and the thirteenth gift,
brought to complete the thirteen moons of the seasons,
was brought by three daughters of the tribe of Dinah, Chushim, Woman-of-the-Senses, who married a son of Benjamin,
and her sister-wives Baara, Woman of Fire,
and Chodesh, Woman of the New Moon.

They brought a silver bowl,
to hold the flow of birth in its deep curve,
and a silver basin

to cradle life's end in its embrace.

They brought a cow of the herd, and a ewe, and a lamb

for an offering of community and kindness, and a she-goat for wiliness and persistence, and as a sacrifice to give thanks for their well-being,

they brought small shoes of children who had grown out of them.

They brought small gifts from all the men and women who were not princes and had no silver bowls, and piled them on the cow's back for her to carry proudly.

They brought water, and fire, and breath: the warmth of their bodies.

They presented their offering at night, when all the princes had gone home, but a heavenly scribe took note of them, and in the Torah, where the thirteenth offering should have appeared, wrote: "This was the dedication of the altar."

Chushim, Baara, and Chodesh never knew these words were written.

But they were the mothers of the world, and generations later, the secrets of the universe were taught in their honor.

NOTE

Chushim...Baara...Chodesh. Women who are mentioned in I Chronicles 8:8–9. Their names mean “feelings” (or “senses”), “fire,” and “moon” (or “renewal”), respectively. The final letters of Baara, Chushim, and Chodesh are alef, mem, and shin. The Sefer Ytzirah, an ancient work of Jewish mysticism, calls these letters the “three mothers of the universe.”

בְּהַעֲלֹתֶךָ ◆ B'haalot'cha

NUMBERS 8:1–12:16

The Journey from Sinai Begins

PARASHAT B'HAALOT'CHA ("when you bring up") chronicles, in three major units, the start of the Israelites' journey from Mount Sinai toward the Promised Land. The first unit (8:1–9:14) concerns the Tabernacle: its rituals, special laws regarding the Levites who serve in it, and the laws concerning the passover offering. It includes the purification and consecration of the Levites. It also addresses the situation of those who, because of being ritually impure, are unable to observe the passover offering at the right time; it institutes a substitute "second Passover" (pesach sheni), observed a month after the original due time of the passover offering (9:9–13).

The second unit (9:15–10:36) concentrates on the instructions for the traveling of the Israelites: the signals for moving ahead in the right direction and for making camp (the cloud and the trumpets). It concludes with the description of the first stage of the journey after leaving Sinai.

The third unit (Numbers 11–12) dramatically illustrates the discontent of certain Israelites who begin to challenge Moses (and, less directly, God) by their complaints on this first leg of the journey, and the divine punishments that follow as a consequence. An outstanding example is when, nostalgic for the plentitude left behind in Egypt, the people complain harshly about the lack of meat. Moses reacts with deep despair—to the point of asking to die rather than bear the burden of leadership. In response to his petition concerning the burden of bearing the people all by himself, God instructs him to gather representative elders of Israel and bestow some of his spirit upon them. This approach both shares the burden and demonstrates Moses' spiritual superiority. Paradoxically, however, Moses' authority is challenged by two of those elders (11:26–29) and then by his own siblings, Miriam and Aaron (12:1–2). In each of these episodes, Moses appears as a patient, caring, and extremely modest leader. While the narrator emphasizes his greatness and nobility, the people are presented as rebellious and ungrateful.

This parashah features an enigmatic and disturbing story about Miriam.

With regard to women, the parashah includes the enigmatic and disturbing story about Miriam. Moses' sibling complains against Moses' and his (new?) marriage to a "dark-skinned" (or "Cushite") woman (12:1). In her challenge, Miriam—together with her brother Aaron—attempts to claim equal footing with Moses as a prophet (12:2). God punishes Miriam—not Aaron—with a skin disease because of her complaints, and she recovers only due to Moses' intercessory prayer. Feminist interpreters often understand this story as an intended rebuke of a woman who aspires to a leadership role equal to a man's, reading it as prejudicial to women on a number of levels. As we will see below, it is also possible to read this account more sympathetically, as a case in which God sides with one maligned woman (Moses' wife) against a more powerful one (Miriam).

—Masha Turner

Outline

I. FINAL RITUAL PREPARATIONS (8:1–9:14)

- A. Lighting the lamps of the lampstand (8:1–4)
- B. Purifying, consecrating, and appointing the Levites (8:5–26)
- C. Celebrating the passover offering and adding a “Second Passover” (9:1–14)

II. THE ISRAELITES’ TRAVEL PROTOCOL (9:15–10:36)

- A. Planning the travel protocol (9:15–10:10)
- B. Leaving Sinai (10:11–28)
- C. Inviting Hobab to accompany Israel (10:29–32)
- D. Beginning the journey with the Ark (10:33–36)

III. ISRAELITE CHALLENGES TO MOSES AND GOD (11:1–12:16)

- A. Complaining (11:1–3)
- B. Craving meat (11:4–35)
- C. Criticizing Moses: Miriam, Aaron, and the Cushite woman (12:1–16)

8:1

יְהוָה spoke to Moses, saying: ²Speak to Aaron and say to him, “When you mount the lamps, let the seven lamps give light at the front of the lampstand.” ³Aaron did so; he mounted the lamps at the front of the lampstand, as I had commanded Moses.—⁴Now this is how the lampstand was made: it was hammered work of gold, hammered from base to petal. According to the pattern that I had shown Moses, so was the lampstand made.

יְהוָה spoke to Moses, saying: ⁵Take the Levites

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵي-מֹשֶׁה לֵאמֹר: ²דְּבָרָךְ אֲלֵאָהָרֹן וְאֶמְرָתְךָ אֲלֵיכֶם בְּהִעֱלָתְךָ אֶת-הַנְּרָתָא אֲלֵמוֹלֶךְ פָּנֵי הַמְנוֹרָה יִאֲרוּ שְׁבֻעָת הַגְּנָרוֹת: ³וַיַּעֲשֵׂה בֶן אֲהָרֹן אֲלֵמוֹלֶךְ פָּנֵי הַמְנוֹרָה הַעַלְלָה נְרָתִיקָה כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֲתִ-מֹּשֶׁה: ⁴וְזֹה מְعֵשָׂה הַמְנוֹרָה מְקַשָּׁה זָהָב עֲדִירָכָה עֲדִירָכָה מְקַשָּׁה הוּא פְּמַרְאָה אֲשֶׁר חֶרְאָה יְהוָה אֲתִ-מֹּשֶׁה בָּנֵן עַשְׂה אֲתִ-הַמְנוֹרָה: ⁵

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵי-מֹשֶׁה לֵאמֹר: ⁶קְחֵ אֶת-

Final Ritual Preparations (8:1–9:14)

The parashah opens with the final commands for the Israelites before they begin their journey away from Sinai. It includes rituals regarding the kindling of the menorah’s lamps, the purification of the Levites, and the passover sacrifice.

LIGHTING THE LAMPS OF THE LAMPSTAND (8:1–4)

Aaron is charged with lighting the menorah (see Exodus 27:21) and now does so. This completes the story of the Tabernacle’s erection and dedication and also concludes the story of the dedication offerings brought by Israelite chieftains at the conclusion of the previous parashah (Numbers 7), pointing out the unique “offering” that was presented by Aaron, the chieftain of Levi’s tribe. For descriptions of the lampstand and its function, see Exodus 25:31–40 and 37:17–24.

PURIFYING, CONSECRATING, AND APPOINTING THE LEVITES (8:5–26)

Even before this parashah, a number of passages have singled out the tribe of Levi (to which Moses and Aaron belong). In Exodus, the men of Levi zealously side with Moses following the incident of the Golden Calf, wreaking vengeance on the guilty parties (Exodus 32:26). Numbers 1:46–49, 2:33, and 3:15 make clear that the men of Levi are counted separately from the other tribes in the census since they have to be dedicated to God’s service by being appointed over the holy work in the Tabernacle (1:50–54).

6. Take the Levites from among the Israelites and purify them. Now the Levites are singled out

► At first, the story of snow-white Miriam seems a perfect example of a double standard.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 862

► For the caregiver, there is time only for truncated and hurried prayer.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 864

► Zipporah remarked that she felt pity for the wives of the prophesying elders.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 862

► Today I’m a hill, / Tomorrow a sea. / Wandering all day / Like Miriam’s well....

VOICES ► 866

from among the Israelites and purify them.⁷ This is what you shall do to them to purify them: sprinkle on them water of purification, and let them go over their whole body with a razor, and wash their clothes; thus they shall be purified.⁸ Let them take a bull of the herd, and with it a meal offering of choice flour with oil mixed in, and you take a second bull of the herd for a purgation offering.⁹ You shall bring the Levites forward before the Tent of Meeting. Assemble the Israelite community leadership,¹⁰ and bring the Levites forward before Yahweh. Let the Israelites lay their hands upon the Levites,¹¹ and let Aaron designate the Levites before as an elevation offering from the Israelites, that they may perform the service of Yahweh.¹² The Levites shall now lay their hands upon the heads of the bulls; one shall be offered to Yahweh as a purgation offering and the other as a burnt offering, to make expiation for the Levites.

¹³You shall place the Levites in attendance upon Aaron and his sons, and designate them as an elevation offering to Yahweh.¹⁴ Thus you shall set the Levites apart from the Israelites, and the Levites shall be Mine.¹⁵ Thereafter the Levites shall be qualified for the service of the Tent of Meeting, once you have purified them and designated them as an elevation offering.¹⁶ For they are formally assigned to Me from among the Israelites: I have taken them

הַלְוִיִּם מִתֹּוךְ בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְטֹהֻרָת אֲתֶם:
7 וְכֹה־תַעֲשָׂה לְהָמָלְטָרָם הַזֶּה עַלְיָהֶם
מִן חֶטְאת וְעַבְירָה תַעֲלֵם עַל־כָּל־בָּשָׂרֶם
וְכַבְשׂוּ בְגִדְיָהֶם וְהַטְהָרוּ: 8 וְלֹקַחׁוּ פָר בָּקָר
בָּקָר וּמְנַחָּה סְלָת בְּלוֹלָה בְשָׂמֵן וּפְרִשְׁנִים
בּוֹצְקָר תַקְחֵח לְחַטָּאת:⁹ 9 וְהַקְרְבָת אַתְּ
הַלְוִיִּם לִפְנֵי אֲחֵל מוֹעֵד וְהַקְרְבָת אַתְּכָלָל
עֲדָת בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל:¹⁰ 10 וְהַקְרְבָת אַתְּהַלְוִיִּם
לִפְנֵי יְהוָה וְסִמְכּוּ בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אַתְּיִדְיָהֶם
עַל־הַלְוִיִּים:¹¹ 11 וְהַנִּזְקֵךְ אַהֲרֹן אַתְּהַלְוִיִּם
תְּנוּפָה לִפְנֵי יְהוָה מִאֶת בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְהַיּוֹ
לְעָבֵד אַתְּעַבְנָת יְהוָה:¹² 12 וְהַלְוִיִּם יְסִמְכּוּ
אַתְּיִדְיָהֶם עַל רָאשׁ הַפְּרִים וּמְעַשֵּׂה אַתְּ
הַאֲחֵד חֶטְאת וְאַתְּהַאֲחֵד עַלְלָה לִיהְוָה
לְכַפֵּר עַל־הַלְוִיִּים:

¹³ וְהַעֲמַדְתָ אַתְהַלְוִיִּם לִפְנֵי אַהֲרֹן וּלִפְנֵי
בָנָיו וְהַנִּפְתַ אַתְם תְּנוּפָה לִיהְוָה:
¹⁴ וְהַבְדַלְת אַתְהַלְוִיִּם מִתֹּוךְ בָנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
וְהַיּוּ לִי הַלְוִיִּם:¹⁵ 15 וְאַחֲרֵיכֶן יָבֹאוּ הַלְוִיִּם
לְעָבֵד אַתְאֵל מוֹעֵד וְטֹהֻרָת אַתְם
וְהַנִּפְתַ אַתְם תְּנוּפָה:¹⁶ 16 בַּי נִתְבְּנִים נִתְבְּנִים
הַמֶּה לִי מִתֹּוךְ בָנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל תְּחִת פְּטָרָה

further, this time formally dedicated to God's service, such as by assisting the priests, the sons of Aaron. (For the purifying, consecrating, and appointing of Aaron and his sons as priests, see Exodus 28–29 and Leviticus 8.)

7–12. Moses is instructed to purify the Levites through a special ceremony.

9. community leadership. Literally, “the entire community”; this translation construes the word for community, edah, as referring here to a representative body made up of adult males. However the terms are parsed, the entire community is to formally bestow its agreement to accept the Levites as representing it before God; but practically speaking, only a part of the Israelites will lay their hands (v. 10) on the Levites.

13–20. The Levites are “set apart” as attendants to Aaron and his sons (the priests), and are themselves dedicated as an elevation offering before God. The Levites are further set apart as dedicated to God’s service, in lieu of the male first-born of each Israelite woman outside of the Levite tribe (8:16–17; see also at 3:12–13). As the parashah continues, it reiterates that each of the three levitical familial groupings—Gershonites, Kohathites, and Merarites (named for the grandfather and great-for Myself in place of all the first issue of the womb, of all the male first-born of the Israelites.¹⁷ For every male first-born among the Israelites, human as well as beast, is Mine; I consecrated them to Myself at the time that I smote every [male] first-born in the land of Egypt.¹⁸ Now I take the Levites instead of every male first-born of the Israelites;¹⁹ and from among the Israelites I formally assign the Levites to Aaron and his sons, to perform the service for the Israelites in the Tent of Meeting and to make expiation for the Israelites, so that no plague may afflict the Israelites for coming too near the sanctuary.

²⁰Moses, Aaron, and the Israelite community leadership did with the Levites accordingly; just as had commanded Moses in regard to the Levites, so the Israelites did with them.²¹The Levites purified themselves and washed their clothes; and Aaron designated them as an elevation offering before יהוה, and Aaron made expiation for them to purify them.²²Thereafter the Levites were qualified to perform their service in the Tent of Meeting, under Aaron and his sons. As had commanded Moses in regard to the Levites, so they did to them.

²³ יהוה spoke to Moses, saying:²⁴This is the rule for the Levites. From twenty-five years of age up they shall participate in the work force in the service of the Tent of Meeting,²⁵but at the age of fifty they shall retire from the work force and shall serve no more.²⁶They may assist their brother Levites at the Tent of Meeting by standing guard, but they uncles of Moses, Miriam, and Aaron) has its own task in the Tabernacle service and its own Tabernacle components to carry (10:17, 21; compare 3:23-39).

24. twenty-five years of age. The levitical service in Numbers 4:3, 23, and 30 begins at age 30. One way to reconcile the two versions is to consider that between the ages of 25 to 30, the Levites are to be trained and educated for their holy service.

כל-רְחָם בֶּכֹּר בֶּל מִבְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְקַחְתִּי אֶתְּתֶם לִי: ¹⁷ כִּי לִי כָּל-בְּכֹול בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּאָדָם וּבְבָהָמָה בַּיּוֹם הַפְּתִי כָּל-בְּכֹול בָּאָרֶץ מְצֻלִּים הַקְּדָשְׁתִּי אֶתְּתֶם לִי: ¹⁸ וְאַקְח אֲתִ-הְלָלוֹם תַּחַת כָּל-בְּכֹור בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ¹⁹ וְאַתְּנָה אֲתִ-הְלָלוֹם נְתַנְנִים | לְאַהֲרֹן וְלִבְנֵיו מִתּוֹךְ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְעָבֵד אֲתִ-עֲבָדָת בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד וְלִכְפֵּר עַל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְלֹא יְהֹוָה בְּבּוֹנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל נָגַף בְּגַשְׁת בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶל-הַקָּדֵש: ²⁰ וַיַּעֲשֶׂה מֹשֶׁה וְאַהֲרֹן וּכְל-עֲדָת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְלִוּיִם כָּל אֲשֶׁר-צָוָה יְהֹוָה אֲתִ-מְשָׁה לְלִוּיִם כְּנַעַשׂ לְהֶם בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ²¹ וַיִּתְחַטְּאוּ הָלּוּיִם וַיַּכְבְּסָוּ בְגָדָיוּם וְלֹא אַהֲרֹן אֶתְּתֶם תַּנְפִּיחַ לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה וַיִּכְפֵּר עַל-הָלּוּיִם אַהֲרֹן לְטַהֳרָם: ²² וְאַחֲרֵיכֶן בְּאוּ הָלּוּיִם לְעָבֵד אֲתִ-עֲבָדָת בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד לִפְנֵי אַהֲרֹן וּלְפָנֵי בְנֵי קָאשָׁר צָוָה יְהֹוָה אֲתִ-מְשָׁה עַל-הָלּוּיִם כִּן עָשָׂו לְהֶם: ס

²³ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֶל-מֹשֶׁה לְאָמֹר: ²⁴ זֹאת אֲשֶׁר לְלִוּיִם מִבְּנֵי חֶמֶשׁ וּשְׁנָרִים שָׁנָה וּמִלְּלָה יְבוֹא לְצָבָא צָבָא בְּעַבְרַת אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד: ²⁵ וּמִבְּנֵי חֶמֶשׁ שָׁנָה יִשְׁׁוּב מִצָּבָא הַעֲבָדָה וְלֹא יַعֲבֹד עוֹד: ²⁶ וְשָׁלַת אֲתִ-אָחִיו בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד לְשִׁמְרָת מִשְׁמָרָת

8:24. participate... work force. Forms of the Hebrew word tzava appear twice in this verse (and again once in the next verse). In the context of the Levites, tzava means to fulfill a duty or to undertake a task. [Similar forms of the word also appear twice in Exodus when referring to women “who performed tasks at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting”; see at Exodus 38:8. —Ed.]

shall perform no labor. Thus you shall deal with the Levites in regard to their duties.

ועבדה לא יעבד בכה תעשה ללוים
במשרתם: פ

9 יהוה spoke to Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, on the first new moon of the second year following the exodus from the land of Egypt, saying: ²Let the Israelite people offer the passover sacrifice at its set time: ³you shall offer it on the fourteenth day of this month, at twilight, at its set time; you shall offer it in accordance with all its rules and rites.

⁴Moses instructed the Israelites to offer the passover sacrifice; ⁵and they offered the passover sacrifice in the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, at twilight, in the wilderness of Sinai. Just as had commanded Moses, so the Israelites did.

⁶But there were some householders who were impure by reason of a corpse and could not offer the passover sacrifice on that day. Appearing that same day before Moses and Aaron, ⁷those householders said to them, “Impure though we are by

וידבר יהוה אל-משה במדבר-טיין בשנה השניה לצאדם מארץ מצרים
בחזרה הראשון לאמר: ² ויעשו בני-ישראל את-הפסח בموעדו: ³ בארבעה
עשר-יום בחזרה הוה בין העربים תעשו
אתו במועדו בכל-חיקתו ובכל-משפטיו
תעשה אותו:

⁴ וידבר משה אל-בני ישראל לעשת
הפסח: ⁵ ויעשו את-הפסח בראשון
בארבעה עשר יום לחזרה בין העARBIM
במקבר סיני כל אשר צוה יהוה את-

משה כן עשו בני ישראל:
⁶ ויהי אנשיים אשר היו טמאים לנפש
אלים ולא-יכלו לעשת-הפסח ביום ההוא ויקרבו לפניהם משה ולפניהם אהרן ביום
ההוא: ⁷ ויאמרו האנשים ההמה אליו:

CELEBRATING THE PASSOVER OFFERING AND ADDING A “SECOND PASSOVER”
(9:1–14)

This section records an existential problem addressed to Moses, namely, the fact that it is impossible for some Israelites to be ritually pure in time for the passover sacrifice. The section concludes with a legal mandate from God, instituting a second opportunity for the people to observe the passover offering a month later. This legal mandate widens to include also Israelite householders (and perhaps others) who happen to be distant from the Tabernacle and are unable to perform the passover offering at the right time. We find four other cases in the Torah when a query prompts a new law: the case of the blasphemer (Leviticus 24:10–16); the case of the man gathering sticks on the Sabbath (Numbers 15:32–36); and twice, the case of the daughters of Zelophehad, namely Mahlah, Milcah, Noah, Hoglah, and Tirzah (see at 27:1–11 and 36:1–12).

6. householders. The original passover offering was arranged by household (Exodus 12:3), which is the basic unit of Israelite society. This translation presumes that it is a household's head who would normally “present” the passover sacrifice (v. 7) on behalf of the household, before sharing it with all of its members. (Presumably householders were males, a fact that would go without saying.) It is also possible that the group in question was composed of other impure individuals, women and men, not specifically householders.

7–8. Moses brings the problem before God: what to do when ritual impurity bars an Israelite (who is commanded to carry out a passover sacrifice) from making the sacrifice at the designated time?

reason of a corpse, why must we be debarred from presenting Yahweh's offering at its set time with the rest of the Israelites?"⁸ Moses said to them, "Stand by, and let me hear what instructions Yahweh gives about you."

⁹ And Yahweh spoke to Moses, saying: ¹⁰ Speak to the Israelite people, saying: When any of you or of your posterity who are defiled by a corpse or are on a long journey would offer a passover sacrifice to Yahweh—¹¹ they shall offer it in the second month, on the fourteenth day of the month, at twilight. They shall eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs,¹² and they shall not leave any of it over until morning. They shall not break a bone of it. They shall offer it in strict accord with the law of the passover sacrifice.¹³ But if a householder who is pure and not on a journey refrains from offering the passover sacrifice, that person shall be cut off from kin, for Yahweh's offering was not presented at its set time; that householder shall bear the guilt.

¹⁴ And when a stranger who resides with you would offer a passover sacrifice to Yahweh, it must be offered in accordance with the rules and rites of the passover sacrifice. There shall be one law for you, whether stranger or citizen of the country.

¹⁵ On the day that the Tabernacle was set up, the cloud covered the Tabernacle, the Tent of the Pact;

ii. God mandates that those unable to observe the Passover ritual at the designated time, on the fourteenth day of the first month, offer their sacrifice a month later, on the fourteenth of the following month.

[This option of an alternative passover offering a month later (what the Rabbis called "Second Passover" or pesach sheni) illustrates a capacity to modify time-bound obligations on account of certain circumstances. One wonders whether this precedence and flexibility could also apply when women were ritually impure because of childbirth or menstruation. However, there is no mention of such modifications regarding women. —Ed.]

אָנֹחַנוּ טְמֵאִים לְנֶפֶשׁ אָדָם לְמֵה נִגְרָע
לְבָלְתִי הַקָּרֵיב אֲתִ-קְרָבֵן יְהוָה בְּמַעַדְךָ
בְּתוֹךְ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁸ וַיֹּאמֶר אֱלֹהֶם מֹשֶׁה עַמְּךָ וְאַשְׁמָעָה מִה-זִקְוָה יְהוָה
לְכֶם: ⁹

וַיֹּדְבֵּר יְהוָה אֶל-מֹשֶׁה לֵאמֹר: ¹⁰ דָבָר
אֶל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאמֹר אִישׁ כִּי-יִהִי
טְמֵא וְלְנֶפֶשׁ אוֹ בָּדָרֶךְ רְחַקָּה לְכֶם אוֹ
לְדָרְתֵיכֶם וְעַשֶּׂה פֵסֶחׂ לְיְהוָה: ¹¹ בְּחַדְשָׁ
הַשְׁנִי בְּאַרְכָּבָה עָשָׂר מְצֻוֹת וּמְרֻרוֹת יַאכְלָהוּ:
יַעֲשֶׂו אֶתְנוֹ עַל-מְצֹוֹת וּמְרֻרוֹת יַאכְלָהוּ:
¹² לְאִנְשָׁאֵרוּ מִמְּנוֹ עַד-בָּקָר וְעַצְם לְאָ
יְשָׁבְרוּ-בוּ בְּכָל-חֲקַת הַפֵּסֶחׂ יַעֲשֶׂו אֶתְנוֹ:
¹³ וְהַאֲיָשׁ אֲשֶׁר-הָווֹ טָהוֹר וּבָדָרֶךְ לְאִ-חִיָּה
וּחְדֵל לְעַשׂוֹת הַפֵּסֶחׂ וּנְכַרְתָּה הַנֶּפֶשׁ הַהּוּא
מִעַמְּיךָ כִּי קָרְבֵּן יְהוָה לֹא הַקָּרֵיב בְּמַעַדְךָ
חַטָּאוֹ וְשָׁא הָאִישׁ הַהּוּא:

¹⁴ וְכִי-יָגֹר אַתֶּכָם גָּר וְעַשֶּׂה פֵסֶחׂ
לְיְהוָה בְּחַקְתָּה הַפֵּסֶחׂ וּכְמִשְׁפָטוֹ כִּי יַעֲשֶׂה
חֲקָה אַתָּה וְיִהְיֶה לְכֶם וְלְגָר וְלְאַזְרָח
הָאָרֶץ: ¹⁵

וּבְיוֹם הַקִּים אֲתִיהָמִשְׁבֵּן בְּסֵה הַעֲנָן
אֲתִיהָמִשְׁבֵּן לְאַהֲלֵי הַעֲדָת וּבְעַרְבֵּי יְהִיָּה

14. There shall be one law for you, whether stranger or citizen of the country. This rule applies specifically to observing Passover but can be interpreted as a general principle that applies in other cases as well.

The Israelites' Travel Protocol (9:15–10:36)

The Israelites' long journey from Egypt to Canaan is full of starts and stops (see 33:1–49). Unlike conventional journeys, in which travel is dictated by constraints of geography, climate, and and in the evening it rested over the Tabernacle in the likeness of fire until morning.¹⁶ It was always so: the cloud covered it, appearing as fire by night.¹⁷ And whenever the cloud lifted from the Tent, the Israelites would set out accordingly; and at the spot where the cloud settled, there the Israelites would make camp.¹⁸ At a command of יהוה the Israelites broke camp, and at a command of יהוה they made camp: they remained encamped as long as the cloud stayed over the Tabernacle.¹⁹ When the cloud lingered over the Tabernacle many days, the Israelites observed יהוה's mandate and did not journey on.²⁰ At such times as the cloud rested over the Tabernacle for but a few days, they remained encamped at a command of יהוה, and broke camp at a command of יהוה.²¹ And at such times as the cloud stayed from evening until morning, they broke camp as soon as the cloud lifted in the morning. Day or night, whenever the cloud lifted, they would break camp.²² Whether it was two days or a month or a year—however long the cloud lingered over the Tabernacle—the Israelites remained encamped and did not set out; only when it lifted did they break camp.²³ On a sign from יהוה they made camp and on a sign from יהוה they broke camp; they observed יהוה's mandate at יהוה's bidding through Moses.

10 יהוה spoke to Moses, saying:² Have two silver trumpets made; make them of hammered work. They shall serve you to summon [military bodies of] the community and to set the divisions in motion.³ When both are blown in long blasts, security, the Israelites' journey is directed supernaturally. This unit provides instructions for the journey.

PLANNING THE TRAVEL PROTOCOL (9:15–10:10)

God has led the people by means of a cloud by

על-המשכן במראה-אש עד-בקר: ¹⁶ בן יהיה תמיד הענן יכסנו ומראה-אש לילה: ¹⁷ ולפי הלוות הענן מעל האהן ואחריו בן יסעו בני ישראל ובמקום אשר ישכון-שם הענן שם יחנו בני ישראל: ¹⁸ על-פי יהוה יסעו בני ישראל ועל-פי יהוה יחנו כל-ימי אשר ישכון הענן על-המשכן יחנו: ¹⁹ ובהריך הענן על-המשכן ימים רבים ושמרו בני-ישראל את-משמרת יהוה ולא יסעו: ²⁰ ויש אשר יהיה הענן ימים מספר על-המשכן על-פי יהוה יחנו ועל-פי יהוה יסעו: ²¹ ויש אשר יהי הענן מערב עד-בקר ונעה אשר יהי הענן בקר ונסעו או יומם ולילה ונעה אשר יהי הענן ונסעו: ²² איזיים אוחזש איזיים בהריך הענן על-המשכן לשבע עליו יחנו בני-ישראל ולא יסעו ובהעלו יסעו: ²³ על-פי יהוה יחנו ועל-פי יהוה יסעו את-משמרת יהוה שמרו על-פי יהוה ביד-משה: פ

וירבר יהוה אל-משה לאמר: ² עשה לך שני חוצרות בפט מקשה תעשה אתם והיו לך למקרא העדה ולמפע את-המנחות: ³ ותקעו בהן ונעדו אליך כל-

day and a pillar of fire by night, both of which traveled before the camp (Exodus 13:21–22). Here we learn that the cloud's coming to a halt and resting over the Tabernacle signals that they must encamp (9:17–23).

18. At a command of יהוה. God alone determines the duration of their travel and encampment, as well as the direction of their travel.

the whole company [of fighters] shall assemble before you at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting; ⁴and if only one is blown, the chieftains, heads of Israel's contingents, shall assemble before you. ⁵But when you sound short blasts, the divisions encamped on the east shall move forward; ⁶and when you sound short blasts a second time, those encamped on the south shall move forward. Thus short blasts shall be blown for setting them in motion, ⁷while to convoke [military bodies of] the congregation you shall blow long blasts, not short ones. ⁸The trumpets shall be blown by Aaron's sons, the priests; they shall be for you an institution for all time throughout the ages.

⁹When you are at war in your land against an aggressor who attacks you, you shall sound short blasts on the trumpets, that you may be remembered before your God יְהוָה and be delivered from your enemies. ¹⁰And on your joyous occasions—your fixed festivals and new moon days—you shall sound the trumpets over your burnt offerings and your sacrifices of well-being. They shall be a reminder of you before your God: I, יְהוָה, am your God.

¹¹In the second year, on the twentieth day of the second month, the cloud lifted from the Tabernacle of the Pact ¹²and the Israelites set out on their journeys from the wilderness of Sinai. The cloud came to rest in the wilderness of Paran.

¹³When the march was to begin, at יְהוָה's command through Moses, ¹⁴the first standard to set out, troop by troop, was the division of Judah. In com-

הַעֲדָה אֶל-פִּתְחָה אֶذְלָל מוֹעֵד: ⁴ וְאֶם-בְּאַחַת יִתְקֻעוּ וְנוֹעֲדוּ אֶל-יְלִיק הַגְּשִׁיאִים רָאשֵׁי אֶלְפִּי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁵ וְתַקְעִתֶּם תְּרוּעָה וְנִסְעָה הַמְּחֻנּוֹת הַחֲנִים קְרֻמָּה: ⁶ וְתַקְעִתֶּם תְּרוּעָה שְׁנִית וְנִסְעָה הַמְּחֻנּוֹת הַחֲנִים תִּמְנָה תְּרוּעָה יִתְקֻעוּ לְמַסְעֵיהֶם: ⁷ וּבְהַקְהִיל אֶת-הַקְהִל תַּתְקֻעוּ וְלֹא תַּרְיעָו: ⁸ וּבְנֵי אַהֲרֹן הַפְּהָנִים יִתְקֻעוּ בְּחַצְצָרוֹת וְהִיוּ לְכֶם לְחַקָּת עָלָם לְדָרְתֵיכֶם:

⁹ וְכִי-תָבֹאו מִלְחָמָה בְּאֶרְצְכֶם עַל-הָצָל הַצָּרֵר אֶתְכֶם וְהַרְעָתֶם בְּחַצְצָרוֹת וְנוֹזְבָרָתֶם לְפָנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וְנוֹשְׁעָתֶם מְאֹזְבָיכֶם: ¹⁰ וּבְלָוֶם שְׁמַחְתֶּכֶם וּבְמוֹעֵדֶיךָם וּבְרָאשֵׁי חֶדְשָׁכֶם וְתַקְעִתֶּם בְּחַצְצָרוֹת עַל עַלְתֵיכֶם וּלְעַל זְבוֹחֵי שְׁלֹמִיכֶם וְהַזְּבֹחֵל כֶּם לִזְבֹּחַ לְפָנֵי אֱלֹהֵיכֶם אֱנִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם: ב

¹¹ וַיְהִי בָשָׁנָה הַשְׁנִית בְּחֶדֶש הַשְׁנִי בְּשָׁרִים בְּחֶדֶש נִעְלָה הַעֲנָן מֵעַל מִשְׁבֵן הַעֲדָה: ¹² וַיֵּצֵא בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְמַסְעֵיהם מִמִּדְבָּר סִינְיָה וַיָּשִׁבּוּ הַעֲנָן בְּמִדְבָּר פָּארָן:

¹³ וַיֵּסֹעַ בְּרָאשָׁנָה עַל-פִּי יְהוָה בְּיַד-מֹשֶׁה: ¹⁴ וַיַּטְעַ דָּגֵל מִחְנָה בְּנֵי יִהוָה בְּרָאשָׁנָה

LEAVING SINAI (10:11–28)

Previously, all the details of the travel protocol were theoretical; now, they are going to be applied. The Torah recounts this first journey from Sinai with great pomp by describing the rank and file of the tribes and the transportation of the Tabernacle. The arrangement of the tribes reflects the status of the tribal ancestors' mothers, namely Leah, Rachel, Bilhah, and Zilpah. (See also B'midbar, Another View, p. 808.)

12. Finally, after all the detailed preparations, the Israelites embark from Sinai for the first time.

14. The first three tribes to embark on the journey are descended from three of the sons of Leah: Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun.

mand of its troops was Nahshon son of Amminadab;¹⁵ in command of the tribal troop of Issachar, Nethanel son of Zuar;¹⁶ and in command of the tribal troop of Zebulun, Eliab son of Helon.

¹⁷Then the Tabernacle would be taken apart; and the Gershonites and the Merarites, who carried the Tabernacle, would set out.

¹⁸The next standard to set out, troop by troop, was the division of Reuben. In command of its troop was Elizur son of Shedeur;¹⁹ in command of the tribal troop of Simeon, Shelumiel son of Zuri-shaddai;²⁰ and in command of the tribal troop of Gad, Eliasaph son of Deuel.

²¹Then the Kohathites, who carried the sacred objects, would set out; and by the time they arrived, the Tabernacle would be set up again.

²²The next standard to set out, troop by troop, was the division of Ephraim. In command of its troop was Elishama son of Ammihud;²³ in command of the tribal troop of Manasseh, Gamaliel son of Pedahzur;²⁴ and in command of the tribal troop of Benjamin, Abidan son of Gideoni.

²⁵Then, as the rear guard of all the divisions, the standard of the division of Dan would set out, troop by troop. In command of its troop was Ahiezer son of Ammishaddai;²⁶ in command of the tribal troop of Asher, Pagiel son of Ochran;²⁷ and in command of the tribal troop of Naphtali, Ahira son of Enan.

²⁸Such was the order of march of the Israelites, as they marched troop by troop.

17. The first group is followed by the dismantled Tabernacle, borne by the levitical clans of Gershon and Merari.

18. The next group that sets out are the tribes of Reuben, Simeon, and Gad, who are descendants of Leah and her maid Zilpah.

21. The sons of the levitical clan of Kohath follow with the well-covered Tabernacle vessels. Since they travel behind the Gershonites and Merar-ites, who carry the dismantled Tabernacle, the latter can fully set up the Tabernacle at each site by the time the Kohathites arrive to place the holy vessels inside it.

22. After the Kohathites, the group that sets out are the tribes of Rachel: Ephraim, Manasseh, and Benjamin.

25–27. The tribes of Dan, Asher, and Naphtali—the offspring of Bilhah and Zilpah—are last.

²⁹Moses said to Hobab son of Reuel the Midianite, Moses' father-in-law, “We are setting out for the place of which יְהוָה has said, ‘I will give it to you.’ Come with us and we will be generous with you; for יְהוָה has promised to be generous to Israel.”

³⁰“I will not go,” he replied to him, “but will return to my native land.” ³¹He said, “Please do not leave us, inasmuch as you know where we should camp in the wilderness and can be our guide. ³²So if you come with us, we will extend to you the same bounty that יְהוָה grants us.”

³³They marched from the mountain of יְהוָה a distance of three days. The Ark of the Covenant of יְהוָה traveled in front of them on that three days' journey to seek out a resting place for them; ³⁴and יְהוָה's cloud kept above them by day, as they moved on from camp.

³⁵When the Ark was to set out, Moses would say:

וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה לְחִבּ בְּנֵרְעֹאֵל הַמִּדְיָנִי חֲתָן מֹשֶׁה נְסֻעִים | אָנוּחָנוּ אֶל-הַמִּקְומָם אֲשֶׁר אָמַר יְהוָה אָתָּה אָתָּה לְכָה אַתָּנוּ וְהַטְבָּנוּ לְךָ כִּי יְהוָה דָבָר טוֹב עַל-יִשְׂרָאֵל:
וַיֹּאמֶר אֶלְיוֹ לֹא אֶלְךָ בַּי אֶמְּאַל-אַרְצִי וְאֶל-מוֹלְדָתִי אֶלְךָ³¹: וַיֹּאמֶר אֶל-נָא תַעֲזֹב אַתָּנוּ בַּי | עַל-כֵּן יַדְעַת חֲנַתָּנוּ בַמִּדְבָּר וְהִנִּיתְךָ לְעַיְנִים:³² וְהִנֵּה כִּי-תַלְגֵּעַ עַמְּנוּ וְהִנֵּה | הַטוֹּב הַהּוּא אֲשֶׁר יַטִּיב יְהוָה עַמְּנוּ וְהַטְבָּנוּ לְךָ:

וַיָּסֹעַ מִקְרָב יְהוָה דֶּרֶךְ שֶׁלֶשֶׁת יָמִים וְאַרְוֹן בְּרִית-יְהוָה נִסְעָה לְפָנֵיכֶם דֶּרֶךְ שֶׁלֶשֶׁת יָמִים לְתוֹר לְהֵם מִנוּחָה:
וְעַנְןִי יְהוָה עַל-יְהָם יוֹמָם בְּנֶסֶעֶם מִן-הַמְּחִנָּה:³³

וְיָהִי בְּנֶסֶעֶם הַאֲרֹן וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה

INVITING HOBAB TO ACCOMPANY ISRAEL (10:29–32)

Amid all the details of the journey, the Torah weaves in a human interest story. Here, Moses addresses Hobab the Midianite, who until now has been staying with the Israelites in the Sinai wilderness—asking him to accompany them on their continuing journey to the Land of Israel.

29. Hobab son of Reuel the Midianite, Moses' father-in-law. Hobab is either another name for Moses' father-in-law, Jethro (father of Zipporah), or perhaps Moses' brother-in-law. [Either way, it remains unclear what happens to Zipporah, Moses' wife. In Exodus 18, Jethro brings his daughter back to Moses, along with “her two sons” (see Exodus 18:6); presumably these are also Moses' children. The soon-to-be-mentioned controversy about Moses' wife (Numbers 12) makes this question all the more pressing. —Ed.]

32. Though the dialogue between them seems incomplete, we can learn from Moses' request how strongly he wishes Hobab to accompany Israel, and how convinced he is of the great goodness promised by God that await the Israelites upon their arrival in the land.

BEGINNING THE JOURNEY WITH THE ARK (10:33–36)

While the cloud leads the way before the people, thereby giving expression to God's constant accompaniment of Israel, the Ark symbolizes God's intimate presence among the people (see also Exodus 25:22), as well as God's role in protecting and defending them.

33. traveled in front of them. Whereas vv. 17–21 describe the Tabernacle as traveling with the camp, this passage depicts the Ark as traveling ahead of the camp.

35–36. Jewish tradition has woven these verses containing Moses' two prayers into the liturgy of the Torah service, often before and after the Torah reading.

Advance, O יהוה!

May Your enemies be scattered,
And may Your foes flee before You!

³⁶And when it halted, he would say:

Return, O יהוה,

You who are Israel's myriads of thousands!

11 The people took to complaining bitterly before יהוה. יהוה heard and was incensed: a fire of יהוה broke out against them, ravaging the outskirts of the camp. 2The people cried out to Moses. Moses prayed to יהוה, and the fire died down. 3That place was named Taberah, because a fire of יהוה had broken out against them.

4The riffraff in their midst felt a gluttonous craving; and then the Israelites wept and said, “If only we had meat to eat! 5We remember the fish

קומה | יהוה
ויפצז איביך
וינסו משנאיך מפניך:
³⁶ ובנהה ובנהו יאמר
שובה יהוה

רבבות אלפי ישראל: ז פ

יא ויהי העם במתאננים רע באזני יהוה
וישמע יהוה ויתחר אפו ותבער-בם אש
יהוה ותאכל בקצת המלחנה: ² ויצעק
העם אל-משה ויתפלל משה אל-יהוה ותשׁקע האש: ³ ויקרא שם-המקום ההוא
תבערה ביבערה כם אש יהוה:
4 והאפסף אשר בקרבו התאויה פאה
וישבו ויבכו גם בני ישראל ויאמרו מי
יאכלנובשר: ⁵ זכרנו את-הՃגה אשר-

Israelite Challenges to Moses and God (11:1–12:16)

This unit describes three major challenges to Moses and God. In all three cases, fixed elements appear in a similar order: the sin of the people (or a group among the people); God's punishment; a petition to Moses requesting that the punishment be removed; Moses' prayer; the punishment's termination; and the naming of the site after the episode that occurred there.

COMPLAINING (11:1–3)

This first tale of woe—the incident at Taberah—is exceedingly concise (three verses), yet it comprises an entire story. Despite its brevity, this episode is instructive in its content and can serve as a good introduction to all three challenges in this parashah; it contains all of the fixed elements described above.

1. The people took to complaining. This passage does not indicate what the people complained about. By not making the content of the complaint clear within these verses, the story of the incident at Taberah suggests that their sin was in the very act of complaining.

3. Taberah. Heb. “fire.” The site receives its name because of the divine wrathful fire that burns there as a consequence of the people’s complaint.

CRAVING MEAT (11:4–35)

This story is more complex and developed than the tale of the complainers (11:1–3), and its plot has more twists. In contrast to the previous episode, here the people’s sin is specified: they crave meat. Moses, in anguish, places his two problems before God. How is he to carry all these people whom he did not produce? Where will he get meat to feed them? These two questions shape the structure and development of the story. God responds by commissioning seventy representative elders to help Moses and by providing meat.

4. “If only we had meat to eat!” This statement—literally “Who shall give us meat to eat?”—alludes to the people’s lack of faith in God’s will and ability to provide them with meat (compare Exodus 17:7).

that we used to eat free in Egypt, the cucumbers, the melons, the leeks, the onions, and the garlic. ⁶Now our gullets are shriveled. There is nothing at all! Nothing but this manna to look to!"

⁷Now the manna was like coriander seed, and in color it was like bdellium. ⁸The people would go about and gather it, grind it between millstones or pound it in a mortar, boil it in a pot, and make it into cakes. It tasted like rich cream. ⁹When the dew fell on the camp at night, the manna would fall upon it.

¹⁰Moses heard the people weeping, every clan apart, at the entrance of each tent. יהוה was very angry, and Moses was distressed. ¹¹And Moses said to יהוה, "Why have You dealt ill with Your servant, and why have I not enjoyed Your favor, that You have laid the burden of all this people upon me? ¹²Did I produce all this people, did I engender them, that You should say to me, 'Carry them in your bosom as a caretaker carries an infant,' to the land that You have promised on oath to their fa-

נאכל במערדים חנָם את הקְשָׁאִים ואת האַבְטָחִים

ואת החֲצִיר ואת הבְּצָלִים

ואת השׁוֹמִים: ⁶ועַתָּה נִפְשְׁנוּ יִבְשָׂה אֵין

כָּל בְּלֹתִי אֶל-הַמַּן עִינָנִינוּ:

⁷וְהַמַּן כּוֹרְעֵנֶד הוּא וַיַּעֲנֵנוּ בְּעֵין הַבְּדָלָח:

⁸שְׁטוֹן הָעָם וְלַקְטוּ וְטַחֲנוּ בְּרָתִים אָוְדָכוּ

בְּמִדְכָּה וּבְשָׁלוֹ בְּפְרוֹר וְעַשְׂוּ אָתוֹ עֲגֹות

וְהִיא טָעָמו בְּטֻעם לְשֵׁד הַשְּׁמָן: ⁹וּבְרִדָת

הַטָּל עַל-הַמְּחַנָּה לְלִיה יַרְדֵּה הַמַּן עַלְיוֹ:

¹⁰וַיִּשְׁמַע מֹשֶׁה אֶת-הָעָם בְּכָה

לִמְשְׁפָחָתוֹ אִישׁ לְפִתְחָה אֶהָלוֹ וַיַּחֲרֵ

אָף יְהוָה מָאֵד וּבְעֵינֵי מֹשֶׁה רָע: ¹¹וַיֹּאמֶר

מֹשֶׁה אֱלֹהֵינוּ לִמְהַרְעֵת לְעַבְדָךְ וְלִפְנֵה

לְאַמְצָתִי חָן בְּעֵינֶיךָ לְשָׁוּם אֶת-מְשָׁא

כָּל-הָעָם הַזֶּה עַלְיוֹ: ¹²הָאָנָכִי חֲרִיטִי אֶת

כָּל-הָעָם הַזֶּה אָמָ-אָנָכִי יַלְדָתִי כִּי-

תֹאמֶר אֱלֹי שְׂاهֵה בְּחִיקָה בְּאָשָׁר יִשְׂאָ

הָאָמֵן אֶת-הַיִּגְעָק עַל הָאָדָמָה אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּעַת

5. "We remember the fish." Their great craving leads them to fantasize nostalgically about the food they enjoyed in Egypt.

6. "Nothing but this manna." They express contempt for the manna, the gift of heaven, that descends from heaven each morning (see Exodus 16:21). They argue that it is unvarying and boring.

7. Now the manna was like coriander seed. The details about manna's virtues refute each of the arguments that the people raise, especially their claim that the manna is dry. Their complaints, together with this report of the manna's merits, reflect the people's gluttony and ingratitude. Their nostalgia for Egypt, which was known as their house of bondage (as in Exodus 13:3), shows their ingratitude for all the bounty that God showered and continues to shower upon them.

11. Moses said to יהוה. Moses turns to God before the punishment that befalls the people. Rather than praying that God's punishment be lifted from the people (as in the story of the complainers, 11:1–3), Moses here bares his soul regarding his own bitter fate and complains about the difficulty of leadership.

12. Moses' questions are rhetorical and the simple meaning of the verse is: "I did not produce all these people, so why do you put all this burden on me?" As he attempts to illustrate the absurdity of his situation, Moses uses motherhood as the ultimate symbol of devotion. He cites a mother's enormous love and compassion, concern for all of her children's needs, and boundless dedication. One way to read Moses' questions is that he is comparing himself to that ideal mother. [The rhetorical questions also suggest that it was not Moses who was Israel's mother, but rather God. The verbs that Moses uses specifically refer to pregnancy (hariti, here rendered as "produce") and birthing (yalad'ti, thers? ¹³Where am I to get meat to give to all this people, when they whine before me and say, ‘Give us meat to eat!’ ¹⁴I cannot carry all this people by myself, for it is too much for me. ¹⁵If You would deal thus with me, kill me rather, I beg You, and let me see no more of my wretchedness!’

¹⁶Then said to Moses, “Gather for Me seventy of Israel’s elders of whom you have experience as elders and officers of the people, and bring them to the Tent of Meeting and let them take their place there with you. ¹⁷I will come down and speak with you there, and I will draw upon the spirit that is on you and put it upon them; they shall share the burden of the people with you, and you shall not bear it alone. ¹⁸And say to the people: Purify yourselves for tomorrow and you shall eat meat, for you have kept whining before me and saying, ‘If only we had meat to eat! Indeed, we were better off in Egypt!’ ¹⁹will give you meat and you shall eat. ²⁰You shall eat not one day, not two, not even five days or ten or twenty, ²¹but a whole month, until it comes out of your nostrils and becomes loathsome to you. For you have rejected

לְאַבְתִּיו: ¹³ מֵאַין לִי בָשָׂר לְתַת לְכָל־
הָעָם הַזֶּה קַיִרְבָּכוּ עַלְלִי לְאמֹר תִּנְהַלְנָנוּ
בָשָׂר וַיַּאֲכַלָּה: ¹⁴ לְאִוּכָל אָנְכִי לְבָדִי
לְשֹׁאת אֶת־כָּל־הָעָם הַזֶּה כִּי כָבֵד מִפְנֵי:
¹⁵ וְאַסְמַכְתָּה | אֶת־עִשָּׂה לְהַרְגָּנִי נָא
הַרְגָּא אִם־מִצְאָתִי חַן בְּעִינֵיךְ וְאַל־אָרְךָ
בְּרֻעָתִי: פ

¹⁶ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה אָסְפָה־לֵי
שְׁבָעִים אִישׁ מִזְקָנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר יַדְעָת
בְּיַדְעָם זָקְנֵי הָעָם וְשָׁטָרָיו וְלִקְחָתָן אָתָּת
¹⁷ אֶל־אֶחָל מוֹעֵד וְהַתִּצְבֹּא שֵׁם עַמָּךְ:
הָרוּחַ אֲשֶׁר עַלְיךָ וְשָׁמְתִי עֲלֵיכֶם וְנִשְׁאַו
אָתָּה בְּמִשְׁאָה הַלְּם וְלֹא־תִשְׁאָא אַתָּה לְבָדָק:
¹⁸ וְאֶל־הָעָם תֹּאמֶר הַתְּקִדְשָׁו לִמְדָר
וְאַכְלָתֶם בָשָׂר פִי בְּכִתְמָבָזְנִי יְהוָה
לְאֹמֶר מַיִן־אָכְלָנוּ בָשָׂר כִּי־טוֹב לָנוּ
בְּמִצְרָיִם וַיִּתְנַתֵּן יְהוָה לְכֶם בָשָׂר וְאַכְלָתֶם:
¹⁹ לֹא יוּמֶד אַחֲרֵךְ תִּאֲכִלוּן וְלֹא יוּמִים
וְלֹא | חַמְשָׁה יָמִים וְלֹא עֲשָׂרָה יָמִים
וְלֹא עֲשָׂרִים יוֹם: ²⁰ עַד | חֲדַש יָמִים
עַד אֲשֶׁר־יִצְאָ מִאַפְלָם וְהִיא לְכֶם לְרוֹא

here translated as “engender”). By implication Moses asserts that God is the one who—as it were—conceived Israel, was pregnant, gave birth to Israel, and now should carry Israel. Although Israel’s God transcends gender, the Bible contains gendered images of the Divine: male imagery is more common (see at Exodus 15:3 and Deuteronomy 32:6), but we do find female imagery for God (see the introduction to Exodus 15:22–17:16, and see at Deuteronomy 32:13, 18). Here in Numbers we have a striking depiction of God that refers to women’s activities such as giving birth. Moses uses such strong maternal language to characterize God’s unique relationship with the people. —Ed.]

13. “Where am I to get meat.” Before focusing on his own needs, Moses asks a question on behalf of the people.

16. “Gather for Me seventy of Israel’s elders.” God offers to divide the burden of leadership between Moses and seventy representative assistants.

17. “I will draw upon the spirit that is on you.” In Exodus 19, Moses’ father-in-law, Jethro, advised Moses to appoint judges in order to reduce his administrative burden. Here, the seventy elders, upon whom God bestows some of Moses’ spirit, are to be selected to fill a prophetic-spiritual role.

18. “tomorrow...you shall eat meat.” God’s promise to provide meat in response to the people’s craving is also a threat, as v. 20 makes unmistakably clear.

who is among you, by whining before [God] and saying, ‘Oh, why did we ever leave Egypt?’”

²¹But Moses said, “The people who are with me number six hundred thousand foot soldiers; yet You say, ‘I will give them enough meat to eat for a whole month.’ ²²Could enough flocks and herds be slaughtered to suffice them? Or could all the fish of the sea be gathered for them to suffice them?” ²³And answered Moses, “Is there a limit to יְהוָה's power? You shall soon see whether what I have said happens to you or not!”

²⁴Moses went out and reported the words of יְהוָה to the people. He gathered seventy of the people's elders and stationed them around the Tent. ²⁵Then, after coming down in a cloud and speaking to him, יְהוָה drew upon the spirit that was on him and put it upon the seventy representative elders. And when the spirit rested upon them, they spoke in ecstasy, but did not continue.

²⁶Two of the representatives, one named Eldad and the other Medad, had remained in camp; yet the spirit rested upon them—they were among those recorded, but they had not gone out to the Tent—and they spoke in ecstasy in the camp. ²⁷An assistant ran out and told Moses, saying, “Eldad and Medad are acting the prophet in the camp!” ²⁸And Joshua son of Nun, Moses' attendant from his youth, spoke up and said, “My lord Moses, restrain them!” ²⁹But Moses said to him, “Are you wrought up on my account? Would that all יְהוָה's people were prophets, that put [the divine]

ונען כי ממאסTEM אַתִּיהוֹה אֲשֶׁר בְּקָרְבֵיכֶם וַתְּבַפּוּ לִפְנֵיו לְאָמֵר לִמְהֵה זוּה יַצְאָנוּ מִפְּנֵיכֶם:

²¹וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה שְׁשִׁמְאוֹת אֶלְךָ רְגֵלִי הַעַם אֲשֶׁר אַנְכִּי בְּקָרְבָּוֹ וְאַתָּה אָמְרָת בְּשֶׁל אַתְּנָה לְהָם וְאֶכְלָוּ חֲדֵשׁ יָמִים: ²²הַצָּאן וּבְקָרְבָּנָה יִשְׁחַט לְהָם וּמֵצָא לְהָם אָם אַתְּכָלֵ פְּגַע הַיּוּם יִאֱסֹף לְהָם וּמֵצָא לְהָם: ²³וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה הִנֵּה תִּקְצַר עַתָּה תִּרְאָה בַּיּוֹם הַזֶּה אֲסִילָא:

²⁴וַיֵּצֵא מֹשֶׁה וַיַּדְבֵּר אֶל־הָעָם אֶת דְבָרַי יְהוָה וַיַּאֲסֹף שְׁבָעִים אִישׁ מִזְקֵנִי הַעַם וַיַּעֲמֹד אֹתָם סְבִיבַת הַאָהֶל: ²⁵וַיַּרְדֵּן יְהוָה בְּעֵנָן וַיַּדְבֵּר אֶלְיוֹן וַיַּאֲצִל מִן־הָרוֹת אֲשֶׁר עָלָיו וַיַּתֵּן עַל־שְׁבָעִים אִישׁ הַזְקִנִּים וַיַּדַּבֵּר בְּנָוח עַל־הָם הָרוֹת וַיַּתְנַבְּאָו וְלֹא יִסְפּוּ:

²⁶וַיִּשְׁאַרְוּ שְׁנִינִיאנְשִׁים וְבְמִחְנָה שֵׁם הַאָחֶר | אֶלְלָד וְשֵׁם הַשְׁנִי מִיְּדָ וַתְנַח עַל־הָם הָרוֹת וְהַמָּה בְּכִתְבִּים וְלֹא יִצְאֵוּ הַאָהֶל וַיַּתְנַבְּאָו בְּמִחְנָה: ²⁷וַיַּרְא חָנָעָר וַיַּגְדֵּל לְמֹשֶׁה וַיֹּאמֶר אֶלְלָד וְמִיְּדָ מִתְנַבְּאִים בְּמִחְנָה: ²⁸וַיַּעַן יְהוֹשֻׁעַ בֶּן־נֹנֶן מִשְׁרָת מֹשֶׁה מִבְּחָרִיו וַיֹּאמֶר אֶדְנִי מֹשֶׁה בְּלֹא מִלְּאָמָר לוֹ מֹשֶׁה הַמִּקְנָא אַתָּה לִי וּמִי יִתְנַהֵן בְּלֹעֵם יְהוָה נְבִיאִים כִּי־יִתְהַנֵּן יְהוָה

26. they spoke in ecstasy in the camp. Eldad and Medad stir up a tempest by prophesying in the camp without having Moses' spirit bestowed upon them among the seventy elders (vv. 24–25).

27–28. First, a young assistant runs to Moses, in excitement and alarm, to inform him about this irregular behavior. Next comes Joshua, who suggests that the offenders be restrained, either as a punishment or to prevent further illegitimate prophecy.

29. “Would that all יְהוָה's people were prophets.” Only Moses, with enormous generosity of spirit, reacts with happiness and acceptance. He is neither threatened nor jealous but, instead, expresses a desire that there be more, rather than fewer, prophets among God's people. (His response is all the more striking given God's reaction to Miriam and Aaron's boast of their prophetic gifts; see at Numbers 12.)

spirit upon them!”³⁰ Moses then reentered the camp together with the elders of Israel.

³¹A wind from יְהוָה started up, swept quail from the sea and strewed them over the camp, about a day’s journey on this side and about a day’s journey on that side, all around the camp, and some two cubits deep on the ground. ³²The people set to gathering quail all that day and night and all the next day—even the one who gathered least had ten chomers—and they spread them out all around the camp. ³³The meat was still between their teeth, not yet chewed, when the anger of יְהוָה blazed forth against the people and struck the people with a very severe plague. ³⁴That place was named Kibroth-hattaavah, because the people who had the craving were buried there.

³⁵Then the people set out from Kibroth-hattaavah for Hazeroth.

אֶת־רֹוחַךְ עַל־יָהּם: ³⁰ וַיִּאֲסַף מֹשֶׁה אֶל־
הַמְחֻנָּה הַזֹּאת וַיָּקָנֵן יִשְׂרָאֵל:

³¹ וַיָּרַוח נִסְעָה | מֵאַת יְהּוָה וַיָּגֹז שָׁלוּוּם מִן־
הַיּוֹם וַיִּטְשֹׁב עַל־הַמְחֻנָּה בְּדַרְרָה יוֹם כֵּدָה
וּכְדַרְךָ יוֹם בְּהָסְבִּיבוֹת הַמְחֻנָּה וּכְאַמְתִּים
עַל־פְּנֵי הָאָרֶץ: ³² וַיִּקְרַם הַעַם בְּלִיהִיוֹת
הַזֹּאת וּבְלִיהִילָה וְכֵל | יוֹם הַמְחֻרְתָה
וַיִּאֱסֹפוּ אֶת־הַשְׁלֹוֹן הַמְמֻעִיט אַסְפָּה עֲשָׂרָה
חָמְרִים וַיִּשְׁטַחוּ לְהָם שְׁטוֹחַ סְבִיבוֹת
הַמְחֻנָּה: ³³ הַבָּשָׂר עַזְלָנוּ בֵּין שְׁעִירָה טָרָם
יִכְרַת וְאֶפְף יְהּוָה קָרָה בְּעַם וַיָּקָרֵא יְהּוָה
בְּעַם מִפְּהָרָה רְבָה מֵאָד: ³⁴ וַיָּקָרֵא אֶת־שְׁם־
הַמָּקוֹם הַזֹּאת קְבָרוֹת הַתְּאוֹהָה בִּישָׁם
קְבָרוֹ אֶת־הַעַם הַמְתַאֲוִים:

³⁵ מִקְבָּרוֹת הַתְּאוֹהָה נִסְעָה הַעַם חָצְרוֹת

31–33. In response to Moses’ petition in v. 13—“Where am I to get meat?”—God supplies meat from an unexpected source: a flock of quail blown in by sea wind, which arrives at the Israelite camp. The plentiful quantity suffices for the entire people. However, the people’s craving and hunger are so great that they fall upon the birds without restraint or embarrassment, filling their mouths and bellies. Their frenzied consumption of the quails causes a plague that spreads among those who consume them.

34. Kibroth-hattaavah. The people bury the many victims at a site whose name translates as “Graves of Craving.” This name indicates that the people’s sin is in craving for meat when God has already provided sufficient manna to sustain them. The Torah blames the people for not making do with manna as their food.

Generally speaking, the Torah displays a multi-faceted relationship to meat consumption. Genesis

1:29 seems to advocate vegetarianism; Genesis 9:4 and Deuteronomy 12:16 allow eating meat but prohibit the consumption of blood; Leviticus 11 and Deuteronomy 14 limit the consumption of meat to specific animals. Only in reference to meat consumption does the Torah use the verb “crave” (also Deuteronomy 12:15, 20, 21). [At the same time, priests and other Israelites are expected to eat the meat that they have together consecrated as sacrifices (see Leviticus 1–7). —Ed.]

If cravings for meat so angered God, then why does God supply the people with what they ask, and in such great quantities? The story indicates that God’s intent in bringing the quails is chiefly “educational,” to prove God’s unlimited powers to the people. On the one hand, God has power complete enough to satisfy all creatures’ needs, if God so desires. On the other hand, God is liable, where needed, to punish them as well.

When they were in Hazereth, 12 Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses because of the Cushite woman he had married: "He married a Cushite woman!"

²They said, “Has יְהוָה spoken only through Moses? Has [God] not spoken through us as well?”
יְהוָה heard it. ³Now [God’s] envoy Moses was very humble, more so than any other human being on ויהיו בחרות: פ יב ותדבר מרים ואחרן במשה על-אוזת האשה הכשית

אשר לך כי-אשה בשית לך:
ולאמרו הרק ארכ-במשה דבר יהוה הלא
גם-בנו דבר וישמע יהוה: ³ והאיש משה
ענו עניין מאי מצל האדם אשר על-פני

CRITICIZING MOSES: MIRIAM, AARON, AND THE CUSHITE WOMAN (12:1-16)

The presence of two female characters stands out in this story. One, Miriam, is active and central; she constitutes the story's axis. The other, Moses' unnamed wife, called the "dark-skinned" or "Cushite" woman, is unseen and silent; though from her behind-the-scenes position, she is the story's catalyst. The story constitutes a family drama of siblings who speak out against their brother and his wife.

This section contains numerous gaps, making it difficult to bridge from one verse to the next (particularly in the first three verses) and provoking a variety of questions—as discussed in turn, below.

I. Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses.

The verb “spoke” is in the feminine singular form, indicating that Miriam is the chief spokesperson.

Cushite woman. Heb. cushit, which may have been understood either to mean “Cushite” (that is, from Cush) or “dark-skinned.” In the Bible, Cush seems to be located in the south of Egypt, east of Sudan. However, references to cushim (Cushites, plural) pertain to tribes who lived in different places in Africa and Asia, as well as in the southern part of ancient Israel. The Bible refers to Cushites with awareness of their dark skin (Jeremiah 13:23). In Jeremiah 38:7–13, a Cushite saves Jeremiah’s life. In Amos 9:7, Cushites are presented as equal to Israelites in God’s view.

he had married. Who is this woman? Have we encountered her before? Is she Zipporah, the wife of Moses and the daughter of the Midianite priest (Exodus 2:21)? If so, she may well have been “dark-skinned” (Ibn Ezra). Or, is this another wife—unnamed and mentioned in the Bible only here—a native of Ethiopia, whom Moses married in addition to Zipporah, or after Moses sent Zipporah home (see Exodus 18:2)?

“He married a Cushite woman!” What is Miriam and Aaron’s complaint against their brother and his marriage? Are they attacking Moses for marrying a woman with dark skin? Is it a diatribe against marriage outside of the Israelite tribal structure?

2. "Has יהוה spoken only through Moses?"

What connection does the previously mentioned woman bear to this complaint about Moses in relation to his siblings' prophetic roles? The statement highlights one of several crucial gaps in this story. As prophets themselves, the siblings may think that they are entitled to the same privileged status accorded Moses. Indeed, if status is Miriam and Aaron's primary concern, then perhaps they oppose Moses' marriage because his wife is of the "wrong" status. Alternatively, this complaint may parallel what will be expressed by Korah and his assembly when they accuse Moses and Aaron of exalting themselves "above" God's congregation (16:1-3).

3. The Torah insists that Moses, far from raising himself above others, is more modest than any other human being on earth. Moses, in his great humility, does not react or protest Miriam and Aaron's words. That is why God now proceeds to intervene on behalf of Moses, reproaching Miriam and Aaron.

earth. ⁴Suddenly יְהוָה called to Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, “Come out, you three, to the Tent of Meeting.” So the three of them went out. ⁵יהוָה came down in a pillar of cloud, stopped at the entrance of the Tent, and called out, “Aaron and Miriam!” The two of them came forward; ⁶and [God] said, “Hear these My words: When prophets of יְהוָה arise among you, I make Myself known to them in a vision, I speak with them in a dream. ⁷Not so with My servant Moses; he is trusted throughout My household. ⁸With him I speak mouth to mouth, plainly and not in riddles, and he beholds the likeness of יְהוָה. How then did you not shrink from speaking against My servant Moses?” ⁹Still incensed with them, יְהוָה departed.

¹⁰As the cloud withdrew from the Tent, there was Miriam stricken with snow-white scales! When Aaron turned toward Miriam, he saw that she was

הָאַדְמָה: ס ⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה פָתָח אֶל-מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל-אַהֲרֹן וְאֶל-מִרְיָם צָאו: שֶׁלְשָׁתֶכֶם אֶל-אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד וַיֵּצְאוּ שֶׁלְשָׁתֶם: ⁵ וַיֹּרֶד יְהוָה בְעֶמֶד עַنְן וַיַּעֲמֹד פֶתַח הַאֲهָל וַיִּקְרָא אַהֲרֹן וּמֹרִים וַיֵּצְאוּ שְׁנֵיכֶם: ⁶ וַיֹּאמֶר שְׁמֻעוּנָא דָבָר אֱמִינְהָה נְבָיאָכֶם יְהוָה בְמֶرְאָה אֵלֵינוּ אֶתְדוֹעַ בְּחַלּוּם אֲדָבָר בּו: ⁷ לֹא-כֵן עֲבָדִי מֹשֶׁה בְּכָל-בִּתְחִי נָאָמֵן הוּא: ⁸ פֶה אֶל-פֶה אֲדָבָר-בּוּ וּמֹרָאָה וּלְאַבְחִית וּתְמִנְתָ יְהוָה יָבִיט וּמְלֹאָעַל לֹא יְרַאְתֶם לְדֹבֶר בְּעַבְדִי בְמֹשֶׁה: ⁹ וַיַּחֲרַג אֶל-יְהוָה בְּסֶם וַיָּלֶךְ: ¹⁰ וְהַעֲנֹן סָר מֵעַל הַאֲהָל וְהַגָּה מִרְיָם מִצְרַעַת בְּשָׁלָג וַיַּפְן אַהֲרֹן אֶל-מִרְיָם וְהִנֵּה

4. Yahweh called to Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. All three siblings are summoned, with Miriam in the third position—as in the words of the prophet Micah (Micah 6:4).

6. “Hear these My words.” God speaks in the second person plural, censuring both Miriam and Aaron; but only Miriam will be punished (below). God’s verbal castigation of the siblings only addresses the issue of Moses’ prophetic leadership and not the issue of Moses’ marriage.

7. “Not so with My servant Moses.” God asserts that Moses’ prophetic status is unique. This undermines both of the siblings’ demand that their prophetic status be honored.

8. “mouth to mouth.” God describes the great and unique intimacy between Moses and God, as well as the unique authority of Moses as God’s spokesperson. Only Moses receives words directly from God, whereas all other prophets have access to the Divine through other means, like dreams and visions.

10. there was Miriam. Why is Miriam alone punished for the siblings’ complaint? Is it because she is a woman who demands a leading position? Many commentaries hold that she—and not Aaron—is punished because she is the primary speaker against Moses. Whereas both of them complain about Moses’ prophetic status (v. 2 uses the plural verb vayomru), it is possible that only Miriam criticizes Moses’ marriage (v. 1 uses the feminine singular va-t’daber); and thus only Miriam receives God’s punishment for that criticism. Some contemporary commentators, who consider the text here to be sexist, also argue that Miriam alone is punished because she is a woman who dares challenge authority. However, if we understand the word cushit (“Cushite” in our translation) to mean “dark-skinned,” then Miriam may be punished for insulting a dark-skinned woman. She alone turns white (in an ironic twist) because she alone spoke out on that particular subject.

stricken with snow-white scales. [The same words describe the temporary condition of Moses’ hand in Exodus 4:6 when God prepares him to face Pharaoh. There the condition implies an example, not a punishment. In II Kings 5:27, the only other stricken with scales.¹¹ And Aaron said to Moses, “O my lord, account not to us the sin which we committed in our folly.¹² Let her not be as a stillbirth which emerges from its mother’s womb with half its flesh eaten away!”¹³ So Moses cried out to יהוה, saying, “O God, pray heal her!”

¹⁴ But said to Moses, “If her father spat in her face, would she not bear her shame for seven days? Let her be shut out of camp for seven days, and then let her be readmitted.”¹⁵ So Miriam was shut out of camp seven days; and the people did not march on until Miriam was readmitted.¹⁶ After that the people set out from Hazereth and encamped in the wilderness of Paran.

use of these words, the expression refers to a punishment.—Ed.]

11. “the sin which we committed.” Aaron confesses both his and Miriam’s sin and asks for forgiveness for Miriam.

12. “Let her not be as a stillbirth.” As her partner in crime, Aaron intervenes on Miriam’s behalf; this is fitting since all the burden of punishment has fallen upon her.

“half its flesh eaten away.” This description conveys an association with death. Commentators suggest that this is why tzaraat (scale disease) is subject to special strictures (see parashat Mitzora).

13. “O God, pray heal her!” Moses reacts immediately to Aaron’s words, without any grudge or hesitation. The words of his succinct prayer seeking his sister’s cure have since become part of Jewish healing services (see Contemporary Reflection, p. 864).

14. “If her father spat in her face, would she not bear her shame for seven days?” God’s response includes a symbolic punishment after Moses’ intercession. The full ramifications of God’s explanation remain obscure. Three points, however, are clear. First, God’s words imply that the reason for the seven days’ seclusion is shame—like the shame that befalls a daughter who was insulted by her father. This is not like the usual seclusion of the m’tzora (the person stricken with scale disease; see at Leviticus 13). Second, the statement (that a daughter is shamed for seven days when her father spits on her) discloses something of an assumed and accepted practice in the community. Third, the father-daughter analogy seems to soften the harshness of the incident by referring to God as father and Miriam as God’s daughter: she is still a member of God’s household, as it were (compare v. 7).

מִצְרָעָת: ¹¹ וַיֹּאמֶר אֱהָן אֶל־מֹשֶׁה בַּיּוֹם אֲלֵנָא תִּשְׂתַּחַט עַלְיָנוֹ חֶטְאָת אֲשֶׁר נָזַלְנוּ וְאֲשֶׁר חֶטְאָנוּ: ¹² אֲלֵנָא תְּהִי בְּמִתְּאַשֵּׁר בְּצָאתָנוּ מֶרֶחֶם אָמוֹן וַיַּאֲכַל חַצִּים בְּשָׁרוֹ: ¹³ וַיַּצַּעַק מֹשֶׁה אֶל־יְהָהָה לֵאמֹר אֱלֹהִים כִּי רְפָא נָא לְהָ: ¹⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה וְאַבְיוֹתֶיךָ יְרָקֶב בְּפִנְךָ הָלָא תְּכַלֵּם שְׁבֻעָת יְמִינֶיךָ תְּסִגֵּר שְׁבֻעָת יְמִינֶיךָ מְחוֹזָן לְמִחְנָה וְאַחֲרָת תְּאַסֵּף: ¹⁵ וְתִסְגֵּר מִרְיָם מְחוֹזָן לְמִחְנָה שְׁבֻעָת יְמִינֶיךָ וְהַעַם לֹא נִסְעָן עַד־הַאֲסֵף מִרְיָם: ¹⁶ וְאַחֲרָת נִסְעָן הַעַם מְחוֹצָרוֹת וַיַּחֲנוּ בָּמִדְבָּר

פָּאָרָן: פ

“Let her be shut out of camp for seven days.” Miriam is to be quarantined outside the camp. Leviticus 13 prescribes a seven-day seclusion for a person stricken with tzaraat (a scale disease). But here God uses a different rationale for Miriam’s seclusion (see previous comment). On the relative leniency of this punishment, see the introduction to Numbers 16:1–35. Miriam’s affliction and quarantine are referred to again in Deuteronomy 24:8–9.

15. the people did not march on until Miriam was readmitted. Without necessarily taking sides in Miriam’s dispute with Moses, the people demonstrate their solidarity with her by waiting until she can rejoin the camp.

—Masha Turner

Another View

IT IS HARD TO KNOW what to make of the story of Miriam: she is afflicted with snow-white scales for daring to challenge Moses—and by implication, God

(12:1–16). First of all, this reader is outraged. Why is Miriam punished, but not her brother Aaron? And why is she punished at all, given the legitimacy of their complaint against Moses? Like so many passages in the Torah, B'haalot'cha seems to express values that are difficult to accept. Upon reflection, though, this reader's outrage is softened—for there is much here that speaks to the power of women, even as it reflects unease about their authoritative voice.

Moses has married a foreign woman and his siblings complain, perhaps upset that Moses continues to lead Israel despite violating the law while they, leaders who are guilty of no such wrong, remain subject to his authority. Imagine their surprise when God responds directly to their complaint—and their dismay when God chastises them and supports Moses. Aaron seems not to suffer for his insubordination, but Miriam's punishment is described in detail. She is afflicted with a horrible skin ailment that threatens to place her in a state of ritual impurity and block her access to God's holiness. As if this were not enough, she must remain outside the Israelite encampment for a full week, like a disobedient daughter shamed by her father.

At first, the story of snow-white Miriam seems a perfect example of a double standard, for God permits the brother independent thought but punishes the sister for the very same ideas and words. Still, the story is more than that, for it shows us how much all of Israel valued Miriam. Her brothers plead for her, as Aaron beseeches Moses and then Moses prays to God to reverse their sister's punishment. And the people do not respond by abandoning this victim of God's great anger. Rather, they "did not march on until Miriam was readmitted" seven days later (v. 15), thus expressing their solidarity with the woman who in happier times led them in victory song and celebration (Exodus 15:20–21).

This reader finds the story of snow-white Miriam to be outrageous—at least at first.

—Beth Alpert Nakhai

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses (12:1). This episode raises several concerns. God nominates male priests, male Levites, and male elders to run the enterprise of Israel, whereas women are all but absent. The only women we meet are Moses' sister Miriam, who speaks (out of turn), and his Ethiopian wife, who is silent. In Exodus 15:20, Miriam had been designated as a prophet, and she now claims a prophetic role for herself. Yet, although Miriam and Aaron both discuss Moses' wife, it is only Miriam who is punished for her words.

The question of God's partial administration of justice is the only one of these issues that is explored in the Rabbis' discourse on this parashah. The tannaitic Midrash Sifrei B'midbar 99 raises the inequity of Miriam's treatment and answers with the words: "This shows that it was Miriam who first raised the issue." That is, Miriam was responsible for initiating the critical conversation about Moses' wife and thus was the person punished. Yet, not all the Rabbis were happy with this superficial solution. In BT Shabbat 97a, Rabbi Akiva argues that Aaron too was afflicted with leprosy, based on the notice in v. 9 that God was “incensed with them” (plural). However, this is a minority view; the general opinion in that talmudic passage is that Aaron was not similarly stricken. Another halachic midrash, Sifra, M'tzora 5.7, identifies tzaraat as the quintessential punishment for slander, Women are subordinate to men—say various midrashim—and it should stay that way.

B'HAALOT'CHA

and it emphasizes that Miriam’s contraction of tzaraat (Numbers 12:10) was the result of her denunciation of Moses, essentially because she slandered him behind his back.

The sages were also interested in solving the apparent contradiction between what we hear about Moses’ marrying an Ethiopian woman and what we know about his marriage to the Midianite woman, Zipporah (Exodus 2:21). Earlier Jewish Hellenistic literature suggested that young Moses—while still an Egyptian prince—had carried out a campaign against Ethiopia and there married an Ethiopian princess (Josephus, Antiquities 252–3). Yet the Rabbis do not adopt this solution. In their opinion, the Ethiopian woman is none other than Zipporah herself, and thus they need to explain why she is called Ethiopian—and why Miriam and Aaron found it necessary to speak about her. Already in Sifrei B'midbar 99, we learn that Miriam spoke against Moses because he had refrained from having sexual intercourse with Zipporah ever since God had begun speaking to him face to face. The Rabbis tell us that Miriam and Zipporah had been standing together when the news came that Eldad and Medad were prophesying. Zipporah remarked that she felt pity for their wives, for they would now suffer her fate, meaning that their husbands would no longer sleep with them. Miriam then said to Aaron, “Why does Moses have to behave this way? Has not God also spoken to us, and we have not refrained from sex with our spouses?” (Sifrei B'midbar 99). Obviously the question that bothers the Rabbis here is a contrived one, not actually found in the Bible: namely, the connection between holiness and refraining from sexual activity. It is likely that this discussion originates in rabbinic knowledge of contemporaneous non-Jewish practices that advocated celibacy of religious leaders.

If the wife that Moses took, and about whom Miriam and Aaron spoke, was actually Zipporah, the Rabbis still needed to explain why she was designated as Ethiopian. They explained that the term kushit, usually translated as Ethiopian or Cushite, in fact refers to exceptional beauty. Just as Ethiopians are unusual in their skin color, so was Zipporah unusual to behold (Sifrei B'midbar 99). This interpretation removes from the biblical text any hint of bigotry, but leaves one with the lingering feeling that Ethiopian skin color is at some level an issue.

Much of rabbinic interpretation on this episode is concerned with correct hierarchy and gender ordering. The same midrash that states that it was Miriam who initiated this conversation about Moses’ wife comments that it was unusual for her to speak to her brother Aaron before she was spoken to (Sifrei B'midbar 99). Another early midrash teaches that if Miriam was punished for speaking against her younger brother, one should all the more so refrain from speaking against one’s superiors (Sifrei D'varim 1). Midrash D'varim Rabbah 6.12 notices the absence of the title “prophet” here in connection with Miriam and suggests that this is a warning that slanderous talk brings about loss of status. Midrash B'reishit Rabbah 45.5 cites this episode to denigrate women in general as overly talkative. The import of all these texts is that women are viewed as subordinate to men and that society should endeavor to maintain men’s gender-based prerogatives.

Yet the Rabbis too are aware of Miriam’s unique status. In Mishnah Sotah 1:9, the notice that “the people did not march on until Miriam was readmitted” (12:15) is interpreted as proof that “a human being is treated according to how that person treats others” (Mishnah Sotah 1:7). Miriam herself had many years earlier waited for her infant brother Moses after his mother had set him afloat in the Nile (Exodus 2:4). For this, according to the Rabbis, she was rewarded at the end of Numbers 12, when the Israelites did not continue their march without her.

—Tal Ilan

Contemporary Reflection

B'HAALOT'CHA IS OVERFLOWING with complex ritual and detail: the lighting of the lamps; the purification and consecration of the Levites; the elaboration of the pesach sacrifice; the carefully choreographed journey through the wilderness; the mutiny of meat, manna, and quail precipitating a plague for those who were led by their appetites; the challenge of Moses’ siblings to his leadership; and finally, the sudden onset of his sister Miriam’s disease. Yet amidst these richly detailed stories, we find one contrasting, stark, parsimonious prayer: “El na r'fa na lab” (“O God, pray heal her!”).

Five words—eleven Hebrew letters—are all that Moses speaks (12:13). Except for God’s name, each word ends in a vowel, as if each word were an unending cry. It is as if each word is punctuated with an exclamation point, the brevity of the syllables giving voice to the tortured helplessness of the supplicant: “God! Please! Heal! Please! Her!” In the midst of catastrophe, the verb of consequence—the bull’s-eye of the prayer—is the central plea: heal! Indeed, the prayer is nearly a palindrome—reading the same forwards as it does backwards—homing in with laser precision on that most urgent desire: heal!

This prayer has few words but much resonance. It is a primal cry, capturing fear, powerlessness, and incomprehensibility in the face of sudden illness, accident, or injury. It is not the entreaty of the one beset by the catastrophe, but rather that of the witness, the powerless onlooker, the potential caregiver absorbing the shock, the one who is overwhelmed and stymied about how to help.

When illness, accident, or injury comes to those we love, it is up to us—those who are comparatively healthy and able—not only to beseech but also to provide hope and healing. For the caregiver, there is time only for truncated and hurried prayer, time only for stolen moments of naked cries and yearnings of

The essence of what we seek is still found in Moses' direct and eternal prayer.

hope. For the caregiver shouldering the burdens of action—making the loved one comfortable, researching treatment, running interference with physicians, reporting news, calming fears—prayer is a blessed moment of calm in an otherwise turbulent time.

When one whom we love is in danger, not only our loved one but also we ourselves face darkness. According to Jewish tradition, the first person who prayed in darkness was young Jacob, on the eve of his exile from home. The Midrash describes the confluence of physical and metaphorical darkness this way: “In order to speak to Jacob in private, God caused the sun to go down—like a king who calls for the light to be extinguished, as he wishes to speak to his friend in private” (B'reishit Rabbah 68.10). So, too, the prayer of the caregiver is private, conspiratorial, hidden from the one who is the object of supplication, yet revealed to the One who can respond. We want to protect the one who is suffering from the compounded weight of the caregiver's distress. But in the darkness, it is safe to give voice to our fear of dreadful scenarios and of the unknown. In the darkness, it is a relief to relinquish the weight of trying to hold up another's spirits, and to acknowledge that Someone with far more power than we possess is the ultimate caregiver. In the darkness, it is possible to renew courage, to find new paths, to discover the equanimity essential to living with the terror of catastrophe.

B'HAALOT'CHA

Medical sociologist Alexandra Dundas Todd begins Double Vision, a memoir of her son's treatment and recovery from brain cancer, with this reflection:

"The Chinese word for crisis consists of two characters: danger and opportunity. When my son, Drew, a senior in college, was diagnosed with a rare form of cancer bordering his brain, the danger was clear; the opportunity was less apparent. Danger flashed through our lives daily, while opportunities lay waiting in murky waters, to emerge only tentatively. Family closeness, the ability to savor each moment, to find strength and courage where we didn't know they existed, to discover new methods of treatment that complemented all the surgeries and radiation and eased both body and mind, all contributed to making the unbearable bearable, turning an assault into a challenge" (Double Vision: An East-West Collaboration for Coping with Cancer, 1994, p. xiii).

It does, indeed, take "double vision" to see both blessing and curse, to picture opportunity amidst danger. Courage grows through hope, through the willingness to look for unknown possibilities and to grasp them, through refusing to see only danger in darkness when its counterpart, opportunity, may be waiting in the shadows. The prayer of the caregiver, the cry of the distraught parent, the reassuring whisper of the loving spouse, can help to wrest some measure of opportunity out of danger.

El na r'fa na la. In its simplicity and raw clarity, this prayer of healing recognizes that more than double vision, the vision of the Divine is immeasurable, and the capacity of the Healer is limitless. In response to Moses' prayer, God reveals the duration of Miriam's exile to the wilderness of disease. Her fortunate loved ones have only to wait out a time of disequilibrium and uncertainty; they have received Sacred reassurance that all will be well. Yet in anticipating her return, the Torah conveys a truth well known to the loved ones of someone contending with affliction and crisis—v'haam lo nasa ad heasef miryam ("and the people did not march on until Miriam was readmitted," 12:15). Life does not go on with any sense of normalcy or progression while one whom we love is endangered; the caregiver's attention and effort revolves around the one who is stricken. Time and space are altered. The yearning for healing expands to fill both.

Our present rituals may not be as formulaic as those described in B'haalot'cha; our contemporary prayers of healing may have become longer and more specific; our modern understanding of treatment may be more nuanced and comprehensive; but Moses' wisdom abides. The essence of what we seek is still found in his direct and eternal prayer. El na r'fa na la: God! Please! Heal! Please! Her!

—Patricia Karlin-Neumann

Voices

from An Opening Ceremony

Vicki Hollander

Numbers 10:10

Like the moon,
we shed our layers.
Leave them at the door.
We who caretake life.
We who are healers.
We who are doers.
We who mother
the world....

The moon now glides toward darkness, toward rest.
She retreats
in order to emerge
whole.
She quiets
in order to fill night with light.

So too shall we make a space for ourselves.
A space of renewal.
So we who nourish life
can emerge as the moon, bearing our light our touch
to aid in repairing our world.

Mother to Mother

Tikva Frymer-Kensky

Numbers 11:12

When you were pregnant with Israel, Lord
—did your ankles swell?
—did your fingers tingle and droop?
Did you spend your time waiting, marking time,
and doing infinite chores?

After you announced the birth of the nation knowing it would be long, three generations long,

till the birth of the people on its land—

After you announced the birth, Lord—did you sit counting the days and the years?
Did you plan on how you would raise Ephraim,
your darling child?
how you would call him from Egypt,
draw him with cords of love?

Did you count the days
till you could teach him to walk?
till you could bend down and feed him each morsel?

When you carried Israel in your womb,
O Lord,
did you think how you would nurture forever,
how you would carry him till old-age?

Did you plan every moment of his upbringing, dreaming of the perfect child?

Or were you very busy, Lord, planning universes,
setting up laws,
organizing history?

Miriam

Yocheved Bat-Miriam (transl. Ilana Pardes)

Numbers 12

She stood facing the reeds and papyrus and breathed in stars and desert.
The round sleeping eye of Apis flooded its glimmered blue on the sand, on its golden rustle, on the smile of a hidden princess,

on a dialogue between hieroglyphs on stone and a marched palace song.

At a distance, in the fertile soil of memory, like a horned viper in everlasting desire, trampled Goshen adopted
a dim tribal imagination.

—With you, with you in the storm
your body twisting like a timbrel, with you in your dance facing fervor smell of dunes and infinity.

—I will speak jealous and leprous,
I will speak complaining of myself.
I adjure you in your unsurrendered monasticism
in your resplendent isolation—do live!

She stood rocked by the spell
as by the white of the wave's beats.
She bent over the baby as a vow,
as decree,
as redemption,
as fate.

Autumn Measure

Robin Becker

Numbers 12:13

Violence done to the body to save the body: tomorrow
my friend will leave the hospital without her breasts. We say at least she has her life, her work, her legs.
Fate's impersonal face looks back at me from every burning bush.
The crack I hear isn't a bullet
but another apple falling hard on the tin roof overhead.

Untitled

Drora Setel

Numbers 12

The girl's name is forgotten
but we know of her skill.
Assisting the midwives,
she carried water from the river
in preparation for the birth.
It was she who circled the bed and sang,
her voice a liturgy
of guidance for the woman in labor, of celebration for a safe delivery,
of delight in a healthy baby,
of mourning for those who died in the process.

The woman's name is known but its meaning was forgotten.
Some said "bitter"— bitter with jealousy bitter with sorrow
bitter with barrenness
bitter with shame
Because her power was forgotten.

For Days Miriam Sat Outside

Wendy Zierler

Numbers 12

Before she could utter another word, a dark cloud appeared and rumbled above Miriam and Aaron like a rebuke. When the cloud lifted, as suddenly as it appeared, the skin on Miriam's arm was covered with snow-white scales. In panic and confusion, Aaron banished her from the camp. For days, Miriam sat in exile, her arm a scaly blaze of white fire. Late on the seventh day, alone and looking uneasy, Moses appeared. Miriam remained silent, her eyes glaring. Halting, Moses began to speak: "You know, sister, I never wanted this post. I tried to tell the voice in the burning bush that I was not suited for this. But God insisted and told me to make snakes out of sticks. The voice in the bush said, 'If you want to see My powers as expressed in you, put your hand into your bosom and then pull it out.' And there it was before me: covered with snowy scales! Don't you see? God has now spoken to you, too, from a cloud. Beware of what you ask for, my sister. God has answered you and etched the power of prophecy onto your skin. Now you too must bear the burden of this people, whom I have neither fathered nor mothered, but nevertheless, I carry on my back." Miriam looked at her arm, and behold, the scales were healed. Her arm tingling, she followed her brother Moses back to the camp. Reverently, the people waited as she gathered her things, and took her place at the head of the line.

Magic Spells

Dahlia Ravikovitch

(transl. Chana Bloch and Chana Kronfeld)

Numbers 12

Today I'm a hill,
Tomorrow a sea.
Wandering all day
Like Miriam's well,
A bubble astray
In a crannied wall.

At night in my bed
I dreamt horses red,
Purple and green,

In the morning I heard
A babble of water,
The parrots' yatter.

Today I'm a snail,
Tomorrow a tall
Palm tree.

A cleft yesterday,
A seashell today.
Tomorrow I'm tomorrow.

After Fighting All Night We Watch the Sun Rise

Anna Ziegler

Numbers 12:15

It isn't slow, or drawn out;
it simply appears, a ribbon of pink rising like smoke and on its heels, the event, as though this is what we've been waiting for,
as though it's never happened like this before.

שָׁלַח כְּךָ ♦ Sh'lach L'cha

NUMBERS 13:1–15:41

Sending Scouts and Challenging Leaders

PARASHAT SH'LACH L'CHA ("Send for yourself") continues the theme in Numbers of challenges to Moses' leadership. In the previous parashah, Miriam and Aaron challenge Moses' leadership (Numbers 12); here, several tribal leaders—and ultimately the populace—do so. The parashah opens with the Israelites apparently nearing the end of their wilderness trek as they prepare to enter Canaan from the south. In anticipation of the invasion, Moses chooses scouts to reconnoiter Canaan. The goal of the expedition is twofold: to assess the strength of the indigenous populations and the strongholds in which they reside, and also to investigate the productivity of the land. One could argue that the venture is superfluous, since God has already ordained the conquest of Canaan by Israel. Seemingly, the objective is to test the faithfulness of the scouts and the Israelites as a whole.

The theme of rebellion at the heart of this parashah centers on the events in Numbers 13–14: the reconnaissance of Canaan, the scouts' report, the Israelites' response, and God's reaction. The keys to the story and subsequent wilderness accounts are the negativity expressed about the mission by ten of the twelve scouts as well as by the populace, and the consequences of that attitude. Only two scouts, Caleb and Joshua, remain enthusiastic about entering the Promised Land, thereby demonstrating trust in God. The sin of faithlessness, exemplified by the majority, threatens the extermination of all Israel. Only Moses' intercession, coupled with God's mercy, saves the people, but not without a heavy price: condemnation to forty years of wandering and certain death for the entire wilderness generation.

The remaining portion of the parashah (15:1–41) focuses on a variety of laws, mostly relating to the sacrificial system. The delineation of laws is interrupted by a case study involving the willful breaking of the law: the desecration of Shabbat. The parashah then ends with the commandment to wear "fringes" (tzitzit) on one's garment as a reminder to obey God's laws. Notably, all these laws, even that of the tzitzit, are designated for all Israel—and apparently are inclusive of women. Otherwise, there is no explicit attention to women or to issues specifically relating to them. For implicit issues concerning women, see the comments on the sacrificial food such as the challah (bread dough offering, 15:19–21). Another indirect way to consider the roles of women in this parashah is to compare the story of the scouts in this parashah with the narrative involving Rahab the prostitute and the scouts in Joshua 2 (see introduction to Numbers 13, below).

The theme of rebellion is at the heart of this parashah.

—Nili Sacher Fox

Outline—

I. THE SCOUTS' EXPEDITION AND REPORT

Fear and Faithlessness (13:1–33)

- A. Moses chooses and instructs the scouts (vv. 1–20)
- B. The scouts reconnoiter Canaan (vv. 21–24)
- C. The scouts give their report and evaluation (vv. 25–33)

II. AFTERMATH OF THE SCOUTING EXPEDITION

The People's Rebellion and Divine Retribution (14:1–45)

- A. The scouts discourage the people with their report (vv. 1–5)
- B. Joshua and Caleb contradict the report (vv. 6–9)
- C. God punishes the community for its lack of faith (vv. 10–38)
- D. The people attempt a military expedition (vv. 39–45)

III. AN INSERTION OF A MISCELLANY OF LAWS (15:1–41)

- A. Sacrifices and their accompaniments (vv. 1–16)
- B. Challah: offering of the first dough (vv. 17–21)
- C. Inadvertent communal and individual wrongs (vv. 22–31)
- D. A case of willful Shabbat violation (vv. 32–36)
- E. The law of tzitzit (vv. 37–41)

13:1

לְהֹהֵה spoke to Moses, saying, ²“Send emissaries to scout the land of Canaan, which I am giving to the Israelite people; send one

ג וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹמֶשֶׁ לְאָמֵר : ۲ שְׁלַח־
לְكָנָנִים וַיְתַחַז אֶת־אֶרֶץ בְּנֵעַן אֲשֶׁר־אָנִי
נָתַן לְבָנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶחָד אִישׁ אֶחָד

The Scouts' Expedition and Report

FEAR AND FAITHLESSNESS (13:1–33)

The opening of this Torah portion is set in the Israelite encampment in the wilderness. At God's command, Moses appoints twelve chieftains, one from each tribe, for a scouting expedition to Canaan to spy out the land and its inhabitants. During their reconnaissance, the scouts cut down a huge cluster of grapes, as well as pomegranates and figs, to bring back to camp as samples of the land's produce. As they make their report, the scouts claim to have encountered populations of giants, inhabitants that dwarf their own size, convincing ten of the scouts that any conquest attempt is doomed to failure. Notably, subsequent scouting expeditions mentioned in the Bible produce the opposite effect, frightening the enemy rather than the Israelites (see Joshua 2; Judges 18). Most significant is the story about Rahab, the harlot in Jericho who risks her life by hiding the two Israelite spies sent by Joshua. In that account, a woman of Canaanite origin is depicted as a God-fearing individual who trusts in Israel's victory. In essence, she becomes the hero of the story, the conduit to Israel's military success.

The narrative in Numbers is a conflation of at least two traditions that reflect different written sources and result in discrepancies. (On J, E, and P as the scholarly names for those sources, see Women and Interpretation of the Torah, page xxxv.) The differences revolve around two issues: the geographical area of Canaan that is scouted, and the number of scouts who bring a positive report. In the earlier version (JE), the scouts reconnoiter the southern portion of Canaan (13:17), and Caleb alone recommends that Israel proceed with the conquest (13:30). The later priestly account (P) expands the scouting expedition so that they traverse the entire land of Canaan (13:21), plus it adds Joshua as a spokesman for undertaking the conquest (14:6–9).

MOSES CHOOSES AND INSTRUCTS THE SCOUTS (13:1–20)

The scouts represent the twelve tribes of Israel. The text reiterates their leadership status, probably to underscore their ultimate failure as leaders and to highlight their faithlessness. Moses instructs them to assess the strength of Canaan's inhabitants, both the size of their population and the settlements in which they reside. The scouts are also to evaluate the productivity of the land and return with samples of the fruit of the season (summer).

2. emissaries. Heb. anashim, whose basic meaning is “representative members of a group”;

► The scouts' story is the anti-myth of the Promised Land.

ANOTHER VIEW ▶ 886

► Separating challah is one of three commandments specifically associated with women.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ▶ 886

► This parashah challenges us to perceive the world in all its nuanced complexity.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ▶ 888

► I fill up my tallit. No matter my size, I always will.

VOICES ▶ 890

representative from each of their ancestral tribes, each one a chieftain among them.”³ So Moses, by יהוה’s command, sent them out from the wilderness of Paran, all of them being notables, leaders of the Israelites.⁴ And these were their names:

From the tribe of Reuben, Shammua son of Zaccur.

⁵From the tribe of Simeon, Shaphat son of Hori.

⁶From the tribe of Judah, Caleb son of Jephunneh.

⁷From the tribe of Issachar, Igal son of Joseph.

⁸From the tribe of Ephraim, Hosea son of Nun.

⁹From the tribe of Benjamin, Palti son of Rafu.

¹⁰From the tribe of Zebulun, Gaddiel son of Sodi.

¹¹From the tribe of Joseph, namely, the tribe of Manasseh, Gaddi son of Susi.

¹²From the tribe of Dan, Ammiel son of Gemalli.

¹³From the tribe of Asher, Sethur son of Michael.

¹⁴From the tribe of Naphtali, Nahbi son of Vophsi.

¹⁵From the tribe of Gad, Geuel son of Machi.

¹⁶Those were the names of the emissaries whom Moses sent to scout the land; but Moses changed the name of Hosea son of Nun to Joshua.

¹⁷When Moses sent them to scout the land of Canaan, he said to them, “Go up there into the traditionally it has often been translated as “men” or, more inclusively, “people.” Throughout this commentary, these individuals are referred to as “scouts,” not “spies” (as the Rabbis and later commentators often call them), since according to the present account, their mandate is to survey the land, not engage in espionage.

16. son of Nun. It is noteworthy that Joshua’s genealogy does not include a mother’s name (“matronymic”), like that of Moses (Exodus 6:20) and of notable Israelite kings, such as Amaziah, whose לִמְطָה אֲבֹתֵיכוּ תִשְׁלַחוּ כֹּל נְשִׂיא בְּהֶם:

³ וַיִּשְׁלַח אֶתְכֶם מֹשֶׁה מִמְּדֻבֶר פָּאָרֶן עַל־פִּי יהוָה כָּל מְנֻשִׁים רָאשִׁים בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל הַמֶּה:
⁴ וְאַלְהָ שְׁמוֹתָם

לִמְטָה רָאוּבֵן שְׁמוֹעֵן בְּנֵי־צָבָור:

⁵ לִמְטָה שְׁמַעוֹן שְׁפָט בְּנֵי־חֹווֹן:

⁶ לִמְטָה יְהוּדָה כָּלְבָן בְּנֵי־פְּנָה:

⁷ לִמְטָה יִשְׂכָר יִשְׁכָּר יִגְאָל בְּנֵי־יּוֹסֵף:

⁸ לִמְטָה אֲפְרִים הַוּשָׁע בְּנֵי־נוֹן:

⁹ לִמְטָה בְּנֵי־מְן פְּלִיטִי בְּנֵי־רְפָואָה:

¹⁰ לִמְטָה זְבוּלָן גְּדִיאָל בְּנֵי־סְזָדִי:

¹¹ לִמְטָה יוֹסֵף לִמְטָה מְנַשָּׁה גָּד בְּנֵי סּוֹסִי:

¹² לִמְטָה דָּן עַמְּיָאֵל בְּנֵי־גָמְלִי:

¹³ לִמְטָה אֲשֶׁר סְתוּרָה בְּנֵי־מִיכָּאֵל:

¹⁴ לִמְטָה נְפָתְלִי נְחָפִי בְּנֵי־יּוֹפָסִי:

¹⁵ לִמְטָה גָּד גָּוֹאָל בְּנֵי־מִקְיָה:

¹⁶ אלְהָ שְׁמוֹת הָאֲנָשִׁים אֲשֶׁר־שָׁלַח מֹשֶׁה לְתוֹר אֶת־הָאָרֶץ וַיַּקְרָא מֹשֶׁה לְהֹשָׁע בֶּן־נָנוֹן יְהוֹשָׁעַ:

¹⁷ וַיִּשְׁלַח אֶתְכֶם מֹשֶׁה לְתוֹר אֶת־הָאָרֶץ בְּנֵעַז וַיֹּאמֶר אֲלֵיכֶם עַלּוּ וְהַבְּנֵג וְעַלְיָתֶם אֶת־ mother’s name is Jehoaddan (II Kings 14:2), and Hezekiah, whose mother’s name is Abi (II Kings 18:2).

Joshua. Moses emends this chieftain’s name, which originally appears as Hoshe’ā (Hosea, v. 8), to Yhoshua (Joshua). The new first syllable yho may signify the deity name (“theophoric element”) associated with Israel’s God (as in the names of the Israelite kings Jehoshaphat, Jehoahaz, Jehoram, and others).

Negeb and on into the hill country,¹⁸ and see what kind of country it is. Are the people who dwell in it strong or weak, few or many?¹⁹ Is the country in which they dwell good or bad? Are the towns they live in open or fortified?²⁰ Is the soil rich or poor? Is it wooded or not? And take pains to bring back some of the fruit of the land.”—Now it happened to be the season of the first ripe grapes.

²¹They went up and scouted the land, from the wilderness of Zin to Rehob, at Lebo-hamath.²² They went up into the Negeb and came to Hebron, where lived Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmai, the Anakites.—Now Hebron was founded seven years before Zoan of Egypt.—²³ They reached the wadi Eshcol, and there they cut down a branch with a single cluster of grapes—it had to be borne on a carrying frame by two of them—and some pomegranates and figs.²⁴ That place was named the wadi Eshcol because of the cluster that the Israelites cut down there.

19. open or fortified. Canaanite settlements in the Bronze and Iron Ages consisted both of unwalled villages and of walled cities with fortified gates. The latter were constructed to withstand attacks and sieges; they required more advanced military machinery to penetrate. This information would have been strategically vital to a conquest plan.

THE SCOUTS RECONNOITER CANAAN (13:21–24)

The expedition outlined in these verses reflects a conflation of two traditions: the scouting of the entire land (v. 21) and the scouting of only the area of the city of Hebron and south (vv. 22–24). In the region of Hebron, the scouts encounter clans of aboriginal giants.

The grapes, pomegranates, and figs that they bring back—all late summer fruit—suggest the season of the harvest:¹⁸ וְרָאִיתֶם אֶת־הָאָרֶץ מַה־הָאָרֶץ וְאֶת־הָעֵמֶד הַיֹּשֵׁב עֲלֵיהֶה הַחֲזָקָה הוּא הַרְפָּהָה הַמְּעֻטָּה הוּא אַסְמָרָב: ¹⁹ וּמָה הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־הוּא יִשְׁבֶּן בָּהּ הַטוֹּבָה הוּא אַסְמָרָה וּמָה הַעֲלִים אֲשֶׁר־הוּא יוֹשֵׁב בָּהֶנֶּה הַבְּמִחְנִים אֲםָם בְּמַבְצָרִים: ²⁰ וּמָה הָאָרֶץ הַשְׁמָמָה הָוּא אַסְמָרָה הַיִשְׁבָּה עַז אַסְמָרָן וְהַתְּחִזְקָתָם וְלִקְחָתָם מִפְּרִי הָאָרֶץ וְהַיִםִים יָמֵי בְּפּוּרִי עֲנָבִים:

²¹ וַיַּעַל וַיַּתְּרוּ אֶת־הָאָרֶץ מִפְּרִבְּרִצָּן עַד־רְחַבָּל בָּבָא חַמְתָּה: ²² וַיַּעַל בְּנֶגֶב וַיַּבָּא עַד־חֶבְרוֹן וְשֵׁם אֲחִימָן שְׂשֵׁי וּתְלֵמִי יְלִיקָּי הַעֲנָק וְחֶבְרוֹן שְׁבַע שָׁנִים נִבְנָתָה לִפְנֵי צָעֵן מִצְרָיִם: ²³ וַיַּבָּא עַד־נַחַל אַשְׁכָּל וַיַּכְרֹתָו מִשְׁמָן זָמָרָה וְאַשְׁכָּל עֲנָבִים אֶחָד וַיַּשְׁאַהֲרֹן בְּמִזְבֵּחַ בְּשָׁנִים וּמִן־הַרְמָנִים וּמִן־הַתְּאַנְּים: ²⁴ לְפָקוֹם הָהּוּא קָרָא נַחַל אַשְׁכָּל עַל אֶדְוֹת הָאַשְׁכָּל אֲשֶׁר־כְּרָתָו מִשְׁמָן בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל:

the expedition. But since in the Bible these fruits commonly symbolize the productivity of the Promised Land, they may also be simply a literary device.

THE SCOUTS GIVE THEIR REPORT AND EVALUATION (13:25–33)

Upon their return, the scouts begin by highlighting the positive aspects of the land. Yet, they quickly change their tone and dwell on its negative features, mainly its formidable population and cities.

At first, Caleb is the only scout who speaks favorably of an Israelite conquest of Canaan. Joshua's role as a faithful leader does not appear until later in the narrative (14:6), which is a section clearly derived from an alternate tradition. (Caleb, the chieftain who represents Judah, will continue to play a key role in the conquest of Canaan, particularly in the tribal territory of Judah. In Joshua

²⁵At the end of forty days they returned from scouting the land. ²⁶They went straight to Moses and Aaron and the whole Israelite community at Kadesh in the wilderness of Paran, and they made their report to them and to the whole community, as they showed them the fruit of the land. ²⁷This is what they told him: “We came to the land you sent us to; it does indeed flow with milk and honey, and this is its fruit. ²⁸However, the people who inhabit the country are powerful, and the cities are fortified and very large; moreover, we saw the Anakites there. ²⁹Amalekites dwell in the Negeb region; Hittites, Jebusites, and Amorites inhabit the hill country; and Canaanites dwell by the Sea and along the Jordan.”

²⁵וַיִּשְׁבּוּ מִתְּבוֹר הָאָרֶץ מֵקַץ אֲרָבָים יוֹם :
²⁶וַיָּלְכּוּ וַיָּבֹא אֶל-מִשְׁׁה וְאֶל-אַהֲרֹן וְאֶל-
כָּל-עֲדָת בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶל-מִדְבָּר פָּארָן
קָדְשָׁה וַיִּשְׁבּוּ אֶתְּנָתְּנָה אֶתְּנָתְּנָה
וַיַּרְא אֹם אֶת-פְּרוּז הָאָרֶץ : ²⁷וַיִּסְפְּרוּלְוּ
וַיֹּאמְרוּ בְּאָנוּ אֶל-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר שָׁלַחְתָּנוּ
וְגֹמֶן זְבַת חָלֵב וּדְבַשׂ הוּא זְהָה-פְּרִיה :
²⁸אֲפָס בַּיּוֹן הָעַם הַשְׁבָּב בָּאָרֶץ וְהַעֲלוֹם
בָּצְרוֹת גָּדְלָת מָאָד וְגַם-ילְדוֹ דָּעֵנָק רָאֵינוּ
שֶׁם : ²⁹עַמְלִיק יוֹשֵׁב בָּאָרֶץ הַנֶּגֶב וְחַחְתִּי
וְהַיְבוֹסִי וְהַאֲמָרִי יוֹשֵׁב בְּהָר וְהַכְּנָעָנִי יוֹשֵׁב
עַל-הָרִים וְעַל יַד הַירָּקָן :

15:13–19 and Judges 1:12–15, he promises his daughter Achsah in marriage to the conqueror of the city of Kiriath-Sepher, also known as Debir. The narrative then gives voice to Achsah as she cleverly appeals to Caleb's sense of honor as a father, prompting him to bestow property with water springs in the Negeb to her and her new husband, Othniel.)

25. forty days. The duration of the scouting expedition is formulaic and reminiscent of other significant events, such as the length of the Flood (Genesis 7:17) and the amount of time Moses spent on Mount Sinai (Exodus 24:18).

27. flow with milk and honey. As an epithet for the Promised Land, this biblical phrase (also Exodus 3:8, 17) has been used through the ages, even in modern times.

Heb. d'vash can refer either to a sweet syrup made from mashed dates or to bees' honey. A recent archaeological discovery in the Beit She'an Valley of a large beehive colony dated to the 10th–9th century B.C.E. now proves that beekeeping for production of honey was an industry in biblical Israel.

28. Anakites. They and the Nephilim (v. 33) are giants or super-humans mentioned also in other biblical texts. Genesis 6:1–4 recounts the origin of the Nephilim. David's Philistine adversary, Goliath, is depicted as a giant (I Samuel 17:4) descended from another group of giants, the Rephaim (I Chronicles 20:5–6).

It is difficult to interpret the meaning of “giants” in the scouts' report. In the case of the Philistines, it may be that their tall headdresses (pictured in Egyptian art) contributed to their gigantic image. More importantly, the report of giants in the land makes the Canaanites more intimidating and their eventual defeat by the Israelites more spectacular. Notably, Anakites are also mentioned in Egyptian literature (Papyrus Anastasi I, Context of Scripture, 2002, 3:13) where they are identified as Shasu (a nomadic group) about 6'8"–8'6" (2–2.6 meters) tall. The Shasu were enemies of the Egyptians and their depiction as giants functions as a literary device similar to that in the biblical story. Some scholars actually connect the Shasu with proto-Israelites.

29. Amalekites...Hittites, Jebusites, and Amorites. For the indigenous population of Canaan, see the table of nations in Genesis 10:15–20. Deuteronomy 7:1–3 includes most of these among the people who must be destroyed upon Israel's entering the land; that passage (as well as Exodus 34:11–16) also forbids giving daughters in marriage to these groups or taking daughters from them.

³⁰Caleb hushed the people before Moses and said, “Let us by all means go up, and we shall gain possession of it, for we shall surely overcome it.”

³¹But the emissaries who had gone up with him said, “We cannot attack that people, for it is stronger than we.” ³²Thus they spread calumnies among the Israelites about the land they had scouted, saying, “The country that we traversed and scouted is one that devours its settlers. All the people that we saw in it are of great size; ³³we saw the Nephilim there—the Anakites are part of the Nephilim—and we looked like grasshoppers to ourselves, and so we must have looked to them.”

14 The whole community broke into loud cries, and the people wept that night. ²All the Israelites railed against Moses and Aaron. “If only we had died in the land of Egypt,” the whole community shouted at them, “or if only we might die in

³⁰וַיְהִי כֹּלֶב אֶחָד עַמּוֹ אֶל-מֹשֶׁה וַיֹּאמֶר עַלְהָ גַּעֲלָה וַיַּרְשֵׁנוּ אֶתְهָ פִּיכְבוֹל נָכָל לְהָ:

³¹וְהַאֲנָשִׁים אֲשֶׁר-עָלָו עַמּוֹ אָמְרוּ לֹא נָכָל לְעָלוֹת אֶל-הָעָם קִידְמָק הוּא מִמְּנוּ: ³²וַיֹּצִיאוּ דְבַת הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר תַּרְאָו אֶתְהָ אֶל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאָמַר הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר עַבְרָנוּ בָּהּ לְתֹור אֶתְהָ אָרֶץ אֲכָלָת יוֹשְׁבֵיהָ הוּא וּכְלָדָעָם אֲשֶׁר-רָאִינוּ בַּתּוֹךְ אָנָשִׁי מִדּוֹת: ³³וְשָׁם רָאִינוּ אֶת-הַנְּפִילִים בְּנֵי עַנְקָ מִן-הַנְּפִילִים וְנָהָיָ בְּעִינֵינוּ כַּחֲגָבִים וּבְנִ

הַיּוֹנוּ בְּעִינֵיכֶם:

יד וַתִּשְׁאַל כָּל-הָעָדָה וַיִּתְנוּ אֶת-קוֹלָם וַיַּבְכוּ הָעָם בְּלִילָה הַהְיוֹא: ² וַיָּלֹן עַל-מֹשֶׁה וְעַל-אַהֲרֹן כֹּל בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיֹּאמְרוּ אֱלֹהֶם כָּל-הָעָדָה לוֹרַתְנוּ בָּאָרֶץ מַצְרִים

32. devours its settlers. Most likely, this phrase alludes to the results of frequent warfare, which ravaged Canaan (see Ezekiel 36:13–14). An alternate explanation is that the expression refers to the infertility of the land, but this would contradict the scouts’ earlier report and hence is less likely.

33. we looked like grasshoppers. The scouts underscore the enormous size of the giants of Canaan by depicting their own stature in comparison.

fiery anger—which threatens to annihilate the whole nation. As before, Moses becomes an intercessor, a part he has learned to play well. Still, here the punishment is most severe and far-reaching.

THE SCOUTS DISCOURAGE THE PEOPLE WITH THEIR REPORT (14:1–5)

Reacting to the scouts’ frightening description of the fierce inhabitants of Canaan, the Israelites cry out in fear. Clearly, they have accepted the veracity of the scouts’ military analysis and expect to be defeated. They are ready to return to Egypt rather than face the enemy in Canaan, apparently having forgotten the wrath of the Egyptian army that pursued them when they escaped from Egypt. It appears that the series of murmurings and rebellions in the wilderness has reached a climax at the gates of the Promised Land.

1. The whole community. This phrase indicates the widespread nature of the rebellion. Presumably the women are included.

Aftermath of the Scouting Expedition

THE PEOPLE'S REBELLION AND DIVINE RETRIBUTION (14:1–45)

In the continuous cycle of rebellions by the Israelites in the wilderness, this one is the most egregious. The ten scouts who incite the populace advocate abandoning Israel’s ultimate goal of settling the Promised Land. This extreme display of faithlessness before God, similar to that in the Golden Calf episode (Exodus 32), provokes God’s this wilderness!”³“Why is יְהוָה taking us to that land to fall by the sword?” “Our wives and children will be carried off! It would be better for us to go back to Egypt!”⁴And they said to one another, “Let us head back for Egypt.”

⁵Then Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before all the assembled congregation of Israelites.⁶And Joshua son of Nun and Caleb son of Je-phunneh, of those who had scouted the land, rent their clothes⁷and exhorted the whole Israelite community: “The land that we traversed and scouted is an exceedingly good land.⁸If pleased with us, יְהוָה will bring us into that land, a land that flows with milk and honey, and give it to us;⁹only you must not rebel against יְהוָה. Have no fear then of the people of the country, for they are our prey: their protection has departed from them, but is with us. Have no fear of them!”¹⁰As the whole community threatened to pelt them with stones, the או בפֶּרֶב הַזֶּה לוֹמְתָנוּ: ³ וְלֹמֶה יְהוָה מִבֵּיא אֶתְנוּ אֲלֵהָאָרֶץ הַזֹּאת לְגַפֵּל בְּחַרְבָּנָשִׁינוּ וְטַפְנוּ יְהִי לְבּוֹ חֶלוֹא טֻוב לְנוּ שׁוֹב מִצְרַיָּה: ⁴ וַיֹּאמְרוּ אַישׁ אֲלֵאָחִיו נַתְנָה רָאשׁ וְנִשְׂוָה מִצְרַיָּה:

⁵ וַיַּפְלֵל מֹשֶׁה וְאַהֲרֹן עַל-פְּנֵיהם לְפָנֵי כָּל-ק֨הֶל עֲדָת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁶ וַיַּהֲשַׁע בְּנֵי-וְכָל-בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל עַל-פְּנֵיהֶם מִן-הַתְּרִירִים אֲתִיהָאָרֶץ קָרְעָוּ בְּגִידָהֶם: ⁷ וַיֹּאמְרוּ אֲלֵאָכֶל-עֲדָת בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאָמֵר הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר עַבְרָנוּ בָּהּ לְתוֹר אֲתָה טוֹבָה הָאָרֶץ מְאָד מְאָד:

⁸ אַמְּחַפֵּץ בְּנֵי יְהוָה וְהַבִּיא אֶתְנוּ אֲלֵהָאָרֶץ הַזֹּאת וְנַתְנָה לְנוּ אָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר-דָּדוֹא זְבַת חָלֵב וּדְבָשָׁה: ⁹ אָךְ בַּיְהָוָה אֲלֵתְמִרְדּוֹ וְאַתָּם אֲלֵתִירָאוּ אֲתִיעָם הָאָרֶץ בַּי לְחַמְנוּ הַמ סָר צָלֵם מַעֲלִיקָם וַיֹּהָוָה אֶתְנוּ אֲלֵתִירָם: ¹⁰ וַיֹּאמְרוּ בְּלֵהָעֶדרָה לְרָגְום אֶתְכֶם

3. “Our wives and children will be carried off!” Several biblical texts describe situations in which women and children are carried off as booty. In one case, I Samuel 30, David rescues the wives and children of his men (and his own family as well). Commonly, the attackers kill the captive wives but keep alive the virgins, “women who have not known a man” (see Judges 21). Deuteronomic law regulates the treatment of women taken captive by Israelite men (Deuteronomy 21:10–14).

4. “Let us head back.” The Hebrew phrase can also mean “let us appoint a leader,” indicating that the Israelites are ready to replace Moses and return to Egypt under new leadership.

5. Desperate, Moses and Aaron prostrate themselves before the people. They seem helpless in the face of a national rebellion that questions not only the Israelites’ allegiance to God but also their human leadership.

JOSHUA AND CALEB CONTRADICT THE REPORT (14:6–9)

In the face of Moses and Aaron’s temporary abdication of leadership, Joshua and Caleb assume responsibility. They staunchly articulate that the outcome of the mission will be determined by Israel’s God, not by military fortitude. The extent of the people’s rebellion is evident by their readiness to stone Joshua and Caleb. It is only the sudden appearance of God’s Presence before the people that saves them.

6. rent their clothes. This act, a sign of grief and mourning, probably took the place of mutilating oneself with gashes and the like (a biblical prohibition, Leviticus 19:28). Tearing one’s garment is an ancient custom that has survived to the present day. In the Bible, for example, King David’s daughter Tamar rends her garments, puts dust Presence of יהוה appeared in the Tent of Meeting to all the Israelites.

¹¹And said to Moses, “How long will this people spurn Me, and how long will they have no faith in Me despite all the signs that I have performed in their midst? ¹²I will strike them with pestilence and disown them, and I will make of you a nation far more numerous than they!” ¹³But Moses said to יהוה, “When the Egyptians, from whose midst You brought up this people in Your might, hear the news, ¹⁴they will tell it to the inhabitants of that land. Now they have heard that You, יהוה, are in the midst of this people; that You, יהוה, appear in plain sight when Your cloud rests over them and when You go before them in a pillar of cloud by day and in a pillar of fire by night. ¹⁵If then You slay this people wholesale, the nations who have heard Your fame will say, ¹⁶‘It must be because יהוה was powerless to bring that people on her head, and cries loudly, grieving after her half-brother Amnon rapes her (II Samuel 13; compare also Genesis 44:13).

GOD PUNISHES THE COMMUNITY FOR ITS LACK OF FAITH (14:10–38)

God is prepared to eradicate all Israel in a plague—with the exception of Moses, from whose descendants God proposes to create a new nation. Since the sins surrounding the scouting expedition and the Golden Calf (Exodus 32) are the only two events eliciting such severe divine retribution, it seems that their gravity is comparable. As in the past, Moses intercedes on behalf of the people. He argues first that God’s reputation among the nations as a most powerful deity must be preserved; his second argument appeals to God’s attribute of mercy (see Exodus 34:6–7). Moses’ lengthy prayer for the nation contrasts sharply with his very brief prayer on behalf of his sister Miriam (12:13), who was stricken with a skin disease for challenging Moses’ position.

בְּאָבָנִים וּכְבָד יְהוָה נִרְאָה בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד
 אֶל-כָּל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: כ
 11 וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל-מֹשֶׁה עַד-آنָה יִנְאַעֲנֵי
 הַעַם הַזֶּה וְעַד-آنָה לֹא-יִאֱמִינֵנוּ בַּי בְּכָל-הַאֲתֹות אֲשֶׁר עֲשִׂיתִי בְּקָרְבָּו: 12 אַבְנֵי
 בְּצָבָר וְאַוְרְשָׁנָה וְאַעֲשָׂה אֶת-כֵּן לְגַוְיִ-גְּדוֹלָה
 וְעַצּוּם מִפְנֵנו: 13 וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶל-יְהוָה
 וְשָׁמַעוּ מִצְרָיִם פִּי-הָעָלִית בְּכָחָךְ אַתְּ-הָעָם
 הַזֶּה מִקְרָבוֹ: 14 וְאַמְرֵו אֶל-יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּקָרְבָּה הָעָם
 הַזֶּה אֲשֶׁר-עִין בַּעַין נִרְאָה | אַתָּה יְהוָה
 וְעַנְנָה עַמְּד עַלְלָהֶם וּבַעֲמָד עַנְנָה אַתָּה
 הַלְּךָ לִפְנֵיכֶם יוֹמָם וּבְעַמּוֹד אַשׁ אַתָּה
 15 וְהַמְּתָה אַתְּ-הָעָם הַזֶּה בְּאֵישׁ אֶחָד
 וְאַמְרֵו הָגּוּם אֲשֶׁר-שָׁמַעוּ אֶת-שְׁמַעַךְ
 לְאָמֵר: 16 מִבְּלַתִּי יִכְלַת יְהוָה לְהַבִּיא

As is often the case in the Torah, God responds favorably to Moses’ plea, promising to spare the nation. The Israelites are condemned to wander in the wilderness until nearly all the adults have died, presumably of natural causes (vv. 22–23, 28–33); but the ten faithless scouts are struck down on the spot (vv. 36–37). The tribe of Levi is not among those who are doomed to die in the wilderness, apparently because it had not been represented among the scouts. Of the remaining Israelites, only Joshua and Caleb and the children “born in the wilderness” will enter the Promised Land.

God’s decree in this passage is woven from two sources or traditions, JE (vv. 20–24) and a priestly source (vv. 26–38). (On these sources, see Women and Interpretation of the Torah, page xxxvi.) In the former, only Caleb is singled out to be spared (v. 24) because he alone among the scouts was faithful; in the latter, both Caleb and Joshua are listed as those who will settle Canaan (v. 30).

10. Presence. Heb. kavod, the typical term for describing God’s manifestation in a cloud in priestly writings.

into the land promised them on oath that [that god] slaughtered them in the wilderness.¹⁷ Therefore, I pray, let my lord's forbearance be great, as You have declared, saying,¹⁸ “יְהוָה! slow to anger and abounding in kindness; forgiving iniquity and transgression; yet not remitting all punishment, but visiting the iniquity of parents upon children, upon the third and fourth generations.”¹⁹ Pardon, I pray, the iniquity of this people according to Your great kindness, as You have forgiven this people ever since Egypt.”

²⁰ And said, “I pardon, as you have asked. ²¹ Nevertheless, as I live and as יְהוָה's Presence fills the whole world,²² none of the adults who have seen My Presence and the signs that I have performed in Egypt and in the wilderness, and who have tried Me these many times and have disobeyed Me,²³ shall see the land that I promised on oath to their fathers; none of those who spurn Me shall see it.²⁴ But My servant Caleb, because he was imbued with a different spirit and remained loyal to Me—him will I bring into the land that he entered, and his offspring shall hold it as a possession.²⁵ Now the Amalekites and the Canaanites occupy the valleys. Start out, then, tomorrow and march into the wilderness by way of the Sea of Reeds.”

18. “יְהוָה! slow to anger... visiting the iniquity of parents upon children.” The entire formula of God’s attributes is found in Exodus 34:6–7; portions are quoted here as well as in the Decalogue (Exodus 20:5–6; Deuteronomy 5:9–10). Moses is clearly appealing to God’s merciful nature, which should prevent God from carrying out the threat to slaughter the entire nation. Simultaneously, Moses notes that God does not remit full punishment; in fact, future generations share the punishment of their guilty ancestors. Deuteronomy offers a different perspective on this matter, arguing that subsequent generations are punished only if they persist in those sins (Deuteronomy 5:9–10).

21. “as I live.” This expression, also found in את-העם הזיה אל-הארץ אשר-גנשבע

לهم וישחתם במדבר: ¹⁷ ועתה יגדל-נא
בך אדני פאשר דברת לאמר: ¹⁸ יהוה
ארך אפים ורב-חסד נושא עון ופשע
ונקה לא ינקה פקד עון אבות על-בניהם
על-שלשים ועל-רבעים: ¹⁹ סלח-נא לעון
העם הזיה בגדי חסך וכאשר נשא-ת-ה
לעם הזיה ממצרים ועד-הנה: ²⁰
ויאמר יהוה סלחתי בךברך: ²¹ ואולם
חי-אני ומלא כבוד-יהוה את-כל-הארץ:
²² כי כל-האנשימים הראים את-כבדי ואת-את-תמי אשר-עשיתי במצרים ובמדבר
וינסו את-זה עשר פעמים ולא שמעו
בקול: ²³ אם-יראו את-הארץ אשר-
נסבעה לאותם וכל-מנאציו לא יראו:
²⁴ ושבתי כלב עקב היהת רוח אחרת עמו
וימלא אחרי והביאתי אל-הארץ אשר-בא שמה וירעו יורשה: ²⁵ והעמלקי
והכנען יושב בעמק מחר פנו וסע לך המדבר הארץ ימסוף: פ

v. 28, is an oath formula. God vows to mitigate the people’s punishment so as to not wipe out the entire nation.

22. “none of the adults.” Except for Joshua, Caleb, and the tribe of Levi (see above), the current adult generation will not inherit Canaan; instead, they will perish in the wilderness according to their wish expressed earlier (v. 2). In essence, the wilderness becomes a vehicle for cleansing the sin of the older generation and preparing the younger Israelites to become the new inheritors of the Promised Land.

25. After having prepared them to enter the Promised Land, God now orders the Israelites to retreat from the border of Canaan back into the wilderness.

²⁶ spoke further to Moses and Aaron,
²⁷ “How much longer shall that wicked community keep muttering against Me? Very well, I have heeded the incessant muttering of the Israelites against Me. ²⁸ Say to them: ‘As I live,’ says I, ‘I will do to you just as you have urged Me. ²⁹ In this very wilderness shall your carcasses drop. Of all of you [men] who were recorded in your various lists from the age of twenty years up, you who have muttered against Me, ³⁰ not one shall enter the land in which I swore to settle you—save Caleb son of Jephunneh and Joshua son of Nun. ³¹ Your children who, you said, would be carried off—these will I allow to enter; they shall know the land that you have rejected. ³² But your carcasses shall drop in this wilderness, ³³ while your children roam the wilderness for forty years, suffering for your faithlessness, until the last of your carcasses is down in the wilderness. ³⁴ You shall bear your punishment for forty years, corresponding to the number of days—forty days—that you scouted the land: a year for each day. Thus you shall know what it means to thwart Me. ³⁵ I have spoken: Thus will I do to all that wicked band that has banded together against Me: in this very wilderness they shall die and so be finished off.”

³⁶ As for the emissaries whom Moses sent to scout the land, those who came back and caused the whole community to mutter against him by spreading calumnies about the land—³⁷ those who spread such calumnies about the land died of plague, by וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵ־מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל־אַהֲרֹן:

²⁷ עַד־מִתְּנִי לְעֵדָה הָרָעָה הַזֹּאת
 אֲשֶׁר הָפָה מְלִינִים עַלְיָ אֶת־תִּתְלֹוֹת בְּנֵי
 יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר הָפָה מְלִינִים עַלְיָ שְׁמֻעָתִי:
²⁸ אָמַר אֱלֹהִים חִרְאָנִי נָאָמֵן יְהוָה אָמֵן לֹא
 בְּאָשֶׁר דְּבָרָתִם בָּאוּ נָעָשָׂה לְכֶם:
²⁹ בַּמְּדָבָר הַזֶּה יַפְלוּ פְגִירָכֶם וּבְלִפְקָדִיכֶם
 לְכָל־מִסְפְּרֵיכֶם מִבֵּן עֲשָׂרִים שָׁנָה וּמַעַלָּה
 אֲשֶׁר הָלִינְתֶּם עַלְיָ: ³⁰ אָמֵן־אַתֶּם תָּבוֹא
 אֲלֹהָהָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר נָשָׂאְתֶּל אֶת־יְהִי לְשָׁבֵן
 אֲתֶכְם בָּהּ כִּי אָמֵן־כָּלְבָן־יְהִינְפָּה וִיהִוָּשָׁע
 בְּנֵנוֹן: ³¹ וּטְפָלָכֶם אֲשֶׁר אָמְרָתָם לְבָנֵי יְהִי
 וְהַבִּיאָתִי אַתֶּם וַיַּדְעָו אֶת־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר
 מַאֲسָתֶם בָּהּ: ³² וּפְגִירָיכֶם אַתֶּם יַפְלוּ
 בַּמְּדָבָר הַזֶּה: ³³ וּבְנִיכְם יַחֲזִיקְנָה רְעוּם בַּמְּדָבָר
 אַרְבָּעִים שָׁנָה וּנְשָׂאָו אֶת־עֲזָנֹתֵיכֶם עַד־תִּמְמָרֵת
 פְגִירָיכֶם בַּמְּדָבָר: ³⁴ בְּמִסְפָּר הַיּוֹם אֲשֶׁר
 תִּרְתְּמֵת אֶת־הָאָרֶץ אַרְבָּעִים יוֹם יוֹם לְשָׁנָה
 יוֹם לְשָׁנָה תְּשַׁאֲל אֶת־עֲזָנֹתֵיכֶם אַרְבָּעִים
 שָׁנָה וַיַּדְעָתֶם אֶת־תְּנָאָתִי: ³⁵ אָנָּנוּ יְהִוָּה
 דָּבְרָתִי אָמֵן לֹא זֹאת עֲשָׂה לְכָל־הָעֵדָה
 הָרָעָה הַזֹּאת נְגֹועָדִים עַלְיָ בַּמְּדָבָר הַזֶּה
 יַתְּמוּ וְשָׁם יִמְתֹּהוּ:

³⁶ וְהַאֲנָשִׁים אֲשֶׁר־שָׁלַח מֹשֶׁה לְתוֹרָא אֶת־
 הָאָרֶץ וַיֵּשֶׁבּוּ וַיָּלֹנוּ וַיַּלְמֹדוּ עַלְיוֹ אֶת־בְּלָדָה
 הָעֵדָה לְהֹצִיא דְבָה עַל־הָאָרֶץ: ³⁷ וַיָּמָתְהוּ
 הָאֲנָשִׁים מַוְצָּאִי דָבְתִּי־הָאָרֶץ רָעה בְּמַגָּפָה

29. “you [men].” Here an insertion reminds the reader that the census in question had counted only battle-worthy men (1:2–3).

33. “suffering for your faithlessness.” Literally, “bearing your harlotry,” indicating the infidelity of the older generation to God. The Bible often uses the term “harlotry” metaphorically to refer to Israelite idolatrous practices, a manifestation of their infidelity to God (see especially Hosea 1–3). This pejorative image is underscored in some of the biblical depictions of the harlot (as in Proverbs 23:27).

37. The ten scouts who incited the rebellion with their negative report die in a plague sent by God. Their sin is too grave to mitigate. That they get no second chance is a reflection of just how seriously the Bible treats the responsibilities of leadership; indeed, these scouts demonstrated the huge impact that a leader can have.

the will of יהוה.³⁸ Of those emissaries who had gone to scout the land, only Joshua son of Nun and Caleb son of Jephunneh survived.

³⁹ When Moses repeated these words to all the Israelites, the people were overcome by grief.

⁴⁰ Early next morning [their fighting force] set out toward the crest of the hill country, saying, “We are prepared to go up to the place that יהוה has spoken of, for we were wrong.”⁴¹ But Moses said, “Why do you transgress יהוה’s command? This will not succeed.⁴² Do not go up, lest you be routed by your enemies, for יהוה is not in your midst.⁴³ For the Amalekites and the Canaanites will be there to face you, and you will fall by the sword, inasmuch as you have turned from following יהוה and will not be with you.”

⁴⁴ Yet defiantly they marched toward the crest of the hill country, though neither יהוה’s Ark of the Covenant nor Moses stirred from the camp.⁴⁵ And the Amalekites and the Canaanites who dwelt in that hill country came down and dealt them a shattering blow at Hormah.

15 יהוה spoke to Moses, saying: ² Speak to the Israelite people and say to them:

THE PEOPLE ATTEMPT A MILITARY EXPEDITION (14:39–45)

A group of Israelites attempts to invade Canaan despite a warning to the contrary. Their motivation is either regret for their previous open lack of trust in God or a hope to reverse God’s decree. In any case, the invasion fails, and they are defeated. The message here is clear: without God’s blessing and presence in battle (marked by the accompanying Ark), conquest is impossible. The function of the Ark in the military camp is also emphasized in this section.

45. Hormah. This place name, meaning “destruction,” also indicates that the Amalekites and Canaanites utterly defeated the invading Israelites.

לפנֵי יהוה: ³⁸ ויהושע בנו נון וככלב בן־
יפנה חיו מנהנשימים הם ההלכים
לתוֹר אֶת־הָאָרֶץ:

³⁹ וידבר משה את־הדברים האלה אל־
כל־בנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל ויתאבלו העם מאד:
⁴⁰ ונשבמו בפקר ויעלו אל־ראש־ההר
לאמר הנו ועلينו אל־המקום אשר אמר
יהוה כי חטינו: ⁴¹ ויאמר משה לפה
זה אתם עברים את־פי יהוה והוא לא תצליח: ⁴² אל־תעלו כי אין יהוה בקרבתכם
ולא תגפו לפנֵי איביכם: ⁴³ כי העמלקי
והכנען שם לפניכם ונפלתם בחרב כי־
על־כן שבתם מאחרי יהוה ולא־ידינה יהוה עמכם:

⁴⁴ ויעפלו לעלות אל־ראש ההר וארון
ברית־יהוה ומשה לא־מוש מקרב
המחנה: ⁴⁵ וירד העמלקי והכנען־
הישב בהר והוא ניכר ויבתום עד־ החרמה: פ

טו וידבר יהוה אל־משה לאמר: ² דבר
אל־בנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל ואמրת אל־הם

An Insertion of a Miscellany of Laws (15:1–41)

Legal material interrupts the narrative of the wandering in the wilderness. Its purpose, immediately following God’s punishment of the faithless Israelites, may be to reiterate the promise that eventually they will indeed inherit Canaan—as signaled by the introduction to the first two sets of laws: “When you enter the land” (vv. 2, 18). The laws in this unit, with the exception of the last, deal with the sacrificial system. The last law, about tzitzit (fringes), is preceded by a case study of a wood-gatherer who violates Shabbat and is stoned to death by the community. The placement of the

When you enter the land that I am giving you to settle in,³ and would present an offering by fire to from the herd or from the flock, be it burnt offering or sacrifice, in fulfillment of a vow explicitly uttered, or as a freewill offering, or at your fixed occasions, producing an odor pleasing to יְהוָה:

⁴The person who presents the offering to יְהוָה shall bring as a meal offering: a tenth of a measure of choice flour with a quarter of a hin of oil mixed in.⁵You shall also offer, with the burnt offering or the sacrifice, a quarter of a hin of wine as a libation for each sheep.

⁶In the case of a ram, you shall present as a meal offering: two-tenths of a measure of choice flour with a third of a hin of oil mixed in;⁷ and a third of a hin of wine as a libation—as an offering of pleasing odor to יְהוָה.

⁸And if it is an animal from the herd that you offer to יְהוָה as a burnt offering or as a sacrifice, in fulfillment of a vow explicitly uttered or as an offering of well-being,⁹ there shall be offered a meal offering along with the animal: three-tenths of a measure of choice flour with half a hin of oil mixed in;¹⁰ and as libation you shall offer half a hin of wine—these being offerings by fire of pleasing odor to יְהוָה.

¹¹Thus shall be done with each ox, with each ram, and with any sheep or goat,¹² as many as you offer; you shall do thus with each one, as many as law of tzitzit after that case is probably designed to illustrate how to prevent such violations of the commandments in the first place.

Many scholars maintain that the laws in Numbers 15 are late (post-exilic), serving to complement and supplement earlier laws in other parts of the Torah.

SACRIFICES AND THEIR ACCOMPANIMENTS (15:1–16)

This section of laws addresses the individual Israelite regarding the correct combination of ingredients for the various sacrifices. The rituals outlined here call for animal burnt offerings (olah) and offerings of well-being (zevach) to be accompanied by a grain and oil mixture and wine (see Leviticus 1–3; 6–7), the combination being reminiscent of a complete meal. In the case of sacrifices, the meal is for the Deity. Although the Bible describes these offerings as “producing an odor pleasing to יְהוָה,” it never states that God actually eats them.

4. hin. An Egyptian liquid measure equal to approximately six liters (1½ gallons).

mixed in. Or possibly “poured over.”

כִּי תָבֹא אֶל־אָרֶץ מוֹשֵׁבְתֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר אַנְתָּן לְכֶם: ³ וְעַשִּׂיתֶם אֲשֶׁר לִיהוָה עֶלְה אֹזֶבֶח לְפָלָאַנְדָר אוֹ בְנְדָבָה אוֹ בְמַעֲדִיכֶם לְעַשּׂות רִיחַ נִיחַח לִיהוָה מִן־הַבָּקָר אוֹ מִן־הַצָּאן:

⁴ וְהַקְרִיב הַמִּקְרֵיב קָרְבָּנו לִיהוָה מִנְחָה סְלָת עִשְׂרוֹן בְּלֹול בְּרִבְעִית הַחִין שְׁמָנִים: ⁵ וַיְיָן לְגַסְר רְבִיעִית הַחִין תַּעֲשֵׂה עַל־הַעַלְלָה אָוְלָבָח לְבַבְשׂ הַחֲדָד:

⁶ אָוְלָבָח תַּעֲשֵׂה מִנְחָה סְלָת שְׁנִי עִשְׂרָנִים בְּלוֹלה בְּשְׁמָנִים שְׁלִשִּׁית הַחִין: ⁷ וַיְיָן לְגַסְר שְׁלִשִּׁית הַחִין תַּקְרִיב רִיחַ נִיחַח לִיהוָה:

⁸ וּכְיִתְעַשֶּׂה בְּנַצְבָּקָר עַלְלָה אֹזֶבֶח לְפָלָאַנְדָר אֹזֶשְׁלָמִים לִיהוָה: ⁹ וְהַקְרִיב עַל־בָּנְיַן הַבָּקָר מִנְחָה סְלָת שְׁלִשִּׁית עִשְׂרָנִים בְּלוֹל בְּשְׁמָנִים חֲצֵי הַחִין: ¹⁰ וַיְיָן תַּקְרִיב לְבַסְרָחָצֵי הַחִין אֲשֶׁר רִיחַ נִיחַח לִיהוָה:

¹¹ כִּבְכָה יַעֲשֵׂה לְשׁוֹר הַחֲדָד אָוְלָבָח כִּבְכָה אֹזֶלֶשֶׁה בְּבַבְשִׁים אָוְ בעִזִּים: ¹² בְּמִסְפֵּר אֲשֶׁר תַּעֲשֵׂה כִּבְכָה תַּעֲשֵׂה לְאַחֲר

there are.¹³ Every citizen, when presenting an offering by fire of pleasing odor to יהוה, shall do so with them.

¹⁴ And when, throughout the ages, a stranger who has taken up residence with you, or one who lives among you, would present an offering by fire of pleasing odor to יהוה—as you do, so shall it be done by¹⁵ the rest of the congregation. There shall be one law for you and for the resident stranger; it shall be a law for all time throughout the ages. You and the stranger shall be alike before יהוה;¹⁶ the same ritual and the same rule shall apply to you and to the stranger who resides among you.

¹⁷ יהוה spoke to Moses, saying:¹⁸ Speak to the Israelite people and say to them:

When you enter the land to which I am taking you¹⁹ and you eat of the bread of the land, you shall set some aside as a gift to יהוה:²⁰ as the first yield of your baking, you shall set aside a loaf as a gift; you shall set it aside as a gift like the gift from the בְמִסְפָרִים: ¹³ בְּלֹא־הַזְוֹחַ יַעֲשֵׂה־יְפֻכָה אֶת־

אֶלָּה לְהַקְרִיב אֲשֶׁר רִיחַ־נִיחַח לִיהְוָה:
¹⁴ וְכִי־יִגּוֹר אֶתְכֶם גַּר אָוֹ אֲשֶׁר־בְּתוּכֶם
לְדָרְתֵיכֶם וְעַשֵּׂה אֲשֶׁר רִיחַ־נִיחַח לִיהְוָה
בְּאֵשׁ תַּעֲשֶׂו כִּי יִعֲשֶׂה: ¹⁵ הַקְדֵל חֲקָה
אֶתְכֶם לְכֶם וְלֹאֶגֶר הַגָּר תְּקַח עַולְמָת
לְדָרְתֵיכֶם בְּכֶם בָּגָר יִהְיֶה לִפְנֵי יהָוָה:
¹⁶ תּוֹרָה אֶתְכֶם וּמִשְׁפָט אֶחָד יִהְיֶה לְכֶם
וְלֹאֶגֶר הַגָּר אֶתְכֶם: פ

¹⁷ וַיֹּאמֶר יהָוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לֵאמֹר: ¹⁸ דַבָּר
אֶל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמַרְתָּ אֶל־הָעָם
בְּבָאָכֶט אֶל־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אָנֹנוּ מְבִיאָ
אֶתְכֶם שָׁמָה: ¹⁹ וְהִיא בְּאֶכְלָכֶם מִלְחָמָ
הָאָרֶץ תַּרְיִמוּ תְּרוּמָה לִיהְוָה: ²⁰ רִאשִׁית
עֲרָשְׁתֵיכֶם חֶלֶה תַּרְיִמוּ תְּרוּמָה בְּתְרוּמָת גָּרָן

15. one law for you and for the resident stranger. In most matters, including sacrifices (except for the paschal lamb; see Exodus 12:48), the resident alien must be treated as the native Israelite.

CHALLAH: OFFERING OF THE FIRST DOUGH (15:17–21)

The challah (dough offering) is the first part of dough made from grains prepared in the kneading basin. While somewhat analogous to the first fruits offering (Deuteronomy 26:1–11) and the tithes (Deuteronomy 14:22–29), the dough offering seems to be an additional levy, in this case for a product manufactured from already tithed grain. The dough, a gift dedicated to the sanctuary, is given to the priest; in turn, the homes of the Israelites are blessed (see Ezekiel 44:30). Women played an important role in food production in ancient Israel (see also at Exodus 16:3; 25:30). Not only did they perform agricultural tasks, but also they prepared the family meals. Making bread would have been a woman's daily chore. Tabuns ("ovens," from the Arabic) are often uncovered in excavations of residential courtyards. The Bible describes several women as kneading bread or cakes (Sarah in Genesis 18:6; the unnamed medium of En-dor in I Samuel 28:24; Tamar in II Samuel 13:8; see also at Leviticus 26:26). According to Jeremiah, women kneaded dough for cakes offered to the Queen of Heaven, a local goddess (Jeremiah 7:18).

20. the first yield of your baking. Literally, "the first of your baking vessel." The "baking vessel" (arisah) is evidently the term for a type of vessel used for kneading dough, possibly shaped like a crib (eres).

20. loaf. Heb. challah, a noun that seems to derive from the verbal root ch-w-l, "to be round." This type of raised loaf differs from the flat pita-like bread (so common in the region from antiquity to the present day) that the Bible likewise associates with offerings (like matzot in Leviticus 2:4).

threshing floor.²¹ You shall make a gift to יְהוָה from the first yield of your baking, throughout the ages.

²²If you unwittingly fail to observe any one of the commandments that יְהוָה has declared to Moses—²³anything that יְהוָה has enjoined upon you through Moses—from the day that gave the commandment and on through the ages:

²⁴If this was done unwittingly, through the inadvertence of the community, the community leaders shall present one bull of the herd as a burnt offering of pleasing odor to יְהוָה, with its proper meal offering and libation, and one he-goat as a purgation offering.²⁵The priest shall make expiation for the whole Israelite community and they shall be forgiven; for it was an error, and for their error they have brought their offering, an offering by fire to יְהוָה and their purgation offering before יְהוָה.²⁶The whole Israelite community and the stranger residing among them shall be forgiven, for it happened to the entire people through error.

²⁷In case it is an individual who has sinned unwittingly, that person shall offer a she-goat in its first year as a purgation offering.²⁸The priest shall make expiation before יְהוָה on behalf of the person who erred, for having sinned unwittingly, making such expiation that the person may be forgiven.²⁹For the citizen among the Israelites and for the stranger who resides among them—you shall have one ritual for anyone who acts in error.

Challah may be related to a type of Egyptian bread that was baked in pans to produce rounded dome-shaped loafs (Tomb painting of Ti, 5th Dynasty—Sakkara). Egyptians considered flat-bread undesirable (as in lechem oni or “bread of distress” in Deuteronomy 16:3).

INADVERTENT COMMUNAL AND INDIVIDUAL WRONGS (15:22–31)

This section deals specifically with sacrificial offerings that function as expiation for inadvertent

פֶּן תִּרְמֹם אֶתְכֶם:²¹ מִרְאֵשֶׁת עֲרָבַתיכֶם תִּתְהִנּוּ לִיהוָה תְּרוּמָה לְדُরְתִיכֶם:

²² ס וְכִי תְשַׁגּוּ וְלֹא תַעֲשׂו אֶת כָּל־הַמְצֻוֹת הַאֲלֵה אֲשֶׁר־דִּבֶּר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ:²³ אֶת כָּל־אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֲלֵיכֶם בִּידֵי־מֹשֶׁה מִנֵּהֶךְ יוֹם אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה וְהַלְאָה לְדֹרְתִיכֶם:

²⁴ וְהַיָּה אֵם מַעֲינֵי הָעֵדָה נִعְשָׂתָה לְשִׁגְגָה וְעָשָׂוּ כָּל־הָעֵדָה פָּר בְּרַכְבָּר אֶחָד לְעַלְלה לְרִיחַ נִיחַל לְהַדְחָה וּמִנְחָתוֹ וּנוֹסְבוֹ בְּמִשְׁפָט וִשְׁעִיר־עַזִּים אֶחָד לְחַטָּאת:²⁵ וּכְפָר הַכְּהֵן עַל־כָּל־עֲדרָת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וּנוֹסֵח לְהַם כִּי שִׁגְגָה הוּא וְהֵם הַבִּיאוּ אֶת־קְרֻבָּנָם אֲשֶׁר לִיהוָה וְחַטָּאתֶם לִפְנֵי יְהוָה עַל־שִׁגְגָתֶם:²⁶ וּנוֹסֵח לְכָל־עֲדרָת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וּלְגַעַר הַגָּן בְּתוֹכָם כִּי לְכָל־הָעָם בְּשִׁגְגָה:

²⁷ וְאַמְנַפְשָׁת אַחַת תְּחַטָּאת בְּשִׁגְגָה וְהַקְרִיבָה עַז בְּתִשְׁנָתָה לְחַטָּאת:²⁸ וּכְפָר הַכְּהֵן עַל־הַנְּפָשָׁת הַשְׁגָגָת בְּחַטָּאת בְּשִׁגְגָה לִפְנֵי יְהוָה לְכְפָר עַלְיוֹ וּנוֹסֵח לוֹ:²⁹ הַזְּרָחָת בְּבּוֹנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל וּלְגַעַר הַגָּר בְּתוֹכָם תּוֹרָה אַחַת יְהִי לְכֶם לְעֵשָׂה בְּשִׁגְגָה:

violations of the commandments. As prescribed for other sacrifices (vv. 1–16), these too require the proper accompaniments. This section ends with a warning.

24. community leaders. Literally, “the entire community”; this translation aims to clarify that the word for community, edah, refers more precisely here to a representative body of some kind (most likely made up of adult males).

29. one ritual. More correctly, “one law (torah)” applies to both Israelites and alien residents. Breaking a law has a negative effect on the Land of Israel’s ³⁰But the person, whether citizen or stranger, who acts defiantly reviles ייְהוָה; that person shall be cut off from among the people. ³¹Because it was the word of ייְהוָה that was spurned and [God's] commandment that was violated, that person shall be cut off—and bears the guilt.

³²Once, when the Israelites were in the wilderness, one of their fellows was found gathering wood on the sabbath day. ³³Those who found him as he was gathering wood brought him before Moses, Aaron, and the community leadership. ³⁴He was placed in custody, for it had not been specified what should be done to him. ³⁵Then said to Moses, “This fellow shall be put to death: the community leadership shall pelt him with stones outside the camp.” ³⁶So the community leadership took him outside the camp and stoned him to death—as had commanded Moses.

³⁷יְהוָה said to Moses as follows: ³⁸Speak to the Israelite people and instruct them to make for

³⁰וְהִנֵּפֶשׁ אֲשֶׁר-תַּעֲשֶׂה | בַּיד רָמָה מִן-
הָאָרוֹת וּמִן-הָגָר אֲתִיהָנָה הוּא מְגֻנָּף
וּגְכֻרְתָּה הַנֶּפֶשׁ הַהוּא מִקְרָב עַמָּה: ³¹כִּי
דְּבָרִי-יְהוָה בָּזָה וְאַתְּ-מִצְוָתוֹ הַפְּרָתָה |
תְּבִרְתָּה הַנֶּפֶשׁ הַהוּא עֲוֵנָה קָה: פ

³²וְיִהּוּ בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל בַּמִּדְבָּר וַיִּמְצָאוּ אִישׁ
מַקְשֵׁשׁ עַצְּים בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁבָּת: ³³וַיַּקְרִיב
אָתוֹ הַמְּצָאים אֲתָּוֹ מַקְשֵׁשׁ עַצְּים אֶל-
מְשָׁה וְאֶל-אַהֲרֹן וְאֶל כָּל-הָעָדרה: ³⁴וַיַּנִּיחּוּ
אֲתָּוֹ בַּמִּשְׁמָר כִּי לֹא פָרֵשׁ מִה-יְעִשָּׂה
יוּמָת הָאִישׁ רָגּוֹם אֲתָּנוּ בְּאֶבֶנִים כָּל-
הָעָדרה מְחוֹזֵן לְמַחְנָה: ³⁵וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל-מְשָׁה
בְּאֶבֶנִים וַיָּמָת כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֶת-מְשָׁה: פ

³⁶וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל-מְשָׁה לְאָמֵר: דְּבָר
אֶל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמַרְתָּ אֲלֵיכֶם וְעַשׂ לְהַמָּ ability to retain God's Presence, therefore any law-breaking inhabitant must make expiation.

30. that person shall be cut off. Defiant, willful violation of ritual law cannot be expiated in the manner of an inadvertent sin. Kareit, the “cutting off” of a person, is a punishment enacted by the Divine. What exactly constitutes the punishment is not defined here but can be gleaned from other biblical passages that indicate punishments affecting both sinners and their progeny (for example, Malachi 2:12, “To the one who does this, may הָוָה leave no descendants...”).

A CASE OF WILLFUL SHABBAT VIOLATION (15:32–36)

The case of the wood-gatherer illustrates a most severe violation of the law, the willful desecration of Shabbat, which is a capital offense. It is not totally clear why Moses consults God regarding the offender's punishment. Possibly, the reason is that earlier legislative texts that prescribe the death penalty are unclear as to whether punishment is to be exacted by a human court or by God (Exodus 31:14–15). So that no doubt remains, God sentences the violator to stoning at the hands of the community. This serious offense apparently is an affront to the entire community.

THE LAW OF TZITZIT (15:37–41)

In antiquity, tassels and fringes were common on Canaanite and Mesopotamian clothing, and they held special significance. For example, prophets from the Babylonian city of Mari (second millennium) legitimated their oracles to the king by sending a fringe from their garment. Symbolically, the fringe was like a signature. The imprinting of themselves fringes on the corners of their garments throughout the ages; let them attach a cord of blue to the fringe at each corner.³⁹ That shall be your fringe; look at it and recall all the commandments of יהוה and observe them, so that you do not follow your heart and eyes in your lustful urge.⁴⁰ Thus you shall be reminded to observe all My commandments and to be holy to your God.⁴¹ I am your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt to be your God: I, your God.

צִיצַת עַל־בְּנֵי בָנָיהם לְרוֹתֶם וַנְתַנָּה
עַל־צִיצַת הַבְּנָעַפְתִּיל תְּכִלָּת: ³⁹ וְהִיא
לָכֶם לְצִיצַת וּרְאֵיתֶם אֲתֶם וּזְכַרְתֶּם אֶת־
כָּל־מִצְוֹת יְהוָה וּשְׁמַיְתֶם אֶתֶּם וְלֹא־
תַּתְהַווּ אַחֲרֵי לְבָבְכֶם וְאַחֲרֵי עַינֵיכֶם
אֲשֶׁר־אַתֶם זְנוּנִים אַחֲרֵיהֶם: ⁴⁰ לְמַעַן תַּזְבִּירוּ
וּשְׁמַיְתֶם אֶת־כָּל־מִצְוֹתִי וְהִיְתֶם קְדָשִׁים
לְאֱלֹהִיכֶם: ⁴¹ אָנֹן יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר
הוֹצֵאתִי אֶתֶכֶם מִמִּארֶץ מִצְרָיִם לְהִיוֹת לָכֶם לְאֱלֹהִים אָנֹן יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם: פ

fringes on clay tablets was also a way of endorsing or verifying a written document. Like garments and hair, fringes were considered part of the individual's identity; thus, for example, giving one's fringe to another person signified a pledge of loyalty. Artistic depictions from these cultures show women wearing tasseled garments, especially women of high status.

Since in the ancient Near East both genders customarily wore fringed garments, and since biblical laws are commonly prescribed for the people as a whole, we can assume that the law of tzitzit was ordained for all Israelites, females and males. According to this text, the purpose of the tassels on the corners of the outer garments was to call the Israelites to action regarding the fulfillment of the commandments. What seems to distinguish these tassels from the more popular garment fringes is the addition of a colored cord that is to stand out in contrast to the other tassel fibers and remind the wearer of the commandments. It is probably not accidental that this cord is identical to the one that hangs from the high priest's headdress (Exodus 28:37). The tzitzit on the garments of Israelites identified them as being holy to God and symbolically may have connected them to the priests. Israelites who pledged loyalty to God also would have been loyal to the priests who oversaw God's laws.

38. fringes. Heb. tzitzit probably means "ornament," something that draws attention to itself. In Exodus 28:36, the related noun tzitz describes the gold frontlet suspended on a blue chord that dangled from the priest's headdress.

cord of blue. Deuteronomy 22:12 refers to non-specific garment tassels as g'dilim ("twisted threads"), making no mention of any colored cords.

blue. Heb. t'cheilet, a violet blue. On the dyeing of this color and on its social significance, see T'rumah, Another View, p. 476.

39. recall. Heb. zachor, meaning "to remember," is often in the Bible a verb of action rather than thought (see Exodus 12:14).

40. Thus you shall be reminded. [Verses 40 and 41 are the concluding part of the Jewish prayer known as Recitation of the Sh'ma. The Rabbis considered this prayer, which begins with "Hear, O Israel!" and continues with "You shall love your God יהוה with all your heart . . .," to be central to the liturgy (see at Deuteronomy 6:4–9). —Ed.]

be holy. On the call to holiness, see at Leviticus 19.

41. I יהוה am your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt. The parashah ends with reference to the redemption from Egyptian slavery, a theme often employed as grounds for Israelite allegiance to God (as in Exodus 6:7; 20:2–5; Leviticus 11:45).

—Nili Sacher Fox

Another View

THE SCOUTS DISPATCHED to investigate the nature of the Promised Land have suffered from a bad reputation. The Torah and the commentators blame them for one generation's loss of the land, for forty years of wandering through the wilderness, and for Moses' untimely demise just beyond the border of the land. The ten scouts, however, can be seen in a different light.

When they commence their reconnaissance mission, all that the scouts and the people of Israel have heard of their destination is that God promised it to their ancestors, that it flows with milk and honey, and that it is populated by other peoples. The scouts' uncertainty as to whether Israel really belongs in its Promised Land results from their lack of knowledge and familiarity with this place. They experience Canaan through the filter of God's description and probe its veracity more than they investigate the landscape. Because they are unable to find evidence that legitimates God's promise of the land, the scouts reject promise and land alike.

The scouts begin by corroborating God's description: "it does indeed flow with milk and honey" (13:27), and it is inhabited by other people; but they go on to invert the elements of God's version. The land flowing with milk and honey becomes the land that eats its inhabitants; it is not like a nourishing mother offering sweet milk, but a cannibalistic mother not to be trusted (13:32). The peoples of Canaan are no ordinary nations, but Nephilim—a race of demigods born from the union of the sons of God and the daughters of humans (13:33; see also at Genesis 6:2–4). Next to their "enormous stature" the Israelites seem like "grasshoppers." In the land of primordial giants, Israel's ancestors are nowhere to be seen.

At this juncture, the majority of the scouts and the people have no will to wage war against giants or the land's inhabitants; better they should have no homeland than engage in what seem to be fruitless wars. The scouts' report fuels a narrative of opposition to the Promised Land—the place is a curse and not a blessing! It also opens up the possibility of a new identity: being an Israelite resistant to the notion that the people belong within a circumscribed territory. Instead of an inaugural vision, what the scouts report makes Israel want to go back to Egypt (Numbers 14:3–4). The scouts' story is the anti-myth of the Promised Land.

The ten scouts have suffered from a bad reputation, yet their role was vital.

—Rachel Havrelock

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

Send emissaries (13:2). A hyperliteral translation of the first three words of this verse reads, "Send for yourself men." In his 1602 commentary, the Kli Yakar (Rabbi Efraim Shlomo of Luntshits, Poland) claims that while the Israelite men of the wilderness generation hated the Land of Israel, the Israelite women loved it. His proof is based on the argument that the demand of the discontented Israelites, "Let us head back for Egypt" (14:4), represents the feelings of all the men, while "Give us a holding [in the Land of Israel] among our father's kinsmen!" (27:4)—although formally attributed only to the daughters of Zelophehad—actually represents the feelings of all of the women.

SH'LACH L'CHA

Based on these generalizations, the Kli Yakar claims that if God had chosen the scouts, God would have selected female scouts who loved the land, in order to ensure a positive report. Instead, when Moses was given permission to choose the scouts ("for yourself"), he made the tactical error of sending men instead.

From the tribe of Judah, Caleb son of Jephunneh (13:6). Caleb, introduced for the first time in this verse, is identified by the names of his father and of his tribe. His wife's name, not surprisingly, is not included here, but she is identified in the Midrash. In fact, two wives are mentioned—each in a different midrashic text—and it is unclear if the Rabbis believed that he was married to both women at the same time, or to one after the other, or whether the two teachings existed independently. The wife more commonly connected with Caleb is Miriam, the sister of Moses (Sh'mot Rabbah 1.17). Meanwhile, Pharaoh's daughter, who had adopted Moses and whom rabbinic literature identifies as Bitya, is also described as Caleb's wife (BT M'gillah 13a). Neither of these marriages is mentioned in the Bible, and each is derived from a complex rabbinic interpretation of different genealogical lists in the book of Chronicles (I Chronicles 2:18–19 for Miriam; I Chronicles 4:18 for Bitya).

If God had chosen the scouts, they would have been women—not men.

and you eat of the bread of the land, you shall set some aside (15:19). This verse describes the commandment of challah. This commandment does not mandate the eating of special loaves of bread on Shabbat (known later in Judaism also as "challah") but applies instead to the baking process. To perform the mitzvah of challah, the baker ritually removes a tiny portion of the raw dough and recites a specific blessing. When the Temple stood in Jerusalem, this consecrated portion was to be eaten by the priests. Since the destruction of the Temple in 70 C.E., the piece of separated dough is to be burned in the oven and thrown away. Separating challah is one of three commandments that are traditionally and specifically associated with—and performed by—women. (The other two are candle lighting for Shabbat and the rituals concerning menstrual purity.)

Bread baking is usually regarded as a female activity, but it may also be seen as the exemplar of the many mundane tasks needed to provide physical nourishment for one's family. The anonymous author of the 13th-century Sefer haChinuch (385:1) emphasized this latter aspect of bread baking when he suggested that the commandment of challah allows women to take an ordinary act and elevate it to the spiritual. While eating the bread feeds the body, the ritual aspect of making the bread feeds the soul.

Midrash B'reishit Rabbah 17.8, which connects the idea of challah with the creation of humankind, takes a less positive view of women's fulfillment of this commandment. This midrash imagines that at the moment of human creation God removed a small portion of the newly formed earth for a special purpose, the creation of Adam. Thus, Adam became the challah of the world. Eve, the first woman, corrupted Adam by encouraging him to eat from the forbidden Tree of Knowledge. According to this rabbinic view, the commandment of challah was specifically given to women as a reminder of Eve's sin and as a means of spiritual atonement.

[Some of the extant early modern supplicatory prayers in Yiddish (tikhines) were intended for women to recite while separating challah. These prayers refer to the ancient bringing of tithes and recall female participation in ancient Temple worship. They also invoke the messianic era when the Temple's rites will be restored. One such supplication requests that an angel guard the baking and prevent the bread from burning, just as angels had guarded the challah of the biblical matriarchs (Chava Weissler, Voices of the Matriarchs, 1998, pp. 29–35, 68–75). —Ed.]

—Anna Urowitz-Freudenstein

Contemporary Reflection

WHEN MOSES SENDS the scouts to survey the land of Canaan, he gives them a list of very specific things to investigate.

He charges them: “Go up there into the Negeb and on into the hill country, and see what kind of country it is. Are the people who dwell in it strong or weak, few or many? Is the country in which they dwell good or bad? Are the towns they live in open or fortified? Is the soil rich or poor? Is it wooded or not?” (13:17–20). Twelve emissaries go out and return after forty days, reporting on what they saw in this exotic new land. All but two of the scouts are punished later; victims of a plague, they die in the wilderness.

What is their sin? According to our tradition, they sin by not trusting God’s vision and not having faith: “How long will this people spurn Me, and how long will they have no faith in Me despite all the signs that I have performed in their midst?” (14:11). Furthermore, they sin because they “caused the whole community to mutter against him [Moses] by spreading calumnies about the land” (14:36).

I question not only the nature of their sin, but also Moses’ approach to their mission. Moses’ instructions divide the world into either/or categories that ignore the nuances within a complex reality. Instead of asking such specific questions, what if he had said to them, “When you return, tell us what you see. How did you experience this new place? What was the land like? How were the people?” Perhaps these kinds of open-ended questions would have led the scouts to bring back a different report. At least these sorts of instructions might have given them more room to develop their own stories in a less dualistic fashion; the scouts might have been inspired to bring back a different description of what they saw.

Or is it simply a matter of perspective? After all, the twelve emissaries all observe and experience the same things, and yet two of them return with an account that is entirely different from that of the other ten. What is it that enables Joshua and Caleb to see the Promised Land through different eyes?

In his book The Courage to Create (1975), Rollo May writes, “We are called upon to do something new, to confront a no-man’s-land, to push into a forest where there are no well-worn paths and from which no one has returned to guide us. This is what existentialists call the anxiety of nothingness.... To live into the future means to leap into the unknown, and this requires a degree of courage for which there is no immediate precedent and which few people realize.” He asserts that “if you do not express your own original ideas, if you do not listen to your own being, you will have betrayed yourself. Also you will have betrayed our community in failing to make your contribution to the whole” (pp. 12–13).

What enables Joshua and Caleb to see the Promised Land through different eyes?

The ten emissaries start their report with a positive statement about the land overflowing with milk and honey; they then switch to the negatively colored description of the fortified cities and powerful people (13:27–29). The Rabbis describe this as the way slanderers speak: “They begin with flattering and end with evil” (BT Sotah 35a). Or, in more modern terms: the pessimist observes a situation, generalizes about the bad aspects, and interprets them as a permanent and constant feature. In contrast, the optimist observes the same situation and sees the bad aspects, but particularizes them and interprets them as a temporary obstacle that can be overcome.

This then is the sin of the scouts: their failure to contribute to their community because of their negative attitude and narrow perspective. They seemingly lack the courage to leap into the unknown and confront “no-man’s-land.” Where the ten see potential failure and defeat, Joshua and Caleb see potential success and possibility. They had the courage to leap into the unknown and envision a new reality. While they acknowledge the challenges that lie ahead, they are able to “listen to their own being” and trust in the people’s ability to overcome those challenges with God’s promised help and protection: “The land that we traversed and scouted is an exceedingly good land. If pleased with us, יְהוָה will bring us into that land, a land that flows with milk and honey, and give it to us; only you must not rebel against יְהוָה. Have no fear then of the people of the country, for they are our prey: their protection has departed from them, but יְהוָה is with us” (14:7–9).

SH'LACH L'CHA

As Harvey Fields wrote, we too can “conquer ‘Promised Lands’ when we have regard for our talents and believe in our creative powers. The sin of the spies grows from their failure of self-love and self-respect. . . Only Joshua and Caleb, who refuse to see themselves as ‘grasshoppers,’ are worthy of entering the Promised Land” (A Torah Commentary for Our Times, 1993, p. 42).

These, to me, are the challenges of Sh'lach L'cha: First, the challenge to perceive the world in all its nuanced complexity—and not reduce it to simplistic either/or, black/white categories. Second, and more central to the parashah, the challenge of really loving ourselves and trusting our instincts, the challenge of not making ourselves into anything less than we truly are (since this would diminish the One in whose image we are created), and the challenge of living with the “anxiety of nothingness” in order to create a new reality.

As long as we see ourselves merely as grasshoppers up against giants, we will set ourselves up for failure. If we want to create anything new and to enter into the Promised Land, then we have no choice but to leap into the unknown, to believe in ourselves, and to trust in God’s faith in us. This voice of optimism and hope is what separates Joshua and Caleb from the other scouts. This is what—in spite of a long history filled with good reasons to see ourselves as grasshoppers and to give up—has enabled the Jewish people to continue and to thrive.

—Josee Wolff

Voices

At Light's Border

Lea Goldberg (transl. Rachel Tzvia Back)

Numbers 13:27–33

1

Here heavy birds alight to rest on trees dark in the day's decline, and in reaped fields the wind wanders toward the firmament's red trail.

A gust of salt air from across the sea,
a crescent moon painting itself on the sky,
a flickering white, cautious, unsure it is all vacillation between day and night.

This is the hour of transition wherein we stand mute
at light's border—
where will our hearts turn?
Will we return, my brother,
will we cross over?

2

All the riddles time has posed skies like these awaken anew,
the innocent will tell their dreams and the clever their answers conceal.

And again our hearts will bathe in blood as empty regrets guard every step, and again you unknowingly ask all the riddles time has kept.

My brother, my brother, how can we stand mute
at light's border—
what path is before us?
Will we return, my brother,
will we cross over?

Sh'lach L'cha

Laurie Patton

Numbers 13:27–33

When one visits a Vision,
one must always struggle with scale:

Their visit
was like watching the shoes and skirts and deep voices
at a parents' reception—
watching, overwhelmed and hiding, under the stair or the coding and decoding

of the signals of elm trees and broken twigs—
the ciphers of sparrows and their forgotten eggs in the immense forests of an aunt's small garden

or the daily memory of a schoolyard
filled with light—
wet, and covered with apples—
a huge space,
with windows beckoning
to the soul

Visions are so wide,
they require the courage of painters, trying out
a new and startling scale;

and they require an answer to the question:
Shall I belong here?

SH'LACH L'CHA

from A Poem to the Paper Bridge

Kadya Molodowsky (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

Numbers 13:27–33

Oh, paper bridge, lead me into your land,
White and constant and mild.
I am tired of the desert where manna was strewn
Made of milk and honey and bread.

A simple people, with their earthen jugs,
With children, with cattle, with tears,
Constructed a paper bridge of such strength
It withstands the destruction of years.

Prayer for Burning the End Piece of the Challah

Lynn Gottlieb

Numbers 15:18–21

With this challah, I honor my mothers,
Who enticed wisdom from grain.
I honor the fire,
Which transforms again and again.
I honor the love which flows through my hands,
And I honor the Spirit
That brings forth this bread from the earth.
Amen.

from Dakota Diaspora: Memoirs of a Jewish Homesteader

Sophie Trupin

Numbers 15:18–21

I remember my mother arising on Fridays while it was still dark to begin the added tasks of preparing for the Sabbath. Dough was kneaded the night before and lay in a large basin which was nestled in the hollow of a huge feather pillow. The pillow kept the dough warm all night so it would rise. A white tablecloth was placed over the basin, and in the morning the dough would look like an enormous mushroom extending over the rim of the basin. My mother would press her fist into the center of the mound, which would collapse in a wrinkled heap. She would continue to knead it for a few minutes, then replace the white tablecloth and allow it to rise once more. After a few hours the tablecloth would again be lifted into a mound; it was then ready to make the Sabbath loaf, or challah. While my mother braided the long ropes of dough into a huge oval, I would have a piece of dough to make a miniature challah. At first I could only manipulate three strands, braiding them into something like my own braided hair; but then, as I watched my mother working with four strands of dough, I practiced until I could do it too.

Before baking the loaves, which had risen and been glossed over with beaten egg applied with a goose feather, my mother would take a small piece of dough and throw it into the flame of the kitchen range, reciting a special prayer. It was some relic of the old days of sacrifice—some part of an ancient ritual.

My Entitlement and My Obligation

Riv-Ellen Prell

Numbers 15:37–41

The transforming moment of my life as a Jewish feminist came when I began wearing a tallit. . . . I don't remember putting the tallit on for the first time; it wasn't a moment I ritualized. I simply became a Jew who prayed in a tallit, experiencing my entitlement to its sensuous beauty as part of my obligation to wear this garment. My public and unambiguous violation of normative Judaism was linked to my growing private life as a Jew. My tallit left me nowhere to hide.

from The Tapestry of Jewish Time

Nina Beth Cardin

Numbers 15:37–41

When I put on a tallit, even when I am alone, I place myself in the folds of my people. Donning the tallit is a daily, visual symbol of my identity, reminding me to whom I belong as I begin my day's journey. It protects me, shields me and defines me. Falling around my shoulders and arms, the tallit provides me with a secure awareness of my body and its boundaries. I am not lost there, but found. Others are outside, I am inside, but we are one. I fill up my tallit. No matter my size, I always will. And it is in that fullness that I am counted as a member of the congregation.

Fringes in My Heart

Nancy Abraham

Numbers 15:37–41

There are fringes in my heart
knotted with love for You They hang from the four chambers sway gently as tides within rise recede rise recede Sometimes when still
I can even hear You brushing against them
these fringes composed of all You ask us to be woven of your essence they are bound in me
I in them
a sign of sacred servitude

With this knotting

swaying brushing weaving,
Your presence hangs
pulling me, like water, to the surety of freedom exacted for such blessed binding between my heart and Yours.

קְרָח ✦ Korach

NUMBERS 16:1–18:32

Leadership, Rebellions, and Punishments

Moses' LEADERSHIP is challenged repeatedly throughout the book of Numbers (see, for example, Numbers 12, 14, and 21). In this parashah, rebels challenge not only Moses' guidance, but also Aaron's religious authority. Scholars have long recognized that Numbers 16 combines at least two stories of insurrection: Korah and his company challenge Aaron's exclusive right to make ritual offerings to God; Dathan and Abiram question Moses' abilities and authority. Each story has a separate focus and outcome; nevertheless, they share important features in common. Both of them turn on questions of the legitimacy of the current leadership, both demonstrate that the current leadership is divinely ordained, and both are resolved by divine wrath in a way in which the punishment fits the crime.

In these two episodes, the people fail to see that God—not Moses or Aaron—is the one responsible for electing the civil and religious authorities. When the challengers continue to speak against Moses and Aaron, God sends a plague (17:6–15). To demonstrate that Aaron's post as chief priest is due to divine preference and not human election, God commands each of the tribes to present a staff at the Tabernacle (17:16–26). The miraculous fruit-bearing of only Aaron's staff proves that God has chosen only the House of Aaron for the priesthood. The different duties, responsibilities, and restrictions associated with Levites and priests then are further specified and detailed at the end of the parashah (18:1–32).

Women do not play much of a role in parashat Korach, with good reason: there is little place for women in a contest for either religious or political leadership. Aside from Miriam, Deborah (Judges 4–5), and Queen Athaliah (II Kings 11), there are hardly any female Israelite leaders recorded as such in the Bible. Miriam is a notable exception to the near absence of female Dathan's and Abiram's wives suffer God's wrath; those of Korah's company do not.

leaders, for she is included in the inner circle of power along with Moses and Aaron. The prophet Micah (8th century B.C.E.) reflects this view when he proclaims in God's name, "I redeemed you from the house of bondage, and I sent before you Moses, Aaron, and Miriam" (Micah 6:4). Thus, the possibility of a female leader alongside male leaders certainly existed.

It is true that, as Tikva Frymer-Kensky has noted, the book of Samuel depicts an ishah of special status who claimed the authority to represent her town in emergency negotiations with a hostile general who recognized her authority as a matter of course (II Samuel 20:15–22). Apparently it went without saying that she was an elder, because that presumption best accounts for the city elders' otherwise striking absence in the negotiations (compare Judges 8, 9, 11; Reading the Women of the Bible, 2002, pp. 58–61). And Susan Ackerman has argued that it may have gone without saying that the role of queen mother was an acknowledged position of political and religious leadership (Warrior, Dancer, Seductress, Queen, 1998, pp. 133–141). However, while female leadership may be occasionally discernible in Israelite historical memory, the Bible itself highlights very few women in leadership roles.

Even though the rebels' wives are not involved in the uprising, they pay the price for their husbands' actions, as the families of Dathan and Abiram also suffer the fate of God's wrath. In contrast, the women related to Korah's company are not punished for their challenge to the priesthood. Perhaps this is because women cannot serve as priests; hence, they may not have been present when their husbands offered incense to God. Unlike in Numbers 12, where both Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses yet only Miriam bore the punishment, in parashat Korach, Dathan's and Abiram's families are included in the punishment for political insurrection. This suggests that the punishment would have served as a warning to any contender for power, female or male.

—Shawna Dolansky

Outline—

I. THE REBELLIONS (16:1–35)

- A. Korah's challenge to the Aaronite priesthood (vv. 1–11)
- B. Dathan and Abiram's mutiny against Mosaic leadership (vv. 12–15)
- C. Korah's test (vv. 16–24)
- D. Dathan and Abiram's punishment (vv. 25–31)
- E. Korah's punishment (vv. 32–35)

II. THE AFTERMATH (17:1–28)

- A. Transformation of the fire pans (vv. 1–5)
- B. More rebellion (vv. 6–7)
- C. Plague and expiation (vv. 8–15)
- D. Aaron's budding rod (vv. 16–28)

III. PRIESTLY RESPONSIBILITIES (18:1–32)

- A. Priests and Levites (vv. 1–7)
- B. Gifts (vv. 8–20)
- C. Tithes (vv. 21–32)

16:1

Korah, son of Izhar son of Kohath son of Levi, betook himself, along with Dathan and Abiram sons of Eliab, and On son of Peleth—descendants of Reuben—to rise up against Moses,

וַיָּקֹח קְרָח בֶּן-יִצְחָר בֶּן-קֹהֶת בֶּן-לֵוִי וְדָתָן וְאֲבִירָם בְּנֵי אֱלִיאָב וְאֹן בֶּן-פְּלַת בְּנֵי רָאוּבֵן: ² וַיַּקְרְמוּ לִפְנֵי מֹשֶׁה וְאַנְשִׁים מִבְנֵי

The Rebellions (16:1–35)

Two distinct groups, from two separate tribes, rise up together against Moses and Aaron. Moses addresses them in parallel fashion in two incidents that culminate in the destruction of each group. Because of the separate nature of the two rebellions and their ensuing punishments, scholars suspect that these were originally independent, unconnected stories. This theory is strengthened by Deuteronomy 11:6, which refers to Dathan and Abiram without, however, mentioning Korah or any Levites.

Korah, a first cousin of Moses and Aaron (Exodus 6:18–21), and certain Levite representatives challenge Aaron's exclusive right to the priesthood, whereas Dathan and Abiram question Moses' leadership abilities. That incident resembles Miriam and Aaron's challenge of Moses' role as prophet (Numbers 12), though the contrast in God's retaliation may suggest a leniency with respect to Miriam—and even more so, Aaron—in Numbers 12. The Korah rebellion frames the separate confrontation by Dathan and Abiram, who challenge Moses.

KORAH'S CHALLENGE TO THE AARONITE PRIESTHOOD (16:1–II)

Korah's challenge to the Aaronite priesthood can be explained by his own Levite lineage, which the narrator pointedly notes (v. 1). Korah protests to Moses that all Levites should be considered holy enough for the priesthood. (In 8:5–22, God had uniquely consecrated the Levites, providing some grounds for Korah's presumption.)

[When the daughters of Zelophehad (from the tribe of Manasseh) later confront the leadership, they find it politic to contrast their challenge with Korah's rebellion. When they demand their father's land, they cleverly distance their dead father from Korah by hastening to say: "Our father... was not one of the faction, Korah's faction, which banded together against יהוה" (27:3). —Ed.]

i. Korah...son of Levi...along with Dathan and Abiram...descendants of Reuben. Korah is identified by his father, grandfather, and tribal affiliation. This partly accounts for his claim to the priesthood: he is Aaron's patrilineal first cousin. But Dathan and Abiram's rebellion against Mosaic leadership is not readily explicable by lineage. Perhaps

- The story's focus shifts authority away from the family's head and toward the priests.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 909

- Why was that rebel On not punished?
—His wife got him drunk and kept him home.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 909

- How do I recognize Korah in my own thoughts and actions?

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 911

- a fist of life / thrusts up through sand / and opens its palm....

VOICES ► 913

together with two hundred and fifty representatives of the Israelites: chieftains of the community, chosen in the assembly, with fine reputations.³ They combined against Moses and Aaron and said to them, “You have gone too far! For all the community are holy, all of them, and is in their midst. Why then do you raise yourselves above יהוה’s congregation?”

⁴When Moses heard this, he fell on his face. ⁵Then he spoke to Korah and all his company, saying, “Come morning, יהוה will make known who is [God’s] and who is holy, and will grant direct access—the one whom [God] has chosen will be granted access. ⁶Do this: You, Korah and all your band, take fire pans,⁷ and tomorrow put fire in

Dathan and Abiram are simply representative of the general Israelite unhappiness with the wilderness experience and Moses’ leadership, an unhappiness that forms a theme throughout Exodus and Numbers. [Reuben was Jacob’s first-born son; Reubenites may have seen themselves as rightful leaders. —Ed.]

2. together with two hundred and fifty representatives of the Israelites: chieftains of the community. Later in the narrative, these chieftains who join the mutiny against Moses are connected with the Levites who challenge Aaron (v. 35), providing a good example of the redactional activity that links these originally separate texts.

3. “You have gone too far!” Heb. rav lachem, an idiom that more literally means: “It is more than enough for you.”

“For all the community are holy.” This statement is the focus of Korah’s challenge to Aaron’s exclusive right to the priesthood, but the language is abstract enough that it works for Dathan and Abiram’s rebellion against Moses’ civic leadership as well. That they are two separate rebellions, with distinct foci, is evidenced instead from Moses’ different responses to each party. One thing that they share in common, however, is that they address their complaints about leadership choices to Moses.

“and יהוה is in their midst.” The rebels state

ישָׂרָאֵל חֲמִשִּׁים וּמְאַתִּים נְשִׂיאִי עֶדֶה קָרְאִי מוֹעֵד אֲנָשִׁים: ³ וַיַּקְהֵלוּ עַל-מֹשֶׁה וְעַל-אַהֲרֹן וְיָאמְרוּ אֱלֹהֶם רַב-לִכְמָתָב כִּי כָּל-הָעֵדָה בְּלָם קָדְשִׁים וּבְתוּכָם יְהֹוָה וּמִזְבֵּחַ תַּתְנִשְׂאֹו עַל-קֹדֶשׁ יְהֹוָה:

⁴ וַיְשִׁמְעוּ מֹשֶׁה וַיַּפְלֵל עַל-פָּנָיו: ⁵ וַיֹּדַבֵּר אֶל-קָרָח וְאֶל-כָּל-עֲדָתוֹ לְאָמַר בָּקָר וַיַּדַּע יְהֹוָה אֲתִי-אֲשֶׁר-לָנוּ וְאַתְּ הַקָּדוֹשׁ וְהַקָּרֵיב אֲלֵינוּ וְאַתָּה אֲשֶׁר יִבְחַר-בָּךְ יִקְרֵיב אֲלֵינוּ: ⁶ זֶה עַשְׂוֹ קָרְבִּלְכֶם מִחוּתָות קָרָח וּכָל-עֲדָתוֹ: ⁷ וְתַנְגִּבְנָה בְּהָנָן אֶשׁ וְשִׁמְמָה עַלְיָהָן קְטַרְתָּ לִפְנֵי

that the entire congregation is holy because God dwells within it, and this appears to be consonant with priestly literature in which God promises to live in Israel’s midst (see Exodus 29:45) and where the people are called to be holy (see Exodus 19:6). This ideal of a holy nation recurs throughout the priestly texts, including the ending of the previous story, which again calls Israel to be holy (Numbers 15:40). But the challengers miss the point of these divine injunctions toward holiness: the congregation is not holy by virtue of God’s presence, but in fact they must maintain holiness in order to ensure God’s continued residence among them. Korah challenges the need for a priestly hierarchy if all are holy. The lesson to be derived from his fiery death is that the priestly hierarchy is necessary in order to maintain the congregation’s holiness.

5. “will grant... access.” Literally, God “will bring him closer.” The verb hikriv (from the root k-r-b) means “to bring near” and is related to the noun for “sacrifice” (korban). The priests possess a higher degree of holiness by virtue of their closeness to God. The test that Moses poses will separate those who are closest to God from the rest of the congregation.

6–7. “take fire pans... and lay incense on them.” It was precisely a misuse of incense that them and lay incense on them before יְהוָה. Then the candidate whom יְהוָה chooses, he shall be the holy one. You have gone too far, sons of Levi!"

⁸Moses said further to Korah, "Hear me, sons of Levi. ⁹Is it not enough for you that the God of Israel has set you apart from the community of Israel and given you direct access, to perform the duties of יְהוָה's Tabernacle and to minister to the community and serve them? ¹⁰Now that [God] has advanced you and all your fellow Levites with you, do you seek the priesthood too? ¹¹Truly, it is against that you and all your company have banded together. For who is Aaron that you should rail against him?"

¹²Moses sent for Dathan and Abiram, sons of Eliab; but they said, "We will not come! ¹³Is it not had resulted in the deaths of Aaron's sons Nadab and Abihu (Leviticus 10:1–2). Korah is making a claim on the priesthood, so Moses challenges Korah to demonstrate that he can perform a priestly task. Moses' test does not aim to show who can best perform priestly services for the community. Rather, it is designed to demonstrate that God is the one who has chosen Aaron for the priesthood.

10. "Levites... priesthood." General holiness is demanded of a congregation in which God dwells (see at 16:3). Moses here refers to two higher levels of holiness. Above the general congregation is the additional holiness of the Levites (b'nei Levi) who are "close to" God (k-r-b again; see at v. 5) and can therefore minister on behalf of the congregation at the Tabernacle. The third and the highest level of holiness is demonstrated by the additional closeness to God enjoyed exclusively by Aaron and his descendants, the priests (kohanim). Note that since only Aaron and his descendants are priests, Moses himself implicitly belongs among the Levites, like the rest of the house of Levi apart from his brother's line.

11. "it is against that you and all your company have banded together." God is the one who elevated Aaron's status beyond the other Levites;

יְהוָה מֵתֶר וְהַיְהּ הָאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר־יִבְחַר יְהוָה
הָוּא הָקָדוֹשׁ רְבִנָּכֶם בְּנֵי לֵוי:
⁸ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶל־קָרְחָ שְׁמֻעוֹנָנָא בְּנֵי לֵוי:
⁹ הַמּוּט מִבָּם כִּי־הַבְּדִיל אֶלְيָהִי יִשְׂרָאֵל אַתֶּכְם מִעֲדָת לְהַקְרִיב אֶתֶּכְם
אַלְיוּ לְעַבְדֵ אֱתִיכְבָּתְ מִשְׁכְּנֹן יְהוָה וְלַעֲמֹד
לִפְנֵי הַעֲדָה לְשָׂרֶתְם: ¹⁰ וַיָּקַרְבַ אֶתְךָ וְאֶתְךָ
כָּל־אֲחֵיךְ בְּנֵי־לְיוּ אֶתְךָ וּבְקַשְׁתָם גַּסְּרָ
בְּהַנֶּה: ¹¹ לְכָן אֶתְךָ וּכָל־עֲדָתְךָ הַנְּעָדִים
עַל־יְהוָה וְאֶתְךָ מִהְדְרוֹא בַּי תָלוּ תְלִינוּ
עַלְיוֹן:
¹² וַיִּשְׁלַח מֹשֶׁה לְקָרְא לְדִתְנָן וּלְאַבְרָם בֶּן
אֵלִיאָב וַיֹּאמְרוּ לֹא נִעַלְהָ: ¹³ הַמּוּט בַּי

neither Aaron's appointment as chief priest, nor the punishment that Korah receives for attempting to replace him, result from choices that Moses has made. By deferring judgment and punishment to God in the test-by-incense, Moses demonstrates that Korah's complaint to Moses should have been addressed to God in the first place.

DATHAN AND ABIRAM'S MUTINY AGAINST MOSAIC LEADERSHIP (16:12–15)

Dathan and Abiram criticize Moses' leadership, blaming him for the poor conditions of the people in the wilderness and accusing him of not fulfilling his promises to them of land and possessions. As with Korah, the accusations are misplaced. Moses is responsible for neither the wilderness situation nor the choice of Aaron as high priest. The second story of rebellion begins when Moses sends for Dathan and Abiram, but they refuse to come—complaining bitterly about Moses' leadership of the people in the wilderness.

12. "We will not come!" This translation of Dathan and Abiram's response does not convey the subtle irony inherent in the use of the verb alah ("to go up"). Here they declare, "We will not come enough that you brought us from a land flowing with milk and honey to have us die in the wilderness, that you would also lord it over us?¹⁴ Even if you had brought us to a land flowing with milk and honey, and given us possession of fields and vineyards, should you gouge out those subordinates' eyes? We will not come!"¹⁵ Moses was much aggrieved and he said to Yahweh, "Pay no regard to their oblation. I have not taken the ass of any one of them, nor have I wronged any one of them."

¹⁶And Moses said to Korah, "Tomorrow, you and all your company appear before Yahweh, you and they and Aaron. ¹⁷Each of you take your fire pan and lay incense on it, and each of you bring that fire up"; later, they will indeed be punished by being brought down into the depths of the earth (vv. 31–33), never to "come up" again.

13. "a land flowing with milk and honey." The rebels' sarcastic remarks invert Moses' promises to bring the Israelites from Egypt to a land flowing with milk and honey (Exodus 13:5; Numbers 14:8). They use the expression instead to describe Egypt as a paradise (see also Exodus 16:3).

"to have us die." Literally, "to kill us." Dathan and Abiram imply that Moses aims to cause their deaths through the harsh conditions in the wilderness (see also Exodus 16:3). Ironically, the reason for the delay in reaching the Promised Land is a similar protest in Numbers 14. There, when the people complained that God had brought them out of Egypt only to die in the wilderness (14:2), God threatened to destroy the entire congregation (14:12). Moses pleaded with God on their behalf, and God relented (14:23). Again, it is clear that the present complaint against Moses is misdirected, as Moses points out to God in the following verse, and as he will further inform the people in v. 28.

"you would also lord it over us." More precisely, "you continue to act as a prince over us." The Heb. tistarer is a verbal form of the noun "prince" (sar). This is a direct challenge to Moses' continued leadership, based on his perceived failure to deliver on his promise of fields and vineyards in a land flowing with milk and honey (Exodus 3:8, 17; 13:5; 33:3). These words echo an earlier accusation against Moses in Exodus 2:14, when one of the Hebrews asks Moses, "Who made you a prince (sar) and judge over us?"¹⁶

15. "Pay no regard to their oblation." Moses asks God not to accept the rebels' sacrificial offering, protesting that he has done nothing to deserve their accusations. This type of plea to a god or gods was common in ancient Near Eastern treaty curses and execrations, which implore the deity not to accept the offerings of anyone who either violates the terms of the treaty or who acts disrespectfully toward the king (see Malachi 2:13).

KORAH'S TEST (16:16–24)

Having set forth the two types of challenges, one about priestly authority and the other about civic leadership, the narrative turns from Dathan and Abiram back to Korah. Korah's entire company will undergo the test, including the 250 chieftains mentioned in 16:2, as they all attempt to offer incense alongside Moses and Aaron in front of the divine Presence at the Tent of Meeting.

pan before יהוה, two hundred and fifty fire pans; you and Aaron also [bring] your fire pans.”¹⁸ They each took their fire pan, put fire in it, laid incense on it, and took a place at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, as did Moses and Aaron.¹⁹ Korah gathered the whole community against them at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting.

Then the Presence of יהוה appeared to the whole community,²⁰ and spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying,²¹ “Stand back from this community that I may annihilate them in an instant!”²² But they fell on their faces and said, “O God, Source of the breath of all flesh! When one member sins, will You be wrathful with the whole community?”

²³ spoke to Moses, saying,²⁴ “Speak to the community and say: Withdraw from about the abodes of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.”

²⁵ Moses rose and went to Dathan and Abiram, the elders of Israel following him.²⁶ He addressed the community, saying, “Move away from the tents of these wicked fellows and touch nothing that belongs to them, lest you be wiped out for all their

חֲמִשִׁים וּמְאַתִּים מִחְתָּה וְאַתָּה וְאַחֲרֵן אִישׁ מִחְתָּה: ¹⁸ וַיֹּקְרֵב אִישׁ מִחְתָּה וַיִּתְּנוּ עַלְيָהֶם אֶשׁ וַיִּשְׂרִמוּ עַלְיָהֶם קָטָרָת וַיַּעֲמֹדוּ פָתָח אַהֲלָ מִזְבֵּחַ מִזְבֵּחַ וְמִשְׁׁהָ וְאַחֲרֵן: ¹⁹ וַיִּקְרַב עַלְיָהֶם קָרָח אֶת־כָּל־הַעֲדָה אֶל־פִתְחָ אַהֲלָ מִזְבֵּחַ

וַיַּרְא בְּבוֹדִיהָ אֶל־כָּל־הַעֲדָה: ס

²⁰ וַיֹּדַבֵּר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל־אַחֲרֵן לֹאמֶר: ²¹ הַבְּדוּ מִתּוֹךְ הַעֲדָה הַזֹּאת וְאֶכְלָה אֶתְכֶם בְּרִגְעָ: ²² וַיַּפְלֹג עַל־פְנֵיכֶם וַיֹּאמֶר אֱלֹהִי הַרוּחַת לְכָל־בָּשָׂר הָאִישׁ אֲחֵל יְחִטָּאת וְעַל כָּל־הַעֲדָה תִּקְצַף: ס

²³ וַיֹּדַבֵּר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לֹאמֶר: ²⁴ דָבָר אֶל־הַעֲדָה לֹאמֶר הָעַל מִסְבֵּב לְמִשְׁבֵּן קָרָח דָתֵן וְאֶבְירָם:

²⁵ וַיַּקְרֵם מֹשֶׁה וַיַּלְכֵד אֶל־דָתֵן וְאֶבְירָם וַיַּלְכֵד אֶחָרָיו זָקְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ²⁶ וַיֹּדַבֵּר אֶל־הַעֲדָה לֹאמֶר סֻרוּ נָא מַעַל אֲהָלֵי הָאָנָשִׁים הַרְשָׁעִים הָאָלֶה וְאֶל־תָּגַעַו בְּכָל־אֲשֶׁר

21. “Stand back from this community.” Moses and Aaron are instructed to move away from the congregation, all of whom, it appears, are to be punished for the sins of the rebels (see 16:26 and 17:10).

22. But they fell on their faces. Moses had the same reaction in v. 4 when he first heard the rebels’ complaint. Earlier, it was an act of grief (see also 14:5); here, Moses and Aaron are bowing before divine authority, appealing to God for assistance, and attempting to appease God’s wrath against the innocent members of the community.

“When one member sins, will You be wrathful with the whole community?” Korah has included the entire community in his challenge (v. 19), and God has threatened to destroy all of them (v. 21); but Moses and Aaron ask that only the sinners be punished. This key question about theodicy, that is, God’s justice, recurs throughout the Bible. Abraham appeals to God’s justice when he asks God to not destroy the righteous along with the wicked (Genesis 18:23–25). Ezekiel articulates this concept most strongly when he asserts, “The person who commits an offense—he shall die” (Ezekiel 18:4).

23–24. God responds to Moses by now instructing the community at large to withdraw from the tents of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; only they—and their families—will be destroyed (see at v. 27).

DATHAN AND ABIRAM’S PUNISHMENT (16:25–31)

The names of Dathan and Abiram were likely inserted in v. 24 by a later hand when linking their mutiny with Korah’s. The story of Dathan and Abiram resumes in v. 25, in which Korah is not mentioned (but note the insertion of his name in v. 27, with nothing following it up).

sins.”²⁷ So they withdrew from about the abodes of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

Now Dathan and Abiram had come out and they stood at the entrance of their tents, with their wives, their children, and their little ones.²⁸ And Moses said, “By this you shall know that it was יְהוָה who sent me to do all these things; that they are not of my own devising;²⁹ if these people’s death is that of all humankind, if their lot is humankind’s common fate, it was not יְהוָה who sent me.³⁰ But if it brings about something unheard-of, so that the ground opens its mouth and swallows them up with all that belongs to them, and they go down alive into Sheol, you shall know that these fellows have spurned יְהוָה.”³¹ Scarcely had he finished speaking all these words when the ground under them burst asunder,³² and the earth opened its mouth and swallowed them up with their households, all

לֵהֶם פָּנִיתְסָפוּ בְּכָל־חַטָּאתֶם: ²⁷ וַיַּעֲלֹו
מַעַל מִשְׁבֵּן־קָרְבָּן וְאַבִּירָם מִסְּבֵּב
וְדָתָן וְאַבִּירָם יֵצְאוּ נִצְבִּים פָּתַח אֲהַלְיכָם
וְנִשְׁתַּחַם וּבְנִינְחָם וְטַפְּמָ: ²⁸ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה
בָּזֹאת תִּדְעֹן כִּי יְהוָה שְׁלֹחַנִּי לְעֵשֹׂות אֶת־
כָּל־הַמְּעֻשִׁים הָאֱלֹהִים פִּי־לֹא מַלְכִי: ²⁹ אִם־
בְּמֹות כָּל־הָאָדָם יִמְתֹּן אֶלְهָ וּפְקָדַת כָּל־
הָאָדָם יִפְקַד עֲלֵיכֶם לֹא יְהוָה שְׁלֹחַנִּי:
³⁰ וְאַסְּבָרְנִיאָה יִבְרָא יְהוָה וּפְצַתָּה
הָאָרֶם אֶת־פִּילָּוּ וּבְלָעָה אַתֶּם וְאֶת־כָּל־
אֲשֶׁר לְהֶם וַיַּרְדוּ חִימִים שָׁאָלָה וַיַּדְעָתֶם
כִּי נִצְוּ הָאָנָשִׁים הָאֱלֹהִים אֶת־יְהוָה:
³¹ וַיְהִי בְּכָל־תוֹ לְדִבָּר אֲתָּה כָּל־הַדְּבָרִים
הָאֱלֹהִים וַתִּבְקַע הָאָרֶם אֲשֶׁר תִּחְתִּיחָם:
³² וַתִּפְתַּח הָאָרֶץ אֶת־פִּיהָ וַתִּבְלַע אַתֶּם
וְאֶת־בְּתֵיכֶם וְאֶת כָּל־הָאָדָם אֲשֶׁר לִקְרָבָה

27. with their wives, their children, and their little ones. Not only Dathan and Abiram are to be punished, but also the family as a whole. This seems to contradict Deuteronomy 24:16, which states that children are not to suffer for their parents’ actions; in addition, Ezekiel 18:4 tells us that each person is responsible for his or her own crimes. But it seems from the current passage, and a parallel passage in Joshua 7:24, that this principle applies only to laws that do not concern sacred items or places. When there has been a violation of ritual law, anyone who comes into contact with the source of the offense is tainted by it, even to the third and fourth generations (Exodus 20:5). Thus, the fact that the punishment is enacted against the entire household of each of the rebels further demonstrates that the offense is understood to be against God, and not against God’s human representatives—even though Korah, Dathan, and Abiram perceive themselves to be challenging only the authority of Moses and Aaron.

30. “if יְהוָה brings about something unheard-of.” Moses’ ability to dictate the terms of Dathan’s and Abiram’s deaths is interesting. His point is, “By this you shall know that it was יְהוָה who sent me to do all these things; that they are not of my own devising” (v. 28). And yet, without prompting from God, Moses announces the terms of the rebels’ deaths, bringing about a sudden earthquake that swallows up Dathan, Abiram, and their families. To the onlooking Israelites, this presumably would have appeared to be a result of Moses’ own power; and perhaps that is intended to serve the purpose of quashing potential future challenges to his authority. In fact, however, it will have the opposite effect (see 17:6–7).

KORAH’S PUNISHMENT (16:32–35)

In this section the interweaving of the two stories of insurrection is particularly confusing. Later, at 17:5, Korah’s death by fire will be confirmed, but here in v. 32 it appears that “Korah’s people,” the 250 incense-offerers described in vv. 18–19, are consumed in the earthquake along with Dathan and

Korah's people and all their possessions.³³ They went down alive into Sheol, with all that belonged to them; the earth closed over them and they vanished from the midst of the congregation.³⁴ All Israel around them fled at their shrieks, for they said, "The earth might swallow us!"

³⁵ And a fire went forth from יהוה and consumed the two hundred and fifty representatives offering the incense.

17 spoke to Moses, saying:² Order Eleazar son of Aaron the priest to remove the fire pans—for they have become sacred—from among the charred

וְאַתָּה בֶּלְהִרְכֹּשׁ : ³³ וַיַּרְדֵּו הָם וְכָל־אֲשֶׁר
לְהֶם חַיִים שָׁאַלָּה וַיַּכְסֵן עַלְיָהֶם הָאָרֶץ
וַיַּאֲבְדוּ מִתּוֹךְ הַקְּהֻלָּה : ³⁴ וְכָל־יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר
סִבְבְּתִיָּהֶם נִסּוּ לְקָלָם כִּי אָמַרְוּ פָנָ-

תְּבָלְעָנוּ הָאָרֶץ : ³⁵ וְאַשְׁר יֵצֵא מִתְּחִזְקָה מִתְּחִזְקָה
אֶת הַחַמְשִׁים וּמִמְּאוֹתִים אִישׁ מִקְרִיבִי הַקְּטָרָת : ס

וַיַּדְבֵּר יהָנָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאמֹר : ² אָמַר
אֶל־אֱלֹעֵזֶר בֶּן־אַהֲרֹן הַפְּנֵן וְרוּם אֶת־
הַמְּחַתֵּל מִבֵּין הַשְּׁרָפָה וְאֶת־הָאֵשׁ וְרֹהֶ-

Abiram. Reading the Hebrew closely, however, reveals the editor's cleverness in tying together the different endings for each rebel group. In v. 35 we are told literally that "fire had gone forth" (a past perfect verb). According to the final, redacted version, the incident described in this verse, namely the burning of Korah's incense-offering group, occurred before the earthquake swallowed them along with Dathan's and Abiram's households.

Thus, in vv. 18–19, Korah and his 250 companions attempted to offer incense with their fire pans at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting. God's immediate annihilation of them is described now in v. 35. Note that Moses does not act at all here. God's Presence appears in view of the entire community (v. 19), and a fire issues forth directly from God to consume the offenders.

The difference in the enactment of each punishment highlights the difference between the two types of rebellion. The challenge to Moses' leadership is punished by Moses with God's backing. This pattern reflects the overarching model in which the leader—Moses, whom God has chosen—acts on God's behalf and behest in order to take care of the people. Conversely, God handles the challenge to priestly authority directly.

33. Sheol. This term for the underworld appears 65 times in the Tanach. The ancient Israelites believed in a shadowy post-mortem existence for all—regardless of moral virtue—in Sheol. Dathan, Abiram, and their households are brought down alive to the land of the dead.

The Aftermath (17:1–28)

Further accusations against Moses and Aaron follow, as the community holds them responsible for the deaths of the rebels. Clearly, the people have missed the point of the earlier punishments, and God acts immediately by sending a plague. Moses instructs Aaron to quickly make an expiation offering on behalf of the people to avert further destruction by God, and the plague is stopped after 14,700 deaths.

God decides to further establish Aaron's supremacy, and his divine backing, by demanding that the staff of each tribal leader be placed in the Tent of Meeting. Aaron's staff bears fruit, proving that God has chosen the house of Aaron alone as priests.

TRANSFORMATION OF THE FIRE PANS (17:1–5)

Paradoxically and inexplicably, the copper fire pans that Korah and his companions used are rendered holy, either by the act of having been offered to God improperly or by the holy fire that consumed remains; and scatter the coals abroad. ³[Remove] the fire pans of those who have sinned at the cost of their lives, and let them be made into hammered sheets as plating for the altar—for once they have been used for offering to יְהוָה, they have become sacred—and let them serve as a warning to the people of Israel. ⁴Eleazar the priest took the copper fire pans which had been used for offering by those who died in the fire; and they were hammered into plating for the altar, ⁵as had ordered him through Moses. It was to be a reminder to the Israelites, so that no outsider—one not of Aaron's offspring—should presume to offer incense before יְהוָה and suffer the fate of Korah and his band.

⁶Next day the whole Israelite community railed against Moses and Aaron, saying, “You two have brought death upon יְהוָה's people!” ⁷But as the community gathered against them, Moses and Aaron turned toward the Tent of Meeting; the cloud had covered it and the Presence of יְהוָה appeared.

⁸When Moses and Aaron reached the Tent of Meeting, ⁹spoke to Moses, saying, ¹⁰“Remove their bearers. The fire pans are to become a visible warning intended to stop those who would presume the powers of the priesthood and the ability to approach God at the Tabernacle.

הַלֹּא כִּי קָרְשׁוּ: ³ אֵת מְחֻתּוֹת הַחֲטָאתִים הָאֱלֹהִים בְּנֶפֶשֶׁתֶם וְעַשׂו אֶתְם רְקָעִי פְּחִימָה עֲפֹוי לְמַזְבֵּחַ כִּי־הַקְרִיבָם לְפָנֵי־יְהוָה וַיִּקְדְּשׁוּ וַיְהִי לְאוֹת לְבָנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁴ וַיָּקַח אֲלֹעֹזֶר הַכֹּהֵן אֶת מְחֻתּוֹת הַנְּחֹשֶׁת אֲשֶׁר הַקְרִיבָו הַשְׁרָפִים וַיְרַקְעָוּם עֲפֹוי לְמַזְבֵּחַ: ⁵ זָפְרָן לְבָנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְמַעַן אֲשֶׁר לְאִיקָּרֶב אִישׁ זֶה אֲשֶׁר לֹא מַזְרָע אַהֲרֹן הוּא לְהַקְטִיר קָטוּרָת לְפָנֵי יְהוָה וְלְאִיהִיא בְּקָרְבָּן וּבְעַדְתָּו בְּאֵשׁ הַבָּר יְהוָה בַּיָּד־מֹשֶׁה לוֹ: ⁶ פְּלַעַת בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל מִמְּחֹרֶת עַל־מֹשֶׁה וְעַל־אַהֲרֹן לְאָמֵר אֶתְם הַמְּתָמִים אֶת־עַם יְהוָה: ⁷ וַיָּהִי בַּהֲקָהָל הַעֲדָה עַל־מֹשֶׁה וְעַל־אַהֲרֹן וַיִּפְנֶל אֶל־אַחֲלָל מוֹעֵד וְהַנֶּה בְּסֹדוֹ הַעֲנָן וַיַּרְא בְּבּוֹדֵד יְהוָה: ⁸ וַיָּבֹא מֹשֶׁה וְאַהֲרֹן אֶל־פְּנֵי אַחֲלָל מוֹעֵד: ⁹ וַיֹּדְבֵּר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאָמֵר: ¹⁰ הַרְמו מִתּוֹר הַעֲדָה הַזֹּאת

5. It was to be a reminder to the Israelites. The same Hebrew terms are used to describe the function of the t'fillin (Exodus 13:9) and the rainbow at the end of the flood story (Genesis 9:12–17). They refer to an action or an object that is symbolically, rather than intrinsically, significant.

MORE REBELLION (17:6–7)

Once again, the congregation misses the point. Not only do they focus on Moses and Aaron instead of on God, but also they blame their human leaders for causing the deaths of the rebels, although Moses had taken pains to demonstrate that both his authority, and the punishments wrought, came from God.

6. “יְהוָה's people.” In referring to the human leaders in this way, the community claims them as their own—while ironically placing them in opposition to God.

PLAGUE AND EXPIATION (17:8–15)

As in the incineration of Korah and his company (16:35), this punishment comes directly from God. As proof, the human leaders intervene on behalf of the community to save them from God's wrath, demonstrating both that God is the one who has determined the punishment and enacted it, and that they are God's legitimate human representatives.

9–10. God's response compounds the bitter irony: the congregation accuses Moses and Aaron of yourselves from this community, that I may annihilate them in an instant." They fell on their faces.

¹¹Then Moses said to Aaron, "Take the fire pan, and put on it fire from the altar. Add incense and take it quickly to the community and make expiation for them. For wrath has gone forth from יהוה: the plague has begun!" ¹²Aaron took it, as Moses had ordered, and ran to the midst of the congregation, where the plague had begun among the people. He put on the incense and made expiation for the people; ¹³he stood between the dead and the living until the plague was checked. ¹⁴Those who died of the plague came to fourteen thousand and seven hundred, aside from those who died on account of Korah. ¹⁵Aaron then returned to Moses at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, since the plague was checked.

¹⁶יהוה spoke to Moses, saying: ¹⁷Speak to the Israelite people and take from them—from the chieftains of their ancestral houses—one staff for each chieftain of an ancestral house: twelve staffs in all. Inscribe each one's name on his staff, ¹⁸there being one staff for each head of an ancestral house; also inscribe Aaron's name on the staff of Levi. ¹⁹Deposit them in the Tent of Meeting before the Pact, where I meet with you. ²⁰The staff of the candidate whom I choose shall sprout, and I will rid Myself of the incessant mutterings of the Israelites against you.

²¹Moses spoke thus to the Israelites. Their chieftains gave him a staff for each chieftain of an ancestral house, twelve staffs in all; among these staffs killing God's people (see at v. 6), so now God threatens to kill the people for their accusations of Moses and Aaron.

ii-13. The irony culminates when Moses and Aaron save the people from God's wrath and the plague that follows—and they do so through the proper and sanctioned burning of incense to God.

וְאֶכָּלָה אַתֶּם בְּרִגֵּעַ וַיַּפְלֹא עַל-פְּנֵיכֶם:
¹¹ וַיֹּאמֶר מֶלֶךְ מֹשֶׁה אֶל-אֱהָרֹן קֹחْ אֶת-
הַמְּחִתָּה וְתִנְעַלְיֵה אֲשֶׁר מַעַל הַמִּזְבֵּחַ
וְשִׁים קָטָרָת וְהוֹלֶךְ מִתְּרָה אֶל-הַעֲדָה
וּכְפֵר עַל-הָם כִּי-יֵצֵא הַקָּצֵף מִלְּפָנֵי יְהוָה
הַחַל הַגָּג: ¹² וַיַּקְרַב אֱהָרֹן בְּאָשָׁר | דָּבָר
מֶלֶךְ וּבָרֶץ אֶל-תְּבוּחָה הַקָּהָל וְהַגָּה הַחַל
הַגָּג בְּעַמְּךָ וַיִּתְּנוּ אֶת-הַקָּטָרָת וּכְפֵר עַל-
הָעָם: ¹³ וַיַּעֲמֹד בֵּין-הַמְּתִימִים וּבֵין הַחַיִם
וּתְעַצֵּר הַמְּגֻפָּה: ¹⁴ וַיָּהִי הַמְּתִימִים בְּמִגְּפָה
אַרְבָּעָה עִשָּׂר אַלְפָי וְשִׁבְעָה מֵאוֹת מֵלֶבֶד
הַמְּתִימִים עַל-דְּבָרִקְרָנָה: ¹⁵ וַיֵּשֶׁב אֱהָרֹן
אֶל-מֶלֶךְ אֶל-פְּתַח אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד וְהַמְּגֻפָּה געָרָה: ב'

¹⁶ וַיֹּדַבֵּר יְהוָה אֶל-מֶלֶךְ לְאָמֵר: ¹⁷ דַּבֵּר
אֶל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְקַח מֵאַתְּ מִטָּה מִטָּה
לְבֵית אָב מֵאַת בְּלִנְשִׁיאָה לְבֵית אָבָתֶם
שְׁנִים עִשָּׂר מִטָּה אִישׁ אֶת-שְׁמוֹ תְּכַתֵּב
עַל-מִטָּה: ¹⁸ וַיָּאֹת שֵׁם אֱהָרֹן תְּכַתֵּב עַל-מִטָּה לְויִי בַּי מִטָּה אֶחָד לְרָאשׁ בֵּית
אָבָותֶם: ¹⁹ וְהַנְּחָתָם בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד לִפְנֵי
הַעֲדוֹת אֲשֶׁר אָוֹעֵד לְכֶם שְׁמָה: ²⁰ וְהִיא
הָאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר אֶבְרָבוּ מִטָּה יִפְרָח
וְהַשְׁבִּתִי מִעַלְיָה אֶת-תִּלּוֹת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
אֲשֶׁר הֵם מַלְיָנָם עַל-יכֶם:

²¹ וַיֹּדַבֵּר מֶלֶךְ אֶל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיִּתְּנוּ אֶלְיוֹן
בְּלִנְשִׁיאָה מִטָּה לְנְשִׁיאָה אֶחָד מִטָּה
לְנְשִׁיאָה אֶחָד לְבֵית אָבָתֶם שְׁנִים עִשָּׂר

AARON'S BUDDING ROD (17:16-28)

God establishes another test to demonstrate the election of the House of Aaron to the priesthood. This time the miracle requires no human intercession and thus the people should perceive it as wholly divine in nature—in order, God says, to “rid Myself was that of Aaron.²² Moses deposited the staffs before, in the Tent of the Pact.²³ The next day Moses entered the Tent of the Pact, and there the staff of Aaron of the house of Levi had sprouted: it had brought forth sprouts, produced blossoms, and borne almonds.²⁴ Moses then brought out all the staffs from before יְהוָה to all the Israelites; each identified and recovered his staff.

²⁵ יְהוָה said to Moses, “Put Aaron’s staff back before the Pact, to be kept as a lesson to rebels, so that their mutterings against Me may cease, lest they die.”²⁶ This Moses did; just as יְהוָה had commanded him, so he did.

²⁷ But the Israelites said to Moses, “Lo, we perish! We are lost, all of us lost!²⁸ Everyone who so much as ventures near יְהוָה’s Tabernacle must die. Alas, we are doomed to perish!”

18 יְהוָה said to Aaron: You and your sons and the ancestral house under your charge shall bear any guilt connected with the sanctuary; you and your sons alone shall bear any guilt connected with your

מִשּׁוֹת וּמִטְהָה אַהֲרֹן בְּתוֹךְ מִטוֹּתָם: ²² וַיַּנֶּחֶת מִשֵּׁה אֶת־הַמְּطָה לְפָנֵי יְהוָה בַּאֲחֶל־הַעֲדָת: ²³ וַיַּהַי מִמְחֻלָּת וַיַּבְאֶת מִשֵּׁה אֶל־אַהֲרֹן הַעֲדָת וְהַנֶּגֶד פָּרָח מִטְהָה־אַהֲרֹן לְבִיתָה: ²⁴ וַיַּצֵּא מִשֵּׁה אֶת־כָּל־הַמְּטָה מִלְּפָנֵי יְהוָה אֶל־כָּל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיַּקְרֹב אֵישׁ מִטְהָה: פ

²⁵ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה הַשֵּׁב אֶת־מִטְהָה אַהֲרֹן לְפָנֵי הַעֲדָת לְמִשְׁמָרָת לְאֹות לְבִנֵּי מִרְיָה וְתַכְלֵל תִּלְוֹתָם מִעַלְיוֹ וְלֹא יִמְתֹהוּ עֲשָׂה: פ

²⁶ וַיַּעֲשֶׂה מֹשֶׁה כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אָתָּה בְּנֵי גּוּעָנוּ אֶבְדָּנוּ כָּלָנוּ אֶבְדָּנוּ: ²⁸ בְּלָי קָרְבָּן הַקָּרְבָּן אֶל־מִשְׁפָּנֵן יְהוָה יְמִוּת הָאָם תִּמְנֹנוּ לְגֹועַ: יכ

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־אַהֲרֹן אַתָּה וּבְנֶיךָ וּבֵית־אָבִיךָ אַתָּה תִּשְׂאוּ אֶת־עַזְןֵ הַמִּקְדָּשׁ וְאַתָּה וּבְנֶיךָ אַתָּה תִּשְׂאוּ אֶת־עַזְןֵ of the incessant mutterings...against [Moses and Aaron]” (v. 20). On the earlier role of Aaron’s rod in Egypt and its import, see at Exodus 7:9; on almonds, see Vayak’heil, Contemporary Reflection, p. 540.

Priestly Responsibilities (18:1–32)

Like 8:5–26, this unit discusses the special duties of the Aaronite priests relative to the Levites. Having addressed challenges to the priesthood and its hierarchy, the narrative turns to rules that illustrate and sustain the correct ritual system. This text makes it clear that with duties come privileges. For their services to God on behalf of the people, the priests and Levites are to be supported by the community via a system of gifts and tithes.

PRIESTS AND LEVITES (18:1–7)

The priests, that is, the men from the family of Aaron, are responsible for preserving the purity of the sanctuary and its contents. The Levites are to have access only to the outer areas of the sanctuary. (Exodus 38:8 mentions women who are serving at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting. It is not clear whether that fleeting depiction conflicts with the current instructions.)

i. to Aaron. God speaks directly to him, rather than through Moses. This occurs in only one other place in the Torah: Leviticus 10:8.

you...shall bear any guilt. God’s introduction to the instructions here emphasizes that it is on Aaron and his descendants that God is placing the burden of responsibility for maintaining the sanctity of the Tabernacle.

priesthood. ²You shall also associate with yourself your kinsmen the tribe of Levi, your ancestral tribe, to be attached to you and to minister to you, while you and your sons under your charge are before the Tent of the Pact. ³They shall discharge their duties to you and to the Tent as a whole, but they must not have any contact with the furnishings of the Shrine or with the altar, lest both they and you die. ⁴They shall be attached to you and discharge the duties of the Tent of Meeting, all the service of the Tent; but no outsider shall intrude upon you ⁵as you discharge the duties connected with the Shrine and the altar, that wrath may not again strike the Israelites.

⁶I hereby take your fellow Levites from among the Israelites; they are assigned to you in dedication to יהוה, to do the work of the Tent of Meeting; ⁷while you and your sons shall be careful to perform your priestly duties in everything pertaining to the altar and to what is behind the curtain. I make your priesthood a service of dedication; any outsider who encroaches shall be put to death.

⁸יהוה spoke further to Aaron: I hereby give you charge of My gifts, all the sacred donations of the Israelites; I grant them to you and to your sons as a perquisite, a due for all time. ⁹This shall be yours from the most holy sacrifices, the offerings by fire: every such offering that they render to Me as most holy sacrifices, namely, every meal offering,

בְּחַנְתָּכֶם: ² וְגַם אַתִּיךְ מֶלֶת לְיִוְשְׁבַּט אֲבִיר הַקָּרֵב אֶתְךָ וַיְלֹו עַלְיךָ וַיִּשְׂרַתָּךָ וְאַתָּה וּבְנֵיךְ אֶתְךָ לְפָנֵי אַهֲל הַעֲדרָת: ³ וְשִׁמְרוּ מִשְׁמְרָתֶךָ וּמִשְׁמְרָת בְּלַהֲאָהָל אֶאָלֶכְלִי הַקְדֵּשׁ וְאֶלְהַמּוֹבֵחׁ לֹא יִקְרַבְוּ וְלֹא יִמְתַּחֲיוּ גַּסְיָהָם גַּסְיָאתָם: ⁴ וְגַלְוֹו עַלְיךָ וְשִׁמְרוּ אַתִּיכְמִשְׁמְרָת אַהֲל מָזְעֵד לְכָל עֲבָדָת הַאֲהָל וְזֹר לְאִיךְרֵב אֶלְיכָם: ⁵ וְשִׁמְרָתֶךָ אַתִּיכְמִשְׁמְרָת הַקְדֵּשׁ וְאַתִּיכְמִשְׁמְרָת הַמּוֹבֵחׁ וְלֹא יִהְיֶה עוֹד גָּצֶף עַל בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל:

וְאַנְיִ הַנֶּה לְקַחְתִּי אַתִּיכְמִשְׁמְרָת הַלְוִיִּם מִתּוֹךְ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְכָם מִתְנָה נִתְנִים לִיהְוָה לְעַבְדֵד אַתִּיכְעַבְדָת אַהֲל מוֹעֵד: ⁷ וְאַתָּה וּבְנֵיךְ אֶתְךָ תְּשֻׂרְיוֹ אַתִּיכְהַנְתָּכֶם לְכָל־דָּבָר הַמּוֹבֵחׁ וְלִמְבֵית לְפִרְכָת וְעֲבָדָתֶךָ עֲבָדָת מִתְנָה אֶתְנָן אַתִּיכְהַנְתָּכֶם וְהַזָּר הַקְרֵב יוֹמָת: ⁸ פ

וְיִרְבֵּר יְהֹוָה אֶל־אַהֲרֹן וְאַנְיִ הַנֶּה נִתְתִּי לְךָ אַתִּיכְמִשְׁמְרָת תְּרוּמָתִי לְכָל־קְדוּשֵׁי בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְכָ נִתְחִים לְמִשְׁתָּחָה וּלְבְנֵיךְ לְחַק־עוֹלָם: ⁹ וְהַיְהִיא לְךָ מִקְדֵּשׁ הַקְדֵּשים מִן־הָאָשׁ בְּלַקְרָבָנִים לְכָל־מִנְחָתֶם וּלְכָל־חַטָּאתֶם וּלְכָל־אַשְׁמָם אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁיבּוּ לֵי

2. to be attached to you. Heb. yillavu, which is a verbal form of the noun “Levite.” Originally, the term “Levite” may have referred to someone attached to the sacred in order to perform rituals—that is, a priest. However, here the term refers to those who are attached to the priests in order to serve them. The book of Numbers, with its privileging of priests, thus designates Levites as secondary clergy whose duties are to assist the priestly descendants of Aaron. (Deuteronomy presents a different understanding; see at Deuteronomy 18:1.)

GIFTS (18:8–20)

9. from the most holy sacrifices. The Bible’s sacrificial laws divide priestly portions into two types, “most holy” and “holy,” which are designated for consumption accordingly, by males in the sacred precinct and by their female relatives at home (see Ezekiel 44:29–30). “Most holy” includes the parts of the purgation and reparation offerings that are not burnt (see Leviticus 6:1–7:10).

purgation offering, and reparation offering of theirs, shall belong to you and your sons.¹⁰ You shall partake of them as most sacred donations: only males may eat them; you shall treat them as consecrated.

¹¹This, too, shall be yours: the gift offerings of their contributions, all the elevation offerings of the Israelites, I give to you [and your wives], to your sons, and to the daughters that are with you, as a due for all time; everyone of your household who is pure may eat it.

¹²All the best of the new oil, wine, and grain—the choice parts that they present to יְהוָה—I give to you. ¹³The first fruits of everything in their land, that they bring to יְהוָה, shall be yours; everyone of your household who is pure may eat them. ¹⁴Everything that has been proscribed in Israel shall be yours. ¹⁵The first [male] issue of the womb of every being, human or beast, that is offered to יְהוָה, shall be yours; but you shall have the male first-born of human beings redeemed, and you shall also have the firstling of impure animals redeemed. ¹⁶Take as their redemption price, from the age of one month up, the money equivalent of five shekels by the sanctuary weight, which is twenty gerahs. ¹⁷But the firstlings of cattle, sheep, or goats may not be redeemed; they are consecrated. You shall dash their blood against the altar, and turn their fat into smoke as an offering by fire for a pleasing odor to יְהוָה. ¹⁸But their meat shall be yours: it shall be yours like the breast of elevation offering and like the right thigh.

קָדֵשׁ קָדִשים לְךָ הוּא וְלַבְנֵיךְ: ¹⁰ בְּקָדֵשׁ
הַקָּדִשים תִּאכְלֶנּוּ בְּלֹא־כָּרֶב יִאכְלֶל אֲת֔וּ קָדֵשׁ יְהִיחָלֶל:

¹¹ וְזַהֲלָלֶךָ תְּרוּמָת מִתְנָם לְכָל־תְּנוּפָת
בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְךָ נְתָנִים וְלַבְנֵיךְ וְלַבְנָתֵיךְ
אַתָּךְ לְחַק־עוֹלָם בְּלֹא־טֹהוֹר בְּבֵיתְךָ יִאכְלֶל אֲתָּה:

¹² כָּל חָלֵב יִצְהָר וּכָל־חָלֵב תִּירּוֹשׁ וְדָגָן:
רְאִשְׁתָּם אֲשֶׁר־יְתִפְנָנוּ לִיהְוָה לְךָ נְתָנִים:

¹³ בְּבוֹיֵל כָּל־אֲשֶׁר בְּאַרְצָם אֲשֶׁר־יְבִיאָו
לִיהְוָה לְךָ יְהִיחָלֶל אֶת־טֹהוֹר בְּבֵיתְךָ יִאכְלֶנוּ:

¹⁴ כָּל־חֶרֶם בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל לְךָ יְהִיחָה: ¹⁵ כָּל־
פְּטֻר רְחֵם לְכָל־בָּשָׂר אֲשֶׁר־יִקְרִיבוּ לִיהְוָה
בְּאֶתֶּם וּבְבָהָמָה יְהִיחָלֶל אֶת־פְּרָדָה תְּפִדָּה
אֶת בְּכוֹר הָאָדָם וְאֶת בְּכוֹר־הַבָּהָמָה
הַטְמֵאָה תְּפִדָּה: ¹⁶ וּפְרִיאוֹ מִפְנִיחָדָשׁ
תְּפִדָּה בְּעַרְכָּה כִּסְף חַמְשָׁת שְׁקָלִים
בְּשֶׁלֶל הַקָּדֵשׁ עֲשָׂרִים גְּרָהָה הוּא: ¹⁷ אֶת
בְּכּוֹר־שׂוֹר אֲוֹבָכָר בְּשֶׁב אֲוֹבָכָר עַזְוּ לְאֶת־
תְּפִדָּה קָדֵשׁ הֵם אֶת־נְזָמָם תְּוִיקָּה עַל־
הַמּוֹבֵט וְאֶת־חָלֵבָם תְּקִטְרֵר אֲשֶׁר לְרִיחָה
נִיחַח לִיהְוָה: ¹⁸ וּבְשָׂרָם יְהִיחָלֶל בְּחוֹזָה
הַתְּנוּפָה וּבְשָׂוֵךְ הַצְּמִין לְךָ יְהִיחָה:

io. only males may eat them. The “most holy” portions from the meal, purgation, and reparation offerings are to be consumed only by the male priests. See also at Leviticus 6:11 for a discussion of such a phrase and its implications.

ii. to you [and your wives] . . . and to the daughters that are with you. Women in priestly families could share heave offerings and first fruits. The explicit mention of daughters, rather than wives or women, may be necessary in light of the shifting position of a daughter within a household, after she marries. (See Tzav, Another View, p. 608; and at Leviticus 21:12–13 for rules concerning a priest’s daughter.) The mention of wives in this translation reflects the understanding that the “you” here refers to the household’s primary couple, who runs the household (see Mishpatim, Another View, p. 445).

¹⁹All the sacred gifts that the Israelites set aside for יְהוָה I give to you, to your sons, and to the daughters that are with you, as a due for all time. It shall be an everlasting covenant of salt before יְהוָה for you and for your offspring as well. ²⁰And said to Aaron: You shall, however, have no territorial share among them or own any portion in their midst; I am your portion and your share among the Israelites.

²¹And to the Levites I hereby give all the tithes in Israel as their share in return for the services that they perform, the services of the Tent of Meeting. ²²Henceforth, Israelites shall not trespass on the Tent of Meeting, and thus incur guilt and die: ²³only Levites shall perform the services of the Tent of Meeting; others would incur guilt. It is the law for all time throughout the ages. But they shall have no territorial share among the Israelites; ²⁴for it is the tithes set aside by the Israelites as a gift to יְהוָה that I give to the Levites as their share. Therefore I have said concerning them: They shall have no territorial share among the Israelites.

²⁵יְהוָה spoke to Moses, saying: ²⁶Speak to the Levites and say to them: When you receive from the Israelites their tithes, which I have assigned to you as your share, you shall set aside from them one-tenth of the tithe as a gift to יְהוָה. ²⁷This shall be accounted to you as your gift. As with the new grain from the threshing floor or the flow from the vat, ²⁸so shall you on your part set aside a gift for יְהוָה from all the tithes that you receive from the

¹⁹כֹּל תְּרוּמַת הַקָּדְשִׁים אֲשֶׁר יָרִימוּ בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לִיהוָה נְתַתִּי לְךָ וּלְבָנֶיךָ וּלְבָנָתֶיךָ אֶתְתָּךְ לְחִקְעֻלָּם בְּרִית מְלָח עֹזֶל הוּא לְפָנֵי יְהוָה לְךָ וּלְזַרְעֶךָ אֶתְתָּךְ: ²⁰וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ בְּאֶרְצֵם לֹא תִנְחַל וְתַלְקַח לְאִיָּהָה לְךָ בְּתוֹכָם אָנֹכִי חְלַקְתֶּלֶךְ וְנַחֲלַתֶּךְ בְּתוֹךְ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ס

²¹וּלְבָנֶיךָ לְךָ הַגָּהָה נְתַתִּי כָּל-מְעַשֵּׂר בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל לְנַחֲלָה חֲלָף עַבְדָתְמָאָשְׁר-יְהִים עֲבָלִים אֶת-עַבְדַת אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד: ²²וְלֹא-יִקְרָבוּ עוֹד בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶל-אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד לְשֵׁאת חַטָּאת לְמוֹת: ²³וְעַבְדֵד הַלְלוּיָה הוּא אֶת-עַבְדָת אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד וְהֵם יִשְׂאוּ עֲוֹנָם חַקְתָּעַזְלָם לְדָרְתֵיכֶם וּבְתוֹל בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לֹא יִנְחַלְוּ נַחֲלָה: ²⁴כִּי אֶת-מְעַשֵּׂר בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר יָרִימוּ לִיהוָה תְּרוּמַת נְתַתִּי לְלוּיָם לְנַחֲלָה עַל-פָּנֵן אָמְרָתִי לְהֵם בְּתוֹל בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לֹא יִנְחַלְוּ נַחֲלָה: פ

²⁵וַיֹּדַבֵּר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵי-מֹשֶׁה לְאָמָר: ²⁶וְאֶל-הָלּוּיִם תְּדַבֵּר וְאֶמְرָתִי אֱלֹהִים בַּיְתָקָחוּ מֵאָתָה בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת-הַמְּעַשֵּׂר אֲשֶׁר נְתַתִּי לְכֶם מֵאֲתֶם בְּנַחֲלָתְכֶם וּבְרָמָתְכֶם מִמְּנָנוּ תְּרוּמַת יְהוָה מְעַשֵּׂר מִן-הַמְּפֻעָשָׂר: ²⁷וְנַחֲשַׁב לְכֶם תְּרוּמַתְכֶם כְּדַגְן מִן-הָגָן וּבְמַלְאָה מִן-הַקָּבָב: ²⁸כִּי תָרִימוּ גַם-אַתֶּם תְּרוּמַת יְהוָה מִפְלֵל מְעַשְׂרַתְכֶם אֲשֶׁר

19. everlasting covenant of salt. The expression “covenant of salt” occurs in the Bible only here and in II Chronicles 13:5. Due to salt’s preservative qualities, many interpreters (including Rashi) construe its mention here as a symbol of permanence. Perhaps this is why Leviticus 2:13 commands that the Israelites season every grain offering with salt. To commemorate this practice in the absence of sacrificial offerings, it is a custom to this day to sprinkle salt on the bread of the Sabbath meal.

TITHES (18:21–32)

Laws concerning tithes are also detailed in Leviticus 27:30–32 and Deuteronomy 12:17–19; 14:22–29. For their service, Levites are to be compensated with tithes, although they in turn have to donate one-tenth of the tithes they collect to the priests. This addition to the law in Leviticus 27 further distinguishes the status of Levites from that of priests; like other Israelites, the Levites also must themselves pay tithes, while priests are exempt.

Israelites; and from them you shall bring the gift for to Aaron the priest.²⁹ You shall set aside all gifts due to יְהוָה from everything that is donated to you, from each thing its best portion, the part thereof that is to be consecrated.

³⁰ Say to them further: When you have removed the best part from it, you Levites may consider it the same as the yield of threshing floor or vat.³¹ You and your households may eat it anywhere, for it is your recompense for your services in the Tent of Meeting.³² You will incur no guilt through it, once you have removed the best part from it; but you must not profane the sacred donations of the Israelites, lest you die.

תַּקְחוּ מֵאֹת בָּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְנִתְّחַם מִמְּנָנוּ אֶת-תְּרוּמַת יְהוָה לְאַהֲרֹן הַפָּהָן: ²⁹ מִפְּלַ- מְתֻנְתִּיכֶם תְּרִימֹ אֶת פָּל-תְּרוּמַת יְהוָה
מִבְּלַ-חֲלֹבּוֹ אֶת-מִקְדְּשׁוֹ מִמְּנָנוּ:

³⁰ וְאָמַרְתֶּ אֶלָּהֶם בְּהַרְיִמְכֶּם אֶת-חֲלֹבּוֹ
מִמְּנָנוּ וְנִחְשֶׁבּ לְלוֹיִם בַּתְּבוֹאַת גַּן
וּכְתַבְיוֹאַת יַקְבֵּבָ: ³¹ וְאָכְלַתֶּם אֶתְךָ בְּכָל-
מֶלֶק אֶתְכֶם וּבֵיתְכֶם כִּי-שָׁכַר הוּא לְכֶם
חַלְף עֲבֹדְתְּכֶם בְּאַחֲלָ מָעוֹד: ³² וְלֹא-
תִשְׁאֹל עַלְיוֹ הַטָּא בְּהַרְיִמְכֶּם אֶת-חֲלֹבּוֹ
מִמְּנָנוּ וְאֶת-קָדְשֵׁי בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל לֹא תְּחַלֵּל
וְלֹא תִּמְוֹתוּ: פ

31. You and your households. In contrast to the hierarchy within the priestly family, all members of the Levite household, presumably including women, share the food offered as tithes. Thus, donations to “the Levite” are for his whole family.

32. You will incur no guilt. [This concluding message to the Levites assures them of their safety when they follow God’s instructions. This message is especially apt after the death of Korah, the rebellious Levite. —Ed.]

—Shawna Dolansky

KORACH

Another View

PARASHAT KORACH DESCRIBES the punishment that befalls two groups of challengers. In the case of Dathan and Abiram, the rebels' wives die along with their husbands. Yet in the Korah episode, only the men are punished. The story as a whole reflects a central biblical theme: the tension between a clan-based system of authority and a centralized system of priestly authority.

Dathan and Abiram represent what can be called clan heads or household heads. (The biblical terminology is not always consistent.) Early in Israel's history, male heads of families had authority and jurisdiction over their families. For example, in Genesis 38 the patriarch Judah decides whether his pregnant, seemingly adulterous daughter-in-law Tamar should live or die. In contrast, the priest administers the ritual to determine whether a woman is an adulteress in Numbers 5.

According to the Bible, women within the clan system of authority played a significant role and exercised power as well as some authority. Although subject to the authority of the male head of the household, women clearly influenced the family head. For instance, unable to tolerate her rival, Sarah demands that Abraham expel Hagar. Despite Abraham's reluctance, God tells him to obey Sarah (Genesis 21:12).

Texts that focus on the priesthood shift authority away from the family's head toward the central sanctuary and its priests. Women, in particular, are affected by this shift (see at Leviticus 26:30). Whereas in Genesis 38 Tamar actively works to secure her fate, in Numbers 5 the suspected woman is a passive figure. The inclusion of the wives of Dathan and Abiram reflects the role that women played within the clan system.

Thus, Numbers 16 is not only a story of infighting among families, ultimately championing Aaron and Numbers 16 tells of the metaphoric demise of patriarchal authority within the family.

his descendants; it also tells a story about the seeming demise of an important notion of the "biblical family." The deaths of Dathan, Abiram, and their wives at the doorway to their tents (16:27) make the point painfully clear: after all, the entrance to the tent is a place associated with theophany and judgment in the clan system, and hence also a symbol of authority (Genesis 18:1; Deuteronomy 22:21). Together, Dathan, Abiram, and their wives represent the clan system that must be erased—swallowed whole—in order to establish the authority of the priesthood. —Amy Kalmanofsky

Post-biblical Interpretations

Now Korah... betook himself (16:1). Literally, "and Korah took" (va-yikach Korach), which presents a dilemma for translators and commentators since the verb lacks a direct object. What did Korah take? Midrash B'midbar Rabbah 18.4 explains that Korah

"took" his tallit—and went to get advice from his wife. BT Sanhedrin 110a goes further and portrays Korah's wife as playing an active role in the development of his resentment. She complains that Moses has become a king, his brother Aaron is chief priest, and Aaron's sons are priests, while Levites such as Korah are disadvantaged in a number of ways. Moreover, she continues, Moses humiliated the Levites by ordering them to shave their entire bodies (8:7). Finally, Korah's wife ridicules the commandment of tzitzit (15:37–41), which requires the presence in the fringes of t'cheilet (a blue thread). If blue thread is so important, she asks rhetorically, why not wear a cloak made entirely of blue thread?

Why does the Babylonian Talmud—and, by implication, B'midbar Rabbah—portray Korah's wife in this negative way? Rabbi Hanokh Zundel (author of the Etz Yosef commentary on B'midbar Rabbah) hypothesized that because Dathan's and Abiram's wives and children were with the rebels at the fateful moment of being swallowed up (16:27), their wives must have shared their husbands' rebellious sentiments. Presumably, Korah's wife also agreed with Korah's anger. Of course, in a patriarchal society, women would have had little choice but to “agree” with their husbands. Korah's wife, however, may have had a more specific motivation: given that Korah was a first cousin of Moses and Aaron, his rebellion was a family affair—at least in part. Korah's wife may have zealously pursued what she saw as her husband's legitimate interests against her powerful cousins-in-law. It is also possible that the Rabbis, who often impute the worst possible motives to women, are portraying Korah's wife as another Eve who (in rabbinic lore) is leading her innocent husband into temptation and disaster.

On son of Peleth (16:1). The Rabbis give us a different model of a rebel's spouse in their construction of the wife of On son of Peleth. The Rabbis assume that On did not see the rebellion through to the end, and thus he was spared the collective punishment. This is because he is listed among the rebels in 16:1, but there is no specific mention of his death in 16:23–35 when the rebels are destroyed. In a story found in two versions (B'midbar Rabbah 18.20 and BT Sanhedrin 109b–110a), the Rabbis attribute On's rescue to his wife. In both versions, On's wife points out to him that the rebellion will leave him no better off:

he is currently subordinate to Aaron; if the rebellion is successful, he will be subordinate to Korah. She observes to herself, “I know that all of the congregation is holy,” citing as proof Korah's own words in 16:3. She then gets her husband drunk, puts him to bed, and sits at their front door with her hair undone and exposed. The holiness of the congregation is made manifest when the rebels approach the house to summon her husband—and withdraw immediately upon seeing her immodest appearance. By the time On awakens from his drunken sleep, the rebellion has been put down and the rebels destroyed.

Korah's wife played an active role in the development of his resentment.

In the version of this story in the Midrash (B'midbar Rabbah), On never speaks; we do not know if he agrees with his wife or not. We may reasonably infer that he does not; otherwise, why would she have to get him drunk to put an end to his participation in the rebellion? In the version in the Talmud, however, On appears to agree with his spouse's assessment of his status after the rebellion. When he asks her, “What should I do?” she makes her observation about communal holiness and executes her plan to save her family from destruction.

The possible appeal to women—especially poor women—of Korah's overall critique of the Mosaic order is illustrated differently in Midrash T'hillim 1:15. Korah is represented there as showing the injustice of Torah laws by pointing out their adverse impact on a widow with two daughters. Whether the poor widow wishes to plow, sow, harvest, or raise animals—Korah notes—Moses and Aaron are there to regulate how she should plow and sow, and to insist that she gives portions of her harvest and her herds to the priests. The widow, frustrated at all these restraints and exactions, ends up bereft and weeping together with her children.

—Alyssa M. Gray

Contemporary Reflection

WHAT A DRAMATIC power struggle we have just witnessed in this parashah! A cabal of influential rebels tries to take power from Moses, daring to risk their lives to promote their own self-interest over the sacred destiny of their people. Their downfall is stark and dreadful.

Yet, the Torah teaches, even though Korah dies, his descendants live on (Numbers 26:11). We certainly see them today: cynical political, religious, and communal leaders cloaking self-interest in the language of democracy, nationalism, or God. In wielding power in such shortsighted ways, these modern-day rebels present an even greater threat to God's creation than Korah did to Moses' leadership. This Torah portion urges us to be vigilant, lest such persons undermine the communities that we are called to create and sustain.

But it is not only public leaders who play Korah's role today. We, too, live with an ongoing conflict between an "inner Moses" and an "inner Korah"—between humility and arrogance, between selflessness and selfishness. And until we can hear the difference between those two voices, our actions will not be effective in countering the power of the Korahs at large in the world. We need to be clear when it is the voice of our needy, small-minded self that advises us to act, or when it is the wise voice that speaks from our deepest and best values and truth. We need a practice of reflection to discern which voice is guiding us. Happily, we can also find some guidance in this parashah.

In our tradition Moses is seen as humility embodied—the true servant of God. The S'fas Emes, a 19th-century Hasidic master, understood Moses as being so far from pride in his bearing that people could not fathom his modesty. In parashat Korach, we see Moses in that place of humility, able to lead because he loves God and the Israelites with every fiber of his being, despite his constant frustration with both of them. Twice he falls on his face—before Korah and before God—trying to stop the rebellion and to prevent God from destroying the persistently disobedient Israelites. Moses acts from the deep understanding that Korah's challenge has nothing to do with him; it is a challenge to God. He knows himself to be the vessel through which God's vision for the Israelites could become manifest, not the man who has to prove himself superior to an insolent competitor. Throughout the journeys of the Israelites, we see Moses grow as a spiritual leader: from a reluctant young man who struggles with anger and lack of self-confidence to become the quintessential leader—one who is able to overcome his own ego in order to serve a much greater cause. Finally, he becomes one who accepts God's decision that he will die—and that he will die outside the land of Israel.

We live with an ongoing conflict between an "inner Moses" and an "inner Korah."

Korah is different. His challenge to Moses is rooted in personal ambition, not love of God or of the Israelites. Unlike Moses, who hesitated to take the leadership that God offered, Korah seeks to grab it for himself. Tradition interprets the opening of the parashah—literally "And Korah took"—to mean that he took himself apart from the people (Tzvi Hirsch Kalischer; Torah Gems, 1998, p. 77). Korah would have done nothing to stop God from destroying the Israelites, for he would have loved to be the sire of a whole new people. Unlike Moses, Korah sees the whole story as being about himself and the role he wants to play as a powerful chief priest.

Reading this parashah, I ask: how do I recognize Korah in my own thoughts and actions, and how do I liberate the consciousness that Moses had? In my job as the director of a wonderful non-profit institute, I find that Korah seems to pop up most frequently when I am afraid. What if I don't succeed at raising enough money? What if I don't succeed at making our work known? What if I am not good enough? What if this work fails because of my incompetence? In such moments of doubt, I make myself the central actor on stage, starring in the "The Tragedy of Rachel." In that place of fear, I separate myself from the community doing the work, and I clutch for some way to feel in control. I can't see the whole. There is no way to make wise decisions.

But if I make time, like Moses, to fall on my face—to breathe and reflect—I can hear the "I" shouting out in all its grandiosity. I reply, "Rav l'kha (Enough of this), Korah!"—acknowledging that once again I have made the story about me and my fears. In that space, Moses can emerge and call me back to humility—to the recognition that I, like everybody else, am but a bit player on this stage. I can rekindle the trust that I have in the wisdom of the unfolding of the work and in the wisdom of my colleagues to figure out what will flow from this moment.

The Korah in all of us gets triggered by different emotions: fear, anger, anxiety, greed or doubt. When this happens, we lose sight of the whole and become caught up in our own inner dramas. Our needs eclipse the needs of others.

Moses' path—and ours—is to move from the narrow place of doubt, fear, anger, and jealousy to an expansive covenanted life in a community of mutual care and responsibility. In such a community, all people are holy. They—we—can remind each other that what matters is not the ambition of the self, but the work of helping to make the soul, the home, the office, and the world a safer, wiser, more compassionate place for all. Such a perspective helps each of us to come closer to being a humble servant of God.

—Rachel Cowan

KORACH

Voices

Korach

Laurie Patton

Numbers 16:3–5

we do not know
which of our sacrifices will be the right ones

Moses gave Korach one night.

The origins of insomnia
must be in those hours, as each man wondered about the lands
of milk and honey,
and his rights
to hoist banners
for the crowds who loved him.

Moses sure of God's voice, and Korach sure of his own—each trying to tell the difference between arrogance and righteous anger—
a line so thin—
thin as a flame
in a fire pan

Their sleepless night is our own,
echoing restlessly
as we sort spices
in our dark kitchens and arrange furniture
by moonlight

Sweating in starlight,
we remember arrogance
and mutter righteous anger, and then quietly beg to hear God—

for when the dawn comes,

From Day to Night

Dahlia Ravikovitch

(transl. Chana Bloch and Chana Kronfeld)

Numbers 17:6

Every day I rise from sleep again
as if for the last time.
I don't know what awaits me,
perhaps it follows logically, then,
that nothing awaits me.
The spring that's on its way is like the spring that's gone.
I know about the month of May but pay it no mind.
I don't mark the border between night and day,
just that night is colder
though silence is equal to them both.
At dawn I hear the voices of birds.
I fall asleep easily
out of affection for them.
The one who is dear to me is not here,
perhaps he simply is not.
I cross over from day to night from day to day
like a feather
the bird doesn't feel as it falls away.

Poem 21

Ruth Whitman

Numbers 18:12

a fist of life
thrusts up through sand
and opens its palm:

a rainbow of vegetables:
black olives, seas of oranges,
eggplants, shiny purple,
artichokes, small
scarlet tomatoes, parsley
curled in bushes
raisins garlic cumin

seeds fall through the air:
the sun is a cauldron of hot oil.

Turning the Garden in Middle Age

Maxine Kumin

Numbers 18:12–13

They have lain a long time, these two:
parsnip with his beard on his foot pudding stone with fool's gold in her ear until, under the thrust of my fork, earthlock lets go. Mineral and marrow are flung loose in May still clinging together as if they had intended this embrace.

I think then of skulls picked clean underground, and the long bones of animals overturned in the woods and the gorgeous insurgency of these smart green weeds erect now in every furrow that lure me once more to set seeds in the loam.

A Box of Clementines in the Maternity Ward

Jessica Greenbaum

Numbers 18:12–15

You couldn't sleep and you cried unless I nursed you while I walked around the room. On the oval table in their small wooden crate sat the clementines, packed neatly and glowing like embers beneath their red netting. Rounding the dark room, singing a song that came with you and is lost with those early days (half of life, my love, is disappearance) I stopped at the table and peeled one clementine every few laps, the skin falling off the globe with completion and ease, a yellowed veil barely clinging,
the little smoke rising to your initiating dream, the whole fruit punctuating my thirst and hunger. My body was an enormous land you just left, my belly so soft after your departure
it seemed to ripple like a lake.
Into that darkness
dropped the clementines,
both you and I lifting to our lips something we tasted
for the first time, in an orbit we followed without haste or destination.

צְקַנְתָּא ◆ Chukat

NUMBERS 19:1–22:1

Leadership and Loss in the Wilderness

PARASHAT CHUKAT (“law [that]”) acknowledges the grim reality of death in the wilderness, a necessary succession in leadership, and the approach of the journey’s end. Repeatedly in this parashah, healing and new life follow death. In the face of the chaos and unpredictability of death and its contaminating powers, Numbers 19 responds with a priestly ritual, recording instructions that contain a great deal of regulatory detail, delivered in an orderly, precise tone. Numbers 20 focuses on two significant deaths in the community of Israel, that of Miriam and her brother Aaron. Numbers 21 focuses on new opportunities in spite of deep disappointment, as successful battles mark a positive change in Israel’s fortune. After the loss of his siblings, Moses remains, leading Israel ever closer to the edges of the Promised Land, a land that he himself will never enter.

The deaths of Miriam and Aaron are central to this parashah, providing us an opportunity to consider the role of each within the Israelite camp. Gender politics can be detected in the more elaborate details concerning the punishment and death of Aaron in comparison to the report of Miriam’s death. Nevertheless, the mere fact that the time and place of Miriam’s death are recorded is highly unusual and therefore quite striking. One intriguing detail even

Repeatedly in this parashah, healing and new life follow death.

places her on a par with Moses: he too is condemned to death in the same literary unit in which Miriam and Aaron die. Could it be mere coincidence that these three siblings are grouped together in this fashion? Indeed, the prophet Micah places Miriam on a par with her brothers: “I brought you up from the land of Egypt, redeemed you from the house of bondage, and sent Moses, Aaron, and Miriam to lead you” (Micah 6:4). Miriam’s death provides an opportunity to reflect on her life and to appreciate the unique features of this biblical leader (see at 20:1).

—Adriane Leveen

Outline—

I. THE “RED COW” RITUAL AFTER CONTACT WITH A CORPSE (19:1–22)

- A. Instructions for handling the red cow (vv. 1–10)
- B. Rituals after contact with a corpse, human bones, or a grave (vv. 11–22)

II. THE DEATHS OF MIRIAM AND AARON (20:1–29)

- A. Miriam’s death (v. 1)
- B. Moses and Aaron punished: Fateful incident at Meribah (vv. 2–13)
- C. Failed negotiations with the king of Edom (vv. 14–21)
- D. Aaron’s death and Eleazar’s succession as chief priest (vv. 22–29)

III. TOWARD THE JOURNEY’S END

Itineraries and Songs, Negotiations and Battles (21:1–22:1)

- A. Successful battle against the king of Arad (21:1–3)
- B. Further complaints (21:4–9)
- C. Itinerary of travels and Israel’s song (21:10–20)
- D. Successful political negotiations and military victories (21:21–22:1)

19:1

יְהוָה spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying:
²This is the ritual law that יהוה has commanded:

Instruct the Israelite people to bring you a red cow without blemish, in which there is no defect and on which no yoke has been laid. ³You shall give it to Eleazar the priest. It shall be taken outside the camp and slaughtered in his presence. ⁴Eleazar the priest shall take some of its blood with his finger and sprinkle it seven times toward the front of the

ט וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵיכֶם וְאֶל־אַהֲרֹן לְאָמֵר: ²זֶאת חֲקַת הַתּُוֹרָה אֲשֶׁר־צִוָּה יְהוָה לְאָמֵר
דַּבָּר | אֶל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיֹּקְרַב אֱלֹהִים פְּרָה
אֲדָמָה תְּמִימָה אֲשֶׁר אַיִלְבָּל מִום אֲשֶׁר
לְאַעֲלָה עַלְيָה עַל: ³וַיִּתְהַתֵּם אַתָּה אֶל־
אֱלֹעָזָר הַכֹּהן וְהַזָּרִיא אַתָּה אֶל־מְחֹזֶץ
לְמִחְנָה וְשַׁחַט אַתָּה לְפָנָיו: ⁴וְלַקְח אֱלֹעָזָר
הַכֹּהן מִקְרָמָה בְּאַצְבָּעָו וְהַזָּה אֶל־נְבָחָפְנִי

• •

The “Red Cow” Ritual after Contact with a Corpse (19:1–22)

The parashah begins with God’s instructions for creating a water-based mixture called “water of niddah (lustration).” The reader learns only in v. 9 that the mixture is an antidote for specific contaminations that trigger the need for purification. These include a corpse, human bones, or a grave. Contamination may occur inside a tent or out in the open field. Such contact is presented as a real and present danger, requiring an immediate antidote.

2. red. This color reinforces the use of blood in aid of purification (see at Leviticus 1:6).

cow. The present offering, which is intended for individual use, calls for a female of the herd (Jacob Milgrom, Numbers, 1990, pp. 437–47).

without blemish. Heb. t’mimah, which could also be translated as “faultless,” signals that the animal is suitable for sacrifice (see Leviticus 14:10) and is “whole or complete” (Leviticus 3:9).

INSTRUCTIONS FOR HANDLING THE RED COW (19:1–10)

The preparations of the “water of lustration” begin with a series of steps performed by Eleazar, Aaron’s son. The officiant takes the red cow outside the camp, slaughters it, and then purifies those involved. The entire procedure is considered highly impure (tamei).

3. outside the camp. Priestly texts are vigilant concerning boundaries. This unit deals repeatedly with such delineations: outside and inside the camp, as well as inside a tent, and out in an open field. The Israelite priestly outlook emphasizes containment and order in the face of the chaos and unpredictability of death.

4. take some of its blood. In this case, the

- The public silence about Miriam’s death apparently did not go unnoticed.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 931

- Miriam’s Well traveled with the nation in the wilderness and had healing powers.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 931

- Moses grasped that something vital might have died with Miriam.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 933

- I told you, when rocks crack, it happens by surprise. / Not to mention people.

VOICES ► 935

Tent of Meeting.⁵ The cow shall be burned in his sight—its hide, flesh, and blood shall be burned, its dung included—⁶ and the priest shall take cedar wood, hyssop, and crimson stuff, and throw them into the fire consuming the cow.⁷ The priest shall wash his garments and bathe his body in water; after that the priest may reenter the camp, but he shall be impure until evening.⁸ The one who performed the burning shall also wash those garments in water, bathe in water, and be impure until evening.⁹ Another party who is pure shall gather up the priest sprinkles the blood at the front of the Tent of Meeting. At other times, the priest sprinkles blood directly on the altar. Jacob Milgrom draws an analogy between sacrificial blood and a cleansing agent such as detergent (Numbers, 1990, p. 439; see also at Leviticus 1:6).

אֹהֶל מוֹעֵד מִדְמָה שְׁבֻע פָּעָם : ۵ וְשָׂרֵךְ אֲתִ-הַפְּרָה לְעֵינָיו אֶת-עֶרֶה וְאֲתִ-בְּשָׂרָה וְאֲתִ-דְמָה עַל-פְּרָשָׂה יִשְׁרָף : ۶ וְלֹכֶחֶת הַכְּהֻן עַצְּרָן וְאַזְוֹב וְשָׁנִי תּוֹלְעָת וְהַשְׁלִיךְ אֶל-תּוֹר שְׁרָפַת הַפְּרָה : ۷ וְכַבֵּס בְּגִדֵּיו הַכְּהֻן וְרָחֵץ בְּשָׂרוֹ בְּמִים וְאַחֲרֵי יְבָא אֶל-הַמְּחַנָּה וְטָמֵא הַכְּהֻן עַד-הַעֲרָב : ۸ וְהַשְׁרָף אֲתָה יִכְבֹּס בְּגִדֵּיו בְּמִים וְרָחֵץ בְּשָׂרוֹ בְּמִים וְטָמֵא עַד-הַעֲרָב : ۹ וְאַסְף | אִישׁ טָהוֹר אֶת אַפְרֵן

Stephen Geller offers a trenchant summation of blood's use both as a sign of sinfulness and its opposite—an agent of creative purification ("Blood Cult," 1992, pp. 97–124). As he points out, blood signals loss of life, including murder; for instance, the blood of Abel testifies that Cain murdered him (Genesis 4:10). But blood also symbolizes life itself; therefore, according to the Bible, God has forbidden humans to eat flesh without first draining its blood (Genesis 9:4–6). Blood saves Israel from death in Exodus 12:13. Paradoxically, in Leviticus 12, after the woman gives birth she remains in a state of "blood purification" that marks the arrival of new life; but in Leviticus 15, blood of the menstruating woman represents the missed opportunity of conception. Both conditions make a woman temporarily impure.

These symbolic dimensions of blood are captured in the ritual of the red cow. An actual encounter with death requires that one be washed with a watery mixture containing the ashes of incinerated blood. The mixture is acquired through an animal's death in a ceremony of purifying renewal that allows one to return to the community of the living.

5. its hide, flesh, and blood. Every part of the animal is to be used. While the present ritual is unusual in adding the blood of the sacrifice to the mixture, in other respects it follows priestly precedent (as in Leviticus 4:12).

6. cedar wood, hyssop, and crimson stuff. In Exodus 12:22, God ordered the Israelites to dip hyssop into blood to smear on their doorposts, thus associating hyssop with the life-saving dimension of blood. "Crimson stuff" (dyed yarn) is used in Exodus 36:8, 35, 37 as part of the material in the Tabernacle, and in Exodus 39:1–2 as part of the sacred vestments of the high priest. Thus these materials are already connected with the saving of life, a sacred site, and a religious leader, marking them as powerful and efficacious—which also explains their present use. All three materials are also used in the purification rituals for tzaraat (see Leviticus 14).

8. The one who performed the burning. [Both here and in the next verse, the probable reference is to a (male) priest or Levite; on the other hand, these may have been the kinds of tasks in which an Israelite sanctuary's female staff could be expected to take part, if there were indeed such workers. (On women's working at the sanctuary, see at Exodus 38:8.) Possibly gender is not an issue in the text at this point, which is why the translation is couched in gender-neutral terms. —Ed.]

9. Another party who is pure. Those involved in burning the cow and in collecting the ashes, ashes of the cow and deposit them outside the camp in a pure place, to be kept for water of lustration for

הַפְרָה וְהַנִּיתָח מְחוֹז לְמַחְנֶה בָּמִקּוֹם טָהֹר הַהִתְה לְעָדָת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְמַשְׁמָרָת לְמַיִּ

including the priest, become impure (tamei) until evening. A person who is pure (tahor) deposits the ashes in a pure site. The terms tamei and tahor, which priestly texts almost always juxtapose to each other, make their appearance together in Numbers 19. Their frequent use in this passage suggests their importance as the focus of the discussion.

The priestly system functions through a series of opposites—purity and impurity, holiness and unholiness, life and death—that mimic God’s creation of the world in Genesis 1 through the imposition of an orderly plan for the earth based on distinct categories. In the face of disorder and death, the priestly legislation strives to restore such a state of order.

water of lustration...for purgation. The term for lustration, niddah, illustrates the way in which a word may take on contradictory meanings in different biblical traditions. Later commentary has conflated those meanings and woefully misunderstood them.

The noun niddah derives from the root n-d-d “to depart, flee, wander”; the causative use of the root means “to chase away, put aside,” related to the Akkadian cognate, “to throw, cast down.” Jacob Milgrom understands niddah as having originally referred to the menstrual blood, which was discharged or eliminated. Niddah came to refer to the menstruant herself, “for she too was ‘discharged’ and ‘excluded’ from her society not by being kept at arm’s length from others but, in many communities, by being banished to and quarantined in separate quarters” (Leviticus 1–16, 1991, p. 745).

Niddah occurs 29 times in the Tanach, conveying at least three possible meanings: menstrual impurity (the most frequent meaning), indecency, and purification (the present case).

Niddah is used in Leviticus 12 and 15 matter-of-factly, in the midst of details concerning states of impurity for males as well as females, to designate the flow of blood during menstruation. It does not convey a negative attitude toward a menstruating woman. In Leviticus 20:21, however, the term takes on a more negative meaning as “indecency” when used in reference to when a man marries his brother’s wife. Milgrom captures the distinction between these texts, explaining that in Leviticus 12 and 15 “the word niddah is a technical term for menstrual discharge”; yet in Leviticus 20 and derivative literature, “it becomes a metaphor for impurity, indecency or disgrace that stems from moral rather than physical causes” (Leviticus 1–16, p. 744).

A prime example of the derivative literature is Ezekiel 36:17, where the prophet uses the term in an explicitly degrading sense, comparing Israel’s defilement of the land to a menstruating woman. Reading the continuation of this passage, Jonathan Klawans suggests that the menstruating woman in Ezekiel is an apt image since she “can cleanse herself quickly and easily from her ritual impurity, so too will God purify the people from the defiling force of their sins” (Impurity and Sin in Ancient Judaism, 2000, p. 31). However, one can read it in a more blatantly pejorative way, and legitimately conclude that Ezekiel resorts to the image in order to impugn Israel severely (see also Ezekiel 7:19; 18:6; 22:10).

Similarly, Ezra 9:11 borrows the analogy of the menstruating woman to emphasize that the land had been defiled by its inhabitants’ abominations. In II Chronicles 29:5, niddah is used in contradistinction to holiness. Nevertheless, none of these increasingly negative uses of niddah explains its use in Numbers 19.

In the present verse, niddah conveys the nuance found in the term’s original meaning—being set apart—since the watery mixture is to remain outside the camp. Yet through purification it restores the individual to her or his proper place within the camp. Zechariah 13:1 highlights that sense of restoration. The prophet envisions the day on which God will vindicate Jerusalem: “On that day a foun-

the Israelite community. It is for purgation.¹⁰ The one who gathers up the ashes of the cow shall also wash those clothes and be impure until evening.

This shall be a permanent law for the Israelites and for the strangers who reside among you.

¹¹Those who touch the corpse of any human being shall be impure for seven days.¹²They shall purify themselves with [the ashes] on the third day and on the seventh day, and then be pure; if they fail to purify themselves on the third and seventh days, they shall not be pure.¹³Those who touch a corpse, the body of a person who has died, and do not purify themselves, defile Yahweh's Tabernacle; those persons shall be cut off from Israel. Since the water of lustration was not dashed on them, they remain impure; their impurity is still upon them.

¹⁴This is the ritual: When a person dies in a tent, whoever enters the tent and whoever is in the

נָשָׂה חַטֹּאת הַוָּא: ¹⁰ וְכֹבֵס הַאֲסֶף אֶת־אָפֶר הַפְּרָה אֶת־בְּגָדָיו וְטָמֵא עַד־הַעֲרָב
וְהִיְתָה לְבָנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְלֹא גָּרֶג בְּתוֹךְ
לְחַקְתּוֹן עָזָלָם:

¹¹ הַגְּגָעַ בְּמִתְּה לְכָל־נֶפֶשׁ אָדָם וְטָמֵא
שְׁבֻעַת יָמִים: ¹² הוּא יְתַחַטְאֵבּוּ בַּיּוֹם
הַשְׁלִישִׁי וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעִי יְטַהֵר וְאַמְלָא
יְתַחַטְא בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁלִישִׁי וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעִי לֹא
יְטַהֵר: ¹³ בְּלִיהְגָגָע בְּמִתְּה בְּנֶפֶשׁ הָאָדָם
אֲשֶׁר־יִמְוֹת וְלֹא יְתַחַטְא אֶת־מִשְׁבֵן יְהוָה
טָמֵא וְנִכְרַתָּה הַנֶּפֶשׁ הַהוּא מִיּוֹרָא בְּיַיִן
מֵי נָשָׂה לְאַזְרָק עַלְיוֹ טָמֵא יְהִיָּה עַזְדָּה
טָמְאָתוֹ בּוֹ:

¹⁴ זֹאת הַתּוֹרָה אֲתָם כִּי־יִמְוֹת בְּאַחֲלָבְלָה
הַבָּא אֶל־הַאֲחָלָה וּבְלִאָשָׁר בְּאַחֲלָה יְטָמֵא

tain opened to the...inhabitants of Jerusalem for cleansing [chatat] and for sprinkling [niddah.]" Thus, both that oracle and the present verse use niddah in close connection to chatat. In both texts niddah is understood not as defiling or abhorrent, but as its opposite, ensuring purification. Both passages suggest a moment of restoration and joyous relief.

II. Those. [In this paragraph, the Hebrew is couched in the singular but is impersonal. The translator found nothing in the Bible or ancient Near Eastern cultures to imply that women would be excluded from consideration in this ritual law. So that the gender-neutral sense is clear in translation, the English is phrased in the plural. —Ed.]

RITUALS AFTER CONTACT WITH A CORPSE, HUMAN BONES, OR A GRAVE (19:11–22)

A person who touches or is exposed to the dead becomes contaminated (ritually impure). Verses 11–13 set up the general principle: the contaminated individual remains so for seven days. The individual must undergo purification on the third day and then becomes pure on the seventh. Although the individual is referred to as male, v. 14 states that whoever enters a tent in which someone has died faces contamination. Surely a woman runs the same risk of encountering the dead as a man. Yet, as in many other ritual procedures, the woman goes unmentioned. Given the inclusive use of the masculine pronoun elsewhere in priestly writings, one can conclude that these laws apply to women as well.

A contaminated individual who fails to purify herself or himself remains impure and will defile the Tabernacle. To discourage such an outcome, the negligent individual is threatened with one of the most severe penalties possible in ancient Israelite law: kareit or excommunication. The prominence and intermingling of the words for purity (twice) and impurity (four times) along with purification (three times) urgently draw attention to maintaining the Tabernacle in its required state of purity—so that God remains in the midst of Israel.

tent shall be impure seven days;¹⁵ and every open vessel, with no lid fastened down, shall be impure.¹⁶ And in the open, anyone who touches a person who was killed or who died naturally, or human bone, or a grave, shall be impure seven days.¹⁷ Some of the ashes from the fire of purgation shall be taken for the impure person, and fresh water shall be added to them in a vessel.¹⁸ Another party who is pure shall take hyssop, dip it in the water, and sprinkle on the tent and on all the vessels and people who were there, or on the one who touched the bones or the person who was killed or died naturally or the grave.¹⁹ The pure person shall sprinkle it upon the impure person on the third day and on the seventh day, thus purifying that person by the seventh day. [The one being purified] shall then wash those clothes and bathe in water—and at night-fall shall be pure.²⁰ If any party who has become impure fails to undergo purification, that person shall be cut off from the congregation for having defiled יהוה's sanctuary. The water of lustration was not dashed on that person, who is impure.

²¹That shall be for them a law for all time. Further, the one who sprinkled the water of lustration shall wash those clothes; and whoever touches the water of lustration shall be impure until evening.²² Whatever that impure person touches shall be impure; and the person who touches the impure one shall be impure until evening.

שבעת ימים: ¹⁵ וכל בְּלִי פָּתֹוח אֲשֶׁר אֵין צַמִּיד פְּתִיל עַלְיוֹ טְמֵא הוּא: ¹⁶ וכל אֲשֶׁר יָגַע עַל־פְּנֵי הַשְׁׂדָה בְּחַלְל־חֶרֶב אוֹ בְּמַת אָוֹבָעָצָם אָדָם אוֹ בְּקָרְבָן יְטֵמָא שְׁבָעַת יָמִים: ¹⁷ וְלֹכַח לְטָמֵא מַעֲפָר שְׁרָבֶת הַחַטָּאת וְנִתְן עַלְיוֹ מִים חַיִים אַל־כְּלֵי: ¹⁸ וְלֹכַח אֹזֶב וְטַבֵּל בְּמַיִם אִיש טָהוֹר וְהַזָּה עַל־הַאָהָל וְעַל־כְּל־הַכְּלִים וְעַל־הַנְּפָשָׁות אֲשֶׁר הַיּוֹשֵׁם וְעַל־הַגָּגֶע בְּעֵצֶם אוֹ בְּחַלְל אָוֹ בְּמַת אָוֹ בְּקָרְבָן: ¹⁹ וְהַזָּה הַשְׁׂהָר עַל־הַטְמֵא בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁלִישִׁי וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעִי וְחַטָּאוֹן בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעִי וְכַבֵּס בְּגָדוֹי וּרְחֵץ בְּמַיִם וְטַהַר בְּעַרְבָּה: ²⁰ וְאִיש אֲשֶׁר־יְטֵמָא וְלֹא יִתְחַפֵּא וְנִכְרַתָּה הַנְּפָשָׁת הַהְוָא מִתּוֹךְ הַקָּהָל בַּיּוֹם מִקְרָב יְהֹוָה טָמֵא מֵנֶה לְאַזְרָק עַלְיוֹ טְמֵא הוּא:

²¹ וְהִתְהַהֵה לָהּם לְחַקְתָּעָלָם וּמִתָּהָמֵד הַנְּנָהָה יְכַבֵּס בְּגָדוֹי וְהַגָּגֶע בְּמַיִם הַנְּנָהָה יְטֵמָא עַד־הָעָרָב: ²² וכל אֲשֶׁר־יִגְעַב־בְּהַטְמֵא יְטֵמָא וְהַנְּפָשָׁת הַגְּנֻעָת הַטְמֵא עַד־הָעָרָב: ב

17. fresh water. In this procedure of purification, “living water” (as in Genesis 26:19) is added to the ashes, mixed together, and sprinkled on the contaminated tent, vessels, and person. Leviticus 14:5 and 50 cite “living water” as part of the rituals to purify a mitzora (the so-called leper, that is, a person afflicted with tzaraat) or a similarly afflicted house (along with the three substances cited in 19:6). Close connections exist between the present ritual of purification and that found in Leviticus, strengthening the claims that both texts are priestly, and that death and tzaraat are intertwined in the priestly imagination. (See further the introduction to Leviticus 14.)

20. cut off from the congregation. The instructions repeat the warning declared in v. 13, highlighting the threat to Israel: the possible defilement of the sanctuary and the banishment of God from their midst. (On being “cut off,” see at Numbers 15:30.)

20 The Israelites arrived in a body at the wilderness of Zin on the first new moon, and the people stayed at Kadesh. Miriam died there and was buried there.

כ וַיָּבֹאוּ בְנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל כָּל־הָעֵדָה מִדְבָּר־צָן
בְּחֶדֶשׁ הַרְאָזֶן וַיֵּשֶׁב הַעַם בְּקֶדֶשׁ וְתִמְתָּחֵל
שָׁמֶן מְרִימִים וְתִקְבֶּר שָׁמֶן:

The Deaths of Miriam and Aaron (20:1–29)

The ritual of purification is immediately relevant since Miriam now dies. Perhaps as a result of her death, Moses and Aaron behave at Meribah in such a way as to be denied entry into the Promised Land. Aaron dies at the end of the unit, so the deaths of Moses' siblings bracket a unit that also recounts unsuccessful negotiations with the King of Edom.

Death reports in the Bible are highly political. Here, the politics of gender appear to play a role in the greater length and quantity of details reported of Aaron's death versus that of his sister, Miriam. Through the shaping of their deaths in Numbers 20, the biblical writer reinforces and strengthens the status of Aaron at the expense of his sister. However, we readers are free to revise that opinion.

MIRIAM'S DEATH (20:1)

In one brief verse—astonishing in its terseness—we learn of the death of Miriam.

Miriam remains an enigmatic figure. Unlike the majority of other women in the Tanach (the Hebrew Bible), her reputation does not rest on being someone's mother or wife. She has an independent existence. The Tanach even accords her the title of "prophet" (Exodus 15:20). That she is mentioned as late as the book of Chronicles testifies to "the tenacity of her place in Israel's memory" (Rita J. Burns, Has the Lord Indeed Spoken Only Through Moses?, 1987, pp. 92, 129). Rita Burns suggests that Miriam's name derives from the Egyptian mry, meaning "beloved" (Burns, p. 10).

In spite of tantalizing hints like these, we see her fleetingly in powerful and contradictory images:

joyously leading the women in song at God's deliverance of Israel from the Sea (Exodus 15), or punished by God with "snow-white tzaraat" after challenging Moses' exclusive leadership (Numbers 12). These fragmented views of Miriam suggest a more elaborate tradition that has not been preserved. Perhaps she held such an established reputation as a leader of Israel that she threatened the interests represented by the Torah's later editors, and therefore Numbers 12 extinguishes her voice. Unlike Moses and Aaron, Miriam has no successor.

Nonetheless, the details of Miriam's death in this verse—the first new moon, the place of her burial, especially the notice that she is buried—suggest that she is a leader of significant import in the Torah. After all, the death of most characters in the Bible receives no notice. This is true especially of women; elsewhere the Torah records the deaths only of Sarah (Genesis 23:2), Rachel (35:19), and Rebekah's nurse, Deborah (35:8). In addition, Miriam's death is to be followed by that of her brothers, which cannot be coincidence. The three die, each in turn, on the last three stops of the journey.

In her extensive study of Miriam, Burns draws the following conclusion: “Six of the seven . . . texts which mention her represent her as a leader. In her initial [named] appearance in the narratives (Exodus 15:20–21), Miriam officiates at a celebration of the foundational event of Hebrew religion. . . . In designating Miriam as ‘sister’ of Aaron (Exodus 15:20) and of Aaron and Moses (Numbers 26:59; I Chronicles 5:29) the biblical writers use kinship terminology to express Miriam’s parallel status in religious leadership vis-à-vis that of the two other leading figures in the wilderness. . . . Micah 6:4 . . . [says] that Miriam (along with Moses and Aaron) was divinely commissioned as a leader in the wilderness” (Burns, p. 121).

²The community was without water, and they joined against Moses and Aaron. ³The people quarreled with Moses, saying, “If only we had perished when our brothers perished at the instance of יהוה! ⁴Why have you brought יהוה's congregation into this wilderness for us and our beasts to die there? ⁵Why did you make us leave Egypt to bring us to this wretched place, a place with no grain or figs or vines or pomegranates? There is not even water to drink!”

Moses and Aaron came away from the congregation to the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, and fell on their faces. The Presence of יהוה appeared to them,⁷ and יהוה spoke to Moses, saying,⁸“You and your brother Aaron take the rod and assemble the community, and before their very eyes order the rock to yield its water. Thus you shall produce water for them from the rock and provide drink for the congregation and their beasts.”

²וְלֹא־יָדַיָּה מִים לְעֵדָה וַיַּקְהֵל עַל־מֹשֶׁה
וְעַל־אַהֲרֹן: ³וַיַּרְבֵּה הַעַם עַם־מֹשֶׁה וַיֹּאמְרוּ
לְאָמֶר וְלֹא גַּעֲנוּ בְגַעַע אֲחִינוּ לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה:
⁴וְלֹמַה הַבָּאָתֶם אֶת־קְהֻלָּתְךָ יְהֹוָה אֶל־
הַמְּרוּבָּר הַזֶּה לְמֹות שֶׁם אָנֹחָנוּ וּבְעִירֵנוּ:
⁵וְלֹמַה הַעֲלִיתָנוּ מִפְצְּרִים לְהַבִּיא אֶתְנוּ
אֶל־הַמִּקְומָם הַרְעָה הַזֶּה לֹא מִקּוּם זָרָע
וַתָּאֹנֵה וְגַפֵּן וּרְמֹון וּמִים אֵין לְשֹׁתּוֹת:
⁶וַיַּבְאֵם מֹשֶׁה וְאַהֲרֹן מִפְנֵי הַקְּהֻלָּה אֶל־פָּתָח
אֶדְלָל מוֹעֵד וַיַּפְלֵג עַל־פְּנֵיהם וַיַּרְא כְּבוֹד־
יְהֹוָה אֲלֵיכֶם: ⁷וַיֹּדַבֵּר יְהֹוָה אֶל־
מֹשֶׁה לְאָמֶר: ⁸קַח אֶת־הַמְּטָה וְקְהֻלָּת
אֶת־הַעֲדָה אַתָּה וְאַהֲרֹן אֲחֵיךְ וְדָבַרְתֶּם
אֶל־הַסְלָל לְעֵינֵיכֶם וְנִתְן מִימֵיכֶם וְהַצֵּאת
לָהֶם מִיט מִן־הַסְלָל וְהַשְׁקִית אֶת־הַעֲדָה וְאֶת־בָּעֵירָם:

MOSES AND AARON PUNISHED:

FATEFUL INCIDENT AT MERIBAH (20:2–13)

Following closely on the heels of Miriam's death, God now informs Aaron and Moses of their impending deaths. In contrast to Miriam's death, the deaths of the brothers are explicitly considered a punishment.

2. The community. Verses 1 and 2 mention “the Israelites,” “the people,” and a verbal form of “joined” which also appears in the unit as “community.” The interweaving of these terms focuses on Israel as a collective in all its manifestations. Everyone is implicated in the events of the journey; we learn that even the fates of Moses and Aaron connect irretrievably to that of Israel.

without water. Is the timing of the present complaint for water significant? Miriam is closely associated with water: she observes the deliverance of Moses from drowning in the Nile (Exodus 2:1–9), and she celebrates with him at the sea (Exodus 15:20–21). Right before she dies, new ritual instructions require “water of lustration” that is made from “living water” (Numbers 19). And now, immediately after Miriam's death, the people desperately cry for water. Because the two episodes follow each other sequentially, the Rabbis explicitly connect Miriam's death to the lack of water. The linkage suggested to the midrashic imagination that she was the source of the water now gone.

3–5. Israel's complaint resembles that of Numbers 14, in which the people bitterly complain about leaving Egypt only to die in the wilderness (see also Exodus 16:3). Denied entry to Canaan due to their lack of belief in God's power to ensure its conquest, they now pine after the food of that promised land: grain, figs, vines, and pomegranates.

8. “order the rock to yield its water.” In a parallel episode in Exodus 17:5–6, God instructs Moses to use his rod to strike the rock to release its water. This time, God tells Moses to speak to the rock before their eyes (so that the people see him do so and not just hear the words) to release its water.

⁹Moses took the rod from before יהוה, as he had been commanded. ¹⁰Moses and Aaron assembled the congregation in front of the rock; and he said to them, “Listen, you rebels, shall we get water for you out of this rock?” ¹¹And Moses raised his hand and struck the rock twice with his rod. Out came copious water, and the community and their beasts drank.

¹²But said to Moses and Aaron, “Because you did not trust Me enough to affirm My sanctity in the sight of the Israelite people, therefore you shall not lead this congregation into the land that I have given them.” ¹³Those are the Waters of Meribah—meaning that the Israelites quarrelled with יהוה—whose sanctity was affirmed through them.

⁹וַיִּקְחֶה מֹשֶׁה אֶת־הַמְּטָה מִלְּפָנֵי יְהוָה בְּאַשְׁר צִוָּה: ¹⁰וַיִּקְרַל מֹשֶׁה וְאַחֲרֵן אֶת־הַקְדֵּשׁ אֶל־פָּנֵי הַסְּלָעַ וַיֹּאמֶר לְהֶם שְׁמֻעוּנָא הַמְּרִים הַמְּנִזְהַסְלָעַ הַזֶּה נֹצֵא לְכֶם מִים: ¹¹וְלֹךְמֹשֶׁה אֶת־יְהוָה וַיֹּאמֶר הַסְּלָעַ בְּמִטְהָה פָּעָמִים וַיֵּצֵא מִים רַבִּים וַתִּשְׂתַּחַת הַעֲדָה וּבְעַירָּם: ס

¹²וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל־אַהֲרֹן יְעַן לֵאמֹר אַמְּנַתֶּתֶם בַּי לְהַקְדִּישָׁנוּ לְעַינֵּינוּ יִשְׂרָאֵל לְכָן לֹא תָבֹא אֶת־הַקְדֵּשׁ הַזֶּה אֶל־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־נָתַתִּי לְהֶם: ¹³הַמָּה מֵרִיבָה אֲשֶׁר־רָבוּ בְנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת־יְהוָה וַיִּקְרַשׁ בָּם: ס

10. “rebels.” Heb. morim. In frustration, Moses addresses the Israelites with a term that echoes Miriam’s name (see Another View, p. 931).

11. struck the rock twice. Instead of speaking to it (v. 8).

12–13. These verses describe God’s punishment of Moses and Aaron. What wrong could Moses and Aaron have committed severe enough to warrant God’s punishment after years of loyal service? The laconic quality of the narrative has provoked thousands of years of interpretation in an attempt to identify their misdeed. [Because Moses’ and Aaron’s “crime” here is not self-evident, contemporary scholars, like early rabbinic interpreters, have offered a wide range of possible explanations in addition to the one proposed here. Some suggest that the “crime” concerns striking the rock: Moses struck the rock instead of speaking to it, or perhaps he violated God’s instructions by striking it twice instead of once. Others suggest that God is angry because the incident discloses problematic aspects of Moses’ character as a leader: Moses lost his temper in an inappropriate manner. Still others suggest that Moses’ language was wrong: By phrasing his words as a question (v. 10), he could have been misunderstood as doubting God; by saying “shall we get water for you” (v. 10), he positioned himself and Aaron—instead of God—as the chief actors; or by calling the people “rebels” he denigrated them. —Ed.]

12. “affirm...sanctity.” The verbal root k-d-sh echoes the place name Kadesh, returning the audience to v. 1 and the death of Miriam. Her death haunts this literary unit.

“in the sight of the Israelite people.” The emphasis on sight—as in v. 8, God mentions literally the “eyes” of Israel—suggests that by not following the letter of God’s instructions in the sight of Israel, Moses provides an example that would be fatal to Israel if they followed him.

“the land that I have given them.” To “them”—and not to “you.” God’s ultimate concern is a divine relationship with the people Israel, not with any one leader.

13. Waters of Meribah. Heb. mei m’rivah, which echoes the “water of lustration” and “fresh water” (both terms being plural in the literal Hebrew) in Numbers 19. In contrast to the hopefulness of the ritual of purification and the renewal offered by it, Israel is again plunged into a dark moment in its journey. The term also picks up on the verb “quarreled” (vayarev) in 20:3.

¹⁴From Kadesh, Moses sent messengers to the king of Edom: “Thus says your brother, Israel: You know all the hardships that have befallen us; ¹⁵that our ancestors went down to Egypt, that we dwelt in Egypt a long time, and that the Egyptians dealt harshly with us and our ancestors. ¹⁶We cried to יהוה who heard our plea, sending a messenger who freed us from Egypt. Now we are in Kadesh, the town on the border of your territory. ¹⁷Allow us, then, to cross your country. We will not pass through fields or vineyards, and we will not drink water from wells. We will follow the king’s highway, turning off neither to the right nor to the left until we have crossed your territory.”

¹⁸But Edom answered him, “You shall not pass through us, else we will go out against you with the sword.” ¹⁹“We will keep to the beaten track,” the Israelites said to them, “and if we or our cattle drink your water, we will pay for it. We ask only for passage on foot—it is but a small matter.” ²⁰But they replied, “You shall not pass through!” And Edom went out against them in heavy force, strongly armed. ²¹So Edom would not let Israel cross their territory, and Israel turned away from them.

²²Setting out from Kadesh, the Israelites arrived in a body at Mount Hor. ²³At Mount Hor, on the boundary of the land of Edom, said to Moses and Aaron, ²⁴“Let Aaron be gathered to his kin: he

¹⁴וַיִּשְׁלַח מֹשֶׁה מִלְאָכִים מִקְדֵּשׁ אֲלֹמְלָה אֲדוֹם כִּי אָמַר אֲחִיךְ יִשְׂרָאֵל אַתָּה יָדַעַת אֶת בְּלַהֲתָלָה אֲשֶׁר מִצְאָתֵנוּ: ¹⁵וַיַּרְדֵּ אֲבָתֵינוּ מִצְרַיָּה וַיֵּשֶׁב בָּמִצְרָיִם יָמִים רַבִּים וַיַּרְעֵוּ לָנוּ מִצְרָיִם וְלְאַבָתֵינוּ: ¹⁶וַיַּצְעַק אֶל-יְהוָה וַיִּשְׁמַע קָלָנוּ וַיִּשְׁלַח מֶלֶךְ וַיַּצְאָנוּ מִמִצְרָיִם וְהַגָּה אַנְחָנוּ בְקָדְשׁ עִיר קָצָה גְבוּלָךְ: ¹⁷נַעֲבַר הָנָא בְאֶרְצָךְ לֹא נַעֲבַר בְשָׂדָה וּבְכָרְם וְלֹא נַשְׁתַּחַת מִן בָּאָר דָרָר הַמֶּלֶךְ גָלָךְ לֹא נַטְהֵל יְמִין וְשָׁמָאל עַד אֲשֶׁר-נִעַבְרֵ גְבֻלָךְ:

¹⁸וַיֹּאמֶר אֲלֵיכֶם אֲדוֹם לֹא תִעֲבֶר בַּפְנֵי בְחָרֶב אֲצָא לְקַרְאָתֶךָ: ¹⁹וַיֹּאמְרוּ אֲלֵיכֶם בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּמִסְלָה נַעֲלֵה וְאַم-מִימִיקָנֶה נַשְׁתַּחַת אַנְיָ וּמִקְנֵי וְנַתְנֵתִי מִכְרָם רַק אֵין דָבָר בְּרָגְלֵי אַשְׁבָרָה: ²⁰וַיֹּאמֶר לֹא תִעֲבֶר וַיֵּצֵא אֲדוֹם לְקַרְאָתוֹ בַעַם כָּבֵד וּבִיד חִזְקָה: ²¹וַיִּמְאַן | אֲדוֹם נַתֵּן אֶת-יִשְׂרָאֵל עַבְרָ בְגַבְלָו וַיַּעֲשֵׂה יִשְׂרָאֵל מַעֲלָיו: פ-

²²וַיִּסְעוּ מִקְדֵּשׁ וַיָּבֹא בְנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל בְל-הָעֲדָה הַר הַהָר: ²³וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲל-מֹשֶׁה וְאַל-אַהֲרֹן בַּהֲר הַהָר עַל-גְבּוּל אֶרְץ-אֲדוֹם לְאֹמֶר: ²⁴יָאָסֵף אַהֲרֹן אֶל-עַמּוֹיו כִּי לֹא

FAILED NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE KING OF EDOM (20:14–21)

Seemingly undeterred, Moses faces the next challenge of the journey as he attempts to negotiate safe passage through Edom. Not succeeding, Moses turns away without a fight.

AARON’S DEATH AND ELEAZAR’S SUCCESSION AS CHIEF PRIEST (20:22–29)

The two deaths bookend the unit: Miriam in v. 1, and Aaron here.

22. the Israelites arrived in a body at Mount Hor. The phrase is identical to the description of Israel just moments before Miriam’s death in v. 1.

24. “Let Aaron be gathered to his kin.” This phrase is found in the Torah only in connection with the deaths of six characters, all of whom are male leaders: Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, and Aaron. This verb, however, is also used in 12:14–15 when Miriam is “readmitted” to the camp: she is “gathered in” by the people before they continue their march.

is not to enter the land that I have assigned to the Israelite people, because you disobeyed my command about the waters of Meribah.²⁵ Take Aaron and his son Eleazar and bring them up on Mount Hor.²⁶ Strip Aaron of his vestments and put them on his son Eleazar. There Aaron shall be gathered unto the dead.”

²⁷Moses did as he had commanded. They ascended Mount Hor in the sight of the whole community.²⁸ Moses stripped Aaron of his vestments and put them on his son Eleazar, and Aaron died there on the summit of the mountain. When Moses and Eleazar came down from the mountain,²⁹ the whole community knew that Aaron had breathed his last. All the house of Israel bewailed Aaron thirty days.

21 When the Canaanite, king of Arad, who dwelt in the Negeb, learned that Israel was coming by the way of Atharim, he engaged Israel in battle and took some of them captive.² Then Israel made a vow to יהוה and said, “If You deliver this people

יבא אל-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר נִתְּחַי לְבָנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל עַל אֲשֶׁר-מִרְיָתֶם אֶת-פִּי לִמְיִדְמִרְיָה:
²⁵ כֹּח אֶת-אַהֲרֹן וְאֶת-אֶלְעֹזֶר בֶּןּוּ וְהַעֲלָתָם
אֶתְכֶם הָר הַהְרָה: ²⁶ וְהַפְּשַׁט אֶת-אַהֲרֹן אֶת-בְּגָדָיו וְהַלְבְּשָׂתֶם אֶת-אֶלְעֹזֶר בֶּןּוּ וְאֶת-יְאָסָף וְמִתְשָׁם:

²⁷ וַיַּעֲשֵׂה מֹשֶׁה כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה וַיַּעֲלֹז אֶל-
הָר הַהְרָה לְעֵינֵי כָּל-הָעֵדָה: ²⁸ וַיַּפְשַׁט מֹשֶׁה
אֶת-אַהֲרֹן אֶת-בְּגָדָיו וַיַּלְבֶּשׂ אֶתְכֶם אֶת-אֶלְעֹזֶר בֶּןּוּ וַיִּמְתַּא אֶתְהָרָן שְׁמָם בְּרַאשׁ הַהְרָה
וַיַּרְדֵּן מֹשֶׁה וְאֶלְעֹזֶר מִן-הַהְרָה: ²⁹ וַיָּרֹא כָּל-
הָעֵדָה כִּי גָועֵץ אֶתְהָרָן וַיַּבְפּוּ אֶת-אַהֲרֹן שֶׁלְשִׁים יוֹם כִּל בֵּית יִשְׂרָאֵל: ס

כָּא וַיָּשָׁמַע הַכָּנְעָנִי מִלְּרַעַד יַשְׁבֵּת הַגָּג
בַּיּוֹם בְּאֵת יִשְׁרָאֵל זָרָה הַאֲתָרִים וַיַּלְחַם
בְּיִשְׁרָאֵל וַיַּשְׁבַּט מִפְנֵיו שְׁבִי: ² וַיַּדַּר יִשְׁרָאֵל
נִדְרָ לִיהוָה וַיֹּאמֶר אֱמֶנְתָּן תִּמְןָ אֶת-הָעֵם

29. thirty days. Moses too will be mourned for this period of time at his death (Deuteronomy 34:8).

Toward the Journey's End

ITINERARIES AND SONGS, NEGOTIATIONS AND BATTLES
(21:1–22:1)

This unit begins by reporting on a successful battle (vv. 1–3), and in so doing introduces the unit’s most important topic: the positive change in Israel’s fortune. After yet another episode of complaint (vv. 4–9), a set of itineraries in vv. 10–20 bracket obscure materials: the “Book of the Wars of יהוה” (v. 14) and a poem celebrating the discovery of water (v. 17). An account of two successful battles follows (21:21–22:1), including an apparently ancient victory song (vv. 27–30).

Several topics link Numbers 20 and 21, including parallel episodes of complaint, the motif of water, and negotiations with foreign kings. Yet the discovery of water and the successful battles of Numbers 21 serve to underline a crucial difference: the fortunes of Israel have now decidedly improved for the new generation.

SUCCESSFUL BATTLE AGAINST THE KING OF ARAD (21:1–3)

Israel will be victorious in all subsequent battles on the way to the Promised Land. The use of the name Hormah cleverly signals the change in their fortunes. Earlier, Israel received a “shattering blow” at Hormah (14:45); here, after the deaths of almost all of the earlier generation, Israel emerges victorious.

into our hand, we will proscribe their towns.”³ יהוה³ heeded Israel’s plea and delivered up the Canaanites; and they and their cities were proscribed. So that place was named Hormah.

⁴They set out from Mount Hor by way of the Sea of Reeds to skirt the land of Edom. But the people grew restive on the journey,⁵ and the people spoke against God and against Moses, “Why did you make us leave Egypt to die in the wilderness? There is no bread and no water, and we have come to loathe this miserable food.”⁶ יהוה sent seraph serpents against the people. They bit the people and many of the Israelites died.⁷ The people came to Moses and said, “We sinned by speaking against יהוה and against you. Intercede with God to take away the serpents from us!” And Moses interceded for the people.⁸ Then יהוה said to Moses, “Make a seraph figure and mount it on a standard. And anyone who was bitten who then looks at it shall recover.”⁹ Moses made a copper serpent and mounted it on a standard; and when bitten by a serpent, anyone who looked at the copper serpent would recover.

הזה בידי והחרמתי את־עരיהם: ³ וישמע יהוה בקול ישראל ויתן את־הכנען ויחרם אתם ואת־עരיהם ויקרא שם הפקום חרמה: פ

וישעו מהר ההר דרך ים־טור לסבב את־ארץ אדום ותקצר נפש־העם בדרך: וידבר העליתנו ממצרים למות במדבר כי אין לחם ואין מים ונפשנו קצה בלחם הקלקל: ושלח יהוה בעם את הנחשים השרפים ונשכו את־העם וימת עמרם מישראל: ויבא העם אל־משה ויאמרו חטאנו כי־דברנו בהוה ובך התפלל אל־יהוה ויסיר מעליינו את־הנחש ויתפלל משה بعد העם: ויאמר יהוה אל־משה עשה לך שרפ ושים אותו על־נס והיה בלהנשוך וראה אותו וחי: ויעש משה נחש נחשת וישמוו על־הנס והיה אמר נשר הנחש את־איש והבית אל־נחש הנחשת וחי:

FURTHER COMPLAINTS (21:4–9)

After mourning Aaron at Mt. Hor (20:29), the Israelites complain again, precisely as they behaved after Miriam’s death.

6. seraph serpents. In the ancient world, snakes often symbolized fertility and healing, since they shed their skins only to grow new ones repeatedly in a cycle of destruction and rebirth. In the Tanach, the combination of seraph and “serpent” also occurs in Deuteronomy 8:15; in both cases, the creatures signal terror and cruelty as part of the wilderness setting. Since they are deadly, only God’s interventions allow the people to survive.

7. “We sinned by speaking.” For the first time, the people acknowledge the effects of their speech and its contaminating influence on their collective fate.

And Moses interceded for the people. In spite of their repeated failures, Moses advocates to God on behalf of the people, as he does following the Golden Calf and the incident with the scouts (Exodus 32:31–32; Numbers 14:5–19).

9. anyone who looked at the copper serpent would recover. Healing and new life follow death yet again in this parashah, much as the ritual of the healing water in Numbers 19 responds to the pervasiveness of death with purifying restoration. The snake as a symbol of both destruction and rebirth brilliantly represents the movement between death and life so prevalent in the narrative of the wilderness journey.

¹⁰The Israelites marched on and encamped at Oboth. ¹¹They set out from Oboth and encamped at Iye-abarim, in the wilderness bordering on Moab to the east. ¹²From there they set out and encamped at the wadi Zered. ¹³From there they set out and encamped beyond the Arnon, that is, in the wilderness that extends from the territory of the Amorites. For the Arnon is the boundary of Moab, between Moab and the Amorites. ¹⁴Therefore the Book of the Wars of Yahweh speaks of “... Waheb in Suphah, and the wadis: the Arnon ¹⁵with its tributary wadis, stretched along the settled country of Ar, hugging the territory of Moab...”

¹⁶And from there to Beer, which is the well where Yahweh said to Moses, “Assemble the people that I may give them water.” ¹⁷Then Israel sang this song:

Spring up, O well—sing to it—¹⁸The well which the chieftains dug,
 Which the nobles of the people started
 With maces, with their own staffs.

And from Midbar to Mattanah, ¹⁹and from Mattanah to Nahaliel, and from Nahaliel to Bamoth, ²⁰and from Bamoth to the valley that is in the country of Moab, at the peak of Pisgah, overlooking the wasteland.

²¹Israel now sent messengers to Sihon king of the Amorites, saying, ²²“Let me pass through your

ITINERARY OF TRAVELS AND ISRAEL'S SONG (21:10–20)

Itineraries locate the journey along specific stops, lending an air of authenticity to the wilderness wanderings. Reference to an outside source long lost to Israel, “the Book of the Wars of Yahweh,” further suggests a documented past.

17–18. This fragment, an ancient poem, functions as a corrective to the grievous complaints for water in Numbers 20. Now, as part of the positive tone of Numbers 21, the well assuages the people's thirst, leading to an outpouring of grateful and cele-

¹⁰וַיִּסְעוּ בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיְחִנּוּ בְּאַבָּת: ¹¹וַיִּסְעֻדּוּ מְאֹבֶת וַיְחִנּוּ בְּעֵין הַעֲבָרִים בְּפֶדְבָּר אֲשֶׁר עַל־פְּנֵי מוֹאָב מִמּוֹרָה הַשְׁמִישׁ: ¹²מִשְׁם נִסְעָוּ וַיְחִנּוּ בְּנֶגֶל זָרֶד: ¹³מִשְׁם נִסְעָוּ וַיְחִנּוּ מִעֵבֶר אַרְנוֹן אֲשֶׁר בְּמִקְרָב הַיּוֹצָא מִגְּבוּל הָאֲמֹרִי כִּי אַרְנוֹן גָּבוּל מוֹאָב בֵּין מוֹאָב וּבֵין הָאֲמֹרִי: ¹⁴עַל־פְּנֵן יִאָמֶר בְּסֶפֶר מִלְחָמֹת יְהוָה אֶת־יִהְעָב בְּטוֹפָה וְאֶת־הַנְּחָלִים אַרְנוֹן: ¹⁵וְאֶשְׁלַׁחַ הַנְּחָלִים אֲשֶׁר נִטְהָ לְשִׁבְתָּעָר וּנְשִׁעַן לְגִבּוּל מוֹאָב: ¹⁶וּמִשְׁם בָּאָרֶה הַוָּא הַבָּאָר אֲשֶׁר אָמַר יְהוָה לְמִשְׁאָה אָסְף אֶת־יִהְעָם וְאֶתְנָה לְהָם מִים: ס ¹⁷אוֹ יִשְׁיר יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת־יְהִשְׁעָרָה הַזֹּאת עַל־בָּאָר עַנוּקָה:

¹⁸בָּאָר חַפּוּרָה שְׁלִימָם בְּרוּתָה נְדִיבָה הָעָם בְּמַחְקָק בְּמִשְׁעַנְתָּם וּמִמְּדָבָר מִתְנָה: ¹⁹וּמִמְּתָנָה נְחִילִיאֵל וּמִנְחָלִיאֵל בְּמִזְוֹת: ²⁰וּמִמְּבָמוֹת הַגִּיאָא אֲשֶׁר־בְּשָׁהָה מוֹאָב רַאשׁ הַפְּסָגָה וּנְשִׁקְפָּה עַל־פָּנֵי הַיִשְׁמָן: פ

²¹וַיִּשְׁלַׁחַ יִשְׂרָאֵל מֶלֶאכִים אֶל־סִיחָן מֶלֶךְ הָאֲמֹרִי לְאמֹר: ²²אַעֲבָרָה בָּאָרֶץ לֹא

bratory song. The Rabbis later trace both the well and the song back to Miriam, which is fitting since v. 17 begins with a phrase that parallels the lead-in to the Song at the Sea in Exodus 15:1. (For the suggestion that the Song at the Sea should be attributed to Miriam, see at Exodus 15:1–19.)

SUCCESSFUL POLITICAL NEGOTIATIONS AND MILITARY VICTORIES (21:21–22:1)

The unsuccessful petition made by Moses to cross the territory of Edom in 20:14–21 is now followed in 21:21–25 by the successful possession by country. We will not turn off into fields or vineyards, and we will not drink water from wells. We will follow the king's highway until we have crossed your territory.”²³ But Sihon would not let Israel pass through his territory. Sihon gathered all his troops and went out against Israel in the wilderness. He came to Jahaz and engaged Israel in battle.²⁴ But Israel put them to the sword, and took possession of their land, from the Arnon to the Jabbok, as far as [Az] of the Ammonites, for Az marked the boundary of the Ammonites.²⁵ Israel took all those towns. And Israel settled in all the towns of the Amorites, in Heshbon and all its dependencies.

²⁶Now Heshbon was the city of Sihon king of the Amorites, who had fought against a former king of Moab and taken all his land from him as far as the Arnon. ²⁷Therefore the bards would recite:

“Come to Heshbon; firmly built
And well founded is Sihon’s city.
²⁸For fire went forth from Heshbon, Flame from Sihon’s city,
Consuming Ar of Moab,
The lords of Bamoth by the Arnon.
²⁹Woe to you, O Moab!
You are undone, O people of Chemosh!
His sons are rendered fugitive
And his daughters captive
By an Amorite king, Sihon.”

the Israelites of the land of the Amorites. Previously Moses, who was near to his own death, failed; now Israel succeeds.

25. and all its dependencies. Literally, “all its daughters.” The Tanach uses terms of female relations to describe a walled city as a “mother” and an open village as a “daughter.” The “mother” city (since walled) is better protected than her daughter from attack. As F. S. Frick observes, these female terms reflect and reinforce a pattern of domestic relations as well as societal conceptions of the

נֶטֶה בְּשָׂדֶה וּבְכַרְם לֹא נִשְׁתָּחַת מֵבָר
בְּדַרְךְ הַמֶּלֶךְ גַּלְעֵד אֲשֶׁר-גַּעֲבָר גַּבְלָר:
וְלֹא-נִנְזַּן סִיחָן אֶת-יִשְׂרָאֵל עַבְדָּבְגַּבְלָן²³
וַיַּאֲסַפֵּס סִיחָן אֶת-כָּל-עַמּוֹ וַיֵּצֵא לְקַרְאַת
יִשְׂרָאֵל הַמְּדֻבָּרָה וַיָּבֹא יְהֻצָּה וַיַּלחַם
בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל: ²⁴ וַיַּבְהֵהוּ יִשְׂרָאֵל לִפְיִיחָרֵב
וַיַּרְשֵׁשׁ אֶת-אָרְצָו מִאָרְנוֹן עַד-יְבִנִּי
עַמּוֹן כִּי עַז גְּבוּל בְּנֵי עַמּוֹן: ²⁵ וַיַּקְחֵה יִשְׂרָאֵל
את בְּלָהָרִים הָאָלָה וַיָּשֶׁב יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּכָל-עָרֵי הַאֲמֹרִי בְּחַשְׁבּוֹן וּבְכָל-בְּנַתִּיהָ:
²⁶ פִּי חַשְׁבּוֹן עִיר סִיחָן מֶלֶךְ הַאֲמֹרִי הוּא
וְהַוָּא גַּלְעֵד בְּמֶלֶךְ מוֹאָב הַרְאָזוֹן וַיַּקְחֵה
אֶת-כָּל-אָרְצָו מִיקְדוֹן עַד-אָרְנוֹן: ²⁷ עַל-כֵּן
יֹאמְרוּ הַמְּשֻׁלִּים
בָּאוּ חַשְׁבּוֹן תְּבִנָה
וַתַּהֲפֹן עִיר סִיחָן:
²⁸ בִּירָאֵשׁ יָצָא מִחַשְׁבּוֹן
לְהַבָּה מִקְרִית סִיחָן
אֲכָלָה עַר מוֹאָב
בַּעַלְיִם בְּמוֹת אָרְנוֹן:
²⁹ אֲוַיְלָק מוֹאָב
אֲבָדָת עַמִּיכְמוֹש
נִתְןֵן בְּנֵיו פְּלִיטָת וּבְנַתְיוֹ בְּשִׁבְתָּת
לִמֶּלֶךְ אֲמֹרִי סִיחָן:

strengths and weaknesses of a female at different points in her life: "Mothers had considerable authority over their daughters—hence the analogy of a walled mother-city exerting control of the unwalled. Just as a mother had major responsibilities in caring for her children, so the city provided protection for its people.... The fundamental awareness of maternal care permeates the concept of cities as female" ("Mother/Daughter as Territory," in Women in Scripture, 2000, pp. 532–33).

³⁰ Yet we have cast them down utterly,
Heshbon along with Dibon;
We have wrought desolation at Nophah,
Which is hard by Medeba.

³¹ So Israel occupied the land of the Amorites.

³² Then Moses sent to spy out Jazer, and they captured its dependencies and dispossessed the Amorites who were there.

³³ They marched on and went up the road to Bashan, and King Og of Bashan, with all his troops, came out to Edrei to engage them in battle. ³⁴ But Yahweh said to Moses, “Do not fear him, for I give him and all his troops and his land into your hand. You shall do to him as you did to Sihon king of the Amorites who dwelt in Heshbon.” ³⁵ They defeated him and his sons and all his troops, until no remnant was left him; and they took possession of his country. 22 The Israelites then marched on and encamped in the steppes of Moab, across the Jordan from Jericho.

³⁰ וַיְנִירֵם אֶבֶד
חַשְׁבּוֹן עֲדָדִיבָן
וְנִשְׁים עֲדָנִפְחָה
אֲשֶׁר עֲדָמִיקְבָּא:
³¹ וַיֵּשֶׁב יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּאָרֶץ הָאֲמֹרִי: ³² וַיִּשְׁלַח
מֶשֶׁה לְرָגֵל אֲתִינְעָר וַיַּלְכֹּד בְּנַתִּיה וַיִּרְאֶשׁ
וַיִּוְרֶש אֲתִיהָאֲמֹרִי אֲשֶׁר-שָׁם:
³³ וַיַּפְנוּ וַיַּעֲלוּ דָּרְךְ הַבְּשָׁן וַיֵּצֵא עֹג מֶלֶךְ
הַבְּשָׁן לְקַנְאָתָם הָוָא וְכָל-עַמּוֹ לְמַלְחָמָה
אֲזֹרְעֵי: ³⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִים מֶשֶׁה אֶל-
תִּירְאָ אֶתְךָ כִּי בַּידְךָ נָתָתִי אֶתְךָ וְאַתָּה
בְּל-עַמּוֹ וְאֲתִיהָאֲרָצָוּ וְעַשְׂתָּ לֹא בְּאַשְׁר
עָשָׂת לְסִיחָן מֶלֶךְ הָאֲמֹרִי אֲשֶׁר יוֹשֵׁב
בְּחַשְׁבּוֹן: ³⁵ וַיָּבֹא אֶתְךָ וְאֶת-בְּנֵיוּ וְאֶת-כָּל-
עַמּוֹ עֲדָבְלָתִי הַשְּׁאוּרָל שָׂרִיד וַיִּרְשֹׁא
אֲתִיהָאֲרָצָוּ: כְּבָ וַיִּסְעוּ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
וַיִּחְנוּ בָּעֲרָכֹת מוֹאָב מַעֲבָר לִירָהָן
יְרָחֹו: ס

21:33–22:1. After the successful battle against Og of Bashan, Israel arrives at the steppes of Moab. The deaths and discord, complaints and failure in Numbers 20 have been followed in Numbers 21 by steady progress along the path, accompanied by songs of gratitude and victory, punctuated by successful battles.

—Adriane Leveen

Another View

MIRIAM, WHO HAS PLAYED both a vital and a subdued role in the story of the Exodus and the wilderness wanderings, dies in this parashah. Her death is reported briefly: “Miriam died there, and was buried there” (20:1). There is no mention of people mourning her death or feeling the loss of her contribution to the Israelite people. Not long afterward, when Aaron is about to die, Moses in an elaborate ceremony publicly passes on Aaron’s ritual clothing, signs of his exalted position, to Aaron’s son Eleazar. Then, the people mourn him for thirty days (20:22–29). This contrast between Miriam’s and Aaron’s deaths is striking and troubling.

How does Moses respond to Miriam’s death? While the text does not record his reaction, we can glean important insights from the way he handles (or mishandles) the subsequent crisis over water and from the way her name appears obliquely in this episode.

In the debacle that immediately follows Miriam’s death, when the Israelites clamor for water (20:2–5), Moses hits the rock instead of speaking to it as instructed (v. 8). God punishes both Moses and Aaron for this failure by having them die in the wilderness instead of permitting them to enter the Promised Land. The telling clue to Moses’ attitude is suggested by his words. Before hitting the rock, Moses cries out “Listen, you rebels!” (v. 10). The word for “rebels” is morim, and it appears nowhere else in the Bible in this form. Remarkably, in their unvocalized form the words, morim (rebels) and miryam (Miriam) are identical; both words are made up of the same four Hebrew consonants: m-r-y-m.

This verbal coincidence may intimate that Moses’ behavior has as much to do with losing Miriam as with his frustration with the Israelite people. It suggests that when faced with the task of producing water, Moses recalls Miriam as his older sister, his co-leader, and perhaps most of all, the clever caretaker who guarded him at the Nile.

How does Moses respond to Miriam’s death?

Moses may have learned the hard way that the public silence about Miriam’s loss was a mistake. Perhaps, then, the elaborate mourning for Aaron reflects what Moses gleaned from that lesson.

—Ora Horn Prouser

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

Miriam died (20:1). Midrash Kohellet Rabbah 7.4 uses this occasion to reflect upon the lives of righteous people in general, noting that when the righteous are born nobody feels the difference, but when they die, many are affected. Following Miriam’s death, for example, her well—which had provided water for the Israelites in the wilderness—ceased to exist, and everybody felt her loss (also Tosefta Sotah 11:10). The Bible does not mention the marvel known as Miriam’s Well. However, the earliest forms of rabbinic literature discuss how the death of each of the three leaders in the wilderness resulted in the end of a beneficial supernatural phenomenon that had assisted the Children of Israel. The supernatural qualities of Miriam’s Well include that it traveled with the nation in the wilderness

(BT Shabbat 35a) and that it later had healing powers (Midrash Vayikra Rabbah 22.4). The medieval commentator Rashi explains the connection between Miriam's death and the disappearance of the well (on BT Shabbat 35a) by pointing out that the subsequent verse states, "The community was without water" (20:2).

Miriam died (20:1). The Talmud (Mo'ed Katan 28a) asks, "Why is the death of Miriam juxtaposed to the portion of the parah adumah (the red heifer of Numbers 19)?" It then provides the answer that the ritual of the parah adumah, which according to the Rabbis was performed until the destruction of the Second Temple in Jerusalem (70 C.E.), was intended to provide atonement for specific types of sin. Therefore, the Talmud explains, the deaths of righteous people, including Miriam, have an atoning effect. This emphasis on atonement seems to stray from the biblical presentation of the parah adumah as a ritual purification sacrifice and ceremony. The talmudic linkage to the idea of atonement is clarified by the Tosafot to that passage; it states that the parah adumah, as described in Numbers 19, provided atonement for the sin of the Golden Calf (Exodus 32).

The theological idea that the death of Miriam, or any righteous person, enables atonement is a difficult concept for modern Jews to accept. Ours is evidently not the first generation to grapple with the notion of vicarious atonement, since it was already discussed in the 13th-century commentary of Rabbi Menachem ben Solomon Meiri. He stated that it is not the act of the righteous dying that atones for sins; rather, these deaths often move the living toward introspection and private acknowledgement of wrongdoing, which then results in personal prayer for repentance.

Miriam died there (20:1). A rabbinic tradition (BT Baba Batra 27a) states that six people did not die as ordinary mortals do. By the conventional method, as explained by the Rabbis, it is the Angel of Death who takes individuals from this world. The six who did not die in this manner experienced their deaths by God's "kiss"—that is, their lives were taken by God directly. These six were Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. The Talmud discusses the last three individuals in this list, noting that the Torah text can be said to describe Moses and Aaron's demise explicitly as "by the kiss of" God (translated in this book as "at the command of," but literally "by the mouth of," Deuteronomy 34:5; Numbers 33:38). Miriam's death "by the kiss of" God, however, is derived via a midrashic method that compares the technical language used in describing her death to the technical language used for the deaths

*Miriam's death was unconventional:
she died via a kiss from God.*

of her brothers. The language is similar enough to imply that the details of their deaths were similar as well. After comparing these deaths, the Talmud then goes on to explain that Miriam's death by God's "kiss" is implicit rather than explicit, because it would be considered indelicate for her—the only woman on this list—to have been described in such a manner (BT Mo'ed Katan 28a).

Spring up, O well—sing to it (21:17). This is the beginning of the song of thanksgiving that was recited by the Israelites after God gave them water from a well in the region of Beer (sometime after Miriam's death). Although the Torah does not mention Miriam in connection with this biblical incident, rabbinic traditions did link her to it later. One of the ancient Aramaic translations of the Torah, the Targum Yerushalmi, incorporates an elaboration of this verse, explaining that this well was brought forth due to the merit of Miriam. It also links her to a tradition of wells associated with other biblical figures, namely, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Aaron, as well as other unnamed leaders.

—Anna Urowitz-Freudenstein

Contemporary Reflection

MIRIAM, LIKE MOSES AND AARON, was a child of Amram and Jochebed, both of the tribe of Levi. The prophet Micah recognizes all three siblings as Israel's leaders when he proclaims in God's name: "I redeemed you from the house of bondage, and sent Moses, Aaron, and Miriam to lead you" (Micah 6:4). Although the Bible preserves only a few direct references to Miriam, her importance to the Israelites' story shines through even this leanest of biographical sketches. First, Miriam is called a prophet (in Exodus 15:20), although her prophetic teachings are not recorded. Second, she sings and leads the women in song to God following her people's safe passage across the Sea of Reeds (Exodus 15:21). Third, she (along with Aaron) speaks out against Moses about his wife and his authority (12:1–2). Fourth, she is shut out of the camp when she is stricken with skin disease; tellingly, the Israelites refuse to move on until she returns (12:10–15). Finally, she dies and is buried in Kadesh (20:1), a place name that evokes the holy (kadosh). These few references to Miriam are but clues to the larger story of her life and importance.

Let us imagine that larger story by creating a midrash. Picture Moses as he climbed Mount Nebo to see the Promised Land he would never enter and to experience God's drawing out his soul as gently as a kiss draws out the breath (Deuteronomy 34; on God's kiss, see Post-biblical Interpretations, p. 932, at "Miriam died there"). What was he thinking at that moment? In the midrash we are creating we may imagine that this inspiring leader thought about the future of his people and about who would preserve the Covenant for future generations. First, he considered Aaron's son Eleazar, who would carry on the priestly functions; he could reassure himself that the priests would preserve the teachings of the Torah. Indeed, for a time, the priests did maintain their role. However, following the destruction of the Second Temple, the priests no longer played a central role in the people's observance of the Covenant. Moses then thought of Joshua, who was chosen to lead the Israelites into the Promised Land. He could reassure himself that through the land, the faith would be preserved. Yet for nearly two millennia, the people of Israel would live in exile from the Promised Land. Finally, Moses then thought of Miriam. But failing to recognize earlier what she had contributed to preserving the faith, he realized that he had made no effort to ensure that her function be taken up by someone else.

Was there a leadership role that was lost with the death of Miriam? If the Israelites were to remain true to their religion in the generations to come, it would

How can we best understand what Miriam's Well represented?

be because the women passed their faith and traditions on to their children. Moses' efforts had gone into legislating primarily for the Israelite men and had largely neglected to consider the roles of women, who were often invisible in the legal codes. In our midrash, however, Miriam had seen to the women and the education of the children. What qualifications would there be for Miriam's successor? Eleazar was destined for his priestly role by virtue of his lineage. Joshua had been chosen because he was judged to be a capable military commander. But whoever was to succeed Miriam would have to qualify directly through God's gift, because no one had thought to name a successor. Moses, in that one prescient moment, understood that a vital piece of the community might have died with Miriam.

But it did not die, although it became obscured. Miriam's legacy, which we are just beginning to retrieve, models our capacity to care for those more vulnerable than ourselves (as she did for her infant brother), to intervene in history regardless of our position (as she did when she approached the princess and when she challenged Moses' conduct and leadership), and to dance as well as to sing publicly as a form of worship.

In our parashah, we learn something else as well: “The Israelites arrived in a body at the wilderness of Zin on the first new moon, and the people stayed at Kadesh. Miriam died there and was buried there. The community was without water, and they joined against Moses and Aaron” (20:1–2). Rabbinic tradition, recognizing that something of major import was lost with the death of Miriam, found in the juxtaposition of Miriam’s death with the peoples’ crying out for water a powerful symbol for this loss. A midrash tells us that throughout the Israelites’ sojourn in the wilderness, a well followed them. With the death of Miriam, the well dried up. How can we best understand what Miriam’s Well represented?

Israel in the Bible had two main centers of practice: the Tent of Meeting (or Tabernacle, later replaced by the Temple) and the home. The rules governing the Tent of Meeting take up much of Leviticus, but the life that is to be conducted in the home receives relatively little mention. Moses, we might say, had focused on institutional religion. But in our midrashic rendering of the story, Miriam’s gift was to raise up the personal practices of the Israelites and to help the women of Israel recognize and claim their homes as a sacred place. Each woman’s own Sabbath table became like an altar. While Moses showed the Israelites the God who spoke to them from the top of Sinai, Miriam enabled the women to see that God could also be found around the cooking fires in their own tents.

Miriam also helped the women change their idea of holy space (from the set-apart Tent of Meeting to their own homes). In a time when the male leaders were focusing on all that was separate and distinct, Miriam taught the women to find the holy wherever they were open to it, whenever they could be responsive.

And just as her imagined teachings sought to move beyond separation, her own tradition is not to be found in a separate text but in the words that mothers have told their daughters and sons since then: God is found in and through all that we remember, all that we experience, all that we hope for. Miriam’s Well stands for what is nourishing and life-giving—it stands for the dining table, the cradle, and the welcoming embrace of our loved ones.

—Carol Ochs

• • • • • Voices • • • • •

Ritual

Ellen Bass

Numbers 19

A curved bar of soap floated,
a child's boat in the basin of water
as I touched her ruched lids, then washed her face, the smooth muzzle like the pale center of the faces of apes.

I sponged her swollen ankles,
their thin red veins cracks in raku,
the crease down her back a seam drawn in dough.

I washed under her arms,
spare hairs hanging limp and colorless, lifted her slack breasts
and soaped her belly, quilt of scars.

Like setting the Passover table with matzoh and marror, bitter herbs, like casting crumbs into the sea
this too had its precise commands and I had done everything wrong:

Too late I learned the purification of Taharah requires windows be opened, the deceased lowered to a white sheet on straw, cleansed right side before left, then lifted, twenty-four quarts of water flowing over the crown and down the body, cascading in one continuous stream, rinsing away all sin. The shroud must be linen, hand-sewn, no buttons, each tie twined with four knots,
the head of each knot facing the heart,
no pockets for worldly goods.

But how could my mother care?
She spent her Sabbaths with the god of commerce, the god of feeding her children and sending them off to college.

At precisely nine she'd unlock the glass door,
the phone coming to life, customers entering.
Her hands were not yet smudged with newsprint,
her lipstick was still a clear strong red.

Greeting each by name, she'd bag cold six-packs of Rolling Rock, a pint of Old Crow, pressing coins into their open palms,
making sure to touch them.

Pride

Dahlia Ravikovitch

(transl. Chana Bloch and Chana Kronfeld)

Numbers 20

Even rocks crack, I tell you,
and not on account of age.
For years they lie on their backs in the cold and the heat,
so many years,
it almost creates the impression of calm.
They don't move, so the cracks can hide.
A kind of pride.
Years pass over them as they wait.
Whoever is going to shatter them hasn't come yet.
And so the moss flourishes, the seaweed is cast about,
the sea bursts out and slides back—
and it seems the rocks are perfectly still.
Till a little seal comes to rub against them, comes and goes—
and suddenly the stone has an open wound.
I told you, when rocks crack, it happens by surprise.
Not to mention people.

Moses Leans Over the Stone

Jill Hammer

Numbers 20:1–13The Torah is a door to the deep.

I know this stone.
 Its hidden textures
 hold water for my people.
 If I stroke it,
 caress,
 it will give forth its liquid gifts.
 But the squeezing of it is hard,
 and I tire,
 While all around me the people cry
 “Water, water!”

Once, in Egypt,
 after I fought with my brother and sister,
 my mother showed me a stone,
 a gray triangle in her earth-rubbed hand.
 “Here are you, Aaron, and Miriam.”
 Each of you holds a side of the truth.
 “Where are you, Mother?” I asked.
 She turned the stone over to show me its wet bottom.

All my life,
 I have looked for the underside of things:
 the scorchless base of the bush,
 the cave inside the mountain,
 the back of God.
 If I turn over this stone,
 will an old love wait there for me,
 secrete its silver words,
 or will I find another mystery?

The crowd, impatient, growls.
 The sand and sun reflect each other's faces.
 Within me, anger at the silence.

I strike the stone.

The Hard Rock

Rivka Miriam (transl. Linda Stern Zisquit)

Numbers 20:10–11

Consolation is found in the hard rock that won't come into the house won't sit on a chair
 and will eat no bread.
 When the rock passes at evening on the path
 in front of the house
 it won't turn when its name is called.
 If a hand holding a rod would strike it water would not pour out.
 Sometimes suddenly the rock spreads out on one of the slopes
 and from the open window the sound of its flute is heard.

Miriam's Well

Rivka Miriam (transl. Linda Stern Zisquit)

Numbers 21:17–18

Miriam's well was rolling in the desert made of the mouths of fish.
 The nation drinking from it turned to water
 and rolled after her in the desert and the desert rolled after them like a carpet.
 Rise up, well, sang the people their voices a density of cloud and the dryness quenched their voices.

בָּלָק ◆ Balak

NUMBERS 22:2–25:9

Dangerous Foreigners

PARASHAT BALAK centers on the actions of the Moabite king Balak and the prophet Balaam son of Beor, whom he hires to curse Israel into oblivion (22:2–24:25). It concludes with a dangerous encounter and worship of Baal-peor, a Canaanite god.

At the close of the previous parashah, the people of Israel were making final preparations to enter Canaan. The story of Balaam is inserted at this juncture because its outcome determines whether Israel will indeed inherit the Promised Land. Actually, it is a contest in the divine realm between the God of Israel and those supernatural elements available to Balak. At times amusing and somewhat mocking of the non-Israelite prophet, the message of the story is quite serious: God's intent reigns supreme and cannot be superseded. Israel's deity ultimately controls even the powers of a well-known foreign seer. In the end, Balaam's four oracles reverse Balak's goal—by blessing Israel and cursing her enemies. Notably, Balaam's talking donkey, who is portrayed as the wiser of the pair, is a jenny (a female donkey)—perhaps reminiscent of the biblical personification of chochmah, “wisdom,” as female (see, for example, Proverbs 1:20).

Importantly, a visionary named Balaam son of Beor is mentioned outside the Bible; he is featured on an ancient but fragmentary plaster wall inscription, located not far from where the biblical story is set (see further below).

The final portion of the parashah (25:1–9) resumes the narrative begun in the first verse of Numbers 22 but interrupted by the story of Balak and Balaam. It recounts the misadventure of a group of Israelite men who have sexual encounters with local Moabite women—and end up worshipping the local deity, Baal-peor. The account focuses on one particular couple: an Israelite man and his partner, a Midianite woman. The priest Phinehas impales the two in a fit of religious zeal. The Baal-peor incident results in the death of 24,000 Israelites who are struck down by a divinely sent plague.

In this episode, the Moabite women are depicted as dangerous enticers.

In this episode the Moabite women are depicted as dangerous enticers who lead the Israelite men to idolatry. The account serves to highlight the biblical portrait of the dangerous foreign woman, a motif prevalent in the book of Proverbs, where young men are repeatedly warned to avoid her (Proverbs 2:16; 5:3, 20; 7:5; 23:27; 27:13). A similar theme is found in other biblical passages as well (see Exodus 34:16).

—Nili Sacher Fox

Outline—

I. BALAK HIRES BALAAM TO CURSE ISRAEL (22:2–41)

- A. Balak's invitation to Balaam (vv. 2–21)
- B. The story of the talking she-donkey (vv. 22–35)
- C. Balaam's arrival in Moab (vv. 36–41)

II. BALAAM'S ORACLES AND BALAK'S RESPONSES (23:1–24:25)

- A. Balaam's first oracle and Balak's response (23:1–12)
- B. Balaam's second oracle and Balak's response (23:13–26)
- C. Balaam's third oracle and Balak's response (23:27–24:11)
- D. Balaam's fourth oracle (24:12–25)

III. APOSTASY AT BAAL-PEOR (25:1–9)

- A. Israel's flirtation with foreign women and idolatry (vv. 1–5)
- B. Phinehas's vengeance (vv. 6–9)

22:2

Balak son of Zippor saw all that Israel had done to the Amorites.

כב וַיַּרְא בָּלָק בֶּן־צִפּוֹר אֵת כָּל־אָשָׁר עֲשָׂה יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאָמְרִי:

Balak Hires Balaam to Curse Israel

(22:2–41)

The main part of this Torah portion consists of the pericope about Balak and Balaam. The story fits well with other events of the wilderness experience in the sense that it recounts another link in what seems to be an endless chain of obstacles to Israel's entrance into Canaan. It begins when the Moabite king, Balak, seeks to hire the seer Balaam to curse Israel to oblivion. The notion that cursing is an efficacious means of subduing one's enemy was well accepted in antiquity. Certain Egyptian texts composed in the early 2nd millennium B.C.E. exemplify that practice; these "Exorcism Texts" are smashed ceramic vessels and figurines inscribed with curses directed at Egypt's enemies, including the rulers of Canaanite cities. Balaam's role as a prophet and diviner likewise fits with other known examples from Mesopotamia, also from the early second millennium.

The material about Balak and Balaam seems to be an independent composition. Its narrative and poetry probably originated in a different scribal circle than those associated with other portions of Numbers.

Evidence indicates that the biblical composition is related to the non-biblical tradition attested in a wall inscription found at Deir Alla, a site east of the Jordan River. The inscription, written in a language close to Aramaic and dated to the early 8th century B.C.E., records the night visions of a seer named Balaam son of Beor. That Balaam is credited with saving his people and the land from perpetual darkness by his use of oracles and exorcism. Apparently, his powers reversed the edict of a group of trouble-making deities and freed the goddess Shagar-and-Ishtar (a local version of the Mesopotamian high goddess Ishtar), whom those deities had imprisoned and forced to comply with their evil directives. It is unclear whether Balaam was a legendary character of antiquity, or a real person of some fame in the region. At any rate, the talents of that Balaam are precisely what the Moabite king, Balak, is looking for in the biblical account.

Whether legendary or historical, the Balaam story was clearly known in the 8th century (the date of the Deir Alla texts). An unanswered question is: were these traditions already circulating in Israel's early settlement period (12th century), or did a later biblical writer cast them into the historical memory of that period?

BALAK'S INVITATION TO BALAAM (22:2–21)

Having witnessed Israel's destructive power in her recent encounter with the Amorites (21:21–32), Balak seeks to engage the prophet Balaam, appar-

- Numbers 25:6–9 seems to reflect an unusually hostile attitude toward intermarriage.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 954

- She would refuse to have sex with him until he bowed down to the local idol.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 954

- Are we ready to open our tents and our hearts to those who wish to dream?

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 956

- On your journey you will come to a time of waking. / The others may be asleep....

VOICES ► 958

³Moab was alarmed because that people was so numerous. Moab dreaded the Israelites,⁴and Moab said to the elders of Midian, “Now this horde will lick clean all that is about us as an ox licks up the grass of the field.”

Balak son of Zippor, who was king of Moab at that time,⁵sent messengers to Balaam son of Beor in Pethor, which is by the Euphrates, in the land of his kinsfolk, to invite him, saying, “There is a people that came out of Egypt; it hides the earth from view, and it is settled next to me. ⁶Come then, put a curse upon this people for me, since they are too numerous for me; perhaps I can thus defeat them and drive them out of the land. For I know that he whom you bless is blessed indeed, and he whom you curse is cursed.”

⁷The elders of Moab and the elders of Midian, versed in divination, set out. They came to Balaam

וַיָּגֹר מוֹאָב מִפְנֵי הָעָם מִזֶּדֶחֶת בַּיּוֹתְרֹה
וַיָּקֹץ מוֹאָב מִפְנֵי בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל : ⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר
מוֹאָב אֶל־זָקֵן מִדָּן עַתָּה יְלִחְכֵי הַקְּהֻלָּה
אַת־בֶּל־סְבִיבָתֵינוּ בְּלִזְקָר הַשּׁוֹר אֲתִי יְרַק הַשְׁדָּה

וּבְלִק בְּנִצְפּוֹר מֶלֶךְ לִמְוֹאָב בְּעֵת הַהּוּא :
⁵ וַיֵּשֶׁלֶח מֶלֶאכִים אֶל־בְּלִעָם בְּנִי־עַמּוֹ
פָּתָרָה אֲשֶׁר עַל־הַגְּנָהָר אֶרְץ בְּנֵי־עַמּוֹ
לְקָרְא־לָיו לְאָמֹר הַנָּהָעָם יֵצֵא מִמְּצָרִים
הַנָּהָעָם בְּסָה אֶת־עֵין הָאָרֶץ וְהַוָּא יַשְׁבֵּט
מִמְּלָיִלִי : ⁶ וְעַתָּה לְכָה־בָּא אָרְהָלִי אֶת־חָעֵם
הַנָּהָעָם קִיעֵצּוּם הוּא מִפְנֵי אָוָלִי אָוָלִי נִפְחָדִי
בּוֹ וְאֶגְרָשָׁנוּ מִן־הָאָרֶץ כִּי יַדְעַתִּי אֶת
אֲשֶׁר־תְּבָרֵל מִבְּרָה וְאֲשֶׁר תָּאַר יְאַר :

⁷ וַיָּלְכוּ זָקֵן מוֹאָב זָקֵן מִדָּן וְקָסְמִים
בִּידָם וַיָּבָא אֶל־בְּלִעָם וַיִּדְבְּרוּ אֲלִיו דְבָרַי

ently because of Balaam's reputation as a seer who can effectuate curses. Balaam refuses to come, after having consulted with the Israelite God and been warned not to curse the people that God has blessed. Balak ignores Balaam's initial refusal and sends additional dignitaries tempting Balaam with promises of riches. With God's approval, Balaam agrees to go, but only to prophesy God's message.

The Bible gives conflicting reports of Balaam's intentions, apparently due to inconsistent pre-biblical traditions. The account here presents Balaam in a positive light. His words and actions are bound to the will of Israel's God. Likewise, the 8th-century prophet Micah views Balaam favorably (Micah 6:5). In contrast, in Deuteronomy (23:4–7) and Joshua (24:9–10), it is God who reverses Balaam's actual intent; and another narrative in Numbers (31:16) blames Balaam for Israel's apostasy at Baal-peor.

5. Balaam son of Beor. The seer of the Deir Alla inscription (see the unit introduction, above) bears the same name and patronymic.

7. elders. [Heb. z'kenim, a plural noun that refers to social status. Given what we know about the ancient Near East, the presence of women among a given group of elders is unlikely, yet it cannot be entirely excluded. For instance, II Samuel 20:15–22 depicts an Israeli woman of apparently special status who fills the role that we would expect an elder to play: she represents her town in emergency negotiations with a hostile army commander. Described as an ishah chachamah (literally “wise woman”) and unnamed, she says of herself, “I am one of those who seek the welfare of the faithful in Israel.” The commander then treats her as having an elder’s authority. Claudia Camp suggests that the story “attests to what must have been a regularized public role for women, at least through the early period of the Israelite monarchy” (Women in Scripture, 2000, p. 267; see also Tikva Frymer-Kensky, Reading the Women of the Bible, 2002, pp. 58–61). —Ed.]

divination. Heb. kesem (plural in this verse) refers to the taking of omens, a practice popular in the ancient Near East. Most likely these elders were professional diviners. Professional diviners who served at court are widely known from the ancient and gave him Balak's message. ⁸He said to them, "Spend the night here, and I shall reply to you as יהוה may instruct me." So the Moabite dignitaries stayed with Balaam.

⁹God came to Balaam and said, "What do these envoys want of you?" ¹⁰Balaam said to God, "Balak son of Zippor, king of Moab, sent me this message: ¹¹Here is a people that came out from Egypt and hides the earth from view. Come now and curse them for me; perhaps I can engage them in battle and drive them off." ¹²But God said to Balaam, "Do not go with them. You must not curse that people, for they are blessed."

¹³Balaam arose in the morning and said to Balak's dignitaries, "Go back to your own country, for יהוה will not let me go with you." ¹⁴The Moabite dignitaries left, and they came to Balak and said, "Balaam refused to come with us."

¹⁵Then Balak sent other dignitaries, more numerous and distinguished than the first. ¹⁶They came to Balaam and said to him, "Thus says Balak son of Zippor: Please do not refuse to come to me. ¹⁷I will reward you richly and I will do anything you ask of me. Only come and damn this people for me." ¹⁸Balaam replied to Balak's officials, "Though Balak were to give me his house full of silver and gold, I could not do anything, big or little, contrary to the command of my God יהוה. ¹⁹So you, too, stay here overnight, and let me find out what else יהוה may say to me." ²⁰That night God came to Balaam and said to him, "If these envoys have come to invite you, you may go with them. But whatever I command you, that you shall do."

בְּלֹק: ⁸ וַיֹּאמֶר אֱלֹהִים לֵינוּ פָּה הַלִּילָה וְהַשְׁבַּתִּי אֶתְכֶם דָּבָר בְּאָשָׁר יֹדֵב יְהוָה אֱלֹי וַיֵּשֶׁבוּ שָׂרִים מִזְמָבֵלֻם:

⁹ וַיָּבֹא אֱלֹהִים אֶל-בְּלֹעַם וַיֹּאמֶר מַיִּהְנָה הָאָלָה עַמָּךְ: ¹⁰ וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלֹעַם אֶל-הָאֱלֹהִים בְּלֹק בְּן-צְפֹר מֶלֶךְ מוֹאָב שָׁלַח אֱלֹי: ¹¹ הַנֶּה הָעָם הַיֹּצֵא מִמִּצְרַיִם וַיָּכֹס אֶת-עֵינֵי הָאָרֶץ עַפְתָּה לְכָה קְבַּה-לְלִי אֲתָּה אָוֹלֵי אָוָלֵל לְהַלְּחָם בָּו וְגַרְשָׁתוּ: ¹² וַיֹּאמֶר אֱלֹהִים אֶל-בְּלֹעַם לֹא תָּלֶךְ עַמָּהּ לֹא תָּאֶת אֶת-חָעָם כִּי בָרוּךְ הוּא:

¹³ וַיָּקָם בְּלֹעַם בְּבָקָר וַיֹּאמֶר אֶל-שְׂרֵי בְּלֹק לְכָו אֶל-אֶרְצָם כִּי מִן-יְהוָה לְתַחַת לְהַלְּךָ עַמָּךְ: ¹⁴ וַיָּקְרֹמוּ שָׂרִים מוֹאָב וַיָּבֹאוּ אֶל-בְּלֹק וַיֹּאמְרוּ מַיִּהְנָה בְּלֹעַם הַלְּךָ עַמָּנוּ:

¹⁵ וַיָּסַף עוֹד בְּלֹק שְׁלַח שָׁרִים רַבִּים וְנַכְּבָדִים מִמְּלָה: ¹⁶ וַיָּבֹאוּ אֶל-בְּלֹעַם וַיֹּאמְרוּ לוּ כִּי אָמַר בְּלֹק בְּן-צְפֹר אֶל-נָא תִּמְנַע מִהְלָךְ אֱלֹי: ¹⁷ כִּי-כִּבְדָּךְ מִמְּאָד וּכְלָא אָשְׁר-תֹּאמֶר אֱלֹי אָשָׁה וְלִכְהָה בְּאֶלְקָה-לְלִי אֶת-הָעָם הַזֶּה: ¹⁸ וַיַּעַן בְּלֹעַם וַיֹּאמֶר אֶל-עַבְדֵי בְּלֹק אִם-יִתְּחַנֵּל בְּלֹק מַלְאָבִיטָו בְּסָף וְזָהָב לֹא אָוָלֵל לְעַבְרָ אֶת-פְּלִי יהוָה אֱלֹהֵי לְעַשְׂוֹת קְטָנָה אוֹ גְּדוֹלָה: ¹⁹ וְעַתָּה שְׁבוּ נָא בְּזָה גַּם-אַתֶּם הַלִּילָה וְאַדְעָה מִה-יָּסַף יהוָה דָּבָר עַמִּי: ²⁰ וַיָּבֹא אֱלֹהִים אֶל-בְּלֹעַם לְלִילָה וַיֹּאמֶר לוּ אַמְלַקְרָא לְכָה בָּאָה הָעָם קָום לְגַעַת אַתָּה תַּעֲשֵׂה:

Near East. Divination was regarded as a legitimate "science" in antiquity. The Bible condemns it as abhorrent to God (see Deuteronomy 18:10–11, 14), implying that control of natural forces and events are God's dominion. On Israel's practice of certain types of divination and women's role in it, see further at Leviticus 19:31, 20:6, and 20:27.

II. "bides the earth from view." The Israelites are pictured as so numerous that they obscure one's view of the ground on which they have encamped.

²¹When he arose in the morning, Balaam saddled his ass and departed with the Moabite dignitaries. ²²But God was incensed at his going; so an angel of יהוה took a position in his way as an adversary.

He was riding on his she-ass, with his two servants alongside,²³when the ass caught sight of the angel of יהוה standing in the way, with his drawn sword in his hand. The ass swerved from the road and went into the fields; and Balaam beat the ass to turn her back onto the road. ²⁴The angel of יהוה then stationed himself in a lane between the vineyards, with a fence on either side. ²⁵The ass, seeing the angel of יהוה, pressed herself against the wall and squeezed Balaam's foot against the wall; so he

²¹וַיָּקֹם בְּלֹעֵם בֶּבֶךְ וַיִּחְבֹּשׁ אֶת־אֲתָנָן
וַיֵּלֶךְ עַמִּשְׁרִי מוֹאָב : ²²וַיִּחְרַד־אֱלֹהִים
כִּי־יְהוָה הוּא וַיִּתְיַצֵּב מֶלֶךְ יְהוָה בְּפַרְסָה לְשָׁעַן לוֹ

וְהוּא רַכֵּב עַל־אֲתָנָן וְשָׂנֵן נְעָרוֹעַ עַמּוֹן
²³וַתַּרְא הָאֲתָנוֹן אֶת־מֶלֶךְ יְהוָה נִצְבֶּה
בְּפַרְסָה וַתַּרְפֹּג שְׁלוֹפָה בַּיּוֹזָה וְתַחַטֵּת הָאֲתָנוֹן
מִן־הַלְּדוֹר וְתַלֵּךְ בְּשָׂדָה וַיַּרְא בְּלֹעֵם אֶת־
הָאֲתָנוֹן לְהַטְּהָת הַדָּרָךְ : ²⁴וַיַּעֲמֹד מֶלֶךְ
יְהוָה בְּמִשְׁעוֹל הַכְּרָמִים גַּדֵּר מַעַה וְגַדְּרָה
מִזְהָה : ²⁵וַתַּרְא הָאֲתָנוֹן אֶת־מֶלֶךְ יְהוָה
וְתַלְחַץ אֶל־הַקִּיר וְתַלְחַץ אֶת־רַגְלָה בְּלֹעֵם

21. ass. Heb. aton refers specifically to a jenny (she-donkey). [The Bible mentions three women of means as riding on donkeys. The wealthy woman of Shunem rides a jenny when she hurries to get help for her son (II Kings 4:22–24). The text is not sex-specific with regard to the other women's mounts (Achsah in Joshua 15:18 and Judges 1:14; Abigail in I Samuel 25:20, 42). —Ed.]

THE STORY OF THE TALKING SHE-DONKEY (22:22–35)

This tale of Balaam and the jenny—which breaks the action of the main narrative—contradicts the more favorable view of Balaam expressed by the main story; this episode apparently derives from a different tradition. In this fable, in which an animal speaks, God is angry with the seer and depicts the donkey as the actual visionary. Balaam becomes the object of mockery, being blind to the divine will that only the jenny sees. Thus the usual biblical roles of humans and animals are reversed.

Speaking animals of various kinds, including equids (horses and donkeys), are known from other ancient Near Eastern literary sources.

Perhaps significant is the fact that the donkey is female (see above at v. 21). Her role as the insightful one of the pair is reminiscent of the biblical notion of Lady Wisdom (especially in Proverbs 8–9). Perhaps, however, the story is merely suggesting that even a female donkey, the lowliest of the low animals, is more perceptive than Balaam.

22. angel. The Hebrew word for “angel” and “messenger” is the same.

as an adversary. Heb. satan, a term that is used here attributively (as in I Samuel 29:4, where Philistines worry that David “may become our satan [adversary] in battle”). When personified (Job 1:6–12; I Chronicles 21:1), satan refers to a divine being who answers to God. In Job, the adversary functions as a kind of prosecutor in God’s court. (The concept of Satan as God’s adversary is a post-biblical development.)

23. when the ass caught sight. The jenny, not the seer, is the one who sees their obstacle. Balaam is unaware of the danger.

25. The ass, seeing the angel. Apparently, God’s angel is revealed only to the animal. The seer, who is clearly blind to the ongoing events, is being mocked, perhaps in keeping with his doomed mission.

beat her again.²⁶Once more the angel of יְהוָה moved forward and stationed himself on a spot so narrow that there was no room to swerve right or left.²⁷When the ass now saw the angel of יְהוָה, she lay down under Balaam; and Balaam was furious and beat the ass with his stick.

²⁸Then יְהוָה opened the ass's mouth, and she said to Balaam, "What have I done to you that you have beaten me these three times?"²⁹Balaam said to the ass, "You have made a mockery of me! If I had a sword with me, I'd kill you."³⁰The ass said to Balaam, "Look, I am the ass that you have been riding all along until this day! Have I been in the habit of doing thus to you?" And he answered, "No."

³¹Then uncovered Balaam's eyes, and he saw the angel of יְהוָה standing in the way, his drawn sword in his hand; thereupon he bowed right down to the ground.³²The angel of יְהוָה said to him, "Why have you beaten your ass these three times? It is I who came out as an adversary, for the errand is obnoxious to me.³³And when the ass saw me, she shied away because of me those three times. If she had not shied away from me, you are the one I should have killed, while sparing her."³⁴Balaam said to the angel of יְהוָה, "I erred because I did not know that you were standing in my way. If you still disapprove, I will turn back."³⁵But the angel of יְהוָה said to Balaam, "Go with those envoys. But

אֶל־הַקִּיר וַיַּסַּף לְהַבְתֵּחַ:²⁶ וַיֹּסַף מֶלֶאכָּר יְהוָה עֲבוֹר וַיַּעֲמֹד בָּمָקוּם צָר אֲשֶׁר אִין־כָּרֶךְ לְנִטְשׁוֹת יְמִין וְשִׁמְאֹל: ²⁷ וַתַּרְא הַאֲתוֹן אֶת־מֶלֶאכָּר יְהוָה וַתַּרְבֵּץ פְּתַח בְּלֻעַם וַיַּהַרְאֵךְ בְּלֻעַם וַיַּהַרְאֵת־הַאֲתוֹן בְּמֶקְלָה:

²⁸וַיַּפְתַּח יְהוָה אֶת־פִּי הַאֲתוֹן וַתִּאמֶר לְבָלֻעַם מִה־עֲשִׂיתִי לְקַבֵּד כִּי הַכִּתְבֵּנִי זוּ שֶׁלֹּשׁ רְגָלִים: ²⁹וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלֻעַם לְאֲתוֹן כִּי הַתַּעֲלִילָת בַּי לִי יְשִׁחַרְבֵּל בִּידֵי כִּי עֲתָה הַרְגִּתִּיה: ³⁰ וַתִּאמֶר הַאֲתוֹן אֶל־בְּלֻעַם הַלוֹא אָנֹכִי אֲתַנְנָה אֲשֶׁר־רִכְבָּת עַלְיִ מְעוֹדָךְ עַד־הַיּוֹם הַזֹּה הַסְּפָנִתִּי לְעַשּׂוֹת לְקַבֵּד כִּי וַיֹּאמֶר לֵאמֹר לֹא:

³¹וַיַּגֵּל יְהוָה אֶת־עִינֵּי בְּלֻעַם וַיַּרְא אֶת־מֶלֶאכָּר יְהוָה נַצֵּב בְּפָרָה וְחַרְבוֹ שֶׁלֹּפָה בִּידֵוֹ וַיַּקְרֵד וַיַּשְׁתַּחוּ לְאָפִיו: ³² וַיֹּאמֶר אֶל־יְהוָה יְהוָה עַל־מָה הַכִּתְבֵּת אֶת־אֲתַנְנָה זוּ שֶׁלֹּשׁ רְגָלִים הַנֶּה אָנֹכִי יִצְאַתִּי לְשָׁטָן כִּי יִרְטֵת הַדָּרֶךְ לְנִגְדֵּי: ³³ וַתִּרְאֵנִי הַאֲתוֹן וַתְּטַלֵּט פְּנֵי זוּ הַשֶּׁלֹּשׁ רְגָלִים אָוֹלֶל נִטְרָה מִפְנֵי כִּי עֲתָה גַּם־אֲתַכָּה הַרְגִּתִּי וְאַוְתָה הַחַיִּיתִי: ³⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלֻעַם אֶל־מֶלֶאכָּר יְהוָה חַטָּאתִי כִּי לֹא יַדְעַתִּי כִּי אַתָּה נַצֵּב לְקַרְאָתִי בְּדָרֶךְ וְעַתָּה אַסְרֵע בְּעִינֵיךְ אֲשֻׁבָה לְיַיִן: ³⁵ וַיֹּאמֶר מֶלֶאכָּר יְהוָה אֶל־בְּלֻעַם לֹן עַמְּנָנִים וְאֶפְסָ אֶת־הַדָּבָר אֲשֶׁר־אָרַבְּרָה

27. Balaam, totally unaware of the situation, beats the ass for being insubordinate. He is about to learn that God's will can be realized even through the meekest of creatures, and that his status and reputation do not guarantee success if Israel's God opposes it.

28. opened the ass's mouth. God is clearly in control, giving speech even to a donkey in order to make the divine will known. This jenny, however, does more than speak. In a comic twist, she sees what Balaam the seer cannot. She is perceptive, a gift attributed to the wise woman (see the Woman of Valor in Proverbs 31) and more generally to Lady Wisdom (Proverbs 8 and 9).

33. "you... I should have killed, while sparing her." It is unclear whether the anger is actually a reaction to Balaam's ill treatment of his she-donkey or to Balaam's refusal in this episode to heed God's warning.

you must say nothing except what I tell you.” So Balaam went on with Balak’s dignitaries.

³⁶When Balak heard that Balaam was coming, he went out to meet him at Ir-moab, which is on the Arnon border, at its farthest point. ³⁷Balak said to Balaam, “When I first sent to invite you, why didn’t you come to me? Am I really unable to reward you?” ³⁸But Balaam said to Balak, “And now that I have come to you, have I the power to speak freely? I can utter only the word that God puts into my mouth.”

³⁹Balaam went with Balak and they came to Kiriath-huzoth.

⁴⁰Balak sacrificed oxen and sheep, and had them served to Balaam and the dignitaries with him.

⁴¹In the morning Balak took Balaam up to Bamoth-baal. From there he could see a portion of the people.

23 Balaam said to Balak, “Build me seven altars here and have seven bulls and seven rams

אליך אתו תדבר וילך בלוּם עמִשְׁרֵי בלק:

³⁶וַיָּשָׂמַע בֶּלֶק כִּי בָא בָלוּם וַיֵּצֵא לִקְרָאתוֹ
אֶל־עִיר מוֹאָב אֲשֶׁר עַל־גְבוֹל אַרְנוֹן אֲשֶׁר
בְקָצָה הַגְבוֹל: ³⁷וַיֹאמֶר בֶּלֶק אֶל־בָלוּם
הָלָא שְׁלַח שְׁלֹחַתִי אֶלְיוֹן לִקְרָא־אֶלְיוֹן לְמַה
לֹא־הָלַכְתִ אֶלְיוֹן הָאָמָנוּן לֹא אָוֶל בְּפֶדֶךְ:

³⁸וַיֹאמֶר בָלוּם אֶל־בֶּלֶק הַנָּה־בָאַתִ אֶלְיוֹן
עַתָּה הַיְכֵל אַוְקֵל דָבָר מְאוֹמָה הַדָּבָר אֲשֶׁר

ישִׁים אֶלְיוֹנִים בְּפִי אַתָּה אָדָבָר:

³⁹וַיָּלַךְ בָלוּם עמִבֶלֶק וַיָּבֹא קְרִיתָ
חַצּוֹת:

⁴⁰וַיַּזְבַּח בֶּלֶק בְקָר וַצָּאן וַיְשַׁלֵּח לְבָלוּם
וְלְשָׂרִים אֲשֶׁר אַתָּה: ⁴¹וַיָּהִי בְבֶלֶק וַיַּקְרֵב
בֶּלֶק אֶת־בָלוּם וַיַּעֲלֵהוּ בְמֹות בָעֵל וַיַּרְא
מִשְׁם קָצָה הַעַם:

כג וַיֹאמֶר בָלוּם אֶל־בֶלֶק בְנֵה־יְלִי בָזָה
שְׁבַעַה מִזְבְּחֹת וְהַכֵּן לִי בָזָה שְׁבַעַה פְּרִים

BALAAM’S ARRIVAL IN MOAB (22:36–41)

The account interrupted by the tale of the jenny continues here. After arriving in Moab, Balak, playing the proper host, offers a sacrifice of well-being as a gesture of welcome; it is eaten by Balaam and his entourage.

41. Bamoth-baal. This place name indicates that there was an altar at that site, dedicated to the deity Baal. Apparently it was also at a high elevation, from where Balaam could view the Israelite camp.

Balaam’s Oracles and Balak’s Responses (23:1–24:25)

This unit features the reports about four oracles uttered by Balaam. It repeatedly reminds the reader that Balaam’s words are God’s message, not his own. The first three reports follow the same pattern: Balaam prepares to divine; this is followed by the oracle itself (in poetic form), concluding with Balak’s (frustrated) reaction to the oracle. The fourth oracle breaks the pattern and ends with Balaam’s returning home. The first oracle contains a brief summary of the introductory narrative (Numbers 22), hinting that originally the poems may have existed independently of the story. The poetic form of Balaam’s oracles contrasts with the surrounding narratives. The poetry seems to lend authority to the narrative, and its composition may actually be older in time than the narrative.

BALAAM’S FIRST ORACLE AND BALAK’S RESPONSE (23:1–12)

Before seeking omens and revelation, Balaam instructs Balak to sacrifice seven bulls and seven rams. In the biblical world, the number seven often signals completeness or perfection (see Genesis 1:1–2:4).

ready here for me.”² Balak did as Balaam directed; and Balak and Balaam offered up a bull and a ram on each altar.³ Then Balaam said to Balak, “Stay here beside your offerings while I am gone. Perhaps יְהוָה will grant me a manifestation, and whatever is revealed to me I will tell you.” And he went off alone.

⁴ God became manifest to Balaam, who stated, “I have set up the seven altars and offered up a bull and a ram on each altar.”⁵ And put a word in Balaam’s mouth and said, “Return to Balak and speak thus.”

“So he returned to him and found him standing beside his offerings, and all the Moabite dignitaries with him.⁶ He took up his theme, and said:

From Aram has Balak brought me,
Moab’s king from the hills of the East:
Come, curse me Jacob,
Come, tell Israel’s doom!
⁸ How can I damn whom God has not damned,
How doom when יְהוָה has not doomed?
⁹ As I see them from the mountain tops,
Gaze on them from the heights,
There is a people that dwells apart,
Not reckoned among the nations,
¹⁰ Who can count the dust of Jacob,
Number the dust-cloud of Israel?
May I die the death of the upright,
May my fate be like theirs!

Balak’s offerings indeed elicit the Deity’s message. But instead of curses from Balaam, blessings for Israel come forth.

3. “grant me a manifestation.” The verbal root k-r-h means “to encounter occasionally,” and its use here and in v. 4 may reflect the unusual, occasional circumstance in which Israel’s God communicates with a non-Israelite prophet.

The book of Ruth uses the same root when Ruth ends up gleaning in her kinsman Boaz’s field (Ruth 2:3). In both instances the language may imply that these are not happenstance occurrences.

וּשְׁבַעַת אֱלֹהִים: ² וַיַּעֲשֶׂה בְּלָק בְּאָשָׁר דִּבֶּר בְּלָעֵם יוּעַל בְּלָק וּבְלָעֵם פָּר וְאַיִל בְּמִזְבֵּחַ:
³ וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלָעֵם לְבְלָק הַחֲנִיאֵב עַל־עַלְתָּק
וְאַלְכָה אָוְלִי יִקְרָה יְהוָה לְקַרְאָתִי וְדַבֵּר
מַה־יִרְאָנִי וְהַגְּדָתִי לְךָ וַיֹּלֶךְ שָׁפִי:
⁴ וַיֹּקַר אֱלֹהִים אֶל־בְּלָעֵם וַיֹּאמֶר אֶלְיוֹ אֶת־
שְׁבַעַת הַמִּזְבֵּחַ עַרְכָּתִי וְאַעַל פָּר וְאַיִל
בְּמִזְבֵּחַ: ⁵ וַיַּשְׁמַם יְהוָה דָּבָר בְּפִי בְּלָעֵם
וַיֹּאמֶר שׁוֹב אֶל־בְּלָק וְכֵה תֹּדַבֵּר:
⁶ וַיֵּשֶׁב אֶלְיוֹ וְהַפְּנֵה נַצֵּב עַל־עַלְתָּק הוּא
וּבְלָשׂוֹן מוֹאָב: ⁷ וַיֹּשָׁא מִשְׁלָוֹן וַיֹּאמֶר
מִן־אָרְם יְנַחֵנִי בְּלָק
מֶלֶךְ־מוֹאָב מִהְרְרִי־קְדֻם
לְכָה אֲרָה־הָלִי יַעֲקֹב
וְלִכְה זְעַמָּה יִשְׂרָאֵל:
⁸ מִהָּ אֲקָב לֹא קַבָּה אַל
וְיַמָּה אָזְעָם לֹא צָעַם יְהוָה:
⁹ כִּי־מֶרֶאשׁ צָרִים אַרְאָנוּ
וּמְגַבְּעָוֹת אַשְׁוֹרָנוּ הַחֲנָעָם לְבָקָד יִשְׁפְּנֵן
וּבְגִוִּים לֹא יִתְחַשֵּׁב:
¹⁰ מִי מְנַה עֲפָר יַעֲקֹב
וּמִסְפֵּר אַתְּ־רַבֵּעַ יִשְׂרָאֵל
תִּמְתַּה נְפָשֵׁל מֹות יִשְׂרָאֵל
וַתְּהִי אַחֲרִיתִי בְּמַהּוּ:

7. theme. Heb. mashal, indicative of wisdom sayings that have a particular message.

8. God. Heb. el, which here may be short for elohim, the noun usually translated as “God,” or it may refer to the Canaanite god El, which at one time was apparently also worshipped by Israel. In the Deir Alla inscription (see the introduction to the previous unit, p. 939), Balaam’s mission is charged by the deity El.

10. Who can count the dust of Jacob. This expression reverberates in the ancestral blessing (Genesis 13:16).

¹¹Then Balak said to Balaam, “What have you done to me? Here I brought you to damn my enemies, and instead you have blessed them!” ¹²He replied, “I can only repeat faithfully what puts in my mouth.” ¹³Then Balak said to him, “Come with me to another place from which you can see them—you will see only a portion of them; you will not see all of them—and damn them for me from there.” ¹⁴With that, he took him to Sedehzophim, on the summit of Pisgah. He built seven altars and offered a bull and a ram on each altar. ¹⁵And [Balaam] said to Balak, “Stay here beside your offerings, while I seek a manifestation yonder.”

¹⁶יְהוָה became manifest to Balaam and put a word in his mouth, saying, “Return to Balak and speak thus.” ¹⁷He went to him and found him standing beside his offerings, and the Moabite dignitaries with him. Balak asked him, “What did you say?” ¹⁸And he took up his theme, and said:

Up, Balak, attend,
Give ear unto me, son of Zippor!
¹⁹God is not human to be capricious,
Or mortal to have a change of heart.
Would [God] speak and not act,
Promise and not fulfill?

BALAAAM'S SECOND ORACLE AND BALAK'S RESPONSE (23:13-26)

Balaam's second oracle (vv. 18-24) expands on the themes of the initial message. It focuses on God's attributes of faithfulness vis-à-vis Israel and acknowledges Balaam's task to actually bless Israel. The poem closes with a statement of Israel's great power. Balak, however, is unwilling to accept the inevitable and persists in resisting the finality of the prophecy.

13-17. After the initial blessing of Israel, Balak attempts to elicit a curse from Balaam by having the prophet view the Israelite camp from a less awe-

¹¹וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלֹק אֶל-בְּלֹעַם מֵהֶה עֲשִׂית לִי
לְקֹב אַיִבֵּי לְקַחְתִּיךְ וְהַנֶּה בְּרִכְתְּךָ בָּרוּךְ:
¹²וַיַּעַן וַיֹּאמֶר הַלֹּא אַתְּ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁים יְהוָה
בְּפִי אַתְּ אֲשֶׁר מְרַאַתְּ לְדִבֶּר: ¹³וַיֹּאמֶר אַלְיוֹ
בְּלֹק לֹךְ נָא לְכַהְזֵא אֲתִי אֶל-מִקְומֵךְ אַחֲרֵךְ
אֲשֶׁר תַּرְאֵנוּ מִשֵּׁם אֱפָס קָצְחוֹ תְּרָאָה וּכְלוֹ
לֹא תְּרָאָה וּכְבוֹנוֹלִי מִשֵּׁם: ¹⁴וַיַּקְהַלֵּת
שְׂדָה צְפָהֹת וַיַּעֲלֵל פָּר וְאִיל בְּמִזְבֵּחַ: ¹⁵וַיֹּאמֶר
אֶל-בְּלֹק הַתִּצְאֵב כֵּה עַל-עַלְתָּךְ וְאַנְכִּי
אָקְרָה כֵּה:

¹⁶וַיַּקְרֵב יְהוָה אֶל-בְּלֹעַם וַיִּשְׁמַע דְּבָר בְּפִיו
וַיֹּאמֶר שׁוּב אֶל-בְּלֹק וְכֵה תֹּדְבֵּר: ¹⁷וַיָּבֹא
אַלְיוֹ וְהַנֶּן נִצְבֵּל עַל-עַלְתָּו וְשָׁרֵי מוֹאָב אַתְּ
וַיֹּאמֶר לוֹ בְּלֹק מַה-זֶּה בְּרִיר יְהוָה: ¹⁸וַיִּשְׁאַל
מִשְׁלָוֹ וַיֹּאמֶר

קוֹם בָּלֹק וְשָׁמַע
הָאֲזִינָה עַדְיִ בְּנָו צָפֵר:
¹⁹לֹא אִישׁ אֵל וְיִכְזֹבֵב
וּבְנָאָרָם וַיִּתְנַחַם
הַהְוָא אָמָר וְלֹא יַעֲשֵׂה
וְדַבֵּר וְלֹא יִקְרַמְהָ:

some angle. The narrator mocks Balak, who fails to understand that God's desire may not be contravened in this manner.

13. “a portion of them.” Literally, “its edge,” indicating that Balaam would only see a small segment of the Israelite camp. Apparently Balak believes that Balaam might actually curse them if they did not appear so overwhelming to him.

18-24. The message of the second oracle underscores that of the first. Balaam emphasizes God's constancy in general—and specifically a devotion to Israel's welfare. Balaam cites the redemption from Egypt as evidence of God's power and allegiance to Israel.

²⁰My message was to bless:
When [God] blesses, I cannot reverse it.
²¹No harm is in sight for Jacob,
No woe in view for Israel.
Their God יְהוָה is with them,
And their King's acclaim in their midst.
²²God who freed them from Egypt
Is for them like the horns of the wild ox.
²³Lo, there is no augury in Jacob,
No divining in Israel:
Jacob is told at once,
Yea Israel, what God has planned.
²⁴Lo, a people that rises like a lioness,
Leaps up like a lion,
Rests not till it has feasted on prey
And drunk the blood of the slain.

²⁵Thereupon Balak said to Balaam, “Don’t curse them and don’t bless them!” ²⁶In reply, Balaam said to Balak, “But I told you: Whatever יְהוָה says, that I must do.” ²⁷Then Balak said to Balaam, “Come now, I will take you to another place. Perhaps God will deem it right that you

²⁰הַנִּהְבֵּר לְקַחְתִּי
יַבְּרֵךְ וְלֹא אֲשִׁיבֵנָה:
²¹לֹא-הַבִּיט אָנוּ בַּיּוֹקָב וְלֹא-רָאָה עָמָל בִּישָׂרָאֵל יְהוָה אֶלְקָיו עָמָו
וַתְּרוּעָת מַלְךָ בָּו:
²²אֶל מַזְכִּים מִמְצָרִים
בְּתוּפָת רָאֵם לוֹ:
²³כִּי לֹא-נִחַשׁ בַּיּוֹקָב
וְלֹא-קָסֵם בִּישָׂרָאֵל
בְּעֵת יָמֵר לַיּוֹקָב
וַיַּלְשְׁרָאֵל מִה-פְּעָל אֵל:
²⁴הַנִּיעַט פְּלַבְיאָ יְקוּם
וּכְאַרְיִי יִתְנְשָׁא
לֹא יִשְׁבֶּב עַד-יָאַכְל טָרַף
וְדִימְחָלִים יִשְׁתַּחַ:

²⁵וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלֹק אֶל-בְּלָעָם גַּם-קָב לֹא
תַּקְבִּנוּ גַּם-בְּרֵךְ לֹא תַּבְרְכָנוּ: ²⁶וַיֹּעֶן
בְּלָעָם וַיֹּאמֶר אֶל-בְּלָק הַלֹּא דָבַרְתִּי
אַלְיָל לְאָמֵר כֵּל אֲשֶׁר-יָדַב יְהוָה אֶתְךָ
אָשָׁה: ²⁷וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלֹק אֶל-בְּלָעָם לְכָה-נָא
אֲקַח אֶל-מָקוֹם אֶחָר אָוְלִי יִשְׁלַׁב עַיִּינִי

23. no augury. Heb. nachash, like kesem (“divining,” see at 22:7), refers to the taking of omens, a practice popular in the ancient Near East but prohibited in the Bible (see Deuteronomy 18:10–12).

24. like a lioness...like a lion. These similes preview Israel’s military victories and kingdom in Canaan (see Genesis 49:9–10).

25–26. The distressed and foolish Moabite king, in contrast to the seer, is not resigned to accept God’s expressed will as the last word.

25. “Don’t curse them and don’t bless them!” The implication is that Balaam’s attempted curse translates into a blessing; therefore, it is better to abandon the entire enterprise.

BALAAM’S THIRD ORACLE AND BALAK’S RESPONSE (23:27–24:11)

The section begins with Balak’s acknowledgment that Israel’s God is the one who controls Balaam’s ability to curse Israel. This time, when Balaam utters his prophecy, he is apparently imbued with the divine spirit common to Israel’s prophets. It seems that his role has changed from that of pagan seer to a prophet of God. The third oracle sings the praises of a triumphant Israel and concludes by cursing her enemies.

23:27–24:2. This time the narrator states that Balaam does not search for omens in the process of damn them for me there.”²⁸ Balak took Balaam to the peak of Peor, which overlooks the wasteland.²⁹ Balaam said to Balak, “Build me here seven altars, and have seven bulls and seven rams ready for me here.”³⁰ Balak did as Balaam said: he offered up a bull and a ram on each altar.

24 Now Balaam, seeing that it pleased God to bless Israel, did not, as on previous occasions, go in search of omens, but turned his face toward the wilderness.² As Balaam looked up and saw Israel encamped tribe by tribe, the spirit of God came upon him.³ Taking up his theme, he said:

Word of Balaam son of Beor,
 Word of the man whose eye is true,
⁴ Word of one who hears God’s speech,
 Who beholds visions from the Almighty,
 Prostrate, but with eyes unveiled:
⁵ How fair are your tents, O Jacob,
 Your dwellings, O Israel!
⁶ Like palm-groves that stretch out,

הָאֱלֹהִים וַקְבָּתוֹ לֵי מֶשֶׁם: ²⁸ וַיַּקְרֵב בְּלָק אֶת-בְּלָעֵם רֹאשׁ הַפָּעוֹר הַפְּשָׁקָף עַל-פְּנֵי הַיְשִׁימָן: ²⁹ וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלָעֵם אֶל-בְּלָק בְּנֵה-לִי בָּזָה שְׁבָעָה מִזְבְּחָת וְהַכֵּן לֵי בָּזָה שְׁבָעָה פְּרִים וְשְׁבָעָה אִילִם: ³⁰ וַיַּעֲשֵׂה בְּלָק בְּאָשָׁר אָמַר בְּלָעֵם וַיַּעֲלֵל פָּר וְאַיִל בְּמִזְבֵּחַ: כ וַיַּרְא בְּלָעֵם כִּי טֹוב בְּעֵינִי יְהוָה לְבָרָה אֶת-יִשְׂרָאֵל וְלֹא-הָלֶךְ בְּפָעָם-בְּפָעָם לְקַרְאָת נְחַשִּׁים וַיַּשְׁתַּחַת אֶל-הַמִּדְבָּר פְּנֵיו: ² וַיִּשְׁאַל בְּלָעֵם אֶת-עַיְנוֹ וַיֹּאמֶר אֶת-יִשְׂרָאֵל שָׁכֵן לְשָׁבְטָיו וְתָהִי עַלְיוֹ רוח אֱלֹהִים: ³ וַיִּשְׁאַל מִשְׁלָוֹ וַיֹּאמֶר ג נָאָם בְּלָעֵם בְּנֵו בָּעָר וְנָאָם הַגָּבָר שְׁתַּם הַעֲין: ⁴ נָאָם שְׁמַע אֶמְרֵי-אֵל אֲשֶׁר מִחְווָה שְׂדֵי יִחְווָה נְפָל וְגָלוּ עַיְנוּם: ⁵ מִה-טָּבוֹ אֶחָדְיָךְ יַעֲקֹב מִשְׁבְּנָתֶיךָ יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁶ בְּנָחֲלִים נְפִיר

seeking the divine spirit, implying that he did so previously. For the first time, Balaam views the entire Israelite camp (compare 22:41; 23:13).

28. the peak of Peor. The site, high on a hill, is not only ideal for viewing the Israelite camp, but also would have housed a sanctuary to the god Baal-peor, a site that will soon become infamous when Israelite men consort there with local women (see below at 25:1–18).

24:3–9. This third vision describes the Israelite encampment as a lush oasis (vv. 6–7), which stands in stark contrast to the wilderness background of Balaam’s actual view of that encampment (24:1). The oracle ends by reiterating the promise to Israel’s ancestors (Genesis 12:3; 27:29) that anyone who blesses Israel will be blessed in turn, but that anyone who curses Israel is cursed in return. Verse 5 from this oracle has become a part of Jewish liturgy.

4. the Almighty. Heb. shaddai is an epithet of God common in the stories of the patriarchs and matriarchs (Genesis 17:1; 28:3; 35:11). Its likely meaning, “high,” is related to the Akkadian term for mountain. (See further at Genesis 17:1 and Exodus 6:2.) In contrast to the biblical shaddai, in the Deir Alla inscription (see the introduction to the previous unit, p. 939), the shdyn (“Shadday-gods”) are independent deities with powers to challenge those of the head god El.

5. How fair are your tents, O Jacob. Heb. mah tovu ohalecha yaakov. This verse from Balaam’s blessing of Israel is preserved in modern times in the opening of the morning liturgy. The picture of Israel residing securely in its tents provides an idyllic image.

Like gardens beside a river,
Like aloes planted by יְהוָה,
Like cedars beside the water;
7 Their boughs drip with moisture,
Their roots have abundant water.
Their ruler shall rise above Agag,
Their sovereignty shall be exalted.
8 God who freed them from Egypt
Is for them like the horns of the wild ox.
They shall devour enemy nations,
Crush their bones,
And smash their arrows.
9 They crouch, they lie down like a lion,
Like a lioness; who dares rouse them?
Blessed are they who bless you,
Accursed they who curse you!

¹⁰ Enraged at Balaam, Balak struck his hands together. “I called you,” Balak said to Balaam, “to damn my enemies, and instead you have blessed them these three times! ¹¹ Back with you at once to your own place! I was going to reward you richly, but you has denied you the reward.” ¹² Balaam replied to Balak, “But I even told the messengers you

בְּגַנְתָּה עַלְיִ נָהָר בְּאֲהָלִים נָטָע יְהוָה
פְּאָרֹזִים עַלְיִם :
7 יְזָלָמִים מִקְלָנוּ
וַיַּרְעֹז בְּמִים רַבִּים
וַיַּרְמֶן מַאֲגָג מִלְּפָבוֹ
וַתִּנְשַׁא מַלְכָתוֹ :
8 אֵל מוֹצִיאוֹ מִמּוּצָרִים
בְּתֻועָפָת רָאֵם לוֹ
יַאֲכִל גּוֹיִם צָרֵיו
וַעֲצָמְתִּיהֶם יִגְרֹם
וְחַצְיוֹ יִמְחֹץ :
9 בָּרָע שָׁכֵב בְּאָרֶץ
וַיַּכְלְבִּיא מַיִּיקְמָנוּ
מִבְּרָכָה בָּרוּךְ
וְאַרְצִיךְ אָרוּר :

¹⁰ וַיַּחַר-אָף בְּלָק אַל-בְּלָעָם וַיַּסְפֵּק אַתְּ
כְּפָיו וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלָק אַל-בְּלָעָם לְקַבְּ אַיִלְיָ
קְרָאָתִיךְ וְהַנֵּה בְּרִכְתָּ בָּרָק זֶה שְׁלַשְׁ
פְּעֻמִּים : ¹¹ וַעֲתָה בְּרַחְלִק אַל-מִקְמָה
אָמָרְתִּי בְּפֶד אַכְבָּדָךְ וְהַנֵּה מַגְעָה יְהוָה
מִבְּבּוֹד : ¹² וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלָעָם אַל-בְּלָק הַלְּא גַם
אַל-מִלְאָכֵךְ אַשְׁר-שְׁלַחְתָּ אֵלִי דְּבָרָתִי

7. Agag. Agag is the king of Amalek at the time of Saul’s reign (I Samuel 15:8). Saul’s victory is in effect foretold here. Critical scholars take this as evidence that this text dates from after that event, that is, after approximately 1000 B.C.E.

10. Enraged at Balaam. Balak’s reaction to Balaam’s third oracle is no doubt exacerbated by the pronouncement that he who curses Israel will be cursed in turn.

struck his hands together. A gesture of anguish and anger attested elsewhere in the Bible. The book of Lamentations depicts Jerusalem as a disgraced woman, whom passersby jeer as they strike their hands in derision (Lamentations 2:15).

11. Balak sends Balaam home without payment for his services.

BALAAM’S FOURTH ORACLE (24:12–25)

Balaam makes it clear to Balak that even great riches cannot entice him if Israel’s God does not will it. In the power struggle between earthly king and the kingship of God, the victor is clearly the God of Israel. In that sense, the encounters between Balak and Balaam are comparable to those between Moses and Pharaoh prior to the Exodus.

Balaam utters a fourth oracle on his own accord following his dismissal by the angry Moabite king.

sent to me,¹³“Though Balak were to give me his house full of silver and gold, I could not of my own accord do anything good or bad contrary to יהוה’s command. What יהוה says, that I must say.”¹⁴ And now, as I go back to my people, let me inform you of what this people will do to your people in days to come.”¹⁵ He took up his theme, and said:

Word of Balaam son of Beor,
 Word of the man whose eye is true,
¹⁶Word of one who hears God’s speech,
 Who obtains knowledge from the Most High,
 And beholds visions from the Almighty,
 Prostrate, but with eyes unveiled:
¹⁷What I see for them is not yet,
 What I behold will not be soon:
 A star rises from Jacob,
 A scepter comes forth from Israel;
 It smashes the brow of Moab,
 The foundation of all children of Seth.
¹⁸Edom becomes a possession,
 Yea, Seir a possession of its enemies;
 But Israel is triumphant.

לְאָמֵר : ¹³ אִם־יַתְּנִלִּי בָּלָק מֶלֶךְ בֵּיתוֹ כִּסְף
 וַיְהִבָּלֶא אִוְּלָל לְעַבְרָה אֶת־פִּי יְהֹוָה לְעַשׂוֹת
 טוֹבָה אֲוֹרֶה מִלְּפִי אֲשֶׁר־יִדְבֶּר יְהֹוָה אֶת־
 אָדָבָר : ¹⁴ וְעַתָּה הַנּוּ הַוּלָּג לְעַמִּי לְכָה
 אִיעָצֶל אֲשֶׁר יַעֲשֶׂה הָעָם הַזֶּה לְעַמֶּךָ
 בְּאַחֲרִית הַיְמִים : ¹⁵ וַיְשָׁא מִשְׁלֹו וַיֹּאמֶר

נָאֵם בְּלֻעַם בָּנוֹ בָּעָר :
 וְנָאֵם הַגָּבָר שְׁתַּמְתָּם הַעַזָּן :
¹⁶ נָאֵם שְׁמָעֵן אֶמְרִי־אָל
 וַיַּדְעַ דָּעַת עַלְיוֹן
 מְחִינָה שְׁדֵי יְחֹהָה
 נְפָל וְגָלוֹעָ עַיְנִים :
¹⁷ אַרְאָנוּ וְלֹא עַתָּה
 אֲשֻׁרְנוּ וְלֹא קָרוֹב
 כָּרֶךָ כּוֹכֶב מִיעָלָב
 וּקְם שִׁבְטָ מִינְשָׁרָאֵל
 וּמְחַצֵּן פָּאָתִי מוֹאָב
 וּקְרָאֵר בְּלִבְנִיְשָׁת :
¹⁸ וְהִיא אָדָום יְרַשָּׁה
 וְהִיא יְרַשָּׁה שְׁעִיר אִיבְּרִיו^{וְיִשְׂרָאֵל עַשָּׁה חִיל :}

This last speech not only prophesies Israel’s ultimate triumph over the other nations, but it assumes the rise of kingship and an Israelite empire.

This fourth oracle refers to several ethnic groups in the context of Israel’s future victories. Balaam predicts the destruction of Moab at the hands of an unnamed Israelite king. Judging by other biblical accounts, either David or Ahab qualifies as that king (II Samuel 8:2; II Kings 3:4–5). Indeed, the Mesha Stele—a Moabite inscription of the 9th century B.C.E.—commemorates the independence of Moab after years of subservience to Israel. Overall, the fourth oracle is the climax of Balaam’s prophecies, predicting a more distant but bright future awaiting Israel. As Balaam relates each of the first three oracles, his status rises; with the fourth and final oracle he becomes a universal prophet in the sense that his visions encompass future events for the entire region. A very common pattern in biblical literature is followed here: the 3+1 pattern, where the fourth element is climactic.

The narrative ends with Balaam and Balak returning home, the latter’s mission having failed. No additional words are exchanged between the Moabite king and the seer.

14. “in days to come.” This expression denotes a future time but not in a messianic sense.

17. A star rises from Jacob. The epithet “star” refers to a divinely chosen king, in later periods identified with a messiah (for example, Bar Kochba, literally “Son of the Star,” the leader of the second Jewish revolt against Rome in the 2nd century C.E.).

¹⁹A victor issues from Jacob
To wipe out what is left of Ir.

²⁰He saw Amalek and, taking up his theme, he said:
A leading nation is Amalek;
But its fate is to perish forever.

²¹He saw the Kenites and, taking up his theme, he said:

Though your abode be secure,
And your nest be set among cliffs,
²²Yet shall Kain be consumed,
When Asshur takes you captive.

²³He took up his theme and said:

Alas, who can survive except God has willed it!
²⁴Ships come from the quarter of Kittim;
They subject Asshur, subject Eber.
They, too, shall perish forever.

²⁵Then Balaam set out on his journey back home; and Balak also went his way.

25 While Israel was staying at Shittim, the menfolk profaned themselves by whoring with the

¹⁹ וַיָּרֶךְ מִיעַקְבָּר
וְהַאֲבִיד שָׁרוֹד מַעֲירָ:

²⁰ וַיּוֹרֶא אֶת־עַמְלָק וַיֵּשֶׁא מִשְׁלוֹ וַיֹּאמֶר רָאשַׁית גּוֹים עַמְלָק
וְאַחֲרִיתוֹ עָרֵי אָבָד:

²¹ וַיּוֹרֶא אֶת־הַקְּנִינִי וַיֵּשֶׁא מִשְׁלוֹ וַיֹּאמֶר אִתְּנָן מַוְשֵׁבָךְ
וְשִׂים בְּסֻלָּע קָנָה:

²² כִּי אִם־יְהִי לְבָעֵר קָנָן
עַד־מָה אָשׁוֹר תְּשַׁבֵּךְ:

²³ וַיֵּשֶׁא מִשְׁלוֹ וַיֹּאמֶר
אוֹי כִּי יְחִי מִשְׁמוֹ אֵל:

²⁴ וְצִים מִידָּכָתִים
וְעַבּוֹ אָשׁוֹר וְעַנוּ-עַבּוֹ
וְגַם־הָוֹא עָרֵי אָבָד:

²⁵ וַיָּקָם בְּלָעָם וַיָּלֹךְ וַיִּשְׁבַּט לִמְקָמוֹ וְגַם־בְּלָק
הַלְּךָ לְדַרְכֶּךָ: פ

כָּה וַיִּשְׁבַּט יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּשָׁפְטִים וַיְהִלֵּל הָעָם

24. Kittim. Invaders from Cyprus, who infiltrated the region of Syria and Mesopotamia. The historical setting for this prophecy is unclear.

Apostasy at Baal-peor (25:1–9)

Numbers 25 continues the narrative begun in 22:1 that was interrupted by the insertion of the story of Balaam and Balak. It recounts a specific event that occurs while Israel is still encamped on the plains of Moab, awaiting the crossing into Canaan. According to the account, which is apparently woven from different traditions, a group of Israelite men mingle with local non-Israelite women; the resulting sexual relationships lead to idolatrous worship of the local god, Baal-peor, and ultimately to the slaughter of thousands of people.

Three smaller segments comprise the story: vv. 1–5; 6–9; and 10–19 (which appears in the next parashah, Pinchas). In the latter two segments Phinehas, Aaron's grandson, is central to the expiation of the sin, his role superseding even that of Moses. Clearly, that rendition's objective is to support the claim that the Aaronite priesthood was divinely appointed.

Memory of Israel's apostasy at Baal-peor and subsequent punishment is preserved in several biblical accounts outside the book of Numbers (see Deuteronomy 4:3; Joshua 22:17; Hosea 9:10; Psalm 106:28). But it is the account in Numbers that specifically develops the theme of the dangerous for-

Moabite women,² who invited the menfolk to the sacrifices for their god. The menfolk partook of them and worshiped that god.³ Thus Israel attached itself to Baal-peor, and יהוה was incensed with Israel.⁴ יהוה said to Moses, “Take all the ringleaders and have them publicly impaled before יהוה, so that יהוה’s wrath may turn away from Israel.”⁵ So Moses said to Israel’s officials, “Each of you slay those of his men who attached themselves to Baal-peor.”

לִזְנוֹת אֶל־בָּנוֹת מוֹאָב: ² וַתִּקְרָא אֵלָם
לַזְכִּחַי אֱלֹהֵי הַיּוֹן וַיַּאֲכַל הַעַם וַיִּשְׁתַּחַוו
לְאֱלֹהֵי הַיּוֹן: ³ וַיַּצְמַד יִשְׂרָאֵל לְבַעַל פָּעוֹר
וַיִּחַרְאֵף יְהוָה בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה
אֶל־מֹשֶׁה קַח אֶת־כָּל־رָאשֵׁי הַעַם וְהַקְעֵ
אָוֹתָם לִיהוָה נֶגֶד הַשְׁמֵשׁ וַיַּשְׁבַּחַרְוּן אַפִּ
יְהוָה מִיְשָׁרָאֵל: ⁵ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶל־שְׁפֵטִי
יִשְׂרָאֵל הָרָגוּ אִישׁ אָנֹשִׁי הַנִּצְמָדִים לְבַעַל פָּעוֹר:

eign woman who entices the men to sin (as in Proverbs 2:16; 5:3, 20; 7:5; 23:27; 27:13). Except for Hosea 9:10, all other references to the sin of Baal-peor focus solely on the idolatrous worship.

ISRAEL'S FLIRTATION WITH FOREIGN WOMEN AND IDOLATRY (25:1-5)

The setting of this episode is the last Israelite encampment outside Canaan, at Shittim—just east of the Jordan River. Israel's apostasy, actually involving only males, centers around their contact with Moabite women, whom the writer clearly condemns in keeping with a strand of biblical ideology that prohibits marriage with foreign women (see Deuteronomy 7:3). King Solomon himself is condemned for marrying foreign women, among them a Moabite, because they ostensibly enticed him to worship foreign gods (I Kings 11:1–6). A contrasting tradition, which welcomes a foreign woman, is the story of Ruth the Moabite. The brief story of Israel's apostasy in Numbers 25 moves swiftly from a sexual encounter to idolatrous worship and God's reprisal.

I. Moabite women. The Moabite women in this account are viewed as dangerous enticers. Unlike Ruth, who is accepted into Israelite society and even identified as the ancestor of King David (Ruth 4:17), Moabite women in this parashah are considered totally unacceptable partners for the Israelite men. Undoubtedly, Ruth's complete break with her own family and religion and total adoption of Israelite culture differentiates her case.

2. invited the menfolk. The text makes it clear that it is the Moabite women who entice the Israelite men to join their ritual feast. In that way this sin differs from the one of the Golden Calf, whose construction and worship was initiated by Israel (Exodus 32:1-6). [While the case of the Golden Calf implicates women and men alike, the present story singles out women as enticers to sin, while it labels men as sinners. —Ed.] partook of them. Heb. vayochal, literally “ate,” seems to refer to a ritual sacrificial feast, possibly connected with a funerary cult. (See Va-y’chi, Another View, p. 297.)

3. Baal-peor. Baal-peor is the local manifestation of the storm-god Baal of the Canaanite religion. Peor is a geographical name previously mentioned in the Balaam saga (23:28; also Deuteronomy 3:29).

4. "Take all the ringleaders and have them publicly impaled." The ringleaders, in Hebrew "heads of the people," are to be put to death; perhaps included are those who did not take part in the apostasy but were liable for the people's actions nonetheless. Their execution and subsequent public impalement serves as expiation for Israel's violation of the Sinai covenant, which prohibits foreign worship. The extreme measure is needed to control divine wrath.

5. "slay those . . . who attached themselves to Baal-peor." Moses apparently intervenes, instructing Israel's officials to slay only the guilty.

⁶Just then one of the Israelite notables came and brought a Midianite woman over to his companions, in the sight of Moses and of the whole Israelite community who were weeping at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting. ⁷When Phinehas, son of Eleazar son of Aaron the priest, saw this, he left the assembly and, taking a spear in his hand, ⁸he followed the Israelite notable into the chamber and stabbed both of them, the Israelite notable and the woman, through the belly. Then the plague against the Israelites was checked. ⁹Those who died of the plague numbered twenty-four thousand.

וְהַנֶּה אִישׁ מִבְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בָּא וַיִּקְרֹב אֶל־
אֲחִיו אֲתִ-הַמִּדְיָנִית לְעֵינִי מֹשֶׁה וְלֵינוּ
כָּל־עֲדָת בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל וְהַמָּה בְּלִים פָּתַח
אַחֲל מָזָעָד: ⁷ וַיַּרְא פִּינְחָס בֶּן־
אַהֲרֹן הַבָּנָן וַיָּקַט מִתּוֹךְ הַעֲלָה וַיִּקְחֶה רַמָּח
בִּידָו: ⁸ וַיָּבֹא אַחֲר אִישׁ-יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶל-הַקְבָּה
וַיִּדְקֹר אֲתִ-שְׁנִיהם אֶת אִישׁ יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֶת־
הָאֲשָׁה אֶל-קְבָתָה וַתִּעַצֵּר הַמְגַפָּה מִעַל
בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁹ וַיָּהִי הַמְתִים בְּמַגָּפָה
אַרְבָּעָה וּשָׁעִים אַלֵּף: פ

PHINEHAS'S VENGEANCE (25:6–9)

This passage focuses on one particular couple guilty of apostasy. Interestingly, the man and woman are not identified by name or status until after Phinehas kills them and expiates their sin (25:14–15). Clearly, the emphasis in this portion of the account is on the brave, redeeming act of Phinehas, the priest who preserves the community's sanctity. The couple is identified in the next parashah, where we learn that they come from leading families. Their actions as leaders and role models render them even more culpable.

6. Midianite woman. Verse 1 identified the women in question as Moabite. According to the Torah, Moses had married Zipporah, a Midianite, the daughter of a priest, more than forty years earlier (Exodus 2:21 and 18:1–12). The Midianites are said to be descended from Abraham and his wife Keturah (Genesis 25:1–4). The Bible preserves conflicting traditions about relations with Midianites.

8. the chamber. Heb. hakubbah, which probably refers to a tent (as in Arabic) that is part of the cultic area. Thus the transgression involves worship of a foreign deity.

9. Those who died of the plague. Punishing offenders by a divinely sent plague is known from elsewhere in the Bible. (Presumably any remaining members of the Exodus generation are among the victims of this plague, since the census that will follow shortly in Numbers 26 indicates that by that point they have all been wiped out.) The sin of the Golden Calf, especially, is a comparable example (Exodus 32:35). Possibly, the reference at the end of that account to future divine reprisal (32:34) is fulfilled by the punishment exacted now at Baal-peor.

—Nili Sacher Fox

Another View

IN THE BRIEF and gruesome episode at the conclusion of parashat Balak (25:6–9), what do the Israelite man and the Midianite woman do to provoke Phinehas's wrath? Apparently it is the brazenness of an Israelite leader engaging in idolatrous worship with the daughter of a Midianite chieftain within the sight of the whole community that causes Phinehas's immediate, violent reaction. But the text raises a number of questions and gives a few hints that something else may have incited his brutal response as well.

First, the priestly author mentions that the man brought the woman (identified in the next parashah respectively as Zimri and Cozbi), to echav, translated here as “his companions” (v. 6). The term ach is a kinship term, often translated as “brother” or more loosely as “kin.” If, following Ibn Ezra, we translate echav as “kinsmen,” then it appears that Zimri is introducing Cozbi to his family. Then they step into the kubbah, a word that appears nowhere else in the Bible, here translated as “chamber” (v. 8). If they are simply going there to engage in idolatry, why would he have introduced her to his family? Second, why does Phinehas kill both Zimri and Cozbi, when Moses commanded to kill only the Israelites who were engaging in idolatry (v. 4)? Third, why does the author include the detail that Phinehas stabs both Zimri and Cozbi in the belly (v. 8) if their crime is worshipping foreign gods?

One explanation that answers all of these questions is that the author conveys through these details that Zimri has married Cozbi, and that they come to the Israelite camp so that he can introduce his bride to his family. Thus, the kubbah is a marriage canopy where the couple goes to consummate the marriage. Therefore, the issue is also intermarriage, not only idolatry.

If this interpretation is correct, then the recounting of this incident reflects an attitude toward intermarriage that conflicts with other biblical stories. Possibly the report about Moses' own wife Zipporah, which states that she was a Midianite woman and a priest's daughter, aims specifically to illustrate a different perspective toward foreign women (Exodus 2:16–21; see also how Zipporah rescues Moses from death in Exodus 4:24–26). The book of Ruth, where a Moabite woman becomes the progenitor of King David, likewise challenges an exclusionary perspective.

Why do the Israelite notable and the Midianite woman provoke Phinehas's wrath?

—Hilary Lipka

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

Balaam son of Beor (22:5). For the Rabbis, the biblical soothsayer Balaam personified the perceived gentile evils of immorality, idolatry, and sorcery. Rabbinic literature consistently portrays the wicked Balaam as advising other nations' kings on how to destroy Israel, iniquity noted already in Numbers 31:16

(not in this parashah). The Rabbis affirm that Balaam had great prophetic powers and the facility to bless and curse effectively. According to Midrash B'midbar Rabbah 14.20, God bestowed these special abilities on Balaam so that the nations of the world should not say: “Had we possessed a prophet like Moses we [too] would have worshipped the blessed Holy One.” Thus, the nations wasted their opportunity to find a way to the worship of God and could not claim that Israel had special privileges.

BALAK

While Israel was staying at Shittim (25:1). B'midbar Rabbah 20.22 recounts that during all the years in the wilderness, the Israelites acted virtuously; they did not commit any sexual sins until they came to Shittim. The reason for their lapse, according to the midrash, was the waters of the local spring: “Some fountains produce strong men and some weaklings, some handsome men and some ugly men, some chaste men and some men who are steeped in lewdness.” According to the Sages, this fountain of Shittim, which promoted immoral sexual behavior, was also the fountain that provided the water for Sodom. They predicted that at some future time God would cause this cursed spring to dry up and then renew it in purity, as the prophet Joel predicted, “A spring shall issue from the House of יהוה, and shall water the valley of Shittim” (Joel 4:18).

“Cast a staff into the air, and it will fall back to its place of origin.”

whoring with the Moabite women (25:1). The Rabbis recall that the Moabites were descended from the incestuous union of Lot and his older daughter (Genesis 19:33–35), following the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. The Sages usually treat this event positively, since the two daughters believed that the rest of the world had been destroyed and they were trying to reconstitute humanity by sleeping with their father. In B'midbar Rabbah 20.23, however, this act of incest is cited as the beginning of a history of debauchery by the women of Moab: “Cast a staff into the air, and it will fall back to its place of origin. The one who began the harlotry in the beginning [Lot’s older daughter], finally committed it again [the Moabite women].”

who invited the menfolk to the sacrifices for their god (25:2). According to a number of rabbinic sources, including BT Sanhedrin 106a, the plot to seduce the Israelite men, which led to the deaths of 24,000 people (25:9), was concocted by the villainous Balaam, in accordance with what Numbers 31:16 states in the next parashah. In order to ensnare Israel, Balaam advised Balak to erect stalls where old women would offer linen garments to the Israelite men. However, inside the stalls, young women offered to sell the same items for less. Having established a relationship with a particular man, the young woman would say to him: “You are now like one of the family.... Why is it that though we love you, you hate us?... Are we not all the children of one man, Terah the father of Abraham?” She would then encourage him to drink wine, and he would desire her—as it says in the Prophets, “Harlotry, wine, and new wine destroy the mind of My people” (Hosea 4:11). At that point, the young woman would refuse to have sexual relations with the Israelite man until he had sacrificed an animal and bowed down to the local idol, Baal-peor.

who were weeping at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting (25:6). B'midbar Rabbah 20.24 suggests that Moses and the Israelite leaders were weeping because they were so shocked and disappointed at the behavior of the Israelite men who were worshiping Baal-peor. The midrash offers a parable: “It is like a king’s daughter, adorned for her wedding and sitting in her bridal litter, who was discovered in a compromising position with a stranger, and so the king and her relatives lost faith in her. It was the same with Israel. At the end of forty years they camped by the Jordan to cross over into the Land of Israel... and there they gave way to harlotry. [At this betrayal] the courage of Moses failed him, as did that of the righteous with him.”

—Judith R. Baskin

Contemporary Reflection

IN THE MIDST of our book of wandering, we read of how a Moabite sovereign engages a seer from a distant land in the hopes of cursing and thus defeating the Israelites. In the central irony of a fanciful tale that opens with “[he] saw” (22:2), neither King Balak nor his hireling Balaam are able to “see” the Israelites. Balaam and Balak position and re-position themselves in an attempt to assess the multitude that “hides the earth from view” (22:5). The two travel from point to point without gaining the perspective they seek.

Only when the Holy One opens his eyes can Balaam see more than a portion of the people he has been sent to curse. He sees the tents that are the homes and the gathering places of the women, children, and men who live as a community marked by care and mutual respect. Seemingly stunned by his newfound perspective on the Israelite compound, Balaam describes the people in language that evokes Eden: “Like palm-groves that stretch out, / Like gardens beside a river, / Like aloes planted by יְהוָה, / Like cedars beside the water; / Their boughs drip with moisture, / Their roots have abundant water” (24:6–7). Have the eyes of the desert diviner cleared sufficiently so that he can see a people who one day would have the power to make the desert bloom? Do his words reflect dreams of cities with palm-lined boulevards and garden neighborhoods that would, in the future, challenge and transform the arid landscape?

For a moment, Balaam sees a community as it can be: a society of mutual dependence and trust, a community where each person is treated with dignity, and he exclaims: Mah tovu ohalecha, Yaakov / mishk'notecha, Yisrael (“How fair are your tents, O Jacob, / Your dwellings, O Israel”; 24:5). But when Balaam extends his description, the utopian vision fades, and the people become just like any other who seek domination over their foes. He concludes, “Blessed are they who bless you, / Accursed they who curse you!” (24:9). As in the beginning of this portion, the world is divided into two: those who seek to maintain power, and those who attempt to usurp it—the victors and the vanquished, the blessed and the cursed.

The concluding story of this portion (25:1–9) illustrates the tragedy of seeing the world dichotomized in this way. Exhausted from a journey that seems to have no end, the Israelite men forget who they are. They forget their privileged relationship with the One who brought them out of slavery.

Let's move beyond the dichotomous thinking that blinded Balaam in this portion.

Balaam’s recognition of Israel’s goodness has become part of our liturgy known as the Mah tovu (literally “how good are”): Mah tovu ohalecha, Yaakov / mishk'notecha, Yisrael (“How fair are your tents, O Jacob, / Your dwellings, O Israel!”). The Rabbis who created our liturgy recognized the power of this sentence, and so they intentionally positioned it as the opening of a daily prayer sequence that fixes the individual in the context of the community of Israel. They expand Balaam’s blessing with four verses from Psalms written in the first person. In so doing, they enable each worshipper to claim a place as a member of the collective.

I, through Your abundant love, enter Your house;
I bow down in awe at Your holy temple (Psalm 5:8).

תְּהִלָּה, I love Your temple abode,

BALAK

The dwelling-place of Your glory (Psalm 26:8).
Let me bow down and kneel before God my maker
(Psalm 95:6).
As for me, may my prayer come to You, O יהוה,
At a favorable moment;
O God, in Your abundant faithfulness,
Answer me with Your sure deliverance (Psalm 69:14).

With these phrases, the Rabbis transform Balaam's God of war into a God of chesed (loving-kindness), and each Jew who utters these words becomes the prayer. In the parashah, Balaam follows his original utterance of the verse with two descriptions of Israel: an Israel that lives in a lush and verdant world, and a nation that is victorious against enemies. But Balaam's utterance is also incomplete, which is why our liturgy expands it—and also shifts the focus to the relationship of the individual with God.

I propose a third reading, one that returns to the evocation of the community as a source of power and that extends it, connecting the people with God and with their unique challenge.

Consider the following combination of 24:5 with the words from the book of Isaiah:

How fair are your tents, O Jacob,
Your dwelling places, O Israel! (24:5)
I, the Holy One, have called you in righteousness, and taken you by the hand.
I am the One who created you and made you a covenant people,

a light to the nations:
to open eyes that are blind, to bring the captive out of confinement (Isaiah 42:6–7).

This clear challenge invites us to move beyond the narrow, dichotomous thinking that blinded Balak and Balaam in this portion. These verses from Isaiah anticipate—and fulfill—the subsequent prophetic call about tents and dwellings: “Enlarge the space for your tent (oholech); / do not spare the canvas for your dwelling-place (mishk'notayich)” (Isaiah 54:2). Here the prophet urges Jerusalem—personified as a woman—to widen her tent with joy and make room for the multitudes who will enter the capital city. An expanded tent in a gracious and open city reflects the utopian and achievable goal of moving beyond oppositional concepts of native/stranger, friend/foe, chosen/rejected, male/female.

Are we ready to open our tents and our hearts to those who wish to dream—and then to build sacred communities that not only tolerate diversity and difference but also celebrate them? Can we move beyond narrow, divisive definitions and descriptions that are no longer useful? Might we transform our communities by welcoming those who come into our houses of worship with words that describe what our community can be? When our dwelling places become sanctuaries for all seekers of peace and justice, when our homes welcome all who no longer objectify the other, then we can truthfully declare, Mah tovu—how good, how fair, are our tents.

—Sue Levi Elwell

Voices

Balak

Laurie Patton

Numbers 22:21–35

At eleven forty five
in the dark,
the dog whose eyes
are so fixed and steady that I am daily convinced of his next, human life

walked to the bottom shelf of the back library, and slowly pulled
at a small book
with his teeth—
Ted Hughes,
“Poetry in the Making,”
the chapter on writing about animals.

With his paws,
he held down page fourteen,
“The Thought Fox”:
a poem about a fox
who suddenly climbs
into the poet’s head
at midnight.

I read between his paws:

*Till with the sudden sharp hot stink of fox
It enters the dark hole of the head*

*The window is starless still; the clock ticks,
The page is printed.*

And the dog looked up amidst the snowy crumbs of chewed paper

and that curtain—
that frustrating scrim between animals like me and the ones like him—
was lifted
in our startled gaze

“Yes, you are the thought fox!”
I said to him,
“and yes, it is time for you to be inside my head!”

“And by the way,”
I went on,
“What other angels have you been falling in front of . . .

And what else
do I need to know
from their presence in my road?”

He kept chewing but did not answer.

from Hidden Treasures

Yocheved Bat-Miriam (transl. Bernhard Frank)

Numbers 23:11

Just as you see me, that's how I am:
no eye-shadow, rouge; neither makeup nor charm,
but barbaric, perverse, and extremely rude—
that's how I want to stand before you.

So and so many feet is the sum of my height,
so and so many years my lease on this earth.
An extra measure for my spirit's flight when it bursts from its cage and wanders without word.

And my chatter won't transport me to heaven,
a chatter turned stammer with sudden dismay.
I don't know how to address you, even,
I who am dying with each passing day.

With each passing day, like a dream's illusion both land and sea still rise and shine, as whitewashed highways from nought to
nothing
will tug at the azure of the sky and the brine.

Fastening the Light of the Sabbath Candles

Rivka Miriam (transl. Linda Stern Zisquit)

Numbers 24:5

Fastening the light of the Sabbath candles
to my eyes, my palms are tents where my fathers rested in the desert.
The light wraps itself to my eyes.
The light gathers into me.
When they wandered in the desert
the openings of their tents were turned away from each other.
While they wandered in the desert their openings covered clouds. Sand and light mixed.
My fingers are brittle.
My hair is veiled.

Untitled

Muriel Rukeyser

Numbers 24:1–9

On your journey you will come to a time of waking.
The others may be asleep. Or you may be alone.
Immediacy of song moving the titled Visions of children and the linking stars.

You will begin then to remember. You Hear the voice relating after late listening.

You remember even falling asleep, or a dream of sleep.
For now the song is given and you remember.

At every clear waking you have known this song,
The cities of this music identified

By the white springs of singing, and their fountains
Reflected in windows, in all the human eyes.

The wishes, the need growing. The song growing.

Desolate Valley

Rachel Luzzatto Morpurgo (transl. Nina Davis Salaman)

Numbers 24:1–9

From a distance, I look upon the eternal hills,
Their face covered with glorious flowers.
I rise high, as if on eagle's wings, to cast a glance,
Raising my head to view the sun.
Heaven! How beautiful you stream forth,
Winds sweeping across your stage,
Revealing the place where freedom ever lives.
Who, who can express its sweetness!

from Thistles

Esther Raab (transl. Harold Schimmel)

Numbers 24:1–9

My heart, homeland, is with your dews,
at night on fields of bramble,
and to the cypress's scent, and moist thistle,
I will extend a hidden wing.
Your paths are soft cradles of sand at stretching between acacia hedges, as though on a surface of pure silk I'll move forever upon them held by some unfathomable charm, and transparent skies whisper over the dark—a frozen sea of trees.

Holy Quiet

Malka Heifetz Tussman (transl. Marcia Falk)

Numbers 24:1–7

Quietly you utter
the word "quiet"
and already you have marred the quiet.

I was in a holy quiet
only once.

Once—

Once I had an orchard—
apples, pears, cherries, plums,
and at the fringes, by the fences,
raspberries, gooseberries, currants,
and all kinds of flowers.

Summer dusk. Alone in my orchard.
A moment, an eternity:
the owl held back its poo-hoo,
the cuckoo forgot its cuckoo—
a wild berry by the path in the weeds fixed in its gaze.

And I—
quiet multiplied by quiet—did not interrupt my quiet prayer with even a quiver
when the Shekhinah kissed a leaf down from a pear tree, carried it away,
and let it fall onto the brook
at the orchard's edge.

פִנְחָס ◆ Pinchas

NUMBERS 25:10–30:1

Legacy of Law, Leadership, and Land

AS THEIR FORTY YEARS' JOURNEY in the wilderness is coming to an end, the Israelites' focus shifts to final preparations for entering the Promised Land. It is a time of uncertainty in the face of transition. Parashat Pinchas (named after the priest known in English as Phinehas) describes actions and instructions for securing stability and continuity, with special attention to division of the land among the Israelite tribes. The setting is the plains of Moab, on the eastern side of the Jordan near Jericho (25:43), within view of the Promised Land. The opening verses conclude the disturbing incident of Baal-peor (25:1–9). After a census and the appointment of Moses' successor, the parashah ends with a lengthy account of the sacrificial offerings for various sacred occasions. The final words of the Torah portion affirm that Moses instructed Israel according to God's commands (30:1).

Five daring sisters—Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah, also known as Zelophehad's daughters—loom large in this Torah portion, and again later in Numbers 36 (and also Joshua 17). They brilliantly challenge the inheritance system (which has disenfranchised them) when they request a share in the land (27:1–11). They are so important that each of their names appears in every episode about them. In this episode these sisters succeed in securing a legacy for themselves, so that they, rather than their father's male relatives, will inherit his portion. But they do even more than that, something unique and extraordinary: they initiate a Torah law, a legal precept that becomes a legacy for future generations because what they ask for themselves becomes a law

Five daring sisters loom large in this Torah portion.

sanctioned by God. This case is important in showing (among other things) women who challenge community practices and who thereby bring significant modifications to existing legislation in order to meet changing social needs.

The resolution of their case is that brotherless daughters can inherit parental property. Thus, this new law preserves the integrity of family property in case only daughters are born to an Israelite couple. It also provides economic security to daughters who otherwise would depend on male relatives for sustenance.

A striking aspect of these stories about Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah concerns archeological information about territorial holdings in Israel during the monarchy. Two of these names—Noah and Hoglah—appear on ostraca (ancient clay fragments). The names seem to refer to areas of considerable size in northern Israel (see at 27:1–2).

Other fascinating women make cameo appearances as mother (Jochebed, 26:59), sister (Miriam, 26:59), or daughter; yet they are remembered mainly in relation to an important man. We find also the “dangerous” foreign woman (Cozbi; 25:15–18) and the mysterious Serah, who is named only to disappear without a story (26:46).

—Tamara Cohn Eskenazi

Outline—

I. THE LEGACY OF PRIESTLY LEADERSHIP

Phinehas and the Covenant of Perpetual Priesthood (25:10–18)

- A. Phinehas’s reward: permanent priestly leadership (vv. 10–13)
- B. The culprits and their crime (vv. 14–18)

II. LEGACY OF LAND

Census of a New Generation (25:19–26:65)

- A. The census of the Israelites (25:19–26:51)
- B. Instructions about dividing the land (26:52–56)
- C. The census of the Levites (26:57–62)
- D. Conclusion of the census (26:63–65)

III. LEGACY AND LAND

Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah (27:1–11)

- A. The setting (vv. 1–2)
- B. The sisters’ request: to inherit their father’s land (vv. 3–4)
- C. The results: the sisters receive the promise of land (vv. 5–11)

IV. LEGACY OF MOSAIC LEADERSHIP AND AUTHORITY

Joshua Appointed as Successor (27:12–23)

- A. God prepares Moses for death (vv. 12–14)
- B. Moses asks God to appoint a successor (vv. 15–17)
- C. God selects Joshua as successor (vv. 18–21)
- D. Conclusion: Moses commissions Joshua (vv. 22–23)

V. COMMUNAL LEGACY FOR CONTINUING RELATIONS WITH GOD

Sacrificial Offerings (28:1–30:1)

- A. Introduction (28:1–3a)
- B. List of occasions and offerings (28:3b–29:38)
- C. Conclusion (29:39–30:1)

25:10

לְהָזֶה spoke to Moses, saying,¹¹ “Phinehas, son of Eleazar son of Aaron the priest, has turned back My wrath from the Israelites by displaying among them his passion for Me, so that I did not wipe out the Israelite people in My passion.¹² Say, therefore, ‘I grant him My pact of friendship.¹³ It shall be for him and his descendants after him a

כִּי ¹⁰ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לֵאמֹר:
 11 פִּינְחָס בֶּן־אֱלֹעֶזֶר בֶּן־אַהֲרֹן הַכֹּהן
 הַשִּׁבֵּת אֶת־חִמְתִּיל מִעַל בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּקָנָאוֹ
 אֶת־קָנָאתִי בְּתוֹכָם וְלֹא־כְּלִיתִי אֶת־בְּנֵי
 יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּקָנָאתִי: ¹² לְכָן אָמָר הָנָנוּ נָתַן לוֹ
 אֶת־בְּרִיתִי שָׁלוֹם: ¹³ וְהִיא תְּהִלָּתָה לוֹ וְלֹא־רָעָיו

The Legacy of Priestly Leadership

PHINEHAS AND THE COVENANT OF PERPETUAL PRIESTHOOD (25:10–18)

Although the five sisters Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah will feature prominently in this Torah portion, it begins with Phinehas (in Hebrew, Pinchas). It concludes the gruesome episode that took place in the previous parashah: Israel succumbed to the sin of idolatry, and Phinehas the priest—Aaron’s grandson—responded by slaying a couple who had committed idolatry in front of the community. Now God rewards Phinehas. (For a different interpretation, see Balak, Another View, p. 954.)

This opening scene is disturbing for a number of reasons: first, because the new generation of Israelites falls prey to idolatry—and does so within view of the Promised Land; second, because Phinehas is rewarded for acting violently and without recourse to due process; and third, because women (albeit foreign) receive a disproportionate blame for the people’s downfall.

PHINEHAS’S REWARD: PERMANENT PRIESTLY LEADERSHIP (25:10–13)

God rewards Phinehas with hereditary priesthood, elevating him above other descendants of Aaron. Why? The reason seems to be Phinehas’s swift and ruthless response to idolatry. Unlike his grandfather Aaron, who collaborated with idolators in the infamous case of the Golden Calf (see Exodus 32, especially vv. 5 and 21–25), Phinehas demonstrates unflinching loyalty to God. He thus restores the stature of priests as deserving mediators between Israel and God.

Although God had ordered death for all the ring-leaders (25:4), Phinehas satisfies God’s demand for punishment by the single act of slaying two leaders. He thereby causes less rather than more bloodshed.

12. My pact of friendship. Literally, “covenant of peace.” In Numbers 6, God requires that the priests transmit blessings of peace. (See “And grant you peace” in the conclusion of the Priestly Benediction, 6:22–26.)

13. for him and his descendants after him a pact of priesthood. According to later narratives,

- She lives among her kin and her land belongs to her—what a difference this makes!

ANOTHER VIEW ► 982

- Serah bat Asher is among the nine persons who are said to have entered heaven alive.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 983

- The sisters insist on change by engaging Israelite traditions effectively.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 985

- I know about the woman / who sits and waits... for her life / to begin....

VOICES ► 987

pact of priesthood for all time, because he took impassioned action for his God, thus making expiation for the Israelites.””

¹⁴The name of the Israelite notable who was killed, the one who was killed with the Midianite woman, was Zimri son of Salu, chieftain of a Simeonite ancestral house. ¹⁵The name of the Midianite woman who was killed was Cozbi daughter of Zur; he was the tribal head of an ancestral house in Midian.

¹⁶ spoke to Moses, saying, ¹⁷“Assail the Midianites and defeat them—¹⁸for they assailed you by the trickery they practiced against you—

Israel’s chief priests descended from Phinehas rather than from Aaron’s other descendants.

THE CULPRITS AND THEIR CRIME (25:14–18)

For the first time, the narrator discloses the name and rank of Phinehas’s victims: Zimri the Israelite man and Cozbi the Midianite woman. Their story articulates a theme that recurs in several biblical books: the potentially dangerous influence of foreign women.

In some cases, foreign women play a positive role, helping to ensure survival. The daughter of Pharaoh saves Moses (Exodus 2:5–10). Zipporah, Moses’ Midianite wife, averts God’s wrath by circumcising their son (Exodus 4:24–26). Rahab the harlot helps Israelite spies (Joshua 2). Jael saves the nation by killing its arch-enemy Sisera (Judges 4). Ruth the Moabite sustains Naomi and becomes an ancestress of King David (Ruth 4:17–22).

Elsewhere, however, women are blamed for leading Israelite men to idolatry. Thus the warning in Exodus 34:16: “And when you take wives from among their daughters for your sons, their daughters will lust after their gods and will cause your sons to lust after their gods.” (See also Deuteronomy 7:4, which adds that God’s anger will blaze, “promptly wiping you out.”) In addition, I Kings

אֶחָדוֹ בְּרִית בְּהִנֵּת עוֹלָם תְּחַת אֲשֶׁר קִנְאָ
לְאֱלֹהָיו וַיַּכְפֵּר עַל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל:

¹⁴ וְשֵׁם אִישׁ יִשְׂרָאֵל הַמִּפְּנָה אֲשֶׁר הָכָה
אֶת־הַמְּדִינִית זָמְרִי בָּנִים לֹא נִשְׁיא בֵּית־
אָב לְשָׁמְעַנִּי: ¹⁵ וְשֵׁם הָאִשָּׁה הַמִּקְבָּה
הַמְּדִינִית בָּזְבֻּן בְּת־צֹר רָאשׁ אַמּוֹת בֵּית־
אָב בְּמִדְיָן הוּא: פ

¹⁶ וַיַּדְבֵּר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים לְאָמֵר: צָרוֹר אֶת־הַמְּדִינִים וְהַבִּיטִּם אָוֹתֶם: ¹⁸ כִּי
צָרְרִים הֵם לְכֶם בְּנָכְלֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר־גַּבְלֵי

11:1–13 blames Solomon’s fall from grace on his foreign wives, and I Kings 18 portrays Queen Jezebel, a Phoenician princess married to an Israelite king, as a major proponent of idolatry. Recognizing women’s powerful influence on cultural and religious life, the Bible at certain junctures expresses anxiety over foreign women. The standard charge is idolatry, often cast in sexual terms. Women who keep their own religious traditions instead of Israel’s seem to threaten the entire fabric of the nation. They possess the potential to lure their husbands and future generations away from fidelity to Israelite traditions. The danger is deemed acute in times of transition, when Israel’s boundaries—social as well as political—are not clearly established, as here, when entering the land.

14–15. Zimri . . . Cozbi daughter of Zur . . . tribal head. Cozbi’s name derives from a Hebrew root k-z-b, meaning “a lie” or “falsehood.” Both Cozbi and Zimri come from leading families. In the previous Torah portion, responsibility for initiating this crisis had already been placed on women: “they,” specifically the women (the verb is in feminine plural form), invited the people to offer sacrifices to “their” (again, feminine form) god (for details, see at 25:1–2). Here Cozbi receives the greater share of the blame. She is mentioned twice (see below); Zimri is mentioned only once.

because of the affair of Peor and because of the affair of their kinswoman Cozbi, daughter of the Midianite chieftain, who was killed at the time of the plague on account of Peor.”

¹⁹When the plague was over, 26 יהוה said to Moses and to Eleazar son of Aaron the priest, ²“Take a census of the whole Israelite company [of fighters] from the age of twenty years up, by their ancestral houses, all Israelite males able to bear arms.” ³So Moses and Eleazar the priest, on the steppes of Moab, at the Jordan near Jericho, gave

לְכֶם עַל־דָּבָר־פָּעוֹר וְעַל־דָּבָר בָּזְבִּי בְתֵה
נְשִׂיא מִדְיָן אֲחַתֶּם הַמִּגְפָּה בַּיּוֹם־הַמִּגְפָּה
עַל־דָּבָר־פָּעוֹר:

¹⁹ וַיֹּהֶן אַחֲרֵי הַמִּגְפָּה פ כ וַיֹּאמֶר
יְהוָה אֱלֹמֶשׁ וְאֶל אֶלְעֹזֶר בָּנֵי־אַהֲרֹן
הַכְּפָנָן לְאָמֵר: ² שָׁאוֹ אַתְּ־רָאשׁ | כָּל־עַדְתָּ
בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל מִבּוּן עֲשָׂרִים שָׁנָה וּמַעַלָּה
לְבֵית אֲבָתֶם כָּל־יִצְאָא צָבָא בִּישְׁרָאֵל:
³ וַיֹּדַבֵּר מֹשֶׁה וְאֶלְעֹזֶר הַכְּפָנָן אֶתְمָ

18. because of the affair of... Cozbi. She alone now represents the entire episode. This scandal becomes known as “the affair of Cozbi,” not “the affair of Zimri,” the Israelite man. The repetition of her name here, this time with no reference to Zimri, singles her out as the dominant symbol of this sinful event that will mar Israel’s relations with the Midianites (see also 31:1–54).

Peor. The site in Moab where these events took place, identified as Shittim in 25:1.

their kinswoman. Literally, “their sister.” In the census that follows, Miriam will be identified by the same Hebrew phrase (26:59; see there). The foreign woman as sister appears here as a source of death, whereas the Israelite sister remains a preserver of life.

daughter of the Midianite chieftain. For Rashi, her pedigree teaches “the extent of the Midianites’ hatred, who went so far as to prostitute a king’s daughter in order to bring Israel into sin.” His interpretation thus shifts some blame away from Cozbi to her family.

links the past with the future to establish continuity. The census identifies those who survived the journey (and the recent debacle at Peor), as well as the men whose households will receive land. The order follows the earlier list of those who began the journey in Numbers 1. One generation is passing; its children now stand ready to carry on. If Numbers 1 is an “exit poll,” this census is an “entrance poll.”

THE CENSUS OF THE ISRAELITES (25:19–26:51)

The tribes bear the names of Jacob’s twelve sons by different mothers, though none of the matriarchs is mentioned. Most of the individual heads of households named here are otherwise unknown. The significance of the order of the list is not self-evident beyond its parallel to Numbers 1. About the names of the tribes as given by Leah and Rachel to their sons, see at Genesis 29–30.

The list of men is interrupted only rarely. The mention of Serah, daughter of Asher (26:46) and of Jochebed and Miriam (26:59) are two such occasions.

26:3. steppes of Moab. This is the last stop before entering Canaan; this area, also called the plains of Moab, is located on the eastern side of the Jordan River.

Legacy of Land

CENSUS OF A NEW GENERATION (25:19–26:65)

The list of the men reared in the wilderness and those destined to inherit the Promised Land instructions about them, namely,⁴ those from twenty years up, as יהוה had commanded Moses.

The [eligible male] descendants of the Israelites who came out of the land of Egypt were:

⁵Reuben, Israel's first-born. Descendants of Reuben: [Of] Enoch, the clan of the Enochites; of Pallu, the clan of the Palluites; ⁶of Hezron, the clan of the Hezronites; of Carmi, the clan of the Carmites. ⁷Those are the clans of the Reubenites. The men enrolled came to 43,730.

⁸Born to Pallu: Eliab. ⁹The sons of Eliab were Nemuel, and Dathan and Abiram. These are the same Dathan and Abiram, chosen in the assembly, who agitated against Moses and Aaron as part of Korah's band when they agitated against יהוה. ¹⁰Whereupon the earth opened its mouth and swallowed them up with Korah—when that band died, when the fire consumed the two hundred and fifty representatives—and they became an example. ¹¹The sons of Korah, however, did not die.

¹²Descendants of Simeon by their clans: Of Nemuel, the clan of the Nemuelites; of Jamin, the clan of the Jaminites; of Jachin, the clan of the Jachinites; ¹³of Zerah, the clan of the Zerahites; of Saul, the clan of the Saulites. ¹⁴Those are the clans of the Simeonites; [men enrolled:] 22,200.

¹⁵Descendants of Gad by their clans: Of Zephon, the clan of the Zephonites; of Haggi, the clan of the Haggites; of Shuni, the clan of the Shunites; ¹⁶of Oznai, the clan of the Oznites; of Eri, the clan of the Erites; ¹⁷of Arod, the clan of the Arodites; of Areli, the clan of the Areliites. ¹⁸Those are the clans of Gad's descendants; men enrolled: 40,500.

5. Reuben. Leah's first-born (Genesis 29:32).

9. For the revolt of Korach, Dathan, and Abiram, see Numbers 16.

11. sons of Korah. Presumably they did not participate in the rebellion, which indicates that בערבת מואב על-ירדן ירחו לאמר: ⁴ מבען

עשרים שנה ומעלה באשר צוה יהוה
את-משה

ובני ישראל כייצאים מארץ מצרים:
⁵ ראובן בכוו ישראל בני ראובן חנוּן
משפחת החנכי לפלייא משפטת הפלאי:
⁶ לחצין משפטת החצורי לכרמי
משפטת הכרמי: ⁷ אלה משפטות
הרואבני ויהיו פקדיהם שלשה וארכבים
אלף ושבע מאות ושלשים:

⁸ ובני פלוא אליאב: ⁹ ובני אליאב נמויאל
ודתן ואבירם הווא-דתן ואבירם קרווי-קראי עדה אשר הצו על-משה ועל-אהרן בערת-קרח בהצתם על-יהוה:
¹⁰ ונתפקח הארץ א-ת-פִּיה ותבלע ארם
ואת-קרח במוות העדה באכל הארץ את-חמשים ומאותים איש ויהיו לנו: ¹¹ ובני-קרח לא-מתו: ס

¹² בני שמעון למשפחתם לנמויאל
משפחית הנומיאל לימין משפחית הימני
ליכין משפחית היבני: ¹³ לזרח משפחית
הזרחי לשאול משפחית השואל: ¹⁴ אלוף
משפחית השמעני שניים ועשרים אלף ומאותים: ס

¹⁵ בני גו למשפחתם לצפון משפחית
הכפוני לחגיא משפחית החגיא לשוני
משפחית השוני: ¹⁶ לאוני משפחית האוני
לעררי משפחית הערי: ¹⁷ לארוד משפחית
הארודי לאראלי משפחית האראלי:
¹⁸ אלה משפחית בנייגר לפקדיהם ארכבים אלף וחמש מאות: ס punishment is limited to actual offenders, not to the entire family.

12. Simeon. Leah's second son (Genesis 29:33).

15. Gad. Zilpah's (Leah's handmaid's) first-born (Genesis 30:10–11).

¹⁹Born to Judah: Er and Onan. Er and Onan died in the land of Canaan.

²⁰Descendants of Judah by their clans: Of Shelah, the clan of the Shelanites; of Perez, the clan of the Perezites; of Zerah, the clan of the Zerahites.

²¹Descendants of Perez: of Hezron, the clan of the Hezronites; of Hamul, the clan of the Hamulites.

²²Those are the clans of Judah; men enrolled: 76,500.

²³Descendants of Issachar by their clans: [Of] Tola, the clan of the Tolaites; of Puvah, the clan of the Punites; ²⁴of Jashub, the clan of the Jashubites; of Shimron, the clan of the Shimronites. ²⁵Those are the clans of Issachar; men enrolled: 64,300.

²⁶Descendants of Zebulun by their clans: Of Sered, the clan of the Seredites; of Elon, the clan of the Elonites; of Jahleel, the clan of the Jahleelites.

²⁷Those are the clans of the Zebulunites; men enrolled: 60,500.

²⁸The sons of Joseph were Manasseh and Ephraim—by their clans.

²⁹Descendants of Manasseh: Of Machir, the clan of the Machirites.—Machir begot Gilead.—Of Gilead, the clan of the Gileadites. ³⁰These were the descendants of Gilead: [Of] Iezer, the clan of the Iezerites; of Helek, the clan of the Helekites; ³¹[of] Asriel, the clan of the Asrielites; [of] Shechem, the clan of the Shechemites; ³²[of] Shemida, the clan of the Shemidaites; [of] Hepher,

¹⁹בְּנֵי יְהוָה עַר וְאֹנוֹן וִימֶת עַר וְאֹנוֹן
בָּאָרֶץ בְּנֵעַן:

²⁰וַיְהִיוּ בָּנֵי יְהוָה לְמִשְׁפָחָת לְשָׂלָה
מִשְׁפָחָת הַשְׁלָנִי לְפִרְזֵץ מִשְׁפָחָת הַפְּרָצִי
לְזָרָח מִשְׁפָחָת הַזָּרָחִי: ²¹וַיְהִיוּ בָּנֵי פִּרְזֵץ
לְחַצְרָן מִשְׁפָחָת הַחַצְרָן לְחַמּוֹל מִשְׁפָחָת הַחַמּוֹלִי: ²²אֶלְהָ מִשְׁפָחָת יְהוָה
לְפִקְדִּים שְׁשָׁה וְשָׁבָעִים אֶלְף וְחַמְשָׁ

מִאוֹת: ס

²³בְּנֵי יְשָׁכֶר יְשָׁכֶר לְמִשְׁפָחָת הַתּוֹלָעִי

מִשְׁפָחָת הַתּוֹלָעִי לְפֹוָה מִשְׁפָחָת הַפּוֹנוֹן:

²⁴לְיִשְׁוֹב מִשְׁפָחָת הַיִשְׁבִּי לְשָׁמְרָן
מִשְׁפָחָת הַשְּׁמְרָן: ²⁵אֶלְהָ מִשְׁפָחָת

יְשָׁכֶר לְפִקְדִּים אֲרָבָעָה וְשָׁבָעִים
אֶלְף וְשָׁלֹשׁ מִאוֹת: ס

²⁶בְּנֵי זְבוֹלָן לְמִשְׁפָחָת לְסֶרֶד מִשְׁפָחָת

הַסֶּרֶד לְאַלְזָן מִשְׁפָחָת הַאַלְזָן לְיִחְלָאל
מִשְׁפָחָת הַיְּחַלָּאלִי: ²⁷אֶלְהָ מִשְׁפָחָת

הַזְּבוֹלָנִי לְפִקְדִּים שָׁבָעִים אֶלְף וְחַמְשָׁ

מִאוֹת: ס

²⁸בְּנֵי יוֹסֵף לְמִשְׁפָחָת מְנַשָּׁה וְאֶפְרַיִם:

²⁹בְּנֵי מְנַשָּׁה לְמִכִּיר מִשְׁפָחָת הַמִּכִּירִי
וּמִכִּיר הַוְּלִיד אַתְּ-גָלְעָד לְגָלָעָד מִשְׁפָחָת

הַגָּלָעָדי: ³⁰אֶלְהָ בְּנֵי גָלָעָד אִיעָזֶר
מִשְׁפָחָת הַאִיעָזֶר לְחַלְקָה מִשְׁפָחָת

הַחְלָקִי: ³¹וְאֶשְׁרִירָאֵל מִשְׁפָחָת הָאֶשְׁרָאֵלִי
וְשָׁבָעִים מִשְׁפָחָת הַשְּׁבָעִים: ³²וְשְׁמִידָעָה

מִשְׁפָחָת הַשְּׁמִידָעָה וְחַפְרָה מִשְׁפָחָת

19. Judah. Leah's fourth son (Genesis 29:35). His son Er died while married to Tamar. His son Onan was killed by God because he violated his familial responsibilities toward Tamar (see Genesis 38).

20. Perez...Zerah. Judah and Tamar's twin sons (see Genesis 38).

23. Issachar. Leah's fifth son (Genesis 30:18).

26. Zebulun. Leah's sixth son (Genesis 30:19–20).

28. Joseph. Rachel's first-born (Genesis 30:22–24). His two sons with Asenath, an Egyptian woman, are privileged to become heads of individual tribes, presumably because of Jacob's love for Rachel (Genesis 41:50–52; 48:12–21).

the clan of the Hepherites.—³³Now Zelophehad son of Hepher had no sons, only daughters. The names of Zelophehad's daughters were Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.—³⁴Those are the clans of Manasseh; men enrolled: 52,700.

³⁵These are the descendants of Ephraim by their clans: Of Shuthelah, the clan of the Shuthelahites; of Becher, the clan of the Becherites; of Tahan, the clan of the Tahanites. ³⁶These are the descendants of Shuthelah: Of Eran, the clan of the Eranites. ³⁷Those are the clans of Ephraim's descendants; men enrolled: 32,500.

Those are the descendants of Joseph by their clans.

³⁸The descendants of Benjamin by their clans: Of Bela, the clan of the Belaites; of Ashbel, the clan of the Ashbelites; of Ahiram, the clan of the Ahiaramites; ³⁹of Shephupham, the clan of the Shuphamites; of Hupham, the clan of the Huphamites. ⁴⁰The sons of Bela were Ard and Naaman: [Of Ard,] the clan of the Ardites; of Naaman, the clan of the Naamanites. ⁴¹Those are the descendants of Benjamin by their clans; men enrolled: 45,600.

⁴²These are the descendants of Dan by their clans: Of Shuham, the clan of the Shuhamites. Those are the clans of Dan, by their clans. ⁴³All the clans of the Shuhamites; men enrolled: 64,400.

⁴⁴Descendants of Asher by their clans: Of Imnah, the clan of the Imnites; of Ishvi, the clan of the Ishvites; of Beriah, the clan of the Beriites. ⁴⁵Of the descendants of Beriah: Of Heber, the clan of the Heberites; of Malchiel, the clan of the

הַחֲפָרִי: ³³וְצִלְפָחֵד בָּנָרְחָפֵר לְאִיחִיו לוֹ בָנִים כִּי אִם־בָּנוֹת וְשֶׁמֶן בָּנוֹת צִלְפָחֵד מְחִילָה וְנָעָה חִגָּלה מְלֻפָּה וְתַרְצָה: ³⁴אֶלְהָ מְשִׁפְחָת מְנַשָּׁה וּפְקָדֵיהם שָׁנִים וְחוּמְשִׁים אֶלְף וְשֶׁבַע מֵאוֹת: ס

³⁵אֶלְהָ בָנֵי־אַפְרִים לְמְשִׁפְחָתָם לְשָׂוֹתְלָחֵד מְשִׁפְחָת הַשְׁתְּלָחֵד לְבָכָר מְשִׁפְחָת הַבָּכָר לְתַחַן מְשִׁפְחָת הַתַּחַן: ³⁶אֶלְהָ בָנֵי־שָׂוֹתְלָחֵח לְעָרֵן מְשִׁפְחָת הַעֲרָנִי: ³⁷אֶלְהָ מְשִׁפְחָת בָנֵי־אַפְלִיט לְפָקְדֵיהם שָׁנִים וְשֶׁלְשִׁים אֶלְף וְחוּמְשִׁים מֵאוֹת אֶלְהָ בָנֵי־יְוֹסֵף לְמְשִׁפְחָתָם: ס

³⁸בָנֵי בְנֵימָן לְמְשִׁפְחָתָם לְבָלָע מְשִׁפְחָת הַבָּלָע לְאַשְׁבֵל מְשִׁפְחָת הַאַשְׁבֵל לְאַחִים מְשִׁפְחָת הַאַחִירָמִי: ³⁹לְשְׁפָפָט מְשִׁפְחָת הַשּׁוֹפָטִי לְחוֹפָם מְשִׁפְחָת הַחוֹפָמי: ⁴⁰וַיְהִי בָנֵי־בָלָע אֶרְד וּנוּמָן מְשִׁפְחָת הַאֶרְדִּי לְנוּמָן מְשִׁפְחָת הַגָּעָמִי: ⁴¹אֶלְהָ בָנֵי־בְנֵימָן לְמְשִׁפְחָתָם וּפְקָדֵיהם חַמְשָׁה וְאֶרְבָּעִים אֶלְף וְשֶׁשׁ מֵאוֹת: ס

⁴²אֶלְהָ בָנֵי־דַן לְמְשִׁפְחָתָם לְשִׁוְתָם מְשִׁפְחָת הַשּׁוֹתָם אֶלְהָ מְשִׁפְחָת הַזָּן לְמְשִׁפְחָתָם: ⁴³כָל־מְשִׁפְחָת הַשּׁוֹתָם לְפָקְדֵיהם אֶרְבָּעָה וְשֶׁשׁים אֶלְף וְאֶרְבָּעִים מֵאוֹת: ס

⁴⁴בָנֵי אִשְׁר לְמְשִׁפְחָתָם לִימָנה מְשִׁפְחָת הַיְמָנָה לְשָׁוֹן מְשִׁפְחָת הַיְשָׁוֹן לְבָרִיעָה מְשִׁפְחָת הַבָּרִיעָה: ⁴⁵לְבָנֵי בָרִיעָה לְחַבֵּר מְשִׁפְחָת הַחַבֵּר לְמַלְפִיאֵל מְשִׁפְחָת

33. The names of Zelophehad's daughters were Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah. These influential five daughters are named four times in the Bible (see Numbers 27:1, 36:11; Joshua 17:3). For their important story, see at 27:1–11.

38. Benjamin. Rachel's second and last son. She dies in childbirth (Genesis 35:16–20).

42. Dan. Bilhah's (Rachel's handmaid's) first-born (Genesis 30:6).

44. Asher. Zilpah's second son (Genesis 30:13).

Malchielites.—⁴⁶The name of Asher's daughter was Serah.—⁴⁷These are the clans of Asher's descendants; men enrolled: 53,400.

⁴⁸Descendants of Naphtali by their clans: Of Jahzeel, the clan of the Jahzelites; of Guni, the clan of the Gunites; ⁴⁹of Jezer, the clan of the Jezerites; of Shillem, the clan of the Shillemites. ⁵⁰Those are the clans of the Naphtalites, clan by clan; men enrolled: 45,400.

⁵¹This is the enrollment of the Israelite men: 601,730.

⁵² spoke to Moses, saying, ⁵³"Among these shall the land be apportioned as shares, according to the listed names: ⁵⁴with larger groups increase the share, with smaller groups reduce the share. Each is to be assigned its share according to its enrollment. ⁵⁵The land, moreover, is to be apportioned by lot; and the allotment shall be made according to the listings of their ancestral tribes. ⁵⁶Each portion shall be assigned by lot, whether for larger or smaller groups."

⁵⁷This is the enrollment of the Levites by their clans: Of Gershon, the clan of the Gershonites; of Kohath, the clan of the Kohathites; of Merari, the clan of the Merarites. ⁵⁸These are the clans of Levi: The clan of the Libnites, the clan of the Hebron-

הַמְלֵיכִיאָלִי: ⁴⁶ וַיְשִׁם בֶּת־אָשָׁר שָׁרָח: ⁴⁷ אֶלְהָ מִשְׁפָּחָת בְּנֵי־אָשָׁר לְפִקְדֵּיהם שֶׁלְשָׂה וְחַמְשָׂים אֲלֹף וְאֶרְבֶּעָ מֵאוֹת: ס ⁴⁸ בְּנֵי נְפָתִילִי לְמִשְׁפָּחָת לִיחְצָאָל מִשְׁפָּחָת הַיְחִצָּאָלִי לְגֻנִּי מִשְׁפָּחָת הַגּוֹנִי: ⁴⁹ לִיאָרְמִשְׁפָּחָת הַיְצָרִי לְשָׁלָם מִשְׁפָּחָת הַשְּׁלָמִי: ⁵⁰ אֶלְהָ מִשְׁפָּחָת נְפָתִילִי לְמִשְׁפָּחָת וּפִקְדֵּיהם חַמְשָׂה וְאֶרְבֶּעָ אֲלֹף וְאֶרְבֶּעָ מֵאוֹת: ⁵¹ אֶלְהָ פְּקוּדִי בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל שְׁשָׁ-מֵאוֹת אֲלֹף וְאֶלְף שֶׁבַע מֵאוֹת וְשֶׁלְשִׁים: פ ⁵² וַיַּדְבֵּר יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִים לְאָהָה תְּחַלֵּק הָאָרֶץ בְּנֵחֶלֶת בְּמִסְפָּר שְׁמוֹת: ⁵³ לְרַב תַּרְבָּה נֵחֶלֶת וְלִמְעֵט תִּמְעֵיט נֵחֶלֶת אִישׁ לְפִי פְּקֻדֵּיו יִתְּנוּ נֵחֶלֶת: ⁵⁴ אַרְבָּגָרְלִי יִחְלֹק אֶת־הָאָרֶץ לְשָׁמֹות מִטּוֹת־אֲבֹתֶם יִנְהַלְוּ: ⁵⁵ עַל־פִּי הַגּוֹרֵל תְּחַלֵּק נֵחֶלֶת בֵּין רַב לִמְעֵיט: ס ⁵⁶ וְאֶלְהָ פְּקוּדִי הַלְוִי לְמִשְׁפָּחָת לְגַרְשֹׂון מִשְׁפָּחָת הַגְּרָשִׁי לְקִדְחַת מִשְׁפָּחָת הַקְּדָחִי לְמִרְאֵי מִשְׁפָּחָת הַמְּרֵאִי: ⁵⁸ אֶלְהָ מִשְׁפָּחָת לְוִי מִשְׁפָּחָת הַלְּבָנִי מִשְׁפָּחָת הַחֲרָבִנִי

46. Asher's daughter was Serah. The inexplicable mention of Serah here (and in Genesis 46:17 and I Chronicles 7:30) implies that she played an important role in Israel's memory. However, the Torah does not preserve her story. Rabbinic traditions elaborate on her importance (see Post-biblical Interpretations, p. 983).

48. Naphtali. Bilhah's second son (Genesis 30:8).

51. Israelite men: 601,730. The number of able-bodied men who enter the land is slightly larger than the number who left Egypt. Compare with the traditional 600,000 for the generation that stood at Sinai (on the symbolic nature of these numbers, see at Exodus 12:37).

INSTRUCTIONS ABOUT DIVIDING THE LAND (26:52–56)

Two sets of criteria determine the distribution of land: the size of apportioned land depends on tribal size; the location depends on casting lots.

THE CENSUS OF THE LEVITES (26:57–62)

Since Levites do not inherit land (26:62) but instead live in the midst of the other tribes (see at 3:1–46), their list is separate and forms the conclusion of the census. The family of Moses—though not Moses himself—receives special attention, highlighting Jochabed and Miriam.

ites, the clan of the Mahlites, the clan of the Mushites, the clan of the Korahites.—Kohath begot Amram.⁵⁹ The name of Amram's wife was Jochebed daughter of Levi, who was born to Levi in Egypt; she bore to Amram Aaron and Moses and their sister Miriam.⁶⁰ To Aaron were born Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.⁶¹ Nadab and Abihu died when they offered alien fire before יהוה.⁶² Their enrollment of 23,000 comprised all males from a month up. They were not part of the regular enrollment of the Israelites, since no share was assigned to them among the Israelites.

⁶³ These are the males enrolled by Moses and Eleazar the priest who registered the Israelites on the steppes of Moab, at the Jordan near Jericho.⁶⁴ Among these there was not one of those enrolled by Moses and Aaron the priest when they recorded the Israelites in the wilderness of Sinai.⁶⁵ For יהוה had said of them, “They shall die in the wilder-

מִשְׁפָחַת הַמְחַלֵּל מִשְׁפָחַת הַמְוֹשֵׁי מִשְׁפָחַת
הַקְרָתִי וְקָתַת הַוָּלֶד אֶת־עֲמָרָם: ⁵⁹ וְשָׁם
אֲשֶׁת עַמְּרָם יוֹכֵב בֶּת־לְוִי אֲשֶׁר יָלְדָה
אֹתָה לְלָוִי בְּמִצְרָיִם וַתַּלְדֵד לְעַמְּרָם אֶת־
אַהֲרֹן וְאֶת־מִרְיָם וְאֶת מְרִים אֶחָתָם:
⁶⁰ וַיַּלְدֵךְ לְאַהֲרֹן אֶת־נְדָב וְאֶת־אַבְיוֹהָא
אֶת־אַלְעֹזֶר וְאֶת־אִיתָם: ⁶¹ וַיָּמָת נְדָב
וְאַבְיוֹהָא בְּהַקְרִיבָם אֲשֶׁר־זָרָה לִפְנֵי יהָה:
⁶² וַיָּהִי פְּקֻדֵּתָם שֶׁלֶשׁ וּשְׁוֹרִים אַלְפָיִם
כָּל־זָכָר מִבְּנֵי־חִזְקָדָשׁ וּמִעַלְהָה כִּי וְלֹא
הַתְּפִקְדוּ בְּתוֹךְ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּפִי לְאִגְנָה
לְהַם נְחַלָּה בְּתוֹךְ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל:

⁶³ אֱלֹה פָּקוֹדִי מְשָׁה וְאַלְעֹזֶר הַכֹּהֵן אֲשֶׁר
פָּקוֹדָ אֶת־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּעֲרָבָה מוֹאָב עַל ירָקָן יְרָחוֹ: ⁶⁴ וּבְאֱלֹה לְאִיהִיה אִישׁ
מִפְּקוֹדִי מְשָׁה וְאַהֲרֹן הַכֹּהֵן אֲשֶׁר פָּקוֹדָ
אֶת־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּמִדְבָּר סִינֵּי: ⁶⁵ כִּי־אָמָר
יהָהוָה לְהַם מָות יִמְתֹה בְּמִדְבָּר וְלֹא־נוֹתֵר

59. In this verse, emphasis falls on the women's family positions: Jochebed as wife and mother, and Miriam as a daughter as well as "their sister." In this census, the constellation of birth references is unique. The text records Jochebed's own birth, itself an unusual detail. Obviously all the persons named in the census list have mothers, but the reference here emphasizes that these particular family events are not merely personal but of national consequence. The brief references suggest, in telegraphic fashion, that it is precisely their actions as mother and sister that matter for the life of Israel. One thereby remembers the wife, Jochebed, who not only bore a child but took exceptional risks to protect him, and Miriam the sister who supervised his rescue and reconnected him with his mother (Exodus 2).

their sister Miriam. For the first time Miriam is explicitly named as Moses' sister. Exodus 2 referred only to an unnamed sister of Moses; but the genealogy of Moses and Aaron in Exodus 6 did not include her. While Exodus 15:20 identified her as "Miriam the prophet, Aaron's sister," her relation to either man is not noted in Numbers 12—where she and Aaron challenge Moses—nor in her death notice in Numbers 20:1. Only here, perhaps as a way of tying up loose ends, is she specifically identified as the sister of both men. Indeed, the list departs from standard form to provide this information. In contrast to Cozbi (see at 25:18), who appears as an agent of danger and death, Miriam is an instrument of life. (See further at Numbers 20:1.)

CONCLUSION OF THE CENSUS (26:63–65)

God has condemned the generation of the Exodus to die in the wilderness because of disobedience but has spared Caleb and Joshua.

ness.” Not one of them survived, except Caleb son of Jephunneh and Joshua son of Nun.

27 The daughters of Zelophehad, of Manassite family—son of Hepher son of Gilead son of Machir son of Manasseh son of Joseph—came for-

מְהֻם אִישׁ בֶּן־כָּלֵב בָּנֵי־פַּנְהָה וַיְהִי־שׁוּעַ
בְּנֵי־נוֹן:

כז וְתַקְרְבָּנָה בָּנָות צָלָפָחָר בָּנֵי־חֶפְרָר בָּנָי־
גָּלָעָד בָּנֵי־מָכִיר בָּנֵי־מְנַשֶּׁה לְמַשְׁפְּחַת מְנַשֶּׁה

Legacy and Land

MAHLAH, NOAH, HOGLAH, MILCAH,
AND TIRZAH (27:1–II)

The story of Zelophehad's daughters appears in three different places in the Bible (Numbers 27 and 36; Joshua 17) and concerns itself with providing land for five remarkable daughters who, as sisters, always appear together. So important are they that their names are repeated in full in each episode. The fact that they receive so much “press” in the Bible is itself proof of their significance. But it takes attention to details to appreciate fully their accomplishments.

In the Torah, the story of Zelophehad's daughters depicts a two-part reformulation of a law, enabling daughters to inherit land (Numbers 27 and 36). In the first part, the daughters receive a promise of land; in the second, the law concerning the land is amended (see at Numbers 36). Finally, Joshua and other leaders then implement the law (at the sisters' request) in Joshua 17, and the women take possession of their land.

One notes two striking features of the story. First, disenfranchised women successfully confront an unjust system and propose a more equitable law. Second, God approves of their proposal and formulates it as a new law, one that enables other women as well to inherit land in certain circumstances. As unmarried women whose father had died, the five daughters represent the least powerful members of the community. Yet they dare challenge the tradition and call for change when the tradition is unjust. In the end, their proposal becomes God's Torah.

Rashi notes this dramatic development when he explicitly attributes this new Torah to the women. Their law, he says, “deserved to have been written by Moses”; but the women were worthy and hence “it was written by them.”

The story matters for other weighty reasons as well: it offers crucial information about land rights and kinship structures, as well as about the roles and status of women; it provides a rare opportunity for seeing how the legal process was perceived in biblical Israel. Thus the implications of the story extend beyond concern with the women in question. But the fact that the women in the Torah initiate this particular process and even the law itself, makes their story extraordinary.

Only three other cases in the entire Torah describe a legislative process in action: the cases of (1) the blasphemer (Leviticus 24:10–22); (2) those impure for the passover sacrifice (Numbers 9:6–14); and (3) the Shabbat violator (15:32–36). These three narratives describe procedural debates about applying already existing laws. But only the case of the five sisters shows a law actually being created, not merely applied. Moreover, this law is first proposed by people and only then confirmed, approved and extended by God as Torah. What perhaps makes this story most extraordinary and crucially important is that the people who create this Torah teaching are five women: Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.

THE SETTING (27:1–2)

The event takes place at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, Israel's holy shrine. The sisters confront ward. The names of the daughters were Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.² They stood before Moses, Eleazar the priest, the chieftains, and the whole assembly, at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting, and they said,³ “Our father died in the wilderness. He was not one of the faction, Korah’s faction, which banded together against Yahweh, but died for his own sin; and he has left no sons.⁴ Let not our father’s name be lost to his clan just because he had no son! Give us a holding among our father’s kinsmen!”

בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֶלְעָלָה שָׁמֹות בְּנֵתֵינוּ מַחְלָה נָעָה
וְחַגְלָה וְמַלְכָה וְתָרְצָה :² וְתַעֲמֹדְנָה לְפָנֵינוּ
מְשֻׁה וְלְפָנֵי אֱלֹעָזֶר הַכֹּהֵן וְלְפָנֵי הַנְּשִׁיאָם
וּכְלַהֲעֵדָה פָּתָח אַחֲלָמּוּעָד לְאָמָר :³
אֲבָנֵנוּ מַתָּ בְּמִדְבָּר וּ הוּא לְאָחִיה בְּתוֹךְ
הַעֲדָה הַנּוֹעֲדִים עַל-יְהוָה בְּעַדְתִּיקְרָחַ כִּי-
בְּחַטְאֽוּ מַתָּ וּבְנֵינוּ לְאָחִיו לוֹ :⁴ לְמַה יִגְרַע
שָׁם-אֲבָנֵנוּ מִתּוֹךְ מִשְׁפְּחָתוֹ כִּי אֵין לוֹ בָּן
תַּנְהַלֵּלנוּ אֲחָה בְּתוֹךְ אֲחֵינוּ :

a full house: Moses, the chief priest, the leaders and the entire congregation. Their demand is as public as possible.

1. The names of the daughters. Each one’s name appears in every episode about them.

Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah. The sisters are introduced by name, not merely as Zelophehad’s daughters. Their names recur in each episode (though the order varies for no apparent reason). The meanings of their names remain uncertain but the impact of their actions in the Bible is clear. In addition, archeologists have discovered two of these names, Noah and Hoglah, listed as town names on clay fragments from the 8th century B.C.E., known as the Samaria Ostraca (see at 27:5–11). Similarly, Tirzah, Milcah, and Mahlah appear as names of towns or regions in Israelite territory in various biblical texts (see below at 27:5–11).

Mahlah. A version of this name also appears as a place name in I Kings 19:16.

Noah. This name appears on three different fragments (ostraca 50, 52, and 64) as “of Noah.” The fragments appear to record delivery of wine or oil.

Hoglah. This name also appears on three different fragments (ostraca 45, 47 and 66).

Milcah. Scholars maintain that the name also refers to the region between Noah and Hoglah. The name appears in Genesis as well, as the name of Rebekah’s grandmother (see at Genesis 24:24).

Tirzah. This name refers also to the well-known royal city of the northern kingdom (see, for example, I Kings 14:17). The man in Song of Songs describes the woman as “beautiful . . . as Tirzah” (6:4).

THE SISTERS’ REQUEST: TO INHERIT THEIR FATHER’S LAND (27:3–4)

The women first challenge an unfair system but then immediately propose a solution. Their choice of words is astute. They use the language of loyalty to family, making a claim on behalf of their dead father. By emphasizing the desire to perpetuate their father’s name, they speak to a timely communal and familial concern in an era of transition.

3. “Our father died in the wilderness.” As such, he is unable to claim the land to which he is entitled.

“not one of . . . Korah’s faction.” By distancing their father from Korah, who had rebelled against Aaron (see Numbers 16), the daughters legitimate themselves in at least two ways. First, they explain that their father did not forfeit his inheritance (see 26:11 above). Second, they distance themselves from suspicion of illegitimate challenge to authority.

4. “Let not our father’s name be lost.” Preserving a man’s name—that is, his property and legacy—stands out as a venerable obligation in the Bible (see the levirate laws of Deuteronomy 25:5–10). The women thus cleverly frame their request in the shared language of communal, especially male, concern.

“Give us a holding.” The language is bold. Note the absence of any polite petitionary language

⁵ Moses brought their case before יהוה.

⁶ And יהוה said to Moses, ⁷ “The plea of Zelophehad’s daughters is just: you should give them a hereditary holding among their father’s kinsmen; transfer their father’s share to them.”

⁸ “Further, speak to the Israelite people as follows: ‘If a householder dies without leaving a son,

וַיִּקְרֹב מֹשֶׁה אֶת־מִשְׁפָטִים לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: פ
וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאֹמֶר: ז בְּנֹות
צָלְפָחָד דְּבָרֶת נְתַת לָהֶם אֲחֻזָּת נְחָלָה
בְּתוּךְ אֶחָד אֲבִיהם וְהַעֲבָרָת אֶת־נְחָלָת
אֲבִיהֶן לְהֶן: ח
וְאֶל־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל תְּכַרְבֵּר לִאמֶר אִישׁ כִּיר
יָמֹת וּבָנֵן אֵין לוֹ וְהַעֲבָרָתָם אֶת־נְחָלָתוֹ

equivalent to “please.” Instead, the women use the commanding imperative “give.”

“among our father’s kinsmen.” As some rabbinic sages note, the women make clear their desire to remain connected to community and family. This statement adds moral force to their request.

THE RESULTS: THE SISTERS RECEIVE THE PROMISE OF LAND (27:5–11)

The women’s request launches a process that leads to a new law. Furthermore, this episode may reflect the historical reality that some women were inheritors of territory. A significant discovery early in the 20th century brought to light dozens of ostraca dating to the mid–8th century B.C.E. These ostraca come from Samaria, the capital of the Northern Kingdom. (Ostraca are shards of pottery inscribed with ink; they were often used for short notes or for administrative records.) Some sixty-six ostraca record the delivery of fine oil and wine, perhaps as taxes, from the surrounding towns in the territory of Manasseh to the capital. The names of two of the five daughters of Zelophehad appear in these fragments, each in three different inscriptions: Hoglah and Noah. The appearance of those names on the ostraca, together with the fact that Joshua 17:3–6 lists all five daughters as receivers of land in the northern region of Manasseh, suggests that these women were significant figures in early Israel. It is conceivable that the five sisters are among the ancestors whose names became toponyms (place names). This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that many of the other fragments from Samaria also mention other names from Joshua 17, referring to individuals who appear elsewhere as clan names as well as territory names. [Carol Meyers contributed to the discussion of these ostraca in this commentary.—Ed.]

5. Moses brought their case. This translation (like most translations of this verse) does not adequately capture the force of this sentence. What is translated as “case” is the Hebrew word mishpat, a noun that is often rendered elsewhere as “law” or “rule”; see, for example, Exodus 21:1 when it categorizes the laws given at Sinai. What must be stressed, therefore, is that their (namely, the daughters’) rule or law now goes before God.

7. “The plea of Zelophehad’s daughters is just.” God responds with emphatic approval—literally, “Rightly the daughters of Zelophehad speak.”

“give them a hereditary holding among their father’s kinsmen.” God issues two related demands. First, here God decrees that the leaders grant the women’s request. God’s language practically repeats that of the daughters, emphasizing that their petition be fulfilled in accordance with their request.

The one difference strengthens their claim: in an astonishing move, God adds that this land be given to them as “hereditary.” They not only get a holding (achuzah) but receive land that they can bestow as an inheritance on others (nachalah). The women who sought to ensure that their father’s name not be written out of history now enter history themselves by gaining a legacy of land and law.

8–11. Second, God extends this decree as a law for all generations. God issues a general law to accommodate the five daughters. What these daugh-

you shall transfer his property to his daughter.⁹ If he has no daughter, you shall assign his property to his brothers.¹⁰ If he has no brothers, you shall assign his property to his father's brothers.¹¹ If his father had no brothers, you shall assign his property to his nearest relative in his own clan, who shall inherit it.' This shall be the law of procedure for the Israelites, in accordance with the command to Moses."

¹² said to Moses, "Ascend these heights of Abarim and view the land that I have given to the Israelite people.¹³ When you have seen it, you too shall be gathered to your kin, just as your brother Aaron was.¹⁴ For, in the wilderness of Zin, when the community was contentious, you disobeyed My command to uphold My sanctity in their sight by means of the water." Those are the Waters of Meribath-kadesh, in the wilderness of Zin.

¹⁵ Moses spoke to יהוה, saying,¹⁶ "Let יהוה, Source of the breath of all flesh, appoint an envoy to the community¹⁷ who shall go out before them and come in before them, and who shall take them out and bring them in, so that יהוה's community may not be like sheep that have no shepherd."

ters request will benefit other women in the same situation. Daughters now take precedence over other family members when there are no sons. (See further at 36:11.)

Legacy of Mosaic Leadership and Authority

JOSHUA APPOINTED AS SUCCESSOR (27:12–23)

God guides Moses as he appoints a successor to lead the Israelites into the Promised Land, since Moses himself will not enter the Land. The narrative of these events resumes in Deuteronomy 31–34.

לְבָתוֹ: ⁹ וְאִם־אֵין לוֹ בַת וַיְנַתֶּן אֶת־נְחָלָתוֹ לְאָחִיו: ¹⁰ וְאִם־אֵין לוֹ אֶחָדים וַיְנַתֶּן אֶת־נְחָלָתוֹ לְאָחִיו אֲבִיו: ¹¹ וְאִם־אֵין אֶחָדים לְאָבִיו וַיְנַתֶּן אֶת־נְחָלָתוֹ לְשָׁאוֹר הַקָּרְבָּן אֱלֹהִים מִמְשֻׁפְחָתוֹ וַיַּרְשֵׁת אֶתְּנֶה וְהַיְתָה לְבָנָי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְחַקְתַּת מִשְׁפָט בְּאָשֶׁר צָוָה יְהוָה אֶת־מֹשֶׁה: פ

¹² וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה עַל־הָאָלֹהִים הָעָבָרִים הַזֹּה וְרָאָה אֶת־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר נְתַתִּי לְבָנָי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ¹³ וְرָאֵיתָה אֶתְּנֶה וְנוֹאָסְפָת אֶל־עַמִּיךְ גַּם־אָתָה בְּאָשֶׁר נָסַף אֶת־הָר֔ן אֲקִיכָה: ¹⁴ בְּאָשֶׁר מְרִיחָם פַּי בְּמִדְבָּר־צָן הַמִּימְרַיבָּת קָרְשׁ מִדְבָּר־צָן: ס

¹⁵ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶל־יְהוָה לְאָמֵר: יְפָקֵד יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵי הָרוּחוֹת לְכָל־בָּשָׂר אֲישׁ עַל־הַעֲדָה: ¹⁷ אֲשֶׁר־יֵצֵא לִפְנֵיכֶם וְאֲשֶׁר יָבֹא לִפְנֵיכֶם וְאֲשֶׁר יַוְצִיאם וְאֲשֶׁר יִבְאֶם וְלֹא תְהִיה עֲדָת יְהוָה כֶּצֶן אֲשֶׁר אִינְךָם

GOD PREPARES MOSES FOR DEATH (27:12–14)

The problematic incident at Meribah (see at Numbers 20) led God to punish Moses and Aaron for disobedience. Now God invites Moses to view the land in preparation for his impending death.

MOSES ASKS GOD TO APPOINT A SUCCESSOR (27:15–17)

The scene is filled with pathos, especially since Moses' foremost concern does not focus on his personal loss but on the fate of the people bereft of a leader.

¹⁸And יהוה answered Moses, “Single out Joshua son of Nun, an inspired deputy, and lay your hand upon him. ¹⁹Have him stand before Eleazar the priest and before the whole community, and commission him in their sight. ²⁰Invest him with some of your authority, so that the whole Israelite community may obey. ²¹But he shall present himself to Eleazar the priest, who shall on his behalf seek the decision of the Urim before יהוה. By such instruction they shall go out and by such instruction they shall come in, he and all the Israelite [militia], and the whole community.”

²²Moses did as יהוה commanded him. He took Joshua and had him stand before Eleazar the priest and before the whole community. ²³He laid his hands upon him and commissioned him—as יהוה had spoken through Moses.

28 spoke to Moses, saying: ²Command the Israelite people and say to them: Be punctilious

רְשָׁעָה: ¹⁸ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה קְח־לְكָ אֶת־יְהוָשָׁע בֶּן־נُون אִיש אֲשֶׁר־רוֹחֵב בָּזֶה וְסִמְכָת אֶת־יְדֶך עַלְיוֹ: ¹⁹ וְהַעֲמִידָת אֶת־וְלִפְנֵי אֱלֹעָזָר הַכֹּהן וְלִפְנֵי בְּלִהְעָדרָה וְצִוְתָה אֶת־וְלִיעְנִיקָם: ²⁰ וְנִגְתַּתָה מִהְוֹדָה עַל־יוּלָמָעִן יְשָׁמְעוּ בְּלִעְדָת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ²¹ וְלִפְנֵי אֱלֹעָזָר הַכֹּהן יַעֲמֹד וְשָׁאַל לְבִמְשֻׁפֵט הָאוּרִים לִפְנֵי יְהוָה עַל־בְּיוּזָאָיו וְעַל־בְּיוּזָאָיו יָבָא הֵוָא וּכְלַבְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת־וְכָל־הָעֵדָה:

²² וַיַּעֲשֶׂה מֹשֶׁה כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֶת־וְיִקְחֵת אֶת־יְהוָשָׁע וַיַּעֲמֹד הָלוּ לִפְנֵי אֱלֹעָזָר הַכֹּהן וְלִפְנֵי בְּלִהְעָדרָה: ²³ וַיִּסְמַךְ אֶת־יְהוָה עַל־יוּלָמָעִן וְיִצְוֹהוּ כַּאֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר יְהוָה בְּיַד־מֹשֶׁה: פ

כח וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאַמְرָה: ² צְוָה אֶת־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמַרְתָּ אֲלֵיכֶם אֶת־קָרְבָּנִי

GOD SELECTS JOSHUA AS SUCCESSOR (27:18–21)

Joshua is one of the only two Israelites from the adult generation of the Exodus who may enter the land. Although Joshua will be expected to lead Israel in war, the only quality that God singles out in choosing him is spiritual.

18. “lay your hand.” The practice of ordaining someone by means of laying hands is modeled on this first investiture of authority by Moses. The word s'michah (as “rabbinic ordination”) comes from the term used here for “lay.”

19. Although he emerges as Moses’ successor, Joshua nevertheless must work in partnership with the priest and consult him.

20. “Invest him.” Literally, “give of your glory to him.”

21. “decision of the Urim.” The Urim and Thummim are divination devices that priests use to consult with God (see at Exodus 28:30; Leviticus 8:8).

“By such instruction.” Literally, “by his mouth,” most likely that of Eleazar the priest.

CONCLUSION: MOSES COMMISSIONS JOSHUA (27:22–23)

The text emphasizes through repetition that Moses’ investiture of Joshua takes place in accordance with God’s instructions.

Communal Legacy for Continuing Relations with God

SACRIFICIAL OFFERINGS (28:1–30:1)

The sacrificial system entails sharing the benefits of the land with God as well as providing support for the landless priests. The prospect of the death of Moses the mediator leads to greater emin presenting to Me at stated times the offerings of food due Me, as offerings by fire of pleasing odor to Me.

³Say to them: These are the offerings by fire that you are to present to יְהוָה:

As a regular burnt offering every day, two yearling lambs without blemish. ⁴You shall offer one

לְחַמֵּי לְאֶשְׁיָה רִיחַ נִיחֹתִי תָּשִׂמְרוּ לְהַקְרִיב
לֵי בְּמָעוֹדָךְ: ³ וְאֹמֶרֶת לְהֶם זֶה הָאֲשָׁה אֲשֶׁר תִּקְרִיבָה
לִיהְוָה
בְּכָל שָׁנָה תִּמְיֻם שְׁנִים לַיּוֹם עֶלְיוֹן
תָּמִיד: ⁴ אֶת־הַפְּבָשׂ אַחֲרֵי תְּעַשָּׂה בְּבָקָר

phasis on laws that will bind God and Israel more closely together. The word “offerings,” also translated as “sacrifices,” comes from the root k-r-b, meaning “bring near.” Integral to the biblical notion of sacrifice is the understanding that offerings bring God and humanity closer. These offerings thus serve to ensure continuity of the relationship between God and Israel when Israel possesses the land. The feasts also bring Israelites together as a community.

Extensive regulations for holy occasions appear also in Leviticus 23, though some of the details vary. For this reason, the instructions in Numbers are interpreted as “additional” sacrifices or musaf. After the destruction of the Second Temple, the musaf as additional offerings was replaced by the Musaf as an additional service in the synagogue. (On sacrificial offerings, see also the introduction to parashat Vayikra, p. 569, and at Leviticus 1–7.)

Most of the sacrifices follow a similar pattern: two bulls, one ram, seven lambs, and a goat for a purgation offering. The Shabbat requires only two lambs and no other animal offerings. The Feast of Booths (or Sukkot) differs considerably. The number of sacrificial animals is much larger: fourteen lambs and two rams daily. In addition, the number of bulls changes daily, decreasing from fourteen to seven, adding up to a total of seventy bulls. Because the number seventy represents the nations of the world (see Genesis 10), the rabbinic sages concluded that these offerings include an invocation for protection of the gentile nations (Rashi and BT Sukkah 55b). Presumably women were expected to bring offerings to the shrine and to participate in at least a number of communal religious practices.

Deuteronomy 16:11 and 14 specify that women are to celebrate certain feasts with the rest of the household. Also, several biblical texts (see Leviticus 12:6 and I Samuel 1:25) as well as ancient Near Eastern depictions portray women as offering sacrifices (see at Leviticus 1:5). On women’s participation in Israelite celebrations, see also R’ehi, Another View, p. 1134; “Women in Ancient Israel—An Overview,” p. xli.

INTRODUCTION (28:1–3a)

This section specifies that Moses must announce these laws to all the Israelites, not to a select group of leaders.

LIST OF OCCASIONS AND OFFERINGS (28:3b–29:38)

The list of special occasions follows from the most common (daily offering) to the annual cycle. The order largely resembles that of Leviticus 23 (see the commentary there for details). The sequence is as follows:

- 28:3–8 Daily offerings
- 9–10 Sabbath
- 11–15 New moon—Rosh Chodesh
- 16 Passover
- 17–25 Unleavened bread
- 26–31 Feast of Weeks (Shavuot)
- 29:1–6 First of the 7th month (Rosh Hashanah)
- 7–11 Tenth of the 7th month (Yom Kippur)
- 12–34 “The Feast” (Feast of Booths, or Sukkot)
- 35–38 Solemn gathering (Sh’mini Atzeret)

lamb in the morning, and the other lamb you shall offer at twilight.⁵ And as a meal offering, there shall be a tenth of an eifah of choice flour with a quarter of a hin of beaten oil mixed in—⁶the regular burnt offering instituted at Mount Sinai—an offering by fire of pleasing odor to Yahweh.

⁷The libation with it shall be a quarter of a hin for each lamb, to be poured in the sacred precinct as an offering of fermented drink to Yahweh.⁸ The other lamb you shall offer at twilight, preparing the same meal offering and libation as in the morning—an offering by fire of pleasing odor to Yahweh.

⁹On the sabbath day: two yearling lambs without blemish, together with two-tenths of a measure of choice flour with oil mixed in as a meal offering, and with the proper libation—¹⁰a burnt offering for every sabbath, in addition to the regular burnt offering and its libation.

¹¹On your new moons you shall present a burnt offering to Yahweh: two bulls of the herd, one ram, and seven yearling lambs, without blemish.¹² As meal offering for each bull: three-tenths of a measure of choice flour with oil mixed in. As meal offering for each ram: two-tenths of a measure of choice flour with oil mixed in.¹³ As meal offering for each lamb: a tenth of a measure of fine flour with oil mixed in. Such shall be the burnt offering of pleasing odor, an offering by fire to Yahweh.¹⁴ Their libations shall be: half a hin of wine for a bull, a third of a hin for a ram, and a quarter of a hin for a lamb. That shall be

וְאֶת הַכְבֵשׂ הַשְׁנִי תַעֲשֶה בֵין הָעֲרָבִים:
⁵ וּשְׁיַרְיָת הָאֱפָה סָלַת לִמְנַחָה בְּלוֹלָה
בְשָׁמְןִ פְתִית רְבִיעַת הַהִינִ: ⁶ עַלְתִת תְּמִיד
הַעֲשֵׂיה בְּהַר סִינִי לְרִיחַ נִיחַח אֲשָׁה
לִיהוֹה:

⁷ וּנְסָפָר רְבִיעַת הַהִינִ לְכַבֵשׂ הַאַחֲר בְּקָדְשָׁ
הַסְּפָר נָסַך שְׁכָר לִיהוֹה: ⁸ וְאֶת הַכְבֵשׂ הַשְׁנִי
תַעֲשֶה בֵין הָעֲרָבִים פְמִנְחַת הַבָּקָר וּבְנְסָפָר תַעֲשֶה אֲשָׁה רִיחַ נִיחַח לִיהוֹה: פ

⁹ וּבְיוֹם הַשְׁבָת שְׁנַיִיבְכָשִׁים בְּנִי-שְׁנָה
תִמְימִם וּשְׁנַי עַשְׂרָנִים סָלַת מִנְחָה בְּלוֹלָה
בְשָׁמְןִ וּנְסָפָר: ¹⁰ עַלְתִת שְׁבָת בְּשְׁבָתוֹ עַל-

עַלְתִת הַתְּמִיד וּנְסָפָה: פ

¹¹ וּבְרָאשֵׁי חִדְשִׁיכָם תִקְרִיבוּ עַלְתִה לִיהוֹה
פְרִים בְּנִי-בָקָר שְׁנִית וְאַיִל אַחֲר בְכָשִׁים
בְנִי-שְׁנָה שְׁבָעָה תִמְימִם: ¹² וּשְׁלָשָׁה
עַשְׂרָנִים סָלַת מִנְחָה בְּלוֹלָה בְשָׁמְןִ לְפָר
הַאַחֲר וּשְׁנַי עַשְׂרָנִים סָלַת מִנְחָה בְּלוֹלָה
בְשָׁמְןִ לְאַיִל הַאַחֲר: ¹³ וּעַשְׁרַן עַשְׁרָזָן סָלַת
מִנְחָה בְּלוֹלָה בְשָׁמְןִ לְכַבֵשׂ הַאַחֲר עַלְתִה
רִיחַ נִיחַח אֲשָׁה לִיהוֹה: ¹⁴ וּנְסָפִיהם חִצְיָה
הַהִינִ יְהִי לְפָר וּשְׁלִישַׁת הַהִינִ לְאַיִל

5. eifah . . . hin. Hebrew terms for dry and liquid measures, respectively.

6. instituted at Mount Sinai. This mention that daily offering was commanded at Sinai (Exodus 29:38–42) implies that these offerings represent a daily connection to that encounter between God and Israel.

9–10. The parallel in Leviticus 23:3 prohibits work on the Sabbath but makes no reference to sacrifices. Numbers adds a doubling of daily sacrifices for the Sabbath. In traditional liturgy, this passage is incorporated into the Sabbath Amidah prayer.

11. new moons. Heb. rosh chodesh. The beginning of the month was a sacred occasion in biblical Israel. The elaborate offerings in this passage of Numbers indicate that Rosh Chodesh constituted an important event. (According to rabbinic traditions, it should have been annulled after the Temple was destroyed in 70 C.E., but the persistence of women preserved it.) With the emergence the monthly burnt offering for each new moon of the year.¹⁵ And there shall be one goat as a purgation offering to יהוה, to be offered in addition to the regular burnt offering and its libation.

¹⁶In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, there shall be a passover sacrifice to יהוה,¹⁷ and on the fifteenth day of that month a festival. Unleavened bread shall be eaten for seven days.¹⁸ The first day shall be a sacred occasion: you shall not work at your occupations.¹⁹ You shall present an offering by fire, a burnt offering, to יהוה: two bulls of the herd, one ram, and seven yearling lambs—see that they are without blemish.²⁰ The meal offering with them shall be of choice flour with oil mixed in: prepare three-tenths of a measure for a bull, two-tenths for a ram;²¹ and for each of the seven lambs prepare one-tenth of a measure.²² And there shall be one goat for a purgation offering, to make expiation in your behalf.²³ You shall present these in addition to the morning portion of the regular burnt offering.²⁴ You shall offer the like daily for seven days as food, an offering by fire of pleasing odor to יהוה; they shall be offered, with their libations, in addition to the regular burnt offering.²⁵ And the seventh day shall be a sacred occasion for you: you shall not work at your occupations.

²⁶On the day of the first fruits, your Feast of Weeks, when you bring an offering of new grain to יהוה, you shall observe a sacred occasion: you shall not work at your occupations.²⁷ You shall present a burnt offering of pleasing odor to יהוה: two bulls of the herd, one ram, seven yearling lambs.²⁸ The meal offering with them shall be of choice flour

וְרַבִּיעַת הַחֹנִין לְפָבֵשׂ יְיַעַן זֹאת עַלְתַּחַת חֶדֶשׁ בְּחֶדֶשׁוֹ לְחֶדֶשי הַשָּׁנָה: ¹⁵ וַיְשִׁעַר עֲזִים אַחֲרֵי לְחַטָּאת לִיהְוָה עַל-עַלְתַּחַת הַתְּמִיד יְעַשָּׂה וַיְנַסְּכוּ: ס

¹⁶ וּבְחֶדֶשׁ הַרְאַשׁוֹן בְּאַרְבָּעָה עַשֶּׂר יוֹם לְחֶדֶשׁ פָּסַח לִיהְוָה: ¹⁷ וּבְחַמְשָׁה עַשֶּׂר יוֹם לְחֶדֶשׁ הַזֶּה חַג שְׁבֻעַת יְמִינָה מִצּוֹת יְאַכֵּל: ¹⁸ בַּיּוֹם הַרְאַשׁוֹן מִקְרָא-קָדֵשׁ בְּלִמְלָאכָת עַבְדָה לֹא תַעֲשֶׂו: ¹⁹ וְהַקְרְבָתָם אֲשֶׁר עַלְלָה לִיהְוָה פְּרִים בְּנֵי-בָקָר שְׁנִים וְאַיִל אֶחָד וּשְׁבֻעַה כְּבָשִׂים בְּנֵי שְׁנָה תְּמִימָם יְהִיוּ לְכֶם: ²⁰ וּמְנַחָתָם סְלָת בְּלוּלָה בְּשָׁמָן שְׁלָשָׁה עַשְׂרָנִים לְפֶר וְשְׁנִי עַשְׂרָנִים לְאַיִל תַעֲשֶׂו: ²¹ עַשְׂרֹן עַשְׂרֹן תַעֲשֶׂה לְכֶבֶשׂ הָאֶחָד לְשְׁבֻעַת הַכְּבָשִׁים: ²² וְשְׁעִור חַטָּאת אַחֲרֵי לְכֶבֶר עַלְיכֶם: ²³ מִלְבָד עַלְתַּחַת הַבָּקָר אֲשֶׁר לְעַלְתַּחַת הַתְּמִיד תַעֲשֶׂו אֶת-אֱלֹהָה: ²⁴ בְּאַלְהָה תַעֲשֶׂו לַיּוֹם שְׁבֻעַת יְמִינָה לְחַמ אֲשֶׁר רִיחַ-נִיחַח לִיהְוָה עַל-עוֹלָת הַתְּמִיד יְעַשָּׂה וַיְנַסְּכוּ: ²⁵ וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעִי מִקְרָא-קָדֵשׁ יְהִי לְכֶם בְּלִמְלָאכָת עַבְדָה לֹא תַעֲשֶׂו: ס

²⁶ וּבַיּוֹם הַבְּכֹורִים בְּהַקְרִיבָתֶם מִנְחָה חֶדֶשׁ לִיהְוָה בְּשַׁבְּעַתִּיכֶם מִקְרָא-קָדֵשׁ יְהִי לְכֶם בְּלִמְלָאכָת עַבְדָה לֹא תַעֲשֶׂו: ²⁷ וְהַקְרְבָתָם עוֹלָה לְרִיחַ נִיחַח לִיהְוָה פְּרִים בְּנֵי-בָקָר שְׁנִים אַיִל אֶחָד שְׁבֻעַת כְּבָשִׂים בְּנֵי שְׁנָה: ²⁸ וּמְנַחָתָם סְלָת בְּלוּלָה

of women's movements in the 20th century, Rosh Chodesh has come to occupy a special place in women's rituals.

15. goat as a purgation offering. This is a regular atonement offering for inadvertent transgressions.

16. This verse mentions but does not describe the passover sacrifice; detailed instructions appear in Exodus 12.

26–31. day of the first fruits. The Torah refers to the third major festival also as Shavuot, or Feast of Weeks, coming seven weeks after Passover (see Deuteronomy 16:10–11).

with oil mixed in, three-tenths of a measure for a bull, two-tenths for a ram,²⁹ and one-tenth for each of the seven lambs.³⁰ And there shall be one goat for expiation in your behalf.³¹ You shall present them—see that they are without blemish—with their libations, in addition to the regular burnt offering and its meal offering.

29 In the seventh month, on the first day of the month, you shall observe a sacred occasion: you shall not work at your occupations. You shall observe it as a day when the horn is sounded.² You shall present a burnt offering of pleasing odor to יהוה: one bull of the herd, one ram, and seven yearling lambs, without blemish.³ The meal offering with them—choice flour with oil mixed in—shall be: three-tenths of a measure for a bull, two-tenths for a ram,⁴ and one-tenth for each of the seven lambs.⁵ And there shall be one goat for a purgation offering, to make expiation in your behalf—⁶in addition to the burnt offering of the new moon with its meal offering and the regular burnt offering with its meal offering, each with its libation as prescribed, offerings by fire of pleasing odor to יהוה.

7 On the tenth day of the same seventh month you shall observe a sacred occasion when you shall practice self-denial. You shall do no work.⁸ You shall present to יהוה a burnt offering of pleasing odor: one bull of the herd, one ram, seven yearling lambs; see that they are without blemish.⁹ The meal offering with them—of choice flour with oil mixed in—shall be: three-tenths of a measure for a bull, two-tenths for the one ram,¹⁰ one-tenth for each of the seven lambs.¹¹ And there shall be one goat for a purgation offering, in addition to the purgation offering of expiation and the regular burnt offering with its meal offering, each with its libation.

12 On the fifteenth day of the seventh month, you shall observe a sacred occasion: you shall not

בְּשֶׁמֶן שָׁלֶשֶׁה עֲשָׂרִים לְפָר הַאֲחֵר שְׁנִי עֲשָׂרִים לְאַיִל הַאֲחֵר: ²⁹ עֲשָׂרֹן עֲשָׂרִים לְפִבְשֵׁת הַאֲחֵר לְשֶׁבַעַת הַכְּבָשִׁים: ³⁰ שְׁעִיר עָזִים אֶחָד לְכַפֵּר עֲלֵיכֶם: ³¹ מִלְבָד עַלְתַּת הַתְּמִיד וּמִנְחָתָה תַּעֲשֶׂו תְּמִימִים יְהוָה לְכֶם וּנְסֶפִיָּהֶם: פ

כט וּבְחִדְשׁ הַשְׁבִּיעִי בְּאַחֲר לְחִדְשׁ מִקְרָא־קָדֵשׁ יְהִי לְכֶם בֶּל־מִלְאָכָת עֲבָדָה לֹא תַעֲשֶׂו יוֹם טְרוּעָה יְהִי לְכֶם: ² וּעֲשִׂינָּתָם עַלְתַּה לְרִיחַ נִיחֹן לְיהָה פָר בָּן־בָּקָר אֶחָד אַיִל אֶחָד בְּכָשִׁים בְּנִירְשָׁנָה שֶׁבַעַת תְּמִימִים: ³ וּמִנְחָתָם סְלָת בְּלוּלָה בְּשֶׁמֶן שָׁלֶשֶׁה עֲשָׂרִים לְפָר שְׁנִי עֲשָׂרִים בְּשֶׁמֶן: ⁴ וּעֲשָׂרֹן אֶחָד לְפִבְשֵׁת הַאֲחֵר לְשֶׁבַעַת הַכְּבָשִׁים: ⁵ וּשְׁעִיר־עָזִים אֶחָד חַטָּאת לְכַפֵּר עֲלֵיכֶם: ⁶ מִלְבָד עַלְתַּת הַחִדְשׁ וּמִנְחָתָה וּעַלְתַּת הַתְּמִיד וּמִנְחָתָה וּנְסֶפִיָּהֶם בְּמִשְׁפָטָם לְרִיחַ נִיחֹן אֲשָׂה לְיהָה: ס ⁷ וּבְעַשָּׂוֹר לְחִדְשׁ הַשְׁבִּיעִי הַזֶּה מִקְרָא־קָדֵשׁ יְהִי לְכֶם וּעֲנִיתָם אֶת־נְפָשָׁתֵיכֶם בֶּל־מִלְאָכָת לֹא תַעֲשֶׂו: ⁸ וְהַקְרְבָתָם עַל־לְיהָה רִיחַ נִיחֹן פָר בְּנֵי־בָקָר אֶחָד אַיִל אֶחָד בְּכָשִׁים בְּנִירְשָׁנָה שֶׁבַעַת תְּמִימִים יְהִי לְכֶם: ⁹ וּמִנְחָתָם סְלָת בְּלוּלָה בְּשֶׁמֶן הַאֲחֵר: ¹⁰ עֲשָׂרֹן עֲשָׂרִים לְפִבְשֵׁת הַאֲחֵר לְשֶׁבַעַת הַכְּבָשִׁים: ¹¹ שְׁעִיר־עָזִים אֶחָד חַטָּאת מִלְבָד חַטָּאת הַכְּפָרִים וּעַלְתַּת הַתְּמִיד וּמִנְחָתָה וּנְסֶפִיָּהֶם: ס ¹² וּבְחִמְשָׁה עָשָׂר יוֹם לְחִדְשׁ הַשְׁבִּיעִי מִקְרָא־קָדֵשׁ יְהִי לְכֶם בֶּל־מִלְאָכָת עֲבָדָה

29:12–34. The Feast of Booths receives much attention. Numbers 29 prohibits work on the first and last days, but an elaborate system of sacrifices

marks every day of the festival. (For more on Sukkot, see Deuteronomy 16:13–15.)

work at your occupations.—Seven days you shall observe a festival of Yahweh.¹³ You shall present a burnt offering, an offering by fire of pleasing odor to Yahweh: Thirteen bulls of the herd, two rams, fourteen yearling lambs; they shall be without blemish.¹⁴ The meal offerings with them—of choice flour with oil mixed in—shall be: three-tenths of a measure for each of the thirteen bulls, two-tenths for each of the two rams,¹⁵ and one-tenth for each of the fourteen lambs.¹⁶ And there shall be one goat for a purgation offering—in addition to the regular burnt offering, its meal offering and libation.

¹⁷ Second day: Twelve bulls of the herd, two rams, fourteen yearling lambs, without blemish;¹⁸ the meal offerings and libations for the bulls, rams, and lambs, in the quantities prescribed;¹⁹ and one goat for a purgation offering—in addition to the regular burnt offering, its meal offering and libations.

²⁰ Third day: Eleven bulls, two rams, fourteen yearling lambs, without blemish;²¹ the meal offerings and libations for the bulls, rams, and lambs, in the quantities prescribed;²² and one goat for a purgation offering—in addition to the regular burnt offering, its meal offering and libation.

²³ Fourth day: Ten bulls, two rams, fourteen yearling lambs, without blemish;²⁴ the meal offerings and libations for the bulls, rams, and lambs, in the quantities prescribed;²⁵ and one goat for a purgation offering—in addition to the regular burnt offering, its meal offering and libation.

²⁶ Fifth day: Nine bulls, two rams, fourteen yearling lambs, without blemish;²⁷ the meal offerings and libations for the bulls, rams, and lambs, in the quantities prescribed;²⁸ and one goat for a purgation offering—in addition to the regular burnt offering, its meal offering and libation.

לֹא תַעֲשׂו וְחִזְגַתֶם חָג לֵיהּוּ שָׁבֻעַת יְמִים:
¹³ וְהַקְרְבָתֶם עַלְה אֲשֶׁר רִיח נִיחַח לֵיהּוּ
פָרִים בְנֵי־בָקָר שֶׁלֶשׁ עֹשֶׂר אַיִלִם שְׁנִים
בְבָשָׂים בְנֵי־שְׁנִיה אֲרֵבָעָה עֹשֶׂר תְּמִימִם
וְיְהִיוּ¹⁴ וְמִנְחָתֶם סְלַת בְּלֹלֶה בְשָׂמֵן
שֶׁלֶשׁ עֹשֶׂר גִּימָנִים לְפָר הָאָחָד לְשֶׁלֶשׁ
עֹשֶׂר פָרִים שְׁנִי עֹשֶׂר גִּימָנִים לְאַיִל הָאָחָד
לְשְׁנִי הַאַיִלִם:¹⁵ וְעַשְׂרוֹן עַשְׂרוֹן לְכַבֵש
הָאָחָד לְאֲרֵבָעָה עֹשֶׂר בְבָשָׂים:¹⁶ וְשְׁעִיר־
עַזְעִים אַחֲר חֶטְאת מִלְבָד עַלְת הַתְּמִיד

מִנְחָתָה וְנִסְכָה:

¹⁷ וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁנִי פָרִים בְנֵי־בָקָר שְׁנִים עֹשֶׂר
אַיִלִם שְׁנִים בְבָשָׂים בְנֵי־שְׁנִיה אֲרֵבָעָה
עֹשֶׂר תְּמִימִם:¹⁸ וְמִנְחָתֶם וְנִסְכִיָּה לְפָרִים
לְאַיִלִם וּלְבָשָׂים בְמִסְפָּרִים כְמִשְׁפָט:
¹⁹ וְשְׁעִיר־עַזְעִים אַחֲר חֶטְאת מִלְבָד עַלְת הַתְּמִיד

הַתְּמִיד וְמִנְחָתָה וְנִסְכִיָּה:

²⁰ וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁלִישִׁי פָרִים עַשְׁתִי־עֹשֶׂר אַיִלִם
שְׁנִים בְבָשָׂים בְנֵי־שְׁנִיה אֲרֵבָעָה עֹשֶׂר
תְּמִימִם:²¹ וְמִנְחָתֶם וְנִסְכִיָּה לְפָרִים
לְאַיִלִם וּלְבָשָׂים בְמִסְפָּרִים כְמִשְׁפָט:
²² וְשְׁעִיר חֶטְאת אַחֲר מִלְבָד עַלְת הַתְּמִיד
וְמִנְחָתָה וְנִסְכָה:

²³ וּבַיּוֹם הַרְבִיִּיעַיִלְיִ פָרִים עַשְׂרָה אַיִלִם שְׁנִים
בְבָשָׂים בְנֵי־שְׁנִיה אֲרֵבָעָה עֹשֶׂר תְּמִימִם:
²⁴ מִנְחָתֶם וְנִסְכִיָּה לְפָרִים לְאַיִלִם
וּלְבָשָׂים בְמִסְפָּרִים כְמִשְׁפָט:²⁵ וְשְׁעִיר
עַזְעִים אַחֲר חֶטְאת מִלְבָד עַלְת הַתְּמִיד

מִנְחָתָה וְנִסְכָה:

²⁶ וּבַיּוֹם הַחַמִינִיעַי פָרִים תְשֵׁעה אַיִלִם
שְׁנִים בְבָשָׂים בְנֵי־שְׁנִיה אֲרֵבָעָה עֹשֶׂר
תְּמִימִם:²⁷ וְמִנְחָתֶם וְנִסְכִיָּה לְפָרִים
לְאַיִלִם וּלְבָשָׂים בְמִסְפָּרִים כְמִשְׁפָט:
²⁸ וְשְׁעִיר חֶטְאת אַחֲר מִלְבָד עַלְת הַתְּמִיד
וְמִנְחָתָה וְנִסְכָה:

²⁹Sixth day: Eight bulls, two rams, fourteen yearling lambs, without blemish; ³⁰the meal offerings and libations for the bulls, rams, and lambs, in the quantities prescribed; ³¹and one goat for a purgation offering—in addition to the regular burnt offering, its meal offering and libations.

³²Seventh day: Seven bulls, two rams, fourteen yearling lambs, without blemish; ³³the meal offerings and libations for the bulls, rams, and lambs, in the quantities prescribed; ³⁴and one goat for a purgation offering—in addition to the regular burnt offering, its meal offering and libation.

³⁵On the eighth day you shall hold a solemn gathering; you shall not work at your occupations.

³⁶You shall present a burnt offering, an offering by fire of pleasing odor to יהוה; one bull, one ram, seven yearling lambs, without blemish; ³⁷the meal offerings and libations for the bull, the ram, and the lambs, in the quantities prescribed; ³⁸and one goat for a purgation offering—in addition to the regular burnt offering, its meal offering and libation.

³⁹All these you shall offer to יהוה at the stated times, in addition to your votive and freewill offerings, be they burnt offerings, meal offerings, libations, or offerings of well-being. 30 So Moses spoke to the Israelites just as had commanded Moses.

35. The Feast of Booths (Sukkot) lasts seven days but the eighth day is appended to it as a separate holy day.

39. votive. The word can be rendered as “vows.” On women’s vows, see especially at 30:4–17.

²⁹ וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעִי פָרִים שֶׁמְנָה אַיִלִם שְׁנִים בְבָשִׂים בְנֵי-שְׁנָה אֶרֶבֶעָה עֲשָׂר תְּמִימִם: ³⁰ וּמְנַחָתָם וּנְסֶכֶתָם לְפָרִים לְאַיִלִם וּלְבָשִׂים בְמִסְפָּרִים בְמִשְׁפָט: ³¹ וּשְׁעִיר חֶטְאת אֶחָד מִלְבָד עַלְתָה הַתְּמִיד מְנַחָתָה וּנְסֶכֶתָה: ס

³² וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעִי פָרִים שֶׁבָעָה אַיִלִם שְׁנִים בְבָשִׂים בְנֵי-שְׁנָה אֶרֶבֶעָה עֲשָׂר תְּמִימִם: ³³ וּמְנַחָתָם וּנְסֶכֶתָם לְפָרִים לְאַיִלִם וּלְבָשִׂים בְמִסְפָּרִים בְמִשְׁפָטִים: ³⁴ וּשְׁעִיר חֶטְאת אֶחָד מִלְבָד עַלְתָה הַתְּמִיד מְנַחָתָה וּנְסֶכֶתָה: ס

³⁵ בַיּוֹם הַשְׁמִינִי עֲצָרָת תָהִיה לְכֶם כָל-מְלָאכָת עֲבֹדָה לֹא תַעֲשׂו: ³⁶ וְהַקְרְבָתָם עַלְלָה אֲשֶה רִיחָן יְהֻנָה פָר אֶחָד אַיִל אֶחָד בְבָשִׂים בְנֵי-שְׁנָה שֶׁבָעָה תְּמִימִם: ³⁷ מְנַחָתָם וּנְסֶכֶתָם לְפָר לְאַיִל וּלְבָשִׂים בְמִסְפָּרִים בְמִשְׁפָט: ³⁸ וּשְׁעִיר חֶטְאת אֶחָד מִלְבָד עַלְתָה הַתְּמִיד וּמְנַחָתָה וּנְסֶכֶתָה: ס

³⁹ אֱלֹהָה תַעֲשֹׂו לִיהְוָה בְמַעֲדֵיכֶם לְבָד מְנֻדְרֵיכֶם וּנְדַבְתֵיכֶם לְעַלְתֵיכֶם וּלְמְנַחָתֵיכֶם וּלְנְסֶכֶתֵיכֶם וּלְשִׁלְמֵיכֶם: ל וַיֹאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶל-בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְכָל אֲשֶר-צָוָה יְהֻנָה אֶת-מִשְׁתָה: פ

CONCLUSION (29:39–30:1)

The conclusion affirms that Moses faithfully transmitted all that God commanded, and that the preceding instructions were indeed God’s own words for Israel.

—Tamara Cohn Eskenazi

Another View

THIS PARASHAH STARTS in a significant place: in the aftermath of the momentous events at Peor. One would think that the reward of Phinehas should have concluded the last parashah instead of starting a new one. But this new parashah is about the future; specifically, changes God makes for the future, changes that affect the priesthood, the government, and the women of Israel.

Concerning Phinehas. A more literal translation of v. 11 may make it easier to understand why Phinehas is rewarded for his violent act. Phinehas “was zealous for פָּנָא’s zeal.” Kinah (“zeal” or “jealousy”) is the furious sense of righteous indignation that one may feel when one has been betrayed by someone who owed one allegiance and fidelity.

A husband may feel “a fit of jealousy” (5:14), and Israel is warned many times that God is a “jealous God” (Exodus 20:5; 34:14; Deuteronomy 4:24; 5:9; Joshua 24:19) and that this “jealousy” may make God utterly destroy Israel if they abandon God (Deuteronomy 6:14–15). Now God’s wrath has been kindled and a plague is raging within the Israelite camp when Phinehas steps in to prevent God from wiping out all of Israel. Like Elijah, who is also “zealous for פָּנָא” (I Kings 19:10), Phinehas empathizes with God’s rage and acts it out. He acts with violence to stop violence, like setting a backfire to stop a wildfire.

Phinehas’s action works. But in the new world that this parashah is setting up, God does not want to perpetuate the cycle of violence. And so, even in the act of rewarding Phinehas, God establishes a new order by granting him a “covenant of peace” (shalom, not “friendship”) in 25:12. The eternal priesthood will create peace and reconciliation, not by killing evildoers but by the sacrificial system. Their violence is limited to killing an animal—the bloodshed confined to dashing the blood on the altar. Once again, a careful translation brings out the meaning: “he and his seed will have a covenant of eternal priesthood because he was zealous for his God, and he will make atonement for the Children of Israel” (25:13).

Phinehas has been much discussed in our tradition. Psalm 106:30 states only that Phinehas stood in prayer and thus stopped the plague. During the Maccabean period, Phinehas was the model for Mattathias, who also acted with zeal for God (I Maccabees 2:26, 50–64). Eventually, the Rabbis became uncomfortable with the idea of people taking the law into their own hands, and they transformed even the image of Phinehas into a calm presenter of legal argument. In their assessment of this parashah, although recognizing Phinehas’s pure motives, they frame his act as part of the past—never to be repeated—but rather to be replaced by the ordinary actions of priests.

This new parashah is about the future.

In this parashah the priests figure also in the new role for the leader. Moses appoints Joshua his successor, but with a difference: Joshua will not have all of Moses’ powers. Instead, Joshua is a temporal ruler, neither priest nor prophet. But the priests, using the Urim and Thummim, will channel God’s commands (27:21).

Concerning the Daughters of Zelophehad. Part of this new world order involves the right of brotherless women to inherit their father’s land. This decision is similar to the ancient Greek rule of the epi-klara, who also inherits her father’s land and must marry her kin. Often we assume that this makes the women just a “place marker,” holding the empty place in the paternal succession; but the story of the Shunammite in

PINCHAS

II Kings 4 and 8 shows how important it is to a woman to hold land. The wealthy Shunammite becomes the prophet Elisha's benefactor; when he offers a reward, she responds, "I live among my own kin" (II Kings 4:13). Unusually, she has not left her kin to live with her husband's family. Alone among the childless women of the Bible, she is not actively seeking a child. (However, once she gives birth, she is fiercely protective of her son.) Later, Elisha warns her of famine; she leaves the land and returns seven years later to petition the king to give her back her property. She comes to cry for "her land and her field," and the king instructs, "Return to her all that is hers." In a comparable situation elsewhere in the Bible, the land Naomi seeks to sell is carefully called "the portion of field that belonged to our brother Elimelech" (Ruth 4:3), and the property is called "all that was Elimelech's" (Ruth 4:8). The fact that the Shunammite's land is hers and that she lives among her people suggests that she is a latter-day daughter of Zelophehad: she lives among her own kin, and her land belongs to her. And what a difference this makes: she is independent in her actions and not worried about her lack of children. The economic security of owning her own land gives her independence from her husband; she neither asks his permission to be Elisha's patron nor to seek the prophet as a client. The Shunammite may be an example of how women act when the economic constraints of patriarchy are removed. This is why she is identified by place rather than by name or as "Mrs. Somebody." Shunem is her village—the village of her father's household and the village where she lives as an adult woman, the locale of the land that she owns. She is a woman of place and—by contrast—she shows how significant the lack of such place is to most women's history.

The limitation of women's property rights is the economic linchpin of patriarchal structure. The basic fact that women did not normally own land in ancient Israel made them economically dependent on men—first on their fathers, then on their husbands, and ultimately on their sons. But the daughters of Zelophehad—and the rule that they initiated—let some women escape this dependence. —Tikva Frymer-Kensky

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

Cozbi daughter of Zur; he was the tribal head of an ancestral house in Midian (25:15).

As related at the end of the last parashah, Phinehas the priest killed Cozbi and her Israelite lover, Zimri, at Shittim (25:6–9). Some traditions portray the highly born Cozbi as the innocent victim of her father's hatred for Israel. According to Midrash B'midbar Rabbah 21.3, Zur was so eager to ensnare the Israelites in sin (Numbers 25:1–5) that he sacrificed his own daughter, a princess, to harlotry. B'midbar Rabbah 20.24 relates that Zur had instructed Cozbi to have relations with no one but Moses, but Zimri convinced her that he was even higher in rank.

BT Sanhedrin 82a, discussing consequences for men who have sexual relations with non-Jewish women, denigrates Cozbi, a reflection of the considerable sexual anxiety the Rabbis harbored about the attractions of foreign women. Cozbi's name is linked to kazav, the Hebrew word for "falsehood," and she is castigated in the coarsest terms as a common prostitute.

This passage about Cozbi also reveals the serious problems raised for rabbinic commentators by Moses' passivity in the face of the events at Shittim and by Phinehas's extreme zealotry. The Rabbis explain that Zimri justified his relationship with Cozbi to Moses and the elders of Israel on the grounds that Moses had also taken a foreign consort, the Midianite Zipporah. Moses was rendered speechless by this challenge, and his great-nephew, the fervent Phinehas, had to remind him of the prohibition against cohabitation with foreign women, a law that Moses himself had taught the people when he descended from Mount Sinai. B'midbar Rabbah 20.24 describes how Moses' failure to act at this moment of crisis demoralized all the Israelites except Phinehas and concludes that it was in punishment for this public weakness that Moses was buried in an unknown location. The passage concludes, "This serves to teach you that we must each be as fierce as a leopard, swift as an eagle, fleet as a hart, and strong as a lion in the performance of our Maker's will."

The name of Asher's daughter was Serah (26:46). This statement in the tribal genealogies of Numbers 26 is startling because Serah bat Asher was also mentioned among the seventy family members who accompanied Jacob to Egypt several centuries earlier (Genesis 46:17). The Rabbis transform Serah into the longest-lived individual in midrashic literature and praise her for her wisdom. They attribute her remarkable longevity to the potent blessing that her grandfather Jacob was said to have given her after she informed him through music that Joseph was still alive. BT Sotah 13a relates that it was Serah who later showed Moses where Joseph was buried at the time of the Exodus so that his coffin might be returned to the land of Israel. Midrash B'reishit Rabbah 94.9 identifies her also with the clever woman who negotiated on behalf of her city with David's general Joab (II Samuel 20:16–22). And Midrash P'sikta D'Rav Kahana 11:13 even imagines the venerable Serah resolving rabbinic disputes about events that she witnessed in biblical times. In medieval writings, Serah is among the nine human beings who are said to have entered heaven alive; according to the Zohar (3:167b), she lives in a heavenly palace and teaches Torah.

The daughters of Zelophehad . . . came forward (27:1). The Rabbis taught: "When the daughters of Zelophehad heard that the land of Israel was being apportioned among the males of the tribes but not the females, they consulted together as to how to make their claim. They said: 'The compassion of God is not like human compassion. Human rulers are more concerned with males than with females—but the One who spoke and brought the world into being is not like that. Rather, God shows mercy to every living thing, as Scripture says, Who gives food to all flesh / Whose steadfast love is eternal (Psalm 136:25), and The Sovereign is good to all / God's mercy is upon all God's works (Psalm 145:9)." This rabbinic midrash from Sifrei B'midbar 133 represents the daughters of Zelophehad as canny and competent women who trusted that divine mercy would transcend the mutable norms of a human society in which women were subordinate beings. According to the Rabbis, these admirable sisters epitomized the females of the wilderness generation who consistently outshone their male contemporaries in their faith in God and their personal courage. B'midbar Rabbah 21.10 relates that women refused to participate in making the Golden Calf; they also rejected the disheartening counsel of the scouts who warned of the dangers of invading Canaan. Similarly, the daughters of Zelophehad are understood to have demonstrated their complete confidence in the ultimate fulfillment of the divine promise when they petition Moses to secure their inheritance in the land of Israel.

By expanding the Torah, these women earned merit for themselves and for their forebears.

BT Bava Batra 119b praises the daughters of Zelophehad in three ways: as intelligent women, since they spoke at an opportune moment; as scriptural exegetes knowledgeable in Jewish law, since they were aware of the legal issues involved in their situation; and as sexually chaste, since they did not marry until their inheritance status was resolved, despite their advanced ages. The rabbinic sages awarded the daughters of Zelophehad this exalted standing among biblical women because they prompted Moses to seek divine help in clarifying the laws of succession of property. Nor did it hurt that God supported the sisters' claim. According to B'midbar Rabbah 21.11, by expanding the Torah these women earned merit for themselves and for their forebears listed in 27:1—including Joseph, the founder of their tribe. So pious and self-sacrificing were these women that they are said to have humbled Moses himself.

PINCHAS

The Rabbis, who sought meaning in every detail of the biblical text, noticed that the order in which the five daughters are named is not always the same. Sifrei B'midbar 133 says that this inconsistency is meant to show that all the women were equal in good qualities. BT Bava Batra 120a speculates that 27:1, where the daughters seek their inheritance, names them according to their wisdom, while 36:10, which describes their marriages, lists them by age—since age takes precedence at a festive gathering.

—Judith R. Baskin

Contemporary Reflection

THE STORY IN parashat Pinchas about Zelophehad's five daughters—Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah (Numbers 27:1–11)—encapsulates the challenges that women faced and what they had to do in order to affirm their rights with dignity. Numbers 26 describes a census taken of all males over the age of 20 (v. 2). As part of the list of the various clans, we read that "Zelophehad... had no sons, only daughters" (v. 33). As the census was concluded, God instructs Moses: "Among these shall the land be apportioned as shares" (v. 33). "Among these" refers to the males listed in the census; hence, we can conclude that Zelophehad's daughters were not counted in the census and also were not to receive any land as inheritance.

We might expect that women, heirs to Egyptian slavery and then put under law that frequently favors men, might react by keeping silent, by accepting as natural the rule decreed for them to follow. We might expect women in those days to stay close to their tents, remain out of sight, and not go far from their families. So how and why did Zelophehad's daughters write a new chapter in history? First, they dared to "go out" from their living place, from their social space, from the destiny imposed on them. The text states:

"The daughters of Zelophehad... came forward. The names of the daughters were Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah. They stood before Moses, Eleazar the priest, the chieftains, and the whole assembly, at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting" (27:1–2).

Let's imagine the scene: the Israelite camp is formed of tribes, each of whom has a determined place, with Zelophehad's daughters call to us to take hold of life with our own hands.

the Tabernacle in the middle; and in the center stand the main authority figures, all of them men: Moses, the priest Eleazar, and the chieftains. Imposing as this structure may have been, the five sisters decide to claim their rights. Together, they go out of their tents, without being called by anyone, to the place where only the high-ranking men congregate, to the place where the Tablets from Sinai rest in the Ark, to the place of holiness and authority, to a place where women did not have authority. These men must have been overwhelmed when they saw such a startling, unprecedented situation!

But this is not all that the five sisters do. They not only come forth, but also they speak with determination: “Our father died in the wilderness. He was not one of the faction, Korah’s faction, which banded together against הוּא, but died for his own sin; and he has left no sons. Let not our father’s name be lost to his clan just because he had no son! Give us a holding among our father’s kinsmen!” (Numbers 27:3–4). Let’s analyze what this text reflects about these women. First, note that these women know their law and history. They use the fact that their father was not involved in Korah’s rebellion (Numbers 16) as evidence to support his—and their—claim to the land. They know that the continuity of family name depends on inheritance of the land; and they realize that the current law is not adequate, for it does not take into account the unusual circumstances of a man without sons. They possess the acumen to recognize this omission—in God’s law! But because they consider God’s law to be just, or to aim to be just, they show no hesitation in pointing out the unfair nature of the present situation with complete confidence and supporting their claim with compelling arguments.

How does Moses react? The following verse states: “Moses brought their case before הוּא” (27:5). Moses discloses his inability to assess the claims of these sisters. He takes the case to God, who responds by unequivocally supporting the sisters’ demand and even by promulgating a new and permanent law to secure inheritance for any daughters in such circumstances (27:6–8). Thus, the sisters’ claim leads to the law of inheritance’s being changed forever.

As stated above, a key to the sisters’ success is their full awareness of God’s laws and the people’s history and story. They insist on change by engaging Israelite traditions effectively, something the rabbinic sages recognized when they described the women. According to the Talmud (BT Bava Batra 119b), Zelophehad’s daughters were wise (chachamot), astute interpreters (darshanyot), and pious (rachmanyot): “wise” because they spoke in the precise moment when the decision was issued; “interpreters” because they in essence said, “If our father had a son, we would not have spoken—because he would have the inheritance”; and “pious” because they did not want to marry men who were not worthy.

The achievement of Zelophehad’s daughters was a landmark in women’s rights regarding the inheritance of land, from those days up to now. In addition, however, the story of these five women offers a compelling lesson for all those who believe that their destiny is fixed or that divine justice has abandoned them. It encourages us to think differently—and provides a message of hope for all those faced with obstacles.

Perhaps the most important legacy of Zelophehad’s daughters is their call to us to take hold of life with our own hands, to move from the place that the others have given us—or that we have decided to keep because we feel immobile—and to walk, even to the most holy center, to where nobody seems to be able to go. After all, nothing is more sacred than life itself and the fight for what we believe is worthy. Thus, this parashah inspires us to discover that we too have the ability to know what is right for ourselves and what our rights ought to be. When we believe in our capacity to shape our history, to the point of being able to change even a law that came from the Revelation at Sinai, then we pay a tribute to Zelophehad’s daughters.

In our era, we can see this legacy in women such as Judith Eisenstein, who was the first to become a bat mitzvah in 1922, and in the first women ordained as rabbis: Regina Jonas (in 1935), Sally Priesand (Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1973), Sandy Sasso (Reconstructionist Rabbinical College in 1974), and Amy Eilberg (Jewish Theological Seminary in 1985). Like Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah, they and the many other courageous women who followed in their footsteps came forth and opened the future for all women seeking to reclaim their Jewish inheritance in new and powerful ways.

—Silvina Chemen

Voices

For My Daughter on Her Twenty-First Birthday

Ellen Bass

Numbers 26:33; 27:1-II

When they laid you in the crook of my arms like a bouquet and I looked into your eyes, dark bits of evening sky,
I thought, of course this is you,
like a person who has never seen the sea can recognize it instantly.

They pulled you from me like a cork and all the love flowed out. I adored you with the squandering passion of spring that shoots green from every pore.

You dug me out like a well. You lit the deadwood of my heart. You pinned me to the earth with the points of stars.

I was sure that kind of love would be enough. I thought I was your mother.
How could I have known that over and over you would crack the sky like lightning, illuminating all my fears, my weaknesses,
my sins.

Massive the burden this flesh must learn to bear, like mules of love.

from Look There

Agi Mishol

Numbers 26:33, 27:3

The ceremony was modest.
A government clerk handed me your final papers. You who never graduated anything were suddenly entitled to a lovely death certificate
with the symbol of the state as if you had mastered something and fulfilled all the requirements.

She asked me if I wanted to update (that's what she said) father's death certificate.
Then she placed them side by side like a pair of matching gravestones and pressed the electric buzzer.

I went down to the street walking like a little girl
holding the hands of paper parents
flapping in the wind.

I Know About the Woman Who Sits and Waits

Judith Rose

Numbers 26:33; 27:1–11

I know about the woman
 who sits and waits
 who sits and waits for her life
 to begin:

I know about the young girl who sits with her mother
 who sits and waits
 for her father
 to come

I know about the young woman who sits and waits
 who sits and waits
 for her lover
 to come

I know about the woman who sits and waits
 who sits and waits
 for her husband
 to come

I know about the woman who sits and waits
 who sits and waits
 for someone / something
 to come

I know about the woman who sits and waits who passes the waiting onto her daughter

I know about the daughter who sits and frets who frets about more than time misplaced

I know about the daughter longing for change
 who can/ no longer/ sit and wait

I know about the daughter longing for change who gives her Self the gift of meaning full spaces

I know about the daughter longing for change
 who hopes for her daughter not to sit and wait

מַתּוֹת ◆ Matot

NUMBERS 30:2–32:42

Vows and Vengeance

MARASHAT MATOT (“tribes”) presents final preparations for entering into the Promised Land and offers further guidelines to the Israelites for practices once they settle in the land. As the Israelites camp in the plains of Moab, their final stop before entering the land, God instructs Moses on matters that relate to the internal workings of the Israelite community and also to the community’s relationship with its neighbors.

The parashah first supplements earlier laws about vows (Leviticus 27; Numbers 6), then picks up the story about the incident at Baal-peor, where Israelite men sinned by succumbing to idolatry (Numbers 25). In that earlier account at Baal-peor, the priest Phinehas appeased God’s wrath by killing two chief offenders, an Israelite man and a Midianite woman. In this parashah, God demands that the Israelites fight against the Midianites and thereby avenge that earlier wrong.

After the successful war against the Midianites, two tribes request to remain east of the Jordan. Moses resolves this potential split among the tribes by granting the request on the condition that the fighting men from these tribes will cross the Jordan with the rest of the tribes while their families settle down in the eastern region, as requested.

Women are prominent in the discussions of both vows and the war against the Midianites. In the first case, the text delineates the rights of women who make vows (30:2–17). These instructions shed important light on the status of women within the family and illustrate the circumstances under which the male head of the household can overrule decisions made by the women within the household. At the same time, these detailed laws indicate that women could make independent vows to God and, under normal circumstances, would be held accountable for fulfilling them.

Women are prominent in the discussions both of vows and of the Midianite war.

The subsequent section on war against the Midianites (31:1–12) focuses on Midianite women as the chief culprits in Israel’s earlier transgressions at Baal-peor (25:1–18). The structure of the parashah thus indirectly contrasts the Israelite women (who turn to God) with the foreign “perverse” women of Midian (who turn Israelite men away from God).

Finally, the mention of the “water of lustration” (mei niddah) in 31:23, the mixture that the warriors use to purify themselves after the battle, suggests a connection to women, since the word niddah is also used for menstruation or a menstruant (see at Leviticus 15:19–30).

—Elizabeth Goldstein

Outline—

I. INTERNAL LIFE OF THE ISRAELITES

Instructions Regarding Vows and Oaths (30:2–17)

- A. Introduction (v. 2)
- B. A man's vows and oaths (v. 3)
- C. A woman's vows and oaths (vv. 4–17)
 - 1. A woman's vow or oath uttered in her father's house (vv. 4–6)
 - 2. A married woman's vow or oath (vv. 7–9)
 - 3. A widow's or a divorced woman's vow or oath (v. 10)
 - 4. Further discussion of a married woman's vow or oath (vv. 11–17)

II. EXTERNAL RELATIONSHIPS

Revenge against the Midianites (31:1–54)

- A. The war against the Midianites (vv. 1–12)
- B. Specific revenge against Midianite women (vv. 13–18)
- C. Aftermath: purification rituals and distribution of spoils (vv. 19–54)

III. NEGOTIATING SETTLEMENTS

Provisions for Tribal Territory East of the Jordan (32:1–42)

30:2

Moses spoke to the heads of the Israelite tribes, saying: This is what יְהוָה has commanded:
³If a householder makes a vow to יְהוָה or takes ל

 2 וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֲלֵךְ אֲשֶׁר הַמִּطּוֹת לְבָנַי
 יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאָמֵר זֶה הַדָּבָר אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה
 יְהוָה:
 3 אִישׁ פְּרִידָר נְדֵר לִיהְיוֹה אֲוֹהֶשֶׁבָע

Internal Life of the Israelites

INSTRUCTIONS REGARDING VOWS AND OATHS (30:2–17)

The instructions in this unit regarding vows focus primarily on women, unlike those that appear earlier, in Leviticus 27 and Numbers 6. Those biblical laws listed monetary valuation for the sanctuary in cases of vows (see at Leviticus 27) and delineated regulations for the vow of the nazirites, those women and men who dedicate themselves to God in specific ways (see at Numbers 6). Here the regulations pertain to the extent to which women are responsible for fulfilling their vows and oaths.

Scholars debate whether the legal scenarios depicted in this unit were ever applied before exile (587 B.C.E.), or whether they are the product of the later Persian period (539–330 B.C.E.). Either way, the parashah provides important information about the lives of women in ancient Israel, or at least on how women's lives and practices were understood by the authors or editors of the text.

In the Bible, the noun neder ("vow") denotes a promise to dedicate something to God only if and when the supplicant's request is fulfilled. Such conditional pledges are attested also in other ancient Near Eastern cultures, including Egypt, Mesopotamia, and Ugarit (a kingdom situated on the coast of what is now Lebanon during the 14th–12th centuries B.C.E.). All vows and oaths are sworn or taken in God's name.

INTRODUCTION (30:2)

Moses prepares the Israelites by instructing the leaders. The word matot, translated here as "tribes" also means "staffs" and stands for a person's authority. In Genesis 38, when Judah negotiates with Tamar for her sexual favors, she demands—and receives—Judah's staff as a guarantee (see Genesis 38:18).

A MAN'S VOWS AND OATHS (30:3)

The discussion of men's vows is very brief, stressing that a male householder—or a man in general, according to most interpreters—is not to go back on his word when he utters a vow to God. The story about Jephthah in Judges 11 illustrates the seriousness with which vows were regarded. Judges tells of a warrior named Jephthah who vows to sacrifice whoever or

- This parashah's laws invite us to reflect on the (in)famous story of Jephthah's daughter.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 1006

- A husband should divorce his wife rather than make vows that cause her discomfort.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 1006

- When we women give up our aspirations because of external pressures, we pay a price.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 1008

- All vows are cancelled now, / all words undone like chains / that snap....

VOICES ► 1010

an oath imposing an obligation on himself, he shall not break his pledge; he must carry out all that has crossed his lips.

⁴If a woman makes a vow to יהוה or assumes an

שְׁבֻעָה לְאָסֶר אַסֶּר עַל־נִפְשׁוֹ לֹא יְחַל דְּבָרָיו¹
בְּכָל־הַיּוֹצֵא מִפְיוֹ יִعַשְׂה:²
³ וְאִשָּׁה כִּי-תְדַר נֶדֶר לְיהָוָה וְאִסְרָה אַסֶּר

whatever first comes out from his house should he win a battle (Judges 11:30–31). Tragically, his only child—a daughter—comes out to meet him and thus becomes the promised victim. The daughter, whose name is never revealed, willingly capitulates to her father’s obligation to fulfill his vow. She only requests two months with her women companions in order to lament the fact that she will die a virgin. Judges then reports that after her death, “it became a custom in Israel for the maidens of Israel to go every year, for four days in the year, and chant dirges for the daughter of Jephthah” (Judges 11:39–40). (See also Another View, p. 1006.)

3. a vow to יהוה. People typically make vows in times of great distress, as when ill or infertile. A vow can be made in private and does not need to be witnessed by a priest or a similar functionary, but apparently it is to be uttered aloud. Thus in I Samuel 1, when Hannah makes a vow in the presence of a priest, she does not need him to officiate or approve (I Samuel 1:9–14).

an oath. Two kinds of oaths exist in the Bible. First, an oath can establish innocence if a person has been charged with a crime. See, for example, the oath of the woman accused of adultery (in rabbinic parlance, a sotah) in Numbers 5:20–25. The second kind of oath, like the vow, is a binding promise to another party, as in the context of a covenant, with at least one member of the party invoking God (Baruch Levine, Numbers 21–36, 2000, p. 428).

he shall not break his pledge. Deuteronomy 23:22 specifies that a person sins if she or he does not make good on a promised pledge.

A WOMAN’S VOWS AND OATHS (30:4–17)

Although we do not know how common it was for women to make vows or oaths, or what these typically entailed, the laws in this parashah establish, at the very least, that the biblical writers assumed that women were making vows and oaths, and that these situations required legal attention on the part of the writer. The discussion of vows in Numbers 29:39 already implicitly includes women. In this parashah, however, women’s vows constitute a major subject. The chief concern seems to be to regulate the impact that a woman’s vow might have upon the household (which is represented by the male head of the household: her father or husband). Vows and oaths grant women a sphere in which they can articulate certain needs and have them met (consider Hannah wishing for a son and promising that son to God, irrespective of her husband’s views on the matter, I Samuel 1). The laws perhaps indicate men’s concern that the vow of a woman in their household could lead to a destabilizing loss of property. As we will see, however, the power of some women to make vows or oaths is not cut off. Rather, male heads of households are given veto power in certain situations. Widows and divorcées are free from such constraints.

A Woman’s Vow or Oath Uttered in Her Father’s House (30:4–6)

The first discussion of women and vows or oaths establishes the parameters of authority for women still in their father’s household. The woman is not described as a child. Nonetheless, under certain conditions, her father can annul her vows and oaths. The text does not indicate the kinds of vows and oaths that women might have made or the kinds of materials they might have promised. In this passage, the lawmakers seem to accommodate both benevolent and anxious fathers, so a father is allowed to annul his daughter’s vow or oath under certain conditions.

obligation while still in her father's household by reason of her youth,⁵ and her father learns of her

בְּבַיִת אָבִיה בְּנָעֲרִיה: ⁵ וְשָׁמַע אָבִיה אֶת־
נְדָרָה וְאָסְרָה אֲשֶׁר אָסְרָה עַל־נְפָשָׁה

4. If a woman makes a vow. The Bible does not limit the kind of property that can be vowed, and it mentions several women who make vows. We deduce from such sources that vows included a wide variety of promised offerings. For example, Hannah vows to dedicate to the sanctuary the son whom she hopes to bear (I Samuel 1:11). Women can dedicate themselves as nazirites (Numbers 6:2). And in Proverbs 7:10–21, a married woman reports that she has fulfilled her vow by making a payment (7:14). The nature of Proverbs as wisdom literature makes it difficult to assess its value as reflecting ancient practices. Jacques Berlinerblau argues that the polemical purpose of the story in Proverbs is to warn men against seductive women, which makes the text an unreliable source for the lives of real women (The Vow and the “Popular Religious Groups” of Ancient Israel: A Philological and Sociological Inquiry, 1996, pp. 141–3). Nevertheless, the story suggests that readers are expected to find it credible that a married woman could make independent vows.

assumes an obligation. [The Hebrew actually refers to prohibiting something to oneself, that is abstaining from something. This expression, like “vow,” appears in every single verse from vv. 3–15. Together, the terms treat obligations that are positive (to do something) and negative (to not do something), both types operating under the same rules. Unlike the vows that pledge to give something to God (or the sanctuary) should one’s request be fulfilled, the prohibition means denying something to oneself (possibly only for a stated period of time), like nazirite vows, which are largely about abstaining from certain foods. In her book Holy Feast and Holy Fast: The Religious Significance of Food to Medieval Women (1988), Carolyn Bynum illustrates how women, under the rubrics of piety, used food not merely for self-control but for control of circumstances. She also argues that through self-imposed food practices women managed to develop their own practices and social roles. It is conceivable that such considerations are at work with the preoccupation with women’s vows and self-denials here. Other areas where self-denial may operate might concern specific household responsibilities, privileges, and marital relationships. In all these arenas, women who undertake an oath to forego certain things have an impact on the household in general and the authority of men in particular. This may account for the lengthy discussion of women’s vows. —Ed.]

while still in her father’s household. That is, she is unmarried and most likely does not own property. By implication, anything she offers as a pledge belongs to the household, not to her, including a measure of control of her sexuality. A father typically sets the terms of his daughter’s marriage, including the required bridal gift, and he may subject her to debt-slavery (see at Exodus 21:7–11). This verse shows that a vow is not contingent on a person’s legal right to own property. A woman, even one who is young and unmarried, can still utter binding vows and oaths; she does not require her father’s consent. However, he has the option of annulling the vow under certain conditions. This law affirms a woman’s practice. In addition, there may be a practical, economic consideration: the priestly authors of this text, or their descendants, most likely would benefit from additional sanctuary dedications collected from women’s vows.

by reason of her youth. We are not privy to the woman’s exact age. She could be on the cusp of eligibility for marriage or of marriageable age. We might expect that this woman is either a little younger or a little older than 12. The use of the term “woman” rather than “girl” or “daughter” suggests that the vows of children are not valid. The law does not explicitly account for an unmarried woman who is neither “youthful,” widowed, nor divorced.

vow or her self-imposed obligation and offers no objection, all her vows shall stand and every self-imposed obligation shall stand. ⁶But if her father restrains her on the day he finds out, none of her vows or self-imposed obligations shall stand; and יהוה will forgive her, since her father restrained her.

⁷If she should marry while her vow or the commitment to which she bound herself is still in force, ⁸and her husband learns of it and offers no objection on the day he finds out, her vows shall stand and her self-imposed obligations shall stand. ⁹But if her husband restrains her on the day that he learns of it, he thereby annuls her vow which was in force or the commitment to which she bound herself; and יהוה will forgive her.—¹⁰The vow of a widow offers no objection. Thus he tacitly agrees.

וְהַחֲרִישׁ לָהּ אֶבְיַה וְקָמוּ כָּל-נְדָרִיה וְכָל-אָסְרָה אֲשֶׁר-אָסְרָה עַל-נְפֵשָׁה יְקּוּם: ⁶ וְאָמַן הַנְּנִיא אֶבְיַה אֲתָה בַּיּוֹם שֶׁשְׁמַעְתָּ כָּל-נְדָרִיה וְאָסְרִיה אֲשֶׁר-אָסְרָה עַל-נְפֵשָׁה לֹא יְקּוּם וַיְהִי יְסֻלָּחַ לְהַלְלָה כִּי-הִנֵּא אֶבְיַה אֲתָה: ⁷ וְאָמַן-יְהִי תְּהִילָה לְאִישׁ וְנְדָרִיה עַלְיהָ אָוּמָה מְבָטָא שְׁפָתִיה אֲשֶׁר אָסְרָה עַל-נְפֵשָׁה: ⁸ וְשֶׁשְׁמַעְתָּ אִישָׁה בַּיּוֹם שֶׁשְׁמַעְתָּ וְהַחֲרִישׁ לָהּ וְקָמוּ נְדָרִיה וְאָסְרָה אֲשֶׁר-אָסְרָה עַל-נְפֵשָׁה יְקּוּם: ⁹ וְאָמַן בַּיּוֹם שֶׁשְׁמַעְתָּ אִישָׁה יְנִיא אֲתָה וְהִפְרֵר אֲתִינְדָּרָה אֲשֶׁר עַלְיָה וְאָתֶל מְבָטָא שְׁפָתִיה אֲשֶׁר אָסְרָה עַל-נְפֵשָׁה וַיְהִי יְסֻלָּחַ לְהַלְלָה: ¹⁰ וְנִדְרֵר אַלְמָנָה

5. self-imposed. Literally, “imposed upon her nefesh,” that is, her life or being. Nefesh, sometimes (mis)translated as “soul,” is a feminine noun that often means “a person.” See also at v. 4, above.

6. But if her father restrains her. Since the woman is a member of her father’s household and any property she vows to dedicate to God’s sanctuary will come from the household’s belongings, the Torah gives the man who is considered the head of the household the right to annul her vow.

on the day he finds out. That is, only on that same day. He cannot change his mind the next day and annul the vow without penalty (see v. 16 and Deuteronomy 23:22).

יהוה will forgive her. Although her father may be angry that she vowed the household’s property or her time to the sanctuary, there is no penalty imposed upon the woman for simply making the vow. Jacob Milgrom suggests that the woman ought not feel guilty on account of the canceled vow (Numbers, 1990, p. 252).

A Married Woman’s Vow or Oath (30:7–9)

According to certain passages of the Bible, married women live under the authority of their husbands;

but, like the young woman living in her father’s house, they can dedicate their husband’s property (perhaps even their own) or some of their time to the sanctuary. When Hannah utters her vow in the Shiloh sanctuary (I Samuel 1), she dedicates her first-born son. According to this passage, her husband Elkanah could overturn Hannah’s vow when he learns of it (see v. 12, below), but he does not.

7. The new husband is given the option to annul his bride’s vow even though he was not present when she first made it. However, if he does not annul it on the day he hears of it, the vow stands as is.

A Widow’s or a Divorced Woman’s Vow or Oath (30:10)

A woman who falls into either of these two categories is not beholden to a man with regard to vows and oaths. She can act autonomously; she alone is responsible for fulfilling her vow or oath. Because the Hebrew Bible typically perceives the widow as one of the most vulnerable members of its society, it legally provides for the needs of widows with regard to food, clothing, and other protections. (See at Exodus 22:21 and at Deuteronomy 10:18; 14:29; see also Eikev, Another View, p. 1108.) However, or of a divorced woman, however, whatever she has imposed on herself, shall be binding upon her.—

¹¹So, too, if, while in her husband's household, she makes a vow or imposes an obligation on herself by oath, ¹²and her husband learns of it, yet offers no objection—thus failing to restrain her—all her vows shall stand and all her self-imposed obligations shall stand. ¹³But if her husband does annul them on the day he finds out, then nothing that has crossed her lips shall stand, whether vows or self-imposed obligations. Her husband has annulled them, and יהוה will forgive her. ¹⁴Every vow and every sworn obligation of self-denial may be upheld by her husband or annulled by her husband. ¹⁵If her husband offers no objection from that day to the next, he has upheld all the vows or obligations she has assumed: he has upheld them by offering no objection on the day he found out. ¹⁶But if he annuls them after [the day] he finds out, he shall bear her guilt.

the Bible also mentions apparently wealthy widows such as Abigail, widow of Nabal, who marries David (I Samuel 25:42).

Further Discussion of a Married Woman's Vow or Oath (30:11–17)

The text returns to cases of married women, to situations such as that of Hannah, who vows her (and her husband's) hoped-for son before the child is conceived. We assume that Elkanah later acquiesces to the terms of his wife's vow, since Hannah simply tells him that she will not part with her son until he is weaned. Elkanah agrees, saying, "As long as God's word is fulfilled" (I Samuel 1:23). Young Samuel's parents deliver him to the Shiloh sanctuary without a recorded discussion.

11. if, while in her husband's household. The rules concerning a wife are identical to those concerning a daughter. The woman may make a vow,

וְגַרְוִשָּׁה כֹּל אֲשֶׁר־אָסְרָה עַל־נֶפֶשָּׁה יִקּוּם עַלְיהָ: ¹¹ וְאִמְרֵבֶת אִישָּׁה נֶדֶרֶת אֲזֶרֶת אָסְרָה אֲסֶר עַל־נֶפֶשָּׁה בְּשֻׁבָּעָה: ¹² וְשָׁמַעַי אִישָּׁה וְהַחֲרֵשׁ לָה לֹא הַנִּיא אֶתְּה וְקַמְוּ בָּלְדָנְדִירִיה וּכְלָא-אֲסֶר אֲשֶׁר־אָסְרָה עַל־נֶפֶשָּׁה יִקּוּם: ¹³ וְאִמְרֵבֶת יִפְרַע אַתֶּם | אִישָּׁה בַּיּוֹם שָׁמַעוּ בְּלִמּוֹצָא שְׁפִתִּיה לְנֶדֶרֶת וְלְאָסֶר נֶפֶשָּׁה לֹא יִקּוּם אִישָּׁה הַפְּרָט וַיְהִוֵּה יִסְלַח־לָהּ: ¹⁴ בְּלִנְדָרֶת וּכְלִשְׁבָּעָת אֲסֶר לְעֵנֹת נֶפֶשָּׁ אִישָּׁה יִקְרַמְנוּ וְאִישָּׁה יִפְרַנוּ: ¹⁵ וְאִמְרֵבֶת יִחְרִישׁ לָה אִישָּׁה מִיּוֹם אַלְיוֹם וְהַקִּים אֶת־כְּלִנְדִירִיה אוֹ אֶת־כְּלִ אָסֶרֶת אֲשֶׁר עַלְיהָ הַקִּים אַתֶּם בַּיּוֹם לָה בַּיּוֹם שָׁמַעוּ: ¹⁶ וְאִמְרֵבֶת יִפְרַע אַתֶּם אַחֲרֵי שָׁמַעוּ וְנִשְׂא אֶת־עֲונָה:

but her husband may annul it under certain circumstances.

13. crossed her lips. Although the vow or oath must be uttered, there is no rule as to how loudly it must be spoken. In I Samuel 1:11–13, the priest Eli thinks Hannah is drunk when she is offering her vow and prayers through tears.

14. self-denial. Heb. l'anot nefesh, more precisely, "to afflict the person." The text does not spell out the kinds of activities from which the woman might elect to abstain, but they might include, though not be limited to, abstentions observed by the nazirite. These include abstention from wine and grapes and refraining from contact with the dead (see Numbers 6). [The language implies that the woman's vow may include abstention from other activities as well, a behavior that might have repercussions for the husband, for example, if she takes a vow of celibacy. —Ed.]

¹⁷Those are the laws that יהוה enjoined upon Moses between a husband and his wife, and as between a father and his daughter while in her father's household by reason of her youth.

31 יהוה spoke to Moses, saying, ²"Avenge the Israelite people on the Midianites; then you shall be gathered to your kin."

¹⁷ אלה החקמים אשר צויה יהוה את-משה בין איש לאשתו בין-אב לבתו בנעריך בית אביה: פ

לא וידבר יהוה אל-משה לאמר: ² נקם נקמת בני ישׂראל מאות המquietים אחר תאסף אל-עמיך:

17. between a husband and his wife... between a father and his daughter. The overarching purpose for these laws about vows is elucidated here. This passage is concerned with specifying the range of a woman's power as it relates to her own religious life and with ensuring that her independence does not conflict with the needs or preferences of the male head of the household. The laws illustrate that a woman who is not divorced or widowed is considered under the authority of either her father or her husband with respect to vows or oaths, yet only under certain conditions can he limit her decisions as an individual making a vow.

External Relationships

REVENGE AGAINST THE MIDIANITES (31:1–54)

Numbers 25 described an episode of Baal-peor, in which Israelite men were "prostituting themselves" with Moabite women (Number 25:1). Such an allegation seemed to involve sexual acts in combination with foreign worship, not merely sex outside the boundaries of marriage (see also at Deuteronomy 31:16, as well as, for example, Ezekiel 16 and 22). God at that point cast a plague upon the community, but Phinehas the priest placated God by driving a spear through the copulating bodies of an Israelite man and a Midianite woman in front of the Tent of Meeting (25:7–8). He thus brought an end to the plague. In our para-shah, God now commands Moses to punish the Midianites for that earlier incident at Baal-peor.

THE WAR AGAINST THE MIDIANITES (31:1–12)

The following episode of vengeance is not unique to the Bible, but it is one of the few in which women are particularly targeted. Moses holds Midianite women responsible for enticing Israelite men into foreign worship and specifically demands their deaths. The vengeance against the Midianites raises questions. First, what is the position of Moses' Midianite wife, Zipporah (Exodus 2:21), in this conflict? Second, Numbers 25 depicts Moabite, not Midianite, women as seducing Israelite men (25:1–2); why then is this a campaign against the Midianites? Finally, why is Balaam punished when in Numbers 24 he blesses, not curses, Israel? Contemporary scholars attribute the inconsistencies to the editors' choice to weave together different sources or traditions.

2. "then you shall be gathered to your kin." The idiom throughout the Bible indicates death, presuming the usual practice of interment in the family tomb. Thus Jacob buries Leah in the tomb of his ancestors where he too expects to be buried (see Genesis 49:29–32 and at 25:8). King David's aged supporter Barzillai the Gileadite expresses his preference to die "in my own town, near the graves of my father and mother" (II Samuel 19:38). In Moses' case the idiom is a metaphor. This will be Moses' final battle before he dies.

³Moses spoke to the militia, saying, “Let troops be picked out from among you for a campaign, and let them fall upon Midian to wreak יהוה’s vengeance on Midian. ⁴You shall dispatch on the campaign a thousand from every one of the tribes of Israel.”

⁵So a thousand from each tribe were furnished from the divisions of Israel, twelve thousand picked for the campaign. ⁶Moses dispatched them on the campaign, a thousand from each tribe, with Phinehas son of Eleazar serving as a priest on the campaign, equipped with the sacred utensils and the trumpets for sounding the blasts. ⁷They took the field against Midian, as had commanded Moses, and slew every male. ⁸Along with their other victims, they slew the kings of Midian: Evi, Rekem, Zur, Hur, and Reba, the five kings of Midian. They also put Balaam son of Beor to the sword.

⁹The Israelites took the women and other non-combatants of the Midianites captive, and seized as booty all their beasts, all their herds, and all their wealth. ¹⁰And they destroyed by fire all the towns in which they were settled, and their encampments. ¹¹They gathered all the spoil and all the booty, human and beast, ¹²and they brought the captives, the booty, and the spoil to Moses, Eleazar the priest,

³וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֲלֵיכֶם לְאָמֵר הַחֲלֹצָו מִאֱתָכֶם אֲנָשִׁים לְצַבָּא וַיְהִי עַל־מִדְיָן לְתִת נִקְמַת־יְהוָה בָּמִדְיָן: ⁴אֲלֹף לְמַטָּה אֲלֹף לְמַטָּה לְכָל מִطּוֹת יִשְׂרָאֵל תְּשַׁלְּחוּ לְצַבָּא:

⁵וַיִּמְסֹרוּ מַאלְפֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲלֹף לְמַטָּה שְׁנִים־עָשָׂר אֲלֹף חֲלוֹצֵי צָבָא: ⁶וַיִּשְׁלַׁח אֶתְمֶלֶךְ מֹשֶׁה אֲלֹף לְמַטָּה לְצַבָּא אֶתְמֶלֶךְ וְאֶת־פִּינְחָס בֶּן־אַלְעֹזֵר הַפְּנֵחֶן לְצַבָּא וּכְלֵי הַקְּדֻשָּׁה וְחַצְׂצִירָה תְּהִרְיעָה בְּיוֹדוֹ: ⁷וַיַּצְבָּאוּ עַל־מִדְיָן כַּאֲשֶׁר צוֹהָר יְהוָה אֶת־מֹשֶׁה וַיַּהֲרֹג בְּלִזְכָּר: ⁸וְאֶת־מִלְּפֵי מִדְיָן הָרְגוּ עַל־חֶלְלֵיהֶם אֶת־אָנוֹן וְאֶת־רְקָם וְאֶת־עֹזֶר וְאֶת־יְחֹוֹל וְאֶת־לְבָעָה חַמְשָׁת מִלְּפֵי מִדְיָן וְאֶת בְּלֵעַם בְּקוּבָּעָר הָרְגוּ בְּחַרְבָּבָי:

⁹וַיִּשְׁבְּבוּ בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת־נֶשֶׁי מִדְיָן וְאֶת־טֶפֶם וְאֶת בְּלִבְהַמְתָּם וְאֶת־בְּלִמְקַנְתָּם וְאֶת־בְּלִחִילָם בְּזֹוו: ¹⁰וְאֶת בְּלִעֲרִיהֶם בְּמוֹשְׁבָתָם וְאֶת בְּלִטְיוֹתָם שְׁרָפוּ בְּאַשׁ וְיִקְחּוּ אֶת־בְּלִהְשָׁלָל וְאֶת בְּלִהְמַלְקוֹת בְּאָדָם וּבְבָהָמָה: ¹²וַיַּבְאֵי אֶל־מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל־אַלְעֹזֵר הַפְּנֵחֶן וְאֶל־עֲדָת בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת־הַשְׁבֵּי וְאֶת־הַמְּלֹקוֹת וְאֶת־הַהְשָׁלָל אֶל־

3. “let them fall upon Midian.” Numbers 25 mentions Moabite women who entice Israelite men (v. 1) but then focuses on one Midianite woman, Cozbi, who has sex with Zimri the Israelite (25:6–15). Why is revenge now directed only at Midian and not Moab? Many modern biblical scholars see the stories of the Moabites and the Midianites as distinct sagas that a later editor combined in order to honor both renditions of Israel’s history.

6. Phinehas son of Eleazar. Phinehas is the zealous grandson of Moses’ brother, Aaron; he kills an Israelite man and a Midianite woman copulating at the entrance of the Tent of Meeting (see at 25:8).

8. Balaam son of Beor. Why does the Israelite army kill Balaam, who blessed the Israelites even at considerable cost to himself (Numbers 22–24)? After all, he is responsible for the famous verse “How fair are your tents O Jacob, / Your dwellings, O Israel!” (24:5) and other poetic oracles. One explanation claims that since the text juxtaposes the story of apostasy in Numbers 25 with the mention of Balaam’s return home, he must have been involved in that apostasy (so Rashi, who follows the Talmud). Contemporary scholars explain the incongruence as a result of the combination of two versions of the story (see at v. 3, above).

and the whole Israelite community, at the camp in the steppes of Moab, at the Jordan near Jericho.

¹³Moses, Eleazar the priest, and all the chieftains of the community came out to meet them outside the camp. ¹⁴Moses became angry with the commanders of the army, the officers of thousands and the officers of hundreds, who had come back from the military campaign. ¹⁵Moses said to them, “You have spared every female! ¹⁶Yet they are the very ones who, at the bidding of Balaam, induced the Israelites to trespass against Yahweh in the matter of Peor, so that Yahweh’s community was struck by the plague. ¹⁷Now, therefore, slay every male among the dependents, and slay also every woman who has known a man carnally; ¹⁸but spare every female dependent who has not had carnal relations with a man.

SPECIFIC REVENGE AGAINST MIDIANITE WOMEN (31:13–18)

Moses becomes enraged when his troops do not kill the Midianite women since, in his opinion, they were the ones who caused the Israelite men to go astray from God. In effect he commands them to kill all but the young, virgin girls.

15. “You have spared every female!” Not only did God refrain from mentioning this command to Moses in v. 2, but Moses does not inform his troops of his wishes until after they return from the battle. No mention is made of Zipporah, Moses’ Midianite wife, but it should be assumed that the battle targeted only people outside of the camp.

“female.” Note the use of biological description rather than the more common term, woman, elsewhere in this account.

16. “they are the very ones.” The use of feminine pronouns makes it clear that the women are considered responsible for initiating what happened earlier at Baal-peor.

“who, at the bidding of Balaam.” Thus far there has been nothing in the biblical text about Balaam’s involvement in the apostasy at Baal-peor.

המִחְנָה אֶל־עֲרָבָת מוֹאָב אֲשֶׁר עַל־יַרְדֵן ירחוּ: ס
 וַיַּצְאָו מֹשֶׁה וְאֶלְעֹזֶר הַכֹּהֵן וְכָל־נְשָׂאִים
 הָעָדָה לְקַרְאָתָם אֶל־מִחוֹן לְמִחְנָה:
 וַיַּקְצֹף מֹשֶׁה עַל פְּקוֹדֵי הָחֵיל שָׁרֵי
 הַאֲלֵפִים וְשָׂרֵי הַמִּאוֹת הַבָּאִים מִצְבָּא הַמְּלִחְמָה: ¹⁵ וַיֹּאמֶר אֲלֵיכֶם מֹשֶׁה
 הַחִיִּתִים בְּלִגְבָּה: ¹⁶ هֵنָּה הֵyo לְבָנֵינוּ
 יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּדַבֵּר בְּלִעֵם לְמִסְרָרִים עַל־יְהוָה:
 עַל־דְּבָר־פָּעוֹר וְתַהֲרֵת הַמִּגְפָּה בְּעַרְתָּה יְהוָה:
 וְעַתָּה הָרָגוּ בְּלִזְכָּר בְּטֻף וְכָל־אֲשָׁה
 יָדַעַת אִישׁ לְמִשְׁבֵּב זָכָר הָרָגוּ: ¹⁸ וְכָל־הַטָּף
 בְּנָשִׁים אֲשֶׁר לְאִידְךָוּ מִשְׁבֵּב זָכָר הָחִיו
 לְכֶם:

Numbers 24:25 merely reports that Balaam returned to his home after he finished relating the oracles. (See above at v. 8.)

17. “slay every male among the dependents.” This command includes young male children. There may be a fear that the young boys will grow up and take revenge on those who attacked their families. Ironically, Moses himself is an escaped victim of a similar decree by Pharaoh (Exodus 1) in which infant girls were saved while infant boys were to be thrown into the river.

“known a man carnally.” [Moses’ demand that all such women be killed is based on the women’s presumed culpability in the incident at Baal-peor. However, such regulations that make a woman’s sexual history essential to her destiny also imply that the intended role of women captured in war is sexual. This symbol of conquest may also help with the demographic problem, namely a shortage of women because of higher female mortality, usually from childbirth and ensuing complications. —Ed.]

18. “spare.” Literally, “keep alive for yourselves,” that is, the surviving captives are to be saved for the Israelite warriors.

“has not had carnal relations with a man.”

¹⁹“You shall then stay outside the camp seven days; every one among you or among your captives who has slain a person or touched a corpse shall purify himself on the third and seventh days. ²⁰You shall also purify every cloth, every article of skin, everything made of goats’ hair, and every object of wood.”

²¹Eleazar the priest said to the troops who had taken part in the fighting, “This is the ritual law that has enjoined upon Moses: ²²Gold and silver, copper, iron, tin, and lead—²³any article that can withstand fire—these you shall pass through fire and they shall be pure, except that they must be purified with water of lustration; and anything that cannot withstand fire you must pass through water.

There is no way a virgin could have participated in the events at Baal-peor since the apostasy involved sexual relations.

AFTERMATH: PURIFICATION RITUALS AND DISTRIBUTION OF SPOILS (31:19–54)

Since taking of human life renders persons impure by putting them in contact with dead bodies, those responsible for the killing must undergo the purification ritual prescribed in detail in Numbers 19. This entails being sprinkled with a special mixture called “water of lustration” (“water of niddah”; see at 19:9), a combination of ashes of the red heifer mixed with water. The demand for a cleansing ritual underscores the power the ancients attributed to coming into physical contact with the finality of human life. The biblical writers understood that the “life . . . is in the blood” (Leviticus 17:11). The red heifer is one of the very few female animals to be used in Israelite ritual sacrifice. Therefore, some scholars suggest a connection between the femininity of the animal and the expression “water of niddah” (niddah usually means menstruation or menstruant), translated as “water of lustration” (see at v. 23).

¹⁹ וְאַתֶּם חָנִינִי מְחוֹזֵן לְמִחְנָה שְׁבֻעַת יְמִים כָּל הַרְגֵּן נֶפֶשׁ וְכָל נֶגֶע בְּחִלֵּל תְּתַחְטָאָו בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁלִישִׁי וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁבִיעִי אַתֶּם וְשִׁבְיכֶם: ²⁰ וְכָל־בְּגָד וְכָל־כְּלִי־עֹור וְכָל־ מעשָׂה עַזִּים וְכָל־כְּלִי־עַז תְּתַחְטָאָו: ס ²¹ וְיֹאמֶר אֶל־עֹזֶר הַפְּהָן אֶל־אֲנָשִׁי הַצְבָא הַבְּאִים לְמִלְחָמָה זוֹאת חֲקַת הַתּוֹרָה אֲשֶׁר־עָזָה יְהוָה אֶת־מְשָׁה: ²² אָרֶךְ אַתְּ הַזֹּהֵב וְאֶת־הַכְּסָף אֶת־הַנְּחַשֶּׁת אֶת־הַבְּرֹזֶל אֶת־הַבְּקִיל וְאֶת־הַעֲפָרָת: ²³ בְּלִדְבָר אֲשֶׁר־יָבָא בָּאָשׁ תְּעַבֵּר בְּאָשׁ וְתָהַר אָשׁ בְּמַיִּינָה יְתַחְטָא וְכָל אֲשֶׁר לְאִיבָא בְּאָשׁ

¹⁹. As Numbers 19 indicates, a person impure by virtue of contact with death contaminates the sanctuary of God. This is a violation with severe consequences.

²³. “water of lustration.” Heb. mei niddah. The word niddah elsewhere refers to menstruation or a menstruating woman (see Leviticus 15). Many scholars argue that no real connection exists between the water and the woman, other than that both refer to matters in the purity system. However, Hyam Maccoby asserts that the term should be translated literally as “waters of menstruation.” He claims that in a time predating the biblical period, menstrual blood was not only defiling but also maintained healing and purifying properties. Biblical examples of blood as a cleansing agent include the case of the chatat (“purgation offering”), in which blood is sprinkled on the altar in a purifying manner (see Exodus 29:36; Leviticus 4:25); but there the blood is that of a male animal sacrificed to God. Maccoby maintains that the red heifer is different from other biblical sacrifices in part because the heifer is a female sacrificial animal and in part because of its distinct coloring. The red cow is not just symbolic of blood in general, but of menstrual blood in particular, which has the

²⁴On the seventh day you shall wash your clothes and be pure, and after that you may enter the camp.”

²⁵ said to Moses: ²⁶“You and Eleazar the priest and the family heads of the community take an inventory of the booty that was captured, human and beast, ²⁷and divide the booty equally between the combatants who engaged in the campaign and the rest of the community. ²⁸You shall exact a levy for יהוה: in the case of the warriors who engaged in the campaign, one item in five hundred, of persons, oxen, asses, and sheep, ²⁹shall be taken from their half-share and given to Eleazar the priest as a contribution to יהוה; ³⁰and from the half-share of the other Israelites you shall withhold one in every fifty human beings as well as cattle, asses, and sheep—all the animals—and give them to the Levites, who attend to the duties of יהוה’s Tabernacle.”

³¹Moses and Eleazar the priest did as commanded Moses. ³²The amount of booty, other than the spoil that the troops had plundered, came to 675,000 sheep, ³³72,000 head of cattle, ³⁴61,000 asses, ³⁵and a total of 32,000 human beings, namely, the females who had not had carnal relations.

³⁶Thus, the half-share of those who had engaged in the campaign [was as follows]: The number of sheep was 337,500, ³⁷and יהוה’s levy from the sheep was 675; ³⁸the cattle came to 36,000, from which יהוה’s levy was 72; ³⁹the asses came to 30,500, from

תַּעֲבִירוּ בְּמִים : וְכַבֵּסְתֶּם בְּגִידִיכֶם בַּיּוֹם הַשְׁבִּיעִי וְטַהֲרָתֶם וְאַחֲרֵ תְּבָאוֹ אֶל-הַמִּחְנָה : ס

²⁵ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים מֹשֶׁה לֵאמֹר : שָׂא אֶת רָאשׁ מֶלֶךְתְּךָ תְּשִׁיבֵי בְּאָרוֹם וּבְבָהָמָה אַתָּה וְאַל-עֹזֶר הַכֹּהן וְרֹאשֵׁי אֲבוֹת הָעָדָה : ²⁷ וְחַצִּית אֶת-הַמֶּלֶךְתָּחִין תְּפַשֵּׂי הַמְּלָחָמָה הַיְצָאִים לְצָבָא וּבֵין כָּל-הָעָדָה : ²⁸ וְהַרְמַת מַכְסֵס לְיהוָה מֵאַת אֲנָשִׁי הַמְּלָחָמָה הַיְצָאִים לְצָבָא אֶחָד נֶפֶשׁ מַחְמַשׁ הַמְּאוֹת מִן-הָאָדָם וּמִן-הַבָּקָר וּמִן-הַחַמְרִים וּמִן-הַצְּאן : ²⁹ מִמְּחַצֵּים תַּקְחוּ וְנַתְתָּה לְאַלְעֹזֶר הַכֹּהן תְּרֻומָת יְהוָה : ³⁰ וּמִמְּחַצֵּת בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל תַּקְחוּ וְאֶחָד מִן-הַחַמְשִׁים מִן-הָאָדָם מִן-הַבָּקָר מִן-הַחַמְרִים וּמִן-הַצְּאן מִבְּלַהֲבָה מָה וְנַתְתָּה אֶתְכֶם לְלוּיִם שְׁמָרִי מִשְׁמָרָת מִשְׁפֵּן יְהוָה :

³¹ וַיַּעֲשֵׂה מֹשֶׁה וְאַל-עֹזֶר הַכֹּהן כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֶת-מֹשֶׁה : ³² וַיֹּהֵי הַמֶּלֶךְתָּחִין יָתַר הַבָּזָן אֲשֶׁר בָּזָן עִם הַצָּבָא עַזָּן שְׁשִׁמְאוֹת אֶלָּף וְשְׁבָעִים אֶלָּף וְחַמְשָׁת אֶלָּפִים : ³³ וּבָקָר שְׁנִים וְשְׁבָעִים אֶלָּף : ³⁴ וְחַמְרִים אֶלָּף וְשְׁשִׁים אֶלָּף : ³⁵ וְנֶפֶשׁ אָדָם מִן-הַנְּשִׁים אֲשֶׁר לְאִידָּעָו מִשְׁבָּב וְכֵר כָּל-נֶפֶשׁ שְׁנִים וְשְׁלֹשִׁים אֶלָּף :

³⁶ וְתַהֲלֵל הַמְּחַצָּה חָלֵק הַיְצָאִים בְּצָבָא מִסְפֵּר הַצְּאן שֶׁלְשׁ-מְאוֹת אֶלָּף וְשְׁלֹשִׁים אֶלָּף וְשְׁבָעֵת אֶלָּפִים וְחַמְשׁ מְאוֹת : ³⁷ וַיֹּהֵי הַמַּכְסֵס לְיהוָה מִן-הַצְּאן שֵׁשׁ מְאוֹת חַמְשׁ וְשְׁבָעִים : ³⁸ וְהַבָּקָר שָׁה וְשְׁלֹשִׁים אֶלָּף וְמַכְסֵס לְיהוָה שְׁנִים וְשְׁבָעִים : ³⁹ וְחַמְרִים symbolic power of life, death, and fertility (Ritual and Morality: The Ritual Purity System and its Place in Judaism, 1999, pp. 105–17).

For additional discussion of mei niddah (“water of lustration”), see at Numbers 19:9.

which יהוה's levy was 61. ⁴⁰And the number of human beings was 16,000, from which יהוה's levy was 32. ⁴¹Moses gave the contributions levied for יהוה to Eleazar the priest, as had commanded Moses.

⁴²As for the half-share of the other Israelites, which Moses withdrew from the troops who had taken the field, ⁴³that half-share of the community consisted of 337,500 sheep, ⁴⁴36,000 head of cattle, ⁴⁵30,500 asses, ⁴⁶and 16,000 human beings. ⁴⁷From this half-share of the Israelites, Moses withheld one in every fifty humans and animals; and he gave them to the Levites, who attended to the duties of יהוה's Tabernacle, as had commanded Moses.

⁴⁸The commanders of the troop divisions, the officers of thousands and the officers of hundreds, approached Moses. ⁴⁹They said to Moses, "Your servants have made a check of the warriors in our charge, and not one of us is missing. ⁵⁰So we have brought as an offering to יהוה such articles of gold as each of us came upon: armlets, bracelets, signet rings, earrings, and pendants, that expiation may be made for our persons before יהוה." ⁵¹Moses and Eleazar the priest accepted the gold from them, all kinds of wrought articles. ⁵²All the gold that was offered by the officers of thousands and the officers of hundreds as a contribution to יהוה came to 16,750 shekels.—⁵³But in the ranks, everyone kept his booty for himself.—⁵⁴So Moses and Eleazar the priest accepted the gold from the officers of thousands and the officers of hundreds and brought it to the Tent of Meeting, as a reminder in behalf of the Israelites before יהוה.

שְׁלֹשִׁים אֶלָף וּחֲמֵשׁ מֵאוֹת וּמִכֶּסֶם לַיהוָה אֶחָד וְשִׁשִּים: ⁴⁰ וּנְפֶשׁ אָדָם שְׁשָׁה עָשָׂר אֶלָף וּמִכֶּסֶם לַיהוָה שְׁנִים וּשְׁלֹשִׁים נְפֶשׁ: ⁴¹ וַיִּתְعַנֵּן מֶשֶׁה אֶת-מֶכֶל תְּרוּמָה יְהוָה לְאַלְעֹזֶר הַכֹּהן בְּאָשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֶת-מֶשֶׁה:

⁴² וּמִמְחֻצִית בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר חִזָּה מֶשֶׁה מִן-הָאֱנֹשִׁים הַצֹּבָאים: ⁴³ וְתַהַי מִחְעַט הַעֲדרה מִן-הַצֹּאן שְׁלֹשׁ-מֵאוֹת אֶלָף וּשְׁלֹשִׁים אֶלָף שְׁבָעָת אֶלָפִים וּחֲמֵשׁ מֵאוֹת: ⁴⁴ וּבָקָר שְׁשָׁה וּשְׁלֹשִׁים אֶלָף: ⁴⁵ וּחַמְלִים שְׁלֹשִׁים אֶלָף וּחֲמֵשׁ מֵאוֹת: ⁴⁶ וּנְפֶשׁ אָדָם שְׁשָׁה עָשָׂר אֶלָף: ⁴⁷ וַיַּקְחַ מֶשֶׁה מִמְחֻצִת בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת-הַחֹזֶן אֶחָד מִן-הַחַמְשִׁים מִן-הָאָדָם וּמִן-הַבָּהָמָה וַיִּתְعַנֵּן אֶתְכֶם לִלְוִים שָׁמְרִי מִשְׁמֶרֶת מִשְׁבַּנְתְּךָ יְהוָה בְּאָשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה אֶת-מֶשֶׁה:

⁴⁸ וַיַּקְרְבוּ אֶל-מֶשֶׁה הַפְּקִידִים אֲשֶׁר לְאֶלָפִים הַצֹּבָא שְׁרֵי הַאֶלָפִים וּשְׁרֵי הַמֵּאוֹת: ⁴⁹ וַיֹּאמְרוּ אֶל-מֶשֶׁה עֲבֹדִיךְ נְשָׂא אֶת-רָאשׁ אֶנְשִׁי הַפְּלִחָמָה אֲשֶׁר בַּיּוֹנָנוּ וְלֹא-גַּפְקֵד מִפְנֵנוּ אִישׁ: ⁵⁰ וַיִּקְרַב אֶת-קְרֻבָּן יְהוָה אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר מִצָּא בְּלִיזְבָּל אֲצַעַדָּה וְצַמְדִידָה טְבֻעָת עֲגִיל וּכְוֹנוֹן לְכִפּר עַל-גִּפְשָׁתֵינוּ לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: ⁵¹ וַיַּקְחַ מֶשֶׁה וּאַלְעֹזֶר הַכֹּהן אֶת-הַזְּבָב מִתְּכָלָם כָּל בְּלִי מִעֵשָׂה: ⁵² וַיְהִי אֶל-זְבָב הַתְּרוּמָה אֲשֶׁר הָרִימָו לַיהוָה שְׁשָׁה עָשָׂר אֶלָף שְׁבָעַ-מֵאוֹת וּחֲמֵשִׁים שֶׁקֶל מֵאת שְׁרֵי הַאֶלָפִים וּמֵאת שְׁרֵי הַמֵּאוֹת: ⁵³ אֶנְשִׁי הַצֹּבָא בָּזָן אִישׁ לוֹ: ⁵⁴ וַיַּקְחַ מֶשֶׁה וּאַלְעֹזֶר הַכֹּהן אֶת-הַזְּבָב מֵאת שְׁרֵי הַאֶלָפִים וּהַמֵּאוֹת וַיַּבְאֵוּ אֶת-אַלְאָחֶל מוֹעֵד זְכָרוֹן לְבְנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל לִפְנֵי יְהוָה: ⁵⁵ פ

32 The Reubenites and the Gadites owned cattle in very great numbers. Noting that the lands of Jazer and Gilead were a region suitable for cattle,² the Gadite and Reubenite [leaders] came to Moses, Eleazar the priest, and the chieftains of the community, and said, ³“Ataroth, Dibon, Jazer, Nimrah, Heshbon, Elealeh, Sebam, Nebo, and Beon—⁴the land that יהוה has conquered for the community of Israel—is cattle country, and your servants have cattle. ⁵It would be a favor to us,” they continued, “if this land were given to your servants as a holding; do not move us across the Jordan.”

⁶Moses replied to the Gadites and the Reubenites, “Are your brothers to go to war while you stay here? ⁷Why will you turn the minds of the Israelites from crossing into the land that יהוה has given them? ⁸That is what your fathers did when I sent them from Kadesh-barnea to survey the land. ⁹After going up to the wadi Eshcol and surveying the land, they turned the minds of the Israelites from invading the land that יהוה had given them. ¹⁰Thereupon was incensed and swore, ¹¹‘None of the men from twenty years up who came out of

לב ומקנה | רְבָה חַיָּה לְבָנִי רְאוּבֵן וְלְבָנִי־
גָּד עֲצֹום מֵאַד וַיַּרְא֨ו אֶת־אֶרֶץ יְעֹזֵר וְאֶת־
אֶרֶץ גָּלְעָד וְהַנֶּגֶד הַמִּקְוָם מִקְנָה:
2 וַיָּבֹא בְּנֵי־גָּד וּבְנֵי רְאוּבֵן וַיֹּאמְרוּ אֶל־
מֹשֶׁה וְאֶל־אֶלְעֹזֵר הַכֹּהן וְאֶל־נְשִׂיאֵי
הָעָה לְאָמֵר: ³עֲטָרוֹת וְרִיבְּן וַיְעֹזֵר
וּגְמָרָה וְחַשְׁבּוֹן וְאֶלְעָלה וְשָׁבָם וּנוּבוֹ
וּבָעֵן: ⁴הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר הַפָּה יְהֹוָה לִפְנֵי
עֲדָת יִשְׂרָאֵל אָרֶץ מִקְנָה הוּא וְלַעֲבֹרְךָ
מִקְנָה: ⁵וַיֹּאמְרוּ אָמַמְצָאנוּ חַן
בְּעִינֵיכֶם יִתְן אֶת־הָאָרֶץ הַזֹּאת לְעַבְדָךְ
לְאַחֲרֵיהֶם אֶל־תַּעֲבְרָנוּ אֶת־הַיַּרְדֵן:

⁶וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה מֵשָׁה לְבָנֵי־גָּד וְלְבָנִי־רְאוּבֵן
הָאֲחִיכֶם יִבָּאָו לְמִלְחָמָה וְאַתֶּם תִּשְׁבְּכֶם
פֶּה: ⁷וְלֹמַדְתֶּם תְּנוּאָן תְּנוּאָן אֶת־לִבְנֵי
יִשְׂרָאֵל מַעֲבָר אֶל־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־נָתַן לָהֶם
יְהֹוָה: ⁸כִּי־עֲשָׂו אֲבֹתֶיכֶם בְּשָׁלָחֵי אֶתְם
מִקְדָּשׁ בְּרִנְעָל לְרֹאֹת אֶת־הָאָרֶץ: ⁹וַיַּעֲלֹו
עֲדִינְחָל אֲשֶׁר־בָּול וַיַּרְאָו אֶת־הָאָרֶץ וַיַּנְיָאו
אֶת־לִבְנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל לְבִלְתִּיבָא אֶל־הָאָרֶץ
אֲשֶׁר־נָתַן לָהֶם יְהֹוָה: ¹⁰וַיַּחֲרַר־אָף יְהֹוָה
בַּיּוֹם הַהוּא וַיִּשְׁבַּע לְאָמֵר: ¹¹אִם־יִרְאָו
הָאָנָשִׁים הַעֲלִים מִמּוּצָרִים מִבֵּן עִשְׂרִים

Negotiating Settlements

PROVISIONS FOR TRIBAL TERRITORY EAST OF THE JORDAN (32:1–42)

Earlier, in Numbers 21, the Israelites conquered the territory east of the Jordan River. Here, two and half tribes (Reuben, Gad, and half of Manasseh) request to settle there. As in prior incidents, Moses is portrayed as one who must help his people deal with difficult transitions. In this case, a sub-group of Israelites successfully makes the transition from wanderers to settlers; but they do so prematurely. Moses reminds them of their obligations to the Israelite people as a whole: he demands that even if they are given the dispensation to remain occupants of Transjordan, they must continue to help their brothers in battle.

3. “Nebo.” This is the location of the mountain on top of which a dying Moses will view the Promised Land (see Deuteronomy 34:1–5). Tradition identifies this location with a mountain in Jordan with an expansive vista overlooking the land of Israel.

8. “That is what your fathers did.” Moses compares the stance of Reuben and Gad to that of the scouts who were sent to survey the land and who then discouraged the people (Numbers 13).

Egypt shall see the land that I promised on oath to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, for they did not remain loyal to Me—¹²none except Caleb son of Jephunneh the Kenizzite and Joshua son of Nun, for they remained loyal to Me—¹³incensed at Israel, made them wander in the wilderness for forty years, until the whole generation that had provoked YHWH's displeasure was gone.¹⁴And now you, a breed of sinful men, have replaced your fathers, to add still further to YHWH's wrath against Israel.¹⁵If you turn away from [God], who then abandons them once more in the wilderness, you will bring calamity upon all this people.”

¹⁶Then they stepped up to him and said, “We will build here sheepfolds for our flocks and towns for our children.¹⁷And we will hasten as shock-troops in the van of the Israelites until we have established them in their home, while our children stay in the fortified towns because of the inhabitants of the land.¹⁸We will not return to our homes until the Israelites—every one of them—are in possession of their portion.¹⁹But we will not have a share with them in the territory beyond the Jordan, for we have received our share on the east side of the Jordan.”

²⁰Moses said to them, “If you do this, if you go to battle as shock-troops, at the instance of YHWH,²¹and every shock-fighter among you crosses the Jordan, at the instance of YHWH, until [God] has personally dispossessed the enemies,²²and the land has been subdued, at the instance of YHWH, and then you return—you shall be clear before YHWH and before Israel; and this land shall be your holding under YHWH.²³But if you do not do so, you will have sinned against YHWH; and know that your sin will overtake you.²⁴Build towns for your children and sheepfolds for your flocks, but do what you have promised.”

²⁵The Gadites and the Reubenites answered Moses, “Your servants will do as my lord commands.²⁶Our children, our wives, our flocks, and all our other livestock will stay behind in the towns

שנה ומעלה את האדמה אשר נשבעתה ל아버지ם ליצחק ויליעקב כי לא-מלךו אחריו:¹² בלחמי פלב בנויננה הכנוי: ויהושע בנוון כי מלואו אחריו יהוה:¹³ ויחיראך יהוה בישראל וניגעת במדבר ארבעים שנה עדיתם כל-הדור העשה הרע בעיני יהוה:¹⁴ והנה קממת תחת אבותיכם תרבות אנשיים חטאים לספנות עוד על חרון אפיק יהוה אל-ישראל:¹⁵ כי תשוב מארליך ויקס עוד להניחו במדבר ושחתם לב-העם הזה:

¹⁶וינגשו אליו ויאמרו גדרת צאן נבנה למקומו פה וערים לטפנו:¹⁷ ואנחנו נחלץ חשים לפניו בני ישראל עד אשר אמר הביאנים אל-מקום וישב טפנו בערי המבצר מפני ישבה הארץ:¹⁸ לא נשוב אל-בתיינו עד התנחלה בני ישראל איש נחלתו:¹⁹ כי לא ננחל אתם מעבר לירדן והלא כי באה נחלתנו אלינו מעבר הירדן מורה:

²⁰ויאמר אליהם משה אמרתעשות אתר הדרבר הזה אמרתחלצו לפני יהוה למלחה:²¹ ועבר لكم כל-חולץ אתר הירדן לפני יהוה עד הוריישו אתחאייבו מפניו:²² ונכבהה הארץ לפני יהוה ואחר תשבו והייתם נקיים מיהוה ובישראל והייתה הארץ זאת لكم לאחזה לפני יהוה:²³ ואם לא תעשוו בין הנה חטאכם ליהוה ורדו חטאכם אשר תמצא אתכם:²⁴ בנו-יכם ערים לטפכם וגדרת לעצנכם והיצא מפיכם תעשו:

²⁵ויאמר עבדיך יעשו כאשר אדני מצוה:
לאמור בנירג'ל ובני ראוון אל-משה:
²⁶ טפנו נשלינו מקומו וככל-בהתננו יהויר

of Gilead;²⁷ while your servants, all those recruited for war, cross over, at the instance of יהוה, to engage in battle—as my lord orders.”

²⁸Then Moses gave instructions concerning them to Eleazar the priest, Joshua son of Nun, and the family heads of the Israelite tribes.²⁹ Moses said to them, “If every shock-fighter among the Gadites and the Reubenites crosses the Jordan with you to do battle, at the instance of יהוה, and the land is subdued before you, you shall give them the land of Gilead as a holding.³⁰ But if they do not cross over with you as shock-troops, they shall receive holdings among you in the land of Canaan.”

³¹The Gadites and the Reubenites said in reply, “Whatever has spoken concerning your servants, that we will do.³² We ourselves will cross over as shock-troops, at the instance of יהוה, into the land of Canaan; and we shall keep our hereditary holding across the Jordan.”

³³So Moses assigned to them—to the Gadites, the Reubenites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh son of Joseph—the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites and the kingdom of King Og of Bashan, the land with its various cities and the territories of their surrounding towns.³⁴ The Gadites rebuilt Dibon, Ataroth, Aroer,³⁵ Atroth-shophan, Jazer, Jogbehah,³⁶ Beth-nimrah, and Beth-haran as fortified towns or as enclosures for flocks.³⁷ The Reubenites rebuilt Heshbon, Elealeh, Kiriathaim,³⁸ Nebo, Baal-meon—some names being changed—and Sibmah; they gave [their own] names to towns that they rebuilt.³⁹ The descendants of Machir son of Manasseh went to Gilead and captured it, dispossessing the Amorites who were there;

שם בערֵי הַגָּלְעָד :²⁷ וְעַבְרִיךְ יַעֲבֹרְוּ בְּלַ- חָלוֹן צָבָא לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה לְמַלְחָמָה בְּאֶשְׁר-אָדָם דָּבָר :

²⁸ וַיַּצְוֹלְקָם מִשְׁהָ אֶת אֱלֹעָזֶר הַפָּהָן וְאֶת-
יְהֹוָשִׁעַ בֶּן-נַנְיָן וְאֶת-רָאשֵׁי אֶבֶוֹת הַמִּطּוֹת
לְבָנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל :²⁹ וַיֹּאמֶר מִשְׁהָ אֶל-הַמִּתְּחָרְבָּם אָמַר-
יַעֲבֹרְוּ בְּנֵי-גָד וּבְנֵי-רָאוֹבֵן | אֶת-תְּכַבֵּם אֶת-
הַיְרָדֵן בְּלַ-חָלוֹן לְמַלְחָמָה לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה
וּנְכַבְּשָׂה הָאָרֶץ לִפְנֵיכֶם וַיְתַתֶּם לְהַמִּ- אָתֵי-אָרֶץ הַגָּלְעָד לְאַחֲזָה :³⁰ וְאַמְלָא-יַעֲבֹרְוּ חָלוֹצִים אֶת-כֶּם וַיַּאֲחַזּוּ בְּתַכְכּוּם
בָּאָרֶץ בְּנֵעַן :

³¹ וַיַּעֲנוּ בְּנֵי-גָד וּבְנֵי רָאוֹבֵן לְאָמֵר אֶת-
אֲשֶׁר דָּבָר יְהֹוָה אֶל-עֲבֹרֵיךְ בֶּן נְעָשָׂה :
³² נָהָנוּ נָעַבְרָה חָלוֹצִים לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה אָרֶץ
בְּנֵעַן וְאַתָּנוּ אַחֲזָה נְחַלְתָּנוּ מַעֲבָר לִירָהָן :

³³ וַיִּתְּנָהָן לְהַמִּתְּחָרְבָּם | מִשְׁהָ לְבָנֵי-גָד וּלְבָנֵי רָאוֹבֵן
וּלְחָצֵץ | שְׁבֻט | מִנְשָׁה בְּנֵי-וֹטֶף אֶת-מִמְּלָכָת
סִיחָן מֶלֶךְ הָאָמֹנוֹי וְאֶת-מִמְּלָכָת עֹז מֶלֶךְ
הַבְּשָׁן הָאָרֶץ לְעָלֵיהֶن בְּגַבְלָת עָרֵי הָאָרֶץ
סְבִיבָה :³⁴ וַיַּבְנֵו בְּנֵי-גָד אֶת-דִּיבָּן וְאֶת-עַטְרָת וְאֶת עַרְעָר :³⁵ וְאֶת-עַטְרָת שׁוֹפֵן
וְאֶת-יְעֹזֵר וְיִגְבָּהָה :³⁶ וְאֶת-בִּבְתָּה נְמָרָה
וְאֶת-בִּבְתָּה חָרָן עַי מַבָּצָר וְגִדְרוֹת צָאן :
³⁷ וַיַּבְנֵו רָאוֹבֵן בְּנוֹ אֶת-חַשְׁבּוֹן וְאֶת-
אֶלְעָלָא וְאֶת קְרִיתִים :³⁸ וְאֶת-גַּבְעָן וְאֶת-בָּעֵל מַעֲוֹן מוֹסֵבָת שִׁם וְאֶת-שְׁבָמָה וַיַּקְרָאוּ
בְּשָׁמוֹת אֶת-שָׁמוֹת הַעֲרִים אֲשֶׁר בְּנוֹ
³⁹ וַיַּלְכְּדוּ בְּנֵי מָכִיר בְּנֵי-מְנַשֶּׁה גָּלְעָד
וַיַּלְכְּדָה נְיוֹרָשׁ אֶת-הָאָמֹרִי אֲשֶׁר-בָּה :

38. some names being changed. Remarks like these often go unnoticed, yet they provide interesting clues in determining when and by whom biblical texts were composed. An internal comment like this one reveals the hand of a later historiographer trying to make these places familiar to his audience.

⁴⁰so Moses gave Gilead to Machir son of Manasseh, and he settled there. ⁴¹Jair son of Manasseh went and captured their villages, which he renamed Havvoth-jair. ⁴²And Nobah went and captured Kenath and its dependencies, renaming it Nobah after himself.

וַיִּתְּן מֹשֶׁה אֶת-הָגָלָעֵד לְמִקְרֵי בָּנֵ-מִנְשָׁה
וַיֵּשֶׁב בָּהּ: ⁴¹ וַיַּאֲיר בָּנֵ-מִנְשָׁה הַלְּךָ וַיָּלֶבֶד
אֶת-חַזּוֹתֵיכֶם וַיִּקְרָא אֶת-הַנָּחָת חַזּוֹת יְאִיר:
⁴² וַיָּבֹח הַלְּךָ וַיָּלֶבֶד אֶת-קָנָת וְאֶת-בְּנָתֶיכֶם
וַיִּקְרָא לְהָ נָבָח בְּשָׁמוֹ: ٥

40. so Moses gave Gilead to Machir son of Manasseh. This statement contradicts vv. 1–4 and 29, where Reuben and Gad petition for Gilead. Some scholars explain that vv. 39–42 come from a different source, for not only does Moses give permission to the Manassites to take what has already been given to the Gadites, but also a battle of occupation ensues.

This is the only war mentioned in this literary unit.

Gilead...Machir son of Manasseh. This part of the verse evokes the family line of Zelophehad's daughters—Mahlah, Tirzah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Noah—whose land was granted to them according to Numbers 27 and who are a subject of discussion again in Numbers 36.

—Elizabeth Goldstein

Another View

LAWS ABOUT VOWS in this parashah invite readers to reflect on the most (in)famous story about vows in the Bible: that of Jephthah's daughter. Her father, the warrior Jephthah, vows to sacrifice as a burnt offering the first thing to come out of his house should he win a particular battle (Judges 11:30–31). When his only child, his daughter, comes out dancing to greet him after his victory, Jephthah bemoans his (!) predicament. But far from challenging his rash vow, Jephthah's unnamed daughter encourages him to fulfill it (Judges 11:36). Her only request is that she be allowed to spend two months alone with her female companions in order to “bewail [her] maidenhood” (Judges 11:38). Afterward, “he did to her as he had vowed” (Judges 11:39). The narrator concludes by noting that it became a custom for young Israelite women to gather annually for four days to chant dirges in the daughter’s memory (11:39–40). Tikva Frymer-Kensky suggests that no one in Israel would have viewed this death lightly. “Jephthah’s daughter is a pious and faithful woman who is remembered in cult and story” (“The Bible and Women’s Studies,” Studies in the Bible and Feminist Criticism, 2006, p. 172). But what messages does her memory convey?

A story about a rash oath by another father, King Saul, suggests a comparison. Saul takes an oath that whoever eats or drinks during a particular battle will be put to death (I Samuel 14:24). His son Jonathan inadvertently violates the oath (even ridiculing it when he learns of it afterward), and Saul commands that Jonathan be executed. Jonathan expresses his readiness to die (v. 44). The troops, however, protest and instead ransom Jonathan (v. 45). Although we do not know what such “ransom” entails, Jonathan’s life is spared.

What messages does her memory convey?

The two stories come from different settings and function as a critique within their context. Taken together, the stories of Jephthah’s daughter and of Jonathan also convey messages about community and protest. Jonathan’s story illustrates the power in community to discover ways to overturn rash pronouncements when it would cost a human life. Perhaps the legacy of Jephthah’s daughter resides in the formation of community that can protest. It begins with the women who gather annually and chant, making their voices heard.

—Tamara Cohn Eskenazi

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

Moses spoke to the heads of the Israelite tribes (30:2). Rabbi Moses Sofer, a Hungarian communal leader of the early 19th century, suggests that the Torah’s discussion of vows and oaths is addressed to the “heads of the Israelite tribes” because it is leaders who most often fail to fulfill their promises and commitments (cited in A.Y. Greenberg, Itturei Torah, 1985).

If a woman makes a vow (30:4). The Rabbis imagined that women made vows denying themselves certain foods, bathing, the use of cosmetics and jewelry, and sexual intercourse (BT N'darim 79a–b, 81b–82a), perhaps because these were things over which women had some control and which also gave them pleasure.

in her father’s household (30:4). According to Midrash Sifrei B'midbar on this verse, a young woman was still under her father's authority, even if she was not literally in her father's home when she made the vow. The medieval French commentator Rashi comments that the phrase "by reason of her youth" excludes both a very young girl, whose vows have no legal force, and a young woman who has reached the age of majority. An adult woman is not under her father's legal control, even if she is still living at home, and her father cannot annul her vows.

MATOT

But if her husband restrains her (30:9). BT N'darim 79a–b restricts a husband's power to annul his wife's vows to those of self-denial or that have an impact on the marital relationship. Depending on the interpreter, the husband's power of cancellation could be limited to vows that interfere with the couple's sexual relationship or could include any vow that might cause contention in the marriage (Adin Stein-saltz on N'darim 79b, citing R. Isaac DeTrani and R. Menachem Meiri). A vow to abstain from sexual intercourse could certainly be annulled by the husband.

*If an adult woman is living at home,
her father cannot annul her vows.*

The vow of a widow or of a divorced woman . . . shall be binding upon her (30:10). Since widows and divorcees are independent entities, no one is in a position to annul their vows. According to BT Gittin 79b, if a husband had annulled his wife's vows that had a negative impact on the marital relationship, the woman is obligated to fulfill those vows should she become a divorcee or widow. Once vows purely of self-denial have been annulled, however, they are cancelled permanently.

But if he annuls them after [the day] he finds out, he shall bear her guilt (30:16). The Rabbis were concerned that a woman's ability to make vows could harm her marriage. Mishnah Gittin 4:7 discusses a husband's decision to divorce his wife due to her vows, while BT Gittin 46a indicates that a husband may simply not want to be married to a woman who makes vows.

The discussion of women's vows in Numbers 30 indicates that women are, in principle, capable of making and fulfilling vows. The restrictions on the vows of a minor daughter or wife in no way negate this ability. Rather, the laws recognize a certain understanding of the father-daughter and husband-wife relationship, one in which the man has a significant amount of power over the woman. This power is tempered, at least in a marital relationship, by rabbinic legislation. Mishnah K'tubot 7:1–5 teaches that a husband who makes vows that compromise his wife's ability to eat certain foods or wear jewelry, to visit her family or attend social functions, or who upholds his wife's own vows of self-denial for a lengthy period of time should divorce her, since his actions make her life uncomfortable.

The Reubenites and the Gadites (32:1). Midrashic commentaries, such as Tanchuma, Matot 7, criticize the request of the Reubenites and the Gadites. They note that the tribes speak of providing shelter for their flocks before mentioning their children, an indication that they loved their possessions more than their families. Moses hints at their need to rethink their priorities; in his reply, he reverses the order, instructing them to "build towns for your children and [then] sheepfolds for your flocks" (32:24). According to Tanchuma, Matot 5, their inordinate love of possessions is what led these tribes to live outside of the land of Israel; as a result, they were exiled from their land before the other tribes (I Chronicles 5:26).

—Dvora E. Weisberg

Contemporary Reflection

I HAVE ALWAYS been amazed by the power of Kol Nidrei, the prayer that introduces the evening service on Yom Kippur. Each year, I marvel at the sheer number of people who put aside all other commitments in order to be in synagogue, to be present to hear these ancient words. What brings us in the doors? Is it the haunting melody? Is it the threefold repetition of the prayer that moves us toward an emotional crescendo? Or is it the message of this prayer, which promises to absolve us of our responsibility for any vows that we may make in the coming year?

When we make vows, we put into speech our deepest fears and most profound hopes. Like Hannah who vows to dedicate her son to the sanctuary if God grants her a son (I Samuel 1:11), many of us make various commitments to do certain things or give up certain things that we cherish, in order to avert danger or bring about a hoped-for future. Yet some vows are rash, regrettable, or unrealizable; some are made under duress. Kol Nidrei reminds us that we have the choice to keep or annul our vows, thus affirming our most basic rights to self-expression and self-determination. This is part of what gives both the prayer and its recitation its profound power.

Parashat Matot enumerates various regulations concerning the status of women's vows (30:3–17). It also describes the circumstances under which a woman's vow may be annulled. We read that if her father or husband hears the vow on the day that she makes it, the vow can be nullified. The woman's personal status—whether she is a child, married, or divorced—will determine the status and power of the vow and whether she may fulfill it. Although she possesses the ability to make a vow, she may have to abandon her oaths and vows if the male authority figure in her life hears them. Given that fact, what are her options? She could take her chances with vowing and being heard.

Or, to avoid her vow being annulled, she might either choose not to take on the responsibility involved in making an oath or a vow, or she might opt to make her vow but without anyone hearing her; in both of these options, she would be forced to follow, and be complicit in maintaining, the culture's attitude toward her desire for personal expression. She herself thus participates in her own silencing, because only by vowing without being heard, will she fulfill the mandate that her vow establishes. She acts by pretending that she has not acted. She can transgress the restrictions only by forcing herself to take part in them at the same time. She must betray herself to be true to herself.

How can we stimulate and support women who long to fulfill their dreams?

While we think we are free from these kinds of constraints, this is often not quite true. As mothers, when we chose to take emotional and physical care of our children, we voluntarily relinquish the freedom we might have enjoyed at an earlier time. Similarly, we may accept professional positions that do not sufficiently reflect our capabilities, in order to be available to support a beloved spouse, partner, or aging parent. We may not explicitly associate such situations with vow making or breaking, but in a certain important way, the relationship to vows exists. Like vow-making in the Bible, women's aspirations, spoken or not, are promises we make, even if only to ourselves. When we give them up because of external pressures, we pay a price.

On the one hand, we live in a time when, as women, we are blessedly free from the kind of controls that Numbers prescribes. On the other hand, we find ourselves within a web of relationships where we often give up what we had promised to ourselves, or we redirect our abilities. The stereotype of the Jewish mother may represent, in some ways, a woman's efforts to take power through the very vehicles that entrap her—by making a nice home, cooking gourmet meals, and having successful children.

MATOT

Some may see these concessions as choices; others may see them as abandonment of self. We want to fulfill our responsibilities and live up to our expectations as spouses, mothers, and daughters; but we also want to be heard, to play an active role in our communities, to see ourselves and to be seen as powerful. We are aware that our culture could not survive if we sometimes did not voluntarily place our own needs as secondary. Yet, we are not always aware of the price some of us pay for that choice.

We see in our society rising rates of depression, eating disorders, premature sexuality, and self-destructive behaviors. A 2002 report of the American Psychological Association indicates that of the 17 million Americans who suffer from depression yearly, "women are twice as likely as men to experience a major depressive episode. Depression may occur at any age during a woman's life with certain events like puberty, pregnancy, perimenopause, trauma, substance abuse and quality of relationships." The report also notes that current research shows that women typically "place their needs secondary to those of others." One cannot simplistically attribute depression to a single cause, but it is difficult not to wonder to what extent the thwarting of one's longings and hopes, either by implicit social pressures or explicit ones, plays a role.

How can we stimulate and support, rather than stifle, women who long to fulfill their ambitions and dreams, so that their vows to themselves—and others—can become a reality? As a Jewish community we are still working on answers to such questions, both in the personal and institutional realms. We no longer need to be complicit in the denial and abandonment of self that pervades our culture. Instead, we can speak honestly and openly about our lives and our choices. No longer must we voice our desires in an undertone, hoping that no one will hear. Instead, we can search to find—whether in studying the Torah or participating in the world—the truth of our lives that will help us to find the truth in God's teachings, so that we can live in a more just relationship with our loved ones and with our God.

—Jacqueline Koch Ellenson

Voices

Kol Nidrei, September 2001

Grace Schulman

Numbers 30

All vows are cancelled now,
all words undone like chains that snap, their lockets smashed.
All sentences cut short,

main clauses powerless to govern their dependents or lead the voice in prayer.
All syllables annulled.

Verbs lag. All images envisioned by blind eyes.
All penciled lines erased that trembling hands composed.

My court, a grove at sundown:
sun rays pour through stiff branches,
unearthly yet of earth;
stump of a fallen oak whose mate once flourished green and now looms red and yellow like towers burst into flame.

No ark with scrolls, no benches,
no prayer shawls, holy books,
or ram's horn. Only trees stand witness in this silence, and autumn's humid air

blurs a bark's crevices.
As this cloud turns to vapor,
all forms circle in smoke,
all promises unravel,

all pages torn to shreds and blown to drift in wind whose words cannot reveal the truth of what I've seen.

I'll Drop My Plea

Rivka Miriam (transl. Linda Stern Zisquit)

Numbers 30:4-16

I'll drop my plea
For I can no longer carry it.
Where will I drop it?
My plea sticks to me with dread.
My plea becomes mute out of fear.
Many years it clung to me.
Where should I drop it?
I whisper it a secret.
Out of fear it seals itself up.
Many years I carried my plea—
How can I drop it?

from In the Sudan

Mary Loving Blanchard

Numbers 30:4-16

The women reveal themselves
only at darkest moonless mid-night—where they learn some things, where they teach some things

where they watch from their homes, steal glances through keyholes, inside where they season soup with prayer and interpret nothing fearing prophecy

MATOT

Dissolve in Slow Motion

Alicia Suskin Ostriker

Numbers 30:10

When you watch a marriage
Dissolve, in slow motion,
Like a film, there is a point
Early on when the astute Observer understands nothing
Can prevent the undesired
End, not shrinks, or friends,
Or how-to-love books,
Or the decency or the will
Of the two protagonists
Who struggle gamely like lab
Mice dropped in a jar
Of something viscous: the Observer would rather snap
The marriage like a twig, Speed the suffering up, but
The rules of the lab forbid.
Other rules govern decay
From within; so she just watches.

The little paws claw
Then cease, the furred
Bubbles of lungs stop.
The creatures get rigid.
Has something been measured?
It all gets thrown away.

from Songs of a Foreign Woman

Lea Goldberg (transl. Rachel Tzvia Back)

Numbers 31:13–18

I am green and replete like a song that has passed through the grass
I am soft and deep like a bird's nest.
I am from long ago,
from a forest that taught me to breathe from the languor of lovers asleep in the grass locked in each other's arms.

I am from there—
from the village of small winds.
On the last hilltop there stood a windmill and the sky hung on its wings clouds mixed with smoke.
And the wind came and the wind went.
I am from a village beating a rhythm on wooden spoons
I am from there.

Mother Earth, Well Worn, Sun Washed

Anna Margolin (transl. Adrienne Cooper)

Numbers 32:1–5

Mother earth, well worn, sun washed
Both slave and mistress am I beloved
Out of me, the humble and dejected
You grow, you push your roots through me
And like the blazing stars, like the flame of
the sun
In long blind silences I run
Through your roots, in your branches
And half awake, and half in dream
I seek the sky through you.

Listen to the Bird

Laya Firestone Seghi

Numbers 32:1–27

Listen to the bird
Flying
Singing
Signaling with sound
Or song
Traveling from one heart
To another.

After many miles of silence
A sound
One small signal
Starts circulation
On the desert of the soul.

The wagons have been dismembered
Wheels rolled into sand
Bones unburied
And what was once owned Strewn about, no longer
Part of household or home.
Dried wood lies bleached in the sun
And there are no words
To leap like birds
With messages of how the world turns.

What is the sound?
Simple beyond recognition
It persists
Like water hitting the stone
And wherever the sound rings
The shape of the land
Takes form.

מְסֵאִי ◆ Mas'ei

NUMBERS 33:1–36:13

The Journey's End

PARASHAT MAS’EI (“marches”) begins with exactly that: a review of Israel’s travels through the wilderness. Numbers 33 presents a step-by-step itinerary describing the journey of the Israelites from the time they left Egypt to their arrival in the plains of Moab. A number of places serve as markers not merely of a geographical itinerary but also of experiences that shaped, and at times transformed, the Israelites from slaves to a people ready to possess the Promised Land.

After Numbers 33 recounts the travels of the past, Numbers 34–36 turn to the future; these units provide details about how Israel should function as a nation in its own land. As Hara E. Person notes, the parashah is about boundaries, both geographic and social (The Women’s Torah Commentary, ed. Elyse Goldstein, 2000, p. 321). Specifically, God delineates the borders of the land and then appoints leaders from each tribe to oversee the distribution of each tribal portion.

After God and Moses assign the tribes their territories, the focus falls on the one tribe that is noticeably absent from the list: the Levites. Instead of possessing their own portion of land, the Levites will receive forty-eight cities in which to dwell. Since six of these cities will be set aside as cities of refuge for those guilty of unintentional homicide, God’s speech turns to a definition of murder, the requirements for witnesses in capital cases, and other relevant rules to ensure safety and equity.

The book of Numbers concludes by revisiting the case of the daughters of Zelophehad, with a stipulation added to ensure that the ancestral territories they inherit will always belong to their tribe, Manasseh.

At the conclusion of the book of Numbers, the people stand at the plains of Moab, poised to enter the Promised Land. Here, the story of

Two sets of five women form the bookends of Israel’s journey from slavery.

Israel’s journey ends. (The book of Deuteronomy—which is composed almost entirely of Moses’ speeches—does not carry the story further except in its final scene, the death of Moses.)

Although not visible in the travel accounts recorded in this parashah, women come to the fore at the end of the book, with the story about Mahlah, Tirzah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Noah, the five daughters of Zelophehad who are entitled to inherit his land (Numbers 27). In Numbers 36, leaders of their clan raise a concern: the land might be lost to the tribe if the women marry men from another tribe. Moses solves the problem by restricting the group from which the daughters may choose a spouse. Even though Numbers 36 restricts their marriage options to those of their tribe, it also guarantees that the five women will have what they demanded in 27:4—an inheritance among their kin. In addition, and as a result, their names are perpetuated in Israel's story.

The appearance of these five women at the conclusion of Numbers mirrors the reference to five women at the beginning of Exodus:

Shiphrah and Puah, Moses' unnamed mother and sister (later identified as Jochebed and Miriam), and Pharaoh's daughter (Exodus 1–2), all of whom engaged in saving children's lives, Moses' life in particular. These two sets of five courageous and resourceful women thus form the bookends of Israel's journey from slavery.

—*Tamara Cohn Eskenazi
Elizabeth Goldstein*

Outline—

I. REMEMBERING THE JOURNEY (33:1–56)

- A. The journey from Egypt (vv. 1–37)
- B. The death of Aaron (vv. 38–40)
- C. The journey to Moab (vv. 41–49)
- D. Directives for the future (vv. 50–56)

II. PREPARING FOR THE FUTURE (34:1–35:34)

- A. Setting the boundaries of the Promised Land (34:1–15)
- B. Appointing leaders to oversee land allotment (34:16–29)
- C. Building a just infrastructure: cities of refuge (35:1–34)

III. SECURING LAND AND LIMITS FOR ZELOPHEHAD'S DAUGHTERS (36:1–12)

- A. The problem: land might transfer to another tribe (vv. 1–4)
- B. The solution: heiresses must marry within the tribe (vv. 5–9)
- C. The resolution: the daughters marry within their tribe (vv. 10–12)

IV. CONCLUSION (36:13)

33:1

These were the marches of the Israelites who started out from the land of Egypt, troop by troop, in the charge of Moses and Aaron.² Moses recorded the starting points of their various marches as directed by יהוה. Their marches, by starting points, were as follows:

³They set out from Rameses in the first month, on the fifteenth day of the first month. It was on the morrow of the passover offering that the Israelites started out defiantly, in plain view of all the לג אלה מסע בנישראל אשר יצאו מארץ מצרים לצבאותם ביד משה ואחרון: ² ויקتب משה את מוצאיםם למשיעיהם על פי יהוה ואלה מסיעיהם לモצאיםם:

³ ויסעו מרעמסט בחדש הראשון בחמלה עשר יום לחודש הראשון ממחרת הפסח יצאו בני ישראל ביד רמה לעני כל-

Remembering the Journey (33:1–56)

This unit reviews the Israelites' journey from Egypt to their arrival in the plains of Moab. After listing the forty-two places that Israel stopped during their journey, the unit concludes with God's instructions about the future: once they possess the Promised Land, the Israelites must destroy the objects associated with foreign worship and apportion the land according to the size of the individual tribes or clans.

THE JOURNEY FROM EGYPT (33:1–37)

This section contains the Torah's longest continuous list of the places where the Israelites encamped. To this day, the location of many of these places eludes biblical scholars and archeologists; the list is in tension with other accounts of the journey and may include symbolic elements no longer detectable. The narratives of Exodus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy also mention many of the places recounted in this section, but sometimes in a different order. Many scholars think that the editors of the Torah used this ancient list in Numbers 33 as a guide by which to arrange the individual episodes of Exodus and Numbers. Certain places evoke incidents recounted in other biblical narratives, whereas some remain otherwise unknown.

2. Moses recorded the starting points. This is one of very few places where Moses is actually credited with writing parts of what becomes the Torah.

3. They set out. Heb. vayis'u, which is a verb form of mase'i, the name of this parashah, and means “they traveled.” This verb punctuates the itinerary with its persistent repetition.

in the first month, on the fifteenth day of the first month. The day that they left Egypt, the 15th of Nisan, corresponds to the first day of Passover, when Jews commemorate that exodus (see also Exodus 12).

- This parashah constitutes the philosophical basis for ongoing authoritative interpretation.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 1030

- This amendment shows how an idea may require fine-tuning even after it becomes law.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 1032

- This law shows compassion for a person who accidentally kills another human being.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 1030

- Oh God,... / Finally, for the first time in my life, / you gave me something I wanted.

VOICES ► 1034

Egyptians.⁴ The Egyptians meanwhile were burying those among them whom יהוה had struck down, every [male] first-born—whereby executed judgment on their gods.

⁵The Israelites set out from Rameses and encamped at Succoth. ⁶They set out from Succoth and encamped at Etham, which is on the edge of the wilderness. ⁷They set out from Etham and turned about toward Pi-hahiroth, which faces Baal-zephon, and they encamped before Migdol. ⁸They set out from Pene-hahiroth and passed through the sea into the wilderness; and they made a three-days' journey in the wilderness of Etham and encamped at Marah. ⁹They set out from Marah and came to Elim. There were twelve springs in Elim and seventy palm trees, so they encamped there. ¹⁰They set out from Elim and encamped by the Sea of Reeds. ¹¹They set out from the Sea of Reeds and encamped in the wilderness of Sin. ¹²They set out from the wilderness of Sin and encamped at Dophkah. ¹³They set out from Dophkah and encamped at Alush. ¹⁴They set out from Alush and encamped at Rephidim; it was there that the people had no water to drink. ¹⁵They set out from Rephidim and encamped in the wilderness of Sinai. ¹⁶They set out from the wilderness of Sinai and encamped at Kibroth-hattaavah. ¹⁷They set out from Kibroth-hattaavah and encamped at Hazereth. ¹⁸They set out from Hazereth and encamped at Rithmah. ¹⁹They set out from Rithmah and encamped at Rimmon-perez. ²⁰They set out from Rimmon-perez and encamped at

מִצְרַיִם: ⁴ וּמִצְרַיִם מִקְבָּרִים אֵת אֲשֶׁר הַפָּה יְהוָה בָּהֶם בֶּלְבָכֹר וּבָאַלְהִיָּה
עַשָּׂה יְהוָה שְׁפָטִים:
⁵ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל מִרְעָמֶס וַיְחִנּוּ
בְּסֶבֶת: ⁶ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִסְכָּת וַיְחִנּוּ בְּאֶתְم אֲשֶׁר
בְּקָצָה הַמִּדְבָּר: ⁷ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִאֶתְמ וַיִּשְׁבַּ
עַל־פִּי הַחִירָת אֲשֶׁר עַל־פָּנִי בַּעַל צְפֹן
וַיְחִנּוּ לְפָנִי מָגָדָל: ⁸ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִפְנֵי הַחִירָת
וַיַּעֲבֹרוּ בַּתּוֹרַת־הַיּוֹם הַמִּדְבָּרָה וַיָּלִכּוּ דָּרָךְ
שֶׁלְשָׁת יְמִינָה בַּמִּדְבָּר אֶתְמ וַיְחִנּוּ בְּמִדְבָּר:
⁹ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִפְרָה וַיָּבָאוּ אַלְמָה וּבְאַלְמָם
שְׁתִים עַשְׂרָה עֵינַת מִים וּשְׁבָעִים תְּמֻרִים
וַיְחִנּוּ שָׁם: ¹⁰ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מַאֲלָם וַיְחִנּוּ עַל־יָם
סּוֹף: ¹¹ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִים־טָוף וַיְחִנּוּ בְּמִקְבָּרְתִּין:
¹² וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִמִּקְבָּרְתִּין וַיְחִנּוּ בְּדָרְפָּקָה:
¹³ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִדָּרְפָּקָה וַיְחִנּוּ בְּאַלְוִשׁ: ¹⁴ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ
מַאֲלָוֶשׁ וַיְחִנּוּ בְּרַפִּידָם וּלְאַ-הִיא שֵׁם מִים
לְעֵם לְשִׁתּוֹת: ¹⁵ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מַרְפִּידָם וַיְחִנּוּ
בְּמִקְבָּרְתִּין: ¹⁶ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִמִּקְבָּרְתִּין וַיְחִנּוּ
בְּקִבְרַת הַתְּאֹוָה: ¹⁷ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִקְבָּרֹת הַתְּאֹוָה
וַיְחִנּוּ בְּחַצְרָתָה: ¹⁸ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִחַצְרָתָה וַיְחִנּוּ
בְּרַתְמָה: ¹⁹ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִרְתָּמָה וַיְחִנּוּ בְּרַפְּנוֹ
פָּרֶץ: ²⁰ וַיֵּשְׁעוּ מִרְמָן פָּרֶץ וַיְחִנּוּ בְּלִבְנָה:

5. Rameses. Rameses is one of the cities that the Israelites are said to have built when they were slaves (Exodus 1:11) and also the place where they observed the passover sacrifice and experienced the deliverance that the annual Passover festival commemorates (see above, v. 3).

8–9. Marah is noteworthy for its bitter water, which Moses sweetens with God's help; the name is also memorable as the place where the Israelites rebelled against God for the first time (see Exodus 15:22–25; Numbers 20 reflects a similar episode about the waters of Meribah).

14–15. Rephidim. This is where the Israelites fought against Amalek (see Exodus 17).

Libnah.²¹ They set out from Libnah and encamped at Rissah.²² They set out from Rissah and encamped at Kehelath.²³ They set out from Kehelath and encamped at Mount Shepher.²⁴ They set out from Mount Shepher and encamped at Haradah.²⁵ They set out from Haradah and encamped at Makheloth.²⁶ They set out from Makheloth and encamped at Tahath.²⁷ They set out from Tahath and encamped at Terah.²⁸ They set out from Terah and encamped at Mithkah.²⁹ They set out from Mithkah and encamped at Hashmonah.³⁰ They set out from Hashmonah and encamped at Moseroth.³¹ They set out from Moseroth and encamped at Bene-jaakan.³² They set out from Bene-jaakan and encamped at Hor-haggidgad.³³ They set out from Hor-haggidgad and encamped at Jotbath.³⁴ They set out from Jotbath and encamped at Abronah.³⁵ They set out from Abronah and encamped at Ezion-geber.³⁶ They set out from Ezion-geber and encamped in the wilderness of Zin, that is, Kadesh.³⁷ They set out from Kadesh and encamped at Mount Hor, on the edge of the land of Edom.

³⁸ Aaron the priest ascended Mount Hor at the command of יהוה and died there, in the fortieth year after the Israelites had left the land of Egypt, on the first day of the fifth month.³⁹ Aaron was a hundred and twenty-three years old when he died on Mount Hor.⁴⁰ And the Canaanite, king of Arad, who dwelt in the Negeb, in the land of Canaan, learned of the coming of the Israelites.

36. The wilderness of Zin, also known as Kadesh, is where Miriam died (20:1); however, the itinerary notice here does not mention this event. (Contrast that silence with the mention of her brother Aaron's death in vv. 38–39.)

THE DEATH OF AARON (33:38–40)

This account provides Aaron's age as well as the day and month of his death. He died at age 123, which is less than Sarah's age (127 years) but more than Moses' (120 years). This is one of three death notices for Aaron (see also 20:24–26, which includes more details, and Deuteronomy 10:6, which reports that he died in Moserah and not on Mount Hor). According to a non-biblical tradition, Aaron's tomb is located on an isolated peak in the southern Jordanian desert of Petra. Jewish pilgrims have ascended this mountain for centuries and left their names in inscriptions and registers at the tomb.

²¹ וַיֵּצְא מִלְבָנָה וַיָּחֶן בֶּרֶסֶת : ²² וַיֵּצְא מִרְסָה וַיָּחֶן בְּקַהְלָתָה : ²³ וַיֵּצְא מִקְהָלָתָה וַיָּחֶן בְּהַרְשָׁפֵר : ²⁴ וַיֵּצְא מִהַּרְשָׁפֵר וַיָּחֶן בְּחַרְדָּה : ²⁵ וַיֵּצְא מִחְרָדָה וַיָּחֶן בְּמִקְהָלָת : ²⁶ וַיֵּצְא מִמִּקְהָלָת וַיָּחֶן בְּתָחָת : ²⁷ וַיֵּצְא מִתָּחָת וַיָּחֶן בְּתָרָח : ²⁸ וַיֵּצְא מִתָּרָח וַיָּחֶן בְּמִתָּקָה : ²⁹ וַיֵּצְא מִמִּתָּקָה וַיָּחֶן בְּחַשְׁמָנָה : ³⁰ וַיֵּצְא מִחְשָׁמָנָה וַיָּחֶן בְּמִסְרוֹת : ³¹ וַיֵּצְא מִמִּסְרוֹת וַיָּחֶן בְּבָנִי יַעֲקֹן : ³² וַיֵּצְא מִבָּנִי יַעֲקֹן וַיָּחֶן בְּהַגָּדָר : ³³ וַיֵּצְא מִחְדָּר הַגָּדָר וַיָּחֶן בִּיטְבָתָה : ³⁴ וַיֵּצְא מִטִּבָּתָה וַיָּחֶן בְּעַכְיָה : ³⁵ וַיֵּצְא מַעֲבָרָה וַיָּחֶן בְּעַצְיָן גָּבָר וַיָּחֶן בְּמִדְבָּרִצָּן גָּבָר : ³⁶ וַיֵּצְא מִעַצְיָן גָּבָר וַיָּחֶן בְּהַוָּא קָדֵש : ³⁷ וַיֵּצְא מִקָּדֵש וַיָּחֶן בְּהַר בְּקָצָה אֶרֶץ אֲדוֹם : ³⁸ וַיָּעַל אֱהֹרֶن חֲכֹהן אֶל-הַר הַהָר עַל-פִּי יהֹה וַיָּמָת שָׁם בְּשִׁנְתַּה הָאַרְבָּעִים לְצִאת בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל מִאֶרֶץ מִצְרָיִם בְּחַדְשַׁ הַחַמִּישִׁי בְּאַחֲרֵךְ לְחֹזֶש : ³⁹ וְאַחֲרֵן בְּנֵשֶׁלֶשׁ וְעַשְׁרִים וָמֵאת שָׁנָה בְּמִתָּתוֹ בְּהַר הַהָר : ⁴⁰ וַיִּשְׁמַע הַכֹּנְעָנִי מֶלֶךְ עֶרֶד וְהַוָּא-יִשְׁבֶּ בְּנֶגֶב בְּאֶרֶץ בְּנָעַן בְּבָא בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל :

⁴¹They set out from Mount Hor and encamped at Zalmonah. ⁴²They set out from Zalmonah and encamped at Punon. ⁴³They set out from Punon and encamped at Oboth. ⁴⁴They set out from Oboth and encamped at Iye-abarim, in the territory of Moab. ⁴⁵They set out from Iyim and encamped at Dibon-gad. ⁴⁶They set out from Dibon-gad and encamped at Almon-diblathaim. ⁴⁷They set out from Almon-diblathaim and encamped in the hills of Abarim, before Nebo. ⁴⁸They set out from the hills of Abarim and encamped in the steppes of Moab, at the Jordan near Jericho; ⁴⁹they encamped by the Jordan from Beth-jeshimoth as far as Abel-shittim, in the steppes of Moab.

⁵⁰In the steppes of Moab, at the Jordan near Jericho, spoke to Moses, saying: ⁵¹Speak to the Israelite people and say to them: When you cross the Jordan into the land of Canaan, ⁵²you shall dispossess all the inhabitants of the land; you shall destroy all their figured objects; you shall demolish all their molten images, and you shall demolish all their cult places. ⁵³And you shall take possession of ⁴¹וַיֵּסֹעُ מִזְרָחָ הַהָּר וַיַּחֲנוּ בְצַלְמָנָה:

⁴²וַיֵּסֹעُ מִצְלָמָנָה וַיַּחֲנוּ בְפַפְנֵן: ⁴³וַיֵּסֹעַ
מִפְפֵן וַיַּחֲנוּ בְאֶבֶת: ⁴⁴וַיֵּסֹעַ מִאֶבֶת וַיַּחֲנוּ
בְּעֵיי הָעֲבָרִים בְּגֻבּוֹל מוֹאָב: ⁴⁵וַיֵּסֹעַ
מַעֲיָם וַיַּחֲנוּ בְּדִיבָּן גָּד: ⁴⁶וַיֵּסֹעַ מִדִּיבָּן
גָּד וַיַּחֲנוּ בְּעַלְמָן דְּבָלְתִּימָה: ⁴⁷וַיֵּסֹעַ
מַעַלְמָן דְּבָלְתִּימָה וַיַּחֲנוּ בְּהַרְיִ הָעֲבָרִים
לִפְנֵי נְבוֹ: ⁴⁸וַיֵּסֹעַ מִהָּרִי הָעֲבָרִים וַיַּחֲנוּ
בְּעֶרֶבֶת מוֹאָב עַל יְרֵקָן יְרֵחוֹ: ⁴⁹וַיַּחֲנוּ עַל-
הַיְרֵדָן מִבֵּית הַיְשָׁמֹת עַד אֶבֶל הַשְׁטִים בְּעֶרֶבֶת מוֹאָב: ס

⁵⁰וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹמֶשָּׁה בְּעֶרֶבֶת מוֹאָב
עַל יְרֵדָן יְרֵחוֹ לְאָמֹר: ⁵¹דַּבֵּר אֶל-בְּנֵי
יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמַרְתָּ אֲלֵיכֶם כִּי אַתֶּם עַבְרִים
אֶת-הַיְرֵדָן אֶל-אָרֶץ כְּנֻעַן: ⁵²וְהִרְשָׁתֶם
אֶת-כָּל-יִשְׂרָאֵל הָאָרֶץ מִפְנִיכֶם וְאָבְרַתֶּם
אֶת בְּלָמְשָׁפִיתֶם וְאֶת בְּלָצְלָמֵי מִסְכְּתֶם
תִּאֲבְדוּ וְאֶת בְּלָבְמוֹתֶם תִּשְׁמִידוּ:
⁵³וְהִרְשָׁתֶם אֶת-הָאָרֶץ וְיִשְׁבְּתָתֶם בָּהּ

THE JOURNEY TO MOAB (33:41–49)

The last stations mentioned in this list are those that lead to the steppes (plains) of Moab, the final stop for Moses. Some of these stopping places appear also in the description of the Israelites' travels in Numbers 21. Jacob Milgrom suggests that the list in Numbers 21, describing the journey, was edited to conform to this list (Numbers, 1990, p. 175). The compilation in this parashah mentions neither the rebellious words of the Israelites in Numbers 21 nor the deadly snakes that God sent to punish the people.

49. steppes of Moab. This area east of the Jordan River, also sometimes known as the plains of Moab, marks the Israelites' final stop before entering the land. According to Deuteronomy, Moses speaks his final words to the people in this location. He will die here, atop Mount Nebo.

DIRECTIVES FOR THE FUTURE (33:50–56)

God instructs Moses to proclaim an entrance strategy, describing the protocol concerning the inhabitants of Canaan. The instructions are concise and severe, calling upon the Israelites to dispossess the inhabitants completely; to destroy figured objects, molten images, and all worship places; and then to settle in the land. They are instructed to divide the land in proportion to the size of the tribes (or perhaps of the clans) once they enter the land. They are warned that God would destroy them should they neglect to destroy all the inhabitants. The rationale for complete destruction of the inhabitants is the danger that their presence would pose for Israel's future. According to Numbers' ideology, as well as Deuteronomy's, Israel cannot survive if it is subject to the influence and presence of Canaanites. The perspective of this disturbing the land and settle in it, for I have assigned the land to you to possess.⁵⁴ You shall apportion the land among yourselves by lot, clan by clan: with larger groups increase the share, with smaller groups reduce the share. Wherever the lot falls for it, that shall be its location. You shall have your portions according to your ancestral tribes.⁵⁵ But if you do not dispossess the inhabitants of the land, those whom you allow to remain shall be stings in your eyes and thorns in your sides, and they shall harass you in the land in which you live;⁵⁶ so that I will do to you what I planned to do to them.

34 spoke to Moses, saying: ²Instruct the Israelite people and say to them: When you enter the land of Canaan, this is the land that shall fall to you as your portion, the land of Canaan with its various boundaries:

³Your southern sector shall extend from the wilderness of Zin alongside Edom. Your southern boundary shall start on the east from the tip of the Dead Sea. ⁴Your boundary shall then turn to pass south of the ascent of Akrabbim and continue to Zin, and its limits shall be south of Kadesh-barnea, reaching Hazar-addar and continuing to Azmon. ⁵From Azmon the boundary shall turn toward the Wadi of Egypt and terminate at the Sea.

mandate reflects an understanding of Israel as small, inhabiting a landscape surrounded by (and infiltrated by) a stronger and more numerous people, the Canaanites. Historically speaking, the Canaanites and the Israelites were closely related. For example, what we know of contemporaneous Canaanite languages is that (like Phoenician to the north, and Moabite to the east) they were very close to Hebrew. Indeed, historians argue that the separation of Israelites from other Canaanites was a slow process. Some scholars maintain that the Bible is most severe with regard to Canaanites because Canaanite culture is most easily confused with that of Israel, as it attempts to establish a distinct identity. (See also at Deuteronomy 7:1–5, 24; 12:29–31.)

כִּי לְכֶם נָתַתִּי אֶת־הָאָרֶץ לְרַשֵּׁת אַתָּה: ⁵⁴ וְהַתְּנַחֲלֹתֶם אֶת־הָאָרֶץ בְּגֻরְלֵל לְמִשְׁפְּחֹתֶיכֶם לְרַב תַּרְבּוֹ אֶת־ינְחַלְתֶּךָ וְלִמְעֵט תִּמְעִיט אֶת־ינְחַלְתֶּךָ אֶל אֲשֶׁר־יֵצָא לֹו שְׁמַה הַגּוּרֵל לוֹ יְהִי לִמְטוֹת אֶבֶתְיכֶם תַּחֲנַחַלְוּ: ⁵⁵ וְאִם־לَا תָּרִישׁוּ אֶת־יִשְׂבֵּן הָאָרֶץ מִפְנִיכֶם וְהִיֵּה אֲשֶׁר תֹּתוֹרְיוּ מִמֶּה לְשָׁבִים בְּעֵינֵיכֶם וְלֹצָנִים בְּצִדְיכֶם וְצִרוּ אֶתְכֶם עַל־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אַתֶּם יְשִׁבְתֶּם בָּה: ⁵⁶ וְהִיֵּה כַּאֲשֶׁר דָּמַיָּתִי לְעֵשֹׂות לָהֶם אָשָׁה לְכֶם: פ

לְד וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִים לְאָמֵר: ² צֹו אֶת־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָמַרְתָּ אֲלֵיכֶם כִּי־אַתֶּם בָּאָיִם אֶל־הָאָרֶץ בְּנֵעַן זֶאת הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר תִּפְלֶל לְכֶם בְּנְחָלָה אָרֶץ בְּנֵעַן לְגַבְלָתֶיהָ ³ וְהִיֵּה לְכֶם פָּאַת־נֶגֶב מִפְּדִיבָּר־צָן עַל־יִקְרָא אֲדֹום וְהִיֵּה לְכֶם גָּבוֹל נֶגֶב מִקְנַתְּךָ יִמְרָא הַמְּלָח קָרְמָה: ⁴ וַיַּסַּב לְכֶם גָּבוֹל מִנֶּגֶב לְמַעַלָּה עֲקָרְבִּים וַיַּעֲבֵר עַנְהָה וְהִיֵּה וְהִיֵּ אֲדֹר וַיַּעֲבֵר עַצְמָנָה: ⁵ וַיַּסַּב גָּבוֹל מִעַצְמָנָה נְחָלָה מִצְרָיִם וְהִיֵּה תֹּצְאָתָיו הַיּוֹמָה:

Preparing for the Future (34:1–35:34)

Tin this unit, composed entirely of God's words to Moses, God marks the specific borders of Canaan, so that the people will learn the extent of the territory that they will inherit. Since Moses will not be accompanying the people across the Jordan, Joshua and Eleazar will lead the appointed tribal leaders in the division of lands. Discussion of external boundaries and tribal chiefs quickly moves to laws concerning the internal workings of the community. Numbers 35 addresses the practical and ritual issues of homicide that will unfortunately, yet inevitably, arise when the people establish new societies in Canaan.

⁶For the western boundary you shall have the coast of the Great Sea; that shall serve as your western boundary.

⁷This shall be your northern boundary: Draw a line from the Great Sea to Mount Hor; ⁸from Mount Hor draw a line to Lebo-hamath, and let the boundary reach Zedad. ⁹The boundary shall then run to Ziphron and terminate at Hazar-enan. That shall be your northern boundary.

¹⁰For your eastern boundary you shall draw a line from Hazar-enan to Shepham. ¹¹From Shepham the boundary shall descend to Riblah on the east side of Ain; from there the boundary shall continue downward and abut on the eastern slopes of the Sea of Chinnereth. ¹²The boundary shall then descend along the Jordan and terminate at the Dead Sea.

That shall be your land as defined by its boundaries on all sides.

¹³Moses instructed the Israelites, saying: This is the land you are to receive by lot as your hereditary portion, which יהוה has commanded to be given to the nine and a half tribes. ¹⁴For the Reubenite tribe by its ancestral houses, the Gadite tribe by its ancestral houses, and the half-tribe of Manasseh have already received their portions: ¹⁵those two and a half tribes have received their portions across the Jordan, opposite Jericho, on the east, the orient side.

¹⁶ spoke to Moses, saying: ¹⁷These are the names of the commissioners through whom the land shall be apportioned for you: Eleazar the priest and Joshua son of Nun. ¹⁸And you shall also take a chieftain from each tribe through whom the land

⁶ וְגַבּוֹל יָם וְהִיא לְכֶם חֵימָה הַגָּדוֹל וְגַבּוֹל
זֹהַיְהִיה לְכֶם גַּבּוֹל יָם:
⁷ וְהִיא יְהִיָּה לְכֶם גַּבּוֹל צְפּוֹן מִן־הַיָּם הַגָּדוֹל
תִּתְאֹו לְכֶם הַר הַרְחֵב: ⁸ מִהָּר הַרְחֵב תִּתְאֹו
לְבָא חֲמָת וְהִיו תְּוֹצִאת הַגָּדוֹל צָדְךָ:
⁹ וַיַּצֵּא הַגָּדוֹל זְפּוֹנָה וְהִיו תְּוֹצִאתְךָ חֶרֶב
עַיִּין זֹהַיְהִיה לְכֶם גַּבּוֹל צְפּוֹן:
¹⁰ וְהַתְּאֹוּתָם לְכֶם לְגַבּוֹל קָדְמָה מִחְצָר
עַיִּין שְׁפָמָה: ¹¹ וַיַּרְדֵּה הַגָּבוֹל מִשְׁפָמָה הַרְבָּלָה
מִקְדָּם לְעַיִּין וַיַּרְדֵּה הַגָּדוֹל וּמִתְהָעֵל בְּתַחַת יָם
בְּנֵרֶת קָדְמָה: ¹² וַיַּרְדֵּה הַגָּבוֹל הַיְרָדָנה וְהִיו
תוֹצִאתְךָ יָם הַמֶּלֶח
זֹאת תְּהִיָּה לְכֶם הָאָרֶץ לְגַבּוֹלְתָּה סְבִיבָה:
¹³ וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶת־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאֹמֵר זֹאת
הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר תִּתְחַנְּלָו אֶת־הַבָּגּוֹל אֲשֶׁר
עֲזָה יְהֹוָה לְתַת לְתַשְׁעַת הַמְּפֻטוֹת וּחְצִי
הַמְּפֻטוֹה: ¹⁴ כִּי לְקָחוּ מִטְהָה בְּנֵי קָרְאוּבָנִי
לְבֵית אֲבֹתֶם וּמִטְהָה בְּנֵי־הַגּוּדִי לְבֵית אֲבֹתֶם
וּחְצִי מִטְהָה מִנְשָׁה לְקָחוּ נְחַלְתֶּם: ¹⁵ שְׁנִי
הַמְּפֻטוֹת וּחְצִי הַמְּפֻטוֹה לְקָחוּ נְחַלְתֶּם מִעַבְרָה
לִירְחֹן יְרֹחוֹ קָדְמָה מִזְרָחָה: ¹⁶ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֶל־מֹשֶׁה לְאֹמֵר: ¹⁷ אֶל־
שְׁמוֹת הָאָנָשִׁים אֲשֶׁר־ינְחַלְתִּי לְכֶם אֶת־
הָאָרֶץ אֶל־עֹזֶר הַפְּתַח וַיְהִושָׁעַ בְּנֵנָנוּ:
¹⁸ וּנְשִׁיאָ אֶחָד נְשִׁיאָ אֶחָד מִמְּפֻטוֹה תְּקַחַ

SETTING THE BOUNDARIES OF THE PROMISED LAND (34:1–15)

The borders of Canaan that this section outlines correspond approximately to the borders listed in Joshua 15 and Ezekiel 47, although the Ezekiel description utilizes place names that were probably more familiar to a post-exilic audience.

APPOINTING LEADERS TO OVERSEE LAND ALLOTMENT (34:16–29)

God commands Moses to appoint Joshua and Eleazar to oversee the tribal leaders in the apportioning of land. Why not select Caleb to work with Joshua? After all, Joshua and Caleb had been partners previously, as when they brought back a favor-shall be apportioned.¹⁹ These are the names of the commissioners: from the tribe of Judah: Caleb son of Jephunneh.²⁰ From the Simeonite tribe: Samuel son of Ammihud.²¹ From the tribe of Benjamin: Elidad son of Chislon.²² From the Danite tribe: a chieftain, Bukki son of Jogli.²³ For the descendants of Joseph: from the Manassite tribe: a chieftain, Hanniel son of Ephod;²⁴ and from the Ephraimite tribe: a chieftain, Kemuel son of Shiptan.²⁵ From the Zebulunite tribe: a chieftain, Elizaphan son of Parnach.²⁶ From the Issacharite tribe: a chieftain, Paltiel son of Azzan.²⁷ From the Asherite tribe: a chieftain, Ahihud son of Shelomi.²⁸ From the Naphtalite tribe: a chieftain, Pedahel son of Ammihud.

²⁹It was these whom יהוה designated to allot portions to the Israelites in the land of Canaan.

35 spoke to Moses in the steppes of Moab at the Jordan near Jericho, saying:² Instruct the Israelite people to assign, out of the holdings apportioned to them, towns for the Levites to dwell in; you shall also assign to the Levites pasture land around their towns.³ The towns shall be theirs to dwell in, and the pasture shall be for the cattle they

לְנַחַל אֶת-הָאָרֶץ: ¹⁹ וְאֵלֶּה שְׁמוֹת
הָאָנָשִׁים לְמַטָּה יְהוָה בְּלֵב בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל:
²⁰ וְלְמַטָּה בְּנֵי שְׁמֻעוֹן שְׁמוֹאֵל בֶּן-עַמִּיחֹוד: ²¹ לְמַטָּה בְּנֵימָן אַלְיָד בֶּן-כְּסֹלוֹן: ²² וְלְמַטָּה בְּנֵי-קָנָעָן נְשִׂיא בְּקַי בֶּן-
יְגָלִי: ²³ לְבָנֵי יוֹסֵף לְמַטָּה בְּנֵי-מִנְשָׁה נְשִׂיא
חֲנִיאָל בֶּן-אַפְּדָה: ²⁴ וְלְמַטָּה בְּנֵי-אַפְּרִים
נְשִׂיא קְמוֹאֵל בֶּן-שְׁפָטָן: ²⁵ וְלְמַטָּה בְּנֵי
זְבוּלֹן נְשִׂיא אַלְיָצְפָּן בֶּן-פְּרָנָר: ²⁶ וְלְמַטָּה
בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל יְשָׁכָר נְשִׂיא פְּלִיטִיאָל בֶּן-עַזְנָן: ²⁷ וְלְמַטָּה בְּנֵי-אָשָׁר נְשִׂיא אֲחִיהָוד
בֶּן-שְׁלָמִי: ²⁸ וְלְמַטָּה בְּנֵי-נְפָתָלִי נְשִׂיא
פְּרָדָה אָלֶל בֶּן-עַמְּיָהּוֹד:
²⁹ אֵלֶּה אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה יְהוָה לְנַחַל אֶת-בְּנֵי
יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּאָרֶץ בְּנֵעַן: פ

לָה וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹמֶשֶׁה בְּעֶרֶב מֹאֲב
עַל-יְרֵקָן יְרֵחָו לְאמֹר: ² צֹו אֶת-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
וְנַתְנוּ לְלִילָם מִנְחָלָת אֲחַתָּם עָרִים לְשִׁבְטָה:
וּמְגַנֵּשׁ לְעִירִת סְבִיבָתֵינוּם תַּתְנוּ לְלִילָם:
³ וְהִי הָעָרִים לָהֶם לְשִׁבְטָה וּמְגַרְשִׁים
יְהִי לְבַבְּמִתְּמָתָם וּלְרַכְשָׁם וּלְכָל חִיתָם:

able report after the scouting expedition; hence they are the only non-Levites in the Exodus generation who will live to enter the Promised Land (Numbers 14). Here, God chooses a priest, not another military leader, to help in the delicate process of dividing territory. As a priest, Eleazar will not inherit land; thus his leadership is both logical and invaluable.

BUILDING A JUST INFRASTRUCTURE: CITIES OF REFUGE (35:1–34)

Having delineated the land's boundaries, the Torah turns to guidelines for living within those boundaries. Any emerging social group must incorporate explicit directions for dealing with homicide, both intentional and unintentional. The Bible carefully predicts different situations with varying degrees of conflict in order to protect the rights of both the victim's family and the one who is responsible for an accidental homicide. (See also at Deuteronomy 19:1–13.)

i–15. According to Numbers 18:21–24, the tribe of the Levites is not to receive its own land like the other tribes but to serve as special personnel dedicated to God's service, for which they are due to receive a share of tithes from Israelite produce. Now we learn that the Levites will receive, in addition, forty-two towns in which their families can live. The pastureland that they are to receive with their cities is not official farmland—what the Bible own and all their other beasts.⁴ The town pasture that you are to assign to the Levites shall extend a thousand cubits outside the town wall all around.⁵ You shall measure off two thousand cubits outside the town on the east side, two thousand on the south side, two thousand on the west side, and two thousand on the north side, with the town in the center. That shall be the pasture for their towns.

⁶The towns that you assign to the Levites shall comprise the six cities of refuge that you are to designate for a [male] killer to flee to, to which you shall add forty-two towns.⁷ Thus the total of the towns that you assign to the Levites shall be forty-eight towns, with their pasture.⁸ In assigning towns from the holdings of the Israelites, take more from the larger groups and less from the smaller, so that each assigns towns to the Levites in proportion to the share it receives.

⁹ spoke further to Moses:¹⁰ Speak to the Israelite people and say to them: When you cross the Jordan into the land of Canaan,¹¹ you shall provide yourselves with places to serve you as cities of refuge to which a [male] killer who has slain a person unintentionally may flee.¹² The cities shall serve you as a refuge from the avenger, so that the killer may not die unless he has stood trial before the assembly.

calls nachalah. Rather, the land is to serve as pasture areas for their respective cities. The difference between these levitical city pastures and the farmland inheritances of other tribes is in the size and in the nature of the inheritance. The Levites are also to receive six cities of refuge for those guilty of unintentional homicide.

6. [male]. The present translation presumes that the case of a female killer would be more complicated than the case that the Torah outlines. (See also at Exodus 21:13; Deuteronomy 19:3.)

II. person. Heb. nefesh, a gender-neutral term (compare Leviticus 2:1). The blood-avenger is ex-

⁴ וּמְגַרְשֵׁי הָעָרִים אֲשֶׁר תַּתְנוּ לִלְוִימָן מִקְרָא
הָעִיר וְחוֹצֶה אֶלָּפָט אַמְּתָה סְבִיב: ⁵ וַיְמַדְּתָּה
מִרְחֹזָה לְעִיר אַתִּפְאַת-קְרֻמָּה אֶלְפִּים
בְּאַמְּתָה וְאַתִּפְאַת-נְגָב אֶלְפִּים בְּאַמְּתָה
וְאַתִּפְאַת-זָמִים | אֶלְפִּים בְּאַמְּתָה וְאַתָּה
פָּתָת עַפְוָן אֶלְפִּים בְּאַמְּתָה וְהַעֲרָבָה בְּפִתְעוֹרָה
יִהְיֶה לָהֶם מְגַרְשֵׁי הָעָרִים:

⁶ וְאַתָּה הָעָרִים אֲשֶׁר תַּתְנוּ לִלְוִימָן אֶת שְׁשָׁה
עָרִי הַמִּקְלָט אֲשֶׁר תַּתְנוּ לְנֵס שְׂמָה הַרְצָחָה
וּעֲלֵיכֶם תַּתְנוּ אַרְבָּעִים וְשְׁתִים עִיר:

⁷ בְּכָל-הָעָרִים אֲשֶׁר תַּתְנוּ לִלְוִימָן אַרְבָּעִים
וּשְׁמַנְנָה עִיר אַתָּה וְאַתִּמְגַרְשִׁיחָן:

⁸ וְהָעָרִים אֲשֶׁר תַּתְנוּ מִאַחֲזָת בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל
מִאַת הַרְבָּה תִּרְבּוּ וּמִאַת הַמּוּט תִּמְעַטּוּ
אִישׁ בְּפִי נַחֲלָתָן אֲשֶׁר יַנְחַלוּ יִתְּן מַעֲרִיוֹ
לִלְוִימָן: פ

⁹ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִים לְאָמֵר: ¹⁰ כִּי
אֶל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֶמְرָת אֶלְהָם כִּי
אַתֶּם עֲבָרִים אַתִּיהָרְדוּ אֶרְצָה בְּנֻעַן:
¹¹ וְהַקְרִיתֶם לִכְמָד עָלָיִם עִירִי מִקְלָט
תַּהֲרִינָה לְכֶם וְנֵס שְׂמָה רַצְחָה מִפְּהִנְפָּשָׁת
בְּשָׁגָגָה: ¹² וְהִי לְכֶם הָעָרִים לִמְקָלֶט
מְגַאֵּל וְלֹא יָמוֹת הַרְצָחָה עַד-עַמְדוֹ לִפְנֵי הַעֲדָה לִמְשָׁפֵט:

pected to protect the clan's women as well as its men.

12. avenger. Although the Hebrew wording is not gender-specific, the translation presumes that this role was a man's job. In the ancient Near East, using weapons to defend the family honor was typically the responsibility of men. According to David Stein, women apparently were not expected to undertake an active hunt for the killer of their kin, but if an opportunity for vengeance presented itself to a woman in the victim's family, she might choose to seize that opportunity (The Torah: Documentation for the Revised Edition, 2005, at this verse).

so that the killer may not die. The Torah offers ¹³The towns that you thus assign shall be six cities of refuge in all. ¹⁴Three cities shall be designated beyond the Jordan, and the other three shall be designated in the land of Canaan: they shall serve as cities of refuge. ¹⁵These six cities shall serve the Israelites and the resident aliens among them for refuge, so that any man who slays a person unintentionally may flee there.

¹⁶Anyone, however, who strikes another with an iron object so that death results is a murderer; the murderer must be put to death. ¹⁷If one struck another with a stone tool that could cause death, and death resulted, that person is a murderer; the murderer must be put to death. ¹⁸Similarly, if one struck another with a wooden tool that could cause death, and death resulted, that person is a murderer; the murderer must be put to death. ¹⁹It is the blood-avenger who shall put the murderer to death; this is who shall put that person to death upon encounter. ²⁰So, too, if one pushed another in hate or hurled something at [the victim] on purpose and death resulted, ²¹or if one struck another with the hand in enmity and death resulted, the assailant shall be put to death; that person is a murderer. The blood-avenger shall put the murderer to death upon encounter.

²²But if [a man] pushed without malice aforethought or hurled any object at [the victim] unintentionally, ²³or inadvertently dropped upon [the victim] any deadly object of stone, and death resulted—though not being an enemy and not seeking to harm—²⁴in such cases the assembly shall those who kill accidentally a safe haven from angry and grief-stricken relatives, discouraging both those who may wish to take the law into their own hands and those who may otherwise feel obliged to avenge out of a sense of duty. In addition to the physical protection afforded by a walled city, this institution protects the killer by making the victim's relatives liable for bloodguilt if they choose to disregard the law.

¹³וְהַעֲרִים אֲשֶׁר תַּתֵּן שָׁשָׁעָרִי מִקְלָט תְּהִינָּה לְכֶם: ¹⁴אֹתֶς שֶׁלַשׁ הַעֲרִים תַּתֵּן מַעֲבֵר לִירְדֵּן וְאֹתֶל שֶׁלַשׁ הַעֲרִים תַּתֵּן בְּאָרֶץ בְּנֵנוּ עָרִי מִקְלָט תְּהִינָּה: ¹⁵לְבָנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְלְגַגְּרָנִים וְלְהַוֹּשֵׁב בְּתוֹלָם תְּהִינָּה שְׁשִׁיחָעָרִים הַאֲלָה לְמִקְלָט לְנַסְתְּשָׁפָה כָּל-מִכְהָנֵפֶשׁ בְּשָׁגָגָה:

¹⁶וְאַמְבָּכְלִי בְּרֹזֶל הַפְּהָו וְיִמְתַּחַ רָצֶחֶת הוּא מוֹת יוּמַת דָּרָצֵחַ: ¹⁷וְאָם בְּאָבִן יְדָא אֲשֶׁר-יִמְתַּחַ בְּהַפְּהָו וְיִמְתַּחַ רָצֶחֶת הוּא מוֹת יוּמַת דָּרָצֵחַ: ¹⁸אוֹ בְּכָלִי עַזִּיד אֲשֶׁר-יִמְתַּחַ בְּהַפְּהָו וְיִמְתַּחַ רָצֶחֶת הוּא מוֹת יוּמַת דָּרָצֵחַ: ¹⁹גַּאֲלַה הַדָּם הוּא יִמְתַּחַ אֶת-הָרָצֵחַ בְּפָגָעוֹ בָּו הַוְאָ יִמְתַּחַ: ²⁰וְאַמְבָּשָׁנָאָה יְהָדָפָנוֹ אָוֹדָה-שְׁלֵיךְ עַלְיוֹ בְּצִדְקָה וְיִמְתַּחַ: ²¹אוֹ בָּאִיבָּה הַפְּהָו בְּידָו וְיִמְתַּחַ מוֹת-יוּמַת הָמְפָה רָצֶחֶת הוּא גַּאֲלַה הַדָּם יִמְתַּחַ אֶת-הָרָצֵחַ בְּפָגָעוֹ-בוֹ:

²²וְאַמְבָּפְתַּע בְּלָא-אִיבָּה הָדָפוֹ אוֹדָה-שְׁלֵיךְ עַלְיוֹ בְּלָבְלִי בְּלָא עֲדִיה: ²³אוֹ בְּכָל-אָבִן אֲשֶׁר-יִמְתַּחַ בְּהַלְאָרָוֹת וַיַּפְלֵל עַלְיוֹ וְיִמְתַּחַ וְהַוָּא לְאַ-אוֹבֵל לוֹ וְלֹא מַבְקֵשׁ רָעָתוֹ: ²⁴וְשִׁפְטוּ הַעֲדָה בֵּין הָמְפָה וּבֵין

16–28. These verses describe various cases of homicide. Verses 16–18 discuss acts unequivocally deemed intentional homicide, so the offender is expected to die by none other than the avenging relative. Only this formula can complete the Torah's particular ordained cycle of blood vengeance.

24. assembly shall decide. Even seemingly obvious cases of unintentional homicide must be heard before an officially assembled group of leaders.

decide between the slayer and the blood-avenger.²⁵ The assembly shall protect the killer from the blood-avenger, and the assembly shall restore him to the city of refuge to which he fled, and there he shall remain until the death of the high priest who was anointed with the sacred oil.²⁶ But if the killer ever goes outside the limits of the city of refuge to which he has fled,²⁷ and the blood-avenger comes upon him outside the limits of his city of refuge, and the blood-avenger kills the killer, there is no bloodguilt on his account.²⁸ For he must remain inside his city of refuge until the death of the high priest; after the death of the high priest, the killer may return to his land holding.

²⁹Such shall be your law of procedure throughout the ages in all your settlements.

³⁰If anyone slays a person, the killer may be executed only on the evidence of witnesses; the testimony of a single witness against a person shall not suffice for a sentence of death.³¹You may not accept a ransom for the life of a murderer who is guilty of a capital crime; [a murderer] must be put to death.³²Nor may you accept ransom in lieu of flight to a city of refuge, enabling a man to return to live on his land before the death of the priest.³³You shall not pollute the land in which you live; for blood pollutes the land, and the land can have no expiation for blood that is shed on it, except by

גַּאֲלָה הַדָּם עַל הַמְשֻׁפְטִים הַאֲלֵה:
²⁵ וְהִצְילוּ הַעֲדָה אֶת־הָרָצֵח מִינֶּד גַּאֲלָה
הַדָּם וְהַשְׁבִּיבוּ אֹתוֹ הַעֲדָה אֶל־עִיר מִקְלָטוֹ
אֲשֶׁר־נָסַע שָׂפָה וַיַּשְׁבַּבּ בָּה עֲדָמֹות הַבָּהּן:
הַגָּדוֹל אֲשֶׁר־מָשָׁח אֹתוֹ בְּשָׁמְן הַקָּדֵש:
²⁶ וְאִם־יָצַא יָצַא הָרָצֵח אֶת־גִּבּוֹל עִיר
מִקְלָטוֹ אֲשֶׁר יָנוּס שָׂפָה: ²⁷ וּמָצָא אֹתוֹ
גַּאֲלָה הַדָּם מְחוֹז לְגַבּוֹל עִיר מִקְלָטוֹ וְרָצֵח
גַּאֲלָה הַדָּם אֶת־הָרָצֵח אֵין לוֹ דָם: ²⁸ כי
בָּעִיר מִקְלָטוֹ יַשְׁבַּבּ עֲדָמֹות הַבָּהּן הַגָּדוֹל
וְאַחֲרֵי מוֹת הַכֹּהֵן הַגָּדוֹל יַשְׁׁוֹב הָרָצֵח אֶל־ אָרֶץ אֲחִזּוֹת:

²⁹ וְהִיוּ אֱלֹהָה לְכֶם לְחַקְתּוֹת מִשְׁפָט לְדָרְתִּיכֶם
בְּכָל מָוֹשְׁבָתֵיכֶם:
³⁰ בְּלֹמְבָד־תִּשְׁפַּשׁ לְפִי עָדִים יַרְצֵח אֶת־
הָרָצֵח וְעַד אֶחָד לְאַיִלָּנָה בְּנֶפֶשׁ לְמוֹת:
³¹ וְלֹא־תַקְהוּ לְפִרְאָר לְנֶפֶשׁ רָצֵח אֲשֶׁר־הָוֹא
רָשָׁע לְמוֹת בִּימּוֹת יוֹמָת: ³² וְלֹא־תַקְהוּ
כְּפָר לְנוּס אֶל־עִיר מִקְלָטוֹ לְשׁוֹב לְשִׁבְתָּה
בָּאָרֶץ עֲדָמֹות הַבָּהּן: ³³ וְלֹא־תַחֲנִיףּ
אֶת־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אַתָּם בָּה כִּי הַדָּם הַוָּא
יִחְנִיףּ אֶת־הָאָרֶץ וְלֹא־רָאֶץ לְאַיִלְכָּר לְדָם

25. The (presumably natural) death of the chief priest marks the end period of the killer's culpability. Although the Hebrew Bible generally frowns on regarding a person's death as atonement for another's sin, the death of the chief priest seems to function that way symbolically. Although no one is killed, the priest's death benefits the life of another. The killer can return home, thus ending the exile.

30. evidence of witnesses. A single witness cannot convict a suspected killer in cases of capital offense. It is not only the gravity of the situation for the suspect that demands verifiable testimony but also the risk to the community, lest it mistakenly condemn itself to death for permitting the shedding of more innocent blood. (See also at Deuteronomy 17:16; 19:15–16.)

31–34. The biblical principle of bloodguilt, in which the spilled blood of murder must be avenged by causing the murderer's own blood to flow, was implicit in vv. 18–19, and is implicit again in vv. 31–32. Finally, vv. 33–34 explain the root of this principle: If a victim's blood is not avenged, the land becomes polluted. Examples of this concept can be found throughout the Hebrew Bible. For example, the blood of the one who shed it.³⁴ You shall not defile the land in which you live, in which I Myself abide, for I יהוה abide among the Israelite people.

36 The family heads in the clan of the descendants of Gilead son of Machir son of Manasseh, one of the Josephite clans, came forward and appealed to Moses and the chieftains, family heads of the Israelites.² They said, “יהוה commanded my

אֲשֶׁר שָׁפַרְתָּה כִּי־אָמַר בְּךָ שָׁפְכוֹ: וְלֹא
תְּטֻמֵּא אֶת־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אַתָּם יַשְׁכִּים בָּה
אֲשֶׁר אָנֹן שָׁכַן בְּתוֹכָה בַּי אָנֹן יְהוָה שָׁכַן
בְּתוֹךְ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: פ

לו וַיַּקְרְבוּ רָאשֵׁי הָאָבוֹת לְמִשְׁפָּחָת בְּנֵי
גָּלְעָל בֶּן־מָכִיר בֶּן־מְנַשֶּׁה מִפְּשָׁחָת בְּנֵי
יוֹסֵף וַיַּדְבְּרוּ לִפְנֵי מֹשֶׁה וּלִפְנֵי הַנְּשָׁאָרִים
רָאשֵׁי אָבוֹת לְבְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: 2 וַיֹּאמְרוּ אֶת־

in Genesis 4:10, God reproaches Cain saying, “What have you done? Your brother’s blood is shrieking to Me from the ground.” This passage of Numbers teaches that no bloodguilt is required from someone who kills unintentionally.

Securing Land and Limits for Zelophehad’s Daughters (36:1–12)

The last episode in the book of Numbers is devoted entirely to the case of Mahlah, Tirzah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Noah. In one sense, their story seeks to resolve a potential crossing of boundaries in a book particularly concerned with setting boundaries (because the daughters’ land risks being transferred to another tribe). In another sense, the story of these five sisters forms a counterpoint to stories about the five women in Exodus 1 and 2 who rescued Israelite children: the midwives Shiphrah and Puah, Moses’ unnamed mother (later identified as Jochebed), Moses’ unnamed sister (later identified as Miriam), and Pharaoh’s unnamed daughter. Although there is no more than a literary connection between these two groups of women, the framing of Israel’s journey as a whole with stories of women creates a symbolic symmetry.

In Numbers 27, the five daughters were granted the right to inherit their dead father’s land, with no strings attached. In this parashah, at the urging of leaders of the clan and in order to protect it from losing the land permanently, Moses proclaims a new law that requires the women to marry only within their clan or tribe (v. 6; the instructions are not clear as to whether the husband must come from the clan or can be anyone in the larger tribe).

Whereas the legal resolution concludes the book of Numbers, it does not conclude the story of Mahlah, Tirzah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Noah (see below at v. 12).

THE PROBLEM: LAND MIGHT TRANSFER TO ANOTHER TRIBE (36:1–4)

The clan leaders of the five sisters point out a potential problem: granting land to the sisters might mean loss of land to the Manasseh tribe if the women marry men from other tribes and their shares become parts of their husbands’ tribes. The transfer of land from one tribe to another would then violate the divine command that prescribes that each tribe possesses its land permanently (Leviticus 25).

1. Gilead. According to the genealogies in Numbers 26:29–33, Gilead is the great-grandfather of the sisters.

came forward. As did the daughters of Zelophehad (27:1). Here the location is not stated—in contrast with 27:2, where the daughters approached the leaders and “the entire community” at “the entrance of the Tent of Meeting.”

2. “יהוה commanded... was further commanded by יהוה.” God has issued two commands that in some way conflict with each other.

lord to assign the land to the Israelites as shares by lot, and my lord was further commanded by יהוה to assign the share of our kinsman Zelophehad to his daughters.³ Now, if they marry persons from another Israelite tribe, their share will be cut off from our ancestral portion and be added to the portion of the tribe into which they marry; thus our allotted portion will be diminished.⁴ And even when the Israelites observe the jubilee, their share will be added to that of the tribe into which they marry, and their share will be cut off from the ancestral portion of our tribe.”

⁵So Moses, at יהוה’s bidding, instructed the Israelites, saying: “The plea of the Josephite tribe is just. ⁶This is what יהוה has commanded concerning the daughters of Zelophehad: They may marry any-

אָדָנִי צוֹה יְהוָה לְתֵת אֶת-הָאָרֶץ בְּנַחֲלָה בְּגָזָל לְבָנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאָדָנִי צוֹה בְּיִדְהָא לְתֵת אֶת-נְחַלָּת צְלָפְחָד אֲחֵינוּ לְבָנָתֵינוּ: ³ וְהִיוּ לְאַחֲר מִבְנֵי שָׁבֵטִי בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל לְנָשִׁים וְנָגְרָעָה נְחַלָּת אָבָתֵינוּ וּנוֹסֶף עַל נְחַלָּת הַמֶּפְתָּח אֲשֶׁר תְּהִינֵּה לְהָם וּמְגַרֵּל נְחַלָּתֵנוּ יָגַרְעַ: ⁴ וְאִם תְּהִינֵּה הַיְלֵל לְבָנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וּנוֹסֶף נְחַלָּתֵן עַל נְחַלָּת הַמֶּפְתָּח אֲשֶׁר תְּהִינֵּה לְהָם וּמְנַחַלָּת מִטָּה אָבָתֵינוּ יָגַרְעַ נְחַלָּתֵנוּ:

⁵ וַיֹּצְאוּ מִשְׁה אֶת-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל עַל-פִּי יְהוָה לְאֹמֶר בְּنֵי מִטָּה בְּנֵי-יְסוּסָף דְּבָרִים: ⁶ זֶה הַדָּבָר אֲשֶׁר-צִוָּה יְהוָה לְבָנֹות צְלָפְחָד

“assign the land...as shares.” At the heart of the issue stand two related laws. First, the requirement that the land allotted to each tribe should belong to that group permanently. Second, that at the fifty-year jubilee, land that has been transferred or sold returns to the permanent owner (see at Leviticus 25:10–28).

“assign the share...to his daughters.” The relatives do not question the legitimacy of the daughters’ claim or the divine origin of the allotment of land to them.

3. “if they marry...our ancestral portion...be added to...the tribe into which they marry.” There are three ways to explain the concern about the loss of the clan’s land. Most likely the complaint anticipates that the inherited land will eventually belong to the women’s sons and thus (if the husband is from another tribe) no longer be part of the Gilead/Manasseh tribe. It is also possible that the complaint implies that the women belong to the clan of their husband when they marry and therefore their land also belongs to that tribe. A third, but least likely, possibility is that the complaint implies that, in marriage, the land will become the husband’s property.

4. According to jubilee laws, sold or mortgaged ancestral land returns to its original owner every 50 years (see Leviticus 25). The land of the daughters would remain permanently with them and their heirs, and thus potentially a part of the clan into which they marry.

THE SOLUTION: HEIRESSES MUST MARRY WITHIN THE TRIBE (36:5–9)

Moses resolves the conflict by limiting the women’s marriage options. This solution is only necessary should the women marry. The possibility that the women might not marry is not addressed.

5. Moses, at יהוה’s bidding, instructed. In the first episode of the three scenes about Zelophehad’s daughters, Moses had brought their case before God (27:5). There is no mention here that Moses sought divine guidance for this new complication. He does, however, speak in God’s name.

6. “They may marry anyone they wish.” The free choice of spouses granted to the five sisters is especially significant in the context of the ancient world, because it excludes any male relative who wishes to claim the more typical role of a guardian one they wish, provided they marry into a clan of their father's tribe.⁷ No inheritance of the Israelites may pass over from one tribe to another, but the Israelite [heirs]—each of them—must remain bound to the ancestral portion of their tribe.⁸ Every daughter among the Israelite tribes who inherits a share must marry someone from a clan of her father's tribe, in order that every Israelite [heir] may keep an ancestral share.⁹ Thus no inheritance shall pass over from one tribe to another, but the Israelite tribes shall remain bound each to its portion.”

¹⁰The daughters of Zelophehad did as had commanded Moses: ¹¹Mahlah, Tirzah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Noah, Zelophehad's daughters, were

לְאָמֵר לִטְבֹּם בְּעִינֵיכֶם תַּהֲיֵנָה לְנָשִׁים אֲךָ
לִמְשֻׁפְחָת מִطָּה אֲבִיכֶם תַּהֲיֵנָה לְנָשִׁים:
וְלֹא-תַסְבֵּב נְחָלָה לְבָנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל מִמְטָה
אֶל-מִטָּה כִּי אִישׁ בְּנְחָלָת מִטָּה אֲבָתָיו
יַדְבֹּקְוּ בָנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁸ וְכָל-בֵּית יִרְשָׁת נְחָלָה
מִמְפְּטוּת בָנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאָחֶר מִמְשֻׁפְחָת מִטָּה
אֲבִיכֶה תַּהֲיֵה לְאָשָׁה לְמַעַן יִרְשׁוּ בָנִי
יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר נְחָלָת אֲבָתָיו: ⁹ וְלֹא-תַסְבֵּב
נְחָלָה מִמְטָה לְמִטָּה אַחֲרָכִי אֲשֶׁר בְּנְחָלָתוֹ
יַדְבֹּקְוּ מִפְּטוּת בָנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל:

¹⁰ בִּאֵשֶׁר צָוָה יְהוָה אֶת-יְמָשָׁה בְּנֵי עַשְׁׂזָן
בְּנוֹת צְלָפְחָד: ¹¹ וְתַהֲיֵנָה מְחָלָה תְּرָצָה
וְחִגְלָה וּמִלְבָה וּנְעָה בְּנוֹת צְלָפְחָד לְבָנִי

for the unmarried daughters. Contrast this with the status of the heiress in classical Athens who is subject to the automatic control by a male relative in regard to marriage, as the way of protecting and preserving family property.

“provided they marry into a clan of their father's tribe.” From a modern perspective, this restriction might appear as a step back after the forward steps in Numbers 27, since God's law granted the land to the sisters in Numbers 27 with no strings attached. Practically speaking, however, the freedom to choose a spouse from their clan is less constricting than it might seem, given the size of this tribe (one of the largest among the Israelites).

7. “No inheritance of the Israelites may pass over from one tribe to another.” An attempt to secure the greater good of protecting tribal ownership of the land, rather than a gender-specific goal, stands as the basis for restricting the marriage choices of the sisters. In other words, the issue of who inherits land is not depicted as an objection to women's owning land but rather as a concern for preserving tribal ownership of allotted land.

8. “Every daughter... who inherits.” Like the ruling that allows all daughters to inherit land when there are no sons (27:8), this modification clause also applies to all comparable situations. All daughters who inherit land must marry members of their tribe.

“in order that every Israelite [heir] may keep an ancestral share.” The goal of the compromise is unambiguous.

9. Moses once more reiterates the underlying principle of the law, an emphasis that is particularly significant coming at the last stop of the journey and at the end of the book.

THE RESOLUTION: THE DAUGHTERS MARRY WITHIN THEIR TRIBE (36:10–12)

The narrator confirms that the daughters followed God's and Moses' command, albeit without naming the daughters' mates.

II. Mahlah, Tirzah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Noah.

The sister's names appear for the first time in this parashah. Whereas the speakers thus far (the relatives and Moses) refer to the five sisters as “Zelophehad's daughters” (vv. 2, 6), the narrator now calls them by their names. The sisters' own names appear in all three episodes about them. The order here, however, differs from that of Numbers 27 and Joshua 17, and there is no obvious explanation for the sequence. On the names and their connection to places, see at 27:1–11.

married to sons of their uncles,¹² marrying into clans of descendants of Manasseh son of Joseph; and so their share remained in the tribe of their father's clan.

דָּרְיָהָן לְנָשִׁים :¹² מַמְשֻׁפְחָת בְּנֵי-מְנַשֶּׁה
בְּנֵי-יְסֻף הֵן לְנָשִׁים וְתַהֲיִ נְחַלָּתָן עַל-מִטָּה
מַשְׁפָּחָת אֲבִיהָן :

were married to sons of their uncles. Although they can marry any man from the very large tribe of Manasseh, the sisters choose their cousins. There is no reason to suppose (as Jacob Milgrom does) that the land was transferred to the husbands once the women married (Numbers, 1990, p. 298). The Bible does not prohibit wives from owning property.

Furthermore, the earliest Jewish contracts that we have illustrate that women continued to own property after marriage and that parents bequeathed property to both sons and daughters. Documents from the Jewish community in Elephantine, Egypt, include several marriage contracts and sale contracts. In several documents (dated around 460–447 B.C.E.), the father of Mibtahiah transfers property to her even though he has sons. The property remains hers at marriage. In one case, her husband, who apparently improved one of the several properties in question, or is expected to, is assured that he will have power over half of that particular property “for the improvement which you made” (Cowley 9:11–12). He cannot sell that half, and it goes to their children after him (Cowley 9). In another contract dated 434 B.C.E., a husband transfers ownership of half of a newly purchased property to his wife irreversibly and makes their children (a boy and a girl) equal heirs of his portion (Kraeling 4).

It is difficult to assess the relationships between practices of this particular Jewish community and those in the Bible and ancient Israel in earlier periods. But evidence that women retained their property after marriage and were also able to inherit should caution us against concluding otherwise in this case without evidence. Moreover, the appearance of some of the women's names as place names on early clay fragments suggest that they were recognized as primary owners (see below at v. 12 and at 27:1–2).

12. To underscore the perfect execution of divine command, the narrator adds that the women's marriages indeed preserve the inherited land within their father's tribe. The story of Mahlah, Tirzah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Noah will conclude in Joshua 17, in the report about apportioning the land among the tribes. There, we read that “Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah... appeared before the priest Eleazar, Joshua son of Nun, and the chieftains, saying: ‘יְהוָה commanded Moses to grant us a portion among our male kinsmen.’ So, in accordance with יְהוָה's instructions, they were granted a portion among their father's kinsmen” (17:3–4). This passage makes no mention of their husbands. Furthermore, “Manasseh's daughters inherited a portion in these together with his sons, while the land of Gilead was assigned to the rest of Manasseh's descendants” (17:6; note that in Joshua the women are also called “Manasseh's daughters”!). Although the historical reliability of the material in Joshua is subject to debate, it is safe to say that the book of Joshua portrays the inheritance of Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah as a large one. The 8th-century-B.C.E. clay fragments that bear names of towns, including Noah and Hoglah, illustrate the persistence of these names in Israelite tradition (see the introduction to Numbers 27:1–2). Tirzah is also the name of the royal city in the Northern Kingdom in the 10th century (see I Kings 14). (For more on the daughters' names, see at 27:1–11.)

¹³These are the commandments and regulations that יהוה enjoined upon the Israelites, through Moses, on the steppes of Moab, at the Jordan near Jericho.

אֶלָּה הַמִּצְוֹת וְהַמִּשְׁפָטִים אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה
יְהוָה בַּיּוֹם שֶׁאָלַבְנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּעֶרֶב
מוֹאָב עַל יְרֵחֹן יְרֵחוֹ:

Conclusion (36:13)

The conclusion to the book of Numbers marks the conclusion of the journey to the Promised Land. The plains (or steppes) of Moab will be the setting for the book of Deuteronomy, the place where Moses will pronounce his last teachings before he dies. The concluding statement specifies that God is the source of the last group of laws that Moses teaches.

—Tamara Cohn Eskenazi
Elizabeth Goldstein

Another View

NUMBERS 27 DESCRIBED the amending of a law regarding who may inherit land: Zelophehad's daughters—Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah—brought their case before Moses; after they demanded their share of the land, the law was amended to enable them to inherit their father's land. However, in this parashah (Numbers 36), the clan heads of their tribe approach Moses and ask him to prevent the discrimination stemming from the previously amended law. Apparently, correcting the earlier inequity created a new one, this time for the tribe to which they belong. As before, Moses amends the legislation, under God's guidance.

The two stories, taken together, nicely illustrate the fact that some laws in the Torah are the outcome of cooperation between God and human beings. This raises the question concerning the nature of the Torah's laws. Most of the commandments in the Torah appear as if written a priori and seem sealed and unchangeable. Nevertheless, five commandments happen to be the outcome of certain circumstances that called for God's intervention and resulted in new legislation and amendments. (The other three cases are: the stories of the blasphemer in Leviticus 24:10–16; the man gathering sticks in Numbers 15:32–36; and the ritually impure individuals prevented from bringing the paschal offering on time in 9:1–14.)

The Torah could have preserved only the final laws, without the narratives that describe their emergence. But it seems that the Torah intentionally highlights a principle of dialogue between human groups and divine legislation. The purpose of the laws is that “one shall live by them” (Leviticus 18:5), meaning that the laws of the Torah must fit life. Such a goal is achieved by an openness to change, albeit with God's explicit consent and command. As a result, this parashah constitutes the philosophical basis for the Oral Torah—that is, the ongoing, authoritative interpretations of Scripture. The presupposition is that its legal kernel and principles are embedded within the Written Torah, and that through different sorts of exegesis of the Torah (that is, through its explanation and interpretation), the Oral Torah is fleshed out. By way of constant searching, responses are revealed to never-ending questions.

The Torah highlights a principle of dialogue between humans and divine legislation.

—Masha Turner

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

These were the marches of the Israelites (33:1). Why does the Torah recount all of the steps of Israel's forty-year wanderings? Midrash Tanchuma, Mas'ei 11 draws a parallel to a king who takes his child on a journey to seek a cure for the child's sickness. On the return trip, the doting father recalls each leg of the original trip, remembering how they traveled together and how he worried about his child's condition. So the Torah in recalling the journey calls to mind the struggle God had with the Israelites in the wilderness.

The towns that you assign to the Levites (35:6). Tanchuma, Mas'ei 11 draws a parallel between God's punishment of Adam and the law of the individual who commits homicide. God had told Adam that eating the fruit of the tree of knowledge would result in his death; nevertheless, God was merciful and exiled Adam from the Garden of Eden as a punishment for bringing death into the world. So too this law shows compassion for a person who accidentally kills another human being, exiling the killer to a city of refuge rather than mandating the killer's death.

MAS'EI

The blood-avenger himself shall put the murderer to death (35:19). The Torah recognizes that homicide can easily lead to a blood feud between families, with one act of vengeance leading to another and then another. JT Makot 2:5 even considers the possibility that the killer and his victim might be relatives, leading to a situation where to avenge one family member, a person might seek vengeance on another relative.

Do not mention a woman's age while she is single, for it is irrelevant after marriage.

the assembly shall decide (35:24). Since the assembly that decides between the killer and the blood-avenger must be impartial, relatives of the accused and his victim are excluded from the assembly (JT Sanhedrin 3:9).

This is what (36:6). Rabbinic sources (BT Taanit 30b; Bava Batra 120a) indicate that this law, requiring daughters who inherit from their father to marry within the clan, applied only to the generation of the wilderness, or to a time in which land was held by the tribes (Baruch HaLevi Epstein, Torah T'mimah on 36:6).

They may marry anyone they wish, provided they marry into a clan of their father's tribe (36:6). This statement seems contradictory. A tradition in BT Bava Batra 120a explains that the daughters of Zelophehad were permitted to marry into any of the tribes, but the Torah advised them to make "suitable" marriages that would please both themselves and their father's clan members.

Mahlab, Tirzah, Hoglab, Milcah, and Noah (36:11). Zelophehad's daughters are listed in a different order here than in Numbers 27. According to BT Bava Batra 120a, this indicates that each of them was equal to the other. This text also suggests that Numbers 36 lists the women in the order in which they were born, while Numbers 27 mentions them in order of wisdom.

These different orders are cited in several 19th-century anecdotes that discuss women's experiences and characteristics (cited in A. Y. Greenberg, Itturei Torah on 36:11). A disciple of Rabbi Elijah ben Solomon Zalman ("the Vilna Gaon") was approached by a man who complained that after marrying his son to the daughter of an important man, he discovered that his daughter-in-law, a woman whom he described as both intelligent and pious, was ten years older than her new husband. The rabbi responded with humor, pointing out that the daughters of Zelophehad were listed in chronological order only after they were married, to teach that a woman's age should not be mentioned while she is single since it becomes irrelevant after marriage.

In another story, the wife of Rabbi Saul of Amsterdam, known in her youth as a brilliant woman, was asked why she had abandoned her studies after marrying and having children. She replied by noting that before their marriage, the daughters of Zelophehad were listed by (that is, known for) their wisdom, but "after they married and accepted the millstone [of household duties and childrearing] around their necks, their wisdom was forgotten and they were thereafter listed by their ages." This story acknowledges the challenges that intelligent and learned women faced in continuing their studies in a society that expected married women to devote themselves to their husbands and children.

—Dvora E. Weisberg

Contemporary Reflection

THE LAST PARASHAH in the book of Numbers ends with a second story about the five daughters of Zelophehad—Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah. The first story, in Numbers 27, shows how the sisters demanded and received a promise—from God, no less—that they will inherit their family’s ancestral land (since their father died without leaving a son). Here in parashat Masei, the daughters’ male relatives challenge the women’s inheritance right in order to protect ownership of tribal land. Moses responds al pi Adonai—“at God’s bidding” (36:5), by amending the new law. The change requires women who inherit ancestral land to marry into a family of their father’s tribe (36:6), thereby limiting these women’s choice of spouses, but keeping the property within the tribe. The parashah and the book end by confirming that the sisters did marry accordingly.

This sequel in Numbers 36 appears to be a setback after the daughters’ startling triumph in parashat Pinchas (Numbers 27), where they won significant inheritance rights for themselves and for their “sisters” in the future. The five sisters in particular, and Israelite women in general, walk away from parashat Masei with less than they had before. As some scholars observe, when the sisters marry their first cousins, they essentially hand over their inheritance to the same men who would otherwise have inherited the land had the women never stood up for themselves (Hara E. Person, “Masa’ei: Boundaries and Limits,” in The Women’s Torah Commentary, 2000, p. 327; and Jacob Milgrom, Numbers, 1990, p. 298). Moreover, in giving up some of their gains for the sake of larger familial and communal needs, they seem to perpetuate the all-too-familiar situation of women foregoing their own needs for the sake of others in the family.

Nevertheless, while the decree in this parashah certainly is a step back from the full rights given to the daughters previously, it is not a full retreat; they still end up with more than they had in the first place. To begin with, the sisters marry from a position of strength, not dependency. What would have happened to the sisters had they not stepped forward to ask for their inheritance? Given the frequency with which the Torah reminds us of our societal obligation to care for widows and orphans, we can guess what might have happened to Zelophehad’s daughters had they remained landless. Furthermore, the daughters’ actions and triumph eliminate a whole category of dependent orphans (the girls and women who until then did not inherit).

The story of Zelophehad’s daughters invites us to reflect on the roles that family members and community play in one’s life. Our freedom as women to make choices and demands stems in part from our Jewish heritage in which women such as Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah stood together to argue for equal rights, convincing leadership—human and divine—of the justness of their cause.

The most effective and enduring changes create justice for all members of society.

Today our individual commitments and decisions from the everyday to the profound (taking a class at night, accepting a board position, making a career change) affect our partners and our children, regardless of who makes them. Likewise, our seemingly private decisions launch a whole range of new communal developments. For example, working and studying mothers and their partners require, and therefore initiate, new structures for childcare that were not available to the previous generation. Such choices compel (or inspire) others to “think outside the box” to accommodate new challenges.

MAS'EI

Especially in egalitarian relationships, each person's words and visions, choices and decisions, actions and reactions, construct an unfolding dialogue, ever-growing and often life-changing in much wider circles than one would have envisioned. What began as a seemingly private demand by five sisters for their share of land became a new law to protect all women in unforeseen circumstances.

In parashat Mas'ei, at the end of the Israelites' journey in the wilderness, the amending of the ruling for Zelophehad's daughters (along with the concomitant change in inheritance laws in perpetuity for all Israelites, 36:8–9) teaches modern lessons for intertwined lives: in a society, community, or family, one person's needs and desires must be weighed against those of others. Final authority should not belong to one member only, nor should laws be made based on the interests of only one party.

The amendments in Numbers 36 also emphasize the need for lawmakers to look always at the rights of all citizens, and not just at the issues brought by lobbyists. The women's movement, like all movements of liberation, discovered long ago that the most effective and enduring changes are those that create justice for all members of society.

This observation does not negate the need to speak out for special interests. Just as the prayer of our matriarch Hannah became for the rabbis of the Talmud the model of how to pray (I Samuel 1:10–11; BT B'rachot 31a–b), so in their own time, the daughters of Zelophehad model how to be an advocate for one's own rights. Had Hannah not prayed or the sisters not spoken up, no change would have taken place. Speaking out opens up a public space where the diverse needs of community members can be examined in order to negotiate for equitable resolutions. Because the original ruling given in parashat Pinchas benefited the daughters but not the tribe, the amendment here in parashat Mas'ei demonstrates how an idea may require fine-tuning even after it becomes law.

The ending of the book of Numbers sets the stage for processes of change, showing us that even within the Torah itself, lawmaking is an inexact science requiring flexibility to change as issues arise and society evolves. We honor the sisters' ability to speak up, and their grace to concede when their gain is shown to be against community interests. We are the inheritors of their chutzpah and their quest for equal rights.

—Lisa Edwards

Jill Berkson Zimmerman

Voices

from Poems of the Journey's End

Lea Goldberg (transl. Rachel Tzvia Back)

Numbers 33

1

The path is so lovely—said the boy.
The path is so hard—said the lad.
The path is so long—said the man.
The grandfather sat on the side of the path to rest.

Sunset paints his grey head gold and red,
the grass glows at his feet in the evening dew,
above him the day's last bird sings:
—Will you remember how lovely, how hard,
how long was the path?

2

You said: Day chases day and night—night.
In your heart you said: Now the time has come.
You see evenings and mornings visit your window,
and you say: There is nothing new under
the sun.

Now, with the days, you have whitened and aged your days numbered and tenfold dearer, and you know: Every day is the last under
the sun,
and you know: Every day is new under the sun.

The Sorrow of Night

Dahlia Ravikovitch

(transl. Chana Bloch and Chana Kronfeld)

Numbers 33

The road so remote and steep,
The crescent moon like hammered tin,
And who can tell gold
From a bit of tin
No man would ever keep.

Clouds float steaming in the skies,
Dolorous roofs and towers rise,
And soaring on high, the foxes' cries
As their bodies writhe in the hedge.

Stars and planets, swarming bright,
Night falls into the Sea of Nights,
And leaping about like a doe, the light,
Like a spring gushing from a ledge.

A breaker claws the breasting waves,
Piercing the dread abyss headlong.
Lo, the sheaves stand upright in praise
And the reeds lift their voices in song:
Return, O my soul, and rest thee
For the Lord thy God hath blest thee.

The road so remote and steep,
The crescent moon like hammered tin,
And above it a light
All milky-white
Streams like deliverance deep.

from The Way Out

Muriel Rukeyser

Numbers 33

Into that journey where all things speak to all things
refusing to accept the curse, and taking for signs the signs of all things, the world, the body
which is part of the soul, and speaks to the world,
all creation being created in one image, creation.
This is not the past walking into the future,
the walk is painful, into the present, the dance not visible as dance until much later.
These dancers are discoverers of God.

The New Egypt

Robin Becker

Numbers 36

I think of my father who believes a Jew can outwit fate by owning land.
Slave to property now, I mow and mow, my destiny the new Egypt.
From his father, the tailor, he learned not to rent but to own; to borrow to buy.
To conform, I disguise myself and drag the mower into the drive, where I ponder the silky oil, the plastic casing, the choke.
From my father, I learned the dignity of exile and the fire of acquisition, not to live in places lightly, but to plant
the self like an orange tree in the desert and irrigate, irrigate, irrigate.

Not Every Day

Shifra Alon

Numbers 33

Not every day does one encounter God,
And not at every moment can one give oneself to prayer;
Nor can every hour be an hour of loving-kindness.
A person wanders and strays before reaching the journey's end.
We start over again, and again we lose our way,
Groping and searching for our forgotten path.
But they—those who search and wander—
God seeks them out with candles.

The first time we made Shabbos together

Merle Feld

Numbers 36:10-12

The first time we made Shabbos together
in our own home—
it wasn't really "our home"
it was your third floor walk-up and we weren't even engaged yet—
I had cooked chicken,
my first chicken,
with a whole bulb of garlic—
my mother never used garlic—and we sat down at that second-hand chrome table
in the kitchen.
It was all so ugly that we turned out the lights.
Only the Shabbos candles flickered.

And then you made kiddush.

I sat there and wept—
Oh God, you have been so good to me!
Finally, for the first time in my life,
you gave me something I wanted.
This man, whose soul is the soul of Ein Gedi.
We will be silent together,
we will open our flowers in each other's presence.

And indeed we have bloomed through the years.

The Girls That Are Wanted

Marie Odlum

Numbers 36

The girls that are wanted are good girls—
Good from the hearts to the lips;
Pure, as the lily is white and pure
From its heart to its sweet leaf tips.
The girls that are wanted are home girls—
Girls that are mother's right hand;
That father and brothers can trust too,
And the little ones understand.

Girls that are fair on the hearthstone,
And pleasant when nobody sees;
Kind and sweet to their own folks.
Ready and anxious to please.
The girls that are wanted are wise girls,
That know what to do and say;
That drive with a smile and soft word
The wrath of the household away.

The girls that are wanted are girls with hearts;
They are wanted for mothers and wives;
Wanted to cradle in loving arms
The strongest and frailest lives.

The clever, the witty, the brilliant girl
There are few who can understand;
But, Oh! for the wise, loving home girls
There's constant and steady demand.

דְבָרִים ◆ D'varim

DEUTERONOMY

MOST OF DEUTERONOMY is cast as Moses' final words to Israel while the people stand in the plains of Moab, poised to part from their long-suffering leader and at last enter the Promised Land. The book's Hebrew title, D'varim ("words"), reflects the book's presentation as a series of first-person speeches. The English name comes from the Greek translation of the Hebrew expression mishnei ha-torah (17:18); in its biblical context, the phrase means "copy of the Teaching," but as the book's title, it takes on the sense of a "second [or: repeated] law." This meaning also fits the nature of the book, which retells and reinterprets Israel's history and laws for a new generation, often with marked differences from other versions. Deuteronomy recalls past experiences—particularly the divine wonders witnessed firsthand while fleeing from Egypt and traveling through the wilderness—as lessons for future behavior. It also includes legal material distinctive for its attention to political, social, and economic issues. The book emphasizes that security and prosperity in the Promised Land depend on adherence to these laws and lessons.

The book depicts God as a loving mother who gives birth to and nurses Israel.

The notion of a covenant between God and Israel pervades Deuteronomy, influencing its form and content. Like political treaties found in other parts of the ancient Near East, the book begins with a historical prologue (1:1–4:43) that establishes the foundation of the covenantal relationship. Then, after a preamble to the laws (6:1–11:32), it spells out the terms of the covenant (12:1–26:15). Blessings and curses follow (28:1–68), detailing the consequences of adhering to or disobeying the covenant. Echoes of ancient Near Eastern treaties also can be heard in certain formulaic phrases that mark the book, like the charge to “love your God יְהוָה with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your might” (6:5).

Deuteronomy envisions a society structured around absolute loyalty to the one God and one sanctuary. At the same time, it decentralizes political power and empowers broader segments of society. In Deuteronomy, the community as a whole is responsible for maintaining justice and economic stability, protecting the rights of every member, even animals. Deuteronomy repeatedly instructs the Israelites to care for the vulnerable and needy, particularly the stranger, widow, fatherless, and Levite (and his family). The inclusion of the Levites is a hallmark of Deuteronomy, a result of one of its defining features: the centralization of sacrificial worship in “the site that your God יְהוָה will choose” (12:5), which the Bible considers to be Jerusalem.

Most scholars date the core of the book (the legal collection in Deuteronomy 12–26 or the laws and surrounding sections in 4:44–28:68) to the 7th century B.C.E.; yet they recognize that various stipulations originated earlier and other parts of the book were added to and revised during the exilic or post-exilic periods (6th century).

Many link Deuteronomy to the discovery of a “book of the torah” during renovations of the Temple (II Kings 22; II Chronicles 34). The female prophet Huldah is a central figure in that episode, for she authenticates the scroll as God’s teachings. (See V’zot Hab’rachah, Another View, p. 1284.)

The only woman named in Deuteronomy is Miriam (24:9). However, women are addressed in many parts of the book, even though the grammatically masculine language of the Hebrew often keeps their presence only implicit. Notably, 29:10 and 31:12 explicitly include women among those who take part in the covenant and are obligated to learn and follow the torah. Women figure prominently in the legal collection (particularly in parashat Ki Teitzei), as it addresses issues like the treatment of a captive woman, inheritance by the son of an unloved wife, adultery, forced and consensual sex, divorce, and levirate marriage.

Deuteronomy persistently warns of the divine wrath that will follow if either women or men disobey the covenant. Yet toward the end of the book, parashat Haazinu depicts God as a loving mother who labors to give birth to Israel and nurses Israel with honey and other delicacies of the Promised Land (32:13, 18), a striking image of the culmination of the saga that unfolds in the five books of the Torah.

—Andrea L. Weiss

דִּבְרִים ◆ D'varim

DEUTERONOMY 1:1–3:22

At the Threshold of Canaan

VENTS IN PARASHAT D'VARIM ("words") take place on the plains of Moab in the lower Jordan valley, at the moment when Israel is poised to enter the land of Canaan. The parashah contains the beginning of Moses' first farewell address, in which he reminds the people of their history: the journey from Mount Sinai (called Horeb in Deuteronomy), the scouts' debacle, and encounters with foreign nations. Moses' speech is not a neutral rehearsal of Israel's history; rather, it underscores and supports central theological and ideological arguments found throughout Deuteronomy.

The words presented as Moses' farewell address are directed toward a double audience. The first audience is one within the biblical text, the people of Israel about to enter the Promised Land. This imagined audience is standing at a pivotal moment: its members can either follow God's commands or they can repeat the mistakes of the prior generation, presumably with disastrous consequences. Moses' account is designed to encourage the people to make the right choice.

The second intended audience consists of Israelites who were contemporaries of the authors of this opening part of Deuteronomy. Most scholars believe that the material in this parashah, through 4:43 in the following parashah, was written during the Babylonian exile

(586–538 B.C.E.) as an introduction to the laws that form the core of the book (Deuteronomy 12–26) and the prologue to these laws (Deuteronomy 4:44–11:32). The exilic authors of our parashah present a version of the past that accomplishes three goals. First, this account of past events emphasizes God's role in Israel's history. Second, it justifies Israel's territory in theological terms. Third, it underscores obedience to God, as defined by Deuteronomy, as the key to Israel's ongoing political and military success.

How do we assess the relationship between texts and a community's social reality?

This parashah does not deal specifically with women. The seeming absence of women in this version of Israel's narrative, however, raises an issue that has concerned biblical scholars in general and feminist scholars in particular, namely, how to assess the relationship between texts and a community's social reality. Contemporary scholars, women and men alike, have shown how an account of the past is nearly always colored by an author's own subjective position and ideological stance. These scholars train readers to guard against taking historical accounts as mirror representations of historical events; they encourage us instead to explore what historical accounts disclose about their authors' historical and social situations. These methodological insights are particularly relevant to this opening part of Deuteronomy. In several places in this parashah, Moses' accounts of events differ from those in Exodus or Numbers. A comparison of the different versions provides insight into not only the variety of historical traditions that flourished in ancient Israel, but also the variety of theological and ideological viewpoints that shaped them.

—Elsie R. Stern

Outline—

I. SETTING AND INTRODUCTION TO MOSES' ADDRESS (1:1–5)

II. MOSES' REVIEW OF THE JOURNEY FROM HOREB (SINAI) (1:6–3:11)

- A. Appointment of tribal leaders (1:6–18)
- B. Episode of the scouts (1:19–46)
 - 1. The sending of scouts (1:19–33)
 - 2. The consequences (1:34–46)
- C. Encounters with foreign nations (2:1–3:11)
 - 1. Peaceful encounters with Edom, Moab, and Ammon (2:1–23)
 - 2. Battles against Amorite kings (2:24–3:11)

III. MOSES' ALLOTMENT OF LAND EAST OF THE JORDAN (3:12–20)

IV. MOSES' CHARGE TO JOSHUA (3:21–22)

1:1

These are the words that Moses addressed to all Israel on the other side of the Jordan.—Through the wilderness, in the Arabah near Suph, between Paran and Tophel, Laban, Hazeroth, and Di-zahab,² it is eleven days from Horeb to Kadesh-barnea by the Mount Seir route.—³ It was in the fortieth year, on the first day of the eleventh month, that Moses addressed the Israelites in ac-

א אלה הַקְּבָרִים אֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר מֹשֶׁה אֵל-יִשְׂרָאֵל בַּעֲבָר הַיַּרְדֵּן בַּמְּדֻבָּר בְּעֶרֶב מַוְלָּטָף בֵּין-פָּארָן וּבֵין-תָּפֵל וּלְבָנָן וּחֲצַרְתָּ וְדַי זָהָב: ² אַחֲרֵי עֲשָׂר יוֹם מִחְרָב הַרְּקָךְ הַרְּשָׁעָר עַד קָדְשָׁ בְּרֵנע: ³ וַיְהִי בָּאֲרָבָנִים שָׁנָה בְּעִשְׁתִּיעַשְׁר חַדְשָׁ בְּאַחֲרֵל לְחַדְשָׁ דִּבֶּר מֹשֶׁה אֵל-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּכָל אֲשֶׁר

Setting and Introduction to Moses' Address (1:1–5)

When read as straightforward itineraries or markers of time and place, these verses are perplexing. Some place names do not appear in the Torah's primary accounts of Israel's wandering in the wilderness. Plus, there is a contradiction between v. 1, which states that Moses delivered these words at various points during the course of Israel's journey through the wilderness, and vv. 3–5, which state that he spoke them at the end of the journey, when the Israelites reached the plains of Moab. Despite such ambiguities, these verses possess a strong rhetorical logic, for they juxtapose sites of Israelite misbehavior and consequent circuitous wandering with sites of Israelite obedience and consequent success and progress toward the land of Canaan.

i. on the other side of the Jordan. While most of Deuteronomy is presented as Moses' speech to the Israelites before entering the land, the phrase

"other side" here indicates that the entire book is addressed to the second intended audience, contemporaneous with the authors of the book as a whole, who were already looking back on the wilderness wandering and the entrance into the land as past events.

Suph. Place names are arranged in a reverse order of the Israelites' journey from Horeb (Sinai) to Moab. The Israelites first doubted God's saving power near Suph, a reference to the Sea of Reeds (Exodus 14:10–12).

Paran. The Israelites complained about wanting meat in the wilderness of Paran (Numbers 11); the episode of the scouts also occurred there (Numbers 13–14).

Hazeroth. This is where Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses (Numbers 12:1–2).

3. It was in the fortieth year. This verse emphasizes that Moses delivered the following words at the end of the forty years of wandering. Forty represents a symbolic time span, signifying a generation.

► The commentaries in this book echo Deuteronomy's own interpretive process.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 1056

► As he reflects on what has transpired, Moses engages in a kind of counter-transference.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 1058

► The Israelites' ingratitude reminds God of Adam, who blamed Eve for his disobedience.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 1056

► I dream with pain in the foreign land / of the flowering camps of Israel. . . .

VOICES ► 1060

cordance with the instructions that יהוה had given him for them,⁴ after he had defeated Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt in Heshbon, and King Og of Bashan, who dwelt at Ashtaroth [and] Edrei.⁵ On the other side of the Jordan, in the land of Moab, Moses undertook to expound this Teaching. He said:

⁶Our God יהוה spoke to us at Horeb, saying: You have stayed long enough at this mountain.⁷ Start out and make your way to the hill country of the Amorites and to all their neighbors in the Arabah, the hill country, the Shephelah, the Negeb, the seacoast, the land of the Canaanites, and the Lebanon, as far as the Great River, the river Euphrates. ⁸See, I place the land at your disposal. Go, take possession of the land that יהוה swore to your fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to assign to them and to their heirs after them.

צְוָה יְהוָה אֲתֶךָ אֶלָּהֶם : ⁴ אַחֲרֵי הַפְּתֹתָה אֲתָּה סִיחָן מֶלֶךְ הָאָמָרִי אֲשֶׁר יוֹשֵׁב בְּחַשְׁבָּנָה וְאַתָּה עֹג מֶלֶךְ הַבְּשָׂן אֲשֶׁר-יוֹשֵׁב בְּעַשְׁתָּרוֹת בְּאֲדֻרְעֵי : ⁵ בְּעֶבֶר הַירְקָן בְּאֶרְץ מוֹאָב הַוָּאֵיל מֹשֶׁה בָּאָרֶךְ תְּהִתָּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת לְאמֹר :

יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ דִּבֶּר אֲלָנוּ בְּחִרְבָּה לְאמֹר רַבְּכָלְכָם שְׁבָת בְּהַר הַזֶּה : ⁷ פְּנָו וְסַעַו לְכָם וּבָאוּ דָר הָאָמָרִי וְאֶל-כָּל-שְׁכִינָה בְּעַרְבָּה בְּהַר וּבְשִׁפְלָה וּבְנֶגֶב וּבְחוֹף הַיָּם אֶרְץ הַפְּנַעַל וּהַלְּבָנוֹן עַד-הַנָּהָר הַגָּדֶל נָהָר פְּרָת : ⁸ רָאָה נָתַתִּי לִפְנֵיכֶם אֶת-הָאָרֶץ בָּאוּ וּרְשֻׁוּ אֶת-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע יְהוָה לְאָבֹתֵיכֶם לְאָבָרָהּם לִיצְחָק וּלְיַעֲקֹב לְתָתָה לְהֶם וּלְזַרְעָם אַחֲרֵיכֶם :

5. Teaching. Heb. torah. This term most likely refers here to Moses' speeches in Deuteronomy, not to the whole Pentateuch or so-called Five Books of Moses (see also at 31:9).

Moses' Review of the Journey from Horeb (Sinai) (1:6–3:11)

Horeb (the name for Sinai used in Deuteronomy) and Kadesh-barnea represent the poles of Israelite behavior. These two sites become emblematic of the choice that confronts the Israelites: obey God and prosper in the Promised Land or disobey and be condemned to wandering circuitously outside the land. For Deuteronomy's exilic audience, Moses' speech argues for the ongoing importance of heeding God by obeying the laws that follow in Deuteronomy 12–26.

APPOINTMENT OF TRIBAL LEADERS (1:6–18)

Moses begins his address by recounting God's charge to the Israelites to set out from Horeb and journey to the Promised Land (vv. 6–8). Then, Moses recalls how he created an administrative infrastructure by appointing additional leaders (vv. 9–18).

6. Horeb. Deuteronomy refers to Mount Sinai as Horeb (see at Exodus 18:5).

7. the hill country of the Amorites . . . as far as . . . the river Euphrates. The Torah includes different understandings of the exact parameters of the land that it says God promised to the patriarchs. Some passages envision it as including only the land of Canaan, with its northern border at Lebo-hamath (in the Bekaa Valley of modern-day Lebanon, north of Damascus; see Numbers 13:21; 34:8). In contrast, the present verse understands the divine land grant more expansively to include both sides of the ⁹Thereupon I said to you, “I cannot bear the burden of you by myself.¹⁰Your God has multiplied you until you are today as numerous as the stars in the sky.—¹¹May יהוה, the God of your ancestors, increase your numbers a thousandfold, and bless you as promised.—¹²How can I bear unaided the trouble of you, and the burden, and the bickering! ¹³Pick from each of your tribes representatives who are wise, discerning, and experienced, and I will appoint them as your heads.”¹⁴You answered me and said, “What you propose to do is good.”¹⁵So I took your tribal leaders, wise

וַיֹּאמֶר אֲלֵיכֶם בְּעֵת הַהּוּא לֵאמֹר לֹא־
אָוֶן לִבְדֵּי שְׁאת אֲתֶכֶם: ¹⁰יְהֹוָה
אֱלֹהֵיכֶם הַרְבָּה אֲתֶכֶם וְהַגָּם הַיּוֹם
בְּכוֹכְבֵי הַשְׁמִינִים לְךָ: ¹¹יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ
אֲבֹתֵתֶכֶם יְסִיף עֲלֵיכֶם כִּכְם אַלְפַּי פָּעָם
וַיָּבֹרֶךְ אֲתֶכֶם כַּאֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר לְכֶם: ¹²אֵיכֶה
אֲשֶׁר לִבְדֵּי טְרַחְכֶם וּמְשַׁאכֶם וּרְיבֶּכֶם:
¹³הַבּוֹ לְכֶם אֲנָשִׁים חֲכָמִים וּנְבָנִים
וַיַּדְעִים לְשִׁבְטֵיכֶם וְאֲשֶׁרֶם בֶּרְאָשֵׁיכֶם:
¹⁴וַתַּعֲנוּ אֹתְנִי וַתָּאמֹנוּ טֻוב־דָּקָר אֲשֶׁר־
דִּבְרָת לְעֹשֹׂת: ¹⁵וְאַקְחֵ אֲתֶר־רָאשֵׁי

Jordan River, as far north as the Euphrates River (in today's Iraq; see also 11:24). The variations remind us that the idea of the Promised Land does not correlate with a single historical reality. Rather, the phrase reflects ongoing attempts by different generations of Israelite writers to understand their people's geopolitical aspirations and realities.

9–18. Moses recalls how he announced that the responsibility of leading the people, and especially of mediating their disputes, was too big for him to bear alone. He thus directs the people to choose wise and respected representatives from each of the tribes to serve as their leaders and judges.

This account conflates two earlier versions. In Exodus 18:13–27, Moses' Midianite father-in-law, Jethro, sees that Moses is exhausting himself in judging all the Israelites' disputes and advises Moses to delegate routine legal matters to others. In Numbers 11:10–17, the exasperated Moses complains to God about the burden of carrying the people single-handedly. God then tells him to appoint seventy representative elders upon whom God will bestow God's holy spirit so that they can share the burden of leadership. In Deuteronomy's version, Moses complains of the burden, as he does in Numbers, but the solution is closer to that proffered by Jethro in Exodus.

10–11. Your God יהוה has multiplied . . . stars in the sky. This statement echoes and confirms the fulfillment of God's promise to Abraham in Genesis 15:5 and 22:17; likewise, Genesis 24:60 predicts that Rebekah will “become thousands of myriads.”

12. the trouble of you, and the burden, and the bickering! In the previous verses, Moses declared that he cannot lead the people alone because of their divinely granted magnitude. Here, he claims that he needs help because of their negative behavior. The juxtaposition of these two reasons reinforces two paradoxical themes in this parashah: God's loyalty to previous promises, and Israel's chronic misbehavior.

13. Pick from each of your tribes. This crucial moment of autonomy and self-determination for the people contrasts with the earlier versions (Exodus 18; Numbers 11) in which Moses picks the leaders himself. The criteria for leadership here also differ from those in the prior episodes. In Exodus 18, judges must fear God, be trustworthy, and lack greed. In Numbers 11, participation in the divine spirit qualifies the leaders. Here, the leaders' authority stems from their wisdom and experience, and the righteousness of their ruling derives from their ability to follow Moses' directives regarding fairness and justice. This contrast among the three criteria for leadership underscores Deuteronomy's respect for human wisdom and experience, and its faith in the guiding power of law.

and experienced representatives, and appointed them heads over you: chiefs of thousands, chiefs of hundreds, chiefs of fifties, and chiefs of tens, and officials for your tribes.¹⁶ I charged your magistrates at that time as follows, “Hear out your fellow Israelites, and decide justly between anyone and a fellow Israelite or a stranger.¹⁷ You shall not be partial in judgment: hear out low and high alike. Fear no one, for judgment is God's. And any matter that is too difficult for you, you shall bring to me and I will hear it.”¹⁸ Thus I instructed you, at that time, about the various things that you should do.

¹⁹We set out from Horeb and traveled the great and terrible wilderness that you saw, along the road to the hill country of the Amorites, as our God יהוה had commanded us. When we reached Kadesh-

שְׁבָטֵיכֶם אֲנָשִׁים חֲכָמִים וַיְדָعִים וְאֶתְנָהָרָם אֲוֹתָם רָאשִׁים עַלְיכֶם שְׁרֵי אֲלָפִים וְשְׁרֵי מְאוֹת וְשְׁרֵי חֲמָשִׁים וְשְׁרֵי עֲשָׂרִת וְשְׁתְּרִים לְשְׁבָטֵיכֶם:¹⁶ וְאַצְוָה אֶת־שְׁפָטֵיכֶם בְּעֵת הַהּוּא לְאָמֵר שְׁמַע בֵּין־אֲחֵיכֶם וּבֵין־גָּרוֹן:¹⁷ לֹא־צָדַק בֵּין־אֲישׁ וּבֵין־אֲחֵיכֶם וּבֵין־גָּרוֹן תִּפְרֹר פְּנֵים בְּמִשְׁפָט בְּקָטָן בְּגָדָל תִּשְׁמַעַן לֹא תִגְוֹרוּ מִפְנֵי־אֲישׁ בְּיַהֲמַשְׁפָט לְאֶלְהִים הוּא וְהַדָּבָר אֲשֶׁר יִקְשָׁה מִלְּמָם תִּקְרְבוּן אֲלֵי וְשְׁמַעְתֶּנוּ:¹⁸ וְאַצְוָה אֶתְכֶם בְּעֵת הַהּוּא אֶת בְּל־הַדְּבָרִים אֲשֶׁר תַּעֲשׂוּן:¹⁹ וְגַפֵּע מְחוֹלֵב וְגַלֵּך אֶת בְּל־הַמְּדָבֵר הַגָּדוֹל וְהַנּוֹרָא הַהּוּא אֲשֶׁר רָאִיתָ דָרָר חַר הַאֲמֹרִי כַּאֲשֶׁר צֹוָה יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ

16. stranger. Heb. ger is more precisely translated as “resident alien,” for it refers to those who live within the Israelite community but cannot own land and therefore are vulnerable economically.

EPISODE OF THE SCOUTS (1:19–46)

This section recounts the events described in Numbers 13–14. Both versions tell of a reconnaissance mission by twelve scouts that results in the Israelites’ terrified refusal to attempt the conquest of the land of Canaan. After God vows to punish them for their lack of faith, the Israelites invade the land without God’s support and are defeated. As a result of this incident, God condemns the Israelites to linger in the wilderness until the current generation of adults dies off.

While the versions concur on major contours of the plot, there are significant differences between them. In Numbers 13:1–2, God requests the reconnaissance mission; in Deuteronomy 1:22, the people do. In Numbers 13:27–29, the scouts offer a mixed report: the land is bounteous and fertile, but its current inhabitants are terrifying. In Deuteronomy 1:25, they offer only a positive report. In Numbers 14:7–9, Joshua and Caleb encourage the Israelites to have faith in God’s ability to grant them victory. In Deuteronomy 1:29–33, Moses plays this role. In Numbers 14:24, 30, God says that only Caleb and Joshua may enter the land of Canaan, with no mention of whether Moses is included with the people or exempted. In Deuteronomy 1:37, Moses is prohibited from entering the land as a consequence of the people’s behavior in this episode.

These discrepancies underscore Deuteronomy’s particular point of view. In Numbers 14:1–4, the people respond to the fearsome account of the land’s inhabitants. Deuteronomy makes the people appear more cowardly: in 1:26–28, the people are too afraid to enter even though they have heard only a positive report. In this parashah, Moses states that he cannot enter the Promised Land as a result of the people’s misdeeds, not his own (as Numbers 20:12 claims).

Retelling events with new—even conflicting—data and perspectives illustrates the ongoing nature of interpretation, already taking place in the Torah itself. Deuteronomy’s retelling of the episode of the scouts demonstrates the effect of the experience of exile on the authors’ self-perception. For the exilic barnea,²⁰I said to you, “You have come to the hill country of the Amorites which our God יְהוָה is giving to us.²¹See, your God יְהוָה has placed the land at your disposal. Go up, take possession, as יְהוָה, the God of your fathers, promised you. Fear not and be not dismayed.”

²²Then all of you came to me and said, “Let us send emissaries ahead to reconnoiter the land for us and bring back word on the route we shall follow and the cities we shall come to.”²³I approved of the plan, and so I selected from among you twelve representatives, one from each tribe.²⁴They made for the hill country, came to the wadi Eshcol, and spied it out.²⁵They took some of the fruit of the land with them and brought it down to us. And they gave us this report: “It is a good land that our God יְהוָה is giving to us.”

²⁶Yet you refused to go up, and flouted the command of your God יְהוָה.²⁷You sulked in your tents and said, “It is out of hatred for us that יְהוָה brought us out of the land of Egypt, to hand us

אתנו ונִבְא עַד קֶרֶשׁ בְּרִנֵּעַ :²⁰ וַיֹּאמֶר אֲלֵיכֶם בָּאַתֶּם עַד-הָר הָאָמָרִי אֲשֶׁר-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ נָתַן לְנוּ :²¹ רֹאֶה נָתַן יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לְפָנֶיךְ אֶת-הָאָרֶץ עַלְהָ רֶשֶׁת אֲשֶׁר דָּבַר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ אֶבְטַחְתֶּלֶךְ אֶל-תִּנְאַא וְאֶל-

תִּחְתָּ:

²² וַתִּקְרְבּוּ אֵלַי כָּלְכֶם וַתִּאמְרוּ גַּשְׁלָחָה אֲנָשִׂים לְפָנֵינוּ וַיְחִפְרוּלָנוּ אֶת-הָאָרֶץ וַיִּשְׁבּוּ אֶתְנָנוּ דָּבָר אֶת-הַחֲרֵךְ אֲשֶׁר נְעַלְהָ בָּהּ וְאֶת הָעָרִים אֲשֶׁר נָבָא אֲלֵיכֶן :

²³ וַיְיִטְבּ עַלְיִנֵּי הַדָּבָר וַיָּקַח מִפְּנֵים עַשֶּׂר אֲנָשִׂים אִישׁ אֶחָד לְשִׁבְטֵת :²⁴ וַיִּפְנֵן וַיַּעֲלֵה הַהָרָה וַיָּבֹאוּ עַד-נַחַל אַשְׁכָל וַיָּגָלוּ אֶתְהָ :²⁵ וַיִּקְרְבּוּ בִּידָם מִפְּרִי הָאָרֶץ וַיָּרְדוּ אַלְיָנוּ וַיִּשְׁבּוּ אֶתְנָנוּ דָבָר וַיִּאמְרוּ טוֹבה

הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ נָתַן לְנוּ :²⁶ וְלֹא אָבִיתָם לְעַלְתָּה וַתִּמְרְאֵו אֶת-פִּי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם :²⁷ וַתַּרְגַּנְנוּ בְּאַהֲלֵיכֶם וַתִּאמְרוּ בְּשִׁנְאָת יְהוָה אֶתְנוּ הַוְצִיאנוּ מִמִּצְרַיִם לְתִתְתֵּן אֶתְנוּ בֵּין הָאָמָרִי authors of this text, Israel's history is tragically marked by the people's inability to sustain their faith in God. For these authors, a primary goal is to encourage their contemporary audience to resist this pattern and abide by the covenant.

The Sending of Scouts (1:19–33)

In Numbers 13:2, God begins the campaign for the Promised Land by telling Moses to send scouts into the land of Canaan. Here, that episode opens with Moses' charge to conquer the land and his assurance that God will guarantee the Israelites' victory. The people respond by asking Moses to send out scouts. By having the people ask for the reconnaissance mission after Moses has told them that God has guaranteed victory, the authors suggest that the request itself is symptomatic of the people's lack of faith.

21. take possession. The root y-r-sh has a wide range of meanings, including “to take possession by force” and “to inherit.” Those quite different nuances of the root point to the complicated status of the acquisition of the territories identified as the Promised Land. The Bible depicts the entry into the land both as a violent (dis)possession and as a legitimate inheritance of what rightfully belongs to Israel through divine grant (see Joshua 1–Judges 1; see also at Deuteronomy 7:1–5, 24; 12:29–31; 31:16).

Fear not. Confidence in God's advocacy provides grounds for courage here and in other moments of military conquest and encounter.

25. “It is a good land that our God is giving to us.” This concise report about the positive nature of the land contrasts sharply with the report in Numbers 13:27–29, which emphasizes both the quality of the land and the challenges it presents to conquest.

over to the Amorites to wipe us out.²⁸ What kind of place are we going to? Our brothers have taken the heart out of us, saying, ‘We saw there a people stronger and taller than we, large cities with walls sky-high, and even Anakites.’”

²⁹I said to you, “Have no dread or fear of them. ³⁰None other than your God, יְהוָה, who goes before you, will fight for you, just as [God] did for you in Egypt before your very eyes,³¹ and in the wilderness, where you saw how your God, יְהוָה, carried you, as a householder carries his son, all the way that you traveled until you came to this place.³² Yet for all that, you have no faith in your God, יְהוָה,³³ who goes before you on your journeys—to scout the place where you are to encamp—in fire by night and in cloud by day, in order to guide you on the route you are to follow.”

לְהַשְׁמִידֵנוּ: ²⁸ אָנָה | אֲנַחֲנוּ עֶלְيִם אֲחִינָה
הַמְּסֹעַ אֶת-לְבָבֵנוּ לְאָמֵר עִם גָּדוֹל וָרָם
מִמֶּנוּ עָרִים גָּדוֹלָת וּבְعִזּוֹת בְּשָׂמִים וְגַם-בָּנִי עֲנָקִים רְאִינוּ שָׁם:

²⁹ וַיֹּאמֶר אֱלֹהִים לְאַתְּעַצֵּן וְלֹא-תִּירְאֵן
מֵהֶם: ³⁰ יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיכֶם הַהֲלֹךְ לְפִנֵּיכֶם
הַוָּא יַלְחַם לְכֶם כִּלְבָד אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה אֶתְכֶם
בְּמִצְרַיִם לְעֵינֵיכֶם: ³¹ וּבְמִדְבָּר אֲשֶׁר רָאתָה
אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁאָק יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בְּאָשֶׁר יִשְׁאָ-
אִישׁ אֶת-בָּנָיו בְּכָל-הָרָה אֲשֶׁר הַלְכָתָם
עַד-בָּאָכָם עַד-הַמִּקְוֹת הַזֹּה: ³² וּבְדָבָר
הַזֹּה אַיִלְכֶם מַמְּנֵיכֶם בִּיהוָה אֱלֹהִיכֶם:
³³ הַהֲלֹךְ לְפִנֵּיכֶם בְּדָרְךָ לְתוֹרָ לְכֶם מִקּוֹם
לְחַנְתָּכֶם בָּאָשׁ | לִילָה לְרָאִיתָכֶם בְּדָרְךָ
אֲשֶׁר תַּלְכֹּבָה וּבָעָנָן יוֹמָם:

28. Anakites. A people renowned for their mythic size (see at Numbers 13:28).

29–33. Moses tries to reassure the people by reminding them that they have been witnesses to God's miraculous power on their behalf. This testimony serves to show how cowardly the earlier generation was and to remind the later generation of God's past miraculous support of their ancestors.

31. householder...son. [Heb. ish...ben. This translation understands the noun ish (traditionally “a man”) as referring to one who represents a group; here, the group is by default a household, the basic social and economic unit in the ancient Near East; and the head of a household, in turn, was presumably male. Responsible for his corporate household's continuity, a householder was expected to invest time and attention on raising his heir (The Contemporary Torah, 2006, pp. 385, 402). Certain biblical texts formally ascribe to the father the parental role as a child's protector and guide, as in Psalm 103:13 and Job 29:16.]

Alternatively, one can translate this verse's simile in a gender-neutral sense: “as a parent carries a child.” In ancient Israel, both women and men cared for children. A notable example of a mother physically carrying her child is when Abraham places Ishmael on Hagar's shoulder as he sends them away (Genesis 21:14).

Since this simile aims to describe God's actions on Israel's behalf, it is worthwhile to keep in mind that while a number of passages depict God metaphorically as a father (see at Deuteronomy 32:6), others avoid gender specification for parents. For instance, the metaphoric parent who gently nurtures Israel in Hosea 11 could be read either as mother or father. However, a few verses in the Bible clearly depict God in a maternal role. For example, the maternal imagery in the prophecies of consolation in Isaiah 40–66 describe both God's power (Isaiah 42:14) and God's unending devotion to Israel (Isaiah 49:14; 66:13). Likewise, Numbers 11:12 alludes to God as the one who gave birth to and cares for Israel (see also at Deuteronomy 32:13, 18). At its core, the imagery here conveys God's solicitous care for Israel, without necessarily reflecting on God's perceived gender. —Ed.]

³⁴ יְהוָה heard your loud complaint and, becoming angry, vowed: ³⁵ Not one of the men [counted in the census], this evil generation, shall see the good land that I swore to give to your fathers—³⁶ none except Caleb son of Jephunneh; he shall see it, and to him and his descendants will I give the land on which he set foot, because he remained loyal to me too, saying: You shall not enter it either. ³⁷ Because of you יְהוָה was incensed with me too, saying: You shall not enter it either. ³⁸ Joshua son of Nun, who attends you, he shall enter it. Imbue him with strength, for he shall allot it to Israel.—³⁹ Moreover, your little ones who you said would be carried off, your children who do not yet know good from bad, they shall enter it; to them will I give it and they shall possess it. ⁴⁰ As for you, turn about and march into the wilderness by the way of the Sea of Reeds.

⁴¹ You replied to me, saying, “We stand guilty before יְהוָה. We will go up now and fight, just as our God יְהוָה commanded us.” And [the men among] you each girded yourselves with war gear and recklessly started for the hill country. ⁴² But יְהוָה said to me, “Warn them: Do not go up and do not fight, since I am not in your midst; else you will be routed by your enemies.” ⁴³ I spoke to you, but

³⁴ וַיִּשְׁמַע יְהוָה אֶת־קוֹל דְּבָרֵיכֶם וַיַּקְצַּפְתִּי
וַיִּשְׁבַּע לִאמְרָה: ³⁵ אִם־יִרְאָה אִישׁ בָּנָנִים
הָאֱלֹהִים הַדּוֹר הַרְבֵּעַ הַזֶּה אֶת הָאָרֶץ הַטוֹּבָה
אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּעֲתִי לְתַת לְאָבֹתֵיכֶם: ³⁶ זֹלְתִּי
כָּלֵב בָּנֵי־פְנֵה הוּא יָרְאָה וְלוֹא־אָתַן אֶת־
הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־דִּרְבָּה וְלֹבָנָיו יִעַן אֲשֶׁר מֶלֶא
אַחֲרֵי יְהוָה: ³⁷ גַּם־בְּלִי הַתְּאַגֵּף יְהוָה
בְּגַלְלֵיכֶם לִאמְרָה גַּם־אַתָּה לְאַתְּבָא שֵׁם:
³⁸ יְהֹוָשֻׁעַ בֶּן־נֹנֵן הַעֲמִיד לִפְנֵיךְ הַזֶּה יִבְאָ
שְׁמָה אָתוֹ חִזְקָק בַּיּוֹהָא יִנְחַלְתָּה אֶת־
יִשְׂרָאֵל: ³⁹ וְטַפְכֶם אֲשֶׁר אִמְרָתֶם לְבָנָי
יְהֹוָה וּבְנֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר לְאִזְרָעָו הַיּוֹם טוֹב
וְרֹעַ הַמָּה יִבָּאוּ שְׁמָה וְלֹהֶם אֶתְנָגָה וְהֶם
יִרְשְׁוֹה: ⁴⁰ וְאַתֶּם פָּנוּ לְכֶם וְסַעַר הַמְּרַבְּרָה
גַּרְגָּרָה יִמְסֹׁךְ:

⁴¹ וְתַעֲנוּ וְתַאֲמִרְוּ אֶלְي ְחַטָּאנוּ לִיהְוָה
אָנָּחָנוּ נִעְלָה וְנִלְחָמָנוּ כָּל אִשְׁר־צָנָנוּ
יְהֹוָה אֶלְהֵינוּ וְתַחֲגוּ אִישׁ אֶת־כָּלֵי
מַלְחָמָתוֹ וְתַחֲנוּ לְעַלְתַּת הַחֲרָה: ⁴² וְלֹא־אָמַר
יְהֹוָה אֶלְיָאָמָר לְהַט לֹא תַּעֲלוּ וְלֹא־
תַּלְחַמּוּ כִּי אִינְכֶם בְּקָרְבָּכֶם וְלֹא תַּגְּפַפּוּ
לִפְנֵי אִיבִּיכֶם: ⁴³ וְאַדְבֵּר אֶלְכֶם וְלֹא

The Consequences (1:34–46)

In Numbers, God responds angrily to the Israelites' fear and resistance and decides that none of the adult generation will live to enter the Promised Land except for Caleb and Joshua (see further at Numbers 14:10–38, especially at v. 21). In Moses' retelling here, even Moses will be prohibited from entering the land on account of the people's actions. When the Israelites hear God's decree, they repent of their fearfulness and prepare themselves to obey God's command to conquer the land. God, however, warns Moses that God will not support this mission and it will fail.

36. Caleb. A chieftain from the tribe of Judah

(Numbers 13:6). According to Numbers 14:6–9, Caleb and Joshua were the two scouts who assured the people that with God's help they could conquer the land of Canaan. According to Judges 1:12–15, Caleb and his tribe will lead the Israelites' campaign when entering the land. He will then offer his daughter Achsah as a prize to the warrior who captures the town of Kiriath-sepher.

37. Because of you. Deuteronomy conforms to the tradition that Moses was not allowed to enter the Promised Land but blames God's prohibition on the people's actions. In contrast, Numbers 20:12 implies that Moses himself is responsible for this punishment.

38. Joshua. See at 1:36.

you would not listen; you flouted יְהוָה's command and willfully marched into the hill country.⁴⁴ Then the Amorites who lived in those hills came out against you like so many bees and chased you, and they crushed you at Hormah in Seir.⁴⁵ Again you wept before יְהוָה; but יְהוָה would not heed your cry or give ear to you.

⁴⁶ Thus, after you had remained at Kadesh all that long time, 2 we marched back into the wilderness by the way of the Sea of Reeds, as יְהוָה had spoken to me, and skirted the hill country of Seir a long time.

ENCOUNTERS WITH FOREIGN NATIONS (2:1–3:11)

This section recounts Israel's encounters with five nations in the area nowadays known as Transjordan. In the first three episodes, God commands Israel not to militarily confront Edom (2:2–7), Moab (2:8–12), and Ammon (2:16–23) because they are Israel's kin. Rather, the Israelites are instructed to ask permission to pass peaceably through these foreign lands and to purchase food and water. In the latter two episodes, God commands Israel to wage war against Heshbon (2:24–37) and Bashan (3:1–7) and to conquer their lands. In contrast to the rebelliousness seen in the prior section, Israel here follows God's commands exactly and emerges unscathed from the first three encounters and victorious in the last two.

Peaceful Encounters with Edom, Moab, and Ammon (2:1–23)

The parashah offers two reasons for God's command to behave peacefully toward these nations, all three of which are located in modern-day Jordan. First, they are described as Israel's kin: the Edomites are the descendants of Esau; Moab and Ammon are the descendants of Lot. (On the origin of Moab and Ammon from the sexual union between Lot and his unnamed daughters, see at Genesis 19:30–38.)

שְׁמֻעַתְּמֵם וְתִמְרוֹ אֶת-פִּי יְהוָה וְתִזְׁדֹּו וְתַעֲלֹ
הַהָּרָה: ⁴⁴ וַיֵּצֵא הָאָמֹרִי הַיּוֹשֵׁב בְּהָר הַהָּרָה
לְקַרְאָתֶלֶם וַיַּרְדֹּפוּ אֶתֶּלֶם כִּאֵשׁ תַּעֲשֵׂנָה
הַדְּבָרִים וַיַּפְתַּח אֶתֶּלֶם בְּשָׁעֵר עַד-חַרְמָה:
⁴⁵ וְתַשְׁבּוּ וְתַבְכּוּ לִפְנֵי יְהוָה וְלֹא-שְׁמַעַ
יְהוָה בְּקָלְכֶם וְלֹא הָאִזְׁנֵן אֶלְיכֶם:

⁴⁶ וְתַשְׁבּוּ בְּקָדְשֵׁי יְמִינֵיכֶם רַבִּים כִּימִינֵם אֲשֶׁר
יִשְׁבְּתֶם: ב נִפְגַּן וּנְסַע הַמְּדֻבָּרָה דָּבָר-יִמְטֹף כִּאֵשׁ דָּבָר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים וּנְסַב אֹתָה-הַרְיִשְׁעֵיר יִמְרֵם רַבִּים: ס

Secondly, as members of the Abrahamic family tree, these nations also are recipients of divinely granted territory (2:5, 9, 19), which they gained by dispossessing earlier residents of the land (just as Israel is about to dispossess the Canaanites). This assertion communicates several cultural and theological messages: it emphasizes that the Israelites have a privileged relationship with nations that are considered their “kin”; and it argues that God controls the history and territory of all the nations in Israel’s purview, not just Israel itself.

The events recounted in this passage are found elsewhere in the Torah (Numbers 20–22 and Deuteronomy 23). Each of these traditions agrees that Israel never had a military conflict with Ammon, Moab, or Edom during their journey from Egypt to Canaan. However, they differ in their explanations why. In Numbers 20–22 the Edomites do not grant permission to pass through the land; Israel then turns away and takes another route. Numbers 21:24, which is difficult to decipher, suggests that Israel did not cross over into Ammonite territory because the Ammonites were strong. Deuteronomy 23:4–5 states that the Ammonites and Moabites are to be forever excluded from membership in Israel because “they did not meet you with food and water on your journey after you left Egypt,” which then becomes a rationale for the exclusion of foreign wives (see at 2:13). In this section of Deuteronomy, Israel ²Then said to me: ³You have been skirting this hill country long enough; now turn north. ⁴And charge the people as follows: You will be passing through the territory of your kin, the descendants of Esau, who live in Seir. Though they will be afraid of you, be very careful ⁵not to provoke them. For I will not give you of their land so much as a foot can tread on; I have given the hill country of Seir as a possession to Esau. ⁶What food you eat you shall obtain from them for money; even the water you drink you shall procure from them for money. ⁷Indeed, your God יְהוָה has blessed you in all your undertakings. [God] has watched over your wanderings through this great wilderness; your God יְהוָה has been with you these past forty years: you have lacked nothing.

⁸We then moved on, away from our kin, the descendants of Esau, who live in Seir, away from the road of the Arabah, away from Elath and Ezion-geber; and we marched on in the direction of the wilderness of Moab. ⁹And said to me: Do not harass the Moabites or provoke them to war. For I will not give you any of their land as a possession; I have assigned Ar as a possession to the descendants of Lot.—

is portrayed not as weak, but rather as obedient to God's command and respectful of both kinship relationships and God's geopolitical plans and decisions (compare 7:7).

4. your kin, the descendants of Esau. “Kin” is a key concept in the laws of Deuteronomy, where it signifies those toward whom each individual Israelite has a heightened relationship of responsibility. By identifying the Edomites as “kin,” this text suggests that they too, have a privileged relationship with the Israelites and that their rights, especially their property rights, are to be respected. (See 23:8–9, which permits their inclusion with Israel in the third generation.)

9–13. These comments about Moab closely parallel the previous section about Edom, with the

² וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵי לִאמּוֹר: ³ רַב־לְכָם סָב
אֶת־הָהָר הַזֶּה פָּנוּ לְכָם צְפָנָה: ⁴ וְאַתָּה
הַעַם עֹז לְאֹמֶר אַתֶּם עֲבָרִים בְּגֻבוֹל
אֲחִיכֶם בְּנֵי־עָשָׂו הַיּוֹשְׁבִים בְּשָׁעֵר וַיַּרְאוּ
מְלָקָם וַיִּשְׁמַרְתֶּם מַאֲדָ: ⁵ אֶל־תַּתְגֹּרוּ בָּם בַּיּ
לְאַתָּה נָכַן לְכָם מִארְצָם שֶׁד מִדְנָה בְּפִרְגָּל
כִּירְשָׁה לְעַשְׂוֹ נְתַתִּי אֶת־הָהָר שָׁעֵר:
6 אַכְל תְּשִׁבְרוּ מִאֵתֶם בְּכֶסֶף וְאַכְלָתֶם
וְגַם־מִינִים תְּכִרְוּ מִאֵתֶם בְּכֶסֶף וְשִׁתְתִּיתֶם:
7 כִּי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בְּרָכָךְ בְּכָל־מְعָשֶׁה יְהָנֵךְ
יַדְע לְכַתֵּךְ אֶת־הַמִּדְבָּר הַגָּדוֹל הַזֶּה וְהַזֶּה
אַרְבָּעִים שָׁנָה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ עַמְךָ לֹא
חִסְרָת דָּבָר:

⁸ וְנַעֲבֵר מֵאַת אֲחִינוֹ בְּנֵי־עָשָׂו הַיּוֹשְׁבִים
בְּשָׁעֵר מִלְּרָאֵל הַעֲרָבָה מְאִילָת וּמִעַצְמָן:
גָּבָר ס וְגַפְן וְנַעֲבֵר דָּרָךְ מִדְבָּר מוֹאָב:
9 וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵי אֶל־תַּפְצֵל אֶת־מוֹאָב
וְאֶל־תַּתְגֹּר בָּם מִלְחָמָה בַּיּ לְאַתָּה לֹא
מִארְצָךְ יַרְשָׁה בַּי לְבָנִי־לִלוֹת נְתַתִּי אֶת־עַר יַרְשָׁה:

addition of a digression regarding the occupation history of the lands of Moab and Edom. Both territories were formerly inhabited by strong peoples who were dispossessed as part of God's plan of conquest and land distribution. The territory of Moab carries the name given by Lot's eldest daughter to her son born of the incestuous relations with her father (see Genesis 19:30–38). This myth of origin reveals the Israelites' complicated attitude toward the Moabites: while they are kin, they are also the product of a deeply transgressive sexual union. The book of Ruth, about a Moabite woman who becomes the wife of a Judahite man and great-grandmother of King David, illustrates another facet of the complicated attitude.

¹⁰It was formerly inhabited by the Emim, a people great and numerous, and as tall as the Anakites. ¹¹Like the Anakites, they are counted as Rephaim; but the Moabites call them Emim. ¹²Similarly, Seir was formerly inhabited by the Horites; but the descendants of Esau dispossessed them, wiping them out and settling in their place, just as Israel did in the land they were to possess, which had given to them.—

¹³Up now! Cross the wadi Zered!

So we crossed the wadi Zered. ¹⁴The time that we spent in travel from Kadesh-barnea until we crossed the wadi Zered was thirty-eight years, until that whole generation of warriors had perished from the camp, as had sworn concerning them. ¹⁵Indeed, the hand of יהוה struck them, to root them out from the camp until they were finished off.

¹⁶When all the warriors among the people had died off, ¹⁷spoke to me, saying: ¹⁸You are now passing through the territory of Moab, through Ar.

¹⁹You will then be close to the Ammonites; do not

¹⁰הָאָמִים לְפָנֵים יַשְׁבּוּ בָהּ עַם גָּדוֹל וּבָרֶם כְּעַנְקִים: ¹¹רְפָאִים יַחֲשִׁבּוּ אֲפִיכָּם בְּעַנְקִים וְהַמְּאָבִים יַקְרִאוּ לְהֶם אָמִים: ¹²וּבְשֻׁעַר יַשְׁבּוּ הַחֲרוּט לְפָנִים וּבְנִי עָשָׂוּ יְרֵשָׁוּם וְשִׁמְידּוּם מִפְנֵיכֶם וַיַּשְׁבּוּ תְּחִתָּם בְּאָשֶׁר עָשָׂה יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאַרְץ יְרֵשָׁתוֹ אֲשֶׁר־גַּתְּנוּ יְהֹוָה לְהֶם:

¹³עַתָּה קָמוּ וַיַּעֲבְרוּ לְכֶם אֶת־ינְחָל זֶרֶד וַיַּעֲבֹר אֶת־ינְחָל זֶרֶד: ¹⁴וְהַיִּמְמִים אֲשֶׁר־הַלְבָנוּ מִקְדְּשׁ בְּרִגְעָע עַד אֲשֶׁר־עַבְרָנוּ אֶת־נְחָל זֶרֶד שְׁלָשִׁים וּשְׁמִנְהָ שָׁנָה עַד־תָּמָם כָּל־הַדָּוֹר אֲנָשֵׁי הַמְּלָחָמָה מִקְרָב הַמִּחְנָה בְּאָשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע יְהֹוָה לְהֶם: ¹⁵וְגַם יַד־יְהֹוָה הִיתָּה בָּם לְהֶם מִקְרָב הַמִּחְנָה עַד תָּמָם:

¹⁶וַיְהִי כַּאֲשֶׁר־תִּפְמֹן בְּלַאֲנָשֵׁי הַמְּלָחָמָה לִמּוֹת מִקְרָב הָעָם: ¹⁷וַיַּדְבֵּר יְהֹוָה אֱלֹי לִאמּוֹר: ¹⁸אַתָּה עֹבֵר הַיּוֹם אֶת־גְּבוּל מוֹאָב אֶת־עֵרָה: ¹⁹וְקָרְבָּתָ מָול בְּנֵי עָמֹן

10. as tall as the Anakites. See at 1:28.

12. just as Israel did in the land they were to possess. The use of the past tense is anachronistic in the context of Moses' speech since the conquest has not yet occurred. This discrepancy reminds readers that Deuteronomy as a whole is addressed to a later, post-conquest audience.

13. The peaceful crossing that is recounted here contrasts somewhat with descriptions in Nehemiah 13:1–3, which imply some hostility from Moab. This hostility justifies the later exclusion of the Moabites, along with the Ammonites, from the Israelite community (23:4–7). Marriage with Ammonite and Moabite women is presented as a problem in Ezra 9–10 and Nehemiah 13, books dealing with the postexilic restructuring of Jewish life in Judah in the 5th century B.C.E.; but the book of Ruth offers a different perspective.

14–15. These verses mark the transition between the generation of the exodus and the generation of the conquest, as well as the transition between the wandering in the wilderness and the beginning of the acquisition of the Promised Land.

15. Indeed, the hand of יהוה. This verse emphasizes that the deaths of the warriors were ordained and executed by God—and were not a natural part of the cycle of generations.

16–23. This passage describes encounters with Ammon in a way that parallels the two previous passages (vv. 2–7, 8–12); and like the one concerning Moab, it includes a digression about the occupation history of the land in question. The territory of Ammon, north of Moab, bears the name given by Lot's younger daughter to her son from the incestuous relations with her father (see at 2:9–13 and Genesis 19:37).

harass them or start a fight with them. For I will not give any part of the land of the Ammonites to you as a possession; I have assigned it as a possession to the descendants of Lot.—

²⁰It, too, is counted as Rephaim country. It was formerly inhabited by Rephaim, whom the Ammonites call Zamzummim, ²¹a people great and numerous and as tall as the Anakites. יהוה wiped them out, so that [the Ammonites] dispossessed them and settled in their place, ²²as [God] did for the descendants of Esau who live in Seir, by wiping out the Horites before them, so that they dispossessed them and settled in their place, as is still the case. ²³So, too, with the Avvim who dwelt in villages in the vicinity of Gaza: the Caphtorim, who came from Crete, wiped them out and settled in their place.—

²⁴Up! Set out across the wadi Arnon! See, I give into your power Sihon the Amorite, king of Heshbon, and his land. Begin the occupation: engage him in battle. ²⁵This day I begin to put the dread and fear of you upon the peoples everywhere under heaven,

אל-תצְרָם וְאֶל-תַּחַגְךָ בְּמֵבִיא לְאֹהֶן מִמְּאֶרֶץ בְּנֵי-עֲמֹן לְכָ יְרֻשָּׁה כִּי לְבָנִי-לֹט בְּתִתְּךָ יְרֻשָּׁה:

²⁰ארֶץ־רְפָאִים תַּחַשְׂבָּ אֲפִיהָו רְפָאִים יִשְׁבְּרָבָל לְפָנָים וְהַעֲמָנִים יִקְרָאוּ לְהָם זְמָזְמִים: ²¹עַם גָּדוֹל וּרְבָּם בְּעָנְקִים וַיִּשְׁמַדְךָם יְהֹוָה מִפְנֵיכֶם וַיִּרְשֶׁם וַיִּשְׁבֹּו תְּחִתָּם: ²²כַּאֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה לְבָנֵי עַשְׂוֵה הַיּוֹבִים בְּשַׁעַר אֲשֶׁר הַשְׁמִיד אֶת־הַחוֹן מִפְנֵיכֶם וַיִּרְשֶׁם וַיִּשְׁבֹּו תְּחִתָּם עַד־הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה: ²³וְהַעֲמִים הַיּוֹבִים בְּחָצְרוֹת עַד־עֲזָה בְּפִתְּרוֹם הַצְּאִים מִכְּפֹתָר הַשְׁמִידִים וַיִּשְׁבֹּו תְּחִתָּם:

²⁴קוֹמוּ סָעוּ וְעַבְרוּ אֶת־נִנְחָל אַרְנוֹן רָאָה נִתְּתִי בְּיַדְךָ אֶת־סִיחָן מֶלֶךְ־חַשְׁבּוֹן הָאָמֹרִי וְאֶת־אַרְצָו הַתָּל רֶשׁ וְתַחַגְךָ בָּו מֶלֶחֶמה: ²⁵הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה אֲחַל תַּת פְּחַדְךָ וַיָּרַאתְךָ עַל—

Battles against Amorite Kings (2:24–3:11)

This passage tells of the first of Israel's conquests east of the Jordan and marks a transition from the peaceful encounters with Israel's kin to the military conquest of the Promised Land. The text justifies the occupation of the Amorites' land in three ways. First, in contrast to the prior sections dealing with Edom, Moab, and Ammon, this section omits any reference to a divine land grant to the Amorites, which suggests that the Amorites' sovereignty is not expressly authorized by God and thus is invalid. Second, the text offers a belated moral justification for the conquest, for vv. 26–31 recall how Moses asks Sihon, the Amorite king, to allow the Israelites to pass freely through his land; but God hardens Sihon's heart, and the king refuses to grant them passage. Third, the conquest of the Amorites serves as evidence for the idea that if the Israelites obey God's commands, they will be rewarded with military victory.

This passage raises questions for contemporary readers, as it reveals the Bible's own ambivalence about what qualifies as proper justification for conquest. Does one people's moral transgressions justify military aggression by another people? Is any land not explicitly granted by God fair game for God's chosen people? What is, or should be, the role of moral and theological considerations in political and military action?

24. Up! Set out across the wadi Arnon. This verse echoes God's initial charge to the Israelites in 1:7, thus impressing upon the reader that this moment is a fresh beginning. It is a chance to correct the earlier mistakes that tragically derailed Israel's initial approach to the Promised Land.

so that they shall tremble and quake because of you whenever they hear you mentioned.

²⁶Then I sent messengers from the wilderness of Kedemoth to King Sihon of Heshbon with an offer of peace, as follows, ²⁷“Let me pass through your country. I will keep strictly to the highway, turning off neither to the right nor to the left. ²⁸What food I eat you will supply for money, and what water I drink you will furnish for money; just let me pass through—²⁹as the descendants of Esau who dwell in Seir did for me, and the Moabites who dwell in Ar—that I may cross the Jordan into the land that our God יְהוָה is giving us.”

³⁰But King Sihon of Heshbon refused to let us pass through, because יְהוָה had stiffened his will and hardened his heart in order to deliver him into your power—as is now the case. ³¹And said to me: See, I begin by placing Sihon and his land at your disposal. Begin the occupation; take possession of his land.

³²Sihon with all his troops took the field against us at Jahaz, ³³and our God יְהוָה delivered him to us and we defeated him and his sons and all his troops. ³⁴At that time we captured all his towns, and we doomed every town—men, women, and children—leaving no survivor. ³⁵We retained as booty only the cattle and the spoil of the cities that we captured. ³⁶From Aroer on the edge of the Arnon

פָנֵי הַעֲמִים תַחַת בָּלְהָשָׁמִים אֲשֶׁר
יִשְׁמַעְן שָׁמָעֵךְ וּרְגֹזְנוּ וְחַלְוּ מִפְנֵיךְ:
²⁶ וְאַשְׁלַח מְלָאכִים מִמְדִבֶר קָדוֹמוֹת אֶל־
סִיחֹן מֶלֶךְ חַשְׁבּוֹן דְבָרִי שְׁלוֹם לְאמֹר:
²⁷ אַעֲבָרָה בָּאָרֶץ בְּנֶרֶךְ בְּנֶרֶךְ אֶלְךְ לְאָ
אָסָור יִמְין וְשָׂמָאל: ²⁸ אַכְל בְּבָסָף
תְשִׁבְלִי וְאַכְלָתִי וּמִים בְּפֶסֶף תַתְנִילִ
וְשִׁתְתִּיתִי רַק אַעֲבָרָה בְּרָגְלִי: ²⁹ כַּאֲשֶׁר
עֲשֹׂו לְיִשְׁכּוּם הַיְשָׁכּוּם בָּעָר עַד אֲשֶׁר־אַעֲבָר
אֶת־הַיְרָדוֹן אֶל־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ
נָתַן לָנוּ:

³⁰ וְלֹא אָבָה סִיחֹן מֶלֶךְ חַשְׁבּוֹן הַעֲבָרָנוּ
בָו כִּי־הַקָּשָׁה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ אֶת־רֹוחֵךְ
וְאֶמְץ אַת־לְבָבוֹ לְמַעַן תַּתְנוּ בְּנֵךְ בַּיּוֹם הַזֶּה: ס ³¹ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ
הַחֲלֹתִי תַת לְפָנֵיךְ אֶת־סִיחֹן וְאֶת־אַרְצֹו:
הַחֶל רֶשׁ לְרֹשות אֶת־אַרְצֹו:
³² וַיֵּצֵא סִיחֹן לְקָרְאָתָנוּ הוּא וְכָל־עָמוֹ
לְמַלְחָמָה יְהִצָּה: ³³ וַיַּתְנוּהוּ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ
לְפָנֵינוּ וַיַּבְּנֵה אֹתוֹ וְאַתְּבָנוּ בְּנֵינוּ וְאַתְּבָלֵל
עָמוֹ: ³⁴ וַיָּלֶךְ אֶת־כָּל־עָרִיו בְּעֵת הַהּוּא
וַיַּחֲרַט אֶת־כָּל־עִיר מִתְמַמָּה וְהַנְשִׁים וְהַטְּף
לֹא הַשְּׁאָרָנוּ שְׁרִיד: ³⁵ רַק הַבְּהִמָּה בְּזַעַן
לָנוּ וְשָׁלַל הַעֲרִים אֲשֶׁר לְכָדֵנוּ: ³⁶ מַעֲרַעַת
אֲשֶׁר עַל־שְׁפַת־נַחַל אַרְנֵן וְהַעַיר אֲשֶׁר

26–29. King Sihon's refusal of the offer of peace justifies the Israelite conquest of his lands.

30. because יְהוָה had . . . hardened his heart.

This verse recalls God's hardening of Pharaoh's heart (see Exodus 9:12; 10:20, 27; 11:10). In both stories, God causes a foreign leader to oppose Israel so that God will have the opportunity to demonstrate God's power and allegiance to Israel in response.

31–37. See, I begin by placing Sihon . . . just as our God יְהוָה had commanded. This is an example of a case in which God commands the Israelites to fight a war whose outcome God has already guaranteed.

34. we doomed every town—men, women, and children. The high degree of destruction depicted in this passage demonstrates that the Israelites are not fighting for mercenary reasons. Here, they take no prisoners but do retain booty. Other stories of wars describe how they destroy all property in order to demonstrate the purity of their motives (see I Samuel 15:3).

valley, including the town in the valley itself, to Gilead, not a city was too mighty for us; our God יְהוָה delivered everything to us.³⁷ But you did not encroach upon the land of the Ammonites, all along the wadi Jabbok and the towns of the hill country, just as our God יְהוָה had commanded.

3 We made our way up the road toward Bashan, and King Og of Bashan with all his troops took the field against us at Edrei.² But he said to me: Do not fear him, for I am delivering him and all his troops and his country into your power, and you will do to him as you did to Sihon king of the Amorites, who lived in Heshbon.

³ So our God also delivered into our power King Og of Bashan, with all his troops, and we dealt them such a blow that no survivor was left.⁴ At that time we captured all his towns; there was not a town that we did not take from them: sixty towns, the whole district of Argob, the kingdom of Og in Bashan—⁵ all those towns were fortified with high walls, gates, and bars—apart from a great number of unwalled towns.⁶ We doomed them as we had done in the case of King Sihon of Heshbon; we doomed every town—men, women, and children—⁷ and retained as booty all the cattle and the spoil of the towns.

⁸ Thus we seized, at that time, from the two Amorite kings, the country beyond the Jordan, from the wadi Arnon to Mount Hermon—⁹ Sidonians called Hermon Sirion, and the Amorites call it Senir—¹⁰ all the towns of the Tableland and the whole of Gilead and Bashan as far as Salcah and Edrei, the towns of Og's kingdom in Bashan.

37. our God יְהוָה had commanded. Along with the prior verse, this one emphasizes the convergence of God's will and Israel's obedience to both God's active and restrictive commands. They fought their designated enemy but did not encroach on the neighboring lands that were forbidden to them.

3:1–7. This retelling of the conquest of the בְּנֶחָלֶל וְעַד-הַגָּלְעָד לֹא הִיְתָה קְרִיָּה אֲשֶׁר שָׂגְבָה מִמְּנוּ אֶת-הַכְּפֵל נָתַן יְהוָה אֶל-חַיָּנוּ לְפָנָינוּ:³⁷ רַק אֶל-אָרֶץ בְּנֵי-עַמּוֹן לֹא קָרְבָּת בְּלִידָן חַל יְבָק וְעַרְיִ הַהָר וְכָל אֲשֶׁר-צָנָה יְהוָה אֶל-חַיָּנוּ:

ג וְגַפֵּן וְגַעַל דָּרָךְ הַבְּשָׁן וַיֵּצֵא עֹז מַלְךָ הַבְּשָׁן לְקַרְאָתָנוּ הוּא וְכָל-עַמוֹּ לְמַלְחָמָה אֶדְרָעִי:² וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִי אֶל-תִּקְרָא אֶתְךָ כִּי בְּיָדְךָ נָתַתִּי אֶתְךָ וְאֶת-בְּלָעָמוֹ וְאֶת-אָרְצָךְ וְעַשְׂתָּה לֹו כַּאֲשֶׁר עָשָׂית לִסְיחָן מֶלֶךְ הָאָמָרִי אֲשֶׁר יוֹשֵׁב בְּחַשְׁבּוֹן:

3 וַיַּתֵּן יְהוָה אֶל-חַיָּנוּ בְּיָדוֹ גַם אֶת-עֹז מַלְךָ הַבְּשָׁן וְאֶת-בְּלָעָמוֹ וְנֶגֶבְיוֹ עַד-בְּלָתִי הַשְּׁאִירָלָלו שָׁרֵד:⁴ וַיַּלְפְּכֵד אֶת-בְּלָעָרוֹן בְּעֵת הַהָוֹא לֹא הִיְתָה קְרִיָּה אֲשֶׁר לֹא-לְקַחְנוּ מִמְּתָם שְׁשִׁים שָׁוֹרְבָּל אַרְגָּב מִמְלָכָת עֹז בְּבָשָׁן:⁵ בְּלִאָלָה עָרִים בְּצִדְתָּחָרָה גַּבְהָה דְלָתִים וּבְרִיחָה לְבַד מַעֲרֵי הַפְּרֵזִי הַרְבָּה מָאָד:⁶ וַיַּחַרְמָם אֹתָם בַּאֲשֶׁר עָשָׂינו לִסְיחָן מֶלֶךְ חַשְׁבּוֹן הַחֲרָם בְּלִעְרִים מִתְּמַמְּתָם הַגְּשִׁים וְהַטְּפָה:⁷ וְכָל-הַבְּהָמָה וְשָׁלֵל הַעֲרִים בְּזֹנוּ לָנוּ:

8 וְגַנְקָח בְּעֵת הַהָוֹא אֶת-הָאָרֶץ מִינְדָּשָׁנִי מַלְכֵי הָאָמָרִי אֲשֶׁר בַּעֲבָר הַיְרָאָן מִנְחָל אַרְגָּן עַד-הַר חַרְמוֹן:⁹ צִידְנִים יִקְרָאוּ לְחַרְמוֹן שְׁרִין וְהָאָמָרִי יִקְרָאוֹלָן שְׁנִיר:¹⁰ בְּלִעְרִים הַמִּישָׁר וּבְלִחְגָּלָעָד וּבְלִהְבָשָׁן עַד-סְלָכָה וְאֶדְרָעִי עַרְיִ מִמְלָכָת עֹז בְּבָשָׁן:

Bashan resembles the account of the victory over Sihon, king of Heshbon, and reinforces its messages.

8–11. These verses summarize the conquest of lands bordering Canaan across the Jordan. Israel's actions bring an end to a semi-mythic group of people called the Rephaim. Others were wiped out by the Moabites and Ammonites (2:10–11, 20–21).

¹¹Only King Og of Bashan was left of the remaining Rephaim. His bedstead, an iron bedstead, is now in Rabbah of the Ammonites; it is nine cubits long and four cubits wide, by the standard cubit!

¹²And this is the land which we apportioned at that time: The part from Aroer along the wadi Arnon, with part of the hill country of Gilead and its towns, I assigned to the Reubenites and the Gadites. ¹³The rest of Gilead, and all of Bashan under Og's rule—the whole Argob district, all that part of Bashan which is called Rephaim country—I assigned to the half-tribe of Manasseh. ¹⁴Jair son of Manasseh received the whole Argob district (that is, Bashan) as far as the boundary of the Geshurites and the Maacathites, and named it after himself: Havvoth-jair—as is still the case. ¹⁵To Machir I assigned Gilead. ¹⁶And to the Reubenites and the Gadites I assigned the part from Gilead down to the wadi Arnon, the middle of the wadi being the boundary, and up to the wadi Jabbok, the boundary of the Ammonites.

¹⁷[We also seized] the Arabah, from the foot of the slopes of Pisgah on the east, to the edge of the Jordan, and from Chinnereth down to the sea of the Arabah, the Dead Sea.

¹⁸At that time I charged you [men of Reuben,

¹¹כִּי רַק־עֹז מֶלֶךְ הַבָּשָׂן נִשְׁאָר מִינְחָר הַרְפָּאִים הַגָּנָה עַרְשׁוֹ עַרְשֵׁשׁ בְּרַזֵּל הַלְּהָ הָוָא בְּרַבְתָּ בְּנֵי עַמּוֹן תְּשֻׁעָם אֲמֹות אֲרָבָה וְאֲרָבָע אֲמֹות רְחַבָּה בְּאַמְתָּדָאִישׁ :

¹²וְאַתְּה־הָאָרֶץ הַזֹּאת יְרַשְׁנוּ בָּעֵת הַהְוָא מַעֲרִיר אֲשֶׁר־עַל־נִחְלָל אַרְנוֹן וְחַצֵּי הַר־

¹³הַגָּלְעָד וְעַרְיוֹ נִתְתַּחַי לְרַאוּבָנִי וְלְגַדִּי :

¹⁴וְלֹתֶר הַגָּלְעָד וּכְלַיְהָבָשָׁן מִמְּלָכָת עוֹג נִתְתַּחַי לְחַצֵּי שְׁבָט הַמְּנַשֶּׁה כֹּל חַבְלַיְהָ אַרְגָּב לְכָל־הַבָּשָׁן הַהְוָא יְקָרָא אָרֶץ רְפָאִים :

¹⁵יְאִיר בְּנֵמְנַשֶּׁה לְקַח אֶת־כָּל־חַבְלַיְהָ אַרְגָּב עַד־גְּבוּל הַגְּשׁוּרִי וְהַמְּעַכְתִּי וַיְקָרָא אֶתְּם עַל־שְׁמוֹ אֶת־הַבָּשָׁן חַוֹת יְאִיר עַד הַיּוֹם :

¹⁶וְלְרַאוּבָנִי וְלְגַדִּי נִתְתַּחַי מִן־הַגָּלְעָד וְעַד נִחְלָל אַרְנוֹן תֹּהַה הַנִּחְלָל וְגַבְלָל וְעַד יְבָק הַנִּחְלָל גְּבוּל בְּנֵי עַמּוֹן :

¹⁷וְהַעֲרָבָה וְהַיְהָן וְגַבְלָל מִבְּנָרָת וְעַד יְם הַעֲרָבָה יְם הַמְּלָח תְּחִת אֲשֶׁרְתָּ הַפְּסִגָּה מִוּרָהָה :

¹⁸וְאַצְוּ אֶתְּכֶם בָּעֵת הַהְוָא לְאָמֵר יְהֹוָה :

ii. His bedstead... nine cubits long. Og's bed would have been about 13½ feet (more than 4 meters) long, demonstrating that he was a giant.

Moses' Allotment of Land East of the Jordan (3:12–20)

In Numbers 32, the cattle-rearing tribes of Reuben and Gad ask Moses to take possession of these territories because they provide good grazing land. The half-tribe of Manasseh is also granted part of this East Jordanian territory. In the present text, the high concentration of the words “land,” “take possession,” and “I am giving to you” underscores a central concern: to show that the occupation of the land of Canaan and the lands across the Jordan are the results of God's “giving” of the territory to Israel as a possession or inheritance.

13. Manasseh. Numbers 27 and 36 mention the five daughters of Zelophehad (Mahlah, Noah, Hoglah, Tirzah, and Milcah) among the heirs of the Manasseh clans. Joshua 17 describes how these women receive their land.

18–20. Even though their land allotment has already been conquered, Moses requires the fighting men of these tribes to join with the rest of the Israelite forces when they invade and conquer the land of Canaan.

Gad, and Manasseh], saying, “Your God יְהוָה has given you this country to possess. You must go as shock-troops, warriors all, at the head of your Israelite kin.¹⁹ Only your wives, children, and livestock—I know that you have much livestock—shall be left in the towns I have assigned to you,²⁰ until has granted your kin a haven such as you have, and they too have taken possession of the land that your God יְהוָה is assigning them, beyond the Jordan. Then you may return each to the homestead that I have assigned to him.”

²¹I also charged Joshua at that time, saying, “You have seen with your own eyes all that your God יְהוָה has done to these two kings; so shall do to all the kingdoms into which you shall cross over.²² Do not fear them, for it is your God יְהוָה who will battle for you.”

אֱלֹהִים נָתַן לְכֶם אֶת-הָאָרֶץ הַזֹּאת לְרַשְׁתָּה חֲלוֹצִים תַּעֲבֹרׂוּ לִפְנֵי אֲחִיכֶם בְּנֵי-יִשְׂרָאֵל כֹּל-בְּנֵי-חִיל :¹⁹ רֹק נְשִׁיכֶם וְטַפְכֶם וּמִקְנֶכֶם יַדְעַתִּי בַּיּוֹמָקְנָה רַב לְכֶם יִשְׁבּוּ בְּעִירֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר נָתַתִּי לְכֶם :²⁰ עַד אֲשֶׁר יִגְּנַח יְהוָה לְאֲחִיכֶם בְּכֶם וַיַּרְשׁוּ גָּמֶר הַם אֶת-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיכֶם נָתַן לְהֶם בְּעֵבֶר הַיַּרְדֵּן וְשָׁבְתֶם אִישׁ לִרְשָׁתוֹ אֲשֶׁר נָתַתִּי לְכֶם :

²¹ וְאַתְּ יְהוֹשֻׁעַ צִוִּיתִי בְּעֵת הַהּוּא לְאמֹר עִינֵּיךְ הָרָאת אֶת כָּל-אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיכֶם לְשִׁנֵּי הַמֶּלֶךְ הָאֱלֹהִים בְּנֵי-עֲשָׂה יְהוָה לְכָל-הַמְּמָלָכֹות אֲשֶׁר אַתָּה עֹבֵר שָׁמָה :²² לֹא תִּירְאָם בַּיְהוָה אֱלֹהִיכֶם הַוָּא הַגָּלָחִים לְכֶם : ס

Moses' Charge to Joshua (3:21–22)

*M*oses charges Joshua to understand the victories over the kingdoms of Bashan and Sihon as evidence of God's allegiance to Israel and as foreshadowing and precedent for the imminent conquest of the land of Canaan.

—Elsie R. Stern

Another View

DEUTERONOMY COMMENCES with a review of several prior moments in Israel's history. This parashah contains a theme relevant for women and all modern Jews, especially those interested in interpreting the text differently than has been done previously—for Moses, the great prophet and lawgiver, provides his own interpretation of Israel's history and even law.

The book begins by claiming that what follows are Moses' words, addressed to the Israelites (1:1), meaning that they are presented as his words, not those of the unidentified narrator. The text legitimates Moses' comments, noting that they are “in accordance with the instructions that יהוה had given him” (1:3).

Before the start of Moses' speech, we read, “Moses undertook to expound this Teaching” (torah; 1:5). The word translated as “undertook” expresses a decision connected with a new initiative or a bold action. The implication is that Moses initiates what becomes a long Jewish tradition: constant reinterpretation of the text. In an ironic and Jewish way, the Torah has already begun to be interpreted within the text.

A quick overview reveals that Moses' address agrees with in general, but is not identical to, the way that these events are described in previous books. In some of these instances, the differences actually put more power in the hands of the people for things like choosing judges (Deuteronomy 1:13 versus Exodus 18:25) or sending out the scouts (Deuteronomy 1:22 versus Numbers 13:1). The book's later portions even present some of the laws differently than in the prior books (see, for example, 12:2–28), indicating an early process of adaptation and interpretation, not just of history but of legal material as well.

In an ironic and Jewish way, the Torah has already begun to interpret itself.

Thus, the opening parashah of Deuteronomy, one of the most important books in the Hebrew Bible, teaches us an important lesson about the way traditions change over time, even within this most sacred text. This lesson is particularly relevant to women and liberal Jews, who at times have been criticized for engaging in what happens to be the very interpretive process witnessed in Deuteronomy—and exemplified in the work of the scholars who have contributed to this Commentary.

—Tammi J. Schneider

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

These are the words (1:1). This parashah is read in the synagogue on the Sabbath immediately preceding Tishah B'Av, the annual commemoration of the destructions of the First and Second Temples. Therefore, the haftarah reading (from Isaiah 1:1–27) and many of the rabbinic commentaries focus on images and themes of rebuke, in which Israel is called upon to repent and embrace a higher level of moral and ethical conduct.

Midrash Sifrei D'varim 1 is devoted almost entirely to the subject of rebuke. The midrash explains that Moses wrote the entire Torah, not just “these... words.” If so, the midrash responds, then “these words” must be words of reproof as similarly seen in Amos, Jeremiah, and in reference to King David,

D'VARIM

"These are the last words of David" (I Samuel 23:1). However, according to Sifrei D'varim 1, in some cases it is God, rather than Moses, who voices criticism. For example, God rebukes the Israelites for complaining about the manna they ate during their trek in the wilderness (Numbers 21:5), asserting that kings would willingly choose to eat such a food for its apparent health benefits. The Israelites' ingratitude reminds God of another ancestor, Adam, who was given Eve as a helper and mate—but then blamed her for his disobedience in eating the fruit (Genesis 3:12). In this unusual interpretation of Genesis 2–3, the Israelites' behavior is explained through a comparison with Adam, whom the Rabbis deem cowardly and unjust in attributing his own sin to Eve.

Elsewhere, the Rabbis view rebuke as a vehicle for repentance. In P'sikta D'Rav Kahana 15:5 (Mandelbaum edn.), a late midrashic compilation based on the liturgical cycle of holy days, the midrash for the Shabbat before Tishah B'Av focuses on Israel's abandonment of the study of Torah and its subsequent disastrous results: the destructions of the First and Second Temples. The Rabbis observe that a person who forsakes God but continues to study Torah will return to God by means of the power of the Torah itself.

It was in the fortieth year (1:3). The Sages understood this phrase to mean that Moses did not rebuke the Israelites until he was about to die. A midrash found in Sifrei D'varim 2 and B'reishit Rabbah 54.3 cites a number of other cases of deathbed rebuke (including Abraham, Isaac, and Joshua), and then explains why one should not reprove another person until one's death is near. The reasons include avoiding reproaching another person repeatedly, preserving the chastised person from shame in the presence of the rebuker, preventing the individual from holding a grudge against the rebuker, and permitting the rebuked one to leave in peace, "for rebuke should bring about peace."

Do not harass the Moabites . . . You will then be close to the Ammonites (2:9, 19). The Rabbis often interpret these verses about Moab and Ammon in relation to Ruth and Naamah, two foreign women who influenced Israelite history. According to the Bible, Ruth, a Moabite, remained faithful to her mother-in-law Naomi after both were widowed, and she adopted Naomi's people and their way of life. With Naomi's help, Ruth married Boaz, and became King David's great-grandmother. Naamah, an Ammonite, was King Solomon's wife and the mother of Rehoboam, the king of Judah after Solomon (I Kings 14:21). On their behalf, according to BT Bava Kama 38b, God instructed Moses not to wage war against the Moabites or Ammonites: "The idea you have in your mind is not the idea I have in My mind. In the future I will bring forth two doves from them: Ruth the Moabite and Naamah the Ammonite" (also BT Nazir 23b, BT Horayot 10b–11a).

"In the future I will bring forth two doves from those peoples: Ruth and Naamah."

These talmudic passages also note that Lot's two daughters were the matriarchs of Moab and Ammon through incestuous relations with their father (Genesis 19:37–38). The exegetical etymologies of the names of the offspring, and therefore of the tribes, are significant to the Rabbis. They view the name of the elder daughter's son (Moab, or "my father") as a reference to the sinful incestuous act, which explains for them why God forbade war with Moab but did not restrict Israel from harassing this potential enemy. The Rabbis use a Greek word, no doubt familiar from Roman rule, to describe this harassment as the seizure or subjugation of Moab for forced labor, particularly for public works projects. In the case of the younger daughter's son (Ben-ammi, meaning "son of my people," and rendered as Ammon), no reference is made to incest. As a result, the Sages explain, God forbade Israel from either warring with or harassing the Ammonites.

—Deborah Green

Contemporary Reflection

THE BOOK OF DEUTERONOMY, dramatically set just outside the land of Canaan, is comprised of a series of farewell addresses delivered by Moses as he prepares to die, forever barred from the Promised Land. Unlike the previous four books of the Torah, which are narrated in the third person, Deuteronomy is narrated almost entirely in the first person, the “I” of Moses persistently addressing a “you.” However, the “you” that Moses addresses is not always the same: sometimes it refers to all the Israelites who left Egypt, none of whom is still alive to hear these final words; other times it refers to their children, the generation of the wilderness, those now listening to Moses; still other times, it refers to a small group of Israelites, such as the twelve scouts, the two-and-a-half tribes who have chosen to settle on the east bank of the Jordan, or just Joshua and Caleb.

In fact, the word “you” punctuates this parashah like a drumbeat, appearing more than 100 times in slightly more than 100 verses, plus many other instances if the imperative verb form is included. Throughout, Moses primarily focuses on his I-You relationship with the people; yet the relationship is characterized more by conflict and alienation than by intimacy. As he recalls their journey, trying to make sense of the past forty years, he rewrites history, blaming the people for proposing that he send scouts to the land (an action commanded by God in Numbers 13:2) and for provoking him into delegating judicial authority (an idea suggested by his father-in-law Jethro in Exodus 18:17–23). Worst of all, Moses blames the children for the sins of their parents. Although it is the slave generation who has disappointed him, it is the next generation who now suffers Moses’ rancor and regret.

Despite the fact that Deuteronomy is an ancient book, the insights revealed in this parashah resonate with our modern ideas about human psychology. Contemporary psychologists describe a process known as counter-transference, whereby a therapist projects onto her patients certain conflicts still unresolved within her own life story. Parents, too, can be guilty of such unconscious projection, ascribing to their children their own youthful errors and defeats.

Therefore, we can read this first farewell speech as the presentation of a leader who engages in a kind of counter-transference when he reflects back to the people what has transpired between him and them over the past four decades. Standing before them now on the threshold of death, he wonders: What has happened to this people that I led out of slavery? What has happened to our shared resolve? What has happened to me, who was to serve as God’s emissary and representative? Why have the people doomed me—through their lack of faith, their ingratitude, their waywardness—to die without enjoying God’s promise? We can see in Moses’ flawed recollections and chastisement of the people a final attempt to reshape his life story so as to justify the past actions of this metaphoric parent.

As Moses tries to make sense of the past forty years, he rewrites history.

Each year at the Passover seder, we Jews re-enact a similar drama, warning the next generation not to act the part of the rasha, the wicked child, in the haggadah’s parable of the Four Children. If we look closely at this exchange between the parent and the wicked child, we can hear in the former’s rebuke of the latter echoes of what we hear in this parashah. As some versions of the haggadah phrase the dialogue: “The wicked child asks: ‘What is this service to you? ... And because these children exclude themselves from the community, you should chastise them, saying: ‘Because of what God did for me when I came out of Egypt.’ ‘For me’ and not ‘for them,’ for had they been there, they would not have been redeemed.” This is a painful text for many Jews. Who among us does not know a contrary child, perhaps our own, who feels so alienated from Judaism that she is willing to be excluded from the community?

D'VARIM

In order to truly understand what this vignette in fact conveys, we need to probe further. When we look up the original context of the rasha's question (Exodus 12:26), we discover that the Rabbis have twisted words out of context. In their original setting, these words were intended to reinforce the tradition, not disparage it; indeed, the Torah instructs all Jewish children to pose this question. Why then did rabbinic tradition put this question only in the mouth of the rasha? Weren't they living proof that it is precisely this kind of personality—skeptical, provocative, contrary—that would best guarantee Jewish survival?

Like the parent of the rasha, Moses (as parashat D'varim presents him) seems ambivalent about his contrary people, and perhaps about himself. During much of his speech, he separates himself from the Israelites, addressing them as “you”; but on occasion he uses “we,” as when reminiscing about battles they fought together (3:12). For that brief moment, he regards them as equals who have shared important decisions about the distribution of land. But before he even finishes the verse, he pulls back, telling them four times how “I [that is, Moses] assigned” the regions of that apportioned land.

The parashah invites us to see that, like most parents, Moses has loved his children even when they have acted the part of the rasha. And like most parents, he has sometimes felt rejected and betrayed when his children have asserted their autonomy. As he now prepares to let them go into the new land, he must decide what his final message to them should be. Tellingly, the parashah concludes with his encouraging words to Joshua, “Do not fear... for it is your God יְהוָה who will battle for you” (3:22). In the end, Moses recognizes that this is a new generation about to enter the land, and they need his blessing as well as God's.

—Ellen Frankel

Voices

God: Desert

Feiga Izrailevna Kogan (transl. Carole B. Balin)

I dream with pain in the foreign land of the flowering camps of Israel;
copper horizons of the desert,
and golden waters of the Jordan;
Carmel sun-filled vine,
and sapphire of the Dead Sea,
and sacred roses of Sharon,
And banquets of fragrant lilies.

I remember the moment when the Great one
split the Red Sea for us,

And all the people tread on the precious shore and Miriam sang,
and in the distance
the beauty of the songs sounded, and the air responded with reverberations
the prophetic lips quivered:

You allowed me to take part in these songs in this prophetic exile and gave me uncertain knowledge and the ardor of my righteous heart.
So now with earthly sounds and my mortal music
let me glorify Your regal Name beyond the seas of the sun.

from The Generations Upon Me

Barbara Reisner

I walk through the tired city carrying my satchels.

Behind the face of each building
I see my grandmother carry her potato sacks
from village to village and return each Sabbath to Azrian.

I smell the old Sefer D'varim
she brought with her to America.
I see her reading
“These are the words,” believing them,
and I am haunted
by her face.

I build nothing.
I blush at Moses’ command.
“Start out and make your way.”

As mercy drifts through justice,
the sun drifts through the wind, refreshing the city.

The hour turns. I continue walking as if I were a guardian, the generations upon me.

D'VARIM

from Nomad Land

Corie Feiner

You have it wrong.
We nomads are always home.

Our search is not like the search for a child who has fallen inside of the toothless earth.

Our search is like a smell. It pulls itself up from the ground lingers, and becomes memory.

from Home Again

Yerra Sugarman

Here each leaf is a memory
crisply fallen to land.
The land is an ocean
of leaves gone crimson;
the tips of branches
the color of pomegranates.

Here my thoughts are burning the land in me

only speech rebuilds.

Move

Alicia Suskin Ostriker

Whether it's a turtle who drags herself
Slowly to the sandlot where she digs
The sandy nest she was born to dig

And lay leathery eggs in, or whether it's salmon
Rocketing upstream
Towards pools that call: Bring your eggs here
And nowhere else in the world, whether it is turtle-green
Ugliness and awkwardness, or the seething Grace and gild of silky salmon, we Are envious, our wishes speak out right here
Thirsty for a destiny like theirs,
And absolute right choice

To end all choices. Is it memory,
We ask, is it a smell
They remember

Or just what is it, some kind of blueprint
That makes them move, hot grain by grain,
Cold cascade above icy cascade,

Slipping through Water's fingers
A hundred miles

Inland from the easy shiny sea—
And we also, in the company
Of our tribe

Or perhaps alone, like the turtle
On her wrinkled feet with the tapping nails,
We also are going to travel, we say let's be

Oblivious to all, save
That we travel, and we say
When we reach the place we'll know

We are in the right spot, somehow, like a breath
Entering a singer's chest, that shapes itself
For the song that is to follow.

They've Rolled the Parchment

Shirley Kaufman

They've rolled the parchment
again
to its beginning

I want to feel a rolling under my feet
as if I am walking in sand

each point of arrival
a stepping-stone

to the next oasis

what if there were a shorter way through the wilderness would we have arrived sooner and to what

Hittites Canaanites
Shiites
Pre-Raphaelites
anchorites plebiscites would they have opened their arms to us and said sister/brother have some water (and some oil)

make yourselves
at home

I strip myself of the past year
enter the hum of prayer

warm
as an old sweater pulled over my head

וְעַתָּה ◆ Va-et'chanan

DEUTERONOMY 3:23–7:11

The Call to Loyalty and Love

PARASHAT VA-ET'CHANAN ("I pleaded") begins with Moses' recollection of how he longingly prayed to God to be allowed to enter the Promised Land. This speech is part of a larger address to the Israelites in which Moses recounts for them all that occurred in the wilderness and the lessons they should derive from these experiences. Moses exhorts them to use the past as the basis for future behavior, making their first-hand knowledge of God and their national memory of the Sinai experience (here called Horeb) the basis for their relationship to God when they begin their lives in the new land without him.

Throughout this parashah, Moses plays the role of teacher. First, he spells out various reasons as to why the Israelites should obey God's teachings (4:1–40). Next, he reminds them of what God commanded at Horeb (Sinai) (4:44–5:30), including the Decalogue ("Ten Commandments") (5:6–18). Then, he teaches them how to fulfill the commandments by specifying the proper attitude to approach the Divine (6:1–7:5). Finally, he concludes by explaining the nature of God's love for them, the basis for the relationship between Israel and God (7:6–11). Throughout, Moses reiterates that while the people will be rewarded for their obedience and commitment to God, they will be punished severely if they stray from God's path. In particular, he emphasizes monotheism, a central theme in Deuteronomy as a whole. God's uniqueness and the demand for Israel's absolute loyalty find expression in the passages known as the Sh'ma and V'ahavta (6:4–9)—prayers that stand at the center of the Jewish proclamation of faith.

This parashah seems to include women as a matter of course when Moses addresses the Israelites in the second-person masculine singular or plural, as is typical elsewhere. In addition, women are mentioned specifically in the Decalogue as daughters, slaves, mothers, and wives (5:14, 16, 18), as well as in the prohibition of intermarriage, in which Canaanite women appear to possess the power to lead Israelites astray (7:3–4). More indirectly, the parashah's emphasis on education (6:20–25) invites readers to assess women's role in ancient Israel with respect to raising the next generation.

This parashah invites us to assess women's role in raising the next generation.

—Ora Horn Prouser

Outline—

I. MOSES' PLEA TO ENTER THE LAND (3:23–29)

II. EXHORTATIONS TO KEEP GOD'S COMMANDMENTS

Why Follow the Laws (4:1–40)

- A. Exhortations to keep God's commandments as communicated (vv. 1–8)
- B. Exhortations to remember the revelation at Horeb (Sinai) (vv. 9–14)
- C. Exhortations regarding God's unique nature (vv. 15–40)

III. INTERLUDE

Cities of Refuge (4:41–43)

IV. REVIEW OF HOreb (SINAI)

What Laws to Follow (4:44–5:30)

- A. Introduction and setting the scene (4:44–5:5)
- B. The Decalogue (“Ten Commandments”) (5:6–18)
- C. The people’s fearful response and call for Moses’ intercession (5:19–24)
- D. God’s response to the people’s request (5:25–30)

V. ADDITIONAL TEACHINGS

How to Follow the Laws (6:1–7:5)

- A. The call to love the one and only God (6:1–9)
- B. The call to absolute loyalty to Israel’s God (6:10–19)
- C. The demand to teach future generations about the laws (6:20–25)
- D. Prohibitions regarding the inhabitants of the land (7:1–5)

VI. CONCLUSION

God’s Love as Reason for the Laws (7:6–11)

3:23

The Lord God, You who let Your servant see the first works of Your greatness and Your mighty hand, You whose powerful deeds no god in heaven or on earth can equal! Let me, I pray, cross over and see the good land on the other side of the Jordan, that good hill country, and the Lebanon." But God was wrathful with me on your account and would not listen to me. said to me, "Enough! Never speak to Me of this matter again! Go up to the summit of Pisgah and gaze about, to the west, the north, the south, and the east. Look at it well, for you shall not go across yonder Jordan. Give Joshua his instructions, and imbue him with strength and courage, for he shall go across at the ²³ וְאַתָּחַנְןָ אֶל־יְהוָה בְּעֵת הַהּוּא

לְאֹמֶר: ²⁴ אָדָנִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים אַתָּה הַחֲלוֹת
לְהַרְאֹת אֶת־עִבְּדָךְ אֶת־גָּדְלָךְ וְאֶת־יִזְדָּקָה
הַחֲזָקָה אֲשֶׁר מִיְּאָלֶל בְּשָׁמִים וּבָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־
יַעֲשֶׂה בְּמַעֲשֵׂיךְ וּכְגַבּוֹרָתְךָ: ²⁵ אַעֲבְּרָה־בָּנָא
וּבָרָא אֶת־הָאָרֶץ הַטוֹּבָה אֲשֶׁר בָּעֶבֶר
הַיְרָאָה הַהָרָה הַטּוֹב הַזֹּה וְהַלְּבָנָן: ²⁶ וַיֹּאמֶר
יְהוָה בָּל לְמַעֲנָכֶם וְלֹא שָׁמַע אֵלַי וַיֹּאמֶר
יְהוָה אֵלָי רַב־לָךְ אֶל־תוֹסֵף דָבָר אֵלַי עוֹד
בַּדָּבָר הַזֹּה: ²⁷ עַלְהَا וּרְאֵשׁ הַפְּסָלָה וְשָׁא
עַינְיָךְ יְמָה וְצָפָנָה וְתִימָנָה וְמִזְרָחָה וְרָאָה
בְּעִינְיָךְ כִּילָא תַּעֲבֶר אֶת־הַיְרָאָה הַזֹּה:
²⁸ וְצֹו אֶת־יְהוָשָׁע וְחִזְקָהוּ וְאַמְצָהוּ בַּיּ

Moses' Plea to Enter the Land (3:23–29)

This unit continues Moses' review of the Israelites' journey to the plains of Moab, in the lower Jordan valley. In preparing the people to enter the land, Moses explains why he cannot go forth with them. Earlier he blamed the people for his not being allowed to enter the land (1:37); here he discloses how he unsuccessfully beseeched God to reconsider.

26. was wrathful. Heb. vayitaber. There is a word play between this word and eb'rəh-na, “let me cross over” in the previous verse. The root e-b-r is repeated numerous times in the previous parashah on your account. Moses again blames the Israelites for his punishment, as in 1:37. In contrast, Numbers 20 (where Moses strikes the rock to produce water) depicts the punishment as Moses' fault. This inconsistency exemplifies one of several contradictions between Deuteronomy's account of the wilderness journey and that of Exodus and Numbers (see at 1:9–18, 1:19–46). While Moses interprets God's response and behavior as anger (see also 4:21), one might also see a nurturing hand in God's allowing Moses to see the land and assuring him of an integral role in passing on leadership to Joshua.

(for example, 2:14; 3:21), highlighting the theme of “crossing over” at the beginning of Deuteronomy.

- Biblical monotheism makes human beings the initiators of change within the universe.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 1082

- How has the Israelites' understanding of the Decalogue grown since the original Revelation?

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 1084

- This verse is cited as a proof text for determining Jewish descent by the mother's status.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 1083

- We ascend to the Torah . . . to risk being known and seen, / to risk being at Sinai again.

VOICES ► 1086

head of this people, and he shall allot to them the land that you may only see.”

²⁹Meanwhile we stayed on in the valley near Beth-peor.

4 And now, O Israel, give heed to the laws and rules that I am instructing you to observe, so that you may live to enter and occupy the land that יהוה, the God of your fathers, is giving you. ²You shall not add anything to what I command you nor take anything away from it, but keep the commandments of your God יהוה that I enjoin upon you. ³You saw with your own eyes what יהוה did in the matter of Baal-peor, that your God יהוה wiped out from among you every person who followed Baal-peor; ⁴while you, who held fast to your God יהוה, are all alive today.

הוּא יַעֲבֹר לִפְנֵי הָעָם הַזֶּה וְהַיּוֹא יַנְחִיל
אֹתָם אֶת-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר תְּرָאָה:
²⁹ וְנִשְׁבַּב בְּגַןְאַ מִולְבִּית פָּעוֹר: פ

ד וְעַתָּה יִשְׂרָאֵל שְׁמַע אֶל-הַקְּרֻבָּם וְאֶל-הַמְּשֻׁפְטִים אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מְלָמֵד אֶתְכֶם
לְעֵשָׂות לְמַעַן תְּחִיו וּבְאַתֶּם וִירְשָׁתֶם
אֶת-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִי אֶבְתִּיכֶם נָתַן לְכֶם: ² לֹא תְּפַז עַל-הַדְּבָר אֲשֶׁר
אָנֹכִי מְצֻנָּה אֶתְכֶם וְלֹא תְּגַרְעֵו מִמְּנוֹ
לְשִׁמְרָה אֶת-מִצּוֹת יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר
אָנֹכִי מְצֻנָּה אֶתְכֶם: ³ עַיְינֵיכֶם הַרְאׂוֹת אֲתָה
אֲשֶׁר-עָשָׂה יְהוָה בְּבָעֵל פָּעוֹר כִּי בְּלַ
הָאִיש אֲשֶׁר חִלְךָ אֶחָרִי בַּעַל-פָּעוֹר
הַשְׁמִידָה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ מִקְרָבֶךָ: ⁴ וְאַתָּם
הַדְּבָרִים בְּיְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם חַיִם בְּלִכְמָם
הַיּוֹם:

Exhortations to Keep God's Commandments

WHY FOLLOW THE LAWS (4:1–40)

Moses' speeches at the start of Deuteronomy retell—and reinterpret—the formative events in Israel's journey as a way of exhorting his audience to obey the instructions. He argues that God's teachings must be followed strictly since there are dire consequences for disobeying them. At the same time, he emphasizes that these precepts should be obeyed because they provide Israel wisdom and discernment that will make this nation honored by other nations. Moses uses a combination of threats and promises to stress the need to follow these teachings even when he is no longer present as an intermediary and interpreter.

Here, as elsewhere, Deuteronomy speaks to multiple audiences: those who are described in the text as standing in Moab listening to Moses' words; the contemporaries of the exilic writers who composed the literary framework of the book (1:1–4:40; 31:1–34:12); and subsequent generations of readers. (See also the introduction to parashat D'varim, p. 1039.)

EXHORTATIONS TO KEEP GOD'S COMMANDMENTS AS COMMUNICATED (4:1–8)

One way that Moses teaches the importance of obeying God's commandments is by emphasizing the lessons learned from personal experience. Here, he calls attention to what the people saw with their “own eyes” (v. 3) at Baal-peor.

3. Baal-peor. This refers to the incident in which some Israelite men lusted after foreign women who lured them into worship of their deity, Baal-peor (Numbers 25). In Numbers 31:14–18, Moses blames God's anger on the women, who are presented as seductive and dangerous; here, he makes no mention of the women.

⁵See, I have imparted to you laws and rules, as my God has commanded me, for you to abide by in the land that you are about to enter and occupy. ⁶Observe them faithfully, for that will be proof of your wisdom and discernment to other peoples, who on hearing of all these laws will say, “Surely, that great nation is a wise and discerning people.” ⁷For what great nation is there that has a god so close at hand as is our God whenever we call? ⁸Or what great nation has laws and rules as perfect as all this Teaching that I set before you this day?

⁹But take utmost care and watch yourselves scrupulously, so that you do not forget the things that you saw with your own eyes and so that they do not fade from your mind as long as you live. And make them known to your children and to your children’s children: ¹⁰The day you stood before your God יְהוָה at Horeb, when said to me, “Gather the people to Me that I may let them hear My words, in order that they may learn to revere Me as long as they live on earth, and may so teach their children.” ¹¹You came forward and stood at the foot of the mountain. The mountain was ablaze with flames to the very skies, dark with densest clouds. ¹²spoke to you out of the fire;

⁵ראה וּלְמִדְרַתִּי אֶתְכֶם חֲקִים וּמִשְׁפָטִים
בְּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּנִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵי לְעֹשֹׂת בְּן בְּקָרְבָּן:
הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אַתֶּם בְּאַיִם שָׁמֶה לְרִשְׁתָה:
וּשְׁמַרְתֶּם וּשְׁוֹבִיתֶם כִּי הוּא חָכְמָתֶכֶם
וּבִינָתֶכֶם לְעֵינֵינוּ הָעָםִים אֲשֶׁר יְשִׁמְעוּן אֶת
כָּל-הַחֲקִים הַאֲלָהָה וְאַמְרוּ רַק עַסְתָּכֶם
וּנְבֻזּוּ הַגּוֹן הַגָּדוֹל הַזֶּה: ⁷כִּי מִי-גּוֹן גָּדוֹל אֲשֶׁר-לֹא אֱלֹהִים קָרְבִּים אֶלְיוֹ פִיהוָה
אֱלֹהֵינוּ בְכָל-קָרְבָּנוּ אֶלְיוֹ: ⁸וּמְלֹא גּוֹן גָּדוֹל
אֲשֶׁר-לֹא חֲקִים וּמִשְׁפָטִים צְדִיקִים בְכָל
הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי נְתַן לְפָנֵיכֶם
הַיּוֹם:

⁹רַק הַשְׁמֵר לְךָ וְשִׁמְרֵר נְפָשֶׁךָ מִאַד פָּנָי
תִשְׁבַּח אֶת-הָדָבָרִים אֲשֶׁר-רָאוּ עִינֵיכֶם וַפְנֵיכֶם
יִסְרֹאֵל מִלְבָבְךָ כֹּל יָמֵי חַיְיךָ וְחוֹדְעָתֶם
לְבִנְיָךְ וּלְבִנְיָךְ בְּנֵיכֶךָ: ¹⁰יּוֹם אֲשֶׁר עִמְרָתִ
לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בְּחַרְבָּה בְּאָמֵר יְהוָה
אֶלְיוֹ הַקְהָלָל-לִי אֶת-חָעָם וְאַשְׁמָעָם אֶת-
דְבָרַי אֲשֶׁר יָלְמֹזֵן לִירָא אֶתְךָ בְּלַחְיִם
אֲשֶׁר הָם חִימֶט עַל-הָאָדָמָה וְאַתְּ-בְנֵיכֶם
יַלְמֹדוּ: ¹¹וְתִקְרְבוּן וְתַעֲמֹדוּ תַחַת הַהָר
וְהָרָר בְּעַר בְּאָשׁ עַד-לְבַב הַשְׁמִים חַשְׁךְ עַנְצָם
וְעַרְפָּל: ¹²וַיֹּרֶב יְהוָה אֱלֹיכֶם מִתּוֹךְ הָאָשָׁ

5–8. One reason for observing the laws is that other nations will admire the Israelites for being wise enough to follow a responsive God who has established good and right precepts.

8. Teaching. Heb. torah. This term refers to the written teachings contained in the book of Deuteronomy. Later tradition enlarges the notion of torah to include Genesis through Deuteronomy. (See also at 31:9.)

EXHORTATIONS TO REMEMBER THE REVELATION AT HOREB (SINAI) (4:9–14)

Moses calls upon the people to remember something that they supposedly witnessed with their “own eyes” (v. 9; also vv. 3, 34). Here the memory of a past event—the revelation at Horeb—is intended to motivate future observance of the covenant. Note, however, that almost none of the presumed audience would have been physically present at that historic moment, except perhaps as children (see at Numbers 14:10–38).

10. The text places a tremendous emphasis on memory and the need to pass information to the next generation. Shared memories of the past also shape and contribute to a community’s identity as a people.

Horeb. The book of Deuteronomy refers to Mount Sinai as Horeb (see at Exodus 18:5).

you heard the sound of words but perceived no shape—nothing but a voice.¹³[God] declared to you the covenant that you were commanded to observe, the Ten Commandments, inscribing them on two tablets of stone.¹⁴At the same time יְהוָה commanded me to impart to you laws and rules for you to observe in the land that you are about to cross into and occupy.

¹⁵For your own sake, therefore, be most careful—since you saw no shape when יְהוָה spoke to you at Horeb out of the fire—¹⁶not to act wickedly and make for yourselves a sculptured image in any likeness whatever: the form of a man or a woman,¹⁷the form of any beast on earth, the form of any winged bird that flies in the sky,¹⁸the form of anything that creeps on the ground, the form of any fish that is in the waters below the earth.—¹⁹And when you look up to the sky and behold the sun and the moon and the stars, the whole heavenly host, you must not be lured into bowing down to them or serving them. These your God יְהוָה allotted to other peoples everywhere under heaven;²⁰but you took and brought out of Egypt, that iron blast furnace, to be God's very own people, as is now the case.

²¹Now יְהוָה was angry with me on your account and swore that I should not cross the Jordan and

קֹול דִּבְרִים אַתֶּם שָׁמְלִים וְתָמִינה אַיִנְכֶם רָאִים זָוְלָתִי קֹול: ¹³ וַיְגַד לְכֶם אֶת־בְּרִיתֵת אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה אֲתֶכְם לְעֹשֹׂת עַשְׂרַת הַדִּבְרִים וַיְכַתְּבֵם עַל־שְׁנִי לְחֻזֶּת אָבָנִים: ¹⁴ וְאַתָּה צִוָּה יְהוָה בְּעֵת הַהּוּא לְלִמּוד אֲתֶכְם חֲקִים וּמִשְׁפָטִים לְעַשְׂתֵיכֶם אַתָּם בָּאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אַתֶּם עֲבָרִים שָׁמָה לְרַשְׁתָה:

¹⁵ וַיְשִׁמְרָתֶם מִאָז לְנֶפֶשׁ תִּיכְסֹם כִּי לֹא רָאִיתֶם בְּלִ-תְמִונה בַּיּוֹם דְּבָרַ יְהוָה אֲלֵיכֶם בְּחוֹבֵב מִתּוֹרַ הַאֲשֶׁר: ¹⁶ פָּנָה תְּשַׁחַתּוּן וְעִשְׁיַתּוּן לְכֶם פָּסֶל תְּמִונָתְךָ בְּלִ-סְמֵל תְּבִנִית זָכָר אוֹ נָקְבָה: ¹⁷ תְּבִנִית בָּלִ-בָּהָמָה אֲשֶׁר בָּאָרֶץ תְּבִנִית בָּלִ-צְפּוֹר בָּנָף אֲשֶׁר תְּעַופֵּת בְּשָׂמִים: ¹⁸ תְּבִנִית בָּלִ-רְמַשׁ בָּאָדָם תְּבִנִית בָּלִ-דְגָה אֲשֶׁר בָּמִים מִתְחַת לְאָרֶץ: ¹⁹ וַפְנִיתְשָׁא עַיְנָה הַשְׁמִימָה וּרְאִיתָ אֶת־הַשְׁמָשׁ וְאֶת־הַיְרָחַ וְאֶת־הַכּוֹכָבִים כָּל עַבָּא הַשְׁמִים וְנִדְחָת וְאֶת־הַכּוֹכָבִים כָּל עַבָּא הַשְׁמִים וְנִדְחָת יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם אַתֶּם כָּל הָעָם וְעַבְרָתֶם אֲשֶׁר חָלַק בְּלִ-הַשְׁמִים: ²⁰ וְאֲתֶכְם לְקַח יְהוָה וַיָּצָא אֲתֶכְם מִכּוֹר הַבָּרוּל מִפְצָרִים לְהִיוֹת לְעַם נָחָלה בַּיּוֹם הַזֶּה:

²¹ וַיְהִי הַתְּאַנְפָ-בִּי עַל־דִּבְרֵיכֶם וַיִּשְׁבַּע לְבָלְתִּי עָבָרִי אֶת־הַיְרָחַן וְלְבָלְתִּיבָא אֶל-

EXHORTATIONS REGARDING GOD'S UNIQUE NATURE (4:15–40)

Israel's absolute loyalty to their one God is a key concern in this parashah and elsewhere in Deuteronomy.

16. One lesson to be learned from God's formless revelation at Horeb (Sinai) is that Israel must not make any sculptured images of God.

form of a man or a woman. Literally, "... a male or a female." The wording of this verse's prohibition suggests that some Israelites conceived of their God in both female and male terms.

19–20. As part of his warning against idolatry, Moses forbids the worship of the celestial bodies. The passage states that God divided the heavenly beings among the other nations but selected Israel as God's own possession. In other words, God sanctioned the non-Israelites to worship lesser divine entities but restricted the Israelites to worship God alone. Verse 19 plays a central role in debates about the development of monotheism; for more on this subject, see at 4:35; 6:4; 32:8; Exodus 15:11; and Another View, p. 1082.

enter the good land that your God יְהוָה is assigning you as a heritage.²² For I must die in this land; I shall not cross the Jordan. But you will cross and take possession of that good land.

²³ Take care, then, not to forget the covenant that your God יְהוָה concluded with you, and not to make for yourselves a sculptured image in any likeness, against which your God יְהוָה has enjoined you.²⁴ For your God יְהוָה is a consuming fire, an impassioned God.

²⁵ When you have begotten children and children's children and are long established in the land, should you act wickedly and make for yourselves a sculptured image in any likeness, causing your God יְהוָה displeasure and vexation,²⁶ I call heaven and earth this day to witness against you that you shall soon perish from the land that you are crossing the Jordan to possess; you shall not long endure in it, but shall be utterly wiped out.²⁷ יְהוָה will scatter you among the peoples, and only a scant few of you shall be left among the nations to which יְהוָה will drive you.²⁸ There you will serve gods of wood and stone, made by human hands, that cannot see or hear or eat or smell.

²⁹ But if you search there, you will find your God יְהוָה, if only you seek with all your heart and soul—³⁰ when you are in distress because all these things have befallen you and, in the end, return to and obey your God יְהוָה.³¹ For your God יְהוָה is a compassionate God, who will not fail you nor let

24. God is a consuming fire. It is significant that as Moses delivers his farewell address, he refers to God as a consuming fire; he first met God in a fire that did not consume the bush (Exodus 3:2).

impassioned God. See at 5:9.

25–31. Demanding absolute loyalty to the one God, Moses warns the Israelites that if they make idols they will be exiled from the land they currently wait to enter. According to some who date

הָאָרֶץ הַטוֹּבָה אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ נְחַלָּה:²² כִּי אָנֹכִי מֵת בָּאָרֶץ הַזֹּאת אַינְגַּנִּי עַבְרֵר אֶת-הַיּוֹרֵד וְאַתָּם עֲבָרִים וַיַּרְשְׂתֶּם אֶת-הָאָרֶץ הַטוֹּבָה הַזֹּאת:

²³ הַשְׁמַרְיוֹן לְכֶם פָּנָרְתְּשַׁבְּחוּ אֶת-בְּרִית יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר בָּרָת עָמְכֶם וַעֲשִׂיתֶם לְכֶם פֶּסֶל תִּמְונֶת כָּל אֲשֶׁר צָוָה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ: ²⁴ כִּי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ אֲשֶׁר אָכַלְתָּ הוּא אֶל קְנָא: פ

²⁵ כִּי-תָּולִיד בָּנִים וּבָנִי בָּנִים וּנוֹשְׁנָתֶם בָּאָרֶץ וְהַשְׁחַקְתֶּם וַעֲשִׂיתֶם פֶּסֶל תִּמְונֶת כָּל וַעֲשִׂיתֶם חֶרֶב בְּעֵינִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לְהַכְּעִיסָוּ: ²⁶ הָעִידְתִּי בְּכֶם הַיּוֹם אֶת-הַשְׁמִים וְאֶת-הָאָרֶץ כִּי-אָבֹד תָּבֹדוּ מִהָּרְעָם מֵעַל הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אַתֶּם עֲבָדִים אֶת-הַיּוֹרֵד שֶׁמֶה לְרִשְׁתָה לְאַתְּאַרְיכֵן יָמִים עַלִּיה פִּי הַשְׁמֵד תִּשְׁמֹרוּ: ²⁷ וְהַפִּיצָה יְהוָה אֶתְכֶם בְּעַמִּים וּבְשָׂאָרֶת מִתְּנִסְפֵּר בְּגּוֹיִם אֲשֶׁר יְהִגְגֵה יְהוָה אֶתְכֶם שָׁמָה: ²⁸ וּבְעֲדָתָם-שָׁם אֱלֹהִים מַעֲשָׂה יְהִי אָדָם עַז וְאָבִן אֲשֶׁר לְאִירָאָנוּ וְלֹא יִשְׁמַעוּן וְלֹא יִאָכְלוּן וְלֹא

יַרְיָחָנוּ: ²⁹ וּבְקַשְׁתֶּם מִשֵּׁם אֶת-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ וּמִצְאָתָּה כִּי תַּדְרִשְׁנוּ בְּכָל-לְבָבֶךָ וּבְכָל-נֶפֶשֶׁךָ: ³⁰ בָּאָרֶץ לֹא וּמִצְאָוֹךְ כָּל חֲדָבִים הָאֶלָּה בְּאַחֲרִית הַיּוֹם וּשְׁבַת עֲדִי-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ וְשְׁמַעַת בְּקָלוֹ: ³¹ כִּי אֶל רְחוּם יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לֹא יִרְפֶּךְ וְלֹא יִשְׁחִיתֶךְ וְלֹא

much of Deuteronomy to the 7th century B.C.E., this passage addresses an audience in Judah that fears imminent exile, having witnessed the exile of the Northern Kingdom of Israel in 722 B.C.E. Others who date Deuteronomy 4 even later, to the Babylonian exile, see this warning as an explanation after the fact, indicating why exile happened and offering comfort that restoration is possible.

26. I call...to witness. See at 32:1.

you perish; [God] will not forget the covenant made on oath with your fathers.

³²You have but to inquire about bygone ages that came before you, ever since God created humankind on earth, from one end of heaven to the other: has anything as grand as this ever happened, or has its like ever been known? ³³Has any people heard the voice of a god speaking out of a fire, as you have, and survived? ³⁴Or has any deity ventured to go and take one nation from the midst of another by prodigious acts, by signs and portents, by war, by a mighty hand and an outstretched arm and awesome power, as your God did for you in Egypt before your very eyes? ³⁵It has been clearly demonstrated to you that יְהוָה alone is God; there is none else. ³⁶From the heavens [God] let you hear the divine voice to discipline you; on earth [God] let you see the great divine fire; and from amidst that fire you heard God's words. ³⁷And having loved your ancestors, [God] chose their heirs after them; [God] personally—in great, divine might—led you out of Egypt, ³⁸to drive from your path nations greater and more populous than you, to take you into their land and assign it to you as a

ישֶׁבֶת אֶת-בְּרִית אֲבֹתֶיךָ אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע לָהֶם:

³²כִּי שָׁאַלְנָא לִימִם רָאשָׁנִים אֲשֶׁר-הָיו לִפְנֵיכֶם לִמְנַחְיָות אֲשֶׁר בְּרָא אֱלֹהִים | אָדָם עַל-הָאָרֶץ וּלְמִקְצָה הַשָּׁמַיִם וְעַד-קָצָה הַשָּׁמַיִם הַנֶּגֶד הַנֶּגֶד הַגָּדוֹלָה אֲזֶן הַנְּשָׁמָע קָמָה: ³³הַשְׁמָע עַם קָל אֱלֹהִים מִדְבָּר מִתּוֹךְ-הָאָשָׁר פָּאַשְׁר-שְׁמַעַת אַתָּה נִיחִי: ³⁴או | הַנֶּסֶה אֱלֹהִים לְבוֹא לְקַחַת לוֹ גּוֹי מִקְרָב גּוֹי בְּמִטְחָת בְּאַתָּה וּבְמוֹפְתָּה וּבְמִלחָמָה וּבִידָּחָקָה וּבִזְרוּעָנָתָה וּבְמוֹרָאִים גָּדְלִים בְּכָל אֲשֶׁר-עָשָׂה לְכֶם יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם בְּמִצְרָיִם לְעֵינֶיךָ: ³⁵אַתָּה הָרָאתָ לְדֹעַת פִּי יְהוָה הוּא הָאֱלֹהִים אֵין עוֹד מַלְבָּחוֹ: ³⁶מִن-הַשָּׁמַיִם הַשְׁמִיעַת אַתָּה כָּלׁו לַיִשְׁרָךְ וְעַל-הָאָרֶץ חָרָא אֶת-אָשֶׁר הַגְּדוֹלָה וְדָבְרָיו שְׁמַעַת מִתּוֹךְ הָאָשָׁר: ³⁷וְתַחַת פִּי אֲהָל אֶת-אֲבֹתֶיךָ וַיְבַחר בָּזְרָעָוֹ אֶחָרָיו וַיַּצְאֵךְ בְּפָנָיו בְּכָחָו הַגָּדוֹל מִמְּצָרִים: ³⁸לְהַזְרִישׁ גּוֹיִם גָּדְלִים וּעְצָמִים מִפְּנֵיךְ לְהַבִּיאֲךְ לְתַחְתֵּלֶךְ אֶת-

31. [God] will not forget the covenant. Moses gives the Israelites this assurance as he admonishes them not to forget the events of the past (v. 9) and the lessons imparted from those experiences.

fathers. Heb. avot. According to translator David Stein, this term can have either a male-only or an inclusive sense, depending on context. He argues that here the term refers specifically to the patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob), those with whom God formed a covenant in their capacity as (male) heads of their corporate households. It goes without saying that each patriarch represents the entire household, and that God's covenant applies to all its members—women and men alike (“Methodology,” The Torah: Documentation for the Revised Edition, 2005, p. 6).

32–40. Starting with a series of rhetorical questions, this passage illustrates the uniqueness of God's relationship with Israel—perhaps the most important reason for observing God's laws—by retelling a sequence of spectacular and seemingly impossible events, including the redemption from Egypt and revelation of God's words.

35. יְהוָה alone is God; there is none else. This verse and v. 39 clearly and directly affirm the monotheistic belief in a single deity. In contrast, other passages in Deuteronomy reflect an acceptance that other gods existed, even though Israel was commanded to worship the one God exclusively; scholars refer to this belief as monolatry (see 5:7 in the Decalogue, as well as at 4:19–20; 6:4; 32:8; Exodus 15:11; and Another View, p. 1082).

heritage, as is still the case.³⁹ Know therefore this day and keep in mind that יהוה alone is God in heaven above and on earth below; there is no other.⁴⁰ Observe God's laws and commandments, which I enjoin upon you this day, that it may go well with you and your children after you, and that you may long remain in the land that your God יהוה is assigning to you for all time.

⁴¹Then Moses set aside three cities on the east side of the Jordan⁴² to which a [male] killer could escape, one who unwittingly slew another without having been an enemy in the past; he could flee to one of these cities and live:⁴³ Bezer, in the wilderness in the Tableland, belonging to the Reubenites; Ramoth, in Gilead, belonging to the Gadites; and Golan, in Bashan, belonging to the Manassites.

⁴⁴This is the Teaching that Moses set before the ארצם נחלה בימים הזוה: ³⁹ וירעת ה' ביום והשבת אל-לבבך כי יהוה הוא האלhim בשמיים מפעול ועל-הארץ מתחת אין עוד: ⁴⁰ ושמרת את-חקיו ואת-מצוותיו אשר אנכי מצוך ה' יום אשר ייטב לך ולבנייך אחריך ולמן תאריך ימים על-הארמה אשר יהוה אלתיך נתן לך כל-

הימים: פ

⁴¹ אז יבדיל משה שלוש ערים בעבר הירדן מזרחה שמש: ⁴² לנט שמה רוצח אשר ירצה את-רעה בבלידעת והוא לא-שנא לו מתמל שלשם וכן אל-אתת מנה-הערים האלuchi: ⁴³ את-בצ'ר במדבר הארץ המיישר לרובני ואת-ראמות בגלעד לנוי ואת-גולן בשן למנסי:

⁴⁴ זאת התורה אשר-שם משה לפניכם

Interlude

CITIES OF REFUGE (4:41–43)

Moses sets aside three cities of refuge on the eastern side of the Jordan for people who kill inadvertently, in addition to the three cities already set aside elsewhere in the country (see at Numbers 35:1–34). Perhaps this way of dealing with sins committed by accident can be seen as a comfort to the Israelites who feared Moses' description of God's passionate, demanding nature (see at 5:9).

On the gender of the killer, of the victim, and of the blood-avenger, see at Numbers 35:6, 11, and 12, respectively.

Review of Horeb (Sinai)

WHAT LAWS TO FOLLOW (4:44–5:30)

The Decalogue ("Ten Commandments") first appears in Exodus 20. Here Moses restates these precepts, framing them with a recollection of how the people stood at the mountain in awe and fear and asked him to be their intermediary. This retelling aims to connect the new generation with its past.

INTRODUCTION AND SETTING THE SCENE (4:44–5:5)

In line with Deuteronomy's emphasis on transmitting tradition, this section addresses the audience as if these events are part of its remembered experience. In so doing, the text makes the past a present experience as well.

44. This is the Teaching that Moses set before the Israelites. In many if not most synagogues, Israelites: ⁴⁵these are the decrees, laws, and rules that Moses addressed to the people of Israel, after they had left Egypt, ⁴⁶beyond the Jordan, in the valley at Beth-peor, in the land of King Sihon of the Amorites, who dwelt in Heshbon, whom Moses and the Israelites defeated after they had left Egypt. ⁴⁷They had taken possession of his country and that of King Og of Bashan—the two kings of the Amorites—which were on the east side of the Jordan ⁴⁸from Aroer on the banks of the wadi Arnon, as far as Mount Sion, that is, Hermon; ⁴⁹also the whole Arabah on the east side of the Jordan, as far as the Sea of the Arabah, at the foot of the slopes of Pisgah.

5 Moses summoned all the Israelites and said to them: Hear, O Israel, the laws and rules that I proclaim to you this day! Study them and observe them faithfully!

²Our God made a covenant with us at Horeb. ³It was not with our ancestors that made this covenant, but with us, the living, every one of us who is here today. ⁴Face to face spoke to you on the mountain out of the fire—⁵I stood between יהוה and you at that time to convey יהוה's words to you, for you were afraid of the fire and did not go up the mountain—saying:

בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁴⁵ אֶלָּه הַעֲדָת וְהַחֲקִים
וְהַמְשֻׁפְטִים אֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר מֶשֶׁה אֱלֹהִים
יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּצָאתְכֶם מִמִּצְרַיִם: ⁴⁶ בְּעֶבֶר הַירָּדוֹן
בָּגְנִיא מִולְבִּסְתָּוּת פָּעוֹר בָּאָרֶץ סִיחָן מֶלֶךְ
הָאָמָרְיוֹ אֲשֶׁר יוֹשֵׁב בְּחַשְׁבוֹן אֲשֶׁר הַכְּהָה
מֶשֶׁה וּבְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּצָאתְכֶם מִמִּצְרַיִם:
⁴⁷ וַיִּרְשׁוּ אֶת-אָרֶץ וְאֶת-אָרֶץ | עֹז
מֶלֶךְ הַבְּשָׂן שְׁנִי מֶלֶךְ הָאָמָרְיוֹ אֲשֶׁר
בְּעֶבֶר הַירָּדוֹן מִזְרָח שְׁמָמֶשׁ: ⁴⁸ מַעֲרַעַת
אֲשֶׁר עַל-שְׁפָתִינָהָל אַרְנוֹן וְעַד-הַר שִׁיאָן
הַוָּא חֶרְמוֹן: ⁴⁹ וְכָל-הָעָרָבָה עַבְרַת הַירָּדוֹן
מִזְרָחָה וְעַד יַם הָעָרָבָה תְּחִת אֲשֶׁר הַפְּסָגָה: כ

ה וַיָּקֹרֵא מֶשֶׁה אֱלֹהִים יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיֹּאמֶר
אֶלָּהֶם שְׁמַע יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת-הַחֲקִים וְאֶת-
הַמְשֻׁפְטִים אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי דִּבֶּר בְּאַזְנֵיכֶם הַיּוֹם וְלִמְדַתְּכֶם אֹתָם וְשִׁמְרַתְּכֶם לְעַשְׂתָּם:
² יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ בָּרָת עַמְּנוּ בְּרִית בְּחֶרְבָּה:
³ לֹא אֶת-אָבֹתֵינוּ בָּרָת יְהֹוָה אֶת-הַבְּرִית
הַזֹּאת כִּי אָתָנוּ אֶنְחָנוּ אֱלֹהָה פֵּה הַיּוֹם בָּלָנוּ
חַיִם: ⁴ פָּנִים | בְּפָנִים דִּבֶּר יְהֹוָה עַמְּכָם
בְּחֶרֶת מִתְּזָהָר אֶשׁ: ⁵ אָנֹכִי עָמֵד בֵּין יְהֹוָה
וּבֵיןיכֶם בְּעֵת הַהּוּא לְהִגִּיד לְכֶם אֶת-דְּבָרַי
יְהֹוָה כִּי יִרְאָתֶם מִפְנֵי הַאָשׁ וְלֹא-עַלְיָתֶם בְּדָבָר לִאמֶר: ס

this verse (v'zot hatorah...) is recited liturgically when the Torah is lifted for reading in public.

45–49. This passage tracks the Israelites from the exodus from Egypt through wilderness wanderings and military victories (see also 1:1–5).

5:1–5. As Moses expresses the importance of studying and observing the terms of God's teaching (see also 4:1), he emphasizes the inclusiveness of all Israelites in the covenant.

4. Face to face. Even though Moses is the only one who speaks with God "face to face" (Exodus 33:11; compare "mouth to mouth" in Numbers 12:8), he now claims that at Horeb all the people were privy to this same intimate relationship with God. This "revision" presents Moses as one who avoids claiming a privileged relationship with God and instead transfers it to the people as a whole.

⁶I am your God who brought you out of the land of Egypt, the house of bondage: ⁷You shall have no other gods beside Me.

⁸You shall not make for yourself a sculptured image, any likeness of what is in the heavens above, or on the earth below, or in the waters below the earth. ⁹You shall not bow down to them or serve them. For I your God יהוה am an impassioned God, visiting the guilt of the parents upon the children, upon the third and upon the fourth generations of those who reject Me, ¹⁰but showing kindness to the thousandth generation of those who love Me and keep My commandments.

¹¹You shall not swear falsely by the name of your God יְהוָה; for יְהוָה will not clear one who swears falsely by God's name.

¹²Observe the sabbath day and keep it holy, as your God יְהוָה has commanded you. ¹³Six days you

 אָנֹכִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ אֲשֶׁר הַזְׁכָאָתָּיךָ מֵאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם מִבֵּית עֲבָדִים לְאִישָׁוֹן
לְקָדְשָׁךְ אֱלֹהִים אֶחָרִים עַל-פָּנֶיךָ:

⁸ לא-תעשה לך פסל כל-תמונה אשר בשמי ממעל ואשר הארץ מתחת ואשר בימים מתחת הארץ: ⁹ לא-תשתחוה להם ולא תעבדם כי אני יהוה אל-היך אל קנא פקד עון אבות על-בניים ועל-שלישים ועל-רביעים לשנאי: ¹⁰ ועשה חסד לאלפים

ס. מצוותיו לשבמי אהבי לאהבי

לֹא תְשִׁא אֶת-שָׁם-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לְשׂוֹא כִּי לֹא יַנְקֵה יְהוָה אֶת אֲשֶׁר-יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶת-שָׁמוֹ

¹² שָׁמֹר אֶת־יּוֹם הַשְׁבָּת לִקְדָּשׁו בְּאֵשׁ
אֶצְבָּע יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ: ¹³ שְׁשָׁת יָמִים תַּעֲבֹד

*This accent pattern for the Decalogue is the one that is customarily used for private study. (Masoretic tradition also includes an accent pattern that is used for public reading.) Verses are numbered according to a modern convention.

THE DECALOGUE ("TEN COMMANDMENTS") (5:6–18)

The Decalogue emphasizes the family unit, including men, women, and children. Three separate commandments in vv. 16–18 deal solely with issues protecting the family. The commandments refer to women repeatedly, making it clear that these laws are considered an obligation for all Israel. For more on the (non)gendered language in the Decalogue and details concerning the structure of these commandments and their ancient Near East context, see at Exodus 20:2–14.

6. who brought you out. This verse, which is a statement and not a command per se, establishes the reason why the Israelites should observe God's laws. While some consider the historical prologue in this verse to be the first "commandment," others interpret both vv. 6-7 as the first precept (see also at Exodus 20:2); in Torah scrolls, vv. 6-10 are grouped together as one "command."

7. You shall have no other gods. Verses 7–10 establish the preeminent place of God in the world. (See also at Exodus 20:3–5.)

9. impassioned. Jeffrey Tigay explains that in the Bible the root k-n-a, meaning “to become dark red,” is often associated with fire (as in 4:24) and is used to describe “fiery passions” like love, anger, and jealousy. He writes: “The term reflects the emotional tie between God and Israel that was described metaphorically by the prophets as a marital bond in which [God] is like the husband and Israel a wife” (Deuteronomy, 1996, p. 65). This metaphor captures the expected exclusive nature of the relationship between God and Israel, as well as the jealousy and anger sparked when Israel unfaithfully turns to other gods (see also at 31:16).

II. You shall not swear falsely. See at Exodus 20:7.

12-15. This commandment is explained differently here than in Exodus 20:8-11. Exodus exhorts the Israelites to "remember" the Sabbath, shall labor and do all your work,¹⁴but the seventh day is a sabbath of your God ייְהוָה; you shall not do any work—you, your son or your daughter, your male or female slave, your ox or your ass, or any of your cattle, or the stranger in your settlements, so that your male and female slave may rest as you do.

¹⁵Remember that you were a slave in the land of Egypt and your God ייְהוָה freed you from there with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm; therefore your God ייְהוָה has commanded you to observe the sabbath day.

¹⁶Honor your father and your mother, as your God ייְהוָה has commanded you, that you may long endure, and that you may fare well, in the land that your God ייְהוָה is assigning to you.

¹⁷You shall not murder. You shall not commit adultery. You shall not steal. You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor.

ועשֵׂית בְּלִמְלָאכֶת: ¹⁴ וַיּוֹתֵם הַשְׁבִּיעִי שְׁבָת לִיהְוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ לֹא תַעֲשֵׂה כָּל- מְלָאכָה אֶתְّה וַיְבִנְךָ וַיְזַבְּחָ וַיְעַדְךָ וַיְאַמְתַּחָ וַיְשַׁׁוְרָךְ וַיְחַמְרָךְ וַיְכַלְּבְהַמְתָךְ וַיְגַרְךְ אֲשֶׁר בְּשֻׁלְעִירְךָ לְמַעַן יְנוּחָ עֲבָדָךְ וַאֲמַתְתָךְ בְּמַוּךְ: ¹⁵ וַיְכַרְתָּ פִּי עֲבָד הַיִת בָּאָרֶץ מִצְרָים וַיְצַאָךְ ייְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ מִשְׁם בִּיד חַזְקָה וַיְזַרְעָ נֶטְיָה עַל-פָּנֶיךָ צוֹר ייְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ לְעֹשָׂות אֶת-יְהוָה הַשְׁבָת: ס

¹⁶ כְּבָד אֶת-אֲבִיךְ וְאֶת-אֶמְמָךְ בְּאֲשֶׁר צוֹר ייְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ לְמַעַן יִאֲרִיכְךָ יְמֵיךְ וְלִמְעֵן יִיטְבָ לְךָ עַל הָאָדָמָה אֲשֶׁר-יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ נָתַן לְךָ: ס

¹⁷ לֹא תַرְצַח ס וְלֹא תִּנְאָף ס וְלֹא תִּגְנַב ס וְלֹא תִּתְעַנְגֵּה בְּרַעַע עַד שְׂוֹא: ס

while Deuteronomy commands the Israelites to “observe” the Sabbath. Exodus focuses on God’s resting on the seventh day of creation as the reason for the observance, whereas Deuteronomy connects it to God’s saving of the Israelites from Egypt. Exodus explains how the Sabbath came to be: it portrays God and Moses as proclaiming to newly liberated Israelites that they, like God, must rest on the Sabbath. Deuteronomy, addressed ostensibly to a generation of wilderness-born Israelites who have not experienced slavery, commands them to observe the Sabbath for the sake of their own slaves, lest they forget the historical experiences of their ancestors. [These differences have ramifications for how one understands the Torah as a continuous tradition. The revision reflected in Deuteronomy underscores the fluidity of even the Decalogue, as precepts are revised or reapplied for the circumstances of a new generation. (See further D’varim, Another View, p. 1056.) —Ed.]

16. Honor your father and your mother. The commandment to honor one’s parents comes at the center of the Decalogue, and it is one of the few that promises a reward (see also v. 10). This commandment reflects the need to preserve the family structure across generations in order to have a viable community; it helps to maintain parental authority and to ensure for the care of elderly parents. (See also at Exodus 20:12.)

mother. This is one of several biblical texts that emphasize the mother’s importance (see also at Leviticus 19:3 and at Numbers 11:12). For instance, Genesis emphasizes a mother’s role in the family structure (see Rebekah in Genesis 27–28); Proverbs 1:8 and 6:20 exhort children to be faithful to their mother’s teachings.

17. You shall not commit adultery. In the Bible, adultery is defined as sex between a man and a married woman who is not his wife (see also at 22:22 and Exodus 20:13). Thus two commandments preserving the family unit frame the commandment against murder.

You shall not bear false witness. While this verse has been applied to lying in general, it refers here only to the act of lying as a witness in a legal situation. This prohibition does not apply to many cases in which biblical characters, including women, ¹⁸You [men] shall not covet your neighbor's wife. Likewise, none of you shall crave your neighbor's house, or field, or male or female slave, or ox, or ass, or anything that is your neighbor's.

¹⁹Yahweh spoke those words—those and no more—to your whole congregation at the mountain, with a mighty voice out of the fire and the dense clouds. [God] inscribed them on two tablets of stone and gave them to me. ²⁰When you heard the voice out of the darkness, while the mountain was ablaze with fire, you came up to me, all your tribal heads and elders, ²¹and said, “Our God has just shown us a majestic Presence, and we have heard God's voice out of the fire; we have seen this day that humankind may live though addressed by God. ²²Let us not die, then, for this fearsome fire will consume us; if we hear the voice of our God Yahweh any longer, we shall die. ²³For what mortal ever heard the voice of the living God speak out of the fire, as we did, and lived? ²⁴You go closer and hear all that our God Yahweh says, and then you tell us use deception to subvert those in power and to achieve what, from the biblical perspective, can be considered legitimate ends (as does Rebekah in Genesis 27; see also Abraham at Genesis 12:10–20).

¹⁸וְלֹא תִחַםְד אֲשֶׁת רָעָה ס וְלֹא תִתְאֹה בֵּית רָעָךְ שָׂדָהוּ וְעַבְדוּ וְאִמְתְּנוּ שׂוּרוּ וְחַמְרוּ וְכָל אֲשֶׁר לְרָעָךְ: ס ¹⁹אֶת־הַדְבָרִים הָאֱלֹהִים דְּבָר יְהֹוה אֱלֹהִים כָּל־כָּלָם בְּהָר מִתְוֹרָה הַאֲשָׁר הָעָנָן וְהַעֲרָפֶל קָול גָּדוֹל וְלֹא יִסְפֶּה וְיִכְתְּבֶם עַל־שְׁנַיִלְךָת אֲבָנִים וַיִּתְגַּנְבֵּם אֶלְיָהוּ: ²⁰וַיֹּהִי בְּשָׁמְעָכֶם אֶת־הַקּוֹל מִתְוֹרָה הַחֲשֶׁךְ וְהַהָר בְּעֵיר בְּאֵשׁ וְתִקְרְבוּן אֵלֵי בְּלִרְאֵשִׁי שְׁבָטֵיכֶם וּזְקִנֵּיכֶם: ²¹וְתֹאמְרוּ הֵן חָרָאנָנוּ יְהֹוה אֱלֹהֵינוּ אֶת־בְּבֹדוּ וְאֶת־גָּדוֹלוּ וְאֶת־קָלָלָוּ שְׁמַעַנוּ מִתְוֹרָה הָאֲשָׁר הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה רְאִינוּ בִּידְבָר אֱלֹהִים אֶת־הָאָדָם וְחַי: ²²וְעַתָּה לִמְהָ נִמוֹת בַּיּוֹם הַזֶּה הָאֲשָׁר הַגָּדוֹלָה הַזֹּאת אִמְיִסְפִּים וְתִכְלְנוּ אֶת־יְהֹוה אֱלֹהֵינוּ שְׁמַעַנוּ לְשָׁמַעַן אֶת־קָלָיל יְהֹוה אֱלֹהֵינוּ עַזְוֹז וְמַתְהָנוּ: ²³בַּי מֵ בְּלִבְשָׁר אֲשֶׁר שְׁמַעַן קָול אֱלֹהִים חַיִם מִדְבָר מִתְוֹרָה הָאֲשָׁר כְּמַנוּ וְיַחַי: ²⁴קָרְב אַתָּה וְשָׁמַע אֶת בְּלִאֲשֶׁר יֹאמֶר יְהֹוה אֱלֹהֵינוּ וְאַתָּה תִּתְבֹּר אֵלֵינוּ

18. You [men] shall not covet your neighbor's wife. The Decalogue ends with another directive to protect the family. The term “covet” implies a more inward emotion. While many have questioned how an emotion can be legislated, others point out that some thoughts can be harmful; thus it is in a person's best interest to attempt to control ideas in their seedling states. This is one of the places where a commandment implicitly applies only to men; the reverse, a woman coveting her neighbor's husband, may also be implicit but unacknowledged. (For a different interpretation, see at Exodus 20:14 and Mishpatim, Another View, p. 445.)

house. In Exodus 20:14, the order of the words in this commandment is different; there, the mention of a neighbor's house precedes the mention of his wife. Each version of the Decalogue thus evokes a different meaning of Heb. bayit (“household, house”). In effect, Exodus counts a wife as an element of the household, while Deuteronomy treats her apart from the household's assets.

THE PEOPLE'S FEARFUL RESPONSE AND CALL FOR MOSES' INTERCESSION (5:19–24)

Moses reminds the people that it was their fear of encountering God directly that placed him in the role of intermediary. In this case, experiencing God did not lead the Israelites to desire a closer, more direct relationship with the Divine. This section may aim to remind the people, in anticipation of Moses' death, that his role was temporary.

everything that our God יהוה tells you, and we will willingly do it.”

²⁵ heard the plea that you made to me, and said to me, “I have heard the plea that this people made to you; they did well to speak thus.

²⁶ May they always be of such mind, to revere Me and follow all My commandments, that it may go well with them and with their children forever!

²⁷ Go, say to them, ‘Return to your tents.’ ²⁸ But you remain here with Me, and I will give you the whole Instruction—the laws and the rules—that you shall impart to them, for them to observe in the land that I am giving them to possess.”

²⁹ Be careful, then, to do as your God has commanded you. Do not turn aside to the right or to the left: ³⁰ follow only the path that your God יהוה has enjoined upon you, so that you may thrive and that it may go well with you, and that you may long endure in the land you are to possess.

6 And this is the Instruction—the laws and the rules—that your God יהוה has commanded [me] to impart to you, to be observed in the land that you are about to cross into and occupy,² so that you, your children, and your children’s children may revere your God יהוה and follow, as long as you live, all the divine laws and commandments that I enjoin upon you, to the end that you may

את כל-אשר ירבר יהוה אל-הינו אליך ושםנו ועשינו:

²⁵ וישמע יהוה את-קול דבריכם בדברכם אליו ויאמר יהוה אליו שמעתי את-קול דברי העם הזה אשר דברו אלהיך חיטיבו כל-אשר דברו: ²⁶ מיריתן והיה לבכם זה להם ליראה אתי ולשמר את-כל-מצוותם כל-זמנים למען ייטב להם ולבנייהם לעלם: ²⁷ לך אמר להם שובו לכם לאלהיכם: ²⁸ ואתה פה עמד עמד ואדברה אליך את כל-המצוות והחקיקות והמשפטים אשר תלמדם ועשה בארץ אשר אני נתן לכם לרשותה:

²⁹ ושמירתם לעשות באהר צויה יהוה אלהיכם אתם לא תטרו ומין ושמאל: ³⁰ בכל-הדרך אשר צויה יהוה אלהיכם אתם תלכו למען תחיוון ו טוב לכם והארכתם ימים בארץ אשר תירשون:

ו זו את המצוות החקיקות והמשפטים אשר צויה יהוה אלהיכם למד אתם לעשות בארץ אשר אתם עברים שמה לרשותה: ² למען תירא את-יהוה אלהיך לשמר את-כל-חוקתיו ומצוותיו אשר אני מצויך אתה ובני ובני ובנך כל ימי חייך ולמען

GOD'S RESPONSE TO THE PEOPLE'S REQUEST (5:25–30)

Moses adds that God was pleased with the Israelites’ response to the revelation, appreciating the people’s awe and need for an intermediary. Moses promises that if the people and their offspring revere God and obey the commandments, they will flourish in the land, a repeated message in Deuteronomy (see, for example, 7:12–15).

Additional Teachings

HOW TO FOLLOW THE LAWS (6:1–7:5)

As Moses’ speech turns more to the future, he explains how one must carry out God’s laws. Transmission of the teachings across generations remains a high priority; therefore the emphasis falls on remembering, teaching, and learning, with the love of God as an underlying attitude.

long endure. ³Obey, O Israel, willingly and faithfully, that it may go well with you and that you may increase greatly [in] a land flowing with milk and honey, as יְהוָה, the God of your ancestors, spoke to you.

⁴Hear, O Israel! יְהוָה is our God, יְהוָה alone. ⁵You shall love your God יְהוָה with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your might. ⁶Take to heart these instructions with which I charge you this day. ⁷Impress them upon your children. Recite them when you stay at home and when you are away, when you lie down and when you get up.

יארְכּוּ יְמִינְךָ: ³ וְשָׁמַעְתָּ יִשְׂרָאֵל וְשָׁמַרְתָּ
לְעֵשֹׂות אֲשֶׁר יִיטֶב לְךָ וְאֲשֶׁר תַּרְבֹּז מֵאַדְךָ
פֶּאֲשֶׁר דָבַר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ אַבְתָּאֵל לְךָ אֶרְץ
בָּתְחַלְבָךְ וּדְבָשָׁךְ: ⁴ בָּ

שָׁמַע יִשְׂרָאֵל וְהַזָּה אֱלֹהֵינוּ יְהוָה | אֶחָד:
וְאֶחָדְתָ אֶת יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בְּכָל־לְבָבְךָ
וּבְכָל־נְפָשָׁךְ וּבְכָל־מַאֲذָךְ: ⁶ וְהַזָּה הַדְבָרִים
הָאֶלְהָ אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצְוָה הַיּוֹם עַל־לְבָבְךָ
⁷ וְשִׁנְנַתָּם לְבָנֶיךָ וּדְבָרַת בְּמַבְשָׁתְתָךְ
בְּבִיהָנָךְ וּבְלִכְתָּךְ בְּלָרָךְ וּבְשִׁבְבָּךְ וּבְקִומָךְ:

THE CALL TO LOVE THE ONE AND ONLY GOD (6:1–9)

This section includes two central passages in Jewish liturgy: the Sh'ma (6:4) and V'ahavta (6:4–9). The Sh'ma (“Hear”) reminds the Israelites of God’s essence and their relationship with the One God. The V'ahavta (“You shall love”) describes how the people are to internalize the teachings and impart them to future generations.

The Sh'ma and V'ahavta hold special meaning when understood as directives to the Israelites about to cross the Jordan into Israel. At a time so central to the formation of the people, they are told about love and the importance of preserving family, educating one’s children, and maintaining one’s relationship to the Divine. These ideas have helped to sustain the people Israel throughout many years of waiting to “cross the Jordan.”

3. Obey, O Israel, willingly. This charge refers to both listening and obeying, with alliteration linking the two words (v'shamata and v'shamarta).

4. Given the centrality of the Sh'ma as the “watchword of the Jewish faith,” its meaning is surprisingly uncertain. Because of its grammatical construction and the various nuances of the word echad (translated here as “alone”), this declaration can be construed in different ways. Some translations have rendered it as: “The LORD our God, the LORD is one” (see the 1917 Jewish Publication Society translation, which is similar to the 1611 King James Version). Such a translation implies that the Sh'ma is a statement about God’s essence, a reflection of the monotheistic belief in the existence of only one God.

Other translations resemble the one incorporated in this book. This version makes a claim about God’s unique relationship to Israel, without necessarily denying the existence of other divine beings. Bernard Levinson points out: “The verse makes not a quantitative argument (about the number of deities) but a qualitative one about the nature of the relationship between God and Israel” (“Deuteronomy,” Jewish Study Bible, 2004, p. 380). This understanding reflects what many scholars have concluded is a pre-monotheistic Israelite belief called monolatry: the allegiance to one god, while recognizing the existence of other deities. (See also at 4:19–20; 4:35; 32:8; Exodus 15:11; and Another View, p. 1082.)

5. You shall love יְהוָה. This language is rooted in ancient Near Eastern political treaties, where “love” implies a sense of loyalty to a greater power. The verb conveys not just an emotion, but a statement with implications for one’s actions. God demands intellectual, emotional, and physical commitment. (See also at 7:13.)

8–9. This passage provides the basis for the laws of t'fillin (phylacteries) and of mezuzah. The idea is that at any time or place, engaged in any ⁸Bind them as a sign on your hand and let them serve as a symbol on your forehead; ⁹inscribe them on the doorposts of your house and on your gates.

¹⁰When your God brings you into the land that was sworn to your fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to be assigned to you—great and flourishing cities that you did not build, ¹¹houses full of all good things that you did not fill, hewn cisterns that you did not hew, vineyards and olive groves that you did not plant—and you eat your fill, ¹²take heed that you do not forget who freed you from the land of Egypt, the house of bondage. ¹³Revere only your God יְהוָה and worship [God] alone, and swear only by God's name. ¹⁴Do not follow other gods, any gods of the peoples about

וַיִּשְׁרַתֶּם לְאֹות עַל־יָדֶךָ וְהַרְאֵו לְטֻפָּת
בֵּין עֵינֶיךָ ⁹ וְכִתְבַתֶּם עַל־מִזְוֹת בַּיּוֹת וּבְשֻׁעָרֶיךָ: ס

¹⁰ וְהִיא כִּי יִבְאֶךָ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ אֶל־הָאָרֶץ
אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע לְאַבְרָהָם לְאַבְרָהָם לִيְצָחָק
וּלְיעַקְבָּר לְתַת לְךָ עָרִים גָּדוֹלָת וִטְבָת אֲשֶׁר
לְאַבְנִית: ¹¹ וּבְתִים מְלָאִים בְּלִיטָוב אֲשֶׁר
לְאַ-מְלִאתָה וּבְרָת חֲזֹובִים אֲשֶׁר לְאַ-חֲצָבָת
פְּרִמִּים וּוִיְתִים אֲשֶׁר לְאַ-נְטָעָת וּאַכְלָת
וּשְׁבָעָת: ¹² הַשְׁמֵר לְרַפֵּן תְּשִׁבָּח אֶת
יְהוָה אֲשֶׁר הוֹצִיאךְ מִאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם מִבֵּית
עֲבָדִים: ¹³ אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ תִּירְאָה וְאֶת־
תַּעֲבֹד וּבְשָׁמוֹ תְּשִׁבָּע: ¹⁴ לֹא תַלְכֹּן אֶחָרָיו אֱלֹהִים אֶחָרִים מִאֱלֹהֵי הָעָםִים אֲשֶׁר

activity, one should remain ever mindful of these teachings.

8. sign. While this language was probably originally understood figuratively, the practice developed of Jews' interpreting this verse literally as referring to the physical strapping of specified texts in small boxes called t'fillin onto the arm and head (see at Exodus 13:9).

symbol. See at Exodus 13:16.

9. inscribe them on the doorposts. In the ancient Near East, sacred words were literally written on doorposts and on plaques placed near entranceways; this practice had an apotropaic function, meaning that it was believed to help ward off evil. This evolved into the Jewish practice of writing selections from the Torah on a piece of parchment and affixing it to the doorpost, usually encased in a slender box (called a mezuzah).

THE CALL TO ABSOLUTE LOYALTY TO ISRAEL'S GOD (6:10–19)

Moses now discloses the ramifications for how

Israel must live in the land. He reminds the Israelites of what God has done in taking them out of Egypt and what this means in terms of God's relationship to them. Again, he emphasizes the need to transmit the teachings to future generations.

10–15. Remembering what God has done in the past is a starting point and guide to the future. Memory plays a crucial role in Deuteronomy as a whole and in this parashah in particular. It serves as a basis for gratitude to God and a precondition for keeping the commandments appropriately; it also functions to create and maintain community identity.

10. sworn to your fathers. Moses makes connections to the covenant with the patriarchs as a reminder that the relationship between God and Israel did not start at Horeb (Sinai). (On the translation “fathers,” see at 4:31.)

12–13. bondage...worship. Heb. avadim...taavod. The repetition of the root e-v-d creates a word play that emphasizes the connection between Israel's obligations to serve (“worship”) God and one of the reasons that they have this obligation.

you—¹⁵for your God יְהוָה in your midst is an impassioned God—lest the anger of your God יְהוָה blaze forth against you, wiping you off the face of the earth.

¹⁶Do not try your God, יְהוָה, as you did at Massah. ¹⁷Be sure to keep the commandments, decrees, and laws that your God יְהוָה has enjoined upon you. ¹⁸Do what is right and good in the sight of יְהוָה, that it may go well with you and that you may be able to possess the good land that your God יְהוָה promised on oath to your fathers, ¹⁹and that all your enemies may be driven out before you, as יְהוָה has spoken.

²⁰When, in time to come, your children ask you, “What mean the decrees, laws, and rules that our God יְהוָה has enjoined upon you?” ²¹you shall say to your children, “We were slaves to Pharaoh in Egypt and freed us from Egypt with a mighty hand. ²²wrought before our eyes marvelous and destructive signs and portents in Egypt, against Pharaoh and all his household; ²³and us [God] freed from there, in order to take us and give us the land promised on oath to our fathers. ²⁴Then יְהוָה commanded us to observe all these laws, to revere our God, יְהוָה, for our lasting good and for our survival, as is now the case. ²⁵It will be therefore to our merit before our God יְהוָה to observe faithfully this whole Instruction, as [God] has commanded us.”

סִבְיוֹתֵיכֶם: ¹⁵ כִּי אֲלֹהֵינוּ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ בְּקָרְבָּךְ פָּנַיְחָרָה אֶפְרַיִם אֱלֹהֵינוּ בְּךָ וְהַשְׁמִידָךְ מֵעַל פָּנֵי הָאָדָם: ס

¹⁶ לֹא תַנְשֹׂא אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם כַּאֲשֶׁר נִסְתִּים בְּמִסְחָה: ¹⁷ שְׁמֹור תִּשְׁמֹרְךָ אֶת־מִצְוֹת יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וְעֲدָתְךָ וְחִקְוֹתְךָ צְנָה: ¹⁸ וְעַשְׂתָּה הַיְשָׁרָה וְהַטּוֹב בְּעֵינֵי יְהוָה לְמַעַן יִיטָּב לְךָ וּבְאֶתְּנָה וּבְרִשְׁתְּךָ אֶת־הָאָרֶץ הַטְּבָה אֲשֶׁר־גַּשְׁבָּע יְהוָה לְאַבְתָּיךְ: ¹⁹ לְהַלְׁךְ אֶת־בָּל־אַיִבָּךְ מִפְנִיק כַּאֲשֶׁר דָּבַר יְהוָה: ס

²⁰ קִיְשָׁאַל בְּנֶךָ מִתָּר לְאָמֵר מָה הָעֲדָת וְהַחֲקִים וְהַמְשֻׁפְטִים אֲשֶׁר צָוָה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ אֶתְכֶם: ²¹ וְאָמַרְתָּ לְבָנֶךָ עֲבָדִים הַיּוּנוּ לְפָרֻעה בְּמִצְרָיִם וַיַּצִּיאֵנוּ יְהוָה מִמִּצְרָיִם בַּיּוֹם חֹזְקָה: ²² וַיַּתֵּן יְהוָה אֶתְתָּה וּמִפְתָּחִים גָּדוֹלִים וּרְעִים בְּמִצְרָיִם בְּפִרְעָה וּבְכָל־בְּיתָו לְעֵינֵינוּ: ²³ וַיַּעֲשֵׂנוּ הַזְּעִירָא מִשְׁם לְמַעַן הַבָּיא אֶתְנוּ לְתַתְּנָה אֶת־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבָּע לְאַבְתָּינוּ: ²⁴ וַיַּצְוָנוּ יְהוָה לְעֹשֹׂת אֶת־בָּל־הַחֲקִים הַאֲלָה לִירָא אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ לְטוֹב לְנוּ כָּל־הַיּוֹם לְחִיטָּנוּ בְּהַיּוֹם הַזֶּה: ²⁵ וַיַּצְרָךְ תִּהְיֶה לְנָנוּ כִּי־נִשְׁמַר לְעֹשֹׂת אֶת־בָּל־הַמְצָנָה הַזֹּאת לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ בַּאֲשֶׁר צָוָנוּ: ס

^{15.} impassioned. See at 5:9.

^{16.} Massah. See Exodus 17:1–7.

THE DEMAND TO TEACH FUTURE GENERATIONS ABOUT THE LAWS (6:20–25)

Moses emphasizes that education is central to Israel's survival. Proverbs 1:8 and 6:20 recognize the role of women in teaching future generations, exhorting the child to focus on the father's instruction and the mother's teaching (torah).

^{20.} “What mean the decrees?” This verse has been incorporated into the Four Children of the Passover Haggadah as the question of the wise child.

7 When your God יְהוָה brings you to the land that you are about to enter and possess, and [God] dislodges many nations before you—the Hittites, Girgashites, Amorites, Canaanites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebusites, seven nations much larger than you—²and your God יְהוָה delivers them to you and you defeat them, you must doom them to destruction: grant them no terms and give them no quarter. ³You shall not intermarry with them: do not give your daughters to their sons or take their daughters for your sons. ⁴For they will turn your children away from Me to worship other gods, and יְהוָה's anger will blaze forth against you, promptly wiping you out. ⁵Instead, this is what you shall do to them: you shall tear down their altars, smash their pillars, cut down their sacred posts, and consign their images to the fire.

כִּי יַבְיאֶל יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ אֶל־הָאָרֶץ
אֲשֶׁר־אַתָּה בְּאֹשֶׁם לְרֹשְׁתָה וּנְשָׁלְגּוּם־
רַבִּים | מִפְנִיק הַחֲתִי וְהַגְּרָשִׁי וְהַאֲמָרִי
וְהַכְּנָעָנִי וְהַפְּרָזִי וְהַחוּלִי וְהַיּוֹבָסִי שְׁבֻעָה
גּוֹיִם רַבִּים וּעֲצֹמוּם מִמֶּךָ: ² וְנִתְנָתָם יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֵיךְ לִפְנֵיךְ וְהַבִּיטָם הַחֲרֵם תְּחִרֵט
אַתָּם לְאִתְכְּרִת לָהּם בְּרִית וְלֹא תְחַנֵּם:
³ וְלֹא תְתַחַתֵּן בָּם בַּתֶּל לְאִתְתַּחֵן לְבָנוֹ
וּבָתוֹ לְאִתְקַח לְבָנֶךָ: ⁴ כִּי־יִסְרָאֵל אֶת־בָּנֶךָ
מִאָחָדִי וּבְנָדוֹ אֶלְזִים אֶחָדִים וְחַדָּה אֶחָדִי
יְהוָה בָּכֶם וְהַשְׁמִידֶךָ מִקֶּרֶב: ⁵ כִּי־אִם־כֵּה
מַעֲשֵׂל לָהּם מִזְבְּחֹתָיהם תִּתְצֹר וּמִצְבָּתָם
תִּשְׁבְּרוּ וְאַשְׁרִרָהֶם תִּגְדַּעַן וּפְסִילֵּיהֶם
תִּשְׁרַפוּן בְּאַש:

PROHIBITIONS REGARDING THE INHABITANTS OF THE LAND (7:1–5)

The call to absolute loyalty to God and the memory of the past become the basis for the demand for complete separation from Israel's neighbors. Many later readers have struggled with the problematic concept that God charges the Israelites to destroy all the inhabitants when they enter the land. We must confront the fact that this is what the Torah says and be willing to disapprove of it. While we may attempt to understand this rhetoric in its historical context, we can still reject it as something we would not endorse today. In this parashah, the demand to destroy all the Canaanites is presented within a specific understanding of who Israel is at this point in its history: because the Israelites are weak and have demonstrated their inability to resist foreign worship in the past, they are instructed to isolate themselves in order to maintain their identity and remain loyal to their God. (See also at 7:24;

12:29–31; 31:16.) [Some scholars make the point that such calls for destruction most likely reflect the retrojected rhetoric of victory, a claim by later generations that the previous inhabitants were annihilated completely. However, had all the seven nations listed in v. 1 been destroyed, then the command not to intermarry (v. 3) would be irrelevant (see also Exodus 23:32–33 and 34:15–16, which imply the existence of other inhabitants of the land). While conquest certainly involves killing, Deuteronomy's representation of the wholesale slaughter of every living person (the proclamation of cherem) is unlikely to have been a historical actuality. —Ed.]

i. The forbidden nations are only those in the land; the Torah does not advocate hostility to other nations as a general principle.

3. The Israelites are directed not to intermarry with the offspring of the neighboring nations. Other biblical texts do not reflect an opposition to unions with non-Israelites (see Mikeitz, Another Contemporary Reflection, p. 256).

⁶For you are a people consecrated to your God יְהוָה: of all the peoples on earth your God chose you to be God's treasured people. ⁷It is not because you are the most numerous of peoples that grew attached to you and chose you—indeed, you are the smallest of peoples; ⁸but it was because favored you and kept the oath made to your fathers that freed you with a mighty hand and rescued you from the house of bondage, from the power of Pharaoh king of Egypt.

⁹Know, therefore, that only your God יְהוָה is God, the steadfast God who keeps the divine covenant faithfully to the thousandth generation of those who love [God] and keep the divine commandments, ¹⁰but who instantly requites with destruction those who reject [God]—never slow with those who reject, but requiting them instantly. ¹¹Therefore, observe faithfully the Instruction—the laws and the rules—with which I charge you today.

⁶ כי עם קדוש אַתֶּה לִיהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בְּחֵךְ וַיְהִי אֱלֹהֵיךְ לְהִיוֹת לוֹ לְעַם סְגִלָּה מִפֶּלֶת הָעָמִים אֲשֶׁר עַל־פָנֵי האָדָם: ⁷ לֹא מִרְבָּכֶם מִכֶּל־הָעָמִים חִשְׁקֵי יְהוָה בְּכֶם וַיִּבְחרֵךְ בְּכֶם כִּי־אַתֶּם הַמְּעֻט מִכֶּל־הָעָמִים: ⁸ כִּי מִאֲהָבָת יְהוָה אֲתֶם וּמְשֻׁמְרוּ אֶת־הַשְׁבָּעָה אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע לְאַבְתֵיכֶם הַוֹצִיא יְהוָה אֲתֶם בִּיד חִזְקָה וַיִּפְרַק מִבֵּית עֲבָדִים מִינִיד פְּרֻעה מֶלֶךְ־מִצְרַיִם: ⁹ וַיַּדַּעַת בַּיּוֹם אֱלֹהֵיךְ הוּא הָאֱלֹהִים הָאֶל הַגָּמְן שְׁמֵר הַבְּרִית וְהַחֶסֶד לְאַהֲבָיו וַיִּשְׁמַרְיִ מְצֻוֹתָיו מִצְוֹתָיו לְאַלְפָ דָרָ: ¹⁰ וּמְשֻׁלָּם לְשָׂנְאָיו אֶל־פָנֵיו לְהַאֲבִדוֹ לֹא יַחֲרֵל לְשָׂנְאָיו אֶל־פָנֵיו יִשְׁלַמְלָלוֹ: ¹¹ וַיִּשְׁמַרְתָּ אֶת־הַמְּצֹה וְאֶת־הַחֲקִים וְאֶת־הַמְשֻׁפְטִים אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מְצֹוֶה הַיּוֹם לְעָשֹׂותם: פ

Conclusion

GOD'S LOVE AS REASON FOR THE LAWS (7:6–11)

This is one of the Bible's strongest statements of God's special relationship with Israel. God has actively chosen this people and separated them from all others to be God's people. Therefore, they have the responsibility to maintain a separate identity, to keep themselves holy, and to live up to their side of the covenant with God.

6. a people consecrated. Heb. am kadosh, which Jeffrey Tigay connects to its cognate in talmudic Hebrew, m'kudeshet ("betrothed"). He claims that the term invokes a marital metaphor, as in 5:9, implying that the bride Israel commits to an exclusive relationship with her groom, God (Deuteronomy, 1996, p. 68). In contrast to Leviticus 19, which speaks of individual Israelites becoming holy, here

Moses declares that the people already are holy.

7. It is not because you are the most numerous. In the Bible, God often chooses unlikely heroes (such as Jacob in Genesis 25) and works through the weaker party. This provides reassurance that Israel will not fail because of its small size and signals that success is achievable because of God's help, not through the work of powerful individuals alone. Women are among those who achieve success, as seen in their successful resistance to Pharaoh's rule in Exodus 1–2.

8. favored. Heb. ahav, literally "loved." Love serves as a basis for the covenantal relationship between God and Israel (see also at 6:5 and 7:13).

9–11. The parashah ends by reminding the people that their fulfillment of God's commandments will determine their destiny. They have the possibility of a long and successful life in their new land, depending upon their actions.

—Ora Horn Prouser

Another View

[Tikva Frymer-Kensky ט"ו was an early contributor to this project (see Pinchas, Another View, p. 982) and served as a member of the Editorial Board. Because her illness and recent death prevented her from completing her planned contributions, here one of her students instead summarizes an important aspect of Frymer-Kensky's published work. —Ed.]

PARASHAT VA-ET'CHANAN FIGURES PROMINENTLY in debates about the development of monotheism, the belief in God's oneness. While certain passages reflect Deuteronomy's mandate that a single God must be worshipped at one shrine by one people (see 4:35; 6:4), others suggest a belief in the existence in multiple deities (see 4:19–20). Despite the Bible's claim that Moses introduced monotheism to the world, many scholars recognize that Israel's commitment to monotheism developed over time. Texts such as 4:19–20 or Exodus 15:11 ("Who is like you, פָּנָה, among the celestials [literally: gods]?) likely represent an earlier stage in Israel's theological development. Furthermore, prophetic diatribes against idolatry (see, for instance, Jeremiah 2 or Hosea 2) suggest that monotheism may have been the ideal, but it may not have been the practice of the average Israelite until the 6th century B.C.E.

Tikva Frymer-Kensky shed enormous light on the process through which monotheism took root within Israelite culture and thus revolutionized biblical religion. In her influential 1992 book In the Wake of the Goddesses, she described the transition to monotheism as a process in which the image of Israel's God expanded to include all the functions previously attributed to various gods and goddesses—the multiple divine personalities thought to determine the natural world. Israel's God became the rainmaker, healer, warrior, and, as the many tales of barren women attest, controller of human reproduction.

However, this perception of one God as master of the universe creates a theological challenge. The poly-

Now, with one God in control, what accounts for destruction and tragedy?

theistic universe, observed Frymer-Kensky, is defined by change and flux in which humanity is at the mercy of the gods. Divine whims destroy cities; divine squabbles cause deluge or drought. Now, with one God in control, what accounts for destruction and tragedy? Frymer-Kensky asserted that biblical monotheism makes human beings the initiators of change within the universe. Human behavior becomes the variable that determines the course of history and the natural world. When Israel behaves, there is rain and abundance; when Israel sins, there is drought and death (Deuteronomy 11:13–17). Frymer-Kensky noted that biblical monotheism thus comes with a mandate: as God's partners, it becomes humanity's responsibility to maintain God's universe through right behavior and social justice.

—Amy Kalmanofsky

I pleaded with יהוה at that time (3:23). Midrash D'verim Rabbah 2.1 poses four rhetorical questions on the halachah of prayer. For the answers, it looks to the behavior of four biblical figures—Hannah, Daniel, David, and Solomon. The first question is whether a person should pray in a loud voice, as Moses apparently does in this passage. Based on the actions of Hannah, who prayed silently, with only her lips moving (I Samuel 1:13), the answer is no.

Honor your father and your mother (5:16). The Rabbis (JT Kiddushin 1:7, 61b) illustrated this commandment with two exaggerated tales designed to emphasize the seriousness of the mitzvah. Rabbi Tarfon's mother was walking in her courtyard on Shabbat when her shoe broke, exposing her foot to the ground. Her son placed his hands under her feet step by step until she returned to her room. When she later complained to other Rabbis that her son had shown her too much honor, they disagreed. Even if he repeated that act thousands of times, he would still not have shown her even half the honor the Torah requires. Conversely, Rabbi Ishmael's mother complained to the Rabbis that her son did not honor her sufficiently when he refused to allow her to wash his feet and drink the wash water. The Rabbis insisted that if this was the honor she desired, then he must allow her to do it.

At BT Kiddushin 39b, the Rabbis compared the mitzvah of honoring parents with the commandment in Deuteronomy 22:6–7 to send away a mother bird before gathering up her eggs. In each case, the Torah promises long life to those who keep these mitzvot. And the comparison goes deeper: by sending away the mother bird, the egg gatherer shows sensitivity to a mother, albeit a non-human one. Broadly speaking, sending away the mother bird is “honoring a mother,” or honoring motherhood.

Hear, O Israel! יהוה is our God (6:4–9). The Rabbis saw the recitation of the Sh'ma as a Jew's acceptance of the “yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven”—that is, the acceptance of God's sovereignty, including acceptance of God's legitimate authority to require obedience to the Torah (for instance, Mishnah B'rachot 2:2, 5). The martyr Rabbi Akiva died while saying these words (BT B'rachot 61b). This entire passage, known as “recitation of the Sh'ma,” became part of the standard prayer liturgy that men are required to recite twice daily. However, the Rabbis ruled that women are not required to recite the daily Sh'ma (Mishnah B'rachot 3:3) since it is a positive, time-bound commandment from which women are generally exempt in rabbinic law (BT B'rachot 20b). The Talmud raises the possibility that women should also be obligated in the recitation of Sh'ma because of its proclamation of God's sovereignty, but then dismisses this option. The insistence on women's exemption from time-bound commandments, even in the service of God, is a powerful talmudic statement of gender hierarchy and female spiritual marginalization. As Rabbi David Abudraham (14th-century Spain) explained, women are exempt from time-bound commandments so that they will not be occupied in divine service when their husbands need them for domestic service.

*The Rabbis ruled that women are not required to recite the twice-daily Sh'ma.*

You shall not intermarry with them . . . For they will turn your children away from Me (7:3–4). The Torah forbids intermarriage with the seven Canaanite nations on the grounds that the Canaanite spouse could turn the Israelite spouse away from the worship of God. In their biblical context, these verses depict an equal-opportunity danger: whether the intermarrying Israelite is the bride or the groom, the fear is that the Canaanite spouse will lead the Israelite partner astray. Partly because the Canaanite concern was nonexistent in their time, and partly because rabbinic legal interpretation of Scripture generally tends to focus closely on words and phrases, the Rabbis read the grammatically masculine Hebrew of 7:4 with extreme literalness: “For he will turn your son away.” In the Talmud this reading is used to justify the determination of Jewish descent according to whether one’s mother is Jewish (BT Kiddushin 68b). The argument is that “he” (the Israelite daughter’s Canaanite spouse) will turn away “your son” (the Israelite father-in-law’s grandson from that union). This proves that the child of a Canaanite father and Israelite mother is considered “your son” (an Israelite), while the child of an Israelite father and Canaanite mother is, by implication, considered “her child” (a Canaanite). Thus, according to rabbinic halachah, in cases of intermarriage the children of an Israelite mother married to a non-Jew are considered part of the Jewish people, but the children of an Israelite father and a non-Israelite mother are not. (For the Reform Movement perspective, see Mikeitz, Another Contemporary Reflection, p. 256.)

—Alyssa M. Gray

• • • • •

Contemporary Reflection

THE SECOND ACCOUNT of the Decalogue (“Ten Commandments”) described in this portion has long been scrutinized for how it differs from the first version in parashat Yitro. One obvious difference is the reason given for observing the Sabbath. Exodus 20:11 states that we should rest on the seventh day in imitation of God at Creation, but Deuteronomy 5:15 focuses on our need as humans to rest. Another discrepancy is that Exodus 19 situates the revelation at Sinai, while 5:2 refers to this sacred site as Horeb. But the most significant difference between these two texts lies in the Israelites’ own state of mind.

When the Israelites stand at Mount Sinai in Exodus 19–20, they have successfully fled the Egyptians, crossed the Sea of Reeds, and been fed in the wilderness on manna; the danger is behind them. When they hear the first of the “Ten Words”—“I הִנֵּה am your God who brought you out of the land of Egypt”—each of them has a personal understanding of the God they have known and experienced.

In Deuteronomy, however, the danger lies ahead.

Of those hearing Moses’ recitation of the commandments this time, almost none actually fled Egypt themselves. Earlier, they may have witnessed their rebellious parents’ refusal to fight for the Promised Land (Numbers 13–14); but now, precious few of them still has a living parent. The giants of their youth—Moses, Aaron, and Miriam—are either dead or soon will be. The Israelites themselves, untested, will have to battle their way into the Promised Land in order to settle there. In Exodus, the Israelites are preoccupied with the present; in Deuteronomy, they are focused on the future.

Religion promises us a meaningful world. If we are not free, whether because of physical or psychological enslavement, then life may not be meaningful. But death also threatens meaning, so one of religion’s major tasks is to reconcile us to the losses we experience and, ultimately, to our own mortality. Our religion must convince us that although death exists, meaning abides. We are finite not only because we die, but also because we have chosen the particular life we live. A people’s story spreads over a large canvas and lifts up everyone who participates in its story. When we identify with those who came before us and when we are invested in those who will come after us, then we are part of something much larger than our individual lives and efforts.

VA-ET'CHANAN

While religion can help us find meaning in the face of death, the experience of bereavement transcends our cognitive experience. In particular, with the death of one's parents comes a feeling of loss and, subsequently, a quest for enduring values. During the final

With the death of one's parents comes a quest for enduring values.

years in the wilderness, after their parents have died, the members of the generation about to enter into the Promised Land go through a gradual reassessment of their parents' identities, trying to figure out who their ancestors were and who they are themselves. As Moses recounts all that has transpired since the Israelites escaped from Egypt, he emphasizes that the prior generation died because they lacked faith: disillusioned, they had doubted God's plan to fulfill the covenant of the ancestors and settle them in the Promised Land. Now, standing in Moab, poised to complete the forty-year journey, the current generation comes to admire and appreciate the stark honesty of their parents, who had passed on the history of their own inadequacies so that their children would not "be like their ancestors, a wayward and defiant generation, a generation whose heart was inconstant, whose spirit was not true to God" (Psalm 78:8).

How much deeper their understanding of their parents must have become when they themselves became adults and assumed the formidable task of raising the next generation! Now they face the awesome but voluntary task of carrying on the chain of tradition. After all, if they do not do so, no one else will. Their parents' passing likely led them to understand that they are part of something larger than themselves, as well as to realize that they are merely a brief but significant moment in the life of the Jewish people. It is said that we become fully human and adult when we touch death. The loss of our parents makes us aware that we, too, are part of a generation that will die.

As the Israelites listen to Moses repeat the Decalogue, their biological parents are gone and their parent figure, Moses, will soon die. How can they find the invincible parent? Somehow, the people must internalize their ideal parent—in other words, they must parent themselves—and then raise the next generation. Their focus must shift to the next generation, the one without grandparents. The experience makes us better appreciate why the concept of l'dor vador ("from generation to generation") is so central in our tradition.

Since mourning is a creative process, we can ask what new growth there is in the Israelites' understanding of the Decalogue. Its commandments initially were addressed to those who had directly experienced the exodus from Egypt. If these words were to have the same force for subsequent generations, they must understand the word "Egypt" to represent all the ways in which they are constricted, degraded, and enslaved. And so, as those about to enter the Promised Land hear Moses repeat these words, they think of the "Egypt" of loss and the long "hard labor" of mourning. The God who had brought them out of Egypt becomes the God who comforts them, dries their tears, and encourages them to continue on their way after their parents have been buried in the wilderness. The God of comfort becomes a crucial addition to the ways in which the Israelites understand the One who freed them "from Egypt with a mighty hand" (6:21). As they prepare to settle in the Promised Land and face the vicissitudes of the next part of their formation as the Jewish people, this revelation of the Divine will prove to be particularly important.

—Carol Ochs

Voices

Sinai

Jill Hammer

Deuteronomy 4:12, 6:4

The sound of God's voice. The sound
Of nothing running to greet something.
Of a shocked laugh. Of one who came again to this place, searching. Who came to this place and never left, like a broken wagon wheel.

Who came to this place once, and never again.

The sound of one who almost spoke to us, as thunder almost speaks to lightning but misses by a few seconds. The sound of one who was wiped free of sound.

The sound of one who knows and wants us
to know.

The sound of one who knows and wants us
to find out but not yet. The sound of one who does not know.

The sound of God's voice. The sound of questions dropped into the mind like stones into water. Yes, that sound.

Somewhere Out of Time

Nancy Lee Gossels

Deuteronomy 5:1-24

Somewhere out of time
In the mystery of time
Somewhere between memory and forgetfulness,

Dimly though
I remember how once I stood
At Your mountain trembling
Amid the fire and the thunder.
How I stood there, out of bondage
In a strange land and afraid.
And You loved me and You fed me
And I feasted on Your words.
And yes, I can remember
How the thunder was my heart
And the fire was my soul.
O, God, I do remember.
The fire burns in me anew.
And here I am, once more
A witness to that timeless moment.
Present now in the light of Your Torah
I am reborn.

Aliyah is Ascent

Sheila Peltz Weinberg

Deuteronomy 5:1-24

Aliyah is ascent.
We ascend to the Torah to acknowledge that we choose to live under its laws and principles.
We ascend to the Torah to affirm that we are part of a people and a story that is much greater than ourselves.
We ascend to the Torah to represent those who remain below.
We ascend to the Torah to risk receiving an honor, to risk being known and seen,
to risk being at Sinai again.
We ascend to the Torah with slow steps, or in haste, with enthusiasm or reluctance, in awe or in fear, in hope and in love.

VA-ET'CHANAN

Sinai

Merle Feld

Deuteronomy 5:1-24

The men rushed ahead,
they always do—
in battle to defend us,
in eagerness, to get the best view, to be there with each other as a community.

We followed later—
some of us waited
till we were done nursing,
others waited to go together
with those who were still nursing.
Most of us were herding several children carrying a heavy two year old on one hip
(it's hard to move forward quickly with a heavy two year old on one hip).
Last came the very pregnant ones—when you're that far along it's your instinct to be afraid of crowds afraid of being jostled
you hang back
you feel safer being last.

Anyway, I was one of the ones
with a heavy two year old on one hip—such a sweet body he had warm soft delicious flesh.
He was afraid of the noise
he clung to me so tightly,
his fingers in my neck,
his face buried in my neck.
I showered him with little kisses, not so much to comfort him
as out of habit
and my pleasure.

The earth shook, it vibrated and so did I,

my chest, my legs
all vibrating.
I sank to my knees
all the while with this little boy attached to me, trying to merge himself back into me.

I closed my eyes
to be there more intensely,
it all washed over me—
wave upon wave upon wave . . .

And afterwards, the stillness of a nation, a people who had been flattened, forever imprinted, slowly raising themselves, rising again from the earth.

How to hold onto that moment washed clean reborn holy silence . . .

from The Tapestry of Jewish Time
Nina Beth Cardin

Deuteronomy 4:44

The origins of the Torah remain a mystery. Although it would be satisfying to know, the authority of the Torah need not be diminished by the mystery, for its authority goes beyond the origins of the text. It is grounded in the millions of Jews over hundreds of generations who claimed it, cherished it, nurtured it, obeyed it, embellished it, and built out of it a tradition that enriches the world and illuminates our lives. That history both confers and confirms its holiness. Where the Torah came from is not as critical as what it means to us, how it has built our people and helped us map our world and our destination.

And You Shall Love

Lynn Levin

Deuteronomy 6:5–9

And you shall love
with all your heart,
with all your soul,
and with all your might,
not to have to think about it.
But for now
you shall diligently teach your children to look out for the odd package.
And you shall think about it when you're walking by the way through the market
or down a busy street,
when you're lying down
on a beach,
or when you're rising up from your seat on a bus
or sitting down at a café.
And although for now you always keep it in the forefront of your mind, you wonder when you will not have to post warnings about it on your doors and on your gates.

V'ahavta

Marge Piercy

Deuteronomy 6:5–9

So you shall love what is holy with all your courage, with all your passion with all your strength.
Let the words that have come down shine in our words and our actions.
We must teach our children to know and understand them.
We must speak about what is good and holy within our homes
when we are working, when we are at play, when we lie down and when we get up.
Let the work of our hands speak of goodness.
Let it run in our blood and glow from our doors and windows.

We should love ourselves, for we are of G-d.
We should love our neighbors as ourselves.
We should love the stranger, for we were once strangers in the land of Egypt and have been strangers in all the lands of the world since.
Let love fill our hearts with its clear precious water.
Heaven and earth observe how we cherish or spoil our world.
Heaven and earth watch whether we choose life or choose death.
We must choose life so our children's children may live.
Be quiet and listen to the still small voice within that speaks in love.
Open to that voice, hear it, heed it and work for life.
Let us remember and strive to be good.
Let us remember to find what is holy within and without.

בְּקַיִם ◆ Eikev

DEUTERONOMY 7:12–11:25

Conditions for Life in the Land

PARASHAT EIKEV (“if” or “as a result of”) contains three speeches (7:12–8:20; 9:1–10:22; 11:1–25), all of which highlight the central position of the Promised Land in the relationship between God and Israel. The “good land” is the object of the divine oath to the ancestors (7:12–13; 8:1; 9:5; 11:9) and the goal reached after forty years of wandering in the wilderness (8:1–20). For Israel’s sake, God constantly keeps an eye on the land of “milk and honey,” which is so different from the land of Egypt (11:12).

Whereas the prior parashah presents categorical demands of loyalty and obedience (as in the Decalogue in 5:6–18 and the Sh’ma in 6:4–9), Eikev opens with a conditional clause that emphasizes that obedience brings blessings (“And if you do obey these rules . . .”). Throughout the parashah, Moses emphasizes that existence in the land is conditioned upon obedience, observance, and love—all of which are manifestations of Israel’s loyalty to God (8:1–20; 11:8–9, 13–25). This message remains central in Jewish life, as 11:21–31 are traditionally recited twice daily as the second paragraph of the Sh’ma, and the same passage is inserted in the mezuzah and in t’fillin.

This parashah mentions women explicitly only a few times. One of the blessings promised if the people follow God’s teachings is the absence of infertile women and men (7:14). A later passage extolling God’s merits mentions that God “upholds the cause of . . . the widow” (10:18). As divine ruler (see at 10:17), God’s role is to defend and provide for the vulnerable members of society, including widows—a frequent topic of concern in Deuteronomy.

The Promised Land has a central place in the relationship between God and Israel.

With regard to this parashah’s use of feminine imagery, one verse open to interpretation is the analogy comparing the way God disciplines Israel to the actions of a human parent (8:5). Does the masculine language of this verse refer specifically to a father and son, or, more inclusively, to the way that either parent treats a daughter or son? (See further at 8:5.)

—Dalit Rom-Shiloni

Outline—

I. FAITHFULNESS TO THE COVENANT BY GOD AND ISRAEL (7:12–8:20)

- A. Blessings and possession of the land (7:12–26)
- B. Call to observe and remember, remember and observe (8:1–20)

II. PRINCIPLES OF REVERENCE

What Does God Demand of You? (9:1–10:22)

- A. Possession of the land by a stiff-necked people (9:1–6)
- B. Retrospective of wilderness sins (9:7–24)
- C. Reaffirmation that Israel is God's people (9:25–10:11)
- D. Call for reverence, obedience, love, and worship (10:12–22)

III. OCCUPATION OF THE LAND AS DIVINE REWARD OR PUNISHMENT (11:1–25)

- A. Past lessons as motivations for future actions (vv. 1–9)
- B. Special qualities of the land and incentives to obey God (vv. 10–21)
- C. Victory and territory as rewards for obedience (vv. 22–25)

7:12

And if you do obey these rules and observe them carefully, your God יהוה will maintain faithfully for you the covenant made on oath with

12 וְהִיא | עַקְבָ תְשִׁמְעֹן אֶת הַמִּשְׁפָטִים
הָאֱלֹהִים וְשִׁמְרָתֵם וְעֲשִׂיתֶם אֶתְם וְשִׁמְרָתֵם
יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ לְכָאֶת-הַבְּרִית וְאֶת-הַחֻסְדָ

Faithfulness to the Covenant by God and Israel

(7:12–8:20)

The first speech in this parashah binds together two distinct passages. The first (7:12–26) concentrates on God's loyalty to the covenant and blessings for Israel. The second (8:1–20) calls Israel to bless God and accentuates the importance of recognition, remembrance, and obedience to God. These two sections are linked through the repetition of the word eikev and of the verb sh-m-a ("obey" or "heed," literally "hear") in the unit's first and last verses, which also frames this unit within a literary structure known as an inclusio. In 7:12, eikev tishm'un ("if you do obey") introduces a list of blessings; in 8:20, eikev lo tishm'un ("because you did not heed") closes the speech with an exhortation about disobedience. Note that these two verses (and the start of the second section, 8:1) speak to the people in the second-person plural, whereas the body of the speech addresses the people overwhelmingly in the singular, thus particularizing its message to each individual.

BLESSINGS AND POSSESSION OF THE LAND (7:12–26)

Verse 12 presents God's faithfulness to the covenant as a conditional response to the people's obedience. God's kindness manifests itself in the blessings elaborated on in this section, which concern the fertility of people, agricultural products, and animals, as well as political dominance over other peoples (see also 15:6; 26:19; Genesis 12:2–3).

12. faithfully. Heb. chesed. In this verse, chesed and b'rit (covenant) form a hendiadys (a compound expression for one idea), thus demonstrating that God shows kindness through God's faithfulness to the covenant with the ancestors and to the Sinai covenant. The word chesed, when used for human relationships, connotes an exceptional good deed done by one toward another, usually with the explicit expectation of an equivalent act in return (for example, Genesis 20:13; 21:23; I Samuel 20:8; II Samuel 2:5). God's deeds of chesed include acts of strength, victory, salvation, justice, righteousness, and mercy. In all these ways, in fulfillment of the covenantal relationship, God intervenes

- God seeks redress for widows, not out of sympathy but out of a concern for justice.

ANOTHER VIEW ► II08

- The Torah's corporeal imagery hints at the potentiality of our bodies to experience God.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► III0

- The Rabbis record the seven tasks expected of a wife, including the accompanying rituals.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► III08

- Nine stars / and not one moon / around me / empress / of imagined fertility.

VOICES ► III2

your fathers: ¹³[God] will favor you and bless you and multiply you—blessing your issue from the womb and your produce from the soil, your new grain and wine and oil, your calving from the herd and your lambing from the flock, in the land sworn to your fathers to be assigned to you. ¹⁴You shall be blessed above all other peoples: there shall be no sterile male or female among you or among your livestock. ¹⁵יְהוָה will ward off from you all sickness; [God] will not bring upon you any of the dreadful

אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע לְאַבְתֵּיכֶם: ¹³ וְאַהֲבָכְךָ וּבְרָכֶךָ
וְהַרְבֶּכָךְ וּבְרָכֶךָ פְּרִי־כֻּתְנָה וּפְרִי־אַדְמָתָךְ דְּגַנְנָה
וְתִירְשָׁה וַיַּצְחַרְךָ שְׁגַרְאַלְפִּיר וְעַשְׂתָּרוֹת
צָאנָךְ עַל הָאָדָמָה אֲשֶׁר־נִשְׁבַּע לְאַבְתֵּיכֶם
לְתַתְתָּ לְךָ: ¹⁴ בָּרוּךְ תִּהְיוֹת מִכְלִיחָעָם
לְאַיִתְתֵּיהֶם בְּכָל־עָקָר וּבְקָרָה וּבְבָהָמָתָךְ:
¹⁵ וְהַסִּיר יְהוָה מִמֶּךָ פֶּלְחָלִי וּכְלִמְדָיו

on behalf of individuals and of the people Israel, showing God's loyalty and loving-kindness. (See at 5:9 for a discussion of how Deuteronomy and other biblical passages use marriage as a metaphor for the covenantal relationship between God and Israel.)

fathers. Why is avot translated here as “fathers” (also 7:13; 8:1, 18; 9:5) but elsewhere as “ancestors” (8:3, 16; 10:15)? Translator David Stein explains that this term can have either a male-only or an inclusive meaning, depending on context. He argues that in a verse like this, the noun refers specifically to the patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob), those with whom God formed a covenant in their capacity as (male) heads of their corporate households. It goes without saying that each patriarch represents the entire household, and that God’s covenant applies to all its members—women and men alike (“Methodology,” The Torah: Documentation for the Revised Edition, 2005, p. 6). Elsewhere, as in 8:3, the surrounding context makes the gender-inclusive sense of the term clear.

13. [God] will favor. Heb. ahav (literally “love”). Usually, the people are commanded to “love” God (as in 6:5; 11:1); but here the verb designates God’s response to Israel (also 4:37; 10:15; 23:6). The composer(s) of Deuteronomy have borrowed this term from the ancient Near Eastern political sphere of suzerain-vassal relationships, applying it to the Israelite theological sphere of the relationship between God and the people. The people illustrate their love through their loyalty as subjects (vassals) to God; and God (like a suzerain or ruler) demonstrates love to the people through benevolent acts of chesed (see at v. 12).

issue from the womb. Heb. pri beten (literally “fruit of the belly”), an expression that uses agricultural production as a metaphor for children (so also in reference to animal offspring; see 28:4, 51; 30:9). The noun beten alone commonly refers to the womb, and thus to female fertility and motherhood (as in Genesis 25:23–24; 30:2). Yet here, in the context of a list of agricultural products and possessions that in the biblical world were understood to be the economic responsibility of the male head of the household, the phrase “your pri beten” most likely designates his descendants (so also 28:4, 11, 18, 53; 30:9; see Micah 6:7; Psalm 132:11).

14. no sterile male or female. This stands out as the only reference to male infertility in the Bible, in contrast to the usual focus—female sterility (compare Exodus 23:26). The Bible repeatedly emphasizes the importance of human fertility, as seen in the plights of Sarah (Genesis 11–21), Rachel (Genesis 30), and Hannah (I Samuel 1), all of whom suffer because they are infertile or “barren.” It appears that Ruth’s first husband may be infertile, for they are married for ten years before he dies without having children (Ruth 1:4–5); yet when Ruth marries Boaz, she conceives and bears a son (4:13). (For more on ancient approaches to infertility, see Noach, Another View, p. 53.) diseases of Egypt, about which you know, but will inflict them upon all your enemies.

¹⁶You shall destroy all the peoples that your God יְהוָה delivers to you, showing them no pity. And you shall not worship their gods, for that would be a snare to you. ¹⁷Should you say to yourselves, “These nations are more numerous than we; how can we dispossess them?” ¹⁸You need have no fear of them. You have but to bear in mind what your God יְהוָה did to Pharaoh and all the Egyptians: ¹⁹the wondrous acts that you saw with your own eyes, the signs and the portents, the mighty hand, and the outstretched arm by which your God יְהוָה liberated you. Thus will your God יְהוָה do to all the peoples you now fear. ²⁰Your God יְהוָה will also send a plague against them, until those who are left in hiding perish before you. ²¹Do not stand in dread of them, for your God יְהוָה is in your midst, a great and awesome God.

²²Your God יְהוָה will dislodge those peoples before you little by little; you will not be able to put an end to them at once, else the wild beasts would multiply to your hurt. ²³Your God יְהוָה will deliver them up to you, throwing them into utter panic until they are wiped out. ²⁴[God] will deliver their kings into your hand, and you shall obliterate their name from under the heavens; no one shall stand up to you, until you have wiped them out.

17–26. This passage elaborates on the three clauses of v. 16 (“You shall destroy . . . showing them no pity . . . you shall not worship”). First, vv. 17–21 depict the projected destruction of the Canaanite peoples as a miraculous action, analogous to God’s wondrous acts against the Egyptians. Second, vv. 22–24 assure the Israelites that the occupation will entail a series of military actions in which God will gradually enable the invaders to destroy the local peoples. Third, vv. 25–26 focus on the dangers of personal and cultural-religious connections between Israelites and Canaanites.

מִצְרַיִם הָרֻעִים אֲשֶׁר יָדַעַת לֹא יִשְׁׁמַם בָּךְ
וַיִּתְּנַנֵּם בְּכָל-שְׂנָאִיךְ:

¹⁶ וְאָכַלְתָּ אֶת-כָּל-הָעָמִים אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ לְא-תִּחְזֹס עִינֶךָ עַלְيָהֶם
וְלֹא תִּعְבֹּד אֶת-אֱלֹהִים כִּי-מוֹקֵשׁ הוּא
לְךָ: ס ¹⁷ בַּיּוֹם בְּלִבְבָּשׂ רְבִים הָגּוּם
הָאֱלֹהָה מִמְּנֵי אֵיכָה אָוֶל לְהֹרִישָׁם: ¹⁸ לֹא
תִּירְאָ מֵהֶם זָכָר תִּזְפֶּר אֶת אַשְׁר-עָשָׂה
יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לְפִרְעָה וּלְכָל-מִצְרִים:
¹⁹ הַמְּסֹתָּה הַגְּדוּלָה אֲשֶׁר-רוֹאָו עִינֵּיךְ
וְהַאֲתָת וְהַמְּפֹתִים וְהַיּוֹדָה וְהַזְּרַע
הַגְּטוּיה אֲשֶׁר הַזָּאָר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ
בְּנִיעָשָׂה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לְכָל-הָעָמִים
²⁰ אֲשֶׁר-אַתָּה יָרָא מִפְנֵיכֶם: וְגַם אַתָּה
הַצְּרִעָה יְשַׁלֵּחַ וְהַזָּהָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בָּם עַד-אָבֶד
הַנְּשָׁאָרִים וְהַנְּסָטָרִים מִפְנֵיכֶם: ²¹ לֹא תַּעֲרֵץ
מִפְנֵיכֶם קַיִם יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בְּקַרְבָּךְ אֶל גְּדוּלָה וּנוֹרָא:

²² וְנוֹשֵׁל יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ אֶת-הָגּוּם הָאֵל
מִפְנֵיכֶם מַעַט מַעַט לֹא תִּזְבְּלֵל בְּלֹתָם מִתְּהִרְבֵּת
פְּנִיתְרָבָה עַלְיָךְ חַיָּת הַשְּׁדָה: ²³ וַיִּתְּ�נֵם
יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לְפִנֵּיכֶם וְהַמְּטַמֵּה גָּדְלָה
עַד הַשְּׁמָדָה: ²⁴ וַיִּתְּנַנֵּן מַלְכֵיכֶם בִּירְכָּה
וְהַאֲבִדָת אֶת-שְׁמָם מִתְחַת הַשְׁמִינִים לֹא-
וַיִּתְּאַבֵּב אִישׁ בְּפִנֵּיכֶם עַד הַשְׁמִינִי אֶתְכֶם:

24. you shall obliterate their name. Elimination of the name serves as a repeated curse in the Bible and extra-biblical sources. Since a name constitutes a person’s identity, not having a name signals non-existence. In a national context, obliteration of the name signifies total extinction of the enemy, beyond their physical termination. (See machah shem, “to blot out a name,” in 9:14; 25:19; 29:19; and Psalm 83:5.)

until you have wiped them out. The various verbs used in vv. 20–24 (like “perish,” “dislodge,” “wiped out,” “obliterated”) represent Deuteron-

²⁵You shall consign the images of their gods to the fire; you shall not covet the silver and gold on them and keep it for yourselves, lest you be ensnared thereby; for that is abhorrent to your God יהוה. ²⁶You must not bring an abhorrent thing into your house, or you will be proscribed like it; you must reject it as abominable and abhorrent, for it is proscribed.

8 You shall faithfully observe all the Instruction that I enjoin upon you today, that you may thrive and increase and be able to possess the land that יהוה promised on oath to your fathers.

Remember the long way that your God יהוה has made you travel in the wilderness these past forty years, in order to test you by hardships to learn what was in your hearts: whether you would keep the divine commandments or not. ³[God] subjected you to the hardship of hunger and then gave you manna to eat, which neither you nor your omy's concept of the ban or cherem (see v. 26), signifying the total annihilation of the Canaanite population. This language may reflect rhetoric about Israel's total possession of the land and not an actual policy or historical fact. Texts such as Judges 1:21–33 and I Kings 9:20–21, along with archeological evidence, indicate that such a ban was never in fact activated. (See also at 2:34; 7:1–5; 12:29–31; 31:16.)

25. abhorrent to your God. יהוה to'evat YHVH, a phrase that occurs repeatedly in Deuteronomy. It uses this expression, or the word to'evah alone, to denote activities that God detests, usually in the religious sphere: idolatry (as here; 13:15; 17:4); certain sacrifices (17:1; 23:19); ritually impure foods (14:3); putting on the apparel of the other sex (22:5); and certain marriages (24:4; compare at Leviticus 18:22). In one instance, Deuteronomy applies the term in the social-moral sphere (namely, falsification of weights and measures, 25:13–16).

²⁵ פָּסִילֵי אֱלֹהִים תִּשְׁרַפְתֶּן בְּאֹשׁ לֹא־
תִּחְמֹד בְּסֻף וְזַהֲבָעֵלִים וְלִקְחַת לֹא־פָנִים
תַּנְקַשׁ בָּו כִּי תְועַבָּת יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם הוּא:
²⁶ וְלֹא־תַּבְּרִיא תְּועַבָּה אֶל־בִּיתְךָ וְהַיִתְּ
חָרֵם בְּמַהּוּ שְׂקָצָן | תְּשַׁקְצָנוּ וְתַּעֲבֵב | תְּמַעֲבָנוּ
כִּי־חָרֵם הוּא: פ

כִּי־הַמְּצֻנָּה אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצּוֹרֵה הַיּוֹם
תְּשִׁמְרוּן לְעַשׂוֹת לְמַעַן תְּחִיוֹן וּרְבִיתָם
וּבְאָתֶם וּרְשָׁתֶם אֶת־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־גַּשְׁבָּה
יְהוָה לְאָבָתֵיכֶם:

² וּבָרְתָּ אֶת־כָּל־הָרָךְ אֲשֶׁר הַוְּלִיכָּר יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֵיכֶם זֶה אֲרַבְעִים שָׁנָה בְּמִדְבָּר לְמַעַן
עֲנָתָךְ לְנַטְחָל לְדֹעַת אֶת־אָשֶׁר בְּלִבְנֵךְ
הַתְּשִׁמָּוֹן מִצּוֹתָיו מִצּוֹרְיוֹ אִם־לֹא: ³ וַיַּעֲנַךְ
וַיַּרְעַבְךָ וַיַּאֲכַלְךָ אֶת־הַמּוֹן אֲשֶׁר לֹא־יָדַעַת

CALL TO OBSERVE AND REMEMBER, REMEMBER AND OBSERVE (8:1–20)

This speech is built on two antonyms: remember (z-ch-r) and forget (sh-ch-ch). Verses 2–10 call upon the people to remember two of God's major gifts: guiding the people through the hardships of the wilderness (vv. 2–5), and giving them the good land (vv. 7–10). Then, vv. 11–20 warn the people that once they settle in the land, human arrogance and idol worship—the results of forgetting God—will lead to annihilation (see also 6:10–15; 11:13–17; 32:13–18).

2–3. in order to test you . . . in order to teach you. This passage presents the hardships in the wilderness not as a punishment (compare Numbers 14:26–38) but as having two other purposes. The first reason was for God to gain definitive knowledge concerning Israel's faith and behavior under stressful circumstances (see also Exodus 15:25; 16:4); ancestors had ever known, in order to teach you that a human being does not live on bread alone, but that one may live on anything that יהוה decrees.⁴ The clothes upon you did not wear out, nor did your feet swell these forty years.⁵ Bear in mind that your God disciplines you just as a householder disciplines his son.⁶ Therefore keep the commandments of your God: walk in God's ways and show reverence.

⁷For your God יהוה is bringing you into a good land, a land with streams and springs and fountains issuing from plain and hill; ⁸a land of wheat and barley, of vines, figs, and pomegranates, a land of olive trees and honey; ⁹a land where you may eat food without stint, where you will lack nothing; a

ולא יִדְעֻן אֲבָתֵּיךְ לְמַעַן הַדְּרִיכָּךְ בַּיְלָא
עַל-הַלְּחֵם לְבָדוֹ יִחַיָּה הָאָדָם בַּיְלָא-כָּל-
מוֹעֵזָא פִּי-יְהוָה יִחַיָּה הָאָדָם: ⁴ שְׁמַלְתָּךְ
לֹא בְּלִתְהָ מַעַלְיךְ וּרְגַלְךְ לֹא בָּצָקָה זֶה
אֲרַבְּעִים שָׁנָה: ⁵ וַיַּדְעַת עַם-לְבָבָךְ בַּיְלָא
בְּאָשָׁר יוֹסֵר אִישׁ אֶת-בְּנוֹ יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ
מִינְשָׁךְ: ⁶ וְשִׁמְרָתְךָ אֶת-מִצְוֹת יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ
לְלַכְתָּ בְּדָרְכֵיכְיוֹ וְלִירָאָה אֲתָּה:

⁷בַּיְלָא יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ מִבְּאָךְ אֶל-אֶרְץ טוֹבָה
אֶרְץ נְחָלִי מִים עֲנָנוֹת וּתְהִמְתָּר יְצָאִים
בְּבִקְעָה וּבָהָר: ⁸ אֶרְץ חַטָּה וִשְׁעָרָה וְגַפְן
וִתְּאֵנה וּרְמֹן אֶרְץ-זִית שְׂמָן וְדָבָשׂ: ⁹ אֶרְץ
אֲשֶׁר לֹא בְּמִסְפְּנַת תְּאַכְלָבָה לְחֵם לֹאthis notion of a trial implies that God is not omniscient (see also Genesis 22:1–12; Deuteronomy 13:4; Judges 2:22; 3:4; Job 1:8–12). The second reason is didactic in nature: having completed the journey, only in retrospect will the people acknowledge that the hunger and the manna signify their dependence on God.

ancestors. See at 7:12.

5. householder...son. [Heb. ish...ben. This translation understands the noun ish (traditionally “a man”) as referring to one who represents a group. Here, the group is by default a household, the basic social and economic unit in the ancient Near East; and the head of a household, in turn, was presumably male. Responsible for his corporate household’s continuity, a householder characteristically groomed his heir—that is, his son—to take over his father’s position of responsibility (The Contemporary Torah, 2006, pp. 385, 402).

Alternatively, one can translate this verse’s simile in a gender-neutral sense: “as a parent disciplines a child.” The book of Proverbs provides support for a gender-inclusive interpretation of the language in this verse. The role of both parents in educating a child is apparent in Proverbs 1:8, which urges the reader both to obey the father’s musar (discipline) and not to forsake the mother’s torah (instruction). (See also Proverbs 6:20).

Regardless of whether or not the imagery is read gender inclusively, God’s perceived gender is not at issue. Drawing an analogy from parental discipline, this verse exalts divine chastisement coupled with care and affection (see Proverbs 19:18; 29:17). Compare at Deuteronomy 1:31. —Ed.]

7–10. In marked contrast to the wilderness (see Numbers 20:5), this passage depicts the Promised Land as a place of plenitude and prosperity—with water, abundant agricultural products, and natural resources. This description displays an elevated style: first, the phrase “good land” frames the passage (an inclusio), occurring at its beginning and end; and second, the symbolically complete number seven appears twice: the key word eretz (land) occurs seven times, and the list of agricultural species includes seven items (v. 8).

8. wheat and barley, of vines, figs, and pomegranates...olive trees and honey. Deuteronomy elsewhere (as in 7:13) categorizes the land’s produce via a triplet of agricultural staples: dagan (grain), tirosh (juice of the grapevine), and yitzhar (olive land whose rocks are iron and from whose hills you can mine copper.¹⁰ When you have eaten your fill, give thanks to your God יְהוָה for the good land given to you.

¹¹Take care lest you forget your God and fail to keep the divine commandments, rules, and laws which I enjoin upon you today.¹² When you have eaten your fill, and have built fine houses to live in,¹³ and your herds and flocks have multiplied, and your silver and gold have increased, and everything you own has prospered,¹⁴ beware lest your heart grow haughty and you forget your God—יהוָה who freed you from the land of Egypt, the house of bondage;¹⁵ who led you through the great and terrible wilderness with its seraph serpents and scorpions, a parched land with no water in it, who brought forth water for you from the flinty rock;¹⁶ who fed you in the wilderness with manna, which your ancestors had never known, in order to test you by hardships only to benefit you in the end—¹⁷ and you say to yourselves, “My own power and the might of my own hand have won this wealth for me.”¹⁸ Remember that it is your God יְהוָה who gives you the power to get wealth, in fulfillment of the covenant made on oath with your fathers, as is still the case.

¹⁹If you do forget your God יְהוָה and follow other gods to serve them or bow down to them, I warn you this day that you shall certainly perish;²⁰ like the nations that יְהוָה will cause to perish before you, so shall you perish—because you did not heed your God יְהוָה.

oil). The chain of trees in this verse suggests that the last item refers not to bee honey but rather a similar food made from mashed palm-dates (see also at Numbers 13:27).

16. in order to test you by hardships only to benefit you. In contrast to v. 2, this verse presents the trial as an experience that would ultimately benefit the obedient people (a common theme in

תִּחְסֹר בְּלַב בָּהּ אֶרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אָבִנֵּיה֮ בְּרוֹאֵת
וּמְהֻרְרִיה֮ תִּחְצֹב נְחַשְׁתָּה֮: ¹⁰ וְאַכְלָתָהּ
וּשְׁבָעַת וּבָרְכָת אֶת-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ עַל-הָאָרֶץ הַטְּבָה אֲשֶׁר נְתָנוּ לְךָ:

¹¹ הַשְׁמָר לְךָ פָּנִיתְשָׁבָח אֶת-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ
לְבָלְתִּי שְׁמָר מִצְוֹתָיו וּמִשְׁפָטָיו וּחֲקָתָיו
אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצּוֹק הַיּוֹם: ¹² פָּנִיתְאַכְלָל
וּשְׁבָעַת וּבְתִים טְבִים תְּבַנֵּה וִישְׁבַתָּה:
¹³ וּבְקָרְבָּן וְצָנָאָר יְרֵבָן וּכְסָף וּזְהָבָב
לְךָ וּכְלָא אֲשֶׁר-לְךָ יְרֵבָה: ¹⁴ וְנָם לְבָבֶךָ
וּשְׁבָחָת אֶת-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ הַמּוֹצִיאָךְ
מִאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם מִבֵּית עֲבָדִים: ¹⁵ הַמּוֹלִיכָךְ
בְּמִדְבָּר | הַגָּדוֹל וְהַגָּדוֹל נְחַש | שְׁרָך וּעְקָרְבָּן
וּצְמָאוֹן אֲשֶׁר אַיִן-מִם הַמּוֹצִיאָךְ לְךָ מִינִם
מִצּוֹר הַחַלְמִישׁ: ¹⁶ הַמּוֹאָכְלָךְ מִן בְּמִדְבָּר
אֲשֶׁר לְאַיְדָיוֹן אַבְתָּיךְ לְמַעַן עַבְתָּךְ וּלְמַעַן
נְסָתָה לְהִיטְבָּךְ בְּאַחֲרִיתְךָ: ¹⁷ וְאִמְרָתָךְ
בְּלִבְבָּךְ כְּחֵל וּעְצָם יְדֵי עֲשָׂה לְךָ אֶת-הַתְּחִיל הַזֶּה: ¹⁸ וְזָכְרָת אֶת-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ כִּי
הָוָא הַנְּתָן לְךָ בְּכָח לְעֹשָׂות חִיל לְמַעַן
הַקִּים אֶת-בְּרִיתְךָ אֲשֶׁר-גַּשְׁבָּע לְאַבְתָּיךְ
בַּיּוֹם הַזֶּה: ¹⁹ פ

¹⁹ וְהִי אַמְּשָׁכָח תִּשְׁבַח אֶת-יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֵיךְ וְהַלְכָתָךְ אֶחָרֵי אֱלֹהִים אֶחָרִים
וּעֲבוֹדָתָם וּהַשְׁתְּחוּתָם לְהַם הַעֲדָתִי בְּכָמֶת
הַיּוֹם כִּי אָבֶד תָּאֶבֶד: ²⁰ בְּגָוֹיִם אֲשֶׁר
יְהוָה מְאֹבֵיד מִפְנִיכֶם בְּן תְּאֶבֶדָו עַקְבָּךְ לְאַ תְּשִׁמְעוֹן בְּקוֹל יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם: ²¹ פ wisdom literature, as seen in Psalm 37:37–38).

17–18. Because material success can bring pride and boastfulness, Moses reminds the people that God is the provider of power and success (see also Zechariah 4:6).

19. The Bible often connects human arrogance to idol worship, since idols are hand-made statues (as in 32:15–16; Isaiah 2:7–22; 44:9–20; Hosea 14:4).

9 Hear, O Israel! You are about to cross the Jordan to go in and dispossess nations greater and more populous than you: great cities with walls sky-high; ²a people great and tall, the Anakites, of whom you have knowledge; for you have heard it said, “Who can stand up to the children of Anak?” ³Know then this day that none other than your God יְהוָה is crossing at your head, a devouring fire; it is [God] who will wipe them out—subduing them before you, that you may quickly dispossess and destroy them, as יְהוָה promised you. ⁴And when your God יְהוָה has thrust them from your path, say not to yourselves, “יְהוָה has enabled us to possess this land because of our virtues”; it is rather because of the wickedness of those nations that יְהוָה is dispossessing them before you. ⁵It is not because of your virtues and your rectitude that you will be able to possess their country; but it is because of their wickedness that your God יְהוָה is dispossessing those nations before you, and in order to fulfill the oath that יְהוָה made to your fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

שְׁמֻעַן יִשְׂרָאֵל אַתָּה עֹבֵר הַיּוֹם אֶת־
הַיְرָחָן לְבָא לְרַשְׁת גּוֹיִם גָּדְלִים וּעֲצָמִים
מִפְּנֵךְ עָרִים גָּדוֹלָה וּבָכָרָה בְּשָׁמִים: ² עַמִּים
גָּדוֹלָה וְרַם בְּנֵי עֲנָקִים אֲשֶׁר אַתָּה יַדְעַת:
וְאַתָּה שְׁמֻעַת מַיִּם וַתִּצְאֶב לִפְנֵי בְּנֵי עֲנָק:
³ וַיַּדְעַת הַיּוֹם כִּי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ הוּא־הָעָבֵר
לִפְנֵיךְ אֲשֶׁר אֶכְלָה הָיוּא יְשִׁמְינִים וּהָוָא
יַכְנִיעַם לִפְנֵיךְ וְהַוְרַשְׁתָּם וְהַאֲבִרְתָּם מִתְּהָרֵךְ
בְּאֲשֶׁר דָּבָר יְהוָה לְךָ: ⁴ אֶל־תָּאמֹר בְּלִבְבָּךְ
בְּהַרְחֵף יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ אַתָּם | מִלְּפָנָךְ לְאָמֹר
בְּצִדְקָתִי הַבְּיאָנִי יְהוָה לְרַשְׁת אֶת־הָאָרֶץ
הַזֹּאת וּבְרִשְׁעַת הָגּוֹיִם הָאֱלֹהָה יְהוָה
מוֹרִישָׁם מִפְּנֵיךְ: ⁵ לֹא בְּצִדְקָתְךָ וּבְיִשְׁרָאֵל
לְבִבְבָּךְ אַתָּה בָּא לְרַשְׁת אֶת־אֶרְצָם כִּי
בְּרִשְׁעַת | הָגּוֹיִם הָאֱלֹהָה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶל
מוֹרִישָׁם מִפְּנֵיךְ וּלְמַעַן הַקִּים אֶת־הַדָּבָר
אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע יְהוָה לְאַבְתָּיךְ לְאֶבְרָהָם
לִיצְחָק וּלִיְּעָקֹב:

Principles of Reverence

WHAT DOES GOD DEMAND OF YOU?

(9:1–10:22)

Focusing on theological and ideological implications of dispossessing the Canaanite peoples, Moses' second speech repudiates thoughts of superiority—the idea that God gave Israel the land because of their righteousness. On the contrary, the Israelites have already proven their stubborn and rebellious behavior (9:6–24). Only because of Moses, who repeatedly prayed on the people's behalf (vv. 18, 25), did God forgo their annihilation and allow the journey to resume (10:10–11). In reply to the question “What does your God יְהוָה demand of you?” (10:12), this speech answers with four principles: reverence, obedience, love, and worship.

POSSESSION OF THE LAND BY A STIFF-NECKED PEOPLE (9:1–6)

Moses emphasizes that while the Canaanites' forthcoming defeat can be explained as retaliation for their wickedness (see Genesis 15:16), this does not mean that Israel's victory is due to their own virtues, nor is it a reward for their merits (compare 6:25; 24:13). Instead, God's loyalty to the oath to the ancestors is what maintains Israel's title to the land.

3. a devouring fire. This phrase transforms the allusion to the pillar of fire that guides the people during the wilderness wanderings (Exodus 13:21–22; 40:38; compare at Deuteronomy 4:24). This verse depicts God as a Warrior who will lead the people in battle as they conquer the land. (On the warrior metaphor, see further at 32:23; Exodus 14:14, 15:3; and Haazinu, Another View, p. 1265.)

⁶Know, then, that it is not for any virtue of yours that your God is giving you this good land to possess; for you are a stiffnecked people.
⁷Remember, never forget, how you provoked your God to anger in the wilderness: from the day that you left the land of Egypt until you reached this place, you have continued defiant toward YHWH.

⁸At Horeb you so provoked that was angry enough with you to have destroyed you.
⁹I had ascended the mountain to receive the tablets of stone, the Tablets of the Covenant that YHWH had made with you, and I stayed on the mountain forty days and forty nights, eating no bread and drinking no water.
¹⁰And YHWH gave me the two tablets of stone inscribed by the finger of God, with the exact words that had addressed to you on the mountain out of the fire on the day of the Assembly.

¹¹At the end of those forty days and forty nights, YHWH gave me the two tablets of stone, the Tablets of the Covenant.
¹²And said to me, “Hurry, go down from here at once, for the people whom you brought out of Egypt have acted wickedly; they have been quick to stray from the path that I enjoined upon them; they have made themselves a molten image.”
¹³YHWH further said to me, “I see that this is a stiffnecked people.
¹⁴Let Me alone and I will destroy them and blot out their name from under heaven, and I will make you a nation far more numerous than they.”

וַיֹּאמֶר פָּנִים לֹא בָּצְדָקָתְךָ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ נָתַן
 לְךָ אֶת-הָאָרֶץ הַטוֹבָה הַזֹּאת לְרִשְׁתָתְךָ בַּיּ
 עַמְּקָשָׁה-עֲרָף אַתָּה: ⁷ זֶכְרָה אֶל-תְּשִׁבָּח
 אֶת אָשְׁר-הַקְרָבָה אֶת-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ
 בַּמְּדֻבָּר לִמְנַדְּיוֹם אֲשֶׁר-יָצָאת | מִאָרֶץ
 מִצְרָיִם עַד-בָּאָכָם עַד-הַמָּקוֹם הַזֶּה מִמְּרִים
 הַיִּהְיֶם עַמִּיְהָוָה:
⁸ וּבְחַרְבַּת הַקְרָבָה אֶת-יְהוָה וַיַּתְאַגֵּפֵן יְהוָה
 בְּכֶם לְהַשְׁמִיד אֶתְכֶם: ⁹ בָּעַלְתִּי הַהָרָה
 לְקַחַת לוֹحֹת הָאָבִינֶט לְזַהַת הַבְּרִית אֲשֶׁר-
 בָּרָת יְהוָה עֲמָכֶם וְאָשֵׁב בְּהָר אַרְבָּעִים יוֹם
 וְאַרְבָּעִים לְיַלְלָה לְחַם לֹא אָכַלְתִּי וְמַיִם לֹא
 שְׂתִיתִי: ¹⁰ וַיְתַן יְהוָה אֲלֵי אֶת-שְׁנִי לוֹחֹת
 הָאָבִינֶט בְּתַבְבִּים בְּאַצְבָּעָאָלָהִים וּעֲלִיהָם
 בְּכָל-הַדְּבָרִים אֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר יְהוָה עֲמָכֶם בְּהָר
 מִתְוָה הָאָש בְּיּוֹם הַקָּל:
¹¹ וַיְהִי מִקְצֵץ אַרְבָּעִים יוֹם וְאַרְבָּעִים לַיְלָה
 נָתַן יְהוָה אֲלֵי אֶת-שְׁנִי לְחַזֵּת הָאָבִינֶט
 לְזַהַת הַבְּרִית: ¹² וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵי קְוֹם רְדֵךְ
 מַהְלָ מִזְהָ בַּיּ שְׁחַת עַמְּךָ אֲשֶׁר הַזְּצָאת
 מִמּוֹצְרִים סְרוּ מַהְרָ מִן-הַדָּרָךְ אֲשֶׁר צִוָּתֶם
 עֲשֹׂו לְהָם מִסְכָּה: ¹³ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵי
 לְאָמֵר רְאִיתִי אֶת-דָּעַם הַזֶּה וְהַנֶּה עַמִּיךָ
 קָשָׁה-עֲרָף הוּא: ¹⁴ הָרָף מִמְּנִי וְאַשְׁמִידָם
 וְאַמְתָּה אֶת-שְׁמָם מִתְּחוֹת חַשְׁמִים וְאַעֲשָׂה
 אָוֹתָךְ לְגֹזְעָצָום וְרַב מִמְנָךְ:

RETROSPECTIVE OF WILDERNESS SINS (9:7–24)

The verbal roots k-tz-f (“to provoke anger”) and m-r-h (“to be defiant”) serve as key words in this section, which recalls five sins that occurred in the wilderness: the Golden Calf incident (Exodus 32) and the sins at Taberah (Numbers 11:1–3), at Massah (Exodus 17:1–7), at Kibroth-hattaavah (Numbers 11:4–34), and at Kadesh-barnea (Numbers 14). This retrospective follows the journey from the establishment of the covenant in Horeb (called Sinai in Deuteronomy) to Kadesh, which designates the arrival at the border of the land (1:2, 19).

8. The accounts of the Golden Calf episode in Exodus 32 and Deuteronomy 9 both treat the “molten calf” as a case of idol worship rather than as an attempt to create a physical sign of God’s presence (on the nature of the sin, see at Exodus 32:1–6). However, the present retelling shows several differences in comparison to the Exodus version (see below).

¹⁵I started down the mountain, a mountain ablaze with fire, the two Tablets of the Covenant in my two hands. ¹⁶I saw how you had sinned against your God: you had made yourselves a molten calf; you had been quick to stray from the path that had enjoined upon you. ¹⁷Thereupon I gripped the two tablets and flung them away with both my hands, smashing them before your eyes. ¹⁸I threw myself down before יְהוָה —eating no bread and drinking no water forty days and forty nights, as before—because of the great wrong you had committed, doing what displeased and vexed יְהוָה. ¹⁹For I was in dread of the fierce anger against you which moved יְהוָה to wipe you out. And that time, too, gave heed to me.—²⁰Moreover, יְהוָה was angry enough with Aaron to have destroyed him; so I also interceded for Aaron at that time.—²¹As for that sinful thing you had made, the calf, I took it and put it to the fire; I broke it to bits and ground it thoroughly until it was fine as dust, and I threw its dust into the brook that comes down from the mountain.

²²Again you provoked יְהוָה at Taberah, and at Massah, and at Kibroth-hattaavah.

²³And when יְהוָה sent you on from Kadesh-barnea, saying, “Go up and take possession of the land that I am giving you,” you flouted the command of your God—whom you did not put your trust in nor obey.

²⁴As long as I have known you, you have been defiant toward יְהוָה.

18. I threw myself down before יְהוָה. Moses recalls three times in which he prayed on behalf of the people for forty days and nights (9:18, 25–29; 10:10–11). In contrast, Exodus mentions only one prayer (32:11–13) and connects the fasting only to the second tablets (34:28). In his prayers on the people’s behalf, Moses establishes a model of the prophet as intercessor between God and the people.

¹⁵וְאַפְןִי וְאֶרְלִי מִן־הָהָר וְהָקָר בְּעֵר בְּאַשׁ
וְשַׁנִּי לִיחַת הַבְּרִית עַל שְׁתֵּי יִהְיָה: ¹⁶וְאֶרְאָא
וְהַגָּה חֲטֹאתְכֶם לִיהָוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם עֲשִׂיתֶם
לְכֶם עַגְلָמִסְכָּה סְרִתֶּם מִנְחָה דָּרֶךְ
אֲשֶׁר־צִוָּה יְהָוָה אֲתֶכְם: ¹⁷וְאֶתְפְּשָׁ בְּשִׁנִּי
הַלְּחָת וְאַשְׁלִיכָם מִעַל שְׁתֵּי יִהְיָה וְאַשְׁבָּרָם
לְעִינֵיכֶם: ¹⁸וְאֶתְגַּפֵּל לִפְנֵי יְהָוָה כֶּרֶאשָׁנָה
אֲרַבְעִים יוֹם וְאֲרַבְעִים לַיְלָה לְחַם לֹא
אֲכַלְתִּי וּמִים לֹא שְׁתִיתִי עַל בְּלַחְטָאתְכֶם
אֲשֶׁר חֲטֹאתְכֶם לְעַשְׂוֹת הַרְעָה בְּעֵינֵי יְהָוָה
לְהַכְּעִיסָוּ: ¹⁹כִּי יָגַרְתִּי מִפְנֵי הָאָקָד וְהַחֲמָה
אֲשֶׁר קָצַף יְהָוָה עַליכָם לְהַשְׁמִיד אֲתֶכְם
וַיִּשְׁמַע יְהָוָה אֵלֵי גַם בְּפֶעַם הַהְוָא:
²⁰וּבְאֶחָרֶن הַתְּאַגֵּף יְהָוָה מִאָד לְהַשְׁמִיד
וְאֶתְפְּלָל גַם־בְּعֵד אֶחָרֶן בְּעֵת הַהְוָא:
²¹וְאֶתְחַטָּאתְכֶם אֲשֶׁר־עֲשִׂיתֶם אֶת־הָעָגֵל
לְקַחְתִּי וְאַשְׁרַפֵּת אֶתְךָ בְּאַשׁ וְאֶבְתֵּת אֶתְךָ
טְחוֹן הַיְטָב עַד אֲשֶׁר־דָק לְעַפְר וְאַשְׁלֵל
אֶת־עַפְרוֹ אֶל־הַגְּנָחֶל הַיְמָר מִנְחָה:

²²וּבְתִבְעֵרֶת וּבִמְשָׁה וּבְקַבְרָת הַתְּאֵוֹה
מִקְצָפִים הַיִּתְמַמְּמִים אֶת־יְהָוָה:
²³וּבְשַׁלֵּח יְהָוָה אֲתֶכְם מִקְדֵש בְּרִגְעָל
לְאָמֶר עַל וּרְשֹׁו אֶת־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר נָתַתִי
לְכֶם וּתְמַרְיו אֶת־פִי יְהָוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וְלֹא
הָאמַנְתֶם לוֹ וְלֹא שְׁמַעַתְם בְּקָלוֹ:

²⁴מִמְרָאִים הַיִּתְמַמְּמִים עִם־יְהָוָה מִיּוֹם דָעַתִי
אֲתֶכְם:

20. יְהָוָה was angry enough with Aaron to have destroyed him. In Exodus 32, Aaron takes center stage as the major character as well as the major culprit. In contrast, this passage minimizes Aaron’s role to this one verse and focuses instead on God’s anger and Moses’ role as intercessor, this time for Aaron’s benefit.

²⁵When I lay prostrate before יְהוָה those forty days and forty nights, because יְהוָה was determined to destroy you,²⁶I prayed to יְהוָה and said, “O lord יְהוָה, do not annihilate Your very own people, whom You redeemed in Your majesty and whom You freed from Egypt with a mighty hand.²⁷Give thought to Your servants Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and pay no heed to the stubbornness of this people, its wickedness, and its sinfulness.²⁸Else the country from which You freed us will say, ‘It was because יְהוָה was powerless to bring them into the land promised to them, and because of having rejected them, that [their god] brought them out to have them die in the wilderness.’²⁹Yet they are Your very own people, whom You freed with Your great might and Your outstretched arm.”

10 Thereupon said to me, “Carve out two tablets of stone like the first, and come up to Me on the mountain; and make an ark of wood.²I will inscribe on the tablets the commandments that were on the first tablets that you smashed, and you shall deposit them in the ark.”

³I made an ark of acacia wood and carved out two tablets of stone like the first; I took the two tablets with me and went up the mountain.⁴After inscribing on the tablets the same text as on the first—the Ten Commandments that addressed to you on the mountain out of the fire on the day of the Assembly—יהוָה gave them to me.⁵Then I left

²⁵וְאַתְּנִפְלֵל לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֶת אֲרָבָיעִים הַיּוֹם וְאַתְּ-אֲרָבָיעִים הַלִּילָה אֲשֶׁר הַתִּנְפְּלָתִי בֵּין אָמֶר יְהוָה לְהַשְׁמִיד אֶתְכֶם: ²⁶וְאַתְּנִפְלֵל אֶל-יְהוָה וְאָמֶר אֶל-נִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים אֶל-תְּשַׁחַת עַמֶּךָ וְנַחֲלַתְךָ אֲשֶׁר פְּרִית בְּגָדָלֶךָ אֲשֶׁר-הָזָעָת מִמּוֹצָרִים בַּיּוֹם חֲזָקָה: ²⁷זָכָר לְעִדִּיך לְאָבָרָתִים לִיצָחָק וְלִיעַקְבָּר אֶל-תְּפַנֵּן אֶל-קָשֵׁל הַעַם הַזֶּה וְאֶל-רְשָׁעָיו וְאֶל-חֶטְאָתוֹ: ²⁸פָּנֵי-אָמָרוּ הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר הַזָּעָן מִשְׁמֶן מִבְּלִיל יְכַלֵּת יְהוָה לְהַבִּיאָם אֶל-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר-דִּבֶּר לָהֶם וּמְשֻׁנְאָתָהוּ אָוֹתָם הַזָּעִים לְהַמְּתָם בְּמִדְבָּר: ²⁹וְהָם עַמֶּךָ וְנַחֲלַתְךָ אֲשֶׁר הַזְּאָתָב בְּכַחַק הַגָּדוֹל וּבְזָעַק הַגְּטוּרָה: ב כְּבִיאַת הַהְוָא אָמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֵי פְּסָל-לְךָ שְׁנִינְלוֹחַת אֲבָנִים בְּרִאשָׁנִים וּעַלְהָ אֱלֵי הַהְרָה וְעַשֵּׂית לְקָרְבָּן עַז: ² וְאַכְתֵּב עַל- הַלְּחָות אֶת-הַדְּבָרִים אֲשֶׁר הִיּוּ עַל-הַלְּחָות הָרָאשָׁנִים אֲשֶׁר שְׁבָרָת וּשְׁמַתָּם בְּאַרְזָן: ³ וְאַעֲשֵׂ אַרְזָן עַזִּי שְׁטִים וְאַפְּטֵל שְׁנִינְלוֹחָות אֲבָנִים בְּרִאשָׁנִים וְאַעֲלֵ הַהְרָה וְשְׁנִינְיַי הַלְּחָות בִּירִי: ⁴ וְיִכְתֵּב עַל-הַלְּחָות בְּמִכְתָּב הָרָאשָׁן אֶת עַשְׂרַת הַדְּבָרִים אֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר יְהוָה אֲלֵיכֶם בְּהָרָ מְתוּךְ הָאָשׁ בְּיוֹם הַקּוֹל וַיְתַנֵּם יְהוָה אֱלֵי: ⁵ וְאַפְּנֵן וְאַרְכֵל

REAFFIRMATION THAT ISRAEL IS GOD'S PEOPLE (9:25–10:11)

In this section, Moses recounts the aftermath of the Golden Calf incident—how God refrained from the express intention to destroy Israel in the wilderness, restored the covenant through the second set of tablets, and continued to lead them to the Promised Land (10:6–11). In contrast to God's previous destructive intentions (9:11–14), this section reaffirms God's commitments to the people and recounts the deeds performed to fulfill those promises.

26–29. I prayed to יְהוָה. Moses presents three main reasons to refrain from destroying Israel: God's own efforts (9:26, 29), God's people (9:27), and God's enemies—the Egyptians (9:28).

27. In Exodus 32:13, Moses invokes the patriarchs in order to call to mind God's loyalty to the earlier promises. Here, he likewise mentions Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but for a different purpose: to set up a contrast with their sinful descendants.

and went down from the mountain, and I deposited the tablets in the ark that I had made, where they still are, as יְהוָה had commanded me.

⁶From Beeroth-bene-jaakan the Israelites marched to Moserah. Aaron died there and was buried there; and his son Eleazar became priest in his stead. ⁷From there they marched to Gudgod, and from Gudgod to Jotbath, a region of running brooks.

⁸At that time set apart the tribe of Levi to carry the Ark of יְהוָה's Covenant, to stand in attendance upon יְהוָה, and to bless in God's name, as is still the case. ⁹That is why Levi has received no hereditary portion along with its kin: יְהוָה is its portion, as your God יְהוָה spoke concerning it.

¹⁰I had stayed on the mountain, as I did the first time, forty days and forty nights; and heeded me once again: יְהוָה agreed not to destroy you.

¹¹And said to me, "Up, resume the march at the head of the people, that they may go in and possess the land that I swore to their fathers to give them."

מִן־הָהָר וְאַשְׁם אֶת־הַלְּחָתָב אֲרֹן אֲשֶׁר
עֲשִׂיתִי וַיְהִי שֵׁם כַּאֲשֶׁר צִוָּנִי יְהוָה:
וּבְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל נִסְעָו מִבְּאַרְתָּה בְּנֵי־עֲקֹן
מוֹסֵרָה שֵׁם מִתְּאֵרֶן וַיַּקְרֵר שֵׁם וַיַּכְהֵן
אַלְעֹזֶר בֶּן־נַחֲנֹן תְּחִקְיוֹ: ⁷מֵשֵׁם נִסְעָו הַגְּדוֹלָה
וּמִן־הַגְּדוֹלָה יִטְבְּתָה אֶרְץ נְחִילִי מִים:
⁸בָּעֵת הַהִיא הַבְּדִיל יְהוָה אֶת־שְׁבָט הַלְּוִי
לְשֵׁאת אֶת־אֲרֹן בְּרִית־יְהוָה לְעֵמד לִפְנֵי
יְהוָה לְשָׁרֶתוֹ וְלִבְרָךְ בְּשֶׁמוֹ עַד הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה:
⁹עַל־כֵּן לְאִידָּהָה לִלְיִוְתְּ חָלֵק וּנְחָלָה עַמְּךָ
אֲחִיךָ יְהוָה הַיָּא נְחַלְתָּו כַּאֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר יְהוָה
אַלְמָנָה לֹא:

¹⁰וְאַנְכִּי עַמְּדָתִי בְּהָר פִּימִיט הַרְאָשָׁוּם
אַרְבָּעִים יוֹם וּאַרְבָּעִים לַיְלָה וַיִּשְׁמַע
יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים גַּם בְּפֶעַם הַהִוא לְאִ-אָבָה
יְהוָה הַשְׁחִיתָה: ¹¹וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים קָוָם
לְךָ לִמְסֻעָּה לִפְנֵי הָעָם וַיָּבֹא וַיִּרְשֶׁוּ אֶת־
הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־נִשְׁבַּעֲתִי לְאַבְתֶּם לְתַת
לְהַמָּן: ¹¹בָּ

10:5. I deposited the tablets in the ark. In Deuteronomy, the Ark serves as a container to protect the tablets, just as ancient Near Eastern officials deposited political treaties in their cities' temples. In contrast, Exodus conceives of the Ark as God's throne, a symbol of God's presence, as well as a container for the Tablets of the Pact (see at Exodus 25:10–22).

8. יְהוָה set apart the tribe of Levi. Choosing the Levites for certain religious responsibilities is presented as a further consequence of the Golden Calf incident, in recognition of when the men of Levi rallied to Moses' call and killed 3,000 perpetrators (Exodus 32:26–29). In specifying the roles of the tribe of Levi, Deuteronomy presents an inclusive approach to "the priests, sons of Levi" (21:5; see at 18:1), in contrast to the distinction in priestly texts between the descendants of Aaron, who serve as priests (kohanim), and the other descendants of Levi, who are referred to simply as "Levites" (Numbers 3–4).

II. "Up, resume." Heb. kum lech, which evokes God's previous command to Moses following the construction of the calf—kum red, "Hurry, go down" (9:12)—and signals the reconciliation in the relationship between God and Israel.

possess the land. Moses concludes the retelling of the covenant's restoration by returning to the main theme of this sermon: the possession of the Promised Land (9:1–6).

¹²And now, O Israel, what does your God demand of you? Only this: to revere your God יְהוָה, to walk only in divine paths, to love and to serve your God יְהוָה with all your heart and soul, ¹³keeping his commandments and laws, which I enjoin upon you today, for your good. ¹⁴Mark, the heavens to their uttermost reaches belong to your God, the earth and all that is on it! ¹⁵Yet it was to your ancestors that יְהוָה was drawn out of love for them, so that you, their lineal descendants, were chosen from among all peoples—as is now the case. ¹⁶Cut away, therefore, the thickening about your hearts and stiffen your necks no more. ¹⁷For your God יְהוָה is God supreme and Lord supreme, the great, the mighty, and the awesome God, who shows no favor and takes no bribe, ¹⁸but upholds the cause of the fatherless and the widow, and befriends the stranger, providing food and clothing.—

¹² וְעַתָּה יִשְׂרָאֵל מַה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ שָׁאַל כַּמֵּעֵמֶר כִּי אָמַן־לִירָאָה אֲתִיהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ לְלַכְתָּ בְּכָל־דֶּرֶכֶיךָ וְלִאֱהַבָּה אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ בְּכָל־לְבָךְ וּבְכָל־נֶפֶשֶׁךָ: ¹³ לְשִׁמְרָה אֲתִמְצֹות יְהוָה וְאֲתִיחַקְנֵיו אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצּוֵּה הַיּוֹם לְטוֹב לְךָ הַזֶּה: ¹⁴ הַזֶּה לְיְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ הַשְׁמִים וְשֵׁם הַשְׁמִים הָאָרֶץ וּבְכָל־אֲשֶׁר־בָּהּ: ¹⁵ רַק בְּאַבְתִּיךְ חַשְׁקֵי יְהוָה לְאֱהַבָּה אֶתְכֶם וַיְבַחרַ בְּזֹרֻעָם אֶחָרִיכֶם בְּכָם מִכְלְהָעָם בַּיּוֹם הַזֶּה: ¹⁶ וּמְלֹאת אֶת עֲרֵלָת לְבָכֶם וּמְרַפֵּת לְאֶתְכֶם תִּקְשׁוּ עוֹד: ¹⁷ כִּי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם הוּא אֱלֹהֵי הָאֱלֹהִים וְאֶתְנוּי הָאֱדוֹנִים הָאֵל הַגָּדָל הַגּוֹל וְהַנּוֹרָא אֲשֶׁר לְאִישָׁא פְּנֵים וְלֹא יִקְחֶ שְׁחָד: ¹⁸ עֲשֵׂה מְשֻׁפֵּט יְתּוֹם וְאֶלְמָנָה וְאֶתְבָּ גָּר לְתַת לֹּו לִחְם וְשִׁמְלָה:

CALL FOR REVERENCE, OBEDIENCE, LOVE, AND WORSHIP (10:12–22)

Based on this rebellious history, Moses outlines five principal demands for the people to follow in order to ensure that they thrive once they enter the land: to revere, to walk, to love, to serve, to keep (vv. 12–13). The force of these requirements lies in their inclusive, general character (compare the detailed commandments in Exodus 34:10–26).

16. Cut away, therefore, the thickening about your hearts. Literally, “circumcise the foreskin of your heart.” This expression refers to the metaphoric removal of the emotional blocks that prevent the people from following God’s teachings and that result in their rebellious behavior (see also at 30:6; Leviticus 26:41; Jeremiah 4:4).

17. God supreme and Lord supreme. Literally, “the god of gods, and the lord of lords.” Ancient Near Eastern texts employ these two epithets as royal attributes. Here and elsewhere, Deuteronomy refers to the existence of other deities, in relation to which God proves incomparable in majesty and powers (see also at 4:19–20; 6:4; 32:8). [Calling God the “lord of lords” takes for granted the ancient Near Eastern hierarchies of status and gender, while proclaiming that God’s authority transcends even male authority figures. —Ed.]

who shows no favor and takes no bribe. Verses 17–18 depict God metaphorically as the ideal ruler. The first part of this verse reflects one of the king’s major roles: to be a mighty warrior. This second part refers to the king’s other key function: to be a judge who defends the poor and needy with justice and loving-kindness (as in Psalms 72; 146:5–10). [Recourse to male imagery does not necessarily mean that the composer(s) of Deuteronomy conceived of Israel’s God as a male being. See further at 33:5. —Ed.]

18. the fatherless and the widow...the stranger. Heb. yatom v’almanah...ger. These are the three disadvantaged members of the society for whom Deuteronomy repeatedly demands legal protection (24:17–18; 27:19) and economic support

¹⁹You too must befriend the stranger, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt.

²⁰You must revere יְהוָה: only your God shall you worship, to [God] shall you hold fast, and by God's name shall you swear. ²¹[יהוָה] is your glory and your God, who wrought for you those marvelous, awesome deeds that you saw with your own eyes. ²²Your ancestors went down to Egypt seventy persons; and now your God יְהוָה has made you as numerous as the stars of heaven.

11 Love, therefore, your God, יְהוָה, and always keep God's charge, God's laws, God's rules, and God's commandments.

²Take thought this day that it was not your children, who neither experienced nor witnessed the lesson of your God—יְהוָה

God's majesty, mighty hand, and outstretched arm; ³the signs and the deeds that [God] performed in Egypt against Pharaoh king of Egypt and all his land; ⁴what [God] did to Egypt's army, its horses and chariots; how rolled back upon them the waters of ¹⁹וְאַהֲבָתֶם אֶת־הָגָר כִּי־גָרִים הַיִּתְּמֻבָּרְכִים בָּאָרֶץ :

²⁰אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ תִּירְאָ אֶתְּךָ תַּעֲבֹד וּבְנֵי תְּרַבֵּק וּבְשָׁמוֹ תְּשַׁבַּע: ²¹הַוָּא תְּהַלְתָּה וְהַוָּא אֱלֹהֵיךְ אֲשֶׁר־עָשָׂה אֶתְּךָ אֶת־הַגָּלָת: וְאֶת־הַגּוֹרָאת הָאַלְהָה אֲשֶׂר רָאוּ עִינֵיכֶם: ²²בָּשְׁבָעִים נֶפֶשׁ יְרָדוּ אֶבְתָּיק מִצְרִימָה עַתָּה שָׁמֶךָ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בְּכָובְדֵי הַשָּׁמְרִים לַרְבָּן:

11 וְאַהֲבָתֶם יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ וְשִׁמְרָתֶם מִשְׁמָרְתָו וְחַקְתָיו וּמִשְׁפָטָיו וּמִצְוֹתָיו כָּל־

הַיְמִים: ²וַיַּדְעְתֶם הַיּוֹם כִּי לֹא אֶת־בְּנֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר לְאִידָעָו וְאֲשֶׁר לְאַרְאוּ אֶת־מֹיסֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם:

אֶת־גָּדוֹלָו אֶת־יְדוֹ הַחֲזָקָה וּזְרוּעָו הַגְּטִיעָה: ³וְאֶת־אַתְּתָיו וְאֶת־מְעָשָׂיו אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה בְּתוֹךְ מִצְרִים לְפָרֻעָה מֶלֶךְ מִצְרִים וּלְכָל־אַרְצָו: ⁴וְאֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה לְחַילְמִידָם לְסָטִיעָו וּלְרַבְבָּו אֲשֶׁר הַצּוֹף אֶת־מִ

(14:28–29; 16:11, 14; 24:19–21; 26:12–13; note that the landless Levite is included among the needy).

Our verse is unique in presenting God in two roles, both as their legal defender (“upholds the cause of”) and as their provider (“providing food and clothing”); compare Exodus 22:20–23; Psalm 146:9. (See also Another View, p. 1108.)

19. the stranger. Heb. ger refers to those who are alien to their place of sojourn, like Abraham immigrating to Canaan (Genesis 23:4), Moses in Jethro's house (Exodus 2:22), and most of all, Israel as strangers in Egypt (Genesis 15:13), a key part of Israel's national consciousness. Based on the memory of this experience, all biblical legal collections empathetically demand the favorable treatment of strangers, including their legal and economic protection (see also Exodus 22:20; 23:9; Leviticus 19:34).

Occupation of the Land as Divine Reward or Punishment (11:1–25)

The third speech of Eikev continues Deuteronomy's characteristic attitude toward time: the notion that historical observations provide central lessons for the present, and critical signs for the future. This sermon concentrates on the future possession and inheritance of the land, promising prosperity as the major reward for obedience, while threatening total annihilation in retaliation for disobedience.

PAST LESSONS AS MOTIVATION FOR FUTURE ACTIONS (11:1–9)

In the middle of the demand to obey God's commandments (v. 1) and the promised reward of the Sea of Reeds when they were pursuing you, thus destroying them once and for all; ⁵what [God] did for you in the wilderness before you arrived in this place; ⁶and what [God] did to Dathan and Abiram, sons of Eliab son of Reuben, when the earth opened her mouth and swallowed them, along with their households, their tents, and every living thing in their train, from amidst all Israel—⁷but that it was you who saw with your own eyes all the marvelous deeds that יְהוָה performed.

⁸Keep, therefore, all the Instruction that I enjoin upon you today, so that you may have the strength to enter and take possession of the land that you are about to cross into and possess, ⁹and that you may long endure upon the soil that swore to your fathers to assign to them and to their heirs, a land flowing with milk and honey.

¹⁰For the land that you are about to enter and יִמְסֹוק עַל־פְּנֵיכֶם בְּרִכּוֹם אֲחֶרְיךָם

וַיַּאֲבֹדָם יְהוָה עַד תְּיוֹם הַזֶּה: ⁵ וְאַשְׁר־
עָשָׂה לְכֶם בַּמְדִבָּר עַד־בְּאֶתְכֶם עַד־
הַמָּקוֹם הַזֶּה: ⁶ וְאַשְׁר עָשָׂה לְדָתֵן
וּלְאָבִים בְּנֵי אֱלֹיאָב בֶּן־רָאוֹבָן אֲשֶׁר־
פִּצְתָּה הָאָרֶץ אֶת־פִּيقָּה וַתִּבְלֻעַם וְאַתְּ
בַּתְּהֵם וְאַתְּ־אֲהֵלָהֶם וְאַתְּ בְּלַהֲיקָם
אֲשֶׁר בְּרֶגֶלְיכֶם בְּקָרְבָּן בְּלִיְשָׁרָאֵל:

⁷ כִּי עִינֵיכֶם הָרְאָת אֶת־כָּל־מְعָשָׂה יְהוָה
הַגָּדוֹל אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה:
⁸ וּשְׁמַרְתֶּם אֶת־כָּל־הַמִּצְדָּה אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי
מִצּוּק הַיּוֹם לְמַעַן תִּחְזֹקֵוּ וּבְאֶתְכֶם וַיַּרְשְׁתֶּה
אֶת־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אָתֶם עֹבְרִים שָׁמָה
לְרִשְׁתָה: ⁹ וּלְמַעַן תִּאֲרִיכוּ יָמִים עַל־
הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע יְהוָה לְאַבְתֵיכֶם
לְתֹת לְכֶם וְלִזְרֻעָם אָרֶץ זֹבֵת חֶלֶב וְדָבָשׂ: ¹⁰ כִּי הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר אָתָה בְּאַשְׁמָה לְרִשְׁתָה possessing and enduring upon the land (vv. 8–9), a long and complicated sentence (vv. 2–7) sets the present wilderness generation apart from their descendants (compare the distinction between the present generation and their ancestors in 5:2–5). The verb raah (“to see” or “to witness”) recurs twice (vv. 2, 7), the first time in conjunction with the verb yada (“to know” or “to experience”), thus demonstrating that the major generational difference resides in the actual, first-hand witnessing of God’s deeds. This cardinal concept of a direct experience of God’s involvement in Israel’s history governs the historical consciousness of Israel, as exemplified by the repeated command to retell the story of the exodus to one’s children (Exodus 12:26–27; 13:14; Deuteronomy 6:20–21), as well as in the historical recitation at the first-fruit ceremony (26:5–10) and the ratification of the covenant on the Plains of Moab (28:69–30:20).

5. what [God] did for you. Rather, “what [God] did to you.” In the Hebrew, Moses employs the expression “asah l-” four times in this passage; in v. 3, it is translated as “performed...against,” and as “did to” in vv. 4 and 6. Although the Hebrew preposition can have either meaning, here it should be understood in line with the rest of this passage, in which the enumerated divine deeds are all punitive, aimed at the Egyptians (vv. 3–4) and Israelites alike (vv. 5–6).

SPECIAL QUALITIES OF THE LAND AND INCENTIVES TO OBEY GOD (11:10–21)

In this part of his speech, Moses draws attention to geographical and climatic qualities of the Promised Land, resulting in the marked differences between agriculture in Israel and Egypt. The ability to enjoy the special features of the land will depend on the people’s conduct.

possess is not like the land of Egypt from which you have come. There the grain you sowed had to be watered by your own labors, like a vegetable garden;¹¹ but the land you are about to cross into and possess, a land of hills and valleys, soaks up its water from the rains of heaven.¹² It is a land which your God יְהוָה looks after, on which your God יְהוָה always keeps an eye, from year's beginning to year's end.

¹³If, then, you obey the commandments that I enjoin upon you this day, loving your God יְהוָה and serving [God] with all your heart and soul,¹⁴I will grant the rain for your land in season, the early rain and the late. You shall gather in your new grain and wine and oil—¹⁵I will also provide grass in the fields for your cattle—and thus you shall eat your fill.¹⁶Take care not to be lured away to serve other gods and bow to them.¹⁷For יְהוָה's anger will flare up against you, shutting up the skies so that there will be no rain and the ground will not yield its produce; and you will soon perish from the good land that יְהוָה is assigning to you.

לֹא כַּאֲרֶץ מִצְרַיִם הָوֹא אֲשֶׁר יֵצְאֶתֶם מִשְׁמָךְ אֲשֶׁר תִּזְרֻעַל אֶת־זָרָעָךְ וְהַשְׁקִיתָ בְּרִגְלֶךָ בְּגַן הַיּוֹרֵךְ: ¹¹ וְהַאֲرֶץ אֲשֶׁר אַתֶּם עַבְרִים שָׂמָחָה לְרַשְׁתָּהָה אָרֶץ הָרִים וּבְקָעוֹת לְמַעַרְתָּה הַשְׁמִינִים תְּשַׁתְּהַדְּמִים: ¹² אָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם דָּרַשׁ אַתֶּה תִּמְדִיד עַיִן יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם בָּהּ מִרְשִׁית הַשָּׁנָה וְעַד אַחֲרִית שָׁנָה: ס ¹³ וְהַיָּה אִם־שָׁמַעַת תְּשִׁמְעוֹ אֶל־מִצְוֹתֵי אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצְוָה אֶתְכֶם הַיּוֹם לְאֶהָּבָה אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶת וְלַעֲבֹדוֹ בְּכָל־לְבָבְכֶם וּבְכָל־נְפָשָׁכֶם: ¹⁴ וְנַתְּתִי מִטְרַי־אֶרְצָכֶם בְּעַתּוֹ יוֹרָה וּמִלְקֹשׁ וְאַסְפָּתָה דְגַנְךָ וְתִירְשָׁךָ וְיצְהָרֶךָ: ¹⁵ וְנַתְּתִי עַשְׁבָּבָשׁ בְּשָׁדָךְ לְבַהֲמַתְךָ וְאַכְלָתְךָ וְשְׁבָעָתְךָ: ¹⁶ הַשְׁמָרוּ לְכֶם פָּנֵי יְפָתָחָה לְבָבְכֶם וְסְרָתֶם וְעַבְרָתֶם אֶלְקָדִים אֲחֶלִים וְהַשְׁתַּחַווֹתֶם לָהֶם: ¹⁷ וְחָרָה אֲפִיהָהָה בְּכֶם וְעַצֵּר אֶת־הַשְׁמִינִים וְלְאַיִלָּה מִטָּר וְהַאֲדָמָה לֹא תַתְּנַعַּם אֶת־יְבוּלֶהָ וְאַבְדָתֶם מִהָּרָה מַעַל הָאָרֶץ הַטְּבָה אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה נִתְּנָה: לְכֶם:

10. watered by your own labors. Literally, “watered by your foot.” With the Nile as its main, year-round water source, Egypt’s agriculture is based on an irrigation system of ditches, canals, and reservoirs constructed to lead the water from the river to the fields. Farmers control the water flow to each field by using the heels of their feet to easily open a channel in the simple dirt ridges of the irrigation system.

11. Since Israel depends on seasonal rains, its agriculture differs dramatically from that of Egypt. The water resources are never assured, for the number of rainy days and amount of rain from year to year change rapidly due to fluctuation in the winds and other climate conditions.

12. a land which your God יְהוָה looks after. The instability of the water resources obliges God’s careful attention. What may seem like the land’s disadvantage turns out to be a measure of Israel’s dependence on—and confidence in—God.

13. If, then, you obey. This passage links the distinctive qualities of the land and its agricultural fertility to the concept of divine reward and retribution. God rewards obedience via timely rain that will assure plenitude of crops and success; God retaliates against disobedience with a lack of rain—and thus with a lack of produce that will result in famine and annihilation.

Having given these geographical and climatic conditions such theological importance, vv. 13–21 were incorporated by the Rabbis into the daily liturgy as the second paragraph of the Sh’ma, following the V’ahavta (6:5–9). The Rabbis further secured the prominence of this passage by having it placed in the mezuzah and in the t’fillin, along with other passages from the Torah.

¹⁸Therefore impress these My words upon your very heart: bind them as a sign on your hand and let them serve as a symbol on your forehead, ¹⁹and teach them to your children—reciting them when you stay at home and when you are away, when you lie down and when you get up; ²⁰and inscribe them on the doorposts of your house and on your gates—²¹to the end that you and your children may endure, in the land that Jehovah swore to your fathers to assign to them, as long as there is a heaven over the earth.

²²If, then, you faithfully keep all this Instruction that I command you, loving your God, Jehovah, walking in all God's ways, and holding fast to [God], ²³will dislodge before you all these nations: you will dispossess nations greater and more numerous than you. ²⁴Every spot on which your foot treads shall be yours; your territory shall extend from the wilderness to the Lebanon and from the River—the

¹⁸ וְשִׁמְתָּם אֲתִידְבָּרֵי אֶלָּה עַל־לְבָבְכֶם וְעַל־נֶפֶשְׁכֶם וַיַּקְרְבָּתֶם אֶתְכֶם לְאוֹת עִינֵיכֶם: ¹⁹ עַל־יָדֶכֶם וְחַיּו לְטוֹפֶת בֵּין עִינֵיכֶם וְלִפְרוּתֶם אֶתְכֶם אֶת־בְּנֵיכֶם לְדָבָר בָּם בְּשַׁבְתָּךְ בְּבִיתְךְ וּבְכִתְבָתְךְ בְּלֶרֶךְ וּבְשְׁבָבָה וּבְקוֹמָךְ: ²⁰ וּכְתַבְתֶּם עַל־מִזְוֹזֶות בַּיּוֹתֶךְ וּבְשֻׁעָרֶיךְ: ²¹ לְמַעַן יַרְבוּ יְמִיכֶם וַיִּמְלִא בְּנֵיכֶם עַל הָאָדָמָה אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע יְהוָה לְאַבְתֵיכֶם לְתַת לְהָם בִּימֵי הַשָּׁמַיִם עַל־

הָאָרֶץ: ס

²² כִּי אִם־שָׁמַר תִּשְׁמַרְיוֹן אֶת־כָּל־הַמִּצְוָה הַזֹּאת אֲשֶׁר אָנוּכִי מִצְוָה אֶתְכֶם לְעַשְׂתָה לְאַהֲבָה אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם לְלִכְתָּב בְּכָל־דֶּרֶכְיוֹ וְלִדְבָּקָה־בָו: ²³ וְהַוּרִישׁ יְהוָה אֲתֶךָ בְּלַהֲגָיִים הָאֱלֹהָה מֶלֶפְנֵיכֶם וּוּרְשָׁתָם גּוֹעֲם אֲדָלִים וּעֲצָמִים מִפְנֵם: ²⁴ בְּלַהֲמָקּוֹם אֲשֶׁר תְּדַרֵךְ בְּפִרְגָּלָכֶם בּוֹ לְכָם יְהִיָּה מִן־הַמִּדְבָּר וְהַלְּבָנוֹן מִן־הַנָּהָר נִהְרִיפָת וְעַד

18. sign . . . symbol. See at Exodus 13:9.

VICTORY AND TERRITORY AS REWARDS FOR OBEDIENCE (11:22–25)

Obedience and love reoccur at the close of this speech, though in reverse order (v. 22 in comparison to v. 1). This section contains yet another conditional statement, promising that obedience will result in military success, victory, and possession of the land within wide borders (vv. 23–25). The wording underscores the claimed linkage between the demand and its reward through a symmetrical repetition of four phrases designating an entirety (kol): “all this Instruction” and “all God’s ways” in the clause that expresses the condition (v. 22); “all these nations” and “every spot” in the clause that expresses the consequence (vv. 23–24).

24. Every spot on which your foot treads shall be yours. This promise here and in v. 25 reflects an ancient Near Eastern legal practice of establishing ownership of a land by walking through it. This notion gains a theological-ideological content in the biblical concept of the land (see Genesis 13:17; Joshua 1:3–4).

from the wilderness to the Lebanon and from the River . . . to the Western Sea. The present description is unique in its four poles. It starts with the earthly regions from south (the Sinai wilderness) to north (Lebanon, as in 1:7; Joshua 1:4), and then proceeds to the water resources from the northeast (the Euphrates) to the southwest extremes (the Mediterranean Sea). This language seems not to designate actual borders of the land, but instead to demonstrate divine promises of political sovereignty (see also at 1:7).

Euphrates—to the Western Sea.²⁵ No one shall stand up to you: your God יְהוָה will put the dread and the fear of you over the whole land in which you set foot, as promised.

הִים הַאֲחֶרְןָן יְהִי אֶבֶלכֶם :²⁵ לֹא יִתְיַצֵּב
אִישׁ בְּפָנֵיכֶם פְּחֻדְכֶם וּמָרְאָכֶם יִתְנַצֵּל יְהִי
אֱלֹהִיכֶם עַל-פָּנֵי כָּל-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר תְּرַכּוּ
בָּהּ כַּאֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר לְכֶם : ס

25. as promised. This phrase evokes the promises with which the first and the second speeches of parashat Eikev open (see 7:17–24 and 9:1).

Although filled with chastisement and threats, along with promises, the Torah portion ends as it began, with an assurance. The prospect of blessings and success thus frames the entire parashah.

—Dalit Rom-Shiloni

Another View

AMONG ALL THE BLESSINGS and exhortations of parashat Eikev, the social role of women is addressed most explicitly with reference to the widow (10:18). In a patriarchal world, the widow, like the fatherless child, lacks a man to defend her rights. According to the Bible, the almanah (widow) functions in an ill-defined but usually perilous role, for women are primarily defined by their relationships to men in positions of power, first as daughters and then as wives. When no grandfather, father, or adult son is living, an almanah has no man with authority over her—or responsibility for her. Although an almanah may be independent of male domination, she would probably have difficulty functioning as an autonomous individual in ancient Israel's kinship-based, agricultural society.

In this context, God appeals to justice: an almanah must be recognized as an independent agent in order to support herself; to do otherwise would be unjust. God seeks redress, not out of sympathy for the “pitiable” widow, but because the woman should rightly be allowed to function on her own authority. (See Numbers 30:10, which holds widows and divorcees solely responsible for their vows, in contrast to young-adult daughters and to wives.)

Deuteronomy is particularly concerned with the almanah; it employs the word eleven times (10:18; 14:29; 16:11, 14; 24:17, 19, 20, 21; 26:12, 13; 27:19), compared to six instances in the rest of the Torah. In Deuteronomy, she is always mentioned with the command that her welfare be guaranteed and protected. Significantly, the masculine form of the word appears only once in the Bible (Jeremiah 51:5), whereas almanah (singular or plural) appears fifty-five times with the sense of “widow.” Several biblical narratives illustrate the problems that widows face and some of the areas where they experience autonomy. Judging by I Samuel 25, wealthy widows probably do well, for there Abigail seems to inherit her husband's property before she marries David. On the other hand, the story of Ruth and Naomi illustrates the peril of poor widows with no one to advocate or provide for them.

Deuteronomy is particularly concerned with widows.

—Lillian Klein Abensohn

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

who fed you in the wilderness with manna (8:16). Here God is portrayed in feminine terms as a provider of food.

It is usually women who do the cooking and baking in the Bible, as illustrated by the “Woman of Valor,” who rises early to cook and bake (Proverbs 31:15), and by Sarah, who prepares all manner of food for the visitors (Genesis 18:6–7). The Rabbis record the seven tasks expected of a wife, including grinding grain, baking bread, and cooking food (Mishnah K'tubot 5:5). Women were also expected to perform the accompanying religious rituals, such as separating a portion of dough for the priest (Numbers 15:20; Mishnah Shabbat 2:6).

As for that sinful thing you had made, the calf, I . . . ground it thoroughly (9:21). In this passage,

EIKEV

Moses recounts how he put the Golden Calf to the fire, ground it thoroughly, and threw the dust into the brook. The version in Exodus 32:20 is a bit different, for it describes how Moses burned the calf, ground it into dust, sprinkled the dust on the water, and made the people drink. The latter's similarity to the sotah ritual in Numbers 5 is obvious. Just as the wife accused of adultery must be tested by drinking a potion, so the Israelites had to drink the dust of the idol for which they abandoned God. This parallel creates the impression, further developed by the biblical prophets, that Israel's relationship with God was like that of a wife and husband or a pair of lovers. In worshiping an idol, Israel betrayed an intimate partner; therefore, God's punishment was swift and severe. It is ironic that the Rabbis deduce from the phrase "and all the people took off the gold rings that were in their ears" (Exodus 32:3) that the women refused to hand their rings over to their husbands for inclusion in the Calf. God rewarded the women with a holiday of their own, Rosh Chodesh, the New Moon, a day on which they were to abstain from household chores (Pirkei D'Rabbi Eliezer 45).

The Rabbis consider women to be better advocates before God than men are.

upholds the cause of the fatherless and the widow (10:18). In the rabbinic period, a principal purpose of the marriage contract (k'ubah) was to provide women with economic sustenance when widowed or divorced. Nevertheless, much like the Bible did, talmudic texts often portray widows as needing protection and financial support (see, for example, BT Gittin 35a).

If, then, you obey the commandments (11:13–21). This passage constitutes the second paragraph of the Sh'ma (Mishnah B'rachot 2:2) that is traditionally recited twice daily, together with 6:4–9 (Sh'ma) and Numbers 15:37–41 (on tzitzit). Mishnah B'rachot 3:3 exempts women from the daily obligation to recite the Sh'ma and from donning t'fillin (11:18), but it obligates them to hang a mezuzah on the doorposts of their home (11:20), pray daily, and recite the blessing after meals (Birkat HaMazon). Most of these exemptions and obligations are consistent with the general rules enunciated in Mishnah Kiddushin 1:7, that women are exempt from positive time-dependent ritual acts but obligated to all others. Recitation of the Sh'ma and donning t'fillin must be done at specified times of the day, whereas hanging a mezuzah may be done at any time. But women are obligated to prayer at fixed times because the Rabbis consider them better advocates before God than men are (BT B'rachot 20b).

loving your God הָנֹה וְסִרְבֵּחַ [God] with all your heart and soul (11:13). The Rabbis attach to these words one of their favorite ideas: that one must be engaged in study for its own sake (Torah lishmah). Should people say that they will learn in order to become rich, or to be called "Rabbi," or to receive a reward in the world-to-come, this verse teaches that such motivations are not acceptable. Instead, one should spend time in the study of Torah for its own sake—out of the love both of learning and of engagement with God's words (Sifrei D'varim, Eikev 41). Since women were not obligated to study sacred texts, any instance of women engaged in Torah study implies that it was for its own sake. A clear but chilling case of a woman studying Torah can be found in BT Yoma 66b: a woman came before Rabbi Eliezer and asked him a detailed question about the punishments meted out by God for worship of the Golden Calf; but he would not answer her. The reason for his reticence, according to another version of this tale (JT Sotah 3:3, 19a), was that "it is better to burn the words of Torah than turn them over to women."

—Judith Hauptman

Contemporary Reflection

SCRIPTURE DESCENDS to speak to us, using metaphor to reveal the holy. In parashat Eikev, we find references to the “mighty hand and the outstretched arm” by which God liberated the Israelites from Egypt (7:19). When the Torah uses the human body as a code to decipher God, we glimpse through ourselves the presence of the One in whose image we are created. Knowing that God is incorporeal, some find such physical descriptions of God inadequate and turn to the natural world. Thus we may imagine God as a rock (hatzur, as in 32:4), as dew (Hosea 14:6), or as a spring of living water (Jeremiah 17:13). Nevertheless, if we look closely at the corporeal imagery in parashat Eikev, we discover that its imagery hints at the luminous potentiality of our bodies to experience God.

The portion begins, “And if (eikev) you do obey these rules and observe them carefully, your God הָנַחַת will maintain faithfully for you the covenant” (7:12). Why is the term eikev (here translated as “if”) used to introduce the conditional clause, instead of a word more commonly employed for that purpose (such as im or ki)? The unusual language that begins our parashah invites the early medieval commentator Rashi to engage in word play, linking eikev to the noun akeiv (“heel”). Rashi writes that if we heed even minor commandments that are easy to trample over with our heels (in other words, commandments that we are likely to treat lightly), then God will keep the promises given to our ancestors. Read in this manner, the portion opens with a warning about not allowing thick skin to divert us from the path on which we walk toward God. Like Moses who takes off his sandals to experience holiness emanating from the earth, so we too are called to remove all barriers between God and ourselves.

The next verse states, “[God] will favor you and bless you and multiply you—blessing your issue of the (literally: your) womb” (7:13). What is interesting here is that the Hebrew wording is all in the masculine singular. Are men imagined as having wombs, or more darkly, as owning women’s wombs? Perhaps we can generously understand the verse as a suggestion that empathy can allow anyone to feel the blessing of a full womb. We know God first as the Creator, the womb of the world. The organ that nurtures potential life may be found in only half the population, yet the Torah suggests that both men and women celebrate pregnancy and birth.

If we accept this idea, then women can look at a later verse in our parashah that speaks in an unequivocally male metaphor and not feel excluded. Although our translation reads, “Cut away...the thickening about your hearts” (10:16), a more literal translation of this verse is, “Circumcise...the foreskin of your heart.” In other words, remove that which obstructs your heart and keeps you from following God’s teachings; open yourself up to experiencing “the great, the mighty, and the awesome God” (10:17). The foreskin in this expression can be likened to the thick skin on our feet that keeps us from feeling our connection to the Holy most intimately. Women and men alike can have a heart that is tender, loving, and open to the Divine, not just those who have literally been circumcised.

Like Moses, we too are called to remove all barriers between God and ourselves.

The metaphor that calls for a naked heart may help us to understand a deeper reason for the mysterious—and frankly disturbing—ritual of b’rit milah (circumcision). Native American and Mayan beliefs align with Kabbalah in understanding the left side of the body as feminine and the right as masculine. Since the heart rests on the left side, circumcising the heart brings feminine energies into play. Would the addition of a circumcised heart bring into a balance the masculine and feminine energies? Perhaps the metaphor found in parashat Eikev hints that the purpose of the ritual is to remind both men and women to keep the heart tender, for this is not only a woman's quality.

EIKEV

The circumcised heart is not gender specific. All of us are called to bring forth creative and nurturing energy within ourselves and to act with an empathic heart. Some say that the reason girls do not have an equivalent physical ritual to b'rit milah is that they are born circumcised, the implication being that they are born with unveiled hearts. B'rit milah, then, becomes a spiritual catch-up for boys to approach the open-hearted potential of girls.

Being a mother of sons, I have trouble with this explanation, yet we know that women walk through the world with circumcised hearts by their very place in many cultures. They reveal themselves because they often have less power and therefore less to lose. When we think of the hardened, calloused heel that feels little under it, experience shows that women do not have the luxury of stepping without looking carefully. Every misstep becomes a reason for others to keep us back; it becomes an accusation of our iniquity or incompetence.

Rabbi David Mark sees b'rit milah in a broadened mythic context when he compares the phallus to the ancient symbol that the Greeks called ouroboros, the mystical snake that rolls through eternity with its tail in its mouth. He asserts that removing the foreskin from the phallus is like when the snake—a symbol of eternal life—sheds its skin. As a result, through the act of b'rit milah, we incorporate God's promise of eternal life for the Jewish people directly into the male organ of reproduction. When applied to parashat Eikev, this interpretation helps us to see that a circumcised heart, possible for all of us, allows for growth and expansion, and provides a model for sloughing off gratuitous, constraining defenses.

Torah gives us a language that speaks beyond the physical world and gender. Both women and men embody God in their ordinary lived experience. Just as when we are in danger or despair we reach for another person to lift us up, so we understand that God is reaching for us with an outstretched arm to free us from slavery. In our female and male bodies we find God, and in this discovery we know ourselves to be more than physical beings. All of us are called upon to be creative, transparent, and loving before God.

—Malka Drucker

.
Voices
.

The Empress of Imagined Fertility

Leah Aini (transl. Miriyam Glazer)

Deuteronomy 7:14

A baby carriage abandoned in the stairwell
A colorful napkin staining
the strip of grass behind me.
In the yard
mothers on one leg
lighting butt from butt,
baby slings strapped
round their hips,
creatures kicking in their bellies.
And I, mad, on the roof
nestle in snowing laundry pregnant with pain.
Nine stars
and not one moon
around me, empress of imagined fertility.

For a Child Not Yet Conceived

Pamela Melnikoff

Deuteronomy 7:14

Your room awaits you, and a cherry-tree
That never bloomed till now: and clematis
Purpling the kitchen wall; and ancestors Whose faith and kindness reach out down
the years
To touch you with their light; and happy friends;
And books and music, art and poetry
And all the precious and God-given things
That we have found and hoarded for your sake;
And aunts and cousins; and a squalling nest
Under the eaves; and daisies in the grass;
Laughter and love, legend and fantasy,
And such a welcome as the flowers of March
And every blessing sent to make men glad
And all the saints and prophets never had.

Why do you linger still, then, in that sad
Populous kingdom where our lost dreams are,
Ungathered fruit and every unborn thing?
The years are passing, and we pass likewise
And cannot wait forever on your whim.
You must come soon, or you may wait too long
And come too late, and find the hearth grown cold,
The windows shuttered, and your parents old.

Sarah, they say, laughed when the angel told How she, at ninety years of age, would bring
A shining son out of her shriveled womb,
And would my laughter, do you think, be less;
My miracle, and my sweet thankfulness?

Released

Elaine Feinstein

Deuteronomy 11:14

In lovely rain now
this two weeks' tyranny of sun is past and the trees are dark the air has shed the dry pollens.

Now the garden follows me into the house gently and every membrane welcomes the soft presence.

The solar blast was a dish of silence over me:

now I look for stars or blonde lions in the wet undergrowth.

Covenant

Sharon Kessler

Deuteronomy 11:18

In the desert where old legends conspire, we are making fresh tracks in the sand,
carrying our burden
to some resting place.

Above
the black crest
of rock,
an arc of slow fire
rises. Morning again.
We march forward,
a tribe of mute warriors,
daughters of a race
so lost
no legend tells of us.

We too heard voices in the wilderness but we built no tabernacle to contain them.

The sign of the covenant is not incised upon our flesh,

but deep in the one heart of our body
the everlasting bush burns and is not consumed.

Eikev

Laurie Patton

Deuteronomy 11:20–21

There is a lightness
when we cross a threshold—
wood-frames sunk into soft soil, steel-frames of old tenements that have carried the weight of slow, sad steps above them;
sometimes, even,
a mezuzah points upward
like a finger:

No matter the sorrow,
every door holds a hope of difference, of newness—the thought that our days will multiply

And then:
anticipation splinters
into the past
of a room, where we have to come to terms with objects—

Take, for instance, the kitchen:
the way my eye catches
the light on the grapes,
like the boat-shells gathered in your hands
at that lowest of tides;

or the way the bowls tilt,
like the heads of the seals
who watched us, clapping, on Barnacle Rock;

or the way the rims
of the wine-glasses curve, like the ripples off your paddle
dipping near Seaweed Island

In this doorway, pieces of the summer
before you died
multiply like so many days of a future—

a past hauled up from the Zero of forgetting into the More-than-One of surprised memory

Yes,
says the red and peeling paint
of the cheerful frame:

Our days will multiply,
and they do so
in both directions.

רְאֵה ♦ R'eiḥ

DEUTERONOMY 11:26–16:17

Laws and Loyalty

PARASHAT R'EIḤ (“see”) introduces the legal collection that extends from Deuteronomy 12 to 26. Like the two other major biblical collections of legal material (the Book of the Covenant in Exodus 21–24 and the priestly legislation in Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers), these laws are conceived of as part of the covenantal relationship between Israel and God, with responsibilities incumbent upon both parties. The legal collection here offers a unifying vision of Israel: it insists on absolute loyalty to the one God—and to God's Chosen Place, the sole official shrine.

According to Deuteronomy 1:5, the location for the expounding of these laws is the land of Moab, east of the Jordan River, before Israel enters the land. This would be during the 2nd millennium B.C.E., according to the implied chronology and the imagined “original” audience (see introduction to parashat D'varim, p. 1039). But historians believe that these laws were actually compiled in the 7th century B.C.E. or later, and that they comprise part of the “book of the torah (Teaching),” the phrase used in Deuteronomy to refer to the exhortations and laws in this book (not to the so-called Five Books of Moses). According to II Kings 22 (and II Chronicles 34:14–28), a reportedly similar “book of the torah” is discovered during the reign of King Josiah, in the midst of renovations of the Temple. The King orders his scribes to consult with the female prophet Huldah, who authenticates the scroll. Its laws represent a reform of earlier traditions and of existing practice. The book of Kings further reports that King Josiah implemented some of those reforms in about 622 B.C.E. (On the economic aspects of this “reform,” see at 12:2–3.)

The laws in this parashah (like those in the three portions that follow) contain various precepts designed to regulate activity in the Promised Land and to bind Israel to its God. The

The legal collection here offers a unifying vision of Israel.

parashah includes rules about many aspects of life: the consumption of meat (12:15–28; 14:3–21; 15:21–23), avoidance of the local non-Israelite peoples' worship practices (12:30–31; 13:6–18; 14:1–2), true and false prophecy (13:1–5), tithing (14:28), remission of debts (15:1–6), care for the needy (15:7–11), debt-slavery (15:12–17), dedication of first-born male animals (15:19–20), and the pilgrimage festivals (16:1–17).

While the legislation here applies to all Israel, several teachings at first glance seem to address only the presumably male heads of household (12:7–8, 12, 18; 13:7; 15:20; 16:11, 14). This raises the following questions: What about their wives, who are not mentioned? Furthermore, are all of these laws intended only for men and not for women? The answers are not always clear. However, some laws implicitly address everyone, such as those that regulate diet (14:3–21). Others explicitly include women, as when they are expected to attend festive celebrations at Israel's official sanctuary (12:12, 18; 16:11, 14).

A powerful theme in parashat R'eih, alongside the prominent concern for the loyal worship of Israel's God alone, is caring for the needy. It is possible that a concern for women's welfare lies behind certain economic legislation to protect the vulnerable (see at 14:29), since women were often at risk in ancient Israelite society.

—Beth Alpert Nakhai

Outline—

I. THE CHOICE BETWEEN BLESSING AND CURSE (11:26–32)

II. COMMENCEMENT OF DEUTERONOMY'S LEGAL COLLECTION (12:1–16:17)

- A. Introduction (12:1)
- B. Demand for centralization of sacrifice in God's Chosen Place (12:2–14)
- C. Rules about the consumption of meat and tithes (12:15–28)
- D. Warnings against worshipping as other nations do (12:29–31)
- E. Warnings against false prophets or diviners (13:1–19)
- F. Warnings against illicit mourning practices (14:1–2)
- G. Dietary laws (14:3–21)
- H. Tithing regulations (14:22–29)
- I. Laws of release in the seventh year (15:1–18)
 - 1. Remission of debt (15:1–11)
 - 2. Release of debt-servants (15:12–18)
- J. Laws about the dedication of first-born male livestock (15:19–23)
- K. Laws about the pilgrimage festivals (16:1–17)

11:26

See, this day I set before you blessing and curse: ²⁷blessing, if you obey the commandments of your God יְהוָה that I enjoin upon you this day; ²⁸and curse, if you do not obey the commandments of your God יְהוָה, but turn away from the path that I enjoin upon you this day and follow other gods, whom you have not experienced. ²⁹When your God יְהוָה brings you into the land that you are about to enter and possess, you shall pronounce the blessing at Mount Gerizim and the curse at Mount Ebal.—³⁰Both are on the other side of the Jordan, beyond the west road that is in the land of the Canaanites who dwell in the Arabah—near Gilgal, by the terebinths of Moreh.

³¹For you are about to cross the Jordan to enter and possess the land that your God יְהוָה is assigning to you. When you have occupied it and are settled in it, ³²take care to observe all the laws and rules that I have set before you this day.

יא ²⁶ רִאֵה אַנְכִי נَتַן לְפָנֶיכֶם הַיּוֹם בָּרְכָה וּקְלָלָה: ²⁷ אֶת־הַבְּרָכָה אֲשֶׁר תִּשְׁמַעַו אֶל־מִצּוֹת יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר אַנְכִי מִצּוֹה אֶתְכֶם הַיּוֹם: ²⁸ וּקְلָלָה אַמְּלָא תִּשְׁמַעַו אֶל־מִצּוֹת יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וּסְرִתְמָם מִן־הַדָּרָר אֲשֶׁר אַנְכִי מִצּוֹה אֶתְכֶם הַיּוֹם לְלַכְתָּ אֶחָרִי אֱלֹהִים אֶחָרִים אֲשֶׁר לְאִידְעָתָם: ס ²⁹ וְהִיא כִּי יִבְיאֶךָ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ אֶל־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־אָתָה בְּאֶשְׁמָה לְרִשְׁתָה וּנוֹתְרָה אֶת־הַבְּרָכָה עַל־דָּרָר גְּרוּיִם וְאֶת־הַקָּלָלָה עַל־דָּרָר עִבָּל: ³⁰ הַלְאֵתָמָה בַּעֲבָר הַיּוֹם אֶחָרִי דָּרָר מִבּוֹא הַשְׁמָשׁ בְּאָרֶץ הַכָּנְעָנִי הַיּוֹשֵׁב בְּעַרְבָּה מִזֶּל הַגְּלָל אַלְוֹנִי מִרְאֶה:

כִּי אַתֶּם עֲבָרִים אֶת־הַיּוֹם לְבָא לְרִשְׁת אֶת־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם נָתַן לְכֶם וַיַּרְשְׁתֶם אֹתָה וַיַּשְׁבַּתֶּם־בָה: ³² וּשְׁמַרְתֶם לְעֹשֹׂת אֹתָה בְּלַחֲצִים וְאֶת־הַמְשֻׁפְטִים אֲשֶׁר אַנְכִי נָתַן לְפָנֶיכֶם הַיּוֹם:

The Choice between Blessing and Curse (11:26–32)

The legal material in Deuteronomy is framed by two sets of blessings and curses (here and 28:1–68). Similarly, ancient Near Eastern political treaties and the Laws of Hammurabi contain curses warning of the calamities that will transpire if the treaty's stipulations or the laws are violated (see also at 28:1–68).

29. blessing at Mount Gerizim . . . curse at Mount Ebal. Two mountains west of the Jordan are the sites for the covenant affirmation ritual (see also at 27:11–13).

► Celebrations include daughters, female slaves, and widows; why are wives not mentioned?

ANOTHER VIEW ► II34

► Kashrut reminds us that Jewish spirituality is inseparable from physical reality.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► II36

► On festivals, a husband should provide his wife with new clothes, so that she rejoices.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► II34

► Instead of observing Passover this year, / I have a fight with my boyfriend . . .

VOICES ► II38

12 These are the laws and rules that you must carefully observe in the land that יְהוָה, God of your ancestors, is giving you to possess, as long as you live on earth.

²You must destroy all the sites at which the nations you are to dispossess worshiped their gods, whether on lofty mountains and on hills or under any luxuriant tree. ³Tear down their altars, smash their pillars, put their sacred posts to the fire, and cut down the images of their gods, obliterating their name from that site.

יב אֶלְهָ הַחֲקִים וּהַמְשֻׁפְטִים אֲשֶׁר תִּשְׁמְרוּן לְעֹשֹׂת בָּאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר נָתַן יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ אֱבֹתֵינוּ לְךָ לְרַשְׁתָה בְּלַ-הָיִם אֲשֶׁר-אַתָּם חַיִם עַל-הָאָדָם:

2 אֶבֶד תִּאֲבֹדְנוּ אֶת-בָּל-הַמְקָמוֹת אֲשֶׁר עֲבֹדִישׁם הָגּוֹיִם אֲשֶׁר אַתָּם יְרִשִׁים אַתָּם אֶת-אֱלֹהִים עַל-הָהָרִים הַרְמִים וּעַל-הַגְּבוּעֹת וּתְחַת בָּל-עַץ רַעַנָּן: ³ וַנְתַצְתַּם אֶת-מִזְבְּחָתֶם וְשִׁבְרָתֶם אֶת-מִצְבָּתֶם וְאֲשֶׁר-יָדָת תִּשְׁרְפוּן בָּאָשׁ וּפְסִילֵי אֱלֹהִים תִּגְדְּעוּן וְאֲבִדָתֶם אֶת-שְׁמָם מִן-הַמְּקוֹם הַהוּא:

• • • • •

Commencement of Deuteronomy's Legal Collection (12:1–16:17)

The rules in parashat R'eh begin the extensive legal collection that continues through Deuteronomy 26. Most scholars agree that even though Deuteronomy presents this material as Moses' teachings, these precepts were compiled hundreds of years later. Evidence indicates that the compilers of the laws in Deuteronomy were an eclectic group—including scribes, priests, prophets, and other intellectuals—who formulated a notion of Israel as a nation guided by God. What makes their work unique is the powerful, unified vision that serves as the basis for their editorial work. Their distinctive perspective includes the idea that all Israel—kings and commoners alike—are to be judged by the degree to which they adhere to the laws of Deuteronomy. In particular, the laws considerably limit the roles of the king and priests and redistribute power to broader segments of the Israelite community (see at 17:14–20 and 18:1–8).

INTRODUCTION (12:1)

This verse specifies that the laws that follow must be observed in the Promised Land.

DEMAND FOR CENTRALIZATION OF SACRIFICE IN GOD'S CHOSEN PLACE (12:2–14)

The commands to destroy places where foreign gods are worshipped (vv. 2–3) and to worship by offering sacrifices to God only in one select location (vv. 4–14) express one of Deuteronomy's distinctive features: establishing the legitimacy of only one central shrine (which scholars often refer to as Deuteronomy's “centralization of the cult”). Although Deuteronomy does not name the location of the shrine, other books in the Bible make clear that the Chosen Place is Jerusalem.

2–3. The Israelites are charged to destroy places of worship and ritual objects that are sacred to the non-Israelite inhabitants of the land of Canaan, in order to prevent Israel from straying from God. Many modern scholars have concluded that in reality, this regulation targeted village sanctuaries where Israel's own deity was worshipped. Such sacred sites had been legitimate places of Israelite and Judean worship in the centuries before the centralization mandated in Deuteronomy. (Note, for example, Hannah's visits to the shrine in Shiloh in I Samuel 1.) Conducting sacrifices only in Jerusalem would have been a boon for that city's economy, strengthening the crown as it faced Assyrian imperialism, especially in the 7th century B.C.E.

⁴Do not worship your God יְהוָה in like manner, ⁵but look only to the site that your God יְהוָה will choose amidst all your tribes as God's habitation, to establish the divine name there. There you are to go, ⁶and there you are to bring your burnt offerings and other sacrifices, your tithes and contributions, your votive and freewill offerings, and the firstlings of your herds and flocks. ⁷Together with your households, you shall feast there before your God יְהוָה, happy in all the undertakings in which your God יְהוָה has blessed you.

⁸You shall not act at all as we now act here, each [householder] as he pleases, ⁹because you have not yet come to the allotted haven that your God יְהוָה is giving you. ¹⁰When you cross the Jordan and settle in the land that your God יְהוָה is allotting to you, and [God] grants you safety from all your enemies around you and you live in security, ¹¹then you must bring everything that I command you to the site where your God יְהוָה will choose to establish the divine name: your burnt offerings and other sacrifices, your tithes and contributions, and all the choice votive offerings that you vow to יְהוָה.

3. altars . . . pillars . . . sacred posts . . . images. Archeologists have discovered these objects at sacred sites throughout the land of Israel. Ritual objects like these were earlier used by Canaanites and then adopted by the Israelites, thus indicating the debt they owed to their predecessors in the Promised Land.

sacred posts. Heb. asherim (plural of asherah), ritual objects probably related to the worship of the goddess Asherah. According to II Kings 23, King Josiah removed the asherah from numerous sites, including the Temple itself and the place where “the women wove coverings for asherah” (II Kings 23:7).

⁴לֹא תַעֲשׂُו כֵּן לִיהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם: ⁵פִּי אֹמֶר אֶל־הַמְּקוֹם אֲשֶׁר־יַבָּחֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם מִפְּלַשְׁטֵיכֶם לְשָׁוֹם אֶת־שְׁמוֹ שֶׁם לְשָׁבֵנוּ תְּדַרְשׁוּ וּבְאַת שְׁמָה: ⁶וְהַבָּאתִים שְׁמָה עַל־תִּיכְלֵט וּזְבַחְיכֶם וְאַת מַעֲשָׂרְתֵיכֶם וְאַת טְרֻומַת יְדֵיכֶם וְנְדָרִיכֶם וְנְדָבְתֵיכֶם וְכְרָת בְּקָרְכֶם וְצָאנְכֶם: ⁷וְאַכְלָתָם־שֶׁם לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וְשְׁמָחָתָם בְּכָל מְשֻׁלָּח יְדֵיכֶם אַתֶּם וּבְתֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר בָּרָכָה יְהוָה אֱלֹהָיו:

⁸לֹא תַעֲשׂُו כֵּן אֲשֶׁר אָنַחֲנוּ עָשָׂוּ פֵּה הַיּוֹם אִישׁ בְּלִדְיָשָׁר בְּעַינָּיו: ⁹פִּי לְאָדָם בְּאַתֶּם עַד־עַתָּה אֶל־הַמְּנוֹחָה וְאֶל־הַגְּנַחָה אֲשֶׁר־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ: ¹⁰וְעַבְרָתָם אֶת־הַיּוֹם וְיַשְׁבַּתָּם בָּאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם מִנְחָלָתָם וְהַנִּיחַ לְכֶם מִפְּלַאֲגֵיכֶם מִסְבֵּב וְיַשְׁבַּתָּם־בַּטְחָה: ¹¹וְהַיָּה הַמְּקוֹם אֲשֶׁר־יַבָּחֶר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם בָּוֹ לְשָׁבֵן שְׁמוֹ שֶׁם שְׁמָה תְּבִיאוּ אֶת בְּלָאָשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצְוָה אַתֶּם עַל־תֵּיכֶם וּזְבַחְיכֶם מַעֲשָׂרְתֵיכֶם וְתְרַמַּת יְדֵיכֶם וְכָל מַבָּחֶר נְדָרִיכֶם אֲשֶׁר תְּדַרְוּ לִיהוָה:

(See further at 16:21 and at Exodus 34:13.)

5. the site that your God will choose.

Deuteronomy does not mention either Jerusalem or the Temple by name, since Jerusalem was not Israelite and the Temple not yet built during the time of Moses in which Deuteronomy is set.

7. households. Heb. bayit (literally “house”; plural, batim) here refers to the occupants of the household compound—the extended family, including slaves and other dependents. The inclusion of the household in feasting at the sanctuary suggests a venue in which women would play a role. Families would join together to experience the joy of partaking in a sacral meal in a sacred setting.

¹²And you shall rejoice before your God with your sons and daughters and with your male and female slaves, along with the [family of the] Levite in your settlements, for he has no territorial allotment among you.

¹³Take care not to sacrifice your burnt offerings in any place you like,¹⁴but only in the place that will choose in one of your tribal territories. There you shall sacrifice your burnt offerings and there you shall observe all that I enjoin upon you.
¹⁵But whenever you desire, you may slaughter and eat meat in any of your settlements, according to the blessing that your God יְהוָה has granted you. The impure and the pure alike may partake of it,

¹² וְשָׁמַחַתָּם לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם אֶתְכֶם וּבְנֵיכֶם וּבְנָתְנֵיכֶם וּעֲבָדֵיכֶם וְאַמְתָנֵיכֶם וְהַלּוּ אֲשֶׁר בְּשֻׁעְרֵיכֶם כִּי אֵין לוֹ חָלֵק וְנַחֲלָה אֶתְכֶם :

¹³ הַשְׁמַר לְكָם פָּנִים עַל־תַּעֲלֵה בְּכָל־מִקְומָם אֲשֶׁר תְּרָאָה : ¹⁴ כִּי אִם־בְּמִקְומָם אֲשֶׁר יִבְחַר יְהוָה בְּאַחֲרֵ שְׁבָטֶיךָ שֵׁם תַּעֲלֵה עַל־תַּיִךְ וְשֵׁם תַּעֲשֵׂה בְּלֵ אֲשֶׁר אָנוּנוּ מֵצָוֶה : ¹⁵ רַק בְּכָל־אֶזְרָחָה נְפֵשָׁךְ תַּזְבִּיחַ וְאַכְלָתָךְ בְּשָׂר בְּבָרְבָּת יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ אֲשֶׁר נְתָנוּ לָךְ בְּכָל־שָׁעֵרִיךְ הַטְמָא וְהַטְהָרָה יַאֲכִלְנוּ בָּאָכֵל

12. sons and daughters . . . male and female slaves. The specific mention of those with least access to resources is an important component of the laws in Deuteronomy. Free Israelite women are conspicuous by their absence from the list, which suggests that they were already included in the masculine plural command to rejoice before God (see also at 16:11 and Another View, p. 1134). The verse does not specify whether “slaves” refers to indentured servants, chattel slaves, or both; see further at 15:12–18; Exodus 21:2–11; Leviticus 25:35–54.

Levite. According to Numbers 8, men from the tribe of Levi were not to receive land, but they were dedicated uniquely to God’s service. A distinctive feature of Deuteronomy is that it adds Levites—and implicitly their families—to the list of those who need special consideration or protection (see at v. 19, below), a likely result of closing the local sanctuaries that were a major source of livelihood for Levites.

RULES ABOUT THE CONSUMPTION OF MEAT AND TITHES (12:15–28)

For Israelites as for others in the ancient world, meat-eating was not part of the daily diet, since they valued animals most for what they could produce while they were alive, including milk, wool, dung (used for fuel and construction), and offspring. Also, meat from an entire animal would have to be consumed at once, given the lack of refrigeration. Thus, eating the meat not otherwise utilized for sacrifice in festive meals provided one way for people to partake of meat. Exodus 20:21 implies that sacrifices could take place anywhere; however, if centralization of sacrifice meant that there were no longer any local sanctuaries at which to sacrifice animals, then how would those who lived far from Jerusalem be able to eat meat? In order to ensure that the consumption of meat did not cease with the cessation of village sacrifice, Deuteronomy allows Israelites to slaughter and eat meat in their own settlements, as long as they follow these detailed regulations. Deuteronomy’s laws in this case conflict with Leviticus 17:2–7, which permits eating meat only at a sanctuary.

15. The impure and the pure alike may partake of it. When animals for human consumption are no longer dedicated to God, everyone can partake of them, not only those who are ritually pure. This regulation makes it easier for women to consume meat because ritual impurity on account of menstruation and childbirth (see Leviticus 12; 15:19–30) no longer bars their participation.

as of the gazelle and the deer.¹⁶ But you must not partake of the blood; you shall pour it out on the ground like water.

¹⁷You may not partake in your settlements of the tithes of your new grain or wine or oil, or of the firstlings of your herds and flocks, or of any of the votive offerings that you vow, or of your freewill offerings, or of your contributions.¹⁸ These you must consume before your God יְהוָה in the place that your God יְהוָה will choose—you and your sons and your daughters, your male and female slaves, and the [family of the] Levite in your settlements—happy before your God יְהוָה in all your undertakings.¹⁹ Be sure not to neglect the [family of the] Levite as long as you live in your land.

²⁰When يְהוָה enlarges your territory, as promised, and you say, “I shall eat some meat,” for you have the urge to eat meat, you may eat meat whenever you wish.²¹ If the place where يְהוָה has chosen to establish the divine name is too far from you, you may slaughter any of the cattle or sheep that gives you, as I have instructed you; and you may eat to your heart’s content in your settlements.²² Eat it, however, as the gazelle and the deer are eaten: the impure may eat it together with the pure.²³ But make sure that you do not partake of the blood; for the blood is the life, and you must not consume the life with the flesh.²⁴ You must not partake of it; you

ובכָּאֵל: ¹⁶ בְּקַר הַעֲמֹם לֹא תִּאכְלُו עַל־הָאָרֶץ
תְּשַׁפְּכָנוּ פְּמֵים:

¹⁷ לֹא־תַּוְكַּל לְאַכְלָל בְּשֻׁעָרִיךְ מַעַשֵּׂר דְּגַנְךְ
וְתִירְשֶׁה וַיְצַחַרְךְ וּבְכָרְתָה בְּקָרְךְ וַיַּצְאֵנָךְ וְכָל־ נְדָרִיקָה אֲשֶׁר תִּזְבַּח וְנְדָבְרִינָךְ וְתַרְוּמָת יְדָךְ:
¹⁸ כִּי אִם־לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכְךָ תַּאכְלֵנָה
בָּمְקוּם אֲשֶׁר יִבְחַר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכְךָ בָּו
אַתָּה וּבָנֶךָ וּבְתָךְ וּבְדָךְ וְאַמְתָּרָךְ וְהַלְוָךְ
אֲשֶׁר בְּשֻׁעָרִיךְ וְשְׁמַחְתָּ לְפָנֵיל יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכְךָ
בְּכָל מְשָׁלֵח יְדָךְ: ¹⁹ הַשְׁמֵר לְכָה פָּנָרְתָּעֶזֶב
אֶת־הַלְוִיִּנִי בְּלִיעָמִיךְ עַל־אַדְמָתְךָ: ס

²⁰ קִיְרְחִיב יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכְךָ אֶת־גָּבְלָקָה
פְּאַשְׁר דָּבָר־לְךָ וְאַמְתָּרָךְ אַכְלָה בָּשָׂר כִּי
תָּאוּהָ נְפָשָׁךְ לְאַכְלָל בָּשָׂר בְּכָל־אוֹתָנָה נְפָשָׁךְ
תְּאַכְלָל בָּשָׂר: ²¹ קִיְרְחִיק מִמְּלָא הַמְּקוּם
אֲשֶׁר יִבְחַר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכְךָ לְשָׁוֹם שְׁמוֹ שֵׁם
וּבְחַתָּ מְבָקְרָךְ וּמְצַאֲנָךְ אֲשֶׁר נִתְן יְהוָה לְכָה
פְּאַשְׁר צוִיתָךְ וְאַכְלָתָךְ בְּשֻׁעָרִיךְ בְּכָל אַוְתָּה
נְפָשָׁךְ: ²² אָךְ בְּאַשְׁר יִאַכְל אֶת־הַצְבֵּל וְאַתְּ
הַאֲוֵל בָּן תְּאַכְלֵנָה הַטְמֵא וְהַטֹּוֹר יְחִזְקָה
יִאַכְלֵנוּ: ²³ בְּקַר חֹזֶק לְבָלְתִי אַכְל הַדָּם כִּי
הַדָּם הוּא הַנֶּפֶשׁ וְלֹא־תְאַכְל הַנֶּפֶשׁ עַמִּיךְ
הַבָּשָׂר: ²⁴ לֹא תְאַכְלֵנוּ עַל־הָאָרֶץ תְּשַׁפְּכָנוּ

16. you must not partake of the blood. Eating blood is prohibited because blood symbolizes life—and life belongs to God (see Genesis 9:4; Leviticus 17:11).

17–18. Common among other peoples in the ancient Near East, tithes were a kind of assessment that could be fulfilled by designating agricultural products or livestock, which would be consumed in sacred ceremonies (see also at 14:22–29). This passage establishes that tithes are no longer to be consumed within the towns or villages of Israel; rather, they are to be joyfully shared by all members of the community, female and male alike, at God’s Chosen Place.

18. you. In the singular; on who is being addressed, see at v. 12.

19. The centralization of sacrifice means that the landless Levites (see Numbers 8) who served local sanctuaries would have lost their means of livelihood. In an agrarian culture such as ancient Israel, those who did not own land were at risk of chronic starvation and even death. Therefore, the Levites would have become part of Israel’s underclass, unable to provide for themselves and their families.

must pour it out on the ground like water:²⁵ you must not partake of it, in order that it may go well with you and with your descendants to come, for you will be doing what is right in the sight of יהוה.

²⁶But such sacred and votive donations as you may have shall be taken by you to the site that יהוה will choose.²⁷You shall offer your burnt offerings, both the flesh and the blood, on the altar of your God יהוה; and of your other sacrifices, the blood shall be poured out on the altar of your God יהוה, and you shall eat the flesh.

²⁸Be careful to heed all these commandments that I enjoin upon you; thus it will go well with you and with your descendants after you forever, for you will be doing what is good and right in the sight of your God יהוה.

²⁹When your God יהוה has cut down before you the nations that you are about to enter and dispossess, and you have dispossessed them and settled in their land,³⁰beware of being lured into their ways after they have been wiped out before you! Do not inquire about their gods, saying, “How did those nations worship their gods? I too will follow those practices.”³¹You shall not act thus toward your God יהוה, for they perform for their gods every abhorrent act that יהוה detests; they even offer up their sons and daughters in fire to their gods.

בְּמִים :²⁵ לֹא תַּאֲכִלُנוּ לְמַעַן יִיטֶּב לְךָ וְלְבָנֶיךָ אַחֲרֵיךָ בִּיְתְעֵשָׂה הַיְשָׁר בְּעֵינֶיךָ :

²⁶רַק קְדֻשָּׁיךָ אֲשֶׁר־יְהוָה לְכָ וְנִדְרַיכָּ תְּשַׁאֲכָל וְבָאת אֶל־הַמָּקוֹם אֲשֶׁר־יְבֹחֶר יְהוָה :

²⁷וְעַשְׂתָּ עַל־תִּירְבְּשָׁר וְחֶדֶם עַל־מִזְבֵּחַ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ וְסִזְבְּחֵיךָ יִשְׁפַּךְ עַל־מִזְבֵּחַ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ וְהַבָּשָׂר תְּאַכֵּל :

²⁸שְׁמֹר וְשִׁמְעָת אֶת בְּלַדְכֶּרֶם הַאֲלָה אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצְנָה לְמַעַן יִטֶּב לְךָ וְלְבָנֶיךָ אַחֲרֵיךָ עַד־עוֹלָם כִּי תַּעֲשֵׂה הַטּוֹב וְהַיְשָׁר בְּעֵינֶיךָ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ :

²⁹כִּי־יִכְרִיתְתָּ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ אֲתִ־הָגּוֹם אֲשֶׁר אַתָּה בְּאִשְׁמָה לְרַשְׁת אֹתָם מִפְנִימָךְ וּוּרְשַׁת אֹתָם וַיַּשְׁבַּת בָּאָרֶצָם :³⁰ הַשְׁמֹר לְכָ פָּנִיתְנַקְשׁ אַחֲרֵיכֶם אַחֲרֵי הַשְׁמָדָם מִפְנִיךָ וּפְנִיתְרָשׁ לְאֱלֹהֵיכֶם לְאָמֵר אִכְּה יַעֲבֹדוּ הָגּוֹים הַאֲלָה אֲתִ־אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וְאָעֲשֵׂה־רַبֵּן גַּם־אָנִי :³¹ לְאִתְעֵשָׂה בָּנָי לְיְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכָה בַּיּוֹם תּוֹעַבְתָּ יְהוָה אֲשֶׁר שָׁנָא עָשָׂו לְאֱלֹהֵיכֶם כִּי גַם אֲתִ־בְּנֵיכֶם וְאֲתִ־בְּנֵתֵיכֶם יִשְׁרַפְוּ בָּאָשׁ לְאֱלֹהֵיכֶם :

WARNINGS AGAINST WORSHIPPING AS OTHER NATIONS DO (12:29–31)

The crucial injunction condemning the worship of any deity other than Israel's God is predicated upon the settlement of the land, after God will “cut down” the existing inhabitants. Certain biblical depictions of the conquest of the land (found especially in Joshua and Judges) claim that such destruction happened, whereas other passages portray a long period of Israelite coexistence with Canaanite and other ethnic communities in the very heartland of what would later become the Israel of the Monarchy. The results of decades of archeological research indicate that the latter version is the historically accurate one (see also at 2:34; 7:1–5, 24; 31:16).

³¹. offer up their sons and daughters in fire. While child sacrifice is condemned here as an abhorrent religious ritual, other passages reveal that at times even Israelites sacrificed their children (as implied by Genesis 22:1–19). According to II Kings 3:27, the Moabite king sacrifices his first-born son as a last resort. The Israelite child most renowned for having been sacrificed is Jephthah's daughter (Judges 11:29–40).

DEUTERONOMY 13:1–7

13 Be careful to observe only that which I enjoin upon you: neither add to it nor take away from it.

²If there appears among you a prophet or a dream-diviner, who gives you a sign or a portent, ³saying, “Let us follow and worship another god”—whom you have not experienced—even if the sign or portent named to you comes true, ⁴do not heed the words of that prophet or that dream-diviner. For your God יהוה is testing you to see whether you really love your God יהוה with all your heart and soul. ⁵It is your God יהוה alone whom you should follow, whom you should revere, whose commandments you should observe, whose orders you should heed, whom you should worship, and to whom you should hold fast. ⁶As for that prophet or dream-diviner, such a one shall be put to death for having urged disloyalty to your God—who freed you from the land of Egypt and who redeemed you from the house of bondage—to make you stray from the path that your God יהוה commanded you to follow. Thus you will sweep out evil from your midst.

⁷If your brother, your own mother’s son, or

ג אַתָּה בְּלִהְדָּבֶר אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מְצֻוָּה
אֶתְכֶם אֶתְّוֹ תָּשִׁמְרוּ לְעֵשֹׂות לְאִתְּסָף
עַלְיוֹ וְלֹא תָגַּרְעֵ מִמְּנָנוּ: פ

² כִּי־יְקָוֹם בְּקָרְבָּךְ נָבִיא אֹו חֲלָם חֲלוֹם
וּנְתַן אֲלֵיךְ אֹות אֹו מוֹפֵת: ³ וְבָא הָאֹות
וְהַמוֹּפֵת אֲשֶׁר־דָּבָר אֲלֵיךְ לְאֹמֶר נְלָכָה
אֶחָרַי אֱלֹהִים אֶחָרִים אֲשֶׁר לְאִידָּעָתָם
וּנוֹעֲבָדָם: ⁴ לֹא תִשְׁמַע אֶל־דָּבָר הַנְּבִיא
הַהוּא אֹו אֶל־חֲוֹלָם הַחֲלוֹם הַהוּא כִּי
מִנְּשָׁה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם אֶתְכֶם לְרֹעָתָה
הַיְשָׁכַם אֶת־בָּית אֲתִיהָוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם בְּכָל־
לְבָבָכֶם וּבְכָל־נְפָשָׁכֶם: ⁵ אַחֲרֵי יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֵיכֶם תָּלִיכְוּ וְאַתְּ תִּירְאָו וְאַתְּ־מִצְוָתָיו
תִשְׁמֹר וּבְכָל־תְּשֻׁמָּע וְאַתְּ תַּעֲבֹדֵדוּ וּבְכָל־
תְּרַבְּקוֹן: ⁶ וְהַנְּבִיא הַהוּא אֹו חֲלוֹם הַחֲלוֹם
הַהוּא יוֹמֶת כִּי דָבָר־סָרָה עַל־יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֵיכֶם הַמוֹצִיא אֶתְכֶם | מִאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם
וְהַפְּדָלָה מִבֵּית עֲבָדִים לְהַדִּיחָה מִן־הָרָה
אֲשֶׁר צָוָה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לְלִכְתָּה בָה וּבְעַרְתָּה הַרְעָם קָרְבָּךְ: ס

⁷ כִּי יִסְתַּחַט אֲחִיךְ בֶּן־אָמֵךְ אָזְבָּנָךְ אַזְבָּתָךְ

WARNINGS AGAINST FALSE PROPHETS OR DIVINERS (13:1–19)

This section warns against three capital offenses that might lead Israelites astray from absolute and exclusive allegiance to Israel’s God.

2. prophet. The first situation involves what we might call “religious professionals,” beginning with prophets. The problem of false prophecy was important because people needed to know which individuals truly spoke for God (see at 18:9–22). The Tanach includes stories about four female prophets: Miriam (Exodus 15), Deborah (Judges 4–5), Huldah (II Kings 22:14–20), and Noadiah (Nehemiah 6:14), as well as several unnamed female prophets (Isaiah 8:3; Ezekiel 13:17; Joel 3:1). Nehemiah, the governor of Judah in the 5th century B.C.E., implies that Noadiah is a false prophet. (On women prophets, see at 18:15 and V'zot Hab'rachah, Another View, p. 1284.)

dream-diviner. Ancient peoples believed that their deities sometimes communicated through signs and dreams if properly interpreted by skilled practitioners. Deuteronomy considers any such practices illegitimate and dangerous; but compare Genesis 40–41, where Joseph interprets dreams without condemnation.

7–12. The second case underscores the danger of false worship by prescribing the death penalty for all those—even family members and close friends—your son or daughter, or the wife of your bosom, or your closest friend entices you in secret, saying, “Come let us worship other gods”—whom neither you nor your ancestors have experienced—⁸from among the gods of the peoples around you, either near to you or distant, anywhere from one end of the earth to the other: ⁹do not assent or give heed to any of them. Show no pity or compassion, and do not cover up the matter; ¹⁰but take that person’s life. Let your hand be the first to put that person to death, followed by the hand of the rest of the people. ¹¹Stone that person to death for having sought to make you stray from your God, יהוה, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. ¹²Thus all Israel will hear and be afraid, and such evil things will not be done again in your midst.

¹³If you hear it said, of one of the towns that your God יהוה is giving you to dwell in, ¹⁴that some scoundrels from among you have gone and subverted the inhabitants of their town, saying, “Come let us worship other gods”—whom you have not experienced—¹⁵you shall investigate and inquire and interrogate thoroughly. If it is true, the fact is established—that abhorrent thing was perpetrated in your midst—¹⁶put the inhabitants of that town to the sword and put its cattle to the sword. Doom it and all that is in it to destruction: ¹⁷gather all its spoil into the open square, and burn the town and all its spoil as a holocaust to your God יהוה. And it shall remain an everlasting ruin, never to be rebuilt. ¹⁸Let nothing that has been doomed stick to your hand, in order that יהוה may turn from a

או אֲשֶׁת חִיקָּךְ אוֹ רַעַךְ אֲשֶׁר בְּנֵפֶשׁךְ בְּסַפְרָךְ לְאָמֵר גַּלְבָּה וּנְעַבְדָּה אֱלֹהִים אֶחָדים אֲשֶׁר לֹא יָדַעַת אַתָּה וְאַבְתָּיךְ: 8 מְאֵלָהֵי הָעוּמִים אֲשֶׁר סְבִיבְתֵיכֶם הַקּוֹרְבָּנִים אַלְיָךְ אוֹ הַרְחָקִים מִמֶּךְ מִקְצָה הָאָרֶץ וְעַדְקָצָה הָאָרֶץ: 9 לְאַתָּא בָּהּ לֹא תִּשְׁמַע אֲלֵינוּ וְלֹא-תִּתְחֹסֵס עִינֶךָ עַלְיוֹן וְלֹא-תִּתְחַמֵּל וְלֹא-תִּכְסַח עַלְיוֹן: 10 כִּי הָרָג תִּהְרַגְנֵנוּ יְדֵךְ תְּהִיחָה-בָּבוּ בְּרָאשׁוֹנָה לְהַמִּיתָנוּ וַיַּד בְּלָהָם בְּאַחֲרָנָה: 11 וַיַּקְלַלְתִּי בְּאַבְנִים וּמְתַפֵּת פִּי בְּקַשׁ לְהַדִּיחָל מִעַל יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ כִּי מִזְצִיאָךְ מִאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם מִבֵּית עֲבָדִים: 12 וּבְלִי-יִשְׂרָאֵל יִשְׁמַעוּ וַיַּרְאָוּן וְלֹא-יַוְסִפוּ לְעֹשֹׂת בְּדָבֵר הָרָע הַזֶּה בְּקַרְבָּךְ: 13 כִּי-תִשְׁמַע בְּאַתָּה עַלְיוֹךְ אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ לְשָׁבֵת שֵׁם לְאָמֵר: 14 יִצְאֵוּ אֲנָשִׁים בְּנֵי-בְּלִיעָל מִקְרָב וַיַּדְחַו אֲתָּה יִשְׁבֵי עִירָם לְאָמֵר גַּלְבָּה וּנְעַבְדָּה אֱלֹהִים אֶחָדים אֲשֶׁר לְאִידְעָתָם: 15 וְדָרְשָׁת וְחַקְרַת וְשָׁאַלְתָּה הַיּוֹטֵב וְהַנְּהָא אֶמֶת נְכוֹן: הַדָּבָר נַעֲשֵׂת הַתוֹּעֶבֶת הַזֹּאת בְּקַרְבָּךְ: 16 הַפְּהָה תָּבֹה אֲתִי-שְׁבֵי הָעִיר הַהְוָא לְפִי-חֶרֶב הַחֶרֶב אֲתָּה וְאַתְּ-בְּלִי-אֲשֶׁר-בָּה וְאַתָּה בְּהַמְּתָה לְפִי-חֶרֶב: 17 וְאַתְּ-בְּלִי-שְׁלָלָה תִּקְבֹּן אַל-תַּזְעַזֵּר רְחוּבָה וְשְׁרַפְתָּ בְּאָש אֲתָּה הָעִיר וְאַתְּ-בְּלִי-שְׁלָלָה בְּלִיל לְיְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ וְהַיִּתְהַלֵּל עַל עֲוֹלָם לֹא תִּבְנֶה עוֹד: 18 וְלֹא-יַדְבֹּק בַּיָּדֶךָ מִזְמָה מִזְחָרָם לְמַעַן יִשּׁוּב

who entice someone to secretly worship deities other than Israel’s God. Wives and daughters are mentioned alongside brothers and sons as people who might entice one to false worship.

7. wife of your bosom. This phrase suggests the physical and emotional intimacy of the marital relationship. As it does so, it highlights the grievousness of the transgression and the mandated punishment. Even a loving wife who attempts to lead her husband astray must be stoned to death, with her husband the first person to throw the stone.

13–19. The third example moves from the personal to the general, as disloyalty to God condemns an entire town to death.

DEUTERONOMY 13:19–14:4

blazing anger and show you compassion, and in compassion increase you as promised on oath to your fathers—¹⁹for you will be heeding your God, יהוה, obeying all the divine commandments that I enjoin upon you this day, doing what is right in the sight of your God, יהוה.

14 You are children of your God, יהוה. You shall not gash yourselves or shave the front of your heads because of the dead.²For you are a people consecrated to your God, יהוה: your God, יהוה chose you from among all other peoples on earth to be a treasured people.

³You shall not eat anything abhorrent.⁴These are the animals that you may eat: the ox, the sheep,

יהוה מחרון אֶפְוּ ונתן לך רחמים ורחמה
והרבך באשר נשבע לאבותיך: ¹⁹ כי
תשמע בקול יהוה אללהיך לשמר את
כל-מצוותיו אשר אני מצוקה היום לעשوت
הישר בעינך יהוה אללהיך: ס

יד בנים אתם ליהוה אללהיכם לא תתגדרו ולא-תשים קורתה בין עיניכם
למת: ² כי עם קדוש אתה ליהוה אללהיך
ובך בחר יהוה להיות לו עם סגלה מכל העמים אשר על-פני הארץ: ס
³ לא תאכל כל-תוועבה: ⁴ זאת הבאה
אשר תאכלו שור שה בשבים ושה

WARNINGS AGAINST ILLICIT MOURNING PRACTICES (14:1–2)

Gashing the skin until it bleeds and shaving were mourning customs practiced by Israelites and some of their neighbors. The other biblical passages that mention gashing or shaving have the connotation of foreignness, even when done by Israelites. For instance, 1 Kings 18:28 portrays Baal's prophets mourning their god's absence in their time of need by gashing themselves (see also Jeremiah 16:6–7; 41:4–5; 47:5). The textual evidence is ambiguous as to whether women as well as men engaged in these public mourning rituals; yet we do know that certain women were trained to chant dirges that accompanied burial ceremonies (see Jeremiah 9:16–17 and Chaye Sarah, Contemporary Reflection, p. 129). Furthermore, iconographic evidence recovered by archeologists depicts women tearing their hair and beating their breasts as signs of mourning.

DIETARY LAWS (14:3–21)

The dietary laws provide another venue in which Israel must demonstrate its allegiance to God. The regulations found here and in Leviticus 11 are straightforward: Israelites may consume only certain specified animals in order to remain within God's holy community. However, the rationale behind these rules is less transparent. Rabbis, biblical scholars, archeologists, and anthropologists have tried to go beyond the arcane lists of permitted and prohibited animals to understand the purpose for these regulations. While explanations vary, most agree that dietary laws, whatever their origins, were eventually meant to distinguish Israel from other nations and to allow them to demonstrate their loyalty to God. Whether all Israelites were aware of and adhered to the dietary laws is uncertain. However, the absence of pig bones at Israelite sites suggests obedience to at least that rule.

The degree to which dietary rules had an impact on women's lives is unclear. Both women and men worked in the fields, orchards, and gardens—the source of most Israelite food; and both genders tended livestock, while hunting was done mostly by men. [Food preparation was most often a woman's task, but the dietary laws do not directly concern that issue. Rather, they concern which animals are permitted and which are forbidden, and they also ban the consumption of blood. The responsibility for draining blood likely fell to those individuals, and the goat;⁵ the deer, the gazelle, the roebuck, the wild goat, the ibex, the antelope, the mountain sheep,⁶ and any other animal that has true hoofs which are cleft in two and brings up the cud—such you may eat.⁷ But the following, which do bring up the cud or have true hoofs which are cleft through, you may not eat: the camel, the hare, and the daman—for although they bring up the cud, they have no true hoofs—they are impure for you;⁸ also the swine—for although it has true hoofs, it does not bring up the cud—is impure for you. You shall not eat of their flesh or touch their carcasses.

⁹These you may eat of all that live in water: you may eat anything that has fins and scales.¹⁰ But you may not eat anything that has no fins and scales: it is impure for you.

¹¹You may eat any pure bird.¹² The following you may not eat: the eagle, the vulture, and the black vulture;¹³ the kite, the falcon, and the buzzard of any variety;¹⁴ every variety of raven;¹⁵ the ostrich, the nighthawk, the sea gull, and the hawk of any variety;¹⁶ the little owl, the great owl, and the white owl;¹⁷ the pelican, the bustard, and the cormorant;¹⁸ the stork, any variety of heron, the hoopoe, and the bat.

עֲמָם: ⁵ אַיִל וְצֹבֵב וְחִמּוֹר וְאַקְוּ וְדִישָׁן וְתָאוּ זָמָר: ⁶ וְכָל־בָּהֶמְתָּה מִפְרָסָת פְּרָסָה וְשְׂסָעָת שְׁסָעָת שְׁתִּינִי פְּרָסָות מִעְלָת גְּרָה בְּבָהֶמְתָּה אָתָה תְּאַכְּלוּ: ⁷ אֲךָ אֲתִיךְזָה לְאַתְּאַכְּלוּ מִמְעָלִי הָגָנָה וּמִמְפְּרִיסִי הַפְּרָסָה הַשְּׁטֹועָה אֲתִיךְגָּמָל וְאֲתִיךְאָרְגָּבָת וְאֲתִיךְ הַשְּׁפָן פִּי־מִעְלָה גְּרָה הַמְּהָ וְפְּרָסָה לְאַתְּ הַפְּרִיסָוּ טְמֵאִים הֵם לְכֶם: ⁸ וְאֲתִיךְחַזְוֵיר כִּי־מִפְּרִיסָה פְּרָסָה הוּא וְלֹא גְּרָה טְמֵא הָוּא לְכֶם מִבְשָׁרֶת לֹא תְּאַכְּלוּ וּבְנִבְלָתָם לֹא תְּגַעַו:

⁹ אֲתִיךְזָה תְּאַכְּלוּ מִכֶּל אֲשֶׁר בְּמִים כֶּל אֲשֶׁר־לֹו סְנִפְרִיר וּקְשָׁקֶשֶׁת תְּאַכְּלוּ: ¹⁰ וְלֹא אֲשֶׁר אַיִן־לֹו סְנִפְרִיר וּקְשָׁקֶשֶׁת לֹא תְּאַכְּלוּ טְמֵא הָוּא לְכֶם: ¹¹ כָּל־צְפּוֹר טְהָרָה תְּאַכְּלוּ: ¹² וְזֹה אֲשֶׁר לֹא־תְּאַכְּלוּ מֵהֶם הַנְּשֶׁר וְהַפְּרָס וְהַעֲזִינָה: ¹³ וְהַרְאָה וְאֲתִיךְאָה וְהַדְּרִיה לְמִינָה: ¹⁴ וְאַתָּה כָּל־עַרְבָּה לְמִינָה: ¹⁵ וְאַתָּה בְּהַיּוֹנָה וְאֲתִיךְתְּחַמֵּס וְאֲתִיךְהַשְׁחַף וְאֲתִיךְהַנִּשְׁׁמָת: ¹⁶ אֲתִיךְכּוֹס וְאֲתִיךְגִּנְשָׁוף וְהַתְּנִשְׁׁמָת: ¹⁷ וְהַקָּאת וְאֲתִיךְרְחַמָּה וְאֲתִיךְהַשְׁלָךְ: ¹⁸ וְהַחְטִיכָה וְהַאֲנָפָה לְמִינָה וְהַרוּכִיפָת וְהַעֲטָלָף:

female or male, who slaughtered animals. Some scholars believe that slaughtering and butchering were men's tasks; but the narrative of the medium at En-dor reports that she slaughters a calf (I Samuel 28:24), perhaps indicating that both genders would have had responsibility for adhering to the dietary stipulations. —Ed.] (For more on the dietary laws and women's role in food preparation, see at Leviticus 11:1–46.)

3–8. These verses allow for the consumption of ruminants with cleft hooves. Such mammals include domestic livestock (sheep, goats, and cattle), those animals most accessible to the average Israelite.

7. they are impure for you. The use of the word “impure” (repeated in vv. 8, 10, 19) suggests that dietary laws have a spiritual component and should not be understood as deriving from concerns for health, taste, or aesthetics. (For a different perspective, see at Leviticus 11:1–46.)

9–10. For more on the restriction of consuming seafood only with scales and fins, see at Leviticus 11:9.

11–18. The list of forbidden birds focuses upon birds of prey. Since the carrion they eat contains blood, eating birds of prey would place Israelites in danger of consuming this prohibited substance.

DEUTERONOMY 14:19–24

¹⁹All winged swarming things are impure for you: they may not be eaten. ²⁰You may eat only pure winged creatures.

²¹You shall not eat anything that has died a natural death; give it to the stranger in your community to eat, or you may sell it to a foreigner. For you are a people consecrated to your God יְהוָה.

You shall not boil a kid in its mother's milk.

²²You shall set aside every year a tenth part of all the yield of your sowing that is brought from the field. ²³You shall consume the tithes of your new grain and wine and oil, and the firstlings of your herds and flocks, in the presence of your God יְהוָה, in the place where [God] will choose to establish the divine name, so that you may learn to revere your God יְהוָה forever. ²⁴Should the distance be too

¹⁹ וְכֹל שַׁרֵץ הַעֲזֹף טְמֵא הוּא לְכֶם לֹא יִאכְלֶוּ: ²⁰בְּלִעְopus טָהוֹר תִּאכְלֶלוּ:

²¹ לֹא תִאכְלֶלוּ כָּל־גִבְלִית לִגְרָא אֲשֶׁר־בְשֻׁעְרִיק תִתְהַנֵּה וְאַכְלָה אוֹ מִכְלָל נְגַבִּי כִּי עִם קָדוֹשׁ אַתָּה לִיהְוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ לֹא־תַבְשֵל גַּדִּי בְּחִילָב אָמוּ: ב

²² עִשְׂרָה תִעַשֶּׂר אֶת בְּלִתְבּוּיאָת זְרַעַךְ הַיָּצָא הַשְׁרָה שָׁנָה שָׁנָה: ²³ וְאַכְלָתְךָ לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בַמְקוּם אֲשֶׁר־יִבְחַר לְשִׁבּוֹ שְׁמוֹ שֵׁם מַעַשֵּׂר דְגַנֵּל תִירְשֶׁה וַיַּצְהַרֵךְ וּבְכָרֶת בְּקָרֶת וְצַעֲנָךְ לְמַעַן תַלְמָד לִירָא אֹתְיְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בְּלִתְמִימִים: ²⁴ וְקִיְרְבָה מִפְנֵי חֲדָרֶךְ כִּי לֹא

19–20. In general, winged insects that swarm are forbidden as food; but some (a particular type of locust, as well as crickets and grasshoppers) are permitted (Leviticus 11:20–23).

21. This verse adds two other food regulations.

anything that has died a natural death. Presumably such animals are prohibited as food for Israelites because they were not slaughtered and then drained of all their blood. In addition, contact with dead animals was a source of ritual contamination that removed people from God's holy community.

you are a people consecrated. According to Deuteronomy, Israelites are God's holy people (see also at Leviticus 19:2); consequently, they must preserve that holiness in their daily lives.

You shall not boil a kid in its mother's milk. The implications and reasons for the injunction against boiling a baby goat in its mother's milk are obscure. Scholars have not found parallels in other ancient Near Eastern legal material. While some see this as a polemic against a pagan rite, most likely this rule attests to biblical respect for the relationship between a mother and her offspring (see 22:6–7), as well as revulsion at the idea that mothers' milk could contribute to death rather than life. [Some contemporary scholars offer a different explanation, arguing that the consonants in the noun chalav (milk) can be read as chelev (fat); in that case, the verse would forbid cooking a young animal in "its mother's fat." This prohibition would avoid the economic loss involved in slaughtering two animals, one of whom could still bear more young. (See Carol Meyers' discussion of Jack Sasson's research in Exodus, 2005, p. 203.) —Ed.]

TITHING REGULATIONS (14:22–29)

Like the dietary laws, obedience to the laws of tithing is considered another requisite for inclusion in God's holy community. Tithing is a type of taxation system, whereby a tenth of what one produced in the fields, vines, and orchards, together with the firstlings of one's herds, is to be consecrated to God. In Deuteronomy the injunction applies to the entire household, women and men alike, who are to rejoice together in God's presence as they consume these tithes at the central sanctuary. (See also Leviticus 27:30–33 and Numbers 18:21–32.)

24–26. The stipulation allowing for money to be substituted for agricultural products or animals great for you, should you be unable to transport them, because the place where your God יהוה has chosen to establish the divine name is far from you and because your God יהוה has blessed you,²⁵ you may convert them into money. Wrap up the money and take it with you to the place that your God has chosen,²⁶ and spend the money on anything you want—cattle, sheep, wine, or other intoxicant, or anything you may desire. And you shall feast there, in the presence of your God יהוה, and rejoice with your household.

²⁷But do not neglect the [family of the] Levite in your community, for he has no hereditary portion as you have.²⁸ Every third year you shall bring out the full tithe of your yield of that year, but leave it within your settlements.²⁹ Then the [family of the] Levite, who has no hereditary portion as you have, and the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow in your settlements shall come and eat their fill, so that your God יהוה may bless you in all the enterprises you undertake.

תָּכַל שְׁאַתּוֹ כִּי־יְרַחֵק מִמֶּלֶךְ הַמּוֹקָם אֲשֶׁר
יִבְחַר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם לְשׁוֹם שְׁמוֹ שֵׁם כִּי
יִבְרַכְתֶּן יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם: ²⁵ וְנִתְתַּחַת בְּכֶסֶף
וְצְרָתָה הַפְּסָקָה בִּידָךְ וְהַלְכָתָה אֶל־הַמּוֹקָם
אֲשֶׁר יִבְחַר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם בָּוֹ: ²⁶ וְנִתְתַּחַת
הַפְּסָקָה בְּכָל־אֲשֶׁר־תָּאֹהֶב נַפְשְׁךָ בְּבָקָר
וּבְצָאן וּבְלִינָה וּבְשָׂבָר וּבְכָל אֲשֶׁר תְּשַׁאֲלֶךָ
נַפְשְׁךָ וְאֲכַלְתָּ שֵׁם לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם
וְשִׁמְחַת אַתָּה וּבִתְךָ:

²⁷ וְהַלְעֵי אֲשֶׁר־בְּשֻׁעָרִיךְ לֹא תַעֲזַבְנוּ כִּי אֵין
לוֹ חָלֵק וְנִנְחַלָּה עָמָךְ: ²⁸ ס מִקְצָה אֲשֶׁר
שָׁנִים תֹּצִיא אֶת־כָּל־מַעַשֵּׂר תְּבוֹאָתֶךָ
בְּשָׁנָה הַהּוּא וְהַחַטָּאת בְּשֻׁעָרֵךְ: ²⁹ וּבְאֶת־
הַלְיָוָן כִּי אִין־לָן חָלֵק וְנִנְחַלָּה עָמָךְ וְהָגָר
וְהַיּוֹם וְהַאֲלִמָּה אֲשֶׁר בְּשֻׁעָרֵךְ וְאֲכַלְתָּ
וּשְׁבַעַו לְמַעַן יִבְרַכֶּךָ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם בְּכָל־ מַעֲשֵׂה יָדֶךָ אֲשֶׁר תַּعֲשֶׂה: ³⁰

acknowledges the logistic difficulties encountered when traveling long distances burdened by heavy loads. As seen here and in rules regarding the consumption of meat (12:15–28), Deuteronomy seeks to address the hardships created by centralization of sacrifice, particularly for those living far from Jerusalem. This legislation strives to institute practices that will make it feasible for everyone to participate in the sacred life of the community.

25. money. Literally, “silver.” Ancient Israel had no official currency system; rather, farmers exchanged standard quantities of grains, produce, and the like for fixed weights of silver. This silver might be in the form of jewelry, cast into ingots, or cut into pieces. Such currency would be easy to carry and could be exchanged for the requisite food and drink in the Chosen Place.

27–29. In the third and sixth years of the seven-year sabbatical cycle, Israelites are to give the tithe of their harvest to the needy in their own community, rather than consume it in the Chosen Place of worship.

29. the [family of the] Levite. See at 12:19. the fatherless, and the widow. These two individuals lacked the protection of an adult male. Note that the Torah does not offer a systematic way to integrate them into alternate family settings so that they could be cared for and protected by clan elders; neither are they given resources that would enable them to fend for themselves. Rather, like the Levites and like strangers living within Israel’s borders, they are placed at the mercy of others who are charged with the responsibility to provide for them. (See also at 10:18 and Eikev, Another View, p. 1108.)

DEUTERONOMY 15:1–9

15 Every seventh year you shall practice remission of debts.² This shall be the nature of the remission: all creditors shall remit the due that they claim from their fellow [Israelites]; they shall not dun their fellow [Israelites] or kin, for the remission proclaimed is of Yahweh.³ You may dun the foreigner; but you must remit whatever is due you from your kin.

4 There shall be no needy among you—since your God Yahweh will bless you in the land that your God Yahweh is giving you as a hereditary portion—⁵ if only you heed your God Yahweh and take care to keep all this Instruction that I enjoin upon you this day. 6 For your God Yahweh will bless you as promised: you will extend loans to many nations, but require none yourself; you will dominate many nations, but they will not dominate you.

7 If, however, there is a needy person among you, one of your kin in any of your settlements in the land that your God Yahweh is giving you, do not harden your heart and shut your hand against your needy kin. 8 Rather, you must open your hand and lend whatever is sufficient to meet the need. 9 Beware lest you harbor the base thought, “The

LAWS OF RELEASE IN THE SEVENTH YEAR (15:1–18)

Similar to the Jubilee laws in Leviticus 25, Deuteronomy seeks to redress certain economic inequities at regular intervals. However, whereas Leviticus 25 prescribes release regulations for a fifty-year cycle, Deuteronomy requires a seven-year adjustment.

Remission of Debt (15:1–11)

This passage articulates the ideal that there will be no needy requiring loans or other forms of assistance, since obeying God's teachings will bring blessing and avert poverty. Nevertheless, it acknowledges that needy individuals will always exist.

4–5. Deuteronomy repeatedly makes the point that plenty and well-being come not from hard

10 מִקְץ שְׁבֻעַשָׁנִים תַּעֲשֶׂה שְׁמֵתָה:
2 וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה שְׁמֵתָה שָׁמֹות בְּלִבְעֵל מִשְׁהָיְדוֹ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁאָה בְּרָעָהוּ לְאִינְגָשׁ אֶת-רְעָלָהוּ וְאֶת-אֲחֵיָה פִּירְקָרָא שְׁמֵתָה לִיהְוָה: 3 אֲתָה הַנְּכָרִי תַּגְשֵׁן וְאֲשֶׁר יִהְיֶה לְךָ אֶת-אֲחֵיךְ תַּשְׁמַט יְדֶךָ:

4 אַפְסֵפֵי לֹא יִהְיֶה בְּאָרוֹן אֲשֶׁר יִכְבְּרֶה יִבְרָכֶל יְהֹוָה בְּאָרוֹן אֲשֶׁר יִהְיֶה אֱלֹהִיךְ נְתַזְלָה נְחָלָה לְרַשְׁתָה: 5 רַק אַמְשָׁמוּעַ תְּשִׁמְעוּ בְּקוֹל יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ לְשִׁמְרֹר לְעַשֹׂות אֶת-כָּל-הַמְצָוָה הַזֹּאת אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצְוָה הַיּוֹם: 6 כִּי יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ בְּרָכֶל בְּאָשֶׁר דְּבָרָרֶל וְהַעֲבֵת גּוֹיִם רַבִּים וְאַתָּה לֹא תַּעֲבֶט וּמְשִׁלְטֶת בְּגּוֹיִם רַבִּים וְבָכָךְ לֹא יִמְשָׁלוּ: 7

7 כִּי יְהֹוָה בְּכֶם אֲבִיוֹן מְאַחַד אֲחִיכֶל בְּאַחַד שְׁעָרֵיךְ בְּאָרְצָךְ אֲשֶׁר יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ נְתַן לְךָ לֹא תִּאְמַץ אֶת-לְבָבֶךָ וְלֹא תִּקְפְּצֶךָ אֶת-יָדֶךָ מְאַחַיךְ הָאָבִיוֹן: 8 כִּי-פָתַח תִּפְתַּח אֶת-יָדֶךָ לֹו וְהַעֲבֵת תִּעֲבִיטֶן גַּדְיָה מְחִיטָתוֹ אֲשֶׁר יִחְסַר לֹו: 9 הַשְׁמֵר לְךָ פָּנִי-יְהֹוָה דָּבָר

work or good fortune but rather from God, who blesses those who follow God's instruction.

4. hereditary portion. In the Bible, the land is Israel's inheritance, promised by God to Israel's ancestors. Although women share in the blessing of its bounty, they generally do not seem to inherit land—the basis for survival. The Bible mentions several cases of women able to inherit land, such as Zelophehad's daughters (see at Numbers 27:1–11 and 36:1–12), the woman of Shunem (II Kings 4), and Job's daughters (Job 42:13–15); but these appear to be exceptions. See further at Numbers 36:11.

7–11. This passage enjoins Israelites to lend to their kin with a generous spirit even if they risk losing what they loaned in the seventh-year remission of debt.

seventh year, the year of remission, is approaching,” so that you are mean and give nothing to your needy kin—who will cry out to ייְהוָה against you, and you will incur guilt.¹⁰ Give readily and have no regrets when you do so, for in return your God ייְהוָה will bless you in all your efforts and in all your undertakings.¹¹ For there will never cease to be needy ones in your land, which is why I command you: open your hand to the poor and needy kin in your land.

¹²If a fellow Hebrew man—or woman—is sold to you, he shall serve you six years, and in the seventh year you shall set him free.¹³ When you set him free, do not let him go empty-handed:¹⁴ Furnish him out of the flock, threshing floor, and vat, with which your God ייְהוָה has blessed you.¹⁵ Bear in mind that you were slaves in the land of Egypt and your God ייְהוָה redeemed you; therefore I enjoin this commandment upon you today.

¹⁶But should he say to you, “I do not want to leave you”—for he loves you and your household

עַמּוֹלֶבֶל בְּלִיעֵל לְאָמֵר קָרְבָּה שְׁנִיתָה
הַשְׁבָּע שְׁנִת הַשְׁמְטָה וְרַעֲהָ עִנְקָה בְּאַחֲרֵיהָ
הַאֲבִיוֹן וְלֹא תַתְנַזֵּל וְקָרָא עַלְיָר אֶל-יְהוָה
וְהִיא בְּכָה חֲטָאת:¹⁰ נְתַנְתָּן תַּתְנַזֵּל וְלֹא-יַיְלַע
לְבָקָה בְּתַתְתָּה לֹא בַּי בְּגַלְלָה חֲדָבָר הַזֶּה
יִבְרָכֶל יְהוָה אֶל-חַיָּכָה בְּכָל-מַעֲשָׂךְ וּבְכָל
מַשְׁלָח יִדְךָ:¹¹ בַּי לְאַיְחָדֵל אַבְיוֹן מַקְרָב
הָאָרֶץ עַל-כֵּן אָנֹכִי מַצּוֹּר לְאָמֵר פְּתַחַנְךָ
תִּפְתַּח אַתִּידְךָ לְאַחִיךָ לְעַנְיךָ וְלְאַבְינְךָ
בְּאָרֶץ:¹²

כִּי-יִמְכֶּר לְכָאַחֲרֵי הָעָבָרִי אֲוֹ הָעָבָרִיהָ
וּבְעַדְךָ שָׁשׁ שְׁנִים וּבְשְׁנָה הַשְׁבִּיעָת
תִּשְׁלַחֱנוּ חַפְשֵׁי מַעֲמָר:¹³ וּבִי-תִּשְׁלַחֱנוּ
חַפְשֵׁי מַעֲמָר לֹא תִשְׁלַחֱנוּ רִיקָם:¹⁴ הָעֲנֵיק
תַּעֲנֵיק לֹא מַצְאֵנָה וּמַגְנֵנָה וּמַיְקֵבָה אֲשֶׁר
בְּרַכָּה יְהוָה אֶל-חַיָּכָה תַתְנַלְלָוּ:¹⁵ וּזְכָרֶת בַּי
עַבְדָּה הַיִּת בָּאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם וַיַּפְרַח יְהוָה
אֶל-חַיָּכָה עַל-כֵּן אָנֹכִי מַצּוֹּר אַתִּידְךָ בְּרַכָּה הַזֶּה
הַיּוֹם:¹⁶

וְהִיא כִּי-יִאָמֶר אֶל-יךָ לֹא אָצַא מַעֲמָר בַּי
אֲהָבָל וְאַתִּיבְתָּה כִּי-טוֹב לֹא עַמְּךָ:

Release of Debt-Servants (15:12–18)

This passage concerns the Israelite woman or man who becomes a servant as a consequence of financial problems or to fulfill a court judgment. The institution of indentured servitude was common throughout the ancient Near East.

Israelites risked becoming debt-servants when they could not repay loans, pay taxes, or meet other financial obligations. They might be forced to sell themselves or their children into debt-servitude in order to forestall financial ruin or starvation. Children could also become debt-servants after having been pledged as security on a loan that the parents were unable to repay. Because of the six-year limit on the term of servitude, the Hebrew debt-servant is in a position different from that of the foreigner taken as a prisoner of war or purchased from a foreign owner and kept as a slave for life. The Torah regulates the treatment of slaves and forbids the worst of abuses. (See also at Exodus 21:2–11 and Leviticus 25:39–54.)

12. Hebrew man—or woman. Women were more likely to be sold into servitude on account of the debts of their fathers or husbands, rather than because of debts they themselves incurred. Exodus 21:7–11 provides special rules for the daughter sold into servitude by her parents. In that case, the woman would have been treated as a wife for one of the men in the household; therefore, marital law applied to her, and she would not be expected to leave the household.

and is happy with you—¹⁷you shall take an awl and put it through his ear into the door, and he shall become your slave in perpetuity. Do the same with your female slave.¹⁸When you do set either one free, do not feel aggrieved; for in the six years you have been given double the service of a hired worker. Moreover, your God יְהוָה will bless you in all you do.

¹⁹You shall consecrate to your God יְהוָה all male firstlings that are born in your herd and in your flock; you must not work your firstling ox or shear your firstling sheep.²⁰You and your household shall eat it annually before your God יְהוָה in the place that יְהוָה will choose.²¹But if it has a defect, lameness or blindness, any serious defect, you shall not sacrifice it to your God יְהוָה.²²Eat it in your settlements, the impure among you no less than the pure, just like the gazelle and the deer.²³Only you must not partake of its blood; you shall pour it out on the ground like water.

16 Observe the month of Abib and offer a passover sacrifice to your God, for it was in the

17. Do the same with your female slave. Here, in contrast to Exodus 21:7–11, male and female servants are treated equally.

18. do not feel aggrieved. As in vv. 9–10, the text anticipates the understandable reluctance by some individuals to follow these laws and offers reassurance.

LAWS ABOUT THE DEDICATION OF FIRST-BORN MALE LIVESTOCK (15:19–23)

This section establishes that a family must sacrifice and consume unblemished firstlings annually in the Chosen Place (see also 12:17–18; 14:22–29). Similar legislation in Exodus 13:11–15, Leviticus 27:26–27, and Numbers 18:15 designates the firstlings instead for the priests.

¹⁷ וְלִקְחַת אֶת־הַמְּרַצֵּע וְנִתְתַּחַת בָּאָזְנוֹ יְבָדֵלֶת וְהִיא לְכָעֵד עֲזָם וְאַפָּלָא מִתְחַדֵּת תַּעֲשֵׂה־כָּךְ: ¹⁸ לְאִזְקְשָׁה בְּעִינֶךָ בְּשַׁלְחָךְ אַתָּה חֲפֵשׁ מַעֲמָךְ בַּי מִשְׁנָה שְׁכָר שְׁבִיר עַבְדָּךְ שְׁשׁ שָׁנִים וּבְרַכְלִי יְהוָה אַלְלִיְךְ בְּכָל אֲשֶׁר תַּעֲשֶׂה: פ

¹⁹ כָּל־הַבָּכָר אֲשֶׁר יָולֵד בְּקָרָה וּבְצָאנָה הַזָּכָר תִּקְדִּישׁ לִיהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לֹא תַעֲבֶל בָּבָכָר שֹׂרֵךְ וְלֹא תָגֵן בָּכָר צָאןֶךְ: ²⁰ לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ תַּאכְלֵנָה שָׁנָה בָּמְקוֹם אֲשֶׁר־יְבָחר יְהוָה אֶתְּחָתָה וּבִתְּחָתָה: ²¹ וְכֵיר יְהוָה בְּזֹ מָום פְּטַח אֹו עֹזֶר בְּלִ מְוּמָה רָע לֹא תַזְבִּחַנּוּ לִיהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ: ²² בְּשֻׁעָרִיךְ תַּאכְלֵנָה הַטְמָא וְהַטְהוֹר יְחִידָה בְּצָבֵב וּכְאֵיל: ²³ רַק אֶת־דְּמָמוֹ לֹא תַאכְלֵל עַל־הָאָרֶץ תַּשְׁפְּכָנוּ בְּמִים: פ

20 שְׁמֹל אֶת־חַדֵּשׁ הָאָבִיב וְעַשֵּׂית פְּסַח לִיהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בְּיַד־בְּחַדֵּשׁ הָאָבִיב הוֹצִיאָךְ

LAWS ABOUT THE PILGRIMAGE FESTIVALS (16:1–17)

These rules for the observance of the three major festivals account for the fact that Israelites are now to celebrate in the Chosen Place, rather than in their own local communities.

1–8. The Passover (Pesach) celebration commemorates God's freeing Israel from Egypt. The highlight of the pilgrimage to God's Chosen Place is the sacrifice and consumption of a domesticated animal, with unleavened bread eaten for the duration of the weeklong festival; a solemn gathering is to be held on the last day. Whereas other Passover regulations envision Israelites eating the sacrifice in their homes (see Exodus 12:46), Deuteronomy permits it only in the central sanctuary, a stipulation month of Abib, at night, that your God freed you from Egypt.² You shall slaughter the passover sacrifice for your God, יהוה, from the flock and the herd, in the place where יהוה will choose to establish the divine name.³ You shall not eat anything leavened with it; for seven days thereafter you shall eat unleavened bread, bread of distress—for you departed from the land of Egypt hurriedly—so that you may remember the day of your departure from the land of Egypt as long as you live.⁴ For seven days no leaven shall be found with you in all your territory, and none of the flesh of what you slaughter on the evening of the first day shall be left until morning.

⁵You are not permitted to slaughter the passover sacrifice in any of the settlements that your God יהוה is giving you;⁶ but at the place where your God יהוה will choose to establish the divine name, there alone shall you slaughter the passover sacrifice, in the evening, at sundown, the time of day when you departed from Egypt.⁷ You shall cook and eat it at the place that your God יהוה will choose; and in the morning you may start back on your journey home.⁸ After eating unleavened bread six days, you shall hold a solemn gathering for your God יהוה on the seventh day: you shall do no work.

⁹You shall count off seven weeks; start to count the seven weeks when the sickle is first put to the standing grain.¹⁰ Then you shall observe the Feast of Weeks for your God, יהוה, offering your free-will contribution according as your God יהוה has blessed you.¹¹ You shall rejoice before your God

יהוה אלְהִיךְ מִמְצָרִים לֵילָה:² וּזְבַחַת פֶּסַח לִיהְנָה אֶלְהִיךְ צָאן וּבָקָר בַּמְקוֹם אֲשֶׁר יִבְחַר יְהוָה לְשִׁכְנָה שְׁמוֹ שְׁם:³ לְאַתְּ תְּאַכֵּל עַלְיוֹ חַמֵּץ שְׁבָעַת יְמִים תְּאַכֵּל עַלְיוֹ מִצּוֹת לְחֵם עֲנֵי כִּי בְּחֻפּוֹן יֵצָא תְּמִרֵץ מִצְרִים לְמַעַן תַּזְפֵּר אֶתְיוֹם צָאתֶךָ מִאֶרֶץ מִצְרִים כָּל יְמֵי חַיֶּיךְ⁴ וְלֹא יִרְאֶה לְךָ שְׁאָר בְּכָל־גִּבְלָךְ שְׁבָעַת יְמִים וְלֹא־יַלְּזִין מִנְּדָבָשָׂר אֲשֶׁר תִּזְבַּח בְּעַרְבָּה בַּיּוֹם הַרְאֵשׁוֹן לְבָקָר:

⁵ לֹא תַּוְكַּל לִזְבַּח אֶת־הַפֶּסַח בְּאֶחָד שְׁעָרֵיךְ אֲשֶׁר־יְהוָה אֶלְהִיךְ נָתַן לְךָ⁶ בְּפִי אֱמֶת־אֶל־הַמְּקוֹם אֲשֶׁר־יִבְחַר יְהוָה אֶלְהִיךְ לְשִׁכְנָה שְׁמוֹ שְׁם תִּזְבַּח אֶת־הַפֶּסַח בְּעַרְבָּה בְּבוֹא הַשְׁמֵשׁ מוֹעֵד צָאתֶךָ מִמְצָרִים:⁷ וּבְשִׁלְתָּת וְאַכְלָת בַּמְקוֹם אֲשֶׁר יִבְחַר יְהוָה אֶלְהִיךְ בְּבָקָר וְהַלְכָת לְאַחֲלֵיךְ⁸ שְׁשַׁת יְמִים תְּאַכֵּל מִצּוֹת וּבַיּוֹם הַשְׁבִּיעֵי עַצְרָת לִיהְנָה אֶלְהִיךְ לֹא תַּעֲשֶׂה מְלָאכָה:⁹ שְׁבָעַת שְׁבָעַת תִּסְפְּרֶלְךָ מִמִּחְלָל חַרְמָשׁ בְּקִמְהָה תְּחַל לִסְפָּר שְׁבָעָה שְׁבָעּוֹת:¹⁰ וּשְׁשִׁית חֵג שְׁבָעּוֹת לִיהְנָה אֶלְהִיךְ מִסְטָן גְּרֹבֶת יְדוֹךְ אֲשֶׁר תַּתְּנוּ כְּאֶשֶּׁר יִבְרָכֶךָ יְהֹוָה אֶלְהִיךְ¹¹ וְשְׁמִיחָתָ לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה אֶלְהִיךְ

that creates additional problems that the laws try to resolve. The language of the regulations uses male singular pronouns; but as 12:12 makes clear, women are expected to share in sacral meals. The problem for most women and many men would have been the distance to the Chosen Place.

9–12. The Feast of Weeks (that is, Shavuot) comes seven weeks after the beginning of the spring harvest. It, too, requires pilgrimage to the Chosen Place and is highlighted by a freewill offering that reflects the extent of God's blessing. As is typical of Deuteronomy, the joyous celebration is to be shared by a broad section of society.

II. The entire household, including the stranger, fatherless, and widow, is included in the injunction to rejoice before God. Although the Israel-with your son and daughter, your male and female slave, the [family of the] Levite in your communities, and the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow in your midst, at the place where your God יְהוָה will choose to establish the divine name.¹² Bear in mind that you were slaves in Egypt, and take care to obey these laws.

DEUTERONOMY 16:12–17

¹³ After the ingathering from your threshing floor and your vat, you shall hold the Feast of Booths for seven days. ¹⁴ You shall rejoice in your festival, with your son and daughter, your male and female slave, the [family of the] Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow in your communities. ¹⁵ You shall hold a festival for your God יְהוָה seven days, in the place that יְהוָה will choose; for your God יְהוָה will bless all your crops and all your undertakings, and you shall have nothing but joy.

¹⁶ Three times a year—on the Feast of Unleavened Bread, on the Feast of Weeks, and on the Feast of Booths—all your males shall appear before your God in the place that [God] will choose. They shall not appear before יְהוָה empty-handed, ¹⁷ but each with his own gift, according to the blessing that your God יְהוָה has bestowed upon you.

ite wife is not specifically mentioned, the inclusion of daughters, female slaves, and widows suggests that wives were included as well as a matter of fact. (See further at 12:12 and Another View, p. 1134.)

13–15. The Feast of Booths (Sukkot) also is to be celebrated with the entire community, including all female and male family members and the marginalized elements of society. Blessing and joy are the primary characteristics of this seven-day festival celebrated in the Chosen Place.

14. See at v. 11.

16–17. The final command, to celebrate the three major feasts in the Chosen Place, underscores

אֱלֹהִיךְ אַתָּה וּבָנֶךְ וּבָתֶךְ וְעַבְדֶךְ וְאַמְתָּחֶךְ
וְהַלְוֵי אֲשֶׁר בְּשֻׁעְרִיךְ וְהַגָּר וְהַיִתּוּם
וְהַאֲלָמָנָה אֲשֶׁר בְּקָרְבָּךְ בָּמְקוּם אֲשֶׁר
יָבַחר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ לְשִׁבְצָן שְׁמוֹ שֵׁם:
¹² זְכָרָת כִּי־עָבֵד הָיִית בְּמִצְרָיִם וְשִׁמְרָת
וּשְׂשִׁית אֲתִיכְחַקִּים הָאַלְהָה:

¹³ חָג הַסֶּפֶת תַּעֲשֵׂה לְךָ שְׁבַעַת יְמִים
בְּאַסְפָּרְמָגְנָה וּמִיקְרָבָה: ¹⁴ וְשְׁמִיחַת בְּחִגָּה
אַתָּה וּבָנֶךְ וּבָתֶךְ וְעַבְדֶךְ וְאַמְתָּחֶךְ וְהַלְוֵי:
וְהַגָּר וְהַיִתּוּם וְהַאֲלָמָנָה אֲשֶׁר בְּשֻׁעְרִיךְ:
¹⁵ שְׁבַעַת יְמִים תַּחֲגֵל לִיהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ
בָּמְקוּם אֲשֶׁר־יָבַחר יְהוָה כִּי יָבְרָכֶךְ יְהוָה
אֱלֹהִיךְ בְּכָל תְּבוֹאָתֶךְ וּבְכָל מִعְשָׂה יָדֶךְ
וְהַיִת אָרוּשָׁמָךְ:

¹⁶ שְׁלֹשׁ פָּעָם | בָּשָׁנָה יְרָאָה כְּלִזְכּוֹר
אֲתִפְנֵי | יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ בָּמְקוּם אֲשֶׁר יָבַחר
בְּחִגָּה הַמְצֻוֹת וּבְחִגָּה הַשְׁבֻעוֹת וּבְחִגָּה הַסֶּכֶות
וְלֹא יְרָאָה אֲתִפְנֵי יְהוָה רִיקָם: ¹⁷ אֲישׁ
בְּמִתְנַת יְדָךְ בְּבָרְכַת יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ אֲשֶׁר נְתַנוּ לְךָ:

gender inequality in Israelite community festivals. Each feast requires the offering of a gift, which reflects the blessing that God has bestowed upon the individual making the offering. Who is required to appear before God and bring a gift reflecting God's blessing? "All your males" (v. 16) are the ones who must see God's "face." [What this rule is meant to convey about females is not clear, especially given that 12:12 and other passages expect women to be present during festival celebrations as well. Assessing the relationship between obligations and exemptions is difficult. (See also Another View, p. 1134.) —Ed.]

—Beth Alpert Nakhai

Another View

AN IMPORTANT ISSUE in this parashah is the centralization of religious life at the one chosen sanctuary. Yet the wording of several instructions raises at least two questions about the inclusion of women.

First, daughters and female slaves are commanded to celebrate two of the pilgrimage festivals—Shavuot (16:11) and Sukkot (16:14), but not Passover (16:5–8)—along with marginal individuals like widows and orphans. (See also 12:12.) But why are wives not mentioned? The command addressed to the head of household apparently includes the man's wife as the senior female of the household; the head of the household, when male, thus stands for both members of the conjugal pair (see also Mishpatim, Another View, p. 445). This implicit inclusion of the wife perhaps authorizes her to act on behalf of her husband should he be unable for any reason to make the pilgrimage trip. In fact, listing her separately would have precluded her status as “second-in-command.”

The summary of the stipulations for the three pilgrim festivals presents a second problem, for it specifies that “all your males” shall come to the Chosen Place (16:16). Why are women not mentioned? Some have suggested that Deuteronomy exempts women because the journey might be too difficult for them, especially those with young children. But another possibility acknowledges that agrarian households included animals that could not be left untended for close to two weeks (the weeklong holiday plus travel time). As the chief household managers (see Proverbs 31:10–31), women were the natural ones to maintain the household at such times. Thus, the all-inclusive injunction for everyone to participate in the Sukkot festival every seventh year that is found elsewhere in Deuteronomy (31:10–12) may be idealistic. Alternatively, the insistence on women's participation on that occasion may emphasize that they too should experience the special covenant renewal of the seventh-year celebration.

The wording of several instructions raises questions about the inclusion of women.

Twenty-first-century expectations for gender equality in the Torah are unrealistic. Because Israelite society was organized by lineage units, Deuteronomy addresses many of its instructions to the heads of households (usually male), who bear the main responsibility for fulfilling the Torah's cultic requirements. Yet, although women often are not addressed explicitly in the pilgrimage regulations, they are not forbidden to participate; in fact, several texts indicate their presence. In this respect, the festival commands of Deuteronomy seem more inclusive than comparable rules in Exodus (compare Exodus 23:14–17).

—Carol Meyers

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

Together with your households, you shall feast there before your God זְהָרֶת (12:7). The use of the phrase “your households” (literally “your houses”) immediately raises questions about who is included in this designation. Subsequent verses in this parashah (12:12, 18; 16:11, 14) consistently omit wives from lists of participating household members, but they do include other women, such as daughters and female slaves. Thus, early rabbinic interpreters considered the expression for “house” here to mean “wife” (Sifrei D’varim 64); in fact, rabbinic texts often equate the two terms (Mishnah Yoma 1:1). Rabbinic sources frequently cite a statement to this effect attributed to Rabbi Yosi, who said, “All my life I never called my wife ‘my wife’ (ishti) and my ox ‘my ox.’ Instead, my wife I called ‘my house’ and my ox ‘my field’” (BT Shabbat 118b; BT Gittin 52a, among others). Indeed, in talmudic Aramaic one of the words for “wife” is related to the word for “house.” Thus, the Rabbis understood a wife to be the essence of a household, and they attached a great deal of significance to this fundamental conviction.

The responsibility to rejoice on festivals applies to everyone, both women and men.

The metaphoric connection between woman and house in the rabbinic imagination led to further elaborations, such as references to the interior organs of the woman’s body as various rooms. For example, “the sages made a simile (mashal mash’lu) with regard to the woman: the chamber, the antechamber, and the upper chamber” (Mishnah Niddah 2:5). At times, women’s sexual organs are referred to as doors, hinges, and even keys (BT B’chorot 45a).

You shall consecrate to your God הַמְלֵאָה all male firstlings (15:19). The repeated biblical insistence that the first-born be consecrated led to an entire mishnaic tractate, B’chorot, which is devoted to the legal aspects of this topic. Among many other concerns, Mishnah B’chorot inquires as to what constitutes the status of a first-born animal. Does this include, for instance, an animal that emerged from “its mother’s side,” presumably by Caesarean birth? The answer is that such a birth does not bestow first-born status on the animal since Numbers 18:15 defines the first-born as literally what “opens the womb.” Moreover, biblical law explicitly requires a “male” first-born. Thus, any sexual ambiguity, whether a lack or a doubling of external sexual organs, constitutes a blemish that disqualifies an animal from sacrificial status as a first-born (Mishnah B’chorot 6:12).

You shall rejoice in your festival (16:14). According to the Babylonian Talmud, this verse teaches that a husband is obligated to make his wife and children rejoice as part of the holiday observance. A Babylonian sage suggests that wives are made joyous with new clothes; he goes on to claim that in Babylonia women prefer colorful garments, while women in the Land of Israel prefer bleached clothes made from linen (BT P’sachim 109a). Another rabbinic tradition based on this verse prohibits weddings during the intermediary days of Passover or Sukkot, since “one should not mix up one joy with another” (BT Mo’ed Katan 8b).

Three times a year... all your males shall appear before your God הַיְהָה (16:16). The emphasis on “males” in the concluding verses of the parashah is noteworthy, especially since earlier statements imply that the entire extended household, including daughters and female slaves, was obligated to participate in festival observances. The exclusion of women in this verse appears to contradict the preceding passages. The Rabbis solved this contradiction by subdividing the responsibilities of rejoicing (v. 14) into various components. Accordingly, women and people with sexual ambiguities, such as the hermaphrodite and the non-sexed person, are said to be exempt from the commandment of appearing before God (Mishnah Chagigah 1:1), since the biblical verse specifies that males are to do this. “Appearance” (r’iah) entails both presence in the Temple and offering a sacrifice, since “they shall not appear before הַיְהָה empty-handed” (16:16). Talmudic discussions (BT Chagigah 4b) suggest that the exemption of women from this particular obligation makes sense since bringing a sacrifice in this instance is a time-bound commandment (festival observances take place three times a year on specific days on the calendar). According to an early rabbinic principle, women are exempt from commandments that must be performed at fixed times (Mishnah Kiddushin 1:7). However, the responsibility to rejoice applies to everyone (Tosefta Chagigah 1:4 and BT Chagigah 6b); thus, in that aspect of the festival celebration, women and men are equally obligated.

—Charlotte Elisheva Fonrobert

• • • • •

Contemporary Reflection

“YOU ARE WHAT YOU EAT,” the common expression goes. I sometimes think of this saying in relation to kashrut (that is, keeping kosher).

What do the choices that we make about what we eat reveal about who we really are? Many Jews today view kashrut as an outdated vestige of ancient Israelite practice, expanded upon by rabbinic Judaism, but no longer relevant to modern day life. However, the presentation of the prohibitions associated with kashrut in parashat R'eih challenges us to consider anew the purposes of kashrut.

Deuteronomy 14 tells us what animals, fish, and birds we can and cannot eat. It instructs us not to boil a kid (a young goat) in its mother’s milk, an injunction that became the basis for the rabbinic separation between milk and meat (14:21; see also Exodus 23:19 and 34:26). While many Jews today believe the biblical prohibitions against certain meat and fish to be for health reasons, parashat R'eih makes no such claim.

In fact, if this were the case, the explicit permission to give the stranger and the foreigner the foods we are forbidden to eat (14:21) would be frankly immoral. Rather, parashat R'eih, as the Torah does elsewhere, identifies the articulation of eating prohibitions strictly as part of the Israelites’ particular path to holiness: “for you are a people consecrated to your God הָנָהָר” (14:21). What is it about these prohibitions that can make us holy? Interestingly, the prohibited foods are identified as tamei . . . lachem—ritually impure “for you” (14:7, 8, 10). For this reason, it is perfectly acceptable for other people to eat them, just not for the people Israel.

Traditional and modern commentators have offered various explanations as to why particular fish, poultry, and animals are considered tahor (“ ritually pure”) and therefore acceptable to eat. But perhaps more important than the meaning of each of the details of the prohibitions is the simple fact that we are given a list of dos and don’ts that govern what we are to consume daily. According to the Torah, God asks that we abstain from eating certain foods, not because they are unhealthy or intrinsically problematic, but simply as an expression of our devotion. As with other chukim (laws that the rabbinic sages define as being without rational explanation), these prohibitions are like the requests of a beloved: we may not understand them, but we are, in essence, asked to follow them purely as an expression of our love. Daily, the observance of kashrut calls us back to a personal relationship with God.

The laws of kashrut offer a Jewish spiritual discipline that is rooted in the concrete choices and details of daily life—to be practiced in an area that seems most “mundane.” In fact, part of the beauty of kashrut is that regardless of our age, personal interests, or geographic location, we all eat, and most of us do so several times a day. While we may sometimes choose to dine alone, eating is almost universally enjoyed as a social activity. A spiritual discipline around eating is one that carries the clear message that spirituality is about far more than what we do in synagogue and on holidays; it extends into every area of our lives, every single day.

R'EIH

Kashrut reminds us again and again that Jewish spirituality is inseparable from what one might term “physical.” It teaches us that Jewish spiritual practice is about taking the most ordinary of experiences—in all aspects of our lives—and transforming them into moments of meaning, moments of connection. Kashrut provides a model for doing just that, around issues of food preparation and eating. It’s time to cook dinner: What will we make, and how will we prepare it?

What do our choices about eating reveal about who we really are?

Will we be driven by an empty stomach or considerations that extend beyond it as well? In these moments, kashrut can connect us to Jewish tradition, to other Jews, and to God. We are hungry and sit down for a meal, but before digging in, we recall that Jewish tradition offers us the practice of pausing for a blessing and a moment of gratitude. We may take this a step further and decide to put aside tzedakah regularly at dinnertime, as some of us try to do. This can be seen as a practice similar to the tithing performed in ancient times, as outlined in the verses immediately following the rules of kashrut in our parashah (14:22–29). Instead of just wolfing down our food and moving on to the next activity, we can learn from Jewish rituals to pause and turn the act of eating into a moment of heightened spiritual awareness.

Increasing numbers of Jews today are expanding their kashrut practice to incorporate additional ethical and environmental considerations. Was the food produced under conditions that respect persons and the environment? Were the workers who picked or prepared the food paid a living wage? Did the processes of production treat animals humanely? In addition to allowing these questions to influence our choices about what to eat, we can direct our tzedakah money to organizations that address these issues, like environmental and farmworker advocacy groups.

From the time of the Torah onward, Jewish tradition teaches us that the spiritual realm encompasses all of life. Kashrut and the other Jewish practices related to eating exemplify this teaching and extend beyond themselves: they stand as daily reminders to look for additional ways to turn the ordinary into moments of deeper connection and intentionality. Every moment has the potential to be one of connection. Through other mitzvot, such as the laws governing proper speech and interpersonal ethics, as well as through the less well-known but rich Jewish tradition of cultivating middot (personal qualities such as patience and generosity in judgment), we can seek to deepen our connections with each other and with God. A Jewish spiritual discipline around eating, practiced with intention, can set us on this course every day. “You are what you eat.” That is, what you choose to eat and how you choose to eat it says a lot about who you are and what kind of a life you are striving to achieve.

—Ruth H. Sohn

Voices

Merciful God

Kadya Molodowsky (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

Deuteronomy 14:2

Merciful God,
Choose another people,
Elect another.
We are tired of death and dying,
We have no more prayers.
Choose another people,
Elect another.
We have no more blood
To be a sacrifice.
Our house has become a desert.
The earth is insufficient for our graves,
No more laments for us,
No more dirges
In the old, holy books.

Merciful God,
Sanctify another country,
Another mountain.
We have strewn all the fields and every stone
With ash, with holy ash.
With the aged,
With the youthful,
And with babies, we have paid for every letter of your Ten Commandments.

Merciful God,
Raise your fiery brow,
And see the peoples of the world—
Give them the prophecies and the Days of Awe.
Your word is babbled in every language—
Teach them the deeds,
The ways of temptation.

Merciful God,
Give us simple garments
Of shepherds with their sheep,
Blacksmiths at their hammers,
Laundry-washers, skin-flayers,
And even the more base.
And do us one more favor:
Merciful God,
Deprive us of the Divine Presence of genius.

from The Primal Feast

Kim Chernin

Deuteronomy 14:3–21

“You’ll sit there until you finish your meal,” we say to the child who refuses to eat, without in the least realizing how potently we engage in this way a heated debate about identity. . . . Food is so charged, so significant, so informed with primal meaning and first impressions of life, mothering, and the world that we might well expect the communications that take place through food to carry even more weight than those that arise when a child totters about knocking into furniture or pushes a truck across the floor.

And so we come, stage by stage in this way, to adolescence, when the youth must struggle to form an image of what she is and may become. Is it a wonder, then, that she continues to express this struggle through her relationship to food?

Seder Eve

Linda Rose Parkes

Deuteronomy 16:1–8, 11

“He who is hungry, come and eat.
He who is needy, come and join our pesach.”

We have laid a place for the unknown guest.
On the table a bowl of ground almonds,
Boiled egg, fresh horseradish for the bitter herb, black grapes. Wafting in from the kitchen is the smell of cholent.

The children are red cheeked dipping matzos into watered wine.
We stammer prayers from the Haggadah in this first year of our mother’s widowhood, her grief’s long journey.

As the youngest gets up to open the door for the pilgrim hope startles us—
Planted before you died,
are the climbing yellow roses;
rocked by the tide, their steady breathing.

Widows

Rashelle Veprinski (transl. David Goldberg)

Deuteronomy 14:29; 16:11, 14

Widows—gray grass in autumn bowed to the earth.
Eyes among shadows
seek buried summers.

Naked, their grief weeps, and they shame to lift their eyes:

bowed
and bearing a dead name.

And the womb is difficult to bear pinched to silence;
faces erased
are hid beneath lashes cast down.

They are lost on every path,
and God has quieted desire;
they pick, from life’s abundant fields,
stalks of wheat left behind.

My Mother

Celia Dropkin (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

Deuteronomy 14:29, 16:11, 14

Twenty-two years old,
A widow with two small children,
My mother modestly decided
Not to be anyone’s wife again.
Her days and years continued quietly,
As if lit by a meager wax candle.
My mother became wife to no one,
But all the daily,
Yearly, nightly sighs
Of her young and affectionate being,
Of her longing blood
Seeped into me.
I knew them with my child’s heart.
And like an underground spring,
My mother’s seething, concealed longing
Flowed freely into me.
Now out of me, into the open Spurts my mother’s seething, holy, Deeply hidden lust.

from The Tapestry of Jewish Time

Nina Beth Cardin

Deuteronomy 16:1–17

If Pesach is about departures (for it recalls the Exodus from Egypt) and Shavuot is about arrivals (for it celebrates the giving of the Torah at Mount Sinai), Sukkot is about the journey. It is the holiday that best symbolizes where most of us are most of the time: somewhere in between, midway, sometimes moving, sometimes stuck, always heading—we hope—in the right direction. It reminds us that the way to get somewhere, what we do and learn along the way, where we detour and where we pause, whom we meet and whom we travel with, are as essential to the journey as is the arrival.

The Journey

Anna Ziegler

Deuteronomy 16:1–8

Instead of observing Passover this year,
I have a fight with my boyfriend outside of Krispy Kreme by the F train.
We can't decide whether or not to move forward. The night's cool and

I imagine everyone around me has a beautiful family
and books on long shelves, candles.

Fast forward twenty years and I sit at the head of a table
reading from the Haggadah.
There is nothing in me that remembers wanting this; it feels as though it's what I've always had.
And yet there was a journey—desert and forty years and starvation, the feeling of being very far away
and not believing in home.

Sukkot 2001

Julie Pelc

Deuteronomy 16:13–15

Beneath the wings of your shelter
I shudder.

You want so desperately to protect us
From the wind
Howling and blowing
Debris that hits
Our backs, our hands, our faces
We hide.

I watch as the four posts
Our stronghold
Sway lightly
And begin tipping, rocking
Leaving the ground
As the wind blows stronger, Colder.

I look up,
Pray for the spaces
In the branched roof to Grow smaller
Pray for reasons to stay here
Pray for calm.

But your shelter
Cannot shelter
Forever.

שׁופטים ◆ Shof'tim

DEUTERONOMY 16:18–21:9

Law and Order

PARASHAT SHOF'TIM (“magistrates”) continues Moses’ speech in which he delineates various legal teachings for Israel. This portion focuses on the organization of the community and the promulgation of rules to promote justice within it. Although the logic behind the order of laws in the Bible is not always apparent, in this parashah we can see the relationship between many of the sections. These laws tend to be of a practical nature—for the Bible rarely theorizes or philosophizes. Yet taken together, they draw a picture of the type of ideal society that Deuteronomy envisions. In such a community, justice functions as the operative principle; and all individuals, even the king, come under its rules. Every member of society is entitled to the same justice, in both religious and civil matters. (These two areas of life were not distinguished in ancient times as they are today.) While mainly concerned with the internal workings of the community, justice also applies to the conduct of war. Along with the idea that people deserve a fair government, Deuteronomy expresses the even more important idea that the failure to perform justice constitutes a failure to heed God’s commandments, which endangers the future of Israel.

Deuteronomy does not, for the most part, envision women serving as public officials and certainly not as priests or soldiers. However, women figure in a number of laws, especially in the following parashah (Ki Teitzei). Most of the laws are phrased in the grammatical masculine (the linguistically unmarked term that often includes both genders); but in some cases, to emphasize that the legislation concerns women and men, the text explicitly addresses both genders. For example, 17:2–5 stipulates that “the man or the woman” who engages in idolatrous worship will be put to death. Although the laws in Deuteronomy do not consider women to be the responsible party in their own right in all matters, they are protected when they might be victims and prosecuted when they are guilty of crimes.

These laws protect women from victimization and prosecute them when they commit crimes.

—Adele Berlin

Outline—

I. THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM AND PUBLIC OFFICIALS (16:18–18:22)

- A. The judicial system (16:18–17:13)
- B. Kings (17:14–20)
- C. Levitical priests (18:1–8)
- D. Prophets (18:9–22)

II. SAFEGUARDING THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM (19:1–21)

- A. Cities of refuge (vv. 1–13)
- B. Boundary markers (v. 14)
- C. Witnesses (vv. 15–21)

III. RULES FOR WAR (20:1–20)

IV. UNSOLVED MURDER (21:1–9)

16:18

You shall appoint magistrates and officials for your tribes, in all the settlements that your God יהוה is giving you, and they shall govern the people with due justice.¹⁹ You shall not judge unfairly: you shall show no partiality; you shall not take bribes,

15 שִׁפְטִים וּשְׂטָרִים תַּתֵּן לֶךְ בָּכֶל־
שְׁעָרֵיךְ אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכְ נָתַן לְךָ
לְשְׁבֻטָּיךְ וּשְׁפָטוּ אֶת־הָעָם מִשְׁפָט־צֶדֶק:
19 לֹא־תַּתְּנַחֲמֵד מִשְׁפָט לֹא תִּכְרַב פָּנִים וְלֹא־

The Judicial System and Public Officials (16:18–18:22)

For Deuteronomy, the so-called “civil” and “religious” authorities all fall under the constraints of the justice system. According to Bernard Levinson, this unit provides what appears to be “the first blueprint for a constitutional government” in which “no single branch of government and no single religious institution should have sole power” (“Deuteronomy,” Jewish Study Bible, 2004, p. 403).

THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM (16:18–17:13)

This section commands the community (not God) to appoint lay people (not priests or prophets) to serve as professional judges and judicial administrators. Such individuals appear to be selected from among the existing chiefs, military officers, or other types of officials (see 1:15). They are charged with the vital task of executing justice impartially. According to Nili Fox, in the monarchic period the king probably appointed these government officials, who often worked in conjunction with the elders in administering justice (In the Service of the King, 2000, pp. 165, 172). The text does not mention any qualifications or training for these “magistrates and officials,” nor is their gender specified, for the language is couched in the default grammatical masculine. One may assume that in most cases they would be men, but the possibility of a woman serving as a judge (like Deborah) should not be excluded (see Judges 4–5).

18. in all the settlements. Although Deuteronomy centralizes sacrifice (see at 12:2–14), it makes no attempt to centralize the court system; people must be able to obtain justice locally. The Hebrew term translated here as “settlements” is literally “gates,” the area at the entrance to a walled settlement where people would come together to conduct their commercial and legal affairs. For example, in Ruth 4:1, Boaz and the unnamed redeemer engage in the transfer of real estate and marriage rights at the gate, in the presence of ten representative elders. In Proverbs 31 (the “Woman of Valor” passage), the husband’s position “in the gates” shows him to be a prominent citizen (v. 23); and the woman’s works are publicly recognized “in the gates” (v. 31).

19. you shall not take bribes. Giving bribes or gifts was common in the ancient world and is often

- The military regulations in our parashah deal with the liminal aspects of war.

ANOTHER VIEW ► II58

- Apparently the interval between betrothal and marriage could be problematic.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► II58

- Where do we find out about the ways that women approach righteousness and justice?

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► II60

- War and détente will go on . . . / we can never break free from the dark and degrading past.

VOICES ► II62

for bribes blind the eyes of the discerning and upset the plea of the just.²⁰ Justice, justice shall you pursue, that you may thrive and occupy the land that your God יְהוָה is giving you.

²¹You shall not set up a sacred post—any kind of pole beside the altar of your God יְהוָה that you may make—²²or erect a stone pillar; for such your God יְהוָה detests.

17 You shall not sacrifice to your God יְהוָה an ox or a sheep that has any defect of a serious kind, for that is abhorrent to your God יְהוָה.

²If there is found among you, in one of the settlements that your God יְהוָה is giving you, a man or woman who has affronted your God יְהוָה and transgressed the Covenant—³turning to the worship of other gods and bowing down to them, to the sun or the moon or any of the heavenly host, mentioned in the Bible (as in Exodus 23:8; I Samuel 8:3). A bribe may have been offered in order to secure a favorable decision or perhaps just to have the case heard in court.

20. Justice, justice. The repetition of the word tzedek emphasizes that the pursuit of justice is vital to Israelite society. This verse expresses a recurrent theme in Deuteronomy, that the failure to follow God's instructions will result in the loss of the Promised Land.

16:21–17:1. This passage condemns as affronts to God both Canaanite religious practices and wrongly performed Israelite religious practices. The juxtaposition of religious and civil laws here may emphasize that improprieties of civil justice are no less offensive to God than improper religious performance.

21. sacred post. Heb. asherah, also the name of a Canaanite goddess. Some contemporary scholars think that this goddess may have been popular among Israelites, who perhaps conceived of her as

תַּקְחֶה שְׁחִדָּר פִּי הַשְׁחִידָר יְעֹזֵר עִינֵּי חֲכָמִים
וַיִּסְלַף דְּבָרַי צְדִיקִים: ²⁰צְדָקָה צְדָקָה תְּרַדְּךָ
לְמַעַן תְּחִיה וַיְרַשְׁתָּ אֶת-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר-יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ:

²¹לֹא-תַחֲטִיעْ לְךָ אַשְׁרָה בֶּל-עַזْ אֶצְלָ מִזְבֵּחַ
יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ אֲשֶׁר תַּעֲשֵׂה-לְךָ: ²²וְלֹא-תַקְיִם לְךָ מִצְבָּה אֲשֶׁר שָׁנָא יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ: ס
יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לִיהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ שָׂוֵר וְשָׂה
אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה בָּזְמָום כָּל דָבָר רָע כִּי תַזְבִּיבָה
יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ הוּא: ס

²פִּי יִמְצָא בְּקָרְבָּן בְּאַחֲרֵ שְׁעִירָה אֲשֶׁר-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ אִישׁ אָוֹדָשָׁה אֲשֶׁר
יַעֲשֶׂה אֶת-הָרָע בְּעֵינֵי יְהוָה-אֱלֹהֵיךְ לְעֶבֶר
בְּרִיתְךָ: ³וְלֹא-וַיַּעֲבֹד אֱלֹהִים אֶחָדים
וַיִּשְׂתַחֲוו לָהֶם וַיְלַשְׁמַשׁ | אֲוֹ לִירְחָ אָוֹ
לְכָל-צְבָא הַשְׁמִינִים אֲשֶׁר לְאַצְוּרִיתִי:

the consort of Israel's (male) God. The asherah here may refer to the symbol (a tree or wooden post), not to the goddess herself. (See also at 12:3 and Exodus 34:13.) Nevertheless, Deuteronomy is fiercely monotheistic and tolerates no hint of what it considers syncretism (the combination of Israelite and non-Israelite religious practices) or idolatry.

17:2–7. This passage applies to apostates the procedure for capital punishment. The case involves “a man or woman” (a phrase repeated three times in vv. 2, 5) who has transgressed the covenant by engaging in idolatrous practices, a severe transgression with a clear penalty (see 13:13–17). Notice that the text here considers women autonomous persons, responsible for their own actions (not under the control of fathers or husbands) and therefore potentially guilty of a capital offense. In contrast, the passage on prophets (18:15–22) is phrased solely in the masculine, although women prophets existed in the Bible and ancient Near East. (See V'zot Hab'rachah, Another View, p. 1284.)

something I never commanded⁴—and you have been informed or have learned of it, then you shall make a thorough inquiry. If it is true, the fact is established, that abhorrent thing was perpetrated in Israel,⁵ you shall take the man or the woman who did that wicked thing out to the public place, and you shall stone that man or woman to death.—⁶A person shall be put to death only on the testimony of two or more witnesses; no one shall be put to death on the testimony of a single witness.—⁷Let the hands of the witnesses be the first to put [the condemned] to death, followed by the hands of the rest of the people. Thus you will sweep out evil from your midst.

⁸If a case is too baffling for you to decide, be it a controversy over homicide, civil law, or as-

⁴ וְהַגְדָּלֵךְ וְשִׁמְעַת וְרִשְׁתַּת הַיְטָב וְהַנֶּה אֲמֹת נְבוֹן הַדָּבָר גַּעֲשָׂתָה הַתוֹעֲבָה הַזֹּאת בִּיְשְׁرָאֵל: ⁵ וְהַוֹּצָאת אֶת־הָאִיש הַהְוֹא אוֹ אֶת־הָאִשָּׁה הַהְוֹא אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂו אֶת־הַדָּבָר הַרְעָה הַזֹּהֵל אֶל־שְׁעָרֵי אֶת־הָאִיש אֲוֹ אֶת־הָאִשָּׁה וִסְקַלְתֶּם בְּאָבָנִים וּמְתוּ: ⁶ עַל־פִּי שְׁנַים עֲדִים אֲוֹ שְׁלַשָּׁה עֲדִים יוֹמָת הַמְּתָת לֹא יוֹמָת עַל־פִּי עַד אַחֲרֵי: ⁷ יְדֵי הַעֲדִים תַּהֲיֵה־בָּו בְּרָאשָׁנָה לְהַמִּיתָו וַיַּדְכַּע בְּלַדְעָם בְּאַחֲרָנָה וּבְעִירָת הַרְעָה מִקְרָבָה: ⁸ כִּי יִפְלָא מִמֶּנָּךְ דָּבָר לְמַשְׁפַּט בֵּין־ךְדָּם לְךְדָּם בֵּין־דָּין וּבֵין נָגָע לְנָגָע דְּבָרִי רִיבָת

4. thorough inquiry. The court establishes an apostate's guilt through physical evidence or, more likely, the testimony of at least two witnesses (v. 6).

6. two or more witnesses. The principle of a minimum of two witnesses is articulated again in 19:15 and Numbers 35:30. The Bible does not specify whether women could serve as witnesses. [In the Dead Sea Scrolls (2nd century B.C.E.), women are encouraged to testify as a witness against their husband in certain matters (see Tal Ilan, "Women," Encyclopaedia Judaica, 2nd edn., 2007, 21:164). This evidence suggests that women were able to serve as witnesses at certain early periods, perhaps also in the time of the Bible. —Ed.] A witness has a crucial role to play in the verdict, so giving false testimony constitutes a serious crime (19:15–21). In the story of Susanna (in the Apocrypha), two corrupt elders falsely accuse Susanna, a young and virtuous wife, of having an encounter with a young man other than her husband. They do so in an attempt to get even with Susanna for refusing their own advances; but when the wise Daniel interrogates the witnesses separately to see if their reports agree, he discovers the ruse.

7. the hands of the rest of the people. While public executions are not tasteful to many in contemporary Western societies, the participation of the entire community shows that everyone has a stake in "sweeping out evil" from the community. This practice does not delegate the "dirty work" to professional executioners, but instead holds all the people—or at least a body of their representatives—responsible for carrying out the sentence. (It remains unclear as to whether or not this includes women.)

8–13. This passage establishes that the priest or lay magistrate at the central sanctuary adjudicates cases that cannot be solved at the local level, a system similar to that described in Exodus 18:17–23.

8. If a case is too baffling. The baffling case involves a situation that lacks two witnesses or any other evidence upon which the local judges can ascertain the truth of the matter. When human beings cannot adjudicate, the case goes to the divine authority, so that God, through God's representatives, can determine the verdict (see 19:17; I Kings 8:31–32); ancient Near Eastern law collections have similar procedures. Before the centralization of sacrifice (the hallmark of Deuteronomy), people would have brought such a case to the local sanctuary.

sault—matters of dispute in your courts—you shall promptly repair to the place that your God will have chosen,⁹ and appear before the levitical priests, or the magistrate in charge at the time, and present your problem. When they have announced to you the verdict in the case,¹⁰ you shall carry out the verdict that is announced to you from that place that יהוה chose, observing scrupulously all their instructions to you.¹¹ You shall act in accordance with the instructions given you and the ruling handed down to you; you must not deviate from the verdict that they announce to you either to the right or to the left.¹² Should either party act presumptuously and disregard the priest charged with serving there your God, or the magistrate, that party shall die. Thus you will sweep out evil from Israel:¹³ all the people will hear and be afraid and will not act presumptuously again.

¹⁴If, after you have entered the land that your God יהוה has assigned to you, and taken possession

Now, with the absence of local sanctuaries, divine judgment can be rendered only at the central sanctuary (Bernard Levinson, “Deuteronomy,” Jewish Study Bible, 2004, pp. 404–05).

9. levitical priests. This verse seems to refer to the Levites serving as priests at the central sanctuary (see at 18:1).

or the magistrate. Some interpreters think that the levitical priests rendered decisions on ritual matters, while the lay judges decided non-ritual cases. While this seems to be the view of II Chronicles 19:8, Deuteronomy 17:8 lists only non-ritual crimes.

10–13. The text emphasizes the need to adhere to the judgment rendered and to carry it out as prescribed. The fact that disregarding the verdict itself becomes a capital offense stresses the seriousness of the justice system and the safeguards Deuteronomy imposes to preserve it. At the same time, Deuteronomy limits the authority of human officials (see below).

בְשָׁעֵריךְ וּקְמַת וְעַלְיתָ אֶל-הַמִּקְומָם אֲשֶׁר יִבְחַר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךְ בּוֹ: ⁹ וְבָאתָ אֶל-הַפְּנִים הַלְוִים וְאֶל-הַשְּׁפֵט אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה בְּיָמָיו הָם וְדָרַשְׁתָּ וְהִגִּידוּ לְךָ אֶת דְּבָר הַמִּשְׁפֵט: ¹⁰ וְעַשְׂתָּ עַל-פִּי הַדָּבָר אֲשֶׁר יִגְידוּ לְךָ מִן-הַמִּקְומָם הַהוּא אֲשֶׁר יִבְחַר יְהוָה וְשִׁמְרָתָ לְעָשׂוֹת בְּכָל אֲשֶׁר יִוּרֹוק: ¹¹ עַל-פִּי הַתּוֹרָה אֲשֶׁר יוּרֹוק וְעַל-הַמִּשְׁפֵט אֲשֶׁר-יִאמְרוּ לְךָ תַּעֲשֵׂה לֹא תַּסְוֵר מִן-הַדָּבָר אֲשֶׁר-יִגְידוּ לְךָ יְמִין וְשִׁמְאל: ¹² וְהָאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר-יִעַשֶּׂה בְּזֹדוֹן לְבָלָתִי שְׁמַע אֶל-הַכֹּהן הַעֲמֵד לְשִׁרְתָּ שֶׁם אַתָּ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךְ אוֹ אֶל-הַשְּׁפֵט וּמִתְּהִיא הַהְוָא וּבְעֵרָתְּ הַרְעָ מִישראל: ¹³ וְכָל-הָעָם יִשְׁמֻעוּ יוּרֹאוּ וְלֹא יוּקְדוּ עוֹד: ¹⁴ כִּי-תַּבָּא אֶל-הָأָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךְ נָתַן לְךָ וְירַשְׁתָּה וְיִשְׁבְּתָה בָּה וְאִמְרָתָ

KINGS (17:14–20)

The Bible considers a king to be subordinate to God and the legal system; hence, in a remarkable move, it puts limitations on royal power. Unlike in the Laws of Hammurabi and other ancient Near Eastern texts, the king does not promulgate law but instead is subject to it. In Deuteronomy, the king does not explicitly figure in the local or central courts. Elsewhere in the Bible, kings function as the overall guardians of justice. Yet they serve as judges in only a few cases, as when Solomon decides the case of the prostitutes’ two babies (I Kings 3:16–28) or when David deals with the “wise woman” of Tekoa, who presents a fabricated case calculated to make David bring his son Absalom back home (II Samuel 14). Perhaps even more surprising, he must continually read and obey the Teaching (torah). This section presents a picture here of a “constitutional monarchy” in which the king “will not act haughtily toward his fellows” (v. 20).

of it and settled in it, you decide, “I will set a king over me, as do all the nations about me,”¹⁵ you shall be free to set a king over yourself, one chosen by your God יְהוָה. Be sure to set as king over yourself one of your own people; you must not set a foreigner over you, one who is not your kin.¹⁶ Moreover, he shall not keep many horses or send people back to Egypt to add to his horses, since יְהוָה has warned you, “You must not go back that way again.”¹⁷ And he shall not have many wives, lest his heart go astray; nor shall he amass silver and gold to excess.

¹⁸When he is seated on his royal throne, he shall have a copy of this Teaching written for him on a

אֲשֶׁר עַלְיָה מֶלֶךְ בְּכָל־הָגּוּם אֲשֶׁר סִבְיבָתֵי:¹⁵ שׁוֹם תְּשִׁים עַלְיָה מֶלֶךְ אֲשֶׁר יְבָתֵּר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בּוֹ מִקְרָב אֲחִיךְ תְּשִׁים עַלְיָה מֶלֶךְ לֹא תַּוְלִל תְּתֵת עַלְיָה אִישׁ נָכְרִי אֲשֶׁר לֹא־אֲחִיךְ הוּא:¹⁶ רַק לְאִירְבָּה־לֹא סְוִסִּים וְלֹא־יִשְׁיב אֶת־הָעָם מִצְרִים לְמַעַן הַרְבּוֹת סָוס וַיְהִי אָמֵר לְכָם לֹא תַּסְפּוּן לְשׁוֹב בְּדֶרֶךְ הַזֹּהַר עוֹד: ¹⁷ וְלֹא יִרְבָּה־לֹא נְשִׁים וְלֹא יִסּוּר לְבָבוֹ וּכְסִף וּזְהֻבָּה לֹא יִרְבְּה־לֹא מֵאָד:

¹⁸ וְהִי בְּשַׁבְּתוֹ עַל כֶּסֶף מִמְלָכָתוֹ וּכְתָבָלוֹ אֲתִ-מְשִׁנָּה הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת עַל־סְפִּיר

14. after you have entered the land. Although modern scholars date some parts of Deuteronomy to the time of Josiah (late 7th century B.C.E.) and other parts to the Babylonian exile (6th century B.C.E.), the book presents itself as reporting what took place just before the Israelites would cross the Jordan and enter Canaan.

“as do all the nations about me.” This statement, put into the mouths of the Israelites, anticipates the reason found in I Samuel 8:5 for requesting a king: because the other nations have kings. Such a request presumes that Israel must have this form of centralized government, rather than the decentralized tribal system, in order to be competitive with its neighbors, especially when it comes to military campaigns.

16. he shall not keep many horses. This and the following verse use the portrait of Solomon to criticize the dangers of excessive royal power. According to I Kings 5:6 and 10:26, Solomon had 40,000 stalls of horses, 12,000 horsemen, 1,400 chariots, and 12,000 horses, which he imported from Egypt and Kue. These large numbers function as a way to show Solomon’s wealth and grandeur—precisely what Deuteronomy seeks to limit.

17. he shall not have many wives. This criticism also is built on the portrait of Solomon, who reportedly had a thousand wives (I Kings 11:1–5), many of them foreigners with whom he made political marriages. Such marriages were common in the ancient world for their diplomatic benefits, for they worked to assure peaceful relations between the royal families and thus their countries. The fact that Israelite kings had foreign wives of royal lineage shows they were players on the international scene. The Bible is concerned with the importation of foreign wives, because it believed these wives introduced their own forms of foreign worship into the royal court, thereby “leading the people astray” with idolatrous practices. Jezebel stands out as a prime example, for this Phoenician princess and wife of King Ahab worshipped Baal—and led her husband to do so as well (I Kings 16:31–33; 21:25–26).

nor shall he amass silver and gold. The text also condemns accumulating large wealth, a danger in most monarchies. This, too, reflects the portrait of Solomon in I Kings 10.

18. a copy of this Teaching. Levitical priests will write a copy of the Teaching for the king, who must read it regularly. The word for “Teaching,” torah, does not refer to the so-called Five Books of Moses, nor probably even to the book of Deuteronomy, but rather to this section pertaining to the king, or to other legal portions of Deuteronomy.

scroll by the levitical priests.¹⁹ Let it remain with him and let him read in it all his life, so that he may learn to revere his God, יְהוָה, to observe faithfully every word of this Teaching as well as these laws.²⁰ Thus he will not act haughtily toward his fellows or deviate from the Instruction to the right or to the left, to the end that he and his descendants may reign long in the midst of Israel.

18 The levitical priests, the whole tribe of Levi, shall have no territorial portion with Israel. They shall live only off יְהוָה's offerings by fire as their portion,² and shall have no portion among their brother tribes: יְהוָה is their portion, as promised.

מִלֶּפֶנְיֵי הַכֹּהֲנִים הַלְוִימִים: ¹⁹ וְהִי תְּהִיא עַמְּךָ
וְקָרָא בָּם בְּלִי־מִי חִיּוּ לְמַעַן יְלִמּוּד לִירָאָה
אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ לְשִׁמְרָה אֶת־בְּלִדְבָּרֵי
הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת וְאֶת־הַחֲקִים הַאֲלָה
לְעַשְׂתָּם: ²⁰ לְבָלְתִּי רְוֻסְלָבָנוּ מִאָחָיו
וּלְבָלְתִּי סֹור מִן־הַמִּצְוֹה יְמִינִי וִשְׁמָאל
לְמַעַן יָאַרְיךָ יָמִים עַל־מִמְלְכָתוֹ הוּא וּבְנָיו
בְּקָרְבָּן יִשְׂרָאֵל: ס

יְחִילָה לְאֵחֶדֶת לְכֹהֲנִים הַלְוִימִים בְּלִשְׁבָט
לְנֵי חָלֵק וּנְחָלֵה עִם־יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה וּנְחָלְתוֹ יַאֲכִלוּ: ² וּנְחָלֵה לְאֵחֶדֶת
בְּקָרְבָּן אֲחֵיו יְהוָה הוּא נְחָלְתוֹ בְּאָשָׁר דָּבָרְלָו: ס

This law aims to emphasize and remind the king constantly that he is subject to God's law. In Hebrew, the term mishneh torah ("copy of this Teaching," literally "a second torah") becomes one of the names for Deuteronomy in rabbinic literature, since the book reviews large parts of the earlier books of the Torah (Sifrei D'varim 160). The Greek translation of this term is "Deuteronomion," hence the English name of the book.

LEVITICAL PRIESTS (18:1–8)

Unlike the laws concerning the king, this section expresses no interest in limiting the power of the levitical priests, but rather in ensuring that they, as a disadvantaged class, obtain their due. Their disadvantage lies in the fact that they have no land holdings, the main source of income for non-levitical Israelites in an agricultural society (see at 12:19). Levites therefore depend for their livelihood on a "tax" levied on sacrifices and tithes. The Israelites, to whom these instructions are addressed, must see to it that the levitical priests receive their proper income.

1. The levitical priests, the whole tribe of Levi. Leviticus and Numbers typically distinguish between priests (kohanim, a special subset of Levites defined as the descendants of Aaron) and Levites; only the kohanim can officiate in the presentation of offerings to God and can eat certain portions of sacrificial foodstuffs (see Numbers 16 and 18). Deuteronomy uses the anomalous term "levitical priests" (literally "the priests the Levites"), suggesting that it does not see two distinct classes but rather one group of potential priests. Deuteronomy gives all Levites the same right to eat portions from the sacrifices (a privilege limited to the priests in the other sources), and permits all of them to serve at the central sanctuary if they choose.

2. יְהוָה is their portion. The Hebrew has a singular suffix, "his (or its) portion"; the translation understands the antecedent to be the tribe of Levi (as in 10:8–9). Any allotted portion would include the women in the families, hence the frequent insertion in our translation of the phrase "[family of the] Levite" (as in 12:12). This phrase occurs in Yizkor, the memorial prayers for the dead, who no longer have a stake in this world but are in God's care.

³This then shall be the priests' due from the people: Everyone who offers a sacrifice, whether an ox or a sheep, must give the shoulder, the cheeks, and the stomach to the priest. ⁴You shall also give him the first fruits of your new grain and wine and oil, and the first shearing of your sheep. ⁵For your God יְהוָה has chosen him and his descendants, out of all your tribes, to be in attendance for service in the name of יְהוָה for all time.

⁶If a Levite would go, from any of the settlements throughout Israel where he has been residing, to the place that יְהוָה has chosen, he may do so whenever he pleases. ⁷He may serve in the name of his God יְהוָה like all his fellow Levites who are there in attendance before יְהוָה. ⁸They shall receive equal shares of the dues, without regard to personal gifts or patrimonies.

⁹When you enter the land that your God is giving you, you shall not learn to imitate the abhorrent practices of those nations. ¹⁰Let no one be

6–8. Since Deuteronomy outlaws local sanctuaries, the Levites formerly serving at these sanctuaries can no longer earn a livelihood except at the central sanctuary. Those who do not serve there must depend on communal charity, along with the widow, the fatherless, and the stranger (see 14:27–29; 16:11, 14; 26:12). Our passage seems to try to avoid that situation by providing the option for the unemployed Levite to find employment and allotment from sacrifices at the central sanctuary.

8. equal shares. The displaced Levites will share equally in the sacrificial portions enumerated in 18:3–4. In practice, the Jerusalem priesthood may have objected to this arrangement (see II Kings 23:9).

PROPHETS (18:9–22)

After banning various types of foreign divination (18:9–14), Deuteronomy addresses the type of di-

³ וְזֹהֵה יְהִי מִשְׁפַּט הַפְּהֻנִים מִאתָה הָעַם
מִאתָה זָבֵחַ הַזָּבֵח אֶמְשֹׂר אֶמְשֹׂה וְגַתְןָן
לְפָהָן הַזָּרֶע וְהַלְּחִים וְהַקְבָּה: ⁴ רִאשִׁית
דְּגַנְּבָה תִּירְשָׁק וַיְצַהַרְך וְרִאשִׁית גַּע צָאנָה
תַּתְנִילְוָה: ⁵ כִּי בָּעַד בְּחֵר יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ מִכָּלְשָׁבְטִיךְ לְעַמְּד לְשִׁרת בְּשֵׁם יְהֹוָה הוּא וַיַּבְנִי בְּלַהֲזִים: ס

⁶ וְכִי־בָא הַלְּיָמִיד מַאֲחָד שַׁעֲרִיק מַכְלֵי
יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲשֶׁר־יְהֹוָה גָּר שֵׁם וְבָא בְּכָל־
אָנוֹת נִפְשֹׁו אֶל־הַמִּזְבֵּחַ אֲשֶׁר־יִבְחַר יְהֹוָה:
⁷ וְשִׁרת בְּשֵׁם יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ בְּכָל־אֶחָיוָה
הַלְּוִימָם הַעֲמָדִים שֵׁם לִפְנֵי יְהֹוָה:
⁸ חָלֵק פְּחַלֵק יַאֲכִלוּ לְבַד מִמְּפָרִיוּ עַל־ הַאֲבוֹת: ס

⁹ כִּי אַתָּה בָּא אֶל־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־יְהֹוָה
אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ לְאַתְלָמֵד לְעַשּׂוֹת בְּתוּבַת הָגּוּם הַהֵם: ¹⁰ לֹא־יִמְצָא בְּ

vine intermediary most common in the Bible, the prophet (18:15–22).

9. When you enter the land. Like most of the laws in Deuteronomy, this one pertains to the settlement in the Promised Land. In this case, the danger concerns the negative religious influence of the Canaanites. Modern scholars note that by the time Deuteronomy was composed, the Canaanites were long gone. Thus, the Bible uses the term “Canaanite” anachronistically as a symbol for “the other,” often defining what is Israelite in opposition to what it calls Canaanite. Our passage uses “those nations” to refer to the various nations living in Canaan (Canaanites, Perizzites, and so forth). The practices listed as abhorrent are attested widely throughout the ancient Near East.

10–11. Deuteronomy takes for granted that either females or males might perform the types of divination listed here (compare Leviticus 20:27). These practices are abhorrent to God not because found among you who consigns a son or daughter to the fire, or who is an augur, a soothsayer, a diviner, a sorcerer,¹¹ one who casts spells, or one who consults ghosts or familiar spirits, or one who inquires of the dead.¹² For anyone who does such things is abhorrent to יְהוָה, and it is because of these abhorrent things that your God יְהוָה is dispossessing them before you.¹³ You must be whole-hearted with your God יְהוָה.¹⁴ Those nations that you are about to dispossess do indeed resort to soothsayers and augurs; to you, however, your God יְהוָה has not assigned the like.

יְהוָה will raise up for you a prophet like myself; that is whom you shall heed.¹⁵ This is just what you asked

מַעֲבֵיר בָּנֹוֶבֶתּוּ בְּאַש קְסֻמִּים מַעֲנוֹן
וּמַנְחָשׁ וּמַכְשָׁף: ¹¹ וְחַכְרֵחַ בָּרְךָ וְשָׂאֵל אֹובֵד
וַיַּדְעֵנִי וַיַּדְרֵשׁ אֶל־הַמְּתִיקִים: ¹² בִּיתְעוּבָתּ
יְהֹוָה בְּלָעָשָׂה אֱלֹהָה וּבְגַלְלָה הַתּוּבָתּ
הָאֱלֹהָה יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ מוֹרֵשׁ אָוֹתָם מִפְנִיקָה:
¹³ תְּמִימִים תְּהִיחָה עִם יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ: ¹⁴ כִּי אֵין
הָגּוֹנִים הָאֱלֹהָה אֲשֶׁר אַתָּה יוֹרֵשׁ אָוֹתָם אֶל־
מַעֲנוֹנִים וְאֶל־קְסֻמִּים יִשְׁמְעוּ וְאַתָּה לֹא תִּנְתַּן
לְךָ יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ:
¹⁵ נָבִיא מִקְרָבָה מַאֲחִילָה כִּמְנִי יְקִים לְךָ
יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ אֲלֹיו תִּשְׁמַעְוָן: ¹⁶ בְּכָל

they are ineffective, but because they call upon powers other than God, thereby undermining monotheistic belief.

10. consigns a son or daughter to the fire. The nature of this practice remains unclear. Its link here with other types of divination suggests that it is not child sacrifice, but a form of divination no longer known to us.

11. consults ghosts. The story of the medium of En-dor (I Samuel 28) and Isaiah 29:4 both confirm that communicating with the dead, or necromancy, was practiced in Israel. King Saul consults the medium of En-dor, a female necromancer, when all other forms of communication with the Divine have failed; and she successfully enables Saul to communicate with the dead prophet Samuel. Many Israelites, like other peoples of the time and later, showed an abiding concern for the dead, especially dead ancestors (see also at 26:14).

12. dispossessing them. Genesis 15:16, Leviticus 18:24–30, and Deuteronomy 9:4 all note that Israel will be entitled to dispossess the indigenous nations of Canaan as a result of the abhorrent practices detailed there. Deuteronomy repeatedly reminds the people that Israel risks being dispossessed from the land for similar reasons.

15–22. Having banned various divinatory practices, Deuteronomy now explains the legitimate way for Israel to access God's will: through a prophet. The type of prophecy envisioned derives from the people's desire for professional intermediaries to whom they could pose questions and receive information that would help them make decisions. In addition, as part of the narrative of the revelation at Sinai, the people request an intermediary in order to avoid the dangers inherent when one has direct contact with God (see 5:19–24; Exodus 20:15–18).

15. like myself. Moses serves as the model for all later prophets, even though no prophet has as close contact with God as he did (see Deuteronomy 34:10). The Hebrew speaks of the prophet in the masculine, as this is the linguistic default; but that does not exclude female prophets. The Bible refers to four female prophets by name: Miriam (Exodus 15:20), Deborah (Judges 4:4), Huldah (II Kings 22:14–20), and Noadiah (Nehemiah 6:14); other passages mention unnamed female prophets (Isaiah 8:3; Ezekiel 13:17; Joel 3:1).

of your God יְהוָה at Horeb, on the day of the Assembly, saying, “Let me not hear the voice of my God יְהוָה any longer or see this wondrous fire any more, lest I die.”¹⁷ Whereupon יְהוָה said to me, “They have done well in speaking thus.¹⁸ I will raise up for them from among their own people a prophet like yourself, in whose mouth I will put My words and who will speak to them all that I command;¹⁹ and anybody who fails to heed the words [the prophet] speaks in My name, I Myself will call to account.²⁰ But any prophet who presumes to speak in My name an oracle that I did not command to be uttered, or who speaks in the name of other gods—that prophet shall die.”²¹ And should you ask yourselves, “How can we know that the oracle was not spoken by יְהוָה?”—²² if the prophet speaks in the name of יְהוָה and the oracle does not come true, that oracle was not spoken by יְהוָה; the prophet has uttered it presumptuously: do not stand in dread of that person.

19 When your God יְהוָה has cut down the nations whose land your God יְהוָה is assigning to you, and you have dispossessed them and settled in their towns and homes,² you shall set aside three

אֲשֶׁר־שָׁאַלְתָּ מִעֵם יְהוָה אַל־תַּחֲרֵב בַּיּוֹם הַקְהָל לְאֹמֵר لֹא אַסְף לְשִׁמְעַ אֶת־
קֹול יְהוָה אַלְהִי וְאֶת־הַאֲשָׁר הָגָדָה הַזֹּאת
לְאִזְרָאֵל עַזְדָּוֹן וְלֹא אַמְרֵ: ¹⁷ וַיֹּאמֶר
יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ הַטִּיבוּ אֲשֶׁר דִּבְרָו: ¹⁸ נְבִיא
אֲקִים לְהֵם מִקְרָב אֲחֵיכֶם כִּמְזָרָב וְנִתְחַנֵּ
דִּבְרֵי פְּנֵיו וְדִבְרֵי אֲלֵיכֶם אַת בְּלֹא־אֲשֶׁר
אַצְעָנוּ: ¹⁹ וְהִיֵּה הָאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר לֹא־יִשְׁמַע
אֶל־דִּבְרֵי אֲשֶׁר יַדְבֵּר בְּשָׂمֵי אַנְכִּי אָדָרֵ
מִעֵמוֹ: ²⁰ אָתָּה הַנְּבִיא אֲשֶׁר יַזְדִּיל לְדִבְרֵי דִּבְרֵ
בְּשָׂמֵי אֶת אֲשֶׁר לֹא־צִוִּיתִי לְדִבְרֵ וְאֶשְׁר
יַדְבֵּר בְּשָׁם אַלְמָנִים אֶחָרִים וּמֵת הַנְּבִיא
הַהוּא: ²¹ וְכִי תֹאמֶר בְּלֹבֶב אַיִלָּה נִרְעָ
אֶת־הַדָּבָר אֲשֶׁר לֹא־דִבְרָו יְהוָה: ²² אֲשֶׁר
יַדְבֵּר הַנְּבִיא בְּשָׁם יְהוָה וְלֹא־יִהְיֶה הַדָּבָר
וְלֹא יָבֹא הַיּוֹם הַדָּבָר אֲשֶׁר לֹא־דִבְרָו יְהוָה
בִּזְדֻון דִּבְרָו הַנְּבִיא לֹא תָגֹור מִמְּנוּ: ס

יט פִּינִיקְרִית יְהוָה אַל־תַּחֲרֵב אֶת־הַגּוֹיִם
אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אַל־תִּירְאֵם נָתַן לְךָ אֶת־אֶרְעָם
וַיִּרְשָׁתָם וַיִּשְׁבַּת בָּעָרִיאָם וּבְבָתִיאָם:
² שְׁלֹשׁ עָרִים תִּבְקִיל לְךָ בְּתוֹךְ אֶרְצָךְ

16. Horeb. This is Deuteronomy's term for Sinai (see at Exodus 18:5). Moses explains that the people requested an intermediary lest direct contact with the Divine prove fatal.

18–22. The most crucial attribute of the true prophet is that he or she speaks in God's name. Since the prophet serves as the vehicle through whom God communicates, the true prophet must be taken seriously and heeded. Clearly, a prophet speaking in the name of a foreign god is false, but what about a prophet who claims to be speaking in God's name—how is the audience to know if the prophet truly speaks God's words? This passage establishes the criterion of whether or not those words come to pass, which means that the audience must wait for the outcome of the prophecy. Jeremiah offers a slightly different test, suggesting that one need wait for the outcome only in prophecies of weal, whereas prophecies of doom should always be believed (Jeremiah 28:7–9).

Safeguarding the Judicial System (19:1–21)

The three topics in this unit all involve guarding justice. The first two concern space or location pertaining to public officials; the third elaborates on the stipulations regarding witnesses introduced in 17:6.

cities in the land that your God יְהוָה is giving you to possess.³ You shall survey the distances, and divide into three parts the territory of the country that your God יְהוָה has allotted to you, so that any [male] killer may have a place to flee to.—⁴ Now this is the case of the killer who may flee there and live: one who has slain a fellow [Israelite] unwittingly, without having been an enemy in the past.⁵ For instance, a man goes with another fellow into a grove to cut wood; as his hand swings the ax to cut down a tree, the ax-head flies off the handle and strikes the other so that he dies. That man shall flee to one of these cities and live.—⁶ Otherwise, when the distance is great, the blood-avenger, pursuing the killer in hot anger, may overtake him and strike him down; yet he did not incur the death penalty, since he had never been the other's enemy.⁷ That is why I command you: set aside three cities.

⁸ And when your God יְהוָה enlarges your territory, as was sworn to your fathers, and gives you all the land that was promised to be given to your fathers—⁹ if you faithfully observe all this Instruction

אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ לִרְשָׁתְךָ:
 3 תִּכְיַין לְכָךְ תְּרֻךְ וְשָׁלַשְׁתָּ אֶת-גְּבוּל אֶרְצְךָ
 אֲשֶׁר יִנְחִילֶךָ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ וְהִיא לְנוּס שְׂמַח בְּלִרְצָנָךְ: 4 וְזֹה דָבָר הַרְצָחָךְ אֲשֶׁר-יְנוּס שְׂמַח וְהִיא אֲשֶׁר יִכְהַ אֶת-רְעָהוּ בְּבֵלִי-רְעָת וְהִוא לְאִישֵׁנָא לוֹ מִתְמָלֵל שְׁלָשָׁם:
 5 וְאֲשֶׁר יָבֹא אֶת-רְעָהוּ בִּירוּל לְחַטֵּב עַצִּים
 וְנִדְחָה יְדוֹ בְּגַרְזָן לְכָרְתָה הָעַץ וּנְשָׁלֵל הַבְּרוּל
 מִן-הָעַץ וּמֵצָא אֶת-רְעָהוּ וּמֵת הִוא יְנוּס
 אֶל-אֶחָת הַעֲרִים-הָאֶלְהָה וְהִיא: 6 פְּנִירִילָן
 גָּאל הַקְּדָם אַחֲרֵי הַרְצָחָךְ קִיְיחָם לְבָבוֹ
 וְהַשְׁגַּנוּ קִיְירָבָה הַרְרָה וְהַפְּכוּ נַפְשׁ וְלוֹ
 אֵין מִשְׁפְּט-מִות כִּי לֹא שָׁנָא הוּא לוֹ
 מִתְמָלֵל שְׁלָשָׁם: 7 עַל-כֵן אָנֹכִי מִצְרָךְ
 לְאָמֹר שְׁלָשׁ עָרִים תְּבִידֵל לְךָ:
 8 וְאַמְּרִיךְ בָּיְתְּךָ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ אֶת-גְּבוּל
 בְּאֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע לְאַבְתָּיךְ וּנְתַנֵּן לְכָךְ אֶת-כְּפָלָה
 הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר דָבָר לִתְתֵּן לְאַבְתָּיךְ: 9 כִּי תִשְׁמֹר אֶת-כְּלַחְמָצָה הַזֹּאת לְעַשְׂתָה

CITIES OF REFUGE (19:1–13)

This section mandates that the people should set aside three cities initially, with the addition of three more as needed, to provide refuge for persons guilty of unintentional homicide (see also 4:41–42; Exodus 21:13–14; Numbers 35:9–34). This law reflects an old practice that runs parallel to, and counter to, Deuteronomy's principle that the courts have jurisdiction over the sentencing of a person to capital punishment and the carrying out of that punishment if warranted; in this case, a relative avenges a killing. A person who commits manslaughter could, according to other texts, find refuge at an altar (see I Kings 2:28–34); but since Deuteronomy bans local sanctuaries, it must find a substitute site of refuge, which it does by establishing “secular” cities of refuge (not the same as the levitical cities mentioned in Numbers 35). The principle inherent in this law fits with the Deuteronomic principles that innocent blood should not be spilled and that the guilty should receive just punishment.

3. [male] killer. Could women avail themselves of a city of refuge? This translation understands the person who commits manslaughter as being male. While certainly women were capable of committing murder or manslaughter, it seems reasonable to assume that the person fleeing to a city of refuge would more often be a male. One reason for this conclusion is that since women did not normally live independently, it would be problematic for a woman who commits manslaughter to leave her family and live in a city of refuge. (See also at 4:42, Exodus 21:13, and Numbers 35:6.)

6. blood-avenger. On the gender of this role, see at Numbers 35:12.

that I enjoin upon you this day, to love your God יהוה and to walk in God's ways at all times—then you shall add three more towns to those three.¹⁰ Thus blood of the innocent will not be shed, bringing bloodguilt upon you in the land that your God יהוה is allotting to you.

¹¹If, however, a man who is the enemy of another lies in wait and sets upon [the victim] and strikes a fatal blow and then flees to one of these towns,¹²the elders of his town shall have him brought back from there and shall hand him over to the blood-avenger to be put to death;¹³you must show him no pity. Thus you will purge Israel of the blood of the innocent, and it will go well with you.

¹⁴You shall not move your neighbor's landmarks, set up by previous generations, in the property that will be allotted to you in the land that your God יהוה is giving you to possess.

¹⁵A single witness may not validate against a person any guilt or blame for any offense that may be committed; a case can be valid only on the testimony of two witnesses or more.¹⁶If someone appears against another to testify maliciously and gives incriminating yet false testimony,¹⁷the two parties to the dispute shall appear before יהוה, before the priests or magistrates in authority at the time,¹⁸and the magistrates shall make a thorough investigation. If the one who testified is a false witness, having testified falsely against a fellow Israel-

אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מְצֻוֵּה הַיּוֹם לְאֶחָדָה אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וְלִכְתָּב בְּדֶרֶךְיוּ בְּלִהְיוּמִים וִיסְפָּתָּה לְהַעֲדָה שְׁלֹשׁ עָרִים עַל הַשְׁלָשׁ הָאֱלֹהָה: ¹⁰ וְלֹא יִשְׁפַּר דָם נָקֵץ בְּקָרְבָּאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ נְחָלָה וְהַיָּה עַלְיכֶם: פ

¹¹ וְכִי רְיהִיָּה אִישׁ שְׁנָא לְרַעְיוֹן וְאַרְבָּה לוֹ וְקַם עַלְיוֹ וְהַכְּבֹהָה נִפְשָׁת וְמַת וְנוֹס אֱלֹהָת הָעָרִים הָאֵל: ¹² וְשָׁלַחְתָּו וְקָנֵעַ עִירָוֹ וְלִקְחָה אָתוֹ מִשְׁם וְנָתַנְתָּו אָתוֹ בֵּין גַּאל הַקְּדָם וְמַת: ¹³ לְאִתְחֹזֶס עִינָךְ עַלְיוֹ וּבָעֲרָת דְּסִיחָנָקִי מִישְׁרָאֵל וְטוֹב לְךָ: ס

¹⁴ לֹא תַּטְבִּיל גְּבוּל רַעַע אֲשֶׁר גַּבֵּלוּ רְאַשְׁנִים בְּנַחֲלָתֶךָ אֲשֶׁר תַּנְחַל בְּאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ לְרִשְׁתָה: ס

¹⁵ לְאִיּוֹם עַד אָחָר בְּאַחֲר בְּאַיִל עַל־עַזְוֹן וְלְכָל־חַטָּאת בְּכָל־חַטָּאת אֲשֶׁר יְחַטֵּא עַל־פִּי וְשַׁנִּי עָדִים אוֹ עַל־פִּי שְׁלֹשָׁה־עָדִים יְקוּם דָּבָר: ¹⁶ כִּי יְקוּם עַד־חַמֵּס בְּאִישׁ לְעָנוֹת בְּסֶרֶה: ¹⁷ וְעַמְדוּ שְׁנִי־הָאָנָשִׁים אֲשֶׁר־לָהֶם הַרְבֵּב לְפָנֵי יְהוָה לְפָנֵי הַפְּהָנִים וְהַשְּׁפָטִים אֲשֶׁר יְהִי בִּימֵים הָהֶם: ¹⁸ וְדָרְשׁוּ הַשְּׁפָטִים הַיְטָב וְהַנְּהָרָה עַד־שְׁקָר

BOUNDARY MARKERS (19:14)

An important biblical principle holds that land should remain in the family to which it was originally allotted. Hence, moving a boundary marker is considered stealing property. The reason for the mention of this law here remains uncertain. This ancient law is known also from elsewhere in the Bible (see Hosea 5:10; Proverbs 22:28; 23:10–11; Job 24:2) and the ancient Near East.

WITNESSES (19:15–21)

This section reiterates the principle of a minimum of two witnesses (see Deuteronomy 17:6). The Bible severely punishes false witnesses since they corrupt the legal system. The idea that a false witness deserves the punishment that would have been declared against the accused also appears in the Laws of Hammurabi (¶¶ 2–3).

ite,¹⁹ you shall do to the one as the one schemed to do to the other. Thus you will sweep out evil from your midst;²⁰ others will hear and be afraid, and such evil things will not again be done in your midst.²¹ Nor must you show pity: life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.

20 When you [an Israelite warrior] take the field against your enemies, and see horses and chariots—forces larger than yours—have no fear of them, for your God, יהוה, who brought you from the land of Egypt, is with you. ²Before you join battle, the priest shall come forward and address the troops. ³He shall say to them, “Hear, O Israel! You are about to join battle with your enemy. Let not your courage falter. Do not be in fear, or in panic, or in dread of them. ⁴For it is your God who marches with you to do battle for you against your enemy, to bring you victory.”

⁵Then the officials shall address the troops, as follows: “Is there anyone who has built a new house but has not dedicated it? Let him go back to his home, lest he die in battle and another dedicate it. ⁶Is there anyone who has planted a vineyard but has never harvested it? Let him go back to his home, lest he die in battle and another harvest it. ⁷Is there

הָעֵד שְׁקָר עֲנָה בָּאַחִיו: ¹⁹ וַיַּשְׂיַתֶּם לֹא
בָּאָשָׁר זָמָם לְעַשּׂוֹת לְאַחִיו וּבְעַרְתָּת הָרָע
מִקְרָבָךְ: ²⁰ וְהַנְּשָׁאָרִים יִשְׁמְעוּ וַיַּרְאוּ וְלֹא־
יָסְפוּ לְעַשּׂוֹת עוֹד בְּדַבָּר הָרָע הַזֶּה בְּקָרְבָּךְ:
²¹ וְלֹא תַּחֲזֹס עִינֶךָ נַפְשְׁךָ בְּנַפְשׁ עֵין בָּעֵין שָׁן
בְּשֵׁן יָד בַּיד רַגֵּל בְּרַגֵּל: ס

כ בְּיַתְצָא לְמַלְחָמָה עַל־אִזְבָּחָר וְרֹאִיתָ
סָוט וּרְכָב עַם רַב מִמֶּךָ לֹא תִּרְאָ מַהְם כִּי־
יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם עַמְּךָ הַמְּעָלָךְ מִאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם:
² וְהַזָּה בְּקָרְבָּכֶם אֶל־הַמְּלָחָמָה וּנְגַשׁ הַפְּנִזּוֹן
וּדְבָר אֶל־הָעָם: ³ וְאָמַר אֶלְהָם שְׁמַע־
יִשְׂרָאֵל אַתֶּם קָרְבָּנִים הַיּוּם לְמַלְחָמָה עַל־
אַיִבְכָּם אֶל־יְרֻךְ לְבָבָכֶם אֶל־תִּירְאָו וְאֶל־
תִּחְפֹּזוּ וְאֶל־תִּעַרְצֹו מִפְנִימֵיכֶם: ⁴ כי יְהֹוָה
אֶלְהֵיכֶם הַהֲלָךְ עַמְּכֶם לְהַלְּחִם לְכֶם עַמְּ
אַיִבְכָּם לְהַושְׁיעָ אֶתְכֶם:
⁵ וְדֹבְרוּ הַשְׁׁטָרִים אֶל־הָעָם לְאָמַר מַיִּ—
הָאִיש אֲשֶׁר בָּנָה בֵּית־חֶדֶשׁ וְלֹא חָנַכוּ וְלֹא
וַיֵּשֶׁב לְבִתּוֹ פְּנִימֹות בְּמַלְחָמָה וְאִיש
אַחֲר יְחִינָנוּ: ⁶ וּמִי־הָאִיש אֲשֶׁר־נִטְעָ
פְּרָם וְלֹא חָלַל יוֹלֵךְ וַיֵּשֶׁב לְבִתּוֹ פְּנִ
ימֹות בְּמַלְחָמָה וְאִיש אַחֲר יְחִילָנוּ: ⁷ וּמִי—

19. sweep out evil from your midst. This phrase recurs often in Deuteronomy (13:6; 17:7, 12; 21:21; 22:21, 22, 24; 24:7), as this book aims to create a just and moral society.

21. life for life, eye for eye. This verse invokes the law of talion, or precise retribution, in order to emphasize that justice must be meted out as required, “nor must you show pity.” (See also at Exodus 21:24 and Leviticus 24:17–22.) A false witness must not get away with the crime, lest the justice system be undermined.

Rules for War (20:1–20)

According to the narrative setting of Deuteronomy, Israel is on the brink of entering the Promised Land and will have to conduct a war of conquest. However, vv. 14–15 contain stipulations applying to foreign wars, not the conquest in Canaan. These rules aim to keep up morale by assuring the soldiers that God is with them.

5–7. These deferments or exemptions are designed to permit a young conscript to complete the anyone who has paid the bride-price for a wife, but who has not yet married her? Let him go back to his home, lest he die in battle and another marry her.”

⁸The officials shall go on addressing the troops and say, “Is there anyone afraid and disheartened? Let him go back to his home, lest the courage of his comrades flag like his.” ⁹When the officials have finished addressing the troops, army commanders shall assume command of the troops.

¹⁰When you approach a town to attack it, you shall offer it terms of peace. ¹¹If it responds peacefully and lets you in, all the people present there shall serve you at forced labor. ¹²If it does not surrender to you, but would join battle with you, you shall lay siege to it; ¹³and when your God delivers it into your hand, you shall put all its males to the sword. ¹⁴You may, however, take as your booty the women, the children, the livestock, and everything in the town—all its spoil—and enjoy the use of the spoil of your enemy, which your God gives you.

¹⁵Thus you shall deal with all towns that lie very far from you, towns that do not belong to nations establishment of his home, agricultural livelihood, and family—the major anchors of society. The law is less concerned with the feelings of the individual soldier than with the formation of crucial social institutions. Establishing a house, farm, and family is the greater good, even in time of war; for without these there is no community (see also 24:5; 28:30; Jeremiah 29:5–6).

7. bride-price. Better, “betrothal gift.” See further at Genesis 29:18, Exodus 22:15–16, and Chayei Sarah, Another View, p. 127. The marriage has been legally contracted but not consummated; the woman is considered married and cannot marry another man.

8. Because of the contagious nature of cowardliness, this verse instructs the officials to remove fearful soldiers lest they demoralize the rest of the troops.

הָאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר־אָרַשׁ אֲשֶׁר וְלֹא לִקְחָה יָלֵךְ
וַיֵּשֶׁב לְבִתּוֹ פְּנִימֹות בַּמְלֹחָמָה וְאִישׁ
אַחֲרֵי יִקְחָנָה: ⁸ וַיְסִפּוּ הַשְׂטָרִים לְדַבָּר
אַל־הָעֵם וְאִמְרָרָה מִיְּהָאִישׁ הַיּוֹרֵא וְרֹגֵ
הַלְּבָב יָלֵךְ וַיֵּשֶׁב לְבִתּוֹ וְלֹא יִמְסֶ אֶת־
לְבָב אֲחֵיכֶם כָּלְבָבָו: ⁹ וְהִיא בְּכָלְתַ הַשְׂטָרִים
לְדַבָּר אַל־הָעֵם וַיְפִקְדוּ שְׂרֵי צְבָאוֹת בֶּרֶאשׁ הַעַם: ס

¹⁰ בְּיִתְקַרְבֵּב אַל־עִיר לְהַלְּחָם עַלְיהָ וּקְרָאתָ
אֱלֹהָה לְשָׁלוֹם: ¹¹ וְהִיא אֶמְשָׁלָתָם תַּעֲנֵה
וַיַּפְתַּחַת לְךָ וְהִיא בְּלִיחָם הַנְּמַצְאָבָה
יִהְיוּ לְךָ לְמַס וּבְדֹוחַ: ¹² וְאֶמְלָא תְּשִׁלִּיט
עַמְּךָ וְעַשְׂתָּה עַמְּךָ מִלְּחָמָה וְצִרְתָּה עַלְיהָ:
¹³ וְנַתְנָה יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בִּירָךְ וְהִכִּית אֶת־
כָּל־זָכוֹרָה לְפִיהָרָב: ¹⁴ רַק הַנְּשִׁים וְהַטְּף
וְהַבְּמָה וְכָל־אֲשֶׁר יְהִיא בְּעִיר בְּלִשְׁלָלָה
תַּבְּזַע לְךָ וְאֶכְלַת אֶת־שְׁלָל אֵיבָר אֲשֶׁר נָתַן
יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לְךָ:

¹⁵ בָּן תַּعֲשֵׂה לְכָל־הָעָרִים הַרְחָקָת מִמֶּךָ
מִאָד אֲשֶׁר לְאַמְּעֵד הַגּוֹיִם דְּהָאֵלָה חֲנָה:

10–14. These procedures are typical of ancient Near Eastern warfare. If a city capitulated by accepting the peace terms, it was spared a siege, which generally resulted in starvation and disease before capitulation. Peace terms would specify the payment of tribute, which included forced labor by the captives. The killing of the adult males and the taking of women, children, and livestock as booty are also typical (as seen in the case of the foreign woman taken in warfare in 21:10–14) and have the effect of further weakening—or even decimating—the losing side as well as providing human capital for the victors. In I Samuel 30, David’s wives and the “wives and sons and daughters” of his six hundred men (30:3) are taken captive by a band of Amalekite raiders.

15–16. These verses distinguish wars outside Canaan, to which the stipulations listed above ap-hereabout.¹⁶ In the towns of the latter peoples, however, which your God יְהוָה is giving you as a heritage, you shall not let a soul remain alive.¹⁷ No, you must proscribe them—the Hittites and the Amorites, the Canaanites and the Perizzites, the Hivites and the Jebusites—as your God has commanded you,¹⁸ lest they lead you into doing all the abhorrent things that they have done for their gods and you stand guilty before your God יְהוָה.

¹⁹ When in your war against a city you have to besiege it a long time in order to capture it, you must not destroy its trees, wielding the ax against them. You may eat of them, but you must not cut them down. Are trees of the field human to withdraw before you into the besieged city?²⁰ Only trees that you know do not yield food may be destroyed; you may cut them down for constructing siege-works against the city that is waging war on you, until it has been reduced.

21 If, in the land that your God יְהוָה is assigning you to possess, someone slain is found lying in the open, the identity of the slayer not being known,² your elders and magistrates shall go out and measure the distances from the corpse to the nearby towns.³ The elders of the town nearest to the corpse shall then take a heifer which has never been worked, which has never pulled in a

¹⁶ רַק מִשְׁרֵי הָעָםִים הָאֱלֹהֶה אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם נָתַן לְךָ נְחָלָה לֹא תְחַיֵּה כָּל־נְשָׂמָה: ¹⁷ בִּירְחָרָם תִּחְרִימָם הַחַטָּאת וְהַאֲמֹרִי הַפְּנָעָנִי וְהַפְּרָזִי הַחֲנוּן וְהַבּוֹסִי בְּאֲשֶׁר צָוָה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ: ¹⁸ לִמְעֵן אֲשֶׁר לֹא־יְלַמְּדוּ אֶתְכֶם לְעֹשָׂות בְּכָל־תוֹעֲבָתֶם אֲשֶׁר עָשׂוּ לְאֱלֹהִים וְחַטָּאתָם לִיהְוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם:

¹⁹ בִּירְצֹוֹר אֶל־עִיר יְמִים רַבִּים לְהַלְּחָם עַלְלה לְתִפְשָׁה לְאֶתְשָׁחָת אֶת־עַצְמָתָן לְנִדְחָה עַלְיוֹ גַּרְזָן בַּי מִמְּנוּ תָּאֵל וְאַתָּה לֹא תִּכְרֹת בַּי הָאָדָם עַז הַשְׁדָה לְבָא מִפְנִיק בְּמִצּוֹר: ²⁰ רַק עַז אֲשֶׁר־תְּרוּעָה בַּי לְאַיִלְמָאֵל הָוָא אַתָּה תְּשִׁיחָת וּכְרָת וּבְנִית מַזְוֵּר עַל־הַעֲלָל אֲשֶׁר־הָוָא עָשָׂה עַמְקָה מַלְחָמָה עַד רַדְתָּה:

כָּא בִּיְמַצֵּא חֶלְל בְּאָדָם אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם נָתַן לְכָל לְרַשְׁתָּה נַפְל בְּשָׁדָה לֹא נָדַע מֵהַפְּהָוָה: ² וַיַּצְאָו זְקָנִים וּשְׁפֵטִים וּמְדֻדוֹ אֶל־הָעָרִים אֲשֶׁר סְבִיבָת הַחֶלְל: ³ וְהִיָּה הַעִיר הַקְּרָבָה אֶל־הַחֶלְל וּלְקָדוֹם זְקָנִים הַעִיר הַהּוּא עֲגָלָת בָּקָר אֲשֶׁר לֹא

ply, from wars within Canaan, which demand the complete eradication of all life, lest any survivors lead the Israelites into foreign worship practices.

19–20. This passage prohibits a “scorched-earth” policy. Only trees that do not provide food may be cut down, if necessary, to be used for constructing ramps and scaffolding to scale the city walls. To the contemporary reader this may sound like an ecologically minded policy; but the reason for it is unclear. Perhaps it was meant to ensure a food supply for the soldiers.

Are trees of the field human. The Hebrew phrase is obscure; it may mean that trees are not the enemy, or that they cannot defend themselves and therefore should not be harmed, or both.

Unsolved Murder (21:1–9)

Deuteronomy exhibits a concern not only with punishing the guilty, but also with ensuring that the community bears no responsibility for bloodshed, for the shedding of innocent blood makes the land impure (see also 19:10, 13). In this yoke; ⁴and the elders of that town shall bring the heifer down to an overflowing wadi, which is not tilled or sown. There, in the wadi, they shall break the heifer's neck. ⁵The priests, sons of Levi, shall come forward; for your God יְהוָה has chosen them for divine service and to pronounce blessing in the name of יְהוָה, and every lawsuit and case of assault is subject to their ruling. ⁶Then all the elders of the town nearest to the corpse shall wash their hands over the heifer whose neck was broken in the wadi. ⁷And they shall make this declaration: “Our hands did not shed this blood, nor did our eyes see it done. ⁸Absolve, Your people Israel whom You redeemed, and do not let guilt for the blood of the innocent remain among Your people Israel.” And they will be absolved of bloodguilt. ⁹Thus you will remove from your midst guilt for the blood of the innocent, for you will be doing what is right in the sight of יְהוָה.

עֲבָד בַּחֲנִית אֲשֶׁר לְאַמְשָׁכָה בַּעַל: ⁴ וְהַרְדוֹ זְקִנֵּי הַעִיר הַהּוּא אֶת-הַעֲגָלָה אֶל-נְחָל אִתְּהַנֵּן אֲשֶׁר לֹא-יַעֲבֹד בּוֹ וְלֹא יַזְרַע וְעַרְפּוֹ שָׁם אֶת-הַעֲגָלָה בְּנְחָל: ⁵ וְנִגְשׂוּ הַכֹּהֲנִים בְּנֵי לֵי כִּי בָּם בְּתַחַר יְהוָה אֶל-לִיל לְשָׁרְתוֹ וַיַּבְרֹךְ בְּשָׁם יְהוָה וְעַל-פִּיהם יְהִיא כָּל-רֵיב וּכְל-נְגַע: ⁶ וְכֹל זְקִנֵּי הַעִיר הַהּוּא הַקָּרְבִּים אֶל-הַחַל לִרְחֹצֹו אֶת-יִדָּהֶם עַל-הַעֲגָלָה הַעֲרוֹפָה בְּנְחָל: ⁷ וְעַנוּ וְאִמְרוּ יְהִינּוּ לֹא שְׁפַבַּח שְׁפַבַּח אֶת-הַדָּם הַהּוּא וְעַיְנֵינוּ לֹא רָאוּ: ⁸ בְּפֶרֶר לְעַמְּךָ יִשְׂרָאֵל אַשְׁר-פָּרִיתָ יְהוָה וְאֶל-תַּתְּהַנֵּן דָם נָקֵץ בְּקָרְבָּעַמְקָה יִשְׂרָאֵל וְנִכְפֵּר לְהַמְּדָם הַדָּם: ⁹ וְאַתָּה תִּבְעַר הַדָּם הַנְּקֵץ מִקְרָב כִּי-תִּعְשֵׂה הַיּוֹשֵׁר בְּעִינֵי יְהוָה: ס

case, there is no suspect to accuse of the killing, so the community is responsible. A ritual and a prayer will remove the bloodguilt from the town.

7. If no witnesses are found, the local elders must swear an oath declaring innocence of the action and lack of knowledge about the action.

8. A prayer that God will absolve the guilt follows the oath. Notice that it is no longer a matter of one town, but of “your people,” that is, Israel as a whole. Even in the somewhat “secularized” laws of Deuteronomy, justice in human affairs is part of Israel’s religious view.

—Adele Berlin

Another View

DEUTERONOMY CONTAINS the only ancient Near Eastern legal corpus that extensively treats the question of correct wartime behavior. Parashat Shof'tim introduces the first group of regulations (20:1–9, 10–18, 19–20); the rest are scattered throughout the next parashah (21:10–14; 23:10–15; 24:5). Curiously, these regulations are not what one might expect from a collection of laws related to warfare. They are not concerned with strategic issues typical of warfare, like mustering the army, logistics, or battle tactics. Instead, the military regulations in our parashah deal with the peripheral aspects of war, particularly with those affected by it: women and children, cattle, trees, and even members of the attacking side.

The first, and therefore most prominent, rule defines those conscripts who are released from war (20:5–7): men who have built a new house, planted a vineyard, or given a betrothal gift, but they have not yet benefited from these three types of investments. The reason given is “lest he die in battle” and another person profit. This rationale echoes the curse familiar from ancient Near Eastern treaties: you will labor, but someone else will eat the fruit of your toil. It is noteworthy that in 28:30, precisely the three cases in our parashah are turned into curses. Thus, rather than glorify warfare, Deuteronomy views it as a curse that needs curbing, even for the attacking side.

Similar to the stipulations in our parashah pertaining to the establishment of a monarchy (17:14–20), these rules of war reflect a subversive criticism of a key

*Deuteronomy views warfare
as a curse that needs curbing.*

element prevalent in ancient societies: in this case, wars of expansion inaugurated by the Neo-Assyrian empire in the 8th to 7th centuries B.C.E. Therefore, Deuteronomy’s rules of warfare can be understood as an ideological polemic related to the military and political pressures that Israel and Judah experienced at the time.

We see, then, that the attitude toward warfare in our parashah is a learned reaction to wars forced upon the small nations at that time. Criticizing military acts implicitly and indirectly reveals the viewpoint of the Israelite underdogs, the victims of such actions.

—Nili Wazana

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

A person shall be put to death only on the testimony of two or more witnesses (17:6). Despite the admirable exhortation in this parashah to pursue justice (16:20), post-biblical Judaism restricted women’s participation in the judicial system. In response to the requirement of two witnesses for criminal cases in this verse and 19:15–17, Sifrei D’varim 190 asks, “Is a woman also qualified to give testimony?” Their answer is no, for they note that in 19:15 the Torah states “two witnesses” and further on, in 19:17, “two [men].” Reading these two biblical verses literally, the Rabbis reason: “As the meaning of ‘two’ in the one instance is men and not women, so the meaning of ‘two’ in the other instance is men and not women.” Even earlier, the Jewish historian Josephus (1st century C.E.) asserted that “by Jewish law women are disqualified as witnesses” (Jewish Antiquities 4.219).

SHOP'TIM

However, the Mishnah (Y'vamot 15:1–5 and 16:5) permits a woman to serve as a sole witness in establishing a man’s death, thus allowing his widow to remarry. Since rabbinic courts accepted female testimony in this and some other situations, why were they excluded from most civil and criminal cases? The Rabbis did not give a reason for their general disqualification of women as legal witnesses. Perhaps women’s dependence on their husbands or fathers was understood to compromise their ability to serve as independent witnesses. They could testify only when the two-witness paradigm did not hold. This proved especially important when women might have more access than men to necessary information.

Rabbinic courts accepted female testimony only in certain situations.

Is there anyone who has paid the bride-price for a wife? (20:7). The groom becomes betrothed (eiras) after he gives a betrothal gift, which is referred to here as a “bride-price.” This implies that the wife is an object acquired by her future husband. (For a different perspective on the institution of betrothal in the Bible, see at Genesis 29:18; Exodus 22:15–16; and Chayei Sarah, Another View, p. 127.) The Rabbis’ use of the term kiddushin for “betrothal” might encourage us to think that women played a more active role in their own betrothals in rabbinic times. Kiddushin is connected to the Hebrew word for “holy,” and “holy” in this context could indicate a relationship recognizing the betrothed woman as more than property. However, rabbinic writings (Tosefta Kiddushin 1:1 and BT Kiddushin 5b) make it clear that a betrothal is legitimate only if a man “acquires” a woman, whether he uses the term m'oresset or m'kuddeshet to assert his claim. Betrothal is not considered valid if a woman speaks or acts as the one changing the couple’s status from single to betrothed.

Like the new house and newly planted vineyard (20:5–6), the betrothed woman (20:7) appears as a partially claimed property for whose full possession a man must take further action. Passages like this indicate that obligations accompanied betrothal (see also 22:23) and imply that some men may not have fulfilled them expeditiously. At any given time, significant numbers of betrothed women may have occupied a limbo state wherein they were already designated as “wife” but not entitled to that status. Although biblical sources are silent about mechanisms for canceling betrothals, the Rabbis insisted on divorce to terminate the betrothed couple’s connection (Mishnah Kiddushin 1:1, 3:7).

Similar views that betrothal was tantamount to marriage are also found in Roman law. The 2nd-century historian Suetonius remarked, “[O]n finding that the spirit of the law was being evaded by betrothal with immature girls . . . [the Emperor Augustus] shortened the duration of betrothals” (Augustus 34.1–2). While Suetonius is discussing a binding betrothal that some elite men used to their advantage in order to avoid restrictions upon gifts and the higher taxes owed by unmarried men, the biblical example appears to establish the binding nature of betrothal intentionally. In both Jewish and Roman law and practice, a betrothal either led to a marriage or was terminated in some quiet manner.

In general, historians find references to betrothals only where problems have occurred or are envisioned. The present verse discusses one potential difficulty. A non-Jewish example appears in a legal ruling from Emperors Valerian and Gallienus (dated 259 C.E.) concerning a young woman who has been engaged for three years but her fiancé is abroad and unreachable. She would like to end the betrothal but cannot communicate this to him. This young woman’s lawsuit expresses concern that she would be liable to charges of bigamy were she to marry someone else (Judith Evans Grubbs, Law and Family in Late Antiquity, 1995, pp. 167–8). That such cases required resolution suggests that the interval between betrothal and marriage could be problematic in both Jewish and Roman societies. However, the rarity of references to these cases raises more questions than answers about how betrothals really functioned in ancient Judaism.

—Susan Marks

• • • • •

Contemporary Reflection

PARASHAT SHOF'TIM IS ONE OF our most neatly packaged Torah portions, beginning with commandments about the necessity for appointing “magistrates and officials” (16:18) and concluding with a procedure aimed to ensure that people do “what is right in the sight of יהוה” (21:9). From its opening words to its concluding phrases, this parashah is about righteousness and justice. Yet these concepts are meaningless unless rooted in concrete particulars so they can permeate the lives of those who wish to find meaning in the Torah. These are clearly universal values, but where do we find out about the ways women approach such values and concerns?

Among the commandments recounted in this portion are those about warfare. Can we retain humanity in time of war? The parashah asks us to attempt every other possible measure before war is undertaken, literally to “call her [that is, the city] to peace” (20:10), which indicates that war should be considered a last resort in resolving a conflict. All world leaders should familiarize themselves with this ethical teaching: negotiate before fighting by actively calling out in peace to one’s opponent. This recalls the active language about Aaron the priest and his sons in Pirkei Avot 1:12, “Be like the disciples of Aaron: love peace and pursue it.” Real peace needs strong verbs of “calling” and “pursuing”—and real attempts to forge it.

This concept of calling out in peace would seem to be a place where a value of negotiation rather than fighting has permeated the ways in which the society approaches war. In discussing 20:10, Sefer HaChinuch 503, a medieval compilation of mitzvot, states, “The quality of mercy (rachmanit) is a good quality; and it is fitting for us, the holy seed, to behave thus in all matters even with our enemies, worshippers of idols.” This notion that we should always behave with rachamim (mercy)—even to an enemy—is one that continues to apply to daily life, as well as to national crises. This would mean that we first would call to that person in peace, prior to arguing or becoming angry, difficult as it may be.

Are there any biblical examples of this mode of discourse? One example concerns a woman who saves an entire city from destruction (II Samuel 20:14–22). That passage tells how Joab, a warrior acting on the king’s behalf, pursues Sheba son of Bichri, the leader of a group that has rebelled and fled to the town of Abel of Beth-maacah. When Joab besieges the city, a “wise woman” employs persuasive rhetoric and feminine imagery to avert war, warning Joab that he risks destroying a “mother city in Israel” (v. 19). Joab assures her that if the people hand over Sheba, he will not attack the city. The woman makes sure that this happens when she convinces the townspeople to cut off Sheba’s head and toss it over the wall. In this case, the wise woman’s sense of mercy and calling out in peace means that one life is sacrificed for the greater good, to avert large-scale bloodshed and ruin.

Parashat Shof’tim tells us that if war cannot be avoided, there are humane ways to go about it: “When in your war against a city you have to besiege . . . you must not destroy its trees” (20:19). Why not? The verse continues, “ki ha-adam etz ha-sadeh,” which can be read either as “Are the trees of the field human?” or, alternatively, as “for a human is like a tree.” Trees have the ability to draw water into themselves, and nourish themselves. What will sustain and nurture us? An answer may come from the end of the book of Deuteronomy, when Moses charges all the people—men, women, children, and strangers—to listen to and learn “every word of this Teaching (torah)” (31:12). Just as we may not cut down fruit trees so they may

SHOF'TIM

When we incorporate Torah into our hearts, the quality of mercy will permeate society.

continue to bear fruit, so we must actively study and teach Torah, striving to incorporate it into our hearts and our minds. That way, the quality of mercy will envelop and permeate our individual lives and our society as a whole.

Are there distinct ways that women strive to infuse our world with more mercy and peace? Professor Galia Golan, who has studied Israeli-Palestinian dialogue groups for twenty-five years, has found that dialogue groups composed of all women differ in certain respects from mixed-gender groups (“Reflections on Gender in Dialogue,” Nashim 6, 2003). She has observed that women tend to start from their shared experiences, beginning the conversation not with an abstract, angry summation of the history of the conflict, but with emotional accounts of their personal experiences. According to Golan, women seem more invested in the ability to “dissolve the psychological barriers obstructing resolution of the conflict, by reversing the dehumanization of the enemy that takes place during a prolonged conflict; expanding understanding of the other’s positions; creating empathy with the other side; and thus paving the way for eventual reconciliation.” Dialogue shows unique ways that women call one another to peace, reminding us that through our words and our actions, we possess the potential to “love peace and pursue it.”

It seems fitting that parashat Shof’tim, which is about justice, ends with a body. The crucial aspect of the perplexing ritual of the eglah arufah (“the broken-necked heifer”) is to force the living to acknowledge their responsibility to the dead. This ritual provides a means to ascertain responsibility for the corpse. According to the Midrash, kindness to a dead person (chesed shel emet) is the truest kindness, for it cannot ever be repaid (B’reishit Rabbah 96.5; see also p. 297). Why do it? It is the right thing to do, both for the collective of society and for the dead individual.

It is only in this state of being a collective that a society can operate with justice. Through the totality of these laws, the parashah defines a just society—true kindness and mercy done to all—whether they are brothers, sisters, or enemies, living or dead, human or tree—so that all may find means of sustenance and peace. These values become societal values when they permeate all aspects of life.

—Beth Kissileff

Voices

Judgment

Eleanor Wilner

Deuteronomy 16:18–20

When they removed the bandages from Justice's eyes, she had long since gone blind. She had been too many days in the dark, too long alone with the scale in her numb hands; she could no longer tell the true from the false. She had stood so many years in the cold outside the courts, as the law rushed past, clinging to the sleeve of power—until the chill had turned her veins to marble, her eyes to opalescent stone.

Yet those who tore the veil away could swear they were being watched, and though it must have been a bit of glass that caught a ray of sun, it was not unlike a bright, appraising eye. Whatever it was, they felt caught out, ashamed, and late at night, at home, they locked their windows tight and slipped into the room where the children slept, and looking down on them—for what they couldn't say—they wept.

Sorcery

Marjorie Agosin (transl. Cola Franzen)

Deuteronomy 18:10

Because they taught her to be silent,
to gather up the ashes of arrogant travelers, because they taught her not to cry
during nights of high tide,
she wanted to be a sorceress, free-wheeling, be able to peddle destiny
with words.

Military Washing

Karen Alkalay-Gut

Deuteronomy 20

On the opposite balcony Rochi hangs green laundry.
She has pulled uniform after uniform from the lines,
and now stretches out regulation long johns and undershirts, exhibiting for me the latest in foul-weather gear for the troops up north.

Hanging on my line are enough white anklets for an army of centipedes, olive sweaters and skirts, and the week's underwear. Newly shined boots sit on the windowsill, next to a pair of black oxfords waiting their turn. "Parents really need vacations from military chores," I say.
"Weekend furloughs are hell," she agrees.
"Let's meet in less fatiguing times."

Mobilization

Karen Alkalay-Gut

Deuteronomy 20

1.

A month before mobilization my daughter lies beside me and talks the way she did at naptime when she was three.

When I groan I need to sleep
she pats my stomach and sings the tuneless lullaby
my mother sang to me.

Like blinds my eyes flash open: How does she know it? She laughs, chattering in that tongue she never learned.

2.

The night before her mobilization friends come to say goodbye
as if she were embarking on a long journey.

But there is only a kitbag, 3 pairs of socks, long underwear and a funny doll
God knows where she will hide.

3.

“Women belong
in the same jobs as men,”
she retorts when the Rabbi on TV calls for a demobilization of all women from the army. Then, “Men belong in the same jobs as women,
in their homes, in the kitchen,
in safe places
away from the borders.”

Women and Horses

Maxine Kumin

Deuteronomy 20

(After Auschwitz, to write a poem is barbaric.
—Theodor Adorno)

After Auschwitz: after ten of my father's kin—the ones who stayed—starved, then were gassed in the camps.

After Vietnam, after Korea, Kuwait, Somalia, Haiti, Afghanistan.

After the Towers. This late in the life of our haplessly orbiting world
let us celebrate whatever scraps the muse, that naked child,
can pluck from the still-smoldering dumps.

If there's a lyre around, strike it! A body, stand back, give it air!

Let us have sparrows laying their eggs in bluebird boxes.

Let us have bluebirds insouciantly nesting elsewhere.

Lend us navel-bared teens, eyebrow- and nose-ringed prodigies crumbling breakfast bagels over dogeared and jelly-smeared texts.

Allow the able-bodied among us to have steamy sex.

Let there be fat old ladies in flowery tent dresses at bridge tables.

Howling babies in dirty diapers and babies serenely at rest.

War and détente will go on, détente and renewed tearings asunder, we can never break free from the dark and degrading past.

Let us see life again, nevertheless, in the words of Isaac Babel
as a meadow over which women and horses wander.

Olive Trees

Lea Goldberg (transl. Rachel Tzvia Back)

Deuteronomy 20:19–20

They withstood the heat wave and were confidants of the storm—as though they had stationed themselves for eternity
on the slope across from the ruined village, where they silvered in the cool light of the crescent moon.

Stand still, how abundant in this peace.
Here is ripe old age!
Listen, listen to the gusts of wind through the landscape of olives.
What modest trees!
Can you hear? They are speaking now wise and simple things.

Beheaded Heifer

Dahlia Ravikovitch
(transl. Chana Bloch and Chana Kronfeld)

Deuteronomy 21:1–9

Took another step,
then a few steps more.
His glasses dropped,
his skullcap dropped.
He took another step drenched in blood,
dragging his feet.
Ten steps more and he's not a Jew
not an Arab anymore—
ethereal.

Godawful uproar; people shrieking, Why are you murdering us?

Others hurrying about,
rushing to exact revenge.

He lies gasping on the ground: a death rattle,
a body torn open,
and the blood spilling out of the flesh,
the blood spilling out of the flesh.

He died here, or there—
some degree of uncertainty remains.
What do we know for a fact?
“One found slain in the field.”

It is said, Suffering cleanseth sin, man is like dust in the wind,
but who was that man
lying there lonely,
choking on his blood.
What did he see,
what did he hear
in the uproar that seethed above him?
It is also said:
If thou seest even thine enemy's ass lying under its burden,
thou shalt surely help.

If one be found slain in the field
if one be found slain on the ground, let your elders go out and slaughter a heifer and scatter its ashes in the stream.

NOTE

This poem is based on an actual incident in which a yeshiva student was shot in a Hebron marketplace and left to die because no one knew his identity; the Jews assumed that he was an Arab and the Arabs, a Jew.

כִּי-תַּצְאֶנָּא ◆ Ki Teitzei

DEUTERONOMY 21:10–25:19

Relationships and Society

PARASHAT KI TEITZEI (“when you go out”) contains a wide range of criminal, civil, and family laws, featuring many of the humane precepts for which Deuteronomy is justly famous. The topics addressed include relationships within households (between men, women, and children), among neighbors, between the underprivileged and other members of society, and even between humans and animals. As elsewhere, notably in the preceding parashah, Deuteronomy is concerned with the formation of an ideal Israelite society. However, whereas parashat Shof’tim concentrates on public officials, most of the laws in Ki Teitzei are directed at ordinary individuals. What may have once been considered family matters—such as the rights of a lesser-loved wife, the punishment of wayward children, the finding of lost objects—here are matters of concern to the society at large that must be legislated publicly. The goal is to create a balanced society in which the poor and weak are legally protected from the rich and strong, in which both property and human lives are respected, and—most importantly—in which individuals are subject to the community and its laws.

While some laws in this parashah seem to follow a logical or topical order, others appear to have been inserted at random. Most of the laws offer no reason or justification for adhering to them; but some refer to events recounted earlier in the Torah, such as the skin affliction of Miriam (24:9). The repeated mention of God’s approval or disapproval (as in 24:13 and 22:5) reminds us that no matter how secular the laws of Deuteronomy may appear to us, the book presents them as being on behalf of—and through—the will of God.

Issues pertaining to women are prominent in this parashah. They include the treatment of a captive woman, forced sex, accusations of non-virginity, divorce, and levirate marriage. Much in the ideal society that Deuteronomy envisions revolves around the status of women, generally their sexual status as wives or potential wives. Since the family unit is the basis of society, marriage and the women’s position in the family unit are important. Deuteronomy advocates chastity before marriage but, at the same time, protects women in cases where pre-marital sex was forced upon them; however, the penalty for promiscuous sex is severe. Most of all, Deuteronomy seeks to ensure that women marry, for ancient Israelite society offered no good place for an adult unmarried woman.

Much in the ideal society that Deuteronomy envisions revolves around the status of women.

—Adele Berlin

Outline—

I. LAWS REGARDING FAMILY RELATIONS (21:10–21)

- A. Marriage to a prisoner of war (vv. 10–14)
- B. Heir whose mother is an unloved wife (vv. 15–17)
- C. The incorrigible son (vv. 18–21)

II. LAWS REGARDING NEIGHBORS, NATURE, AND CLOTHING (21:22–22:12)

III. LAWS REGARDING SEXUAL MISCONDUCT (22:13–29)

- A. False and true accusations of unchastity (vv. 13–21)
- B. The penalty for adultery (v. 22)
- C. Forced and consensual sex with a betrothed woman (vv. 23–27)
- D. Forced sex with an unbetrothed woman (vv. 28–29)

IV. LAWS REGARDING FORBIDDEN RELATIONSHIPS (23:1–9)

- A. Prohibition on marrying a father's former wife (v. 1)
- B. Restriction on who may enter God's congregation (vv. 2–9)

V. MISCELLANEOUS LAWS (23:10–24:9)

- A. Laws regarding soldiers, slaves, and prostitutes (23:10–19)
- B. Laws regarding commitments to God and neighbors (23:20–26)
- C. More laws regarding marriage (24:1–5)
- D. Miscellany: objects taken in pawn, kidnapping, skin affliction (24:6–9)

VI. LAWS PROTECTING THE VULNERABLE (24:10–25:16)

- A. Obtaining pledges and paying wages (24:10–15)
- B. Prohibition on transgenerational punishment (24:16)
- C. Protecting the stranger, fatherless, and widow (24:17–20)
- D. Limits on flogging (25:1–3)
- E. Prohibition on muzzling an ox when it is threshing (25:4)
- F. Levirate marriage (25:5–10)
- G. Punishment of a woman who intervenes in her husband's fight (25:11–12)
- H. Honest weights and measures (25:13–16)

VII. CHARGE TO REMEMBER AMALEK (25:17–19)

21:10

When you [an Israelite warrior] take the field יְהוָה against your enemies, and your God delivers them into your power and you take some of them captive,¹¹ and you see among the captives a beautiful woman and you desire her and would take her to wife,¹² you shall bring her into your house, and she shall trim her hair, pare her nails,¹³ and discard her captive's garb. She shall spend a month's time in your house lamenting her father

כא ¹⁰ כִּי-תֵּצֵא לְמַלְחָמָה עַל-אֹיבּוֹ
יִנְתְּנוּ יְהוָה אֶל-הָיָר בִּיכָּךְ וְשָׁבֵית שְׂבִיוֹ:
וְרָאָתָּה בְּשֻׁבְיהָ אֲשֶׁת יִפְתְּחָתָאָר וְחַשְׁקָתָ
בָּה וְלִקְחָתָ לְךָ לְאָשָׁה: ¹² וְהַבָּאתָה אֶל-תוֹךְ בִּיכָּךְ וְגַלְעָד אֲתִידָרָאָשָׁה וְעַשְׂתָּה אֶת-
צְפְרִנִּיה: ¹³ וְהַטִּירָה אֶת-שְׁמַלְתָּ שְׁבִיהָ
מַעַלְיהָ וַיֵּשֶׁבָּה בְּבִיתְךָ וְכַתָּה אֶת-אָבִיךָ

Laws Regarding Family Relations (21:10–21)

This unit addresses three irregular family situations involving women and children.

MARRIAGE TO A PRISONER OF WAR (21:10–14)

This section on the captive wife continues the discussion of war in the preceding parashah (20:1–20). If an Israelite warrior wishes to marry a female captive, he is obligated to enable the woman to transition to her new status. The seeming conflict between this law and others that prohibit marrying women from the surrounding cultures (see especially 7:2–4) highlights the fact that the Torah does not unconditionally prohibit marrying foreign women. Rather, the prohibition pertains to those specific local Canaanite nations whose practices threaten Israel's identity and unconditional commitment to God. [The main purpose of this law is to protect the vulnerable (as is true of other laws in Deuteronomy) and to preserve the woman's position and dignity. That men legally had sexual access to women captured in war is evident in numerous texts from the ancient world; see, for example, the comments by the women who comfort the mother of Israel's enemy leader, Sisera, in the Song of Deborah (Judges 5:29–30). —Ed.]

II. beautiful woman. The Bible characterizes several women as beautiful, including Sarah, Rebekah, and Rachel (Genesis 12:11; 24:16; 29:17). Here, the woman's beauty is the source of the attraction. (For more on this topic, see Emor, Contemporary Reflection, p. 743.)

12–13. The captive woman enters the household, but only after she is given a month to mourn the loss of her parents can the Israelite marry her. The change in her status is signaled by trimming her hair and paring her nails (which may be signs of mourning or of the end of the mourning period), as well as by discarding her captive's clothing.

► Why would the male authors of this text legislate for female autonomy?

ANOTHER VIEW ► II85

► The parashah shows that memory can serve a wide variety of purposes.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► II87

► In antiquity, married Jewish women could and did initiate divorce.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► II85

► If you should see me now / you would not recognize your yesterdays....

VOICES ► II89

and mother; after that you may come to her and thus become her husband, and she shall be your wife.¹⁴ Then, should you no longer want her, you must release her outright. You must not sell her for money: since you had your will of her, you must not enslave her.

¹⁵If a householder has two wives, one loved and the other unloved, and both the loved and the unloved have borne him sons, but the first-born is the son of the unloved one—¹⁶when he wills his property to his sons, he may not treat as first-born the son of the loved one in disregard of the son of the unloved one who is older.¹⁷ Instead, he must accept the first-born, the son of the unloved one, and allot to him a double portion of all he possesses; since he is the first fruit of his vigor, the birthright is his due.

¹⁸If a householder has a wayward and defiant

וְאַתָּה אִמְתָּח יְרֵחַ יְמִים וְאַחֲרֵן תְּבוֹא אֶלְيֶךְ
וּבְעַלְתְּךָ וְהִיְתָה לְךָ לְאִשָּׁה: ¹⁴ וְהִיָּה אִם־
לֹא חִפּעַת בָּהּ וּשְׁלַחְתָּה לְנַפְשָׁה וּמִכְרָה
לְאַתְּתִּמְבְּרָה בְּכֶסֶף לְאִתְתִּעְמָר בָּהּ תַּחַת אֲשֶׁר עֲנִיתָה: ס

¹⁵כִּי־תִּתְהַלֵּג לְאִישׁ שְׂתִּי נְשָׁים הַאַחַת
אֲהֻבָּה וְהַאַחַת שְׁנִיאָה וַיַּלְוִילֵּוּ בְּנֵים
הַאֲהֻבָּה וְהַשְׁנִיאָה וְהִיָּה הַבָּן הַבָּכָר
לְשְׁנִיאָה: ¹⁶ וְהִזְהָה בַּיּוֹטְהַנְחִילוּ אַתְּ-בָּנָיו
אֲתָּה אֲשֶׁר־יְהִי לְךָ לֹא יוּכֶל לְבִכְרֵל אַתְּ-בָּנָו
הַאֲהֻבָּה עַל־פָּנֵי בָּנֵי־הַשְׁנִיאָה הַבָּכָר: ¹⁷ כי
אַתְּ-הַבָּכָר בָּנֵי־הַשְׁנִיאָה יְבִירֵל תַּחַת לֹא פִי
שְׁנִים בְּכָל אֲשֶׁר־יִפְצָא לֹא כִּי־הִוָּא רְאֵשָׁת
אָנוּ לֹא מְשֻׁפֵּט הַבָּכָר: ס

¹⁸כִּי־יְהִי לְאִישׁ בֶּן סָוִרְךָ וּמוֹרָה אִינְנוּ

14. If the Israelite later rejects this foreign wife, he must free her outright. Her status as the wife of an Israelite forever protects her from becoming, or reverting to, the status of a foreign slave (compare Exodus 21:7–8).

bad your will of her. Heb. innah; this inflection of the verbal root e-n-h can mean to debase a woman by having sex with her outside of a regularly contracted marriage. (For more on this verb, see at Genesis 34:2.) This raises the possibility that the man had sex with the woman while she was still a captive, which would not have been unusual. Alternatively, this verb may indicate that the marriage, while recognized as legal, was not considered typical.

HEIR WHOSE MOTHER IS AN UNLOVED WIFE (21:15–17)

The law concerns a man with two wives, although he presumably could have more. Indeed, several biblical narratives point to the two-wife family (plus concubines): Rachel and Leah (Genesis 29), Hannah and Peninnah (I Samuel 1), and the lesser-known wives of Lamech, Adah and Zillah (Genesis 4:19). The tension here over whose son has the rights of inheritance also informs the story of Sarah and Hagar (Genesis 16–21). This law is not intended to protect the unloved wife, rather, to protect the legal heir. As the husband's first-born son, the child must be designated as his heir and receive a double portion regardless of the man's feelings about the mother. Inheritance, which involved land, is extremely important in the Bible; thus, great pains are taken to identify the proper heirs and preserve the transmission of land holdings to them (see 25:5–10).

15. loved and the unloved. The same Hebrew words describe the situation of Leah and Rachel (see at Genesis 29:30–31), although there the subject of inheritance does not surface in the conflict.

THE INCORRIGIBLE SON (21:18–21)

The law now moves to another type of child, the incorrigible son. This law probably does not apply to daughters, for the characteristics of being a glutton and a drunkard seem to be stereotypically male, son, who does not heed his father or mother and does not obey them even after they discipline him,¹⁹ his father and mother shall take hold of him and bring him out to the elders of his town at the public place of his community.²⁰ They shall say to the elders of his town, “This son of ours is disloyal and defiant; he does not heed us. He is a glutton and a drunkard.”²¹ Thereupon his town’s council shall stone him to death. Thus you will sweep out evil from your midst: all Israel will hear and be afraid.

²²If a party is guilty of a capital offense and is put to death, and you impale the body on a stake,²³ you must not let the corpse remain on the stake overnight, but must bury it the same day. For an impaled body is an affront to God: you shall not defile the land that your God is giving you to possess.

22 If you see your fellow Israelite’s ox or sheep gone astray, do not ignore it; you must take it back to your peer.² If your fellow Israelite does not live near you or you do not know who [the owner] is, you shall bring it home and it shall remain with you until your peer claims it; then you shall give it back.³ You shall do the same with that person’s ass; you shall do the same with that person’s garment; and so too shall you do with any-whereas 22:20–21 does concern a rebellious daughter (see below). The text states explicitly that both mother and father are equally involved in multiple attempts to discipline the son. If they are unable to control him, it becomes the larger society’s responsibility to deal with him. Insubordination to parents, a violation of “Honor your father and mother” (5:16; Exodus 20:12; also Leviticus 19:3), is considered a capital offense. Such behavior undermines the parents’ authority and the function of families, which are the center of Israelite society.

20. “disloyal and defiant.” Here, disobedience is the crime; elsewhere, cursing and striking a parent are capital offenses (Exodus 21:15, 17; Leviticus 20:9; Deuteronomy 27:16).

שָׁמַע בְּקוֹל אֲבִיו וּבְקוֹל אֶמוֹ וַיֵּרֶא אֶתְוָה
וְלֹא יִשְׁמַע אֲלֵיכֶם: ¹⁹ וַיַּתְפְּשׂוּ בָּנָו אֲבִיו
וְאֶמוֹ וְהַזְׁכִּיאוּ אֶתְוָה אֶל-זָקְנֵי עִירָוּ וְאֶל-
שַׁעַר מִקְדָּשׁו: ²⁰ וְאָמַרְוּ אֶל-זָקְנֵי עִירָוּ בְּנֵנו
זֶה סֹורֵר וּמְלָה אֵינֵנוּ שָׁמַע בְּקָלָנוּ זָלָל
וְסָבָא: ²¹ וַיַּרְגְּמָהוּ בְּלִאָנְשִׁי עִירָוּ בְּאֶבֶנִים
וּמְתָת וּבְעֶרֶת הַרְעָם מִקְרָבָה וּבְלִיּוֹן יִשְׁמַעוּ וַיַּרְאוּ: ס

²² וְכִי-יְהִי בָּאִישׁ חָטָא מִשְׁפְּט-מִוּת
וְהַוָּמֶת וּתְלִיתָה אֶתְוָה עַל-עַצְמָה: ²³ לְאִתְלִין
נְבָלָתוֹ עַל-הָעַזְבָּן כִּי-קָבוּר תַּקְבְּלָנוּ בַּיּוֹם
הַהוּא כִּי-קָלְלָת אֶל-הָעִם תָּלָא וְלֹא תַּטְמֵא
אֶת-אָדָמָתָךְ אֲשֶׁר יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ נָתַן לְךָ נְחַלָּה: ס

כְּבָד לְאִתְרָאָה אֶת-שֹׁר אֲחִיךְ אֲוֹ אֶת-
שִׁיוֹנְדָחִים וְהַתְּעַלְמָת מֵהֶם הַשְׁבָּתִים
לְאָחִיךְ: ² וְאַם-לֹא קָרוּב אֲחִיךְ אֲלֹיךְ וְלֹא
יַדְעַתָּו וְאַסְפְּתָו אֶל-תֹּועֵבָה בִּתְךָ וְהִיא עַמְקָה
עַד דָּרְשָׁא אֲחִיךְ אֶתְוָה וְהַשְׁבָּתוּ לוּ: ³ וּבָנָן
תַּעֲשָׂה לְחַמְרוֹ וּבָנָן תַּעֲשָׂה לְשִׁמְלָתוֹ וּבָנָן

Laws Regarding Neighbors, Nature, and Clothing (21:22–22:12)

Generally speaking, the laws in this unit promote good citizenship by legislating areas of responsibility for what takes place outside of one’s own household.

22:23. This law limits the desecration of the corpse of an executed criminal by requiring relatively quick burial.

22:1–4. By returning lost objects (vv. 1–3) and helping to raise a fallen animal (v. 4), individuals cooperate to form a stronger community. Compare Exodus 23:4–5, which demands the return of, or aid to, the animal of an enemy—not of a neighbor.

thing that your fellow Israelite loses and you find: you must not remain indifferent.

⁴If you see your fellow Israelite's ass or ox fallen on the road, do not ignore it; you must raise it together.

⁵A woman must not put on man's apparel, nor shall a man wear woman's clothing; for whoever does these things is abhorrent to your God. יהוה

⁶If, along the road, you chance upon a bird's nest, in any tree or on the ground, with fledglings or eggs and the mother sitting over the fledglings or on the eggs, do not take the mother together with her young. ⁷Let the mother go, and take only the young, in order that you may fare well and have a long life.

⁸When you build a new house, you shall make a parapet for your roof, so that you do not bring bloodguilt on your house if anyone should fall from it.

⁹You shall not sow your vineyard with a second kind of seed, else the crop—from the seed you have sown—and the yield of the vineyard may not be used. ¹⁰You shall not plow with an ox and an ass together. ¹¹You shall not wear cloth combining wool and linen.

¹²You shall make tassels on the four corners of the garment with which you cover yourself.

5. The prohibition on cross-dressing is not explained, except to note that it is abhorrent to God. This rule perhaps was intended to prevent unacceptable sexual practices or pagan cultic practices. More likely, it aims to maintain gender boundaries, analogous to the laws against forbidden mixtures in 22:9–11, thus preventing confusion about the public presentation of a person's gender identity.

6–7. This law deals with the humane treatment of a mother bird and her fledglings. Interpreters often compare it to the prohibition of cooking a kid (baby goat) in its mother's milk (see at 14:21; Exodus 23:19; 34:26), as well as with the prohibition

תעשרה לכל־אבגדת אחיך אשר־תאבד ממנה ומצאתה לא תוכל להחזירם: ס

⁴לא־תראה את־חמור אחיך או שורו נפלים בדרך והתעלמת מהם הקם תקים עמו: פ

⁵לא־ייחיה כל־גבר על־אשה ולא־ילבש גבר שמלה אשה כי תועבת יהונה אלהך כל־עישה אלה: פ

⁶כפי יקראו קורצפור לפניך בדרך בכל־עץ או על־הארץ אפרחים או ביצים וזהאים רבעצט על־האפרחים או על־הביצים לא־תקח האם על־הבנות: ⁷שליח תשליח את־האמ ואת־הבנות תקח־להר למען

יעטב לך והארכת ימים: ⁸כפי תבנה בית חדש ועשית מעקה לנגרך ולא־תתשים דמים בביתך כי־יפל הנפל ממנה:

⁹לא־תזרע ברםך כללאים פנ־תקדש הכלילאה הזרע אשר תזרע ותבואותה הברים: ס ¹⁰לא־תחרש בשור־זבח חמור ייחרו: ¹¹לא תלבש שעתני צמר ופשתים ייחרו: ס

¹²גדלים תעשרה־להר על־ארבע בנפות בסותך אשר תכטה־בה: ס against slaughtering an animal and its mother on the same day (Leviticus 22:28).

8. Since roofs were flat and rooftops were used as a living or work space, they needed a wall or fence around them so people would not fall off.

9–11. The list of forbidden mixtures covers plants, animals, and clothing. No reason for these prohibitions is provided. (See also at Leviticus 19:19.)

12. This verse does not explain why tassels (g'dilim) should be put on one's everyday clothes. However, Numbers 15:37–41 mandates tzitzit (there translated as “fringes”) as reminders to obey God's commandments. The law appears to be gender neu-

¹³A householder marries a woman and cohabits with her. Then he takes an aversion to her ¹⁴and makes up charges against her and defames her, saying, “This is the party I married; but when I approached her, I found that she was not a virgin.” ¹⁵In such a case, the girl’s father and mother shall produce the evidence of the girl’s virginity before the elders of the town at the gate. ¹⁶And the girl’s father shall say to the elders, “To this party I gave my own daughter to wife, but he has taken an aver-

¹³כִּי־יָקַח אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר וְבָא אֲלֵיהֶן שְׁנָאָה:

¹⁴וְשָׁם לְהָעֵלִילָת דְּבָרִים וְהֹזֵעַ עַלְיהָ שֵׁם רֹעֶה וְאָמַר אֶת־הָאֲשֶׁר הַזֹּאת לְקַחְתִּי וְאֶקְרַב אֲלֵיכֶם וְלֹא־מַצְאָתִי לְהָבֹתְלִים:

¹⁵וְלֹקַח אָבִי הַנְּעָר הַנְּעָרָה וְאַמְתָּחָה וְהֹזֵיאוּ אֶת־בְּתוּלָתָה הַנְּעָר הַנְּעָרָה אֶל־זָקְנֵי הָעִיר הַשְׁעָרָה: ¹⁶וְאָמַר אָבִי הַנְּעָר הַנְּעָרָה אֶל־זָקְנִים אֶת־בְּתָהִ נְתַתִּי לְאִישׁ הַזֶּה לְאַשֶּׁר

tral, in that women are not excluded from wearing tassels. (For more on tasseled garments, see at Numbers 15:37–41.)

chastity succeeds, the husband will be able to rid himself of his wife without payment; and he might even benefit financially, for he is in essence accusing the bride’s father of breach of contract. The husband claims that he contracted and gave the betrothal gift for a virgin but received a wife whose betrothal gift should have been less. If so, the contract would be declared invalid; as a result, the husband would recoup the betrothal gift he had paid and the father might have to pay additional money as damages to the husband.

14–15. In this legal scenario, the husband makes public statements defaming the bride. Her parents sue the husband for defamation of character, of both the bride and her parents. According to this reading, the parents are the plaintiffs and the husband is the defendant. Alternatively, the husband is the plaintiff, bringing the legal claim of unchastity; and the parents are the defendants. Both mother and father bring evidence to the elders; but only the father utters the legal declaration, perhaps because the claim of breach of contract is directed at him. (Compare 21:20, where both parents make a legal declaration.)

14. “party.” [Heb. ishah (traditionally, “woman”). The present translation understands that the word ishah (and its corresponding male term, ish) has as its primary sense “a representative member of a group”; in legal settings, this sense translates to “a party (to the case at hand).” See The Contemporary Torah, 2006, pp. 394–5. —Ed.]

FALSE AND TRUE ACCUSATIONS OF UNCHASTITY (22:13–21)

This section focuses on false accusations of unchastity, which the law is intended to discourage, as well as the procedure if the accusation turns out to be true.

13–19. This passage presents the case of a husband who falsely accuses his bride of having been unchaste before the marriage. Motivating this accusation is the husband’s desire to get out of the marriage without incurring any financial costs. Under normal circumstances, if a man divorces his wife he must pay the support-money required by the marriage contract. However, if his accusation of un-sion to her;¹⁷ so he has made up charges, saying, ‘I did not find your daughter a virgin.’ But here is the evidence of my daughter’s virginity!” And they shall spread out the cloth before the elders of the town.¹⁸ The elders of that town shall then take that party and flog him,¹⁹ and they shall fine him a hundred [shekels of] silver and give it to the girl’s father; for [that householder] has defamed a virgin in Israel. Moreover, she shall remain his wife; he shall never have the right to divorce her.

²⁰But if the charge proves true, the girl was found not to have been a virgin,²¹ then the girl

וַיֹּשֶׁנְאָה¹⁷ וְהַנֵּה־הָוֹ שָׁם עֲלִילָת דְּבָרִים
לְאֹמֶר לֹא־מִצְאָתִי לְבַתְךָ בְּתוּלִים וְאַלְאָ
בְּתוּלִי בְּתֵיכִי וּפְרַשׂ הַשְׁמַלָּה לִפְנֵי זָקְנֵי
הָעִיר:¹⁸ וְלֹקְחֹ וְקַנְיֵ הַעֲרִיךְהָוָא אַתְּ
הָאִישׁ וַיְסַרְךְ אֶתְךָ¹⁹ וְעַנְשָׂו אֶתְךָ מַאֲהָ
כֹּסֶף וְנוֹתְנָו לְאַבִּי הַגְּנָבָה כִּי הַזְּכִיא שָׁם
רָע עַל בְּתוּלָת יִשְׂרָאֵל וְלוֹזְתָּהִיה לְאַשֶּׁ לְאִיּוֹכֵל לְשַׁלְּחוֹ בְּלִימָיו:²⁰ ס
וְאַם־אִמְתָּה הָיָה הַדָּבָר הַזָּה לְאַנְמַצֵּאוֹ
בְּתוּלִים לְנָעַר לְנָעַר:²¹ וְהַזְּכִיאוֹ אֶת־

*17. I did not find your daughter a virgin.*¹⁷ The public statement by the husband in v. 14 did not say “your daughter” but rather “she.” The father construes the case as an accusation against himself more than his daughter, for he is responsible for his daughter’s chastity.

the cloth. Typically, readers assume this to be a blood-stained sheet from the wedding night. Many commentators, medieval and modern, have noted the flimsiness of this evidence and the impossibility of proving whether the bloodstain was faked or not, even assuming that the custom of saving the wedding sheet for such an occasion was indeed practiced in ancient Israel. On the other hand, it would have been difficult to prove that the evidence was faked. If the parents bring the lawsuit, with evidence that is hard to refute, then clearly the accusation is false. This action and the penalty that the elders impose upon the man aim at deterring such false accusations. Without such deterrence, husbands might all too easily accuse their unloved wives of premarital unchastity, to the detriment of a society in which marriage and family were the keystones.

19. fine him a hundred [shekels]. This is double the betrothal gift (v. 29) that the father would have returned had the accusation been true. Thus, the would-be “thief” pays double what he wishes to steal. The fine is paid to the father, not the wife, for he is considered the injured party in the lawsuit.

*he shall never have the right to divorce her.*²¹ The husband’s aim from the start seems to have been to divorce his wife, and this option now is forever denied him. To a modern reader, this seems to be a punishment for the bride as well as for the husband. In ancient society, however, a woman was more secure economically when married than when divorced. (An individual could scarcely survive economically or socially unless she or he was a part of a family or similar group. This was especially true of women, who had few means of independent support and little chance for social standing or power outside the group. See at 22:29.) This law was probably intended to deter false accusations of unchastity, or perhaps to deter easy and baseless divorces.

20–21. If the accusation is true, the sentence is carried out at the entrance to the father’s house, not at the town gate; the father is held responsible and thus is publicly dishonored. The penalty for the wife is death. Premarital sex in itself is not the problem (although it was certainly discouraged; see vv. 28–29); the problem here, from the husband’s view, is misrepresentation—providing the husband with a wife whose due betrothal gift would have been lower than that of the virgin that he contracted for. Many scholars think that this section was added later for the sake of symmetry; clearly, the main emphasis is on the case of false, not true, accusation.

Modern scholars have understood this case as the female parallel to the incorrigible son. In both cases, shall be brought out to the entrance of her father's house, and her town's council shall stone her to death; for she did a shameful thing in Israel, committing fornication while under her father's authority. Thus you will sweep away evil from your midst.

²²If a man is found lying with another man's wife, both of them—the man and the woman with whom he lay—shall die. Thus you will sweep away evil from Israel.

²³In the case of a virgin who is engaged to a man—if a man comes upon her in town and lies

הנער הַנָּעֶרֶת אֶל-פְּתַח בֵּית-אֲבִיה וִסְקֹלֹתָה
אֲנָשִׁי עִירָה בְּאָבָנִים וּמְתָה בִּידְעָשָׂתָה
גָּבְלָה בִּישראל לִזְנוֹת בֵּית אֲבִיה וּבְעַרְתָּה
הַרְעָם מִקְרָבָךְ: ס

²²כִּי יִגְּמַלֵּא אִישׁ שָׁבֵב | עַמְּדָא-אָשָׁה
בָּעַלְתָּבָעֵל וּמְתוֹ גַּמְשְׁנִים הָאִישׁ
הַשָּׁבֵב עַמְּדָא-אָשָׁה וְהָאָשָׁה וּבְעַרְתָּה הַרְעָם מִישראל: ס

²³כִּי יִהְיֶה נָעָר נָעָרָה בָּתּוֹלָה מִאֲרָשָׁה
לְאִישׁ וּמִצְאָה אִישׁ בָּעֵיר וּשָׁבֵב עַמְּה: ס

the offspring fails to uphold the family standards and goes against parental authority. In both cases, the parents' testimony decides the outcome; and the penalty for disobeying parental authority is death by stoning. This parallel strongly suggests that in both cases, the issue is repeated, uncontrolled behavior—not a one-time occurrence. The “unchaste bride” is actually being accused of promiscuity and deception, not merely a pre-marital fling. These laws attempt to promote proper behavior by adolescent women and men who are at precisely the age when rebellion against parental authority is most likely. (See Adele Berlin, “Sex and the Single Girl in Deuteronomy 22,” in Nili Fox et al., eds., Mishneh Todah: Studies in Deuteronomy . . . , 2008.)

20. if the charge proves true. This refers to the husband's accusation (v. 14).

the girl was found not to have been a virgin. Better, “no signs of virginity belonging to the girl were found.” In other words, the parents could not or did not bring the cloth to the elders, so there was no way to disprove the husband's accusation.

THE PENALTY FOR ADULTERY (22:22)

In the Bible, adultery is defined as sex between a married or betrothed woman and a man other than her husband or fiancé (see also Exodus 20:13). This verse is placed here to make clear that adultery is a capital offense and that both parties receive the death penalty. In the story of the adulterous encounter between King David and Bathsheba (II Samuel 11–12), God commutes David's death sentence; Bathsheba's guilt is not mentioned. While in that story it is David who initiates the sexual act, Proverbs 7 tells of a married woman who lures a young man into committing adultery.

FORCED AND CONSENSUAL SEX WITH A BETROTHED WOMAN (22:23–27)

While Deuteronomy takes a dim view of pre-marital sex by a woman (see below), it recognizes that in some cases women are victims of non-consensual sex and therefore seeks to protect them from culpability in those cases. (A betrothed woman, meaning one whose marriage has been contracted, is for legal reasons considered like a married woman. If she engages in consensual sex with a man other than the one betrothed to her, both are committing adultery.) How does one determine if the sex was consensual or not? This section establishes that if the encounter took place in the town (vv. 23–24), where she could call for help if she needed it, then the sex is judged to be consensual and both are culpable. The supposition is that had she called for help, she would have been heard and rescued. However, in the country (vv. 25–27), where presumably no help is available, the sex is assumed to have been forced and the woman is not with her,²⁴ you shall take the two of them out to the gate of that town and stone them to death: the girl because she did not cry for help in the town, and the man because he violated another man's wife. Thus you will sweep away evil from your midst.²⁵ But if the man comes upon the engaged girl in the open country, and the man lies with her by force, only the man who lay with her shall die,²⁶ but you shall do nothing to the girl. The girl did not incur the death penalty, for this case is like that of one party attacking and murdering another.²⁷ He came upon her in the open; though the engaged girl cried for help, there was no one to save her.

²⁸If a man comes upon a virgin who is not engaged and he seizes her and lies with her, and they

²⁴ וְהוֹצִאֲתֶם אֶת־שְׁנֵיכֶם אֶל־שַׁעַר | הָעִיר
הַהּוּא וְסִקְלַתֶּם אֶתְכֶם בְּאָבְנִים וּמִתּוֹ אַתְּ
הַנְּعָר הַגְּנֻרָה עַל־דָּבָר אֲשֶׁר לֹא־עֲזַקְתָּ
בָּעֵיר וְאַתְּ הָאִישׁ עַל־דָּבָר אֲשֶׁר־עָנָה אַתְּ
אֲשֶׁת רְעָהוּ וּבְעַרְתָּת הַרְעָעָם מִקְרָבְךָ: ס
²⁵ וְאִם־בִּשְׁדָה יִמְצָא הָאִישׁ אֶת־הַנְּעָר
הַנְּעָר הַמְּאֶרֶשֶׁה וְהַחֲזִיקְבָּה הָאִישׁ
וּשְׁכֵב עַפְמָה וְמֵת הָאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר־שְׁכֵב עַפְמָה
לְבָדוֹ: ²⁶ וּלְנָגָר וּלְגַעַר לְאַתְּעָשָׂה דָּבָר
אֵין לְנָגָר לְגַעַר חַטָּאת מוֹת בַּיּוֹם
אִישׁ עַל־רְעָהוּ וּרְצָחוֹ נִפְשָׁן כִּי הַדָּבָר הַזֶּה:
²⁷ כִּי בָּשְׁדָה מִצְאָה צָעֵקה הַנְּעָר הַגְּנֻרָה הַמְּאֶרֶשֶׁה וְאֵין מַוְשִׁיעַ לָהּ: ס
²⁸ כִּי־יִמְצָא אִישׁ נָגָר גַּעַר בְּתוֹלָה אֲשֶׁר לֹא־אָנָּשָׁה וְתִפְשָׁה וּשְׁכֵב עַפְמָה וּנְמִצְאָה:

culpable. We may assume that the woman went on to marry her fiancé with no legal repercussions.

FORCED SEX WITH AN UNBETROTHED WOMAN (22:28–29)

This case concerns a woman who is not married or betrothed, so engaging in sex with her does not constitute adultery. The law assumes that the man initiated the act and that there was some degree of coercion, as reflected in the statement, “he seizes her and lies with her” (v. 28; compare v. 23). The man is obligated to marry the woman and to pay the betrothal gift for virgins; he may never divorce her. (Compare Exodus 22:15–16, which does not include the no-divorce stipulation and provides for the father’s refusal of the marriage.)

Some modern commentators wonder if this was a form of elopement, or a way for the woman to force her father to agree to her choice of a marriage partner. Others view the law as hard on the woman, who would have to remain married to her “rapist” (although this was not necessarily a rape). As in most cases, however, the law is not focused on the interests of women individually, but instead on families and society. The law assumes some initiative or even force on the man’s part (on such language, see at Exodus 19:15); after all, voluntary sex on the woman’s part that did not result in marriage to the sexual partner would leave her vulnerable to the true claim of unchastity by a subsequent husband (see vv. 20–21). This law seeks to prevent that situation. Sex by an unmarried or unbetrothed woman is, as it were, covered up by making it sound less-than-consensual and by quickly marrying off the woman to her sexual partner (who would hardly be in a position to later accuse her of unchastity). The man is obligated to remain married to her for much the same reason as the false accuser is (see at v. 19).

Permanent marriage without the possibility of divorce protects the woman (see at v. 19), who would find it difficult to contract another marriage if her past marital or sexual history were known. The law also protects the father’s interest in that he receives the fullest betrothal gift. A never-married are discovered,²⁹ the party who lay with her shall pay the girl's father fifty [shekels of] silver, and she shall be his wife. Because he has violated her, he can never have the right to divorce her.

23 No householder shall marry his father's former wife, so as to remove his father's garment.

²No man whose testes are crushed or whose member is cut off shall be admitted into the congregation of יהוה.

³No one misbegotten shall be admitted into the congregation of יהוה; no descendant of such, even in the tenth generation, shall be admitted into the congregation of יהוה.

⁴No Ammonite or Moabite shall be admitted into the congregation of יהוה; no descendants of

²⁹ וַיְנַתֵּן הָאִישׁ הַשְׂכֵב עַמֹּה לְאָבִי הַנֶּעֶר הַגְּנֻעָרָה חֲמִשִּׁים בְּסָף וְלֹזְתִּיהָ לְאָשָׁה תְּחַת אֲשֶׁר עָנָה לְאִיוֹכָל שְׁלֹחָה כָּל- יְמֵינוֹ: ס

כג לְאַיִקָּח אִישׁ אֶת-אִשָּׁת אָבִיו וְלֹא יַגְלִיל בָּנֶךְ אָבִיו: ס

² לְאִיבָּא פְּצֹוע-דָּקָה וּבְרוֹת שְׁפָכָה בְּקֹהֶל יְהוָה: ס

³ לְאִיבָּא מַמְזֵר בְּקֹהֶל יְהוָה גַם דָוֶר עֲשִׂירִי לְאִיבָּא לוֹ בְּקֹהֶל יְהוָה: ס

⁴ לְאִיבָּא עַמּוֹנִי וּמוֹאָבִי בְּקֹהֶל יְהוָה גַם דָוֶר עֲשִׂירִי לְאִיבָּא לְהָם בְּקֹהֶל יְהוָה עַד-

non-virgin daughter would not be easy to marry off. Given that there must have been women of this description, Deuteronomy is at pains to protect them while still adhering to a high ideal standard for women's premarital sexual behavior.

Laws Regarding Forbidden Relationships (23:1–9)

Following the prohibition of marrying one's father's former wife, this unit restricts membership in the community by sexual and ethnic characteristics.

PROHIBITION ON MARRYING A FATHER'S FORMER WIFE (23:1)

This law appears in Leviticus 18:8 and 20:11 as part of a long list of prohibited incestuous relationships. The reference applies to a person's step-mother, not simply to his biological mother.

1. to remove his father's garment. That is, to lay claim to his father's wife (Leviticus 18:8, 20:11; Ezekiel 16:8; Ruth 3:9), whom it would be inappropriate to marry.

RESTRICTION ON WHO MAY ENTER GOD'S CONGREGATION (23:2–9)

This section limits those included in the “congregation,” which may mean the official members, or full citizens, of the Israelite community. (See also at Leviticus 21:16–24.)

2. Eunuchs are mentioned first. In the ancient world, young men captured in war were sometimes castrated and designated to serve in the court, a military unit, or a household.

3. misbegotten. Heb. mamzer, a status term whose precise meaning is uncertain because it appears only once more in the Bible, in an equally vague setting (Zechariah 9:6). (The Rabbis understood this term to refer to children of prohibited marriages.)

4–7. These verses exclude Ammonites and Moabites because they treated Israel poorly after the Exodus. According to Genesis 19:36–38, Ammon and Moab are the offspring of the incestuous unions between Lot and his daughters, which may explain why they are included just after the mention of the mamzer. Traditional commentators interpret this exclusion as applying only to male Ammonites and Moabites. This helps eliminate the contradic-such, even in the tenth generation, shall ever be admitted into the congregation of יהוה,⁵ because they did not meet you with food and water on your journey after you left Egypt, and because they hired Balaam son of Beor, from Pethor of Aram-naharaim, to curse you.—⁶But your God יהוה refused to heed Balaam; instead, your God יהוה turned the curse into a blessing for you, for your God יהוה loves you.—⁷You shall never concern yourself with their welfare or benefit as long as you live.

⁸You shall not abhor an Edomite, for such is your kin. You shall not abhor an Egyptian, for you were a stranger in that land. ⁹Children born to them may be admitted into the congregation of יהוה in the third generation.

¹⁰When you [men] go out as a troop against your enemies, be on your guard against anything untoward. ¹¹If anyone among you has been rendered impure by a nocturnal emission, he must leave the camp, and he must not reenter the camp. ¹²Toward evening he shall bathe in water, and at sundown he may reenter the camp. ¹³Further, there shall be an area for you outside the camp, where you may relieve yourself. ¹⁴With your gear you shall have a spike, and when you have squatted you shall dig a hole with it and cover up your excrement. ¹⁵Since your God יהוה moves about in your camp

עַזְלָם: ⁵ עַל־דֶּבֶר אֲשֶׁר לֹא־קָדוֹם אֶתְכֶם בְּלִכְמָן וּבְמִים בְּקָרֶךְ בְּצָאתְכֶם מִמְּצָרִים וְאֲשֶׁר שָׁבֵר עַלְיָה אֶת־בְּלֻעָם בְּנִ־בְּעוֹר מִפְּטוֹר אָרְם נְהָרִים לְקָלְלָר: ⁶ וְלֹא־אָבָה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם לְשָׁמֵעַ אֶל־בְּלֻעָם וְיַהְפֵּל יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם לְקָרְבָּה בְּיַהְבֵּךְ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם לְקָרְבָּה בְּרָכָה בְּיַהְבֵּךְ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם: ⁷ לְאַתְּדָרְשׁ שְׁלָמָם וְטַבְתֶּם בְּלִימָיוֹק לְעַזְלָם: ס

⁸ לְאַתְּתַּעַב אֶדְמָי בַּי אֲחִיךְ הָוָא לְאַתְּתַּעַב מִצְרָי בַּי־גָּר הִיאִית בָּאָרֶצָוָה: ⁹ בְּנָים אֲשֶׁר־יַוְלוּ לְהָם דָּוָר שְׁלִישִׁי יַבָּא לְהָם בְּקָרְבָּל יְהוָה: ס

¹⁰ כִּי־תַּצָּא מִחְנָה עַל־אַזְבִּיךְ וְנִשְׁמַרְתָּ מִבְּלִדְךְ רָע: ¹¹ כִּי־יִהִי בְּךְ אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר לְאַתְּ יִהְיֶה טָהוֹר מִקְרָה־לִילָה וַיֵּצֵא אֶל־מִחוֹז לִמְחַנָּה לְאַתְּ יַבָּא אֶל־תוֹךְ הַמִּחְנָה: ¹² וְהִיא לְפִנּוֹת־עֲרָב יוֹתֵץ בְּמִים וּכְבָא הַשְּׁמֶשׁ יַבָּא אֶל־תוֹךְ הַמִּחְנָה: ¹³ וַיַּד תַּהֲיֵה לְכָה מִחוֹז לִמְחַנָּה וַיַּצְאֵת שְׁמַה חַווֹּז: ¹⁴ וַיַּתְּהִיר תַּהֲיֵה לְכָה עַל־אַזְנָךְ וְהִיא בְּשַׁבְּתָךְ חַווֹּז וְחַפְרָתָה בָּה וְשַׁבְּתָה וּבְסִיתָה אֶת־צָאָתָךְ: ¹⁵ כִּי יְהָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם מִתְהַלֵּךְ וּבְקָרְבָּל מִחְנָה

tion between this verse and the book of Ruth, in which a Moabite woman (Ruth) is accepted into the Israelite community. The present translation understands the grammatically masculine language in this prohibition to refer to women as well, based on an allusion in I Kings 11:1–2 (The Torah: A Modern Commentary, revised edition, 2005, p. 1328). However the exclusion of Ammonites and Moabites is defined, its historical origin is not known, nor is it clear if Deuteronomy's denial of citizenship also included a ban on marrying them (although that may have been the result).

Miscellaneous Laws (23:10–24:9)

This unit contains a series of laws about purity in wartime, escaped slaves, prostitution, financial responsibilities, divorce, skin disease, and other assorted matters.

LAWS REGARDING SOLDIERS, SLAVES, AND PROSTITUTES (23:10–19)

This passage concerns three seemingly unrelated groups of people: soldiers, slaves, and prostitutes.

to protect you and to deliver your enemies to you, let your camp be holy; let [God] not find anything unseemly among you and turn away from you.

¹⁶You shall not turn over to the master a slave who seeks refuge with you from that master. ¹⁷Such individuals shall live with you in any place they may choose among the settlements in your midst, wherever they please; you must not ill-treat them.

¹⁸No Israelite woman shall be a prostitute, nor shall any Israelite man be a prostitute. ¹⁹You shall not bring the fee of a whore or the pay of a dog into the house of your God in fulfillment of any vow, for both are abhorrent to your God. יהוה.

להצילך ולתת אַיִלָּךְ לְפָנֶיךְ וְהִיא מַחֲנֵיכְ קָדוֹשׁ וְלֹא־יָרָא בְּעָרוֹת דָּבָר וְשָׁב
מַאֲחֶרֶיךְ:

¹⁶לְאַתְּסִגֵּר עָבֵד אֶל־אֱלֹהֵינוּ אֲשֶׁר־יִנְצַל
אַלְיָק מִעַם אֹדְנָיו: ¹⁷עַמְלָךְ יִשְׁבּ בְּקָרְבָּךְ
בָּמִקְוּם אֲשֶׁר־יִבְתַּחַר בְּאַחֲרֵ שָׂעִירָךְ בְּטוֹב לוֹ לֹא תָּנוֹנוּ:

¹⁸לְאַתְּהִיא קָרְשָׁה מִבְנֹות יִשְׂרָאֵל וְלֹא־
יְהִיא קָרְשָׁה מִבְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ¹⁹לְאַתְּבִיא
אַתָּנוּ זֹנָה וּמְחִיר בְּלֵב בֵּית יהֹה אֱלֹהֵינוּ
לְכָל־נָדָר בְּיַחַד תְּזַעַבְתְּ יהֹה אֱלֹהֵיךְ גַּם־

שְׁנֵיהֶם:

10–15. Ritual purity is required in the military camp, for God is thought to be present in it. Certain bodily functions render a man impure (see at Leviticus 15:1–18), but this should not be confused with uncleanness.

16–17. Most commentators understand this asylum law to apply to foreign slaves, not Israelites. In contrast, ancient Near Eastern practice required the extradition of runaway slaves.

18–19. These verses seem to prohibit prostitution by females and males, though the meaning of v. 19 is obscure.

18. prostitute. Heb. k'deishah and kadeish. In the past, scholars understood these terms as a reference to male and female cult prostitution, which was associated with Canaanite and Mesopotamian fertility rites where ritual sexual union was believed to ensure agricultural fertility. The reason for this interpretation is that the term k'deishah derives from k-d-sh (meaning “holy” or “set apart”) and the etymologically related Akkadian term kadishtu refers to a type of priestess. Recent scholarship, however, has questioned the existence of cult prostitution in the ancient Near East, although there may have been prostitutes in the vicinity of temples, and temples may have received funds from their activities. Many scholars now believe that k'deishah means a common prostitute (zonah), not a cult prostitute (see Genesis 38:15, 21, where both terms are used). [Others suggest different interpretations. Tikva Frymer-Kensky writes that k'deishah refers to “a public woman, who might be found along the roadway (as virgins or married women should not be). She could engage in sex, but might also be sought out for lactation, midwifery, and other female concerns” (Women In Scripture, 2000, p. 162). Phyllis A. Bird, who translates k'deishah as “hierodule” (from Greek, meaning “a sacred/holy servant”) considers the term to refer to a variety of cult-related women (Missing Persons and Mistaken Identities, 1997, p. 199). —Ed.]

While the Bible certainly does not encourage prostitution, it acknowledges and accepts it as part of the social reality. Indeed, since prostitutes are among the socially inferior in that they do not belong to male-headed households, the Bible occasionally treats them with sympathy (see the depiction of Rahab in Joshua 2 and the two women who plead before Solomon in I Kings 3:16–27). Deuteronomy’s strong stance against prostitution fits with the book’s idealized picture of society.

²⁰You shall not deduct interest from loans to your fellow Israelites, whether in money or food or anything else that can be deducted as interest; ²¹but you may deduct interest from loans to foreigners. Do not deduct interest from loans to your fellow Israelites, so that your God ייְהוָה may bless you in all your undertakings in the land that you are about to enter and possess.

²²When you make a vow to your God יְהוָה, do not put off fulfilling it, for your God יְהוָה will require it of you, and you will have incurred guilt; ²³whereas you incur no guilt if you refrain from voweding. ²⁴You must fulfill what has crossed your lips and perform what you have voluntarily vowed to your God יְהוָה, having made the promise with your own mouth.

²⁵When you enter a fellow [Israelite]’s vineyard, you may eat as many grapes as you want, until you are full, but you must not put any in your vessel.
²⁶When you enter a fellow [Israelite]’s field of standing grain, you may pluck ears with your hand; but you must not put a sickle to your neighbor’s grain.

24 A householder takes a wife and becomes her husband. She fails to please him because he finds something obnoxious about her, and he writes

LAWS REGARDING COMMITMENTS TO GOD AND NEIGHBORS (23:20-26)

Deuteronomy repeatedly expresses a concern with economic issues under the umbrella of divine law.

20–21. For more on laws protecting poor Israelites who depend on loans, see at Leviticus 25:36.

22-24. For more on vowels, see at Numbers 6 and 30.

25-26. This law about eating unharvested crops applies to everyone, not only the poor. (See also Leviticus 19:9-10.)

לא-תשים לאחיך נשך בטה נשך אבל
נשך כל דבר אשר ישך: ²¹ לנכרי תשיך
ולאחיך לא תשיך למן יברך יהונה
אליך בכל משלוח ידך על-הארץ אשר-אתם רב-asmach larushot.

22 בונתבָּה נִדְלֵל לִבְנֹת אַלְמָנָה לֹא מֵאֶחָר

לשלמו בידר'ש ידרש יהוה אלהיך

מעמר ויהי בק חטא: ²³ וכי תחדר לנهر

לא-ידהה בְּקָחַתָּא: ²⁴ מִצְעָד שֶׁפְתִּיקָה

תִשְׁמַר וְעָשֵׂית כַּאֲשֶׁר נִדְרָת לִיהוֹה אֱלֹהֵינוּ

בנְרָבָה אֲשֶׁר נִבְרָת בְּפִיקָה:

בנפשה שבעה ואל-בליה לא תמן:

26 פִי תָבָא בְקַמֶת רַעַך וּקְטַפֵת מְלִילָת

בידך וחרמיש לא תנייף על קמת רעך: ס

כד כִּי יַקְה אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר וּבָעֵלָה וְהִיא אָמָן
לֹא חֲמָא אֲתָחּו בְּשִׁנְוָנוּ בְּנַמְאָא בְּלֹעֲרוֹם

MORE LAWS REGARDING MARRIAGE (24:1-5)

The two laws in this section supplement material regarding marriage, first by setting conditions under which remarriage may be possible; and second, by prolonging a couple's "honeymoon," as it were.

I-4. This law about forbidden remarriage considers it indecent (akin to adultery) for a husband to remarry a woman he divorced who subsequently married another man. This may have been intended to deter quick divorce or to prevent promiscuity; concerns about paternity could also be an issue.

her a bill of divorcement, hands it to her, and sends her away from his house; ²she leaves his household and becomes the wife of another man; ³then this latter man rejects her, writes her a bill of divorce-ment, hands it to her, and sends her away from his house; or the man who married her last dies. ⁴Then the first husband who divorced her shall not take her to wife again, since she has been defiled—for that would be abhorrent to יהוה. You must not bring sin upon the land that your God יהוה is giving you as a heritage.

⁵When a householder has taken a bride, he shall not go out with the army or be assigned to it for any purpose; he shall be exempt one year for the sake of his household, to give happiness to the woman he has married.

⁶A handmill or an upper millstone shall not be taken in pawn, for that would be taking someone's life in pawn.

⁷If a party is found to have kidnapped—and then enslaved or sold—a fellow Israelite, that kid-

דָבָר וְכֹתֵב לְה סִפְר בְּרִיתַת וְנִתְן בַּיִתָה
וְשְׁלֹחָה מֶבֶיתו: ² וַיֵּצֵא מֶבֶיתו וְהַלְכָה
הַיִתָה לְאִישׁ-אָחָר: ³ וְשִׁנְאָה הָאִישׁ
הַאֲחָרוֹן וְכֹתֵב לְה סִפְר בְּרִיתַת וְנִתְן
בַּיִתָה וְשְׁלֹחָה מֶבֶיתו אָז כִּי יָמוֹת הָאִישׁ
הַאֲחָרוֹן אֲשֶׁר-לְקָתָה לוֹ לְאִשָּׁה: ⁴ לְאַז
יָוכֵל בַּעַלְה הַרְאָסוֹן אֲשֶׁר-שְׁלֹחָה לְשִׁובָה
לְקָחְתָה לְהִיוֹת לוֹ לְאִשָּׁה אֲחָרָיו אֲשֶׁר
הַטְמָאָה בִּיתְעוּבָה הוּא לִפְנֵי יהָוה וְלֹא
תַחֲטִיא אֶת-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר יְהָוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן
לְךָ נָחָלה: ⁵

⁵ כִּי-יַקְרֵב אִישׁ אִשָּׁה חֶרְשָׁה לֹא יַצֵּא בָּצָבָא
וְלֹא-יַעֲבֹר עַלְיוֹ לְכָל-דָּבָר נַקְיִי יְהָוה לְבַיִתָו
שָׁנָה אֶחָת וְשָׁמָח אֶת-אֶשְׁתּוֹ אֲשֶׁר-לְקָח: ⁶ לְאִיחָבֵל רְחִים וּרְכָב פִּינְפָשׁ הוּא
חַבֵּל: ⁷ כִּי-יִמְצָא אִישׁ גָּנְבָנְפָשׁ מְאַחֵיו מִבְנֵי

Note that David's wife Michal was given to another man, Paltiel, by her father King Saul, but David subsequently demanded her back as his wife (I Samuel 18:27; 25:44; II Samuel 3:13–16). (See also at Leviticus 21:7 and Another View, p. 1185.)

i. something obnoxious about her. The same idiom appears in 23:15, where the translation reads “anything unseemly.” The verse does not specify the valid conditions for divorce.

bill of divorcement. This refers to some sort of legal divorce document.

sends her away. This technical language for divorce—the opposite of “takes her as a wife”—means that the woman is no longer part of the man's household. [This ruling was not always interpreted to mean that only husbands could initiate divorce. The oldest surviving Jewish marriage contracts (from a Jewish community in Elephantine, Egypt) show that in the 5th century B.C.E., wives could initiate a divorce. —Ed.]

⁵ This law concerning military deferments resembles 20:7, but here only the marital deferment is singled out, and the time of the deferment set at a year. To “give happiness” to his new wife presumably refers to conjugal pleasure. See also at 25:5–10.

MISCELLANY: OBJECTS TAKEN IN PAWN, KIDNAPPING, SKIN AFFLCTION (24:6–9)

This section contains more laws tying everyday situations with divine law.

⁶ This law mandates that certain tools are not to be taken as pawns. If the millstones used to grind flour were accepted in pledge for a loan, the family would lack the tools needed to sustain itself. (On women's role in bread-making, see at Exodus 16:3 and 25:30, as well as at Leviticus 26:26.)

⁷ Kidnapping a fellow Israelite (female or male) for profit, either to get free labor or to sell the victim into slavery for money, is a capital offense.

napper shall die; thus you will sweep out evil from your midst.

⁸In cases of a skin affection be most careful to do exactly as the levitical priests instruct you. Take care to do as I have commanded them. ⁹Remember what your God יְהוָה did to Miriam on the journey after you left Egypt.

¹⁰When you make a loan of any sort to your compatriot, you must not enter the house to seize the pledge. ¹¹You must remain outside, while the party to whom you made the loan brings the pledge out to you. ¹²If the party is needy, you shall not go to sleep in that pledge; ¹³you must return the pledge at sundown, that its owner may sleep in the cloth and bless you; and it will be to your merit before your God יְהוָה.

¹⁴You shall not abuse a needy and destitute laborer, whether a fellow Israelite or a stranger in one of the communities of your land. ¹⁵You must pay out the wages due on the same day, before the sun sets, for the worker is needy and urgently depends on it; else a cry to יְהוָה will be issued against you and you will incur guilt.

8–9. For more on such skin conditions, see at Leviticus 13:1–59.

9. Miriam. This verse—the only verse in the Torah that mentions Miriam in words directly attributed to Moses—alludes to Numbers 12:10–15, where Miriam is stricken with skin disease for challenging Moses' authority. Here Moses holds her up as an example of the seriousness of skin disease and the need to heed God's instructions for dealing with it. (For more on Miriam, see at Numbers 20:1.)

Laws Protecting the Vulnerable (24:10–25:16)

This unit provides laws to protect various categories of economically disadvantaged persons,

יִשְׂרָאֵל וְהַתְּעַמֶּרְבָּבוֹ וּמִכְרָוּ וּמִתְּהַגֵּנְבָּה הַהְוָא וּבְעַרְתָּתְךָ הַרְעָמְקָרְבָּךְ: ס
⁸ הַשְׁמָר בְּנֶגֶעַ הַצְּרָעָת לְשִׁמְרָה מִאֵד
וּלְעַשׂוֹת בְּכָל אֲשֶׁר יֹרוֹא אֶתְכֶם הַכְּנִינִים
הַלְּיִם כִּאֲשֶׁר צִוִּיתִם תִּשְׁמְרוּ לְעַשׂוֹת:
⁹ זָכָר אֶת אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ
לִמְרִים בְּדַרְךְ בְּצָאתְכֶם מִמְּצִירִים: ס
¹⁰ כִּירְתְּשָׁה בְּרַעַךְ מִשְׁאָת מִאוּמָה לֹא־
תָּבָא אֶל־בֵּיתוּ לְעַבְטָעַבְטוּ: ¹¹ בְּחוֹזֵ
תִּעְמַד וְהָאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר אַתָּה נְשָׁה בּוֹ יוֹצֵא
אֶלְלוֹ אֶת־הַעֲבֹות הַחֲזֹוחָה: ¹² וְאֶם־אִישׁ
עֲנֵי הוּא לֹא תִשְׁכַּב בְּעַבְטוּ: ¹³ הַשְׁבָּ
תִּשְׁבַּב לֹא אֶת־הַעֲבֹות כְּבוֹא הַשְׁמֵשׁ וְשִׁכְבָּ
בְּשִׁלְמָתוֹ וּבְרַכָּה וְלֹכֶד תְּהִיה צְדָקָה לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ: ס
¹⁴ לֹא־תִּתְעַשֵּׂק שְׁכִיר עֲנֵי וְאֶבְיוֹן מַאֲחִיךְ אֶזְרָ
מְגֻרָה אֲשֶׁר בְּאֶרְצָךְ בְּשֻׁעְרִיךְ: ¹⁵ בַּיּוֹמָוּ
תִּתְעַנֵּן שְׁכִיר וְלֹא־תִּתְבֹּא עַלְיוֹ הַשְׁמֵשׁ בַּיּוֹנִי
הָוּא וְאֶלְיוֹ הָוּא נְשָׁא אֶת־גִּנְפָּשׁוֹ וְלֹא־יִקְרָא עַלְיָךְ אֶל־יְהוָה וְהִיא בְּקַחְתָּא: ס safeguarding, in particular, the welfare of the stranger, the orphan, and the widow.

OBTAINING PLEDGES AND PAYING WAGES (24:10–15)

These rules aim to preserve a borrower's dignity and treat a worker justly.

10–11. The lender may not enter the borrower's home to obtain the pledge (an object taken to guarantee the repayment of a loan), for this might embarrass a borrower by showing her or his poverty.

12–13. A cloak or blanket given in pledge must be returned at night so that the borrower can use it as a covering at night (see also Exodus 22:25–26).

15. Since day-workers (not household servants) depend on their daily wages, they must be paid in a timely manner.

¹⁶Parents shall not be put to death for children, nor children be put to death for parents: they shall each be put to death only for their own crime.

¹⁷You shall not subvert the rights of the stranger or the fatherless; you shall not take a widow's garment in pawn. ¹⁸Remember that you were a slave in Egypt and that your God יהוה redeemed you from there; therefore do I enjoin you to observe this commandment.

¹⁹When you reap the harvest in your field and overlook a sheaf in the field, do not turn back to get it; it shall go to the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow—in order that your God יהוה may bless you in all your undertakings.

²⁰When you beat down the fruit of your olive trees, do not go over them again; that shall go to the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow. ²¹When you gather the grapes of your vineyard, do not pick it over again; that shall go to the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow. ²²Always remember that you were a slave in the land of Egypt; therefore do I enjoin you to observe this commandment.

25 When there is a dispute between parties and they go to law, and a decision is rendered de-

לֹא-יָוְמַתּו אֶבֶות עַל-בָנִים וּבָנִים לֹא-יָוְמַתּו עַל-אֶבֶות אֵיש בְחֻטָאוֹ יוֹמָתָה: ס
לֹא תְפַלֵת מִשְׁפָט גָּר יִתּוֹם וְלֹא תְחַבֵל בָּגָד אֲלֵמָנָה: ¹⁸ וּזְכָרָתָ כִּי עֲבָד הַיּוֹת בָמְצָרִים וַיַּפְקַד יְהוָה אֶלְחָדֵךְ מִשֵּם עַל-בָנָן אֲנָכִי מִצּוֹל לְעֹשֹׂת אֶת-הַדָּבָר הַזֶּה: ס
כִּי תְקַעַר קָצִירָה בְשָׂדֶךָ וְשַׁבְחָתָ עַמְרָךְ בְשָׂדֶה לֹא תְשׁוֹב לְקַחְתָּו לְגֹר לִיתּוֹם בְכָל מִעְשָׂה יְדֶיךָ: ס כִּי תְחַבֵט יוֹתָךְ לֹא תְפַאֵר אַחֲרָיךְ לְגֹר לִיתּוֹם וְלְאַלְמָנָה יְהוָה: ²¹ כִּי תְבָצֶר פְרָמָךְ לֹא תְעֹולֵל אַחֲרָיךְ לְגֹר לִיתּוֹם וְלְאַלְמָנָה יְהוָה: ²² וּזְכָרָתָ כִּי עֲבָד הַיּוֹת בָאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם עַל-בָנָן אֲנָכִי מִצּוֹל לְעֹשֹׂת אֶת-הַדָּבָר הַזֶּה: ס

כִּי בְיִהִיה רִיב بֵין אֲנָשִׁים וְנִגְשֵׁו אֶל-הַמִשְׁפָט וְשִׁפְטוּם וְהַצְדִיקוּ אֶת-הַצְדִיקָה

PROHIBITION ON TRANSGENERATIONAL PUNISHMENT (24:16)

Other ancient Near Eastern law collections consider children to be extensions of their parents; according to the principle of talion (exact retribution), if a person has caused the death of another person's son, the perpetrator's own son can be put to death (see, for example, Laws of Hammurabi ¶ 230). Deuteronomy forbids Israelites to inflict such punishment.

PROTECTING THE STRANGER, FATHERLESS, AND WIDOW (24:17–20)

These three classes of people do not have a male head-of-household to protect them, support them, and look after their interests in public; therefore, society as a whole must watch out for and not take advantage of them.

17. a widow's garment. Special protection is granted to a widow, whose garment, unlike that of a day laborer, may not serve as a pledge for a loan. A sense of modesty also may inform this law.

19. The book of Ruth shows how reapers are expected to leave some produce for the needy to glean after the harvest (see also at Leviticus 19:9–10; 23:22).

LIMITS ON FLOGGING (25:1–3)

Although flogging is a legal penalty, care must be taken to avoid beating the individual excessively in order to avoid dehumanizing the person.

claring the one in the right and the other in the wrong—²if the guilty one is to be flogged, the magistrate shall have the person lie down and shall supervise the giving of lashes, by count, as warranted by the offense. ³The guilty one may be given up to forty lashes, but not more, lest being flogged further, to excess, your peer be degraded before your eyes.

⁴You shall not muzzle an ox while it is threshing.

⁵When brothers dwell together and one of them dies and leaves no offspring, the wife of the deceased shall not be married to a party outside the family. Her husband's brother shall unite with her: he shall take her as his wife and perform the levir's duty. ⁶The first child that she bears shall be accounted to the dead brother, that his name may not be blotted out in Israel. ⁷But if the [family] representative does not want to marry his brother's widow, his brother's widow shall appear before the elders in the gate and declare, "My husband's brother refuses to establish a name in Israel for his

וְהַרְשִׁיעוּ אֶת־הָרְשֵׁעַ: ² וְהִי אַמְּבֵן הַפּוֹתֵחַ הַרְשֵׁעַ וְהַפִּילֵוּ הַשְּׁפֵט וְהַכְּהוּ לִפְנֵיו בְּדִין רְשֻׁתָּתוֹ בְּמִסְפֵּר: ³ אֲרָבָעִים יִפְנּוּ לֹא יִסְפִּיףַּ פְּנִי־סְפִיףַּ לְהַבְּתוֹ עַל־אֱלֹהִים מִכֶּה רַבָּה וְגַלְלָה אֲחִיךָ לְעֵינֶיךָ:

⁴ לְאַתְּחַסֵּם שָׂור בְּדִישׁוֹ:

⁵ פִּiyִשְׁבּוּ אֶחָדִים יְחִדּוּ וְמַתְּ אֶחָד מִהְם וּבָנָיו אַיִלְלוּ לְאַתְּהִיא אֲשֶׁתְּהִמְתֵּן הַחוֹצֵה לְאִישׁ זָר יְבִמָּה יָבֹא עַלְיהָ וְלִקְחֵה לוֹ לְאִשָּׁה וְיְבִמָּה: ⁶ וְהַיְה֙ הַבּוֹרֵא שֶׁמְנוּ יָקֹום עַל־שֵׁם אֲחִיכָו הַמֵּת וְלְאִימְתָּחָה שֶׁמוֹ מִיְשְׁרָאֵל: ⁷ וְאִם־לֹא יְחִפֵּץ הָאִישׁ לִקְחֵת אֶת־יְבִמָּתוֹ וְעַלְתָּה יְבִמָּתוֹ הַשְׁעָרָה אֶל־הַזְּקָנִים וְאֶמְרָה מִן־יְבָמָה לְהַקְּרִים לְאֲחִיכָו

PROHIBITION ON MUZZLING AN OX WHEN IT IS THRESHING (25:4)

This is another law that mandates kindness to animals (see also at 22:6–7), ensuring that the animal may eat some of the stalks being threshed.

LEVIRATE MARRIAGE (25:5–10)

Levirate marriage is intended to secure the continuation of a deceased married man's lineage and land-inheritance if he has no children. This principle is operative in the story of Judah and Tamar (Genesis 38) and hinted at, although not in its normal form, in the book of Ruth. Deuteronomy provides a process for opting out of the levirate marriage, later called chalitzah, although in biblical times it seems that levirate marriage was preferred. The number of such marriages must have been relatively small, since most married couples would have produced a child within a few years of marriage, before the husband died. Military deferment for new husbands (24:5) helps to avoid the situation whereby a man is killed in war before he has sired a child.

5. When brothers dwell together. This means they live on their father's estate, which has not yet been legally subdivided among them.

7. if the [family] representative does not want to marry his brother's widow. There may be many reasons for his refusal, including that he would incur additional responsibilities for a family that is legally his brother's, not his. [An heir to the deceased brother would also prevent the living brother from gaining the dead brother's land. —Ed.]

his brother's widow shall appear before the elders in the gate. The widow initiates the public proceedings after her brother-in-law denies her the brother; he will not perform the duty of a levir.”⁸ The elders of his town shall then summon him and talk to him. If he insists, saying, “I do not want to marry her,”⁹ his brother’s widow shall go up to him in the presence of the elders, pull the sandal off his foot, spit in his face, and make this declaration: Thus shall be done to the [family] representative who will not build up his brother’s house!¹⁰ And he shall go in Israel by the name of “the family of the unsandaled one.”

¹¹If two men get into a fight with each other, and the wife of one comes up to save her husband from his antagonist and puts out her hand and seizes him by his genitals,¹² you shall cut off her hand; show no pity.

¹³You shall not have in your pouch alternate weights, larger and smaller.¹⁴ You shall not have in your house alternate measures, a larger and a smaller.¹⁵ You must have completely honest weights and completely honest measures, if you are to endure long on the soil that your God is giving you.¹⁶ For everyone who does those things, everyone who deals dishonestly, is abhorrent to your God.

protection and status that she would have as a wife and mother, and as the beneficiary of her husband’s inheritance. The woman here clearly has legal standing and is entitled to bring a case to the court. Her words and actions, formalized by the law, are a performative way of publicly shaming the brother-in-law who refuses the levirate marriage.

The law does not envision a woman being able or desiring to reject a levirate marriage. After all, to become an unattached childless widow is a position most ancient women would have wished to avoid. Indeed, in the story of Judah and Tamar, Tamar resorts to extreme measures to avoid remaining a childless widow (see at Genesis 38).

שם בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל לֹא אֲבָה יַבְמִי: ⁸ וְקָרְאוּ־לָו
זְקִנִּי־עִירֹו וְדָבְרִי אֶלָיו וְעַמְדֵן וְאָמַר לֹא
חִפְצָתִי לְקַחְתָּה: ⁹ וְנִגְשָׁה יַבְמַתּו אֶלָיו
לְעִינֵי הַזָּקְנִים וְחַלְצָה נַעַלְוָ מַעַל רְגָלו
וַיַּרְקַח בְּפָנָיו וַיַּעֲנַתָּה וְאַמְלָה בְּכָה יַעֲשָׂה
לְאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר לְאִיבְנָה אֶת־בֵּית אֲחִיו:
¹⁰ וְנִקְרָא שְׁמו בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל בֵּית חַלְיוֹן:¹¹

כִּי־יִגְנֹצּו אֲנָשִׁים יְחִדו אֲישׁ וְאָחִיו וְקָרְבָּה
אֲשֶׁת הַאָחָד לְהַצִּיל אֶת־אִישָׁה מִידָּמָכְהו
וְשְׁלֵחָה יָדָה וְהַחֲזִיקָה בְּמַבְשִׁיו: ¹² וְקַצְתָּה
אֶת־בְּפָה לֹא תְחֹס עִינֶךָ: ¹³
לְאִיהִיה לְךָ בְּכִיסְך אֶבֶן וְאֶבֶן גָּדוֹלָה
וְקַטְנָה: ¹⁴ לְאִיהִיה לְךָ בְּבִירְתֶּך אִיפָה
וְאִיפָה גָּדוֹלָה וְקַטְנָה: ¹⁵ אֶבֶן שְׁלָמָה
וְצֶדֶק יְהִי־לְךָ אִיפָה שְׁלָמָה וְצֶדֶק יְהִי־
לְךָ לְמַעַן יָאַרְכֵך יִמְך עַל הָאַדְמָה
אֲשֶׁר־יְהִי־הָאֱלֹהִיך נָתַן לְךָ: ¹⁶ כִּי תַועֲבָת יְהִי־הָאֱלֹהִיך בְּלַעֲשָׂה אֶלָה בְּלַעֲשָׂה עַל: ¹⁷ פ

PUNISHMENT OF A WOMAN WHO INTERVENES IN HER HUSBAND’S FIGHT (25:11–12)

This law, which appears harsh and puzzling by modern standards, involves sexually羞shaming a man in public. While other ancient Near Eastern laws contain similar stipulations (see Middle Assyrian Laws A ¶ 8), the biblical law is relatively mild.

HONEST WEIGHTS AND MEASURES (25:13–16)

The cheating of customers may have been a recurrent problem since it is mentioned often in an-

¹⁷Remember what Amalek did to you on your journey, after you left Egypt—¹⁸how, undeterred by fear of God, he surprised you on the march, when you were famished and weary, and cut down all the stragglers in your rear. ¹⁹Therefore, when your God יהוה grants you safety from all your enemies around you, in the land that your God is giving you as a hereditary portion, you shall blot out the memory of Amalek from under heaven. Do not forget!

¹⁷ זִכְּר אֶת אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה לְךָ עַמְלֵק בַּעֲרֵב בְּצֹאתְכֶם מִמִּצְרַיִם: ¹⁸ אֲשֶׁר קָרְבָּנָה וַיָּגַב בְּלַהֲנַחֲלָיִם אַחֲרֵיךְ וְאַתָּה עַיִף וַגָּעַ וְלֹא יִרְאָ אֱלֹהִים: ¹⁹ וְהִיא בְּהַנִּית יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ | לְרַק מְכֻלָּאֵינוּ מִסְבֵּב בָּאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ נָתַן לְךָ נְצָלה לְרַשְׁתָּה תִּמְחָה אֶת־זְכָר עַמְלֵק מִתְּחַת הַשָּׁמָיִם לֹא תִשְׁפַּח: פ

cient Near Eastern laws. Here, Deuteronomy presents proper business ethics as a religious principle that is crucial for the preservation of Israelite society.

Charge to Remember Amalek

(25:17–19)

The parashah concludes with an injunction to remember the incident recounted in Exodus 17:8–16. Amalek is singled out for strong condemnation. The command to blot out the name of this enemy is emphasized by its being framed by “remember . . . do not forget.” (There is an irony to the command to remember to blot out Amalek’s name.) In synagogues, this passage is traditionally read aloud from the Torah on Shabbat Zachor, the sabbath before Purim. By calling Haman an Agagite, the book of Esther makes him an Amalekite, whose king in the time of Saul was Agag. Amalek became a symbol of later Jewish enemies as well.

—Adele Berlin

Another View

THE LEGISLATION IN 24:1–4 deals not with divorce so much as with remarriage. The text mentions only in passing that grounds for divorce include ervat davar, translated here as “something obnoxious” in a woman (v. 1), and that a sefer k'ritut, a “bill of divorce,” changes hands (v. 3). The real concern of this section is to prohibit a man from remarrying a woman who had taken a new husband in the meantime, even if the subsequent marriage ended legitimately.

It remains unclear what, if anything, these verses signify about contractual relations between husbands and wives in ancient Israel; but what lessons can we draw from the text itself? Some commentators claim that this legislation is meant to guard against confusion over paternity; others posit that it discourages men from divorcing in haste and repenting at leisure. Yet these ends could be achieved without a new-husband clause, so why not simply prohibit remarriage to the same wife? One possible answer is that the new-husband clause might create a measure of autonomy for the woman, who is otherwise a passive party under biblical marriage law. She can put herself off limits to her first husband by agreeing to become another man’s spouse, or she can signal her commitment to her first husband by remaining single.

But why would the male authors of this text legislate for female autonomy? Perhaps because of the intriguing theological implications as set forth in the book of Jeremiah. Along with some other prophets, Jeremiah envisages a metaphorical marriage in which

The new-husband clause may have created some autonomy for the divorced woman.

God is the husband and Israel the wife who has done “something obnoxious” or “unseemly” (3:8). Israel has been unfaithful with many lovers (3:1), meaning that she has worshipped other gods. The prophet implies that even if God hands Israel a bill of divorce, she can refrain from taking a new husband (by no longer worshipping other gods) and can instead wait for her first husband, God, to take her back.

Like the wife in our parashah, Israel—as depicted by Jeremiah—can maintain some degree of autonomy by choosing to change her ways. With renewed commitment, she can reaffirm her sacred relationship with God.

—Diana Lipton

Post-biblical Interpretations

When you [an Israelite warrior] take the field (21:10–14). The Rabbis make no attempt to abrogate the law permitting Israelite men to bring home female war captives. However, they are not enthusiastic about the practice. Drawing upon an opinion in BT Kiddushin 21b, the 11th-century commentator Rashi claims (at 21:11) that the Torah is making a concession to the yetzer hara (often translated as the “evil impulse”) when it permits the captive woman. Rashi indicates that were the Torah to forbid the women, men would take them anyway; instead, the Torah limits the practice.

If a householder has a wayward and defiant son (21:18–20). The Rabbis restrict the law of the rebellious son, effectively legislating it out of existence.

One restriction involves requiring the consent of both parents to the punishment. The son cannot be subjected to the procedure unless he has both a father and a mother, and the parents' marriage must be a "suitable" one. If either parent has any one of a number of physical defects, the law does not apply (Sifrei D'varim, Ki Teitzei, piska 219).

A woman must not put on man's apparel (22:5). The Sages argue that this verse prohibits wearing clothing associated with the opposite gender expressly for the purpose of passing oneself off as the opposite gender (Sifrei D'varim, Ki Teitzei, piska 226).

A householder marries a woman and cohabits with her (22:13). Sifrei D'varim, Ki Teitzei, piska 235, comments that one sin leads to another. If a husband fails to love his wife, transgressing the command "You shall love your neighbor as yourself" (Leviticus 19:18), he is likely to transgress further. This formula suggests that the commentator sees a husband's claim against his wife's virginity as an expression of hatred rather than a legitimate use of law.

he writes her a bill of divorcement... and sends her away (24:1). This passage (vv. 1–4) takes for granted a husband's right to initiate divorce. Citing this verse, some of the Rabbis allow a man to divorce his wife simply because he finds her housekeeping skills unsatisfactory or because he no longer finds her physically attractive (Mishnah Gittin 9:10).

The Torah does not mention a wife's right to initiate divorce, but Jews have nevertheless recognized it in various times and place (compare Exodus 21:10–11). Extant Jewish marriage contracts from the early Second Temple period stipulate either party's right to initiate divorce. Marriage contracts among rabbinic Jews of the early medieval Levant often contain similar stipulations.

Meanwhile, the Mishnah (K'tubot 5:7) mentions a different approach, wherein an unhappy wife can start a countdown for dissolution of the marriage by declaring herself to be a moredet (refusing or recalcitrant wife). After allowing time for reconciliation, the court would apparently compel her husband to divorce her, although she would not receive a divorcée's usual marriage settlement.

The Mishnah allows women to petition the court directly for release from an unsatisfactory marriage (K'tubot 7:10), and it describes instances in which a man's behavior would require that he divorce his wife (K'tubot 7:1–5). Yet according to another line of legal reasoning, a man cannot be divorced against his will

If a husband fails to love his wife, he is likely to transgress further.

(Mishnah Gittin 9:8; BT Gittin 88b). In Babylonia, most rabbinic authorities maintained that only a husband could initiate divorce, and this view prevailed in rabbinic Judaism by approximately the year 1300 C.E.

Remember what your God יְהוָה did to Miriam (24:9). Some rabbinic sources understand Moses as alluding to Miriam's being stricken with the skin disease tzaraat for speaking against him (Numbers 12:10–15). Rashi here echoes the words of Sifrei D'varim, "If you want to avoid being stricken with tzaraat, do not gossip, for Miriam gossiped about her brother and was stricken." The 13th-century commentator Nachmanides adds here that this exhortation should be understood as a positive commandment parallel to other verses that call on us to remember something in particular (such as Exodus 20:8; Deuteronomy 25:17). He notes that the gravity of this commandment is demonstrated by the affliction of Miriam, "a righteous woman, a prophet who spoke about her brother out of concern, loving him as she did herself." Although Miriam "did not speak directly to Moses so as not to embarrass him, nor did she speak in public, but only in private to her holy brother [Aaron]," nonetheless, and despite "all of her good deeds," she was punished. This demonstrates the enormity of gossip.

When brothers dwell together (25:5–10). The Rabbis of the Mishnah limit the situations in which levirate marriage is required (for example, Y'vamot 1:1–3; 2:1–3). The Talmud recounts situations in which widows were reluctant to marry their brothers-in-law despite the men's eagerness to perform levirate marriage. These women confided their concerns to rabbis, who—convinced that the men's motives were selfish—tricked the men into releasing their sisters-in-law from their obligations (BT Y'vamot 106a).

KI TEITZEI

Beginning already in the Talmud (BT Y'vamot 39a–b; 101b), rabbinic authorities differ as to whether a brother should fulfill his levirate obligation or undergo the ritual of vv. 7–10 (known as chalitzah). In the post-talmudic period, authorities disagreed as to whether levirate marriage or chalitzah was preferable. Today, all agree that chalitzah is mandatory. In liberal Judaism, neither levirate marriage nor chalitzah is employed.

—Dvora E. Weisberg

Contemporary Reflection

THE CENTRALITY OF MEMORY to Jewish self-understanding emerges with great vividness in parashat Ki Teitzei, which repeatedly enjoins us to remember events in ways that affect ongoing behavior and practice: “Always remember that you were a slave in the land of Egypt; therefore . . . observe this commandment” (24:22, 18). “In cases of a skin affection be most careful to do exactly as the levitical priests instruct you. . . . Remember what your God פָּנָא did to Miriam on the journey after you left Egypt” (24:8–9). “Remember what Amalek did to you on your journey, after you left Egypt . . . you shall blot out the memory of Amalek” (25:17, 19). Clearly, the major events of the Jewish past are not simply history but living, active memory that continues to shape Jewish identity in the present. Through telling the story of our past, we learn who we are and must become.

In insisting on the significance of memory for identity, the parashah shows that memory can serve a wide variety of purposes and can be used to support modes of being that seem to conflict with each other. The memory of enslavement in Egypt is repeatedly yoked with injunctions insisting upon justice and compassion: “You shall not subvert the rights of the stranger or the fatherless; you shall not take a widow’s garment in pawn” (24:17). “When you reap the harvest in your field and overlook a sheaf in the field, do not turn back to get it; it shall go to the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow” (24:19). Because Jews once knew hunger and experienced what it was like to dwell as strangers on the margins of society, we are commanded to create a society in which the marginal are cared for and the hungry are provided with food.

Memories of the deeds of the Ammonites and Moabites and the perfidy of Amalek become the foundation for opposite injunctions, those concerning exclusion and vengeance. Because the Ammonites and Moabites did not provide Israel with food in the wilderness, the descendants of these nations should be excluded from God’s congregation, even to the tenth generation (23:3–4). Because Amalek cut down stragglers in the line of march when Israel left Egypt hungry and tired, the memory of the Amalekites should be entirely obliterated (25:17–19).

The memory of Miriam’s skin condition (tzaraat) is still another kind of memory, a highly truncated one. Already in the book of Exodus when Miriam is introduced, it seems clear that she is not being remembered fully. She appears suddenly, leading the women in song at a central moment of the people Israel’s history (Exodus 15:20–21) as if she materialized out of the desert sands. Later, her death and burial are recorded in one verse (Numbers 20:1). There is no account of her passing or of the community's response; she vanishes, disappearing, as it were, into the desert sands. In this parashah, her tzaraat is remembered (24:8–9), but not her leadership; her punishment is recalled, but not the challenge to Moses' authority that she mounts with Aaron (Numbers 12:1–2).

If memory is foundational to Jewish community, then perhaps this one-sided memory of a very important woman in the Torah is part of what creates the preconditions for some of the sexual legislation in the parashah. It makes sense that a community that cannot remember its central female figures in all their roundedness will also have difficulty imagining women as agents of their own sexuality—and thus will repeatedly subordinate their interests to those of fathers and husbands. We read that if a woman is found not to be a virgin when she marries, she is stoned to death on her father's doorstep (22:13–21); that a virgin who is raped is then forced to marry her rapist (22:28–29); that a wife who ceases to please her husband can be given a bill of divorce (24:1–4); and that a woman who is widowed before she has children must marry her husband's brother (25:5–10). The Torah in this section offers no store of memories of women's perspectives and experiences that could provide the basis for an alternative ethic.

What do we do, then, when the demands of memory seem to be at odds with each other—when, for example, the partial and distorted memory of Miriam in this parashah collides with the notion of remembering the marginalized, including the marginalized within the Israelite community?

The process of remembering brings with it an obligation to ethical discernment: which memories do we want to affirm and further develop and which do we want to repudiate or transform? We cannot forget the commandments to exclude the Ammonites or blot out the memory of Amalek because their presence in the Torah reminds us of how easy it is to respond to vengeance with more vengeance, or injustice with more injustice. But we can also consciously cultivate memories that encourage us to stop the cycle of violence and domination. When we remember the courage and initiative of Miriam in helping to save her brother (Exodus 2:1–10), when we appreciate her importance to the Israelites who refused to move on without her

Here the centrality of memory to Jewish self-understanding emerges vividly.

(Numbers 12:15), when we honor her insistence that her own leadership be recognized (Numbers 12:2), then we lay the foundations for contemporary communities in which women and other “strangers” can take their full and rightful place.

Perhaps the process of sifting through memory also can help to make sense of the last, enigmatic verse of the parashah that enjoins us to “blot out” all memory of Amalek and yet “remember” at the same time. How is this possible? Having grown up in a Reform congregation in the 1950s in which women were on the bimah only to light candles, I am aware of how the enormous changes in women’s roles over the last half century make such memories of prior injustices difficult to believe. We blot out the memory of Amalek when we create Jewish communities in which the perpetual exclusion of some group of people—or the denial of women’s rights—are so contrary to current values as to be almost incredible. Yet, if we are to safeguard our achievements, we can also never forget to remember the history of inequality and the decisions and struggles that have made more equitable communities possible.

—Judith Plaskow

• • • • • Voices • • • • •

For My Daughter

Grace Paley

Deuteronomy 22:15

I wanted to bring her a chalice or maybe a cup of love or cool water I wanted to sit beside her as she rested after the long day I wanted to adjure commend admonish saying don't do that of course wonderful try
I wanted to help her grow old I wanted to say last words the words famous for final enlightenment I wanted to say them now in case I am in calm sleep when the last sleep strikes or aged into disorder I wanted to bring her a cup of cool water

I wanted to explain tiredness is expected it is even appropriate at the end of the day

Toward Myself

Lea Goldberg (transl. Rachel Tzvia Back)

Deuteronomy 24:1-4

The years have made up my face with memories of love and have adorned my hair with light silver threads making me most beautiful.

In my eyes
landscapes are reflected.
And the paths I have trod have straightened my stride—tired and lovely steps.

If you should see me now
you would not recognize your yesterdays—
I am walking toward myself bearing the face you searched for in vain
when I was walking toward you.

from Blessing of a Broken Heart

Sherri Mandell

Deuteronomy 22:6-7

[The Talmud] says that whoever thinks that the mitzvah of shooing away the mother bird shows God's compassion should be silenced. Because they don't understand. We can't say that the mitzvah of shooing away the mother bird (I am told later, also a charm for fertility) is a symbol of God's compassion. Because we can't understand God's compassion. If the mitzvah were a true symbol of God's compassion, then surely we wouldn't be allowed to take the baby bird at all.

The Passage of Divorce: Paving One's Way

Vicki Hollander

Deuteronomy 24:1-4

To what does this compare?
To the earth
when it moves and quakes and shifts beneath one's feet.
And when the movement stops,
one walks away transformed,
touched,
different.

Rape poem

Marge Piercy

Deuteronomy 22:25–27

There is no difference between being raped
and being pushed down a flight of cement steps except that the wounds also bleed inside.

There is no difference between being raped
and being run over by a truck except that afterward men ask if you enjoyed it.

There is no difference between being raped
and being bit on the ankle by a rattlesnake except that people ask if your skirt was short and why you were out alone anyhow.

There is no difference between being raped
and going head first through a windshield except that afterward you are afraid not of cars
but half the human race.

The rapist is your boyfriend's brother.
He sits beside you in the movies eating popcorn.

Rape fattens on the fantasies of the normal male like a maggot in garbage.

Fear of rape is a cold wind blowing all of the time on a woman's hunched back.
Never to stroll alone on a sand road through pine woods,
never to climb a trail across a bald without that aluminum in the mouth when I see a man climbing toward me.

Never to open the door to a knock without that razor just grazing the throat.
The fear of the dark side of hedges,
the back seat of the car, the empty house
rattling keys like a snake's warning.
The fear of the smiling man
in whose pocket is a knife.

The fear of the serious man
in whose fist is locked hatred.

All it takes to cast a rapist is seeing your body as jackhammer, as blowtorch, as adding-machine-gun.

All it takes is hating that body your own, your self, your muscle that softens to flab.

All it takes is to push what you hate,
what you fear onto the soft alien flesh.
To bucket out invincible as a tank armored with treads without senses to possess and punish in one act, to rip up pleasure, to murder those who dare live in the leafy flesh open to love.

At Blue Dawn VII

Kadya Molodowsky (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

Deuteronomy 25:13–16

Pick up a stone and throw it
In the city
Or the countryside.
Wherever it may land,
Someone has told a lie.
And that's why clouds come over towns and forests,
And that's why wild beasts devour sheep in the fields,
And that's why small children cry out in the nights,
and that's why the wind breaks down the roofs of the poor.

כִּי תָבֹא ◆ Ki Tavo

DEUTERONOMY 26:1–29:8

Entering the Land of Israel: Blessings and Curses

KARASHAT KI TAVO (“when you enter”) is concerned mostly with the Israelites’ entrance into the Promised Land. There they must offer first fruits and tithes, according to the ceremonies outlined in 26:1–15; and there most of the laws in Deuteronomy 12–26 will take effect. These laws, outlined in the prior Torah portions and concluded here (26:16–19; 28:69), aim to regulate society when Israel settles in Canaan. Using language familiar from other parts of Deuteronomy, this parashah emphasizes that Israel should obey God’s commandments faithfully, with all their heart and soul. Since the covenant between God and Israel establishes mutually binding obligations for both parties, God’s commitments also are reaffirmed: the promise to make Israel a treasured, holy people. This parashah is directed to a dual audience: first, to Moses’ imagined audience in Moab, the Israelites who listen to his words as he prepares them to enter the land of Canaan; and second, to the audience addressed by the authors of this part of Deuteronomy, who composed their work during the exile (586–538 B.C.E.) or even later, after the return from exile.

The parashah also details the ceremonies that the Israelites are to perform once they enter the land, as a way to reaffirm the covenant (27:1–26). As in the ancient Near Eastern treaties upon which Deuteronomy is modeled, the reiteration of the covenant concludes with a list of blessings for those who uphold it—and curses for those who do not (28:1–68). The last part of the parashah (29:1–8) begins Moses’ final address to the people. He recounts the wondrous deeds that God performed on behalf of the people, the experiences that form the foundation of the covenantal relationship and that provide the inspiration for Israel to walk in God’s ways.

The laws in the first part of this parashah mention women only as widows, who are counted among the underprivileged (26:12; 27:19), and as objects of impermissible sexual relations (27:20, 22–23). However, matters of gender take on more importance in the blessings and curses at the end of the covenant stipulations. Human fertility becomes a national issue that is linked to the fertility of livestock and the land, all of which are promised blessings if Israel obeys God’s commands (28:4, 11, 18). In the subsequent section, one curse concerns a man who makes the arrangements to marry a woman, build a house, and plant a vineyard—all symbols of establishing a new family unit and household—but who will lose these things to another man before he has enjoyed their benefits (28:30–32). The horrors of siege, conquest, and exile—signaling the ultimate breakdown and destruction of Israel’s society—affect women and men alike. Both sons and daughters will be taken into exile (28:32, 41); and in the famine of the siege, both women and men will become cannibals who horde their “food” from their loved ones (28:54–57). Such graphic curses depict what will transpire if Israel fails to obey God’s commandments. Hence, in its strongest rhetoric, Deuteronomy urges its audience to follow the laws that form the heart of this book.

Matters of gender take on more importance in the blessings and the curses.

—Adele Berlin

Outline—

I. CEREMONIES FOR FIRST FRUITS AND TITHES (26:1–15)

- A. First fruits (vv. 1–11)
- B. Tithes (vv. 12–15)

II. CONCLUSION TO THE LAWS

Obligations for Israel and God (26:16–19)

III. CEREMONIES UPON ENTERING THE LAND (27:1–26)

- A. Erection of inscribed stones and a stone altar at Mount Ebal (vv. 1–8)
- B. Call to obey the covenant at Moab (vv. 9–10)
- C. Proclamation of blessings and curses at Mt. Gerizim and Mt. Ebal (vv. 11–26)

IV. CONSEQUENCES OF OBEDIENCE OR DISOBEDIENCE OF THE COVENANT (28:1–68)

- A. The blessings (vv. 1–14)
- B. The curses (vv. 15–68)

V. CONCLUDING STATEMENT TO THE COVENANT (28:69)

VI. COMMENCEMENT OF MOSES’ LAST SPEECH (29:1–8)

26:1

When you enter the land that your God יְהוָה is giving you as a heritage, and you possess it and settle in it,² you shall take some of every first fruit of the soil, which you harvest from the land that your God יְהוָה is giving you, put it in a basket and go to the place where your God יְהוָה will choose to establish the divine name.³ You shall go to the priest in charge at that time and say to him, “I acknowledge this day before your God that

כ וְחִי לְבָבוֹא אֶל-הָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ נְחָלה וּרְשָׁתָה וַיַּשְׁבַּת בָּהּ: 2 וְלִקְחַת מִרְאָשִׁית כָּל-פְּרִי הָאָדָם אֲשֶׁר תַּבִּיא מִאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ נָתַן לְךָ וְשִׁמְתָּ בְּטֻנָּא וְהַלְכַת אֶל-הַמְּלֹком אֲשֶׁר יְבָחר יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ לְשָׁבֵן שְׁמוֹ שֵׁם: 3 וּבָאת אֶל-הַפְּהָן אֲשֶׁר יְהִי בָּיִם הָהֶם וְאָמַרְתָּ אֶלְיוֹ הָגַדְתִּי הַיּוֹם לִיהוָה

Ceremonies for First Fruits and Tithes (26:1–15)

Both first fruits and tithes assume an agricultural society, which is to begin with the settlement in Canaan. (For information on women in agrarian society, see “Women in Ancient Israel—An Overview,” p. xli.)

FIRST FRUITS (26:1–11)

Generally, the Israelites are to dedicate first fruits to God in thanks for the fertility that yielded the produce—and with the hope that this fertility will continue (see at 15:19–23; Exodus 34:19; Leviticus 27:26–27). In this case, however, people are instructed to show gratitude for the possession of the land (mentioned three times in vv. 1–3) through a ceremony that celebrates the fulfillment of God’s promise of land to the ancestors. After all, the offering of the first fruits is a direct outcome of, and a performative act in recognition of, God’s giving the Promised Land to Israel. In keeping with Deuteronomy’s principle of centralization of sacrificial worship, the first fruits are to be brought to God’s Chosen Place (meaning the Temple in Jerusalem) on Shavuot, the late spring pilgrimage festival that celebrates the grain harvest (see at 16:9–12). The occasion includes a festive meal, to be shared with the Levites and resident aliens who would not have their own first fruits. Although there is no mention here of other family members participating in the ritual, 16:11 explicitly includes women in the Shavuot celebration.

2. you. Although the language in 26:1–15 is grammatically masculine singular, Moses addresses both the male head of the household and his wife or principal wife (see R’eh, Another View, p. 1134; Mishpatim, Another View, p. 445).

- Who are the enemies that the curses refer to? Deuteronomy blames the Israelites themselves.

ANOTHER VIEW ► I210

- Remembrance of things past is an essential part of developing a new identity.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► I212

- The tender mother who cares for her child stands for the world as it ought to be.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► I210

- Nothing ever happens more than once. / The next time is never like before.

VOICES ► I214

I have entered the land that יהוה swore to our fathers to assign us.”

⁴The priest shall take the basket from your hand and set it down in front of the altar of your God יהוה.

⁵You shall then recite as follows before your God יהוה: “My father was a fugitive Aramean. He went down to Egypt with meager numbers and sojourned there; but there he became a great and very populous nation. ⁶The Egyptians dealt harshly with us and oppressed us; they imposed heavy labor upon us. ⁷We cried to יהוה, the God of our ancestors, and heard our plea and saw our plight, our misery, and our oppression. ⁸ יהוה freed us from Egypt by a mighty hand, by an outstretched arm and awesome power, and by signs and portents, ⁹ bringing us to this place and giving us this land, a land flowing with milk and honey. ¹⁰ Wherefore I now bring the first fruits of the soil which You, יהוה, have given me.”

You shall leave it before your God יהוה and bow low before your God יהוה. ¹¹ And you shall enjoy, together with the [family of the] Levite and the stranger in your midst, all the bounty that your God יהוה has bestowed upon you and your household.

¹² When you have set aside in full the tenth part of your yield—in the third year, the year of the

אֶלְ�הֵיךְ כִּי־בָאתִי אֲלֵהָ אֶרְצָן אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע
יְהוָה לְאַבְתֵּינוּ לְתַתְּ לְנוּ:
⁴ וְלֹקֶחֶת הַפְּנֵן הַטְּנָא מִידָךְ וְהַגִּיחֹו לְפָנֵי
מִזְבֵּחַ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ:
⁵ וְעַנְיִתְתָּ וְאָמַרְתָּ לְפָנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ אֲרַמִּי
אָבֵד אָבִי וַיַּרְא מִצְרִים וַיַּגַּר שֵׁם בָּמְתִיבִי
מַעַט וַיַּהַי שְׁם לְגַוִּי גָּדוֹל עֲצּוּם וּרְבָבָ:
⁶ וַיִּרְאֻנוּ אֶתְנוּ הַמִּצְרִים וַיַּעֲגֹנוּ וַיִּתְנַעַּלְנוּ
עַבְדָה קָשָׁה: ⁷ וַיַּצְעַק אֲלֵיהָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ
אַבְתֵּינוּ וַיִּשְׁמַע יְהוָה אֶת־קְלִינָנוּ וַיַּרְא אֶת־
עַבְדֵינוּ וְאֶת־עַמְלָנוּ וְאֶת־לְחָצָנוּ: ⁸ וַיַּוְצָאנוּ
יְהוָה מִמִּצְרִים בִּיד חִזְקָה וּבִזְרוּעַ נְטוּיָה
וּבִמְרָא גָּדֵל וּבְאַתָּות וּבְמִפְתִּים: ⁹ וַיַּבְאָנוּ
אֲלֵהָ מִקּוּם הָאָהָרָן וַיִּתְן־לָנוּ אֶת־הָאָרֶץ
הַזֹּאת אָרֶץ זֶבֶת חֶלְבָה וּדְבָשָׁה: ¹⁰ וְעַתָּה
הַנָּהָר הַבָּאֵתי אֶת־רִאשִׁית פְּרִי הָאָדָמָה
אֲשֶׁר־נִנְתַּחַת לְיַד יְהוָה
וְהַנְּחָתוֹ לְפָנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ וְהַשְׁתְּחוּתָה
לְפָנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ: ¹¹ וְשִׁמְחָת בְּכָל־הַטּוֹב
אֲשֶׁר נָתַן־לָךְ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ וְלִבְיתְּךָ אֶתְתָּה
וְהַלְלוּ וְהַגָּר אֲשֶׁר בְּקָרְבָּךְ: ¹²
¹² כִּי תִּכְלָה לְעֵשֶׂר אֶת־כָּל־מַעַשֵּׂר
תְּבוֹאָתְךָ בְּשַׁנָּה הַשְׁלִישִׁית שָׁנָת הַמְּעַשֵּׂר

3. “our fathers.” In this translation, the term avot is understood to refer specifically to the patriarchs when they serve as representatives of their households (here and v. 15); elsewhere, it is rendered in a more inclusive sense as “ancestors” (as in v. 7). Although the forefathers alone are invoked in this verse, the covenantal promises are inclusive (see at Genesis 17).

5–11. The liturgy to be recited during this ceremony reviews Israel’s history from the end of the descent to Egypt in the time of Jacob, through the Exodus, to the coming to the land; it omits the wilderness period and the revelation at Sinai. Instead, the text emphasizes the deeds that God performed for Israel. This passage, along with its midrashic explanation, has become a central part of the Passover Haggadah.

5. “My father was a fugitive Aramean.” Or, “wandering Aramean.” “My father” probably refers to Jacob, father of the twelve tribes. The patriarchs and matriarchs came from Aram Naharaim, which is where Jacob flees to and starts a family with Leah, Rachel, Zilpah, and Bilhah (Genesis 30).

TITHES (26:12–15)

The tithe of the third year is not to be taken to the central sanctuary like the tithes of the first and tithe—and have given it to the [family of the] Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, that they may eat their fill in your settlements,¹³you shall declare before your God: “I have cleared out the consecrated portion from the house; and I have given it to the [family of the] Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, just as You commanded me; I have neither transgressed nor neglected any of Your commandments: ¹⁴I have not eaten of it while in mourning, I have not cleared out any of it while I was impure, and I have not deposited any of it with the dead. I have obeyed my God; I have done just as You commanded me.¹⁵Look down from Your holy abode, from heaven, and bless Your people Israel and the soil You have given us, a land flowing with milk and honey, as You swore to our fathers.”

¹⁶Your God commands you this day to observe these laws and rules; observe them faithfully with all your heart and soul. ¹⁷You have affirmed this day that יהוה is your God, in whose ways you will walk, whose laws and commandments and rules you will observe, and whom you

ונתתך ללוּי לאָגָר לִיתּוֹם וְלַאלְמָנָה וְאַכְלָה
בְּשֵׁעֲרֵיךְ וְשָׁבָעוֹ: ¹³ וְאָמַרְתָּ לִפְנֵי יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֵיךְ בְּעָרְתִּי הַקָּדֵשׁ מִן־הַבָּיִת וְגַם נִתְתִּיו
לְלוּי וְלָגָר לִיתּוֹם וְלַאלְמָנָה בְּכָל־מִצּוֹתֶךָ
אֲשֶׁר צִוִּיתִי לְאַעֲבֹרְתִּי מִמְצּוֹתֶךָ וְלֹא־
שְׁחַתִּתִי: ¹⁴ לֹא־אַכְלָתִי בְּאַנְפָנוֹ וְלֹא־
בָּעֲרָתִי מִמְּנָנוֹ בְּטַמֵּא וְלֹא־נִתְתִּתִי מִפְּנָנוֹ
לִמְתָּה שְׁמֻעָתִי בְּקוֹל יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ עֲשָׂרִתִי
בְּכָל אֲשֶׁר צִוִּיתִי: ¹⁵ הַשְׁקִיפָה מִמְעוֹן
קָדְשֶׁךְ מִן־הַשָּׁמְדִים וּבְרוּךְ אַת־עַמָּךְ אַת־
יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֶת הָאָדָם אֲשֶׁר נִתְתַּתָּ לְנוֹ
כַּאֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּעַת לְאַבְתֵּינוּ אֶרֶץ זֶבֶת חָלֵב

וְדָבָשׁ: ס

¹⁶ הַיּוֹם הִזְמִין יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ מִצּוֹךְ לְעַשּׂוֹת
אֲתִיהָקִים הָאֱלֹהָה וְאֲתִיהָמְשִׁפְטִים
וְשִׁמְרָת וְעַשְׂתָּ אֶתְכֶם בְּכָל־לְבָבְךָ וּבְכָל־
גַּפְשֶׁךָ: ¹⁷ אֲתִיהָה אַמְرָת הַיּוֹם לְהִיּוֹת
לְכָל־אֱלֹהִים וְלִלְכַּת בְּדָרְכֵיכֶם וְלִשְׁמֹר חֲקִיקָוּ second years (14:22–29); instead, it is distributed locally to those who are dependent on public assistance, including widows and Levites (see at 12:19).

14. deposited any of it with the dead. In ancient Israel, people believed that they could assist the spirits of the dead by providing food and drink for them to consume in Sheol, the place where all the dead resided. This verse does not prohibit this practice, though it does exclude the use of tithed foodstuff for this purpose. Contact with the dead is considered a source of ritual impurity (Jeffrey Tigay, Deuteronomy, 1996, p. 244).

15. from Your holy abode, from heaven. Elsewhere in the Bible, God's abode is conceived of as an earthly sacred space (as in Exodus 25:8); but in Deuteronomy, God is considered transcendent and not located in any place on earth. The book speaks of God's “name” dwelling in the Chosen Place (as in 12:5) to counter the impression that God literally dwells there. This verse shows how Deuteronomy uses a traditional idiom but modifies it to fit its distinctive theology.

Conclusion to the Laws

OBLIGATIONS FOR ISRAEL AND GOD (26:16–19)

The laws in Deuteronomy 12–26 now end with an exhortation calling upon Israel to obey the covenant between God and Israel. Both parties affirm their obligations: Israel is to follow the laws, while God is to maintain a special relationship with Israel.

will obey.¹⁸ And יְהוָה has affirmed this day that you are, as promised, God's treasured people who shall observe all the divine commandments,¹⁹ and that [God] will set you, in fame and renown and glory, high above all the nations that [God] has made; and that you shall be, as promised, a holy people to your God. יְהוָה

וּמִצְוֹתָיו וּמִשְׁפָטָיו וְלֶשֶׁם בְּקָלוֹ :¹⁸ וַיְהִי
הַמְּאִירָה הַזֹּם לְהִזְמִין לוֹ לְעֵם סְגִלָּה
בְּאַשְׁר דִּבֶּר־לְךָ וְלִשְׁמֹר כָּל־מִצְוֹתָיו:
¹⁹ וַיְתַתְּךָ עַל־יְהוּדָה עַל כָּל־הָגּוּם אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה
לְתִהְלָה וְלֶשֶׁם וְלִתְפָּאָרָת וְלְהִזְמִין עַמָּךְ
קָרֵשׁ לְיְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ בְּאַשְׁר דִּבֶּר: פ

27 Moses and the elders of Israel charged the people, saying: Observe all the Instruction that I enjoin upon you this day.² As soon as you have crossed the Jordan into the land that your God יְהוָה is giving you, you shall set up large stones. Coat them with plaster³ and inscribe upon them all the words of this Teaching. When you cross over to enter the land that your God יְהוָה is giving you, a

כז וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה וּזְ肯ָנָה יִשְׁרָאֵל אֶת־הָעֵם
לְאַמְرָר שְׁמֹר אֶת־כָּל־הַמִּצְוָה אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי
מִצְוָה אֶתְכֶם הַיּוֹם: ² וְהִיא בַּיּוֹם אֲשֶׁר
תַּעֲבֹרְנוּ אֶת־הַיַּרְדֵּן אֶל־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֶיךָ נָתַן לְךָ וְהַקְרִמָת לְאַבְנִים גָּדוֹלִים
וּשְׁדָרִת אֶתְכֶם בְּשִׁיד: ³ וְכִתְבַּת עַל־יְהוָה
כָּל־דְּבָרֵי הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת בְּעַבְרָךְ לְמַעַן
אֲשֶׁר תָּבָא אֶל־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךָ

18. God's treasured people. As in 7:6, this phrase means that God chooses Israel to be holy and set aside for God. This idea stems from the view that Israel's God assigned other gods to different nations (see at 4:19–20) while establishing a special relationship with the people of Israel. This does not mean that Israel views itself as innately superior to other peoples, although the God of Israel is considered more powerful than all other gods (see also at Exodus 19:5).

Ceremonies upon Entering the Land (27:1–26)

The laws in Deuteronomy 12–26 are framed by ceremonies to be performed once the people cross over into the Promised Land (see 11:29–32). Deuteronomy links the entrance into the land with obedience to the laws and repeatedly emphasizes that Israelite success and survival in the land depend upon their adherence to these laws. (One can best explain the several discontinuities or digressions in this unit as the result of later editorial activity.)

ERECTION OF INSCRIBED STONES AND A STONE ALTAR AT MOUNT EBAL (27:1–8)

This section instructs the Israelites to set up plaster-coated stones at Mount Ebal on which “this Teaching” will be written after they cross the Jordan. At the same location, they are to erect an altar of unhewn stone for offering sacrifices. Mount Ebal is located near the town of Shechem (modern day Nablus), about thirty miles from the site of the crossing of the Jordan and hence too far to reach on the same day. (Compare Joshua 4:19, which offers a different version of these events.)

3. inscribe upon them. Similarly, the law collection of the Babylonian king Hammurabi, including its prologue and epilogue, was inscribed on a stele and erected in a temple.

this Teaching. Heb. ha-torah ha-zot, which does not mean the entire Torah as we now have it, but instead the book of Deuteronomy, or perhaps only its legal portions (see also at 31:9).

land flowing with milk and honey, as יְהוָה, the God of your ancestors, promised you—⁴upon crossing the Jordan, you shall set up these stones, about which I charge you this day, on Mount Ebal, and coat them with plaster.⁵There, too, you shall build an altar to your God, יְהוָה, an altar of stones. Do not wield an iron tool over them; ⁶you must build the altar of your God יְהוָה of unhewn stones. You shall offer on it burnt offerings to your God, יְהוָה,⁷and you shall sacrifice there offerings of well-being and eat them, rejoicing before your God, יְהוָה.⁸And on those stones you shall inscribe every word of this Teaching most distinctly.

⁹Moses and the levitical priests spoke to all Israel, saying: Silence! Hear, O Israel! Today you have become the people of your God: ¹⁰Heed your God יְהוָה and observe the divine commandments and laws, which I enjoin upon you this day.

¹¹Thereupon Moses charged the people, saying:
¹²After you have crossed the Jordan, the following shall stand on Mount Gerizim when the blessing for the people is spoken: Simeon, Levi, Judah,

וַיִּתְןֵן לְכֶם אָרֶץ זֹבֵת חָלֵב וְדָבֵשׂ בְּאָשֶׁר דָּבַר אֱתָה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ אֲבָתֵּיכֶם לְךָ: ⁴ וְהִיא בְּעֶבֶר כֶּם אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצְוָה מִצְוָה אֲתֶם בְּהָר עֵיבֶל וְשָׂדֶת אֶזְרָח אֶתְכֶם בְּשֵׁיד: ⁵ וּבְנִיתָ שֵׁם מִזְבֵּחַ לְיְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם מִזְבֵּחַ אֲבָנִים לְאַתְנִיף עַלְיָהֶם בְּרוֹזֶל: ⁶ אֲבָנִים שְׁלָמָות תְּבִנֵּה אֶת־מִזְבֵּחַ יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וְהַעֲלִית עַלְיוֹן עֹלוֹת לְיְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם: ⁷ וְזָבְחַת שְׁלָמִים וְאַכְלַת שֵׁם וְשָׁמְחַת לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם: ⁸ וּכְתַבְתָּ עַל־הָאָבָנִים אֶת־כָּל־

דְּבָרַי הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת בָּאָרֶץ הַיּוֹטֵב: ⁹ וַיַּדְבֵּר מֹשֶׁה וְהַפְּנִינִים הַלְוִיִּים אֶל כָּל־יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאָמֵר הַסְּכָתָה וְשָׁמַע יִשְׂרָאֵל הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה נָהִית לְעַם לְיְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ: ¹⁰ וְשָׁמַעַת בְּקוֹל יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וְעָשַׂת אֶת־מִצְוֹתוֹ מִצְוֹתוֹ וְאֶת־חֳקָיו אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצְוָה הַיּוֹם: ¹¹

וַיַּצְוָאוּ מֹשֶׁה אֶת־הָעָם בַּיּוֹם הַהוּא לְאָמֵר: ¹² אֱלֹהֵינוּ יְעַמְּדוּ לְבָרָךְ אֶת־הָעָם עַל־הַר גְּרִיזִים בְּעֶבֶר כֶּם אֲתָה יְהִירֵן שְׁמַעַן וְלֹעֲגָל

CALL TO OBEY THE COVENANT AT MOAB (27:9–10)

These verses declare that Israel is God's people and therefore obligated to obey God's laws. This section fits better with 26:17–18, the conclusion of the covenant at Moab.

PROCLAMATION OF BLESSINGS AND CURSES AT MT. GERIZIM AND MT. EBAL (27:11–26)

Deuteronomy 11:26–30 first mentions a public ceremony to announce the consequences of keeping or neglecting the terms of the covenant (enacted in Joshua 8:33–35). Deuteronomy 28 contains the actual blessings and curses to be recited during the ceremony.

11–13. This passage adheres to 11:26–30, according to which the blessing for those who obey the commandments is to be proclaimed at Mount Gerizim and the curse for those who disobey at Mount Ebal. (Compare vv. 14–26, below.)

12. Six of the tribes, the descendants of Leah and Rachel, will utter the blessings on Mount Gerizim (north of Shechem); six others, the descendants of the handmaids Bilhah and Zilpah plus Reuben and Zebulun, will utter the curses on Mount Ebal (south of Shechem).

Issachar, Joseph, and Benjamin.¹³ And for the curse, the following shall stand on Mount Ebal: Reuben, Gad, Asher, Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali.¹⁴ The Levites shall then proclaim in a loud voice to all the people of Israel:

¹⁵Cursed be anyone who makes a sculptured or molten image, abhorred by יהוה, a craftsman's handiwork, and sets it up in secret.—And all the people shall respond, Amen.

¹⁶Cursed be the one who insults father or mother.—And all the people shall say, Amen.

¹⁷Cursed be the one who moves a neighbor's landmark.—And all the people shall say, Amen.

¹⁸Cursed be the one who misdirects a blind person underway.—And all the people shall say, Amen.

¹⁹Cursed be the one who subverts the rights of the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow.—And all the people shall say, Amen.

²⁰Cursed be the [man] who lies with his father's wife, for he has removed his father's garment.—And all the people shall say, Amen.

14–26. This passage seems to be an alternate version of the ceremony of vv. 11–13; here, the people all stand together and the Levites make the proclamation. And it is not a list of curses for disobeying the commandments, as in Deuteronomy 28; instead, this passage lists twelve sinful actions for which a person is declared deserving of being cursed, meaning that they warrant divine punishment. The list summarizes the larger body of Deuteronomic law, showing a concern for a just society, sexual mores, and protection of the vulnerable.

15. Deuteronomy is adamantly opposed to graven images or idols, be they of Israel's God (as in the episode of the molten calf in Exodus 32; Deuteronomy 9:12) or of foreign deities.

Amen. To ratify their acceptance of each statement, people respond with "Amen," which means "true" or "I affirm the foregoing."

16. insults father or mother. This verse refers

וַיְהִי־זֶה וַיָּשֹׁבֵר וַיִּשְׂכַּר וַיּוֹסֶף וַיְבִנֵּמֶן:
¹³ וְאֵלֶּה יַעֲמֹדוּ עַל־הַקְלָלָה בְּהָר עִיבָּל רָאוּבָן גָּד וְאַשְׁר זְבוּלֹן הָן וְנֶפְתָּלִי: ¹⁴ וְעַנְוָה הַלּוּכָם וְאַמְרוּ אֶל־בְּלִי־אִישׁ יְשָׁרָאֵל קֹול

רָם: ס

¹⁵ אָרוּר הָאִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יַعֲשֶׂה פְּסָל וּמְסֻכָּה תֹּועֶבֶת יְהוָה מִعְשָׂה יְדֵי חָרֶשׁ וּשְׁם בְּסָתָר וְעַנְוָה בְּלִי־הָעָם וְאַמְרוּ אָמֵן: ס

¹⁶ אָרוּר מַקְלָה אָבִיו וְאַמְוֹן וְאָמֵר בְּלִי־הָעָם אָמֵן: ס

¹⁷ אָרוּר מְסֻגָּגָה גָּבוֹל רְעָהוּ וְאָמֵר בְּלִי־הָעָם אָמֵן: ס

¹⁸ אָרוּר מִשְׁגָּה עֹור בְּדִירָה וְאָמֵר בְּלִי־הָעָם אָמֵן: ס

¹⁹ אָרוּר מַטָּה מִשְׁפָּט גְּרִיזָתָם וְאַלְמָנָה

וְאָמֵר בְּלִי־הָעָם אָמֵן: ס ²⁰ אָרוּר שְׁכָב עַמְּאָשָׂת אָבִיו כִּי גָּלָה בְּנָךְ אָבִיו וְאָמֵר בְּלִי־הָעָם אָמֵן: ס to one who treats a parent with disrespect (m'kaleh), as exemplified by the incorrigible son in 21:18–21. This statement is similar to, but broader than, Exodus 21:17 and Leviticus 20:9, which forbid "cursing" (k-l-l) one's parents. Our verse uses a similar sounding term, from the root k-l-h, meaning "to treat lightly." This is the opposite of honoring a parent (k-b-d, which derives from the root meaning "to be heavy"). Children are to treat both mothers and fathers with respect (see also at 5:16; Exodus 20:12).

17. See at 19:14.

19. widow. See Eikev, Another View, p. 1108.

20. father's wife. This refers to any wife of one's father, not just the mother of the man addressed by the law; the father's sexual rights are not to be impinged upon by "removing his garment." To "spread a garment" over a woman is to claim responsibility for her in marriage (Ezekiel 16:8;

²¹Cursed be the one who lies with any beast.—And all the people shall say, Amen.

²²Cursed be the [man] who lies with his sister, whether daughter of his father or of his mother.—And all the people shall say, Amen.

²³Cursed be the [man] who lies with his mother-in-law.—And all the people shall say, Amen.

²⁴Cursed be the one who strikes down a fellow [Israelite] in secret.—And all the people shall say, Amen.

²⁵Cursed be the one who accepts a bribe in the case of the murder of an innocent person.—And all the people shall say, Amen.

²⁶Cursed be whoever will not uphold the terms of this Teaching and observe them.—And all the people shall say, Amen.

28 Now, if you obey your God, יְהוָה, to observe faithfully all the divine commandments which I enjoin upon you this day, your God, יְהוָה, will set you high above all the nations of the earth.

Ruth 3:9). (See also at Deuteronomy 23:1 and Leviticus 18:8.)

22. his sister. This verse forbids intercourse with one's sister or half-sister (see also at Leviticus 18:9). The book of Samuel tells of King David's son Amnon, who rapes his half-sister Tamar (II Samuel 13). In that story, the concern is more with forced sex outside of marriage than victimizes the woman than with the impropriety of sibling sex. Although the text remains ambiguous, it seems that Amnon could have married Tamar had he so wished, which would conflict with the law here.

23. One's mother-in-law is like one's father's wife in regard to impermissible sexual relations (compare Leviticus 18:17).

25. accepts a bribe. This statement probably condemns the acceptance of bribes by judges in a case that results in the death sentence for an innocent defendant. However, it may be directed to witnesses bribed to give false testimony.

²¹ אָרוֹר שָׁכֵב עַמִּכְלָבֶהָמָה וַיֹּאמֶר כֹּל-

הָעָם אָמֵן: ס

²² אָרוֹר שָׁכֵב עַמִּאֲחֹתָו בְּתִ-אָבִיו אוֹ בָּתָ-

אָמוֹ וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלִ-הָעָם אָמֵן: ס

²³ אָרוֹר שָׁכֵב עַמִּיחֹתְנָתָו וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלִ-הָעָם

אָמֵן: ס

²⁴ אָרוֹר מִפְּהָ רְעָהוּ בְּסֻתָּר וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלִ-הָעָם

אָמֵן: ס

²⁵ אָרוֹר לְקַח שְׁחוּד לְהַפּוֹת נֶפֶשׁ דָם נָקִי

וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלִ-הָעָם אָמֵן: ס

²⁶ אָרוֹר אֲשֶׁר לְאִיּוֹם אֲתִ-דְבָרִי הַתּוֹרָה-

הַזֹּאת לְעָשֹׂת אֹתָם וַיֹּאמֶר בְּלִ-הָעָם

אָמֵן: פ

כח וְהִיא אַمִּשְׁמֹועַ תִּשְׁמַע בְּקוֹל יְהֹוָה
אֱלֹהֵיכְךָ לְשִׁמְרָה לְעָשֹׂת אַתִּ-כְּלָמֹצְתָּי
אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מְצֹוק הַיּוֹם וַיְנַתֵּן יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ

Consequences of Obeying or Disobeying the Covenant (28:1–68)

Unlike the proclamations in 27:11–26, the blessings and curses in this unit constitute promises or punishments that will befall Israel depending on whether the people obey or disobey God's commandments. Although the blessings and curses are formulated in second-person masculine singular language, they are addressed to the entire community and apply to the community as a whole, not to individuals. Similar examples of blessings and curses are found in Exodus 23:20–33 and Leviticus 26:3–45.

The Bible models the covenant between God and Israel on the model of a treaty between two human parties, one of whom is superior to the other: the superior promises protection, and the inferior promises loyalty. Ancient Near Eastern international treaties generally contain, near the end, warn-

²All these blessings shall come upon you and take effect, if you will but heed the word of your God יְהוָה:

³Blessed shall you be in the city and blessed shall you be in the country.

⁴Blessed shall be your issue from the womb, your produce from the soil, and your offspring from the cattle, your calving from the herd and your lambing from the flock.

⁵Blessed shall be your basket and your kneading bowl.

⁶Blessed shall you be in your coming and blessed shall you be in your going.

⁷will put to rout before [your army] the enemies who attack you; they will march out against you by a single road, but flee from you by many roads. ⁸יְהוָה will ordain blessings for you upon your barns and upon all your undertakings: you will be blessed in the land that your God יְהוָה is עַלְיוֹן עַל בֶּל־גּוֹיִ הָאָרֶץ : ² וּבָאוּ עַלְיָק בֶּל־הַפְּרִכּוֹת הָאֱלֹהִ וְהַשִּׁגָּךְ פִּי תְּשִׁמְעַ בְּקוֹל יְהוָה אֶלְלֵחִיךְ :

³ בָּרוּךְ אַתָּה בְּעִיר וּבְרוּךְ אַתָּה בְּשָׂדָה :

⁴ בָּרוּךְ פְּרִי־בְּטֻנָּךְ וּפְרִי אֲדָמָתְךָ וּפְרִי בְּהַמְּתָחָ שְׁגָר אַלְפִּיךְ וּעֲשָׂתְרוֹת צָאנְךָ :

⁵ בָּרוּךְ טְנָאָךְ וּמְשָׁאָרָתָךְ :

⁶ בָּרוּךְ אַתָּה בְּבָאָךְ וּבָרוּךְ אַתָּה בְּצָאתָךְ :

⁷ וְלֹא יְהוָה אַתָּה אַיִלָּךְ דְּקָמִים עַלְיָק נְגַפִּים לְפָנָיךְ בְּדַרְךְ אֶחָד יִצְאֵנוּ אֶלְיךָ וּבְשְׁבָעָה דָּרְכִים יִנּוּסְוּ לְפָנָיךְ : ⁸ יִצְוּ יְהוָה אַתָּה הַפְּרָכָה בְּאַסְמָךְ וּבְכָל מְשֻׁלָּח יִדְךְ וּבְרָכָה

ings about the consequences of a breach of the treaty; such dire threats aim to motivate the inferior party to uphold the treaty and not rebel against the overlord. Deuteronomy 28 closely resembles one ancient treaty in particular, the Vassal Treaty of Esarhaddon, a Neo-Assyrian treaty dating from 672 B.C.E., the time when much of Deuteronomy is thought to have originated. The tradition of curses is also attested in legal texts going back at least as far as the Laws of Hammurabi (1792–1750 B.C.E.). The curses may reflect the actual experience of the Babylonian exile, assuming that this unit was one of those parts of Deuteronomy added or edited after the exile (586 B.C.E.).

THE BLESSINGS (28:1–14)

The blessings are contingent on the people's obeying the divine laws (Deuteronomy 12–26). The totality of the blessings will lead to a strong, secure, and prosperous country, superior to its enemies and loyal to God.

4. your issue from the womb. Literally, “your fruit of the belly”; see at 7:13. The verse promises fertility for humans, soil, and domestic animals (see also vv. 11 and 18, below). Human fertility is often thought of as a woman’s domain, but here it is clearly part of the community’s blessing and of major concern to the men as well. Indeed, fertility—of humans, of the soil, and of domestic animals—is crucial to the existence of Israel (see also Noach, Another View, p. 53).

5. your basket and your kneading bowl. Women would have used these vessels for gathering grain and making bread (see at Exodus 16:3 and 25:30 for more on women’s role in bread production). As in the previous verse, women’s work is credited to the community as a whole.

7–14. These verses spell out applications of the foregoing verses, which were stated in general terms. They also express a common theme in Deuteronomy, emphasizing that the blessings depend on obedience to God.

giving you. ⁹ יְהוָה will establish you as God's holy people, as was sworn to you, if you keep the commandments of your God יְהוָה and walk in God's ways. ¹⁰ And all the peoples of the earth shall see that that יְהוָה's name is proclaimed over you, and they shall stand in fear of you. ¹¹ יְהוָה will give you abounding prosperity in your issue from the womb, your offspring from the cattle, and your produce from the soil in the land that יְהוָה swore to your fathers to assign to you. ¹² יְהוָה will open for you that bounteous store, the heavens, to provide rain for your land in season and to bless all your undertakings. You will be creditor to many nations, but debtor to none.

¹³ יְהוָה will make you the head, not the tail; you will always be at the top and never at the bottom—if only you obey and faithfully observe the commandments of your God יְהוָה that I enjoin upon you this day, ¹⁴ and do not deviate to the right or to the left from any of the commandments that I enjoin upon you this day and turn to the worship of other gods.

¹⁵ But if you do not obey your God יְהוָה to observe faithfully all the commandments and laws

בָּאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר יְהוָה אֱלֹהִים נָתַן לְךָ: ⁹ וַיַּקְרֵם יְהוָה לוֹ לְעֵם קָדוֹשׁ בְּאָשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע־לְךָ כִּי תִשְׁמַר אֶת־מִצּוֹת יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ וְהַלְכָת בְּדָرָיךְ: ¹⁰ וְרָאוּ בְּלָעֵמִי הָאָרֶץ כִּי שָׁם יְהוָה נִקְרָא עַלְיָךְ וְיוֹרֵא מִפְנֵךְ: ¹¹ וְהַוְתָּרָה יְהוָה לְטוֹבָה בְּפִרְיוֹ בְּטֻנוֹ וּבְפִרְיוֹ בְּהַמְתַחַת יְבִפְרִי אֶדְמַתָּךְ עַל הָאָדָמָה אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע יְהוָה לְאַבְתִּיךְ לְתַתְךָ: ¹² יִפְתַּח יְהוָה לְךָ אֶת־אֹכֶלֶת הַטּוֹב אֶת־הַשְׁמִינִים לְתַתְךָ מַטְרָאָצָל בְּעַתָּךְ וּלְבָנֶךָ אֶת בְּלִמְעָשֶׂה יְהֻנָּךְ וְהַלְוִית גּוֹיִם רַבִּים וְאַפָּה לֹא תַּלְוֹה:

¹³ וְנִתְנַנְּךָ יְהוָה לְרִאשׁוֹ וְלֹא לְזָבֵב וְהַלִּיתְךָ לְמַעַלָּה וְלֹא תַּהֲיֵה לְמִטְהָה כִּירְתְּשֻׁמָּע אֶל־מִצּוֹת | יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצּוֹעַד הַיּוֹם לְשִׁמְרָה וּלְעֲשָׂוֹת: ¹⁴ וְלֹא תַּסְרוּ מִבְּלָה הַדְּבָרִים אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצּוֹעַד אֶתְכֶם הַיּוֹם יְמִין וְשָׁמָאל לְלִכְתַּת אֶחָרִי אֱלֹהִים אֶחָרִים לְעַבְדָּם: פ

¹⁵ וְהִי אִם־לֹא תִשְׁמַע בְּקוֹל יְהוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ לְשִׁמְרָה לְעַשׂוֹת אֶת־בְּלִמְעָדֶךָ

10. Yahweh's name is proclaimed over you. This expression means that God is the authority over Israel and that Israel is God's people.

12. This verse promises that God will provide the fertility by bringing the rain to water the crops. The importance of rain in Israel cannot be exaggerated (see also at 11:10–11). Human and animal fertility is dependent on agricultural fertility.

that bounteous store. Literally, “[God’s] bounteous store,” which reflects the belief that rain was stored in the heavens and belonged to God. (See also at 33:13.)

rain...in season. The proper timing of the rain is crucial. Rain must come in the right part of the growing season; rain during the harvest can ruin the crops.

You will be creditor. As a result of the bounty described above, Israel will have a surplus to lend to other nations.

THE CURSES (28:15–68)

The section on the curses is longer and more graphic than the depiction of the blessings, although they parallel each other in part. The curses warn that God will call upon nature and foreign enemies to bring ruin to Israel, which means that Israel will lose the land that God promised. Deuteronomy makes the continued settlement in the Promised Land contingent on obeying God (whereas the promise of the land to Abraham in Genesis was unconditional). The theology of Deuwhich I enjoin upon you this day, all these curses shall come upon you and take effect:

¹⁶Cursed shall you be in the city and cursed shall you be in the country.

¹⁷Cursed shall be your basket and your kneading bowl.

¹⁸Cursed shall be your issue from the womb and your produce from the soil, your calving from the herd and your lambing from the flock.

¹⁹Cursed shall you be in your comings and cursed shall you be in your goings.

²⁰will let loose against you calamity, panic, and frustration in all the enterprises you undertake, so that you shall soon be utterly wiped out because of your evildoing in forsaking Me. ²¹will make pestilence cling to you, until putting an end to you in the land that you are entering to possess. ²²will strike you with consumption, fever, and inflammation, with scorching heat and drought, with blight and mildew; they shall hound you until you perish. ²³The skies above your head shall be copper and the earth under you iron. ²⁴will make the rain of your land dust, and sand shall drop on you from the sky, until you are wiped out.

²⁵will put you to rout before your enemies;

וְחִקְרְתָּיו אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצְוָה הַיּוֹם וּבָאוּ עֲלֵיכָךְ בְּלִהְקָלְלֹות הָאֱלֹהִים וְהַשִּׁיגּוֹךְ:

¹⁶אֲרוּר אַתָּה בְּעִיר וְאֲרוּר אַתָּה בְּשָׂדֶה:

¹⁷אֲרוּר טְנָאָךְ וּמְשָׁאָרָתְךָ:

¹⁸אֲרוּר פְּרִיבְטָנָךְ וּפְרִי אַרְמָתָךְ שָׁגֵן אֲלָפִיךְ וּעֲשָׂתָרָת צָאנָךְ:

¹⁹אֲרוּר אַתָּה בְּבָאָךְ וְאֲרוּר אַתָּה בְּצָאתָךְ: teronomy, which may be largely postexilic (after 586 B.C.E.), paves the way to explain the destruction of the Temple and the exile as resulting from Israel's sins and disobedience. This passage closely corresponds to the curses in Leviticus 26; both texts are considered so terrifying that the custom later arose to recite them in an undertone when reading the Torah aloud in the synagogue.

²⁰יִשְׁלַח יְהוָה | בָּקְאָתִי הַמְּאָרָה אֶת־הַמְּהוֹמָה וְאֶת־הַמְּגֻעָרָת בְּכָל־מְשָׁלֵחַ יְהוָה אֲשֶׁר תַּעֲשֶׂה עַד הַשְּׁמִיךָ וְעַד־אַבְדָּל מִהְרָה מִפְנֵי רֹעַ מְעַלְלִיךְ אֲשֶׁר עַזְבָּתָנִי: ²¹יִדְבֶּק יְהוָה בָּקְאָתִי הַדְּבָר עַד בְּלַתָּו אַתָּךְ מַעַל הַאֲדָמָה אֲשֶׁר־אַתָּה בְּאִשְׁפָמָה לְרַשְׁתָה:

²²וּבְכָה יוֹחָנָה בְּשָׁחַפְתָּ וּבְקָרְחָתָ וּבְדַלְקָתָ וּבְחַרְחָרָ וּבְחַרְבָּ וּבְשִׁפְוֹן וּבְירָקְון וּרְדָפּוֹעָ עַד אַבְדָּל: ²³וְהַיּוּ שְׁמִיךָ אֲשֶׁר־הַשְׁמִיךָ עַל־רַאשָּׁךְ נְחַשֵּׁת וְהָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־תְּחַתֵּךְ בְּרֹזֶל: ²⁴וַיְתַּן יוֹחָנָה אֶת־מְטָר אָרָצֶךָ אַבְקָ וּעְפָר מִן־הַשְׁמִימִים וַיַּרְא עַלְלִיךְ עַד הַשְׁמִיךָ:

²⁵וַיִּתְּנַקֵּן יוֹחָנָה | נָגֵן לִפְנֵי אִיבְּרָ בְּדַרְךָ אֶחָד

15–19. These verses parallel the opening of the section of blessings in vv. 1–6.

20–44. This passage elaborates on the general curses of vv. 16–19, in horrific detail.

21–24. These verses present a picture of a country wracked with heat, drought, pestilence, disease, and finally starvation and death, which is what will happen if God does not open the heavens and provide rain (v. 24). The description also correlates with conditions of a city under siege, as Jerusalem experienced before its destruction in 586 B.C.E., in which case disease and starvation would result not from lack of rain, but from the population's inability to obtain food.

23. copper...iron. “Copper” probably refers to bronze (the same Hebrew word denotes both); along with iron, these were the hardest metals known in ancient times. No rain can break through the bronzed (from the heat) sky, and no vegetation can break through the iron-hard soil.

24. dust. Dust and sand represent the antithesis of rain.

25–26. Instead of celebrating a victory over attacking enemies, as in vv. 7 and 10, Israel will be you shall march out against them by a single road, but flee from them by many roads; and you shall become a horror to all the kingdoms of the earth.²⁶ Your carcasses shall become food for all the birds of the sky and all the beasts of the earth, with none to frighten them off.

²⁷ will strike you with the Egyptian inflammation, with hemorrhoids, boil-scars, and itch, from which you shall never recover.

²⁸ will strike you with madness, blindness, and dismay. ²⁹You shall grope at noon as the blind grope in the dark; you shall not prosper in your ventures, but shall be constantly abused and robbed, with none to give help.

³⁰If you [a man] pay the bride-price for a wife, another man shall enjoy her.

If you build a house, you shall not live in it. If you plant a vineyard, you shall not harvest it. ³¹Your ox shall be slaughtered before your eyes, but you shall not eat of it; your ass shall be seized in front of you, and it shall not be returned to you; your flock shall be delivered to your enemies, with

תַּצָּא אֶלְיוֹ וּבְשִׁבְעָה דְּרָכִים תַּנּוּס לִפְנֵי
וְהִיְתָ לְזַעֲהָ לְכָל מִמְּלֹכּוֹת הָאָרֶץ:
²⁶ וְהִיְתָ נְבָלָתֶל לְמַאֲכָל לְכָל־עוֹזָה

הַשְׁמִים וְלַבְּהִמְתָּה הָאָרֶץ וְאֵין מַחְרִיד:
²⁷ וְבָכָה יְהֹוָה בְּשִׁחְזֵין מַצְלִימָם וּבְעִפְלִים
וּבְשִׁתְרִים וּבְגַּבְּרִים וּבְגַּבְּרָב וּבְחֶרֶט אֲשֶׁר לְאִתּוּכָל לְהַרְפָּאָה:

²⁸ יִפְכָּה יְהֹוָה בְּשִׁגְעֹן וּבְעַרְוֹן וּבְתִּמְהֹן
לְבָבָךְ: ²⁹ וְהִיְתָ מִמְּשֵׁשׁ בְּצָהָרִים כִּאֲשֶׁר
יִמְשֵׁשׁ הַעֲוֹר בְּאַפְלָה וְלֹא תִּצְלִיחָ אֶת־
דְּרָכֶיךָ וְהִיְתָ אָנוֹ שֻׁוּק וְגַזּוֹל בְּלִיהִים
וְאֵין מוֹשִׁיעָ:

³⁰ אִשָּׂה תִּאֲרֹשׁ וְאִישׁ אַחֲרָךְ יִשְׁגַּלְנָה
יִשְׁכַּבְנָה בֵּית תְּבִנָּה וְלֹא־תֵשֶׁב בּוֹ כְּרֶם הַטְּעֵעַ וְלֹא
תִּחְלְלֵנוּ: ³¹ שׁוֹרָךְ טָבוֹת לְעִינֶיךָ וְלֹא
תַּאֲכֵל מִפְּנֵנוּ חַמְרָךְ גְּזֹול מַלְפִינָּךְ וְלֹא
יִשְׁׁוֹב לְךָ צָאנָךְ נִתְנָהָת לְאִיבִּיךָ וְאֵין לְךָ

powerless to defend itself and will become a disgusting sight to the other nations. Most dishonorably, the war-dead will lie unburied, with no one to care for them.

27–29. These verses describe various physical ailments and mental disabilities, subsumed under skin diseases and blindness, which were common ailments in the ancient world. The precise identification of these diseases is not known.

30–35. This passage warns that people will not benefit from their labors or enjoy their possessions.

30. This verse denies a man the benefits of the military deferment given in 20:5–7. Building a house, planting a vineyard, and taking a wife signify establishing a household.

bride-price. Better, “betrothal gift.” (See at Exodus 22:15–16; Chayei Sarah, Another View,

p. 127; and “Women in Ancient Israel—An Overview,” p. xli.)

wife. The payment of the betrothal gift by the groom to the bride’s father constituted a legal marriage contract. Although the bride and groom thus were bound in marriage, the marriage was not consummated immediately.

enjoy her. The idiom means to have illegitimate sex with the woman, causing her to lose her virginity before the marriage has been consummated. The Hebrew term written unvocalized in the text (called the k’iv) is vulgar, as seen in Isaiah 13:16 and Zechariah 14:2, where the same verb is used for the rape of women during war. Therefore, the tradition for public recitation (called the k’rei) has replaced the root sh-g-l with a euphemism that comes from the root sh-k-b, meaning “to lie with her.”

none to help you.³² Your sons and daughters shall be delivered to another people, while you look on; and your eyes shall strain for them constantly, but you shall be helpless.³³ A people you do not know shall eat up the produce of your soil and all your gains; you shall be abused and downtrodden continually,³⁴ until you are driven mad by what your eyes behold.³⁵ יהוה will afflict you at the knees and thighs with a severe inflammation, from which you shall never recover—from the sole of your foot to the crown of your head.

³⁶ יהוה will drive you, and the king you have set over you, to a nation unknown to you or your ancestors, where you shall serve other gods, of wood and stone.³⁷ You shall be a consternation, a proverb, and a byword among all the peoples to which יהוה will drive you.

³⁸ Though you take much seed out to the field, you shall gather in little, for the locust shall consume it.³⁹ Though you plant vineyards and till them, you shall have no wine to drink or store, for the worm shall devour them.⁴⁰ Though you have olive trees throughout your territory, you shall have no oil for anointment, for your olives shall drop off.⁴¹ Though you beget sons and daughters, they shall not remain with you, for they shall go into captivity.⁴² The cricket shall take over all the trees and produce of your land.

32–33. The threats that a person's children will be sold as slaves in a foreign land (see also 28:41) and that foreigners will eat someone's produce imply conquest by another country. Lamentations 5:2 speaks of the confiscation of land by foreigners in connection with the Babylonian exile, an experience perhaps in the author's mind.

32. sons and daughters. Four times this passage stresses that both female and male children will be affected by the threat (see also vv. 41, 53, 56).

36–37. These verses present an even stronger allusion to defeat and exile.

a proverb, and a byword. The foreign nations

מושיע: ³² בְּנֵיךְ וּבָנֹתֶיךְ נִתְנִים לְעַם אַחֲרֵךְ וְעַיְנִיךְ רָאֹת וּכְלֹות אֱלֹהִים בְּלַ-הַיּוֹם וְאַיִלְלָה יְדֶךָ: ³³ פְּרִי אַדְמָתֶךָ וּכְלִ-גִּיעָךְ יְאַכֵּל עַם אֲשֶׁר לְאִ-יְדָעַת וְהִיָּת רָק עַשְׂוֹק וּרְצִוֵּן בְּלַ-הַיּוֹם: ³⁴ וְהִיָּת מְשֻׁגָּעָם מִפְּרָאָה עַיְנִיךְ אֲשֶׁר תְּרָאָה: ³⁵ יִבְכָּה יְהֹוָה בְּשַׁחַן רַעַל הַבְּרֵפִיט וּלְ-הַשְׁקִים אֲשֶׁר לְאִ-תוּכָל לְהַרְפָּא מִכְּפָה רְגֵלֶךָ וְעַד קְדַקְךָ:

³⁶ יוֹלֵךְ יְהֹוָה אַתָּךְ וְאַתָּ-מִלְכֵךְ אֲשֶׁר תָּקִים עַלְיךָ אַלְגֵּוי אֲשֶׁר לְאִ-יְדָעַת אַתָּה וְאַבְתִּיךְ וּעַבְדָת שֵׁם אֱלֹהִים אֶחָרִים עַז וְאַבָּן: ³⁷ וְהִיָּת לְשָׁמָה לְמַשְׁלֵל וּלְשִׁנְינָה בְּכָל הָעָמִים אֲשֶׁר-יָנִינה גָּה יְהֹוָה שְׁמָה:

³⁸ זָרָע רַב תּוֹצִיא הַשָּׁדָה וּמַעַט תָּאַסֵּף כִּי יִחְסַלֵּנָה הָאָרָבָה: ³⁹ בְּרָמִים תְּطַע וּעַבְדָת וַיַּעֲזִין לְאִ-תְשַׁתָּחַול וְלֹא תָאַגֵּר כִּי תָאַלְנוּ הַתְּלֻעָת: ⁴⁰ זִיתִים יְהִיוּ לְךָ בְּכָל-גִּבוֹלָךְ וְשָׁמָן לֹא תְסֻוק כִּי יִשְׁלַׁ זִיתָךְ: ⁴¹ בְּנִים וּבָנֹות תּוֹלִיד וְלֹא-יְהִי לְךָ כִּי יַלְכֵד בְּשַׁבְּיָה: ⁴² בְּלַ-עַצֵּק וּפְרִי אַדְמָתֶךָ יִוְרַש הַצְּלָל:

will taunt Israel by making up sayings about its defeat.

38–40. This passage refers to the non-fertility of the land, namely frustrating cases in which produce that has already grown will then be destroyed through natural causes.

41. As in vv. 4, 11, and 18, children are included among the agricultural items. Just as people will not enjoy the agricultural products that they plant and tend (vv. 38–40, 42), so they will not maintain possession of the children they raised. Isaiah 49:14–23 depicts Israel in exile as a bereaved woman who soon will watch her children return home to her.

⁴³The strangers in your midst shall rise above you higher and higher, while you sink lower and lower: ⁴⁴they shall be your creditors, but you shall not be theirs; they shall be the head and you the tail.

⁴⁵All these curses shall befall you; they shall pursue you and overtake you, until you are wiped out, because you did not heed your God יְהוָה and keep the commandments and laws that were enjoined upon you. ⁴⁶They shall serve as signs and proofs against you and your offspring for all time. ⁴⁷Because you would not serve your God יְהוָה in joy and gladness over the abundance of everything, ⁴⁸you shall have to serve—in hunger and thirst, naked and lacking everything—the enemies whom יְהוָה will let loose against you. [God] will put an iron yoke upon your neck until you are wiped out.

⁴⁹will bring a nation against you from afar, from the end of the earth, which will swoop down like the eagle—a nation whose language you do not understand, ⁵⁰a ruthless nation, that will show the influential no regard and the vulnerable no mercy. ⁵¹It shall devour the offspring of your cattle and the produce of your soil, until you have been wiped out, leaving you nothing of new grain, wine, or oil, of the calving of your herds and the lambing of your flocks, until it has brought you to ruin. ⁵²It shall shut you up in all your towns throughout your land until every mighty, towering wall in which you trust has come down. And when you are shut up in all your towns throughout your land that your God יְהוָה has assigned to you, ⁵³you shall eat your own issue, the flesh of your sons and daughters that your God יְהוָה has assigned to you, because of the desperate straits to which your en-

⁴³הַגָּר אֲשֶׁר בְּקָרְבָּךְ יֵעַלְהָ עַלְיךָ מִעַלָּה מִעַלָּה וְאַתָּה תַּרְדֵּן מִטָּה מִטָּה: ⁴⁴הַוָּא יְלֹךְ וְאַתָּה לֹא תַּלְוֹנוּ הַוָּא יְהִי לְרֹאשׁ וְאַתָּה תַּהֲרִיחָה לְזֹבֵב:

⁴⁵וְבָאוּ עַלְיךָ כָּל־הַקָּלְלוֹת הָאֱלֹהִים וְרַדְפּוֹקָה וְהַשִּׁיגּוֹךְ עַד הַשְׁמִיךָ בִּירְלָא שְׁמֻעָת בְּקוֹל יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ לְשִׁמְרָה מִצּוֹתָיו וְחַקְתָּיו אֲשֶׁר צָוָה: ⁴⁶וְהָיו בָּךְ לְאֹות וְלִמּוֹפָת וּבְזַרְעָךְ עַד־עוֹלָם: ⁴⁷תַּחַת אֲשֶׁר לְאַעֲבָדָת אֶת־יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ בְּשִׁמְךָ וּבְטוּב לְבָב מְרַב כָּל: ⁴⁸וּבְעַדְתָּ אֶת־אַיִבְךְ אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁלַחְנוּ יְהֹוָה בָּךְ בְּרֻעָב וּבְצַמְאָה וּבְעִירָם וּבְחַטָּר כָּל וּנְתַנֵּן עַל בְּרוּלָה עַל־צֹנָארָךְ עַד הַשְׁמִידָךְ אַתָּךְ:

⁴⁹וְשָׂא יְהֹוָה עַלְיךָ גַּוִּי מִקְחָל מִקְצָה הָאָרֶץ בְּאֲשֶׁר יִדְאָה הַגְּשָׁר גַּוִּי אֲשֶׁר לֹא־תִשְׁמַע לְשָׁנוֹ: ⁵⁰גַּוִּי עַז פְּנִים אֲשֶׁר לֹא־יִשְׂא פְנִים לְזָקָן וּנְגַעַר לֹא יִחְןֵן: ⁵¹וְאַכְלָ פָּרִי בְּהַמְתָּק וּפְרִי־אַדְמָתָךְ עַד הַשְׁמִיךָ אֲשֶׁר לְאִישָׁאֵיךְ לְקָה דָּגָן תִּירּוֹשׁ וַיְצֹור שְׁגָן אַלְפִיָּה וּעֲשִׂתָּה צָאנָךְ עַד הַאֲבִידָה אַתָּה: ⁵²וְהִצְרָה לְקָה בְּכָל־שְׁעָרִיךְ עַד רְדֵת חַמְתִּיק הַגְּבָהָת וְהַבָּצְרוֹת אֲשֶׁר אַתָּה בְּטַח בְּהָנָן בְּכָל־אָרֶץ וְהִצְרָה לְקָה בְּכָל־שְׁעָרִיךְ בְּכָל־אָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר נְתַנֵּן יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ לְקָה: ⁵³וְאַכְלָתָ פְּרִי־בְּטַנְךָ בְּשָׂר בְּנֵיךְ וּבְנֵיתֶךָ אֲשֶׁר נְתַנְּלָה יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִיךְ בְּמִצּוֹר וּבְמִצּוֹק

^{43–44}. These verses threaten a reversal of the economic superiority promised in vv. 12–13.

^{45–57}. After having suffered the losses and degradation mentioned so far, the people's ultimate end will be their annihilation. This moving description pictures the enemy's invasion and destruction of the agriculture of the land (partially, at least, to feed the invading army). Then come siege and starvation, which eventually lead to cannibalism. The unusually detailed descriptions of the selfish, secretive actions of the man and woman vividly convey the desperate and inhumane nature of the situation.

emy shall reduce you.⁵⁴ The householder who is most tender and fastidious among you shall be too mean to his brother and the wife of his bosom and the children he has spared⁵⁵ to share with any of them the flesh of the children that he eats, because he has nothing else left as a result of the desperate straits to which your enemy shall reduce you in all your towns.⁵⁶ And she who is most tender and dainty among you, so tender and dainty that she would never venture to set a foot on the ground, shall begrudge the husband of her bosom, and her son and her daughter,⁵⁷ the afterbirth that issues from between her legs and the babies she bears; she shall eat them secretly, because of utter want, in the desperate straits to which your enemy shall reduce you in your towns.

אשר־יציך לך איבך: ⁵⁴ האיש הַרְבֵּה
והענוג מִאָד תַּרְעֵעַ עִינּוֹ בָּאֲחִיו וּבָאֱשֶׁת חִיקּוֹ
ובְּתִיר בְּנֵי אָשֶׁר יוֹתֵר: ⁵⁵ מִתְתַּח | לְאַחַד
מִתְּהֵם מִבְשָׂר בְּנֵי אָשֶׁר יַאֲכֵל מִבְּלִי
הַשְׁאוֹרֶל כָּל בָּמְצֹול וּבָמְצֹוק אֲשֶׁר יַצִּיק
לְךָ אִיבָּךְ בְּכָל־שָׁעָרִיךְ: ⁵⁶ הַרְבָּה בְּךָ
והענוגה אֲשֶׁר לְאַנְסֵתָה כְּפִרְגָּלָה הַצָּגָן
על־הָאָרֶץ מִהְתֻעְנָג וּמִרְגָּעָה עִינָּה
בָּאִישׁ חִיקָה וּבְבָנָה וּבְבָתָה: ⁵⁷ וּבְשִׁלְיָתָה
הַיּוֹצָת | מִבֵּין רְגִילָה וּבְבָנִילָה אֲשֶׁר תַּלְךְ כִּי־
תַּאֲכִלָם בְּחַטְרַבָּל בְּפֶתַר בָּמְצֹול וּבָמְצֹוק
אֲשֶׁר יַצִּיק לך אִיבָּךְ בְּשָׁעָרִיךְ:

54. householder. Heb. ish (traditionally, “man”), which this translation understands here as the head of the household. The person normally responsible for the care and protection of its members now looks after only his own needs.

wife of his bosom. The corresponding expression is used for the husband in v. 56 (see also at 13:7). In both cases, the phrase refers to one with whom someone has an intimate relationship, a person held dear and protected.

55. the children that he eats. As gruesome as this may seem, cannibalism is a common trope in descriptions of sieges (Leviticus 26:29; Lamentations 2:20; 4:10; II Kings 6:24–30; Jeremiah 19:9; Ezekiel 5:10; and in Assyria, the Vassal Treaties of Esarhaddon ¶¶ 47, 69, 71, 75). The verse refers not to killing the children, but to the eating of bodies that had already died from starvation.

56. most tender and dainty. This verse uses the same Hebrew terms to describe the woman as those found in v. 54 to characterize the man (translated there as “most tender and fastidious”). The attributes of softness and fastidiousness ascribed to both sexes, stemming from the high standard of living they previously enjoyed, will be undermined by the dire straits in which they find themselves. Then they will lose all traces of civilized behavior, even a sense of humanity.

never venture to set a foot on the ground. The verse describes a woman who formerly lived in luxury, someone accustomed to riding in a sedan chair or carriage so that her feet did not come in contact with the ground. A modern equivalent would be “she never got her hands dirty.”

husband of her bosom. See above under “wife of his bosom” (v. 54).

57. Most difficult to read is the description of the mother eating her dead babies and even the afterbirth. Lamentations 2:20 and 4:10 also depict women as cannibals (see at v. 55 for additional references). The reversal of the woman’s normal role nurturing children aims to illustrate just how gruesome the conditions might become. Likewise, in the account of a famine in Samaria (II Kings 6:24–30), what may look to some readers like the callous eating of children by the women illustrates the severity of the famine, not any fault in the women. Maternal cannibalism is considered the “end of the rope”; it convinces the king that all is lost. (See also Another View, p. 1210.)

⁵⁸If you fail to observe faithfully all the terms of this Teaching that are written in this book, to reverence this honored and awesome Name, your God יְהוָה,⁵⁹ will inflict extraordinary plagues upon you and your offspring, strange and lasting plagues, malignant and chronic diseases—⁶⁰bringing back upon you all the sicknesses of Egypt that you dreaded so, and they shall cling to you.
⁶¹Moreover, יְהוָה will bring upon you all the other diseases and plagues that are not mentioned in this book of Teaching, until you are wiped out.
⁶²You shall be left a scant few, after having been as numerous as the stars in the skies, because you did not heed the command of your God יְהוָה.
⁶³And as יְהוָה once delighted in making you prosperous and many, so will יְהוָה now delight in causing you to perish and in wiping you out; you shall be torn from the land that you are about to enter and possess.

⁶⁴ יְהוָה will scatter you among all the peoples from one end of the earth to the other, and there you shall serve other gods, wood and stone, whom neither you nor your ancestors have experienced. ⁶⁵ Yet even among those nations you shall find no peace, nor shall your foot find a place to rest. יְהוָה will give you there an anguished heart and eyes that pine and a despondent spirit. ⁶⁶ The life you face shall be precarious; you shall be in terror, night and day, with no assurance of survival. ⁶⁷ In the morning you shall say, “If only it were evening!” and in the evening you shall say, “If only it were morning!” — because of what your heart shall dread and your eyes shall see. ⁶⁸ הַיְהוָה will send you back to Egypt in galleys, by a route which I told you you should not see again. There you shall offer yourselves for sale to

58–68. After a warning about diseases that God will bring on Israel, this passage looks beyond the siege to the captivity and survival in a foreign land. Although a scattered remnant will remain, they will live in anguish and dread. Even worse, Israel's his-

58 אָמֵלָא תִשְׁמַר לְעֶשֶׂת אֲתִכְלִידָרִי
הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת הַבְּתוּבִים בְּסֶפֶר הָאָה
לְלִירָאָה אֶת-יְהִישָׁם הַנְּכָבֵד וְהַנְּרוֹא הַזֶּה אָת
יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם:⁵⁹ וְהַפְלָא יְהֹוָה אֶת-מִפְתָּח
וְאֶת מִפְוָת זָרָעַ מִפְוָת גָּדוֹלָה וּנוּאָמָנוֹת
וּחְלִים רְعִים וּנוּאָמָנוֹם:⁶⁰ וְהַשִּׁיב בָּרָא תְּ
כָּל-מִזְוָה מִצְרָיִם אֲשֶׁר יָגַרְתָ מִפְנֵיהם
וּדְבָקוּ בָהּ:⁶¹ גַּם כָּל-חַלֵּל וּכָל-מִמְהָא אֲשֶׁר
לֹא בְּטוּב בְּסֶפֶר הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת יַעֲלֵם יְהֹוָה
עַלְיךָ עַד הַשְׁמִיקָה:⁶² וּנְשָׁאָרְתָם בָּמִתְּ
מַעַט תְּחַת אֲשֶׁר הַיִּתְּמַם בְּכֻכְבֵי הַשְׁמִינִים
לְרַב כִּילָא שְׁמַעַט בְּקוֹל יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם:
וְהֹהֵה בְּאִשְׁר-שָׁש יְהֹוָה עַלְיכֶם לְהִיטִּיב
אֶתְכֶם וְלַהֲרֹבוֹת אֶתְכֶם כִּן יִשְׁישׁ יְהֹוָה
עַלְיכֶם לְהִאֲבִיד אֶתְכֶם וְלַהֲשִׁמיד אֶתְכֶם
וּנְסַחַתֶּם מֵעַל הָאָדָמָה אֲשֶׁר-אַתָּה בָּאֵ
שָׁמָה לְרִשְׁתָה:

שְׁמָה לַרְשָׁתָה:
וְהַפִּיצֶּךָ יְהוָה בְּכָל־הָעָמִים מֵקֶצֶח
הָאָרֶץ וַעֲדִיקָתָה הָאָרֶץ וַעֲבֹדָתָ שָׁם
אֱלֹהִים אֶחָרִים אֲשֶׁר לְאִידְעָת אַתָּה
וְאַבְתִּיר עַז וְאָבִן: ⁶⁴ וּבְגּוֹיִם דָּהַם לֹא
תַּרְגִּיעַ וְלְאִיהִיה מְנוֹחַ לְקַפְּרִגָּלָךְ וּנְתַנְּ
יְהוָה לְךָ שָׁם לְבָרְגָּז וּכְלִיוֹן עִינִים וְדָאָבָן
נְפָשָׁ: ⁶⁶ וְהִיוּ תְּרֵיָק תְּלָאִים לְכָה מְנַגֵּד
וּפְחַדְתֶּל לִילָה וַיּוֹמָם וְלֹא תָאמִין בְּחִיקָר:
בְּבָקָר תָּאָמֶר מִיְּתַנְּעַ שָׂרֵב וּבְעֶרֶב תָּאָמֶר
⁶⁷ מִיְּתַנְּעַ בָּקָר מְפַחֵד לְבָבֶךָ אֲשֶׁר תִּפְחַד
וּמִפְרָאָה עִינִיךְ אֲשֶׁר תַּרְאָה: ⁶⁸ וְהַשִּׁיבֶךָ
יְהוָה מִצְרָיִם בְּאֶנוֹת בְּלָרֶךָ אֲשֶׁר אָמַרְתִּי
לֹכֶד לְאַ-תִּשְׁיַף עוֹד לְרָאתָה וְהַתְּמִבְּרָתָם

tory will be reversed: the plagues that the Egyptians suffered will be visited upon Israel (v. 60); and the once numerous people will be reduced to a scant few (v. 62) as the exodus from Egypt is undone (v. 68).

your enemies as male and female slaves, but none will buy.

⁶⁹These are the terms of the covenant which יְהוָה commanded Moses to conclude with the Israelites in the land of Moab, in addition to the covenant which was made with them at Horeb.

29 Moses summoned all Israel and said to them:

You have seen all that יְהוָה did before your very eyes in the land of Egypt, to Pharaoh and to all his courtiers and to his whole country: ²the wondrous feats that you saw with your own eyes, those prodigious signs and marvels. ³Yet to this day יְהוָה has not given you a mind to understand or eyes to see or ears to hear.

⁴I led you through the wilderness forty years; the clothes on your back did not wear out, nor did

שֵׁם לְאַיִבּוֹק לְעֶבֶרִים וּלְשִׁפְחוֹת וְאַיִן קְנֵה: ס

⁶⁹אֲלֹהָה דָבְרֵי הָבָרִית אֲשֶׁר־צִוָה יְהוָה
אֶת־מְשֻׁחָה לְכָרֶת אֶת־בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בָּאָרֶץ
מוֹאָב מִלְבָד הָבָרִית אֲשֶׁר־בָּרָת אֱתָם
בְּחַרְבָּב: פ

כט וַיָּקֹרֵא מֹשֶׁה אֶל־כָּל־יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיֹּאמֶר
אֶלָּהֶם אַתֶם רְאִיתֶם אֶת בָּל־אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה יְהוָה
לְעַיְנִיכֶם בָּאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם לְפָרָעוֹה וּלְכָל־
עֲבָדָיו וּלְכָל־אָרְצָו: ²הַמִּסּוֹת הַגְּדוּלָت אֲשֶׁר
רָאִי עִינֵיכֶם הָאֶתֶת וְהַמִּפְתָּחִים הַגְּדוּלִים
הָהֶם: ³וּלְאַנְתֶּן יְהוָה לְכֶם לְבָדַעַת
וְעַיְנֵים לְרֹאֹות וְאַזְנֵים לְשִׁמְעַע עַד הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה:

⁴וְאוֹלֵךְ אֶתֶכֶם אַרְבָּעִים שָׁנָה בַּמִּדְבָּר לְאַ- בָּלו שְׁלֹמָמִיכֶם מַעֲלִיבֶם וַנְעַלְךְ לְאַ-בָּלְתָה

Concluding Statement to the Covenant (28:69)

Deuteronomy here ties the covenant at Moab to the covenant at Horeb (Sinai). Up until this point, the laws of Deuteronomy 12–26 stood independently. According to 4:13 (and compare 10:4), only the Decalogue was revealed by God at Horeb; according to 4:14, Moses was commissioned at Horeb to provide the additional laws, which he does at Moab, just before the people enter the promised land where these laws will go into effect (Moshe Weinfeld, Deuteronomy 1–11, 1964, p. 205). The Deuteronomic view is that the laws delivered in Moab are now depicted as a supplement to the earlier Sinai covenant.

Commencement of Moses' Last Speech (29:1–8)

According to Deuteronomy, Moses addresses the generation of Israelites who have experienced the exodus and wandering as they near the end of their journey. He reminds them of all that God did for them during the time of the exodus and wandering, which they are now in a better position to appreciate. These divine deeds form the reason why the people should obey the covenant.

3. Yet to this day. Moses announces that although the Israelites experienced these events, they were not able to understand their significance until they now prepare to enter the land, the culmination of and reason for all they have been through. Note, the sandals on your feet;⁵ you had no bread to eat and no wine or other intoxicant to drink—that you might know that I am your God.

⁶When you reached this place, King Sihon of Heshbon and King Og of Bashan came out to engage us in battle, but we defeated them. ⁷We took their land and gave it to the Reubenites, the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh as their heritage. ⁸Therefore observe faithfully all the terms of this covenant, that you may succeed in all that you undertake.

מעל רגלה: ⁵ לחם לא אכלתם וין ושבר לא שתיתם למען תדע כי אני יהוה אל היכם:
 ותבוא אל מקומ הזה ויצא סיכון מלך־חֶשְׁבּוֹן ועוז מלך־הַבָּשָׂן לךראתנו למלוכה ונכמם: ⁷ ונתקח את־ארצם ונתנה לנחלה לרובני ולגדי ולחצוי שבט המנשי: ⁸ ושמרתם את־דברי הברית הזאת ועשיתם אתם למען תשפלו איתם כל־אשר תעשו: פ

however, that the presumed audience may not have been physically present at those earlier historic moments, except perhaps as children.

4. clothes...sandals. [Whereas most of the past events that Moses has recalled thus far in Deuteronomy occurred some 40 years earlier, here Moses uses the pristine condition of the sojourners' clothing to demonstrate God's care in terms visible to the current generation. The rhetorical purpose here and throughout this parashah has been to impress upon the contemporary and future audiences just how generous and faithful God has been, and how and why the Israelites owe allegiance to their God. —Ed.]

5. bread...wine or other intoxicant. These staples of an agricultural society were not available in the wilderness, where the people survived on manna, quail, and water—unnatural foodstuffs divinely provided.

8. terms of this covenant. [Or “the words (divrei) of this covenant.” The parashah concludes as it began, in the sense that it demands gratitude from the Israelites in light of all that God has done for them. It casts the people’s obligation in terms of loyalty to the words of this covenant, that is, the comprehensive program for a just society that cares for all its members and is loyal to its one God. —Ed.]

—Adele Berlin

Another View

PARASHAT KI TAVO CONTRASTS the blessings that reward those who keep the commandments with the curses that punish those who spurn them. Perhaps the most horrifying threat is that enemy invaders will devour the crops and cattle (28:51), causing even “tender” mothers to eat their own children (28:56–57). Here, as elsewhere, Deuteronomy presents a framework that we can fill out from other sources; the obvious intertext in this case is the book of Lamentations. Lamentations 4:5 depicts the upper class—“those who feasted on delicacies . . . those reared in crimson”—reduced to starvation and squalor. This helps us understand that in our parashah, the mother who “would never venture to set a foot on the ground” (28:56) is a member of the privileged elite, wearing the ancient equivalent of “taxi shoes” (those not for walking). One wonders if the adjective “tender” (v. 56) is ironic; not only does this mother eat her children, but according to Lamentations 4:10, she boils them first. These biblical passages remind us that enemies can reduce us to desperate measures and diminish us morally, causing us to perform formerly unimaginable acts in order to survive. Yet not all women eat their babies, even when in truly dire straits. How many actual mothers in Nazi concentration camps risked their own lives to preserve their children?

Who are the enemies that the curses of this parashah refer to? Deuteronomy blames the Israelites themselves: the enemy invasion and economic collapse are depicted as the self-induced consequences of failing to keep the commandments (28:15). People on the brink of death from starvation can face choices beyond their worst nightmares, but a reasoned choice was possible earlier on: the just society represented by Deuteronomy’s laws versus the unjust society reflected by its curses.

Perhaps the most horrifying threat is that mothers will eat their own children.

For Deuteronomy, the measure of a just society is at the margins—the treatment of the stranger, fatherless, and widow (26:12). If a community does not respond to their needs, then it risks creating the very conditions in which, according to Deuteronomy, even the most privileged are bound to suffer. In such circumstances, how will we treat our babies and those in need?

—Diana Lipton

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

Now, if you obey (28:1). The Hebrew construction of this phrase gives double emphasis to the word “obey.”

Midrash Sh'mot Rabbah 7.1 suggests that this apparent repetition refers to the double reward that obedience to God’s commandments in this world, such as synagogue worship and study, will merit in the world-to-come: “Whoever listens to the voice of the Torah in this world will be privileged to listen to the voice of which it is written, ‘The voice of mirth and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride’ (Jeremiah 16:9).” According to this midrash, “Moses said to Israel: ‘Whoever listens to the words of the Torah is exalted in both worlds, so be diligent to listen to the words of the Torah.’”

KI TAVO

Blessed shall you be in the city (28:3). According to Sh'mot Rabbah 7.5, “in the city” refers to rewards for precepts performed in the city—including challah (dough offering; see Numbers 15:18–21), tzitzit (tassels), sukkah, and the kindling of the Sabbath lights. While only men must fulfill tzitzit and sukkah, rabbinic Judaism considered challah and the kindling of Sabbath lights (hadlakat nerot) to be specifically female ritual responsibilities. Together with observance of the laws connected with the niddah (menstruating woman), these three women’s obligations were known in rabbinic parlance by the acronym ChaNaH, which spells the name “Hannah,” alluding to Samuel’s mother—whose supplication to God in I Samuel 2:1–10 is seen as the model of sincere prayer. According to Judith Hauptman, Mishnah P’sachim and its Tosefta both assume women’s knowledge of key home rituals like separating challah or baking matzah. Rather than supervising the women, or assuming the duties themselves, men relied upon women’s expertise in order to retain a state of sinlessness and ritual purity (Women in the Rabbinic Kitchen, forthcoming).

The three women’s obligations were known by the acronym ChaNaH (“Hannah”).

And she who is most tender and dainty among you (28:56). Particularly horrific in this passage is the reference to the woman whose desperate hunger leads her to devour her own children. This image of the loving mother who turns deadly is a staple of folk literature; it appears in the Bible as a symbol of the world turned upside down by war and famine (II Kings 6:25–29; Lamentations 2:20). It also fits with the broader prophetic portrait of the nation as a formerly beautiful and prosperous woman now degraded and suffering (Amos 4:1–3; 5:1–3; Lamentations 1:1).

The Jewish historian Josephus underscores the depth of suffering during the war against Rome in 66–70 C.E. with the story of a wealthy woman of pedigree, Mary the daughter of Eleazar of Bethezuba, who roasts and eats half of her nursing baby: “She proceeded to an act of outrage on nature. Seizing her child, an infant at the breast, ‘Poor babe,’ she cried, ‘amidst war, famine, and sedition, to what end should I preserve you? . . . Come, be food for me, to the rebels an avenging fury, and to the world a tale such as alone is wanting to the calamities of the Jews.’ With these words she slew her son, and then, having roasted the body and devoured half of it, she covered up and stored the remainder. At once the rebels were upon her and, scenting the unholy odor, threatened her with instant death unless she produced what she had prepared. Replying that she had reserved a goodly portion for them also, she disclosed the remnants of her child” (The Jewish War 6.3.4 §§ 205–213). Even the Roman soldiers shrank away in horror from this sight, and the whole city shuddered at the abomination.

The same motifs appear in BT Yoma 38b and Midrash Eichah Rabbah 2.23 in a story about an infant named Doeg ben Joseph: “Every day his mother would measure him by handbreadths and would give his [added] weight in gold to the Temple. And when the enemy prevailed, she slaughtered him and ate him; and concerning her Jeremiah lamented, ‘Shall the women eat their fruit, their new-born babes?’ (Lamentations 2:20). Whereupon the Holy Spirit replied: ‘Shall the priest and prophet be slain in the Sanctuary of יְהוָה?’ (Lamentations 2:20).” For the Rabbis, the horror of the mother’s actions parallels the divine outrage at the murder of Zechariah ben Jehoiada in the Temple, referred to in II Chronicles 24:20–22. Rabbinic attitudes toward women and their bodies are symbolic: the tender mother who cares for her child stands for the world as it ought to be, while the baby-devouring mother shows the world gone mad.

—Claudia Setzer

Contemporary Reflection

THROUGHOUT OUR LIVES, we make numerous transitions and undergo various rites of passage, of both a formal and informal nature, consciously or unconsciously. Frequently these transitions are marked by ceremony and ritual of some kind: a b'rit bat or b'rit milah, a bat mitzvah or bar mitzvah, a mikveh immersion, a wedding. These are solemn moments, both for ourselves and for our closest relatives. Often they are accompanied by self-scrutiny, a vow, and a determination to improve, to “turn over a new leaf.” The same is true of the beginning of each new year; indeed, this is the central theme of our prayers on both Rosh HaShanah and Yom Kippur. It also holds good when we move into a new home, freshly decorated, the walls clean and as yet unmarked by greasy fingers, the windows crystal-clear and gleaming, the empty rooms waiting to be filled with our lives. Parashat Ki Tavo begins with a ceremony that marks the entry into the Land of Israel (26:1–10): as an expression of gratitude, the people are to bring a basket filled with the first fruits of the land’s bounty and to recount the events that led to the long-awaited settlement of the land.

When Benjamin Ze’ev (Theodor) Herzl gave expression to his extraordinary prophetic vision of a Jewish state in both Der Judenstaat (The Jews’ State) and Altneuland (Old-New Land), he described a new community, one in which the land would be developed through science and technology, in which there would be tolerance in all spheres, and which would be organized socially on a cooperative (“mutualist”) basis. The pioneers of the Second Aliyah, motivated by similar lofty ideals, developed precisely this kind of cooperative way of life when they founded the kvutzot and kibbutzim that became a hallmark of the new socialist communities—and eventually of the autonomous State of Israel. The Declaration of Independence drawn up by the founders of the state in 1948 also proclaimed equality of all citizens, irrespective of race, religion, or gender. Fundamental concepts of social justice, many of which are rooted in the precepts of Deuteronomy, ground much of the legislation passed by Israel’s Knesset (Parliament) from its inception. Indeed, Israel was one of the first countries to pass a law stipulating equality between women and men. For most of the first fifty years of its existence, Israel was a welfare state. Underlying this new venture was not only divine promise but also the memory of past suffering, both recent and long gone by. When Herzl had presented his amazing plan to the Rothschild family, requesting their financial help in turning dream into reality, he wrote: “We are talking about a simple old matter—the exodus from Egypt.”

As a people, wherever we are, we have a remarkable and noble mission.

Almost the entire book of Deuteronomy is a reprise, not only of the events of the forty years in the wilderness (which the people Moses is addressing have not witnessed themselves), but also of the commandments first encapsulated in the giving of the Decalogue at Sinai and later elaborated in the long, detailed catalogues of precepts and prohibitions. Now, in Ki Tavo and the passages that follow, the time has come to look toward the entry into the new home, to review the covenant, and to rededicate oneself—individually and as a people—by first acknowledging the fact that God has fulfilled the promise given to our forebears. This is to be immediately followed by an expression of awareness of past suffering—not necessarily one’s own, but that of the collective. Remembrance of things past is an essential part of developing a new identity, beginning a new existence. The formulation of this memory in the First Fruits ceremony, with its reference to the “fugitive” or “wandering Aramean” (26:5), surely stirs within the modern reader recollections of the trials and tribulations of Jews in the Diaspora, which culminated in the unprecedented horrors of the Holocaust. The purpose of these recollections is to stimulate us to behave differently from those who oppressed us—to give to “the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, that they may eat their fill” (26:12).

KI TAVO

Being the favored of God entails duties and responsibilities. Failure to observe is to be cursed; obedience brings blessings, prosperity, fruitfulness. Above all, doing God’s bidding means that Israel will be established as “God’s holy people” (28:9) and will be “the head, not the tail” (28:13). In contrast, the detailed, terrifyingly graphic list of horrors that will be heaped upon the people if they fail to abide by God’s laws ends with perhaps the direst of warnings: to be scattered among all the peoples “from one end of the earth to another” (28:64) and, worst of all, to become slaves once again (28:68).

The message of parashat Ki Tavo applies to us even now, whether we live in Israel or in the Diaspora. To justify Israel’s existence as a Jewish state and homeland, it must forever strive to be a “light unto the nations” and not a state like any other. As a people, wherever we are, we have a remarkable and noble mission—to fulfill God’s precepts, whether they deal with our relationship to the Divine or—more concretely—with our relationships with our fellow human beings, all of whom have been created in the divine image.

—Alice Shalvi

Voices

The Land of the Patriarchs

Hara E. Person

Deuteronomy 26:1–15

In the land of the patriarchs stones leak the dust of dried tears and walls hang heavy with photographs of your ancestors who in each generation picked up and moved again
speaking to their children always in accents.

At dusk on the kibbutz windows open houses begin to breathe once again the night air carries conversations like scent across distances and the sweet-sour smell of the refet seeps into our skin.
You burrow into me
one on either side,
like kittens you curl and unfurl
in this unfamiliar bed,
looking for just the right spot against my arm,
my hip, my chest, my neck.

In the day the white hot air sweeps into the valley,
hanging like a curtain over bushes, trees,
tractors, buildings.
Fans whir and click,
trying to break up the thick heat but the air is too heavy with memory too laden with stories,
and instead it falls with a thud over the houses, wisps of scorching air trying to enter the shuttered windows and curl under the shut doors.

It is a heat that slashes in its angry rage,
that suffocates with its jealous clasp.

The land of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and your father,
a land so rich in layers of history,
so overburdened with purpose and destiny that the very earth crumbles to pieces in your fist
and swirls up in eddies as you run barefoot, your feet slap slap slapping the ground with your newly discovered un-Brooklyn freedom.

Tonight I am your motherland.
For now, you belong here against me entwined around each other,
in the twisted, too-small sheets that wind around your soft bodies as you dig into sleep.
For now I hold you tight and protected safe and rooted in my embrace.

Thankful

Ruth Fainlight

Deuteronomy 26:4–11

Nothing ever happens more than once.
The next time is never like before.
What you thought you learned doesn't apply.
Something is different. And just as real.
For which you might be thankful after all.

KI TAVO

Still Dreaming of Home

Merle Feld

Deuteronomy 26:1–3

And isn't that what nesting is all about, that creative urge when a new baby is on the way, the urge men mock or marvel at—

the drive to make a place protected and pleasing—
we need that bit of fresh paint and calico. As the body prepares for the big day of crowning and pushing, the heart and the hands prepare a home, full of hope that this time around the human family

will not fail.

The Wild Heart

Robin Becker

Deuteronomy 28

Taught, like all Jewish kids, to curse a boast, or any declaration of good luck, I refuse!
I bless the day we ran smack into each other on Sixth Avenue. I'll let you toi, toi, toi with my old bubbe. OK, I can't—it's true—stop thinking I'll pay for this:
renounce the gods of joy, betray my principles,
recant.

Oh darling, I'd like to surrender my one-wrong-move philosophy, the slippery slope,
the fears of unwed motherhood, botulism, poor expense records, impractical outer garments.

Today I put my faith in our natural gifts—good humor, good friends, the nick-of-time—in your wild heart that inclines toward mine.

Requests

Esther Raab (transl. Catherine Shaw and Moshe Dor)

Deuteronomy 28:1–14

I want beautiful trees—
and not wars!
and a coat of many colors and not uniforms
for all my dear ones;
I want rain
and green furrows and houses full of babies;
a calendar of alliances
and a “brotherhood plaza” and lightning and thunder—
in the sky;
and bountiful rains
on earth
and a pink crocus
in the ravines;
and pinecones
on a scented bed of pine needles—
and bulbul birds rejoicing among leafy orchards and sails of peace
on the Mediterranean;
and white chrysanthemums
in the parks, their fall maneuvers;
and red balls rolling along the paths
and the sleeves
of babies' garments signaling tranquility on clotheslines.

Teach Me, O God, a Blessing

Lea Goldberg (transl. Pnina Peli)

Deuteronomy 28:1–14

Teach me, O God, a blessing, a prayer
On the mystery of a withered leaf
On ripened fruit so fair,
On the freedom to see, to sense,
To breathe, to know, to hope, to despair.

Teach my lips a blessing, a hymn of praise,
As each morning and night
You renew Your days,
Lest my day be as the one before
Lest routine set my ways.

Prayers I

Kadya Molodowsky (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

Deuteronomy 28

Don't let me fall
Like a stone that drops on the hard ground.
And don't let my hands become dry
As the twigs of a tree
When the wind beats down the last leaves.
And when the storm rips dust from the earth
Angry and howling,
Don't let me become the last fly
Trembling terrified on a windowpane.
Don't let me fall.
I have so much prayer,
But, as a blade of Your grass in a distant, wild field
Loses a seed in the lap of the earth
And dies away,
Sow in me Your living breath,
As You sow a seed in the earth.

Prayer for my Son

Elaine Feinstein

Deuteronomy 28:15–68

Most things I worry over never happen,
but this, disguised in embarrassment, turned risky in a day. Two years ago,
from the furthest edge of a blue sky,
an illness snatched his livelihood away.

Justice, Lord? How is this just? I muttered, as if every generation must learn the lesson again: there is no special privilege protecting us.
He lay across his futon, white and thin

—the QEH sold out, his dep chosen—in double torment. No one could comfort him.
I would have kissed the feet of any holy man—as the Shumanite woman did—to have the Lord relent.

But what since the miracle of his recovery?
Petty angers, like a girlish sulk. Forgive me such ingratitude. Let him only live with grace, unthreatened, on the sound of his flute
—and I'll stop clamouring for sweeter fruit.

נִצָּבִים ◆ Nitzavim

DEUTERONOMY 29:9–30:20

Covenantal Choices

PARASHAT NITZAVIM (“stand”) contains the bulk of Moses’ third and final speech in the book of Deuteronomy, his last exhortation in Moab to observe the covenant. In this address, which began at the end of the previous parashah (29:1–8), Moses foreshadows the full sequence of iniquity, judgment, repentance, and deliverance that he predicts Israel will experience. He concludes his words with an impassioned plea to his audience to “choose life” (30:19) by adhering to the torah (Teaching), a choice that will guarantee peace and prosperity.

Each of the three units of parashat Nitzavim brings out its two governing themes—presence versus absence, and exposure versus concealment. The first part of the parashah (29:9–28) emphasizes the inclusion of every single member of the community in the covenant and their participation in the covenant ceremony. Women and men, officials and laborers, those standing before Moses in Moab and future generations—all commit themselves to uphold the terms of the covenant. This commitment leads to a warning against secret disobedient behavior, followed by a depiction of the fierce judgment God will unleash upon the land and the people if they turn away from God.

The second part of the parashah (30:1–10) opens with a promise of restoration once the people repent. Repeatedly, here and in the subsequent unit, Moses calls upon the people to love God with all their hearts and souls (vv. 6, 16, 20). This formulaic language is familiar from elsewhere in Deuteronomy (particularly 6:5), reminding the people that they must fulfill their part of the covenant through their fierce loyalty to God and God’s teachings.

The third part of the parashah (30:11–20) returns to the subject of the covenant and the contrast between the overt and the covert. Moses assures the people that the “Instruction”

A hallmark of this parashah is its mention of women as present at the covenant ceremony.

(mitzvah) is not hidden or beyond reach, but is close and obtainable (30:11–14). He stresses that God gives each individual and the entire people two clear choices: “life and prosperity, death and adversity” (30:15). With heaven and earth as witnesses to the covenant, Moses implores the people to choose life instead of death, blessing instead of curse (v. 19).

One of the hallmarks of this parashah is the inclusion of women in the list of social groups participating in the covenant ceremony. The explicit mention of women in 29:10 leaves no doubt that women are part of the people obliged to follow God’s covenant. Nevertheless, their position in the list designates their lower status in ancient Israelite society (see at 29:9–10). The parashah refers to women again in 29:17 as part of a list of possible sinners. Thus, the text affirms that women and men alike, not only those preparing to enter the Promised Land but also the generations to follow, have the potential either to break or to maintain the covenant: it is “in your mouth and in your heart, to observe it” (30:14).

—Dalit Rom-Shiloni

Outline

I. THE COVENANT CEREMONY (29:9–28)

- A. Participation in the ceremony and commitment to the covenant (vv. 9–14)
- B. Concealed offense and overt judgment (vv. 15–20)
- C. Lesson learned from the destruction (vv. 21–27)
- D. Concealed and overt acts (v. 28)

II. REPENTANCE AND RESTORATION FROM EXILE (30:1–10)

III. THE CHOICE

Life or Death, Blessing or Curse (30:11–20)

- A. Encouragement that this instruction is not beyond reach (vv. 11–14)
- B. Charge: choose life and prosperity versus death and adversity (vv. 15–20)

29:9

You stand this day, all of you, before your God יְהוָה—you tribal heads, you elders, and you

כט וְאַתֶּם נֹצֶבִים הַיּוֹם בְּלִכְמֵם לִפְנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם רְאשֵׁיכֶם שְׁבָטֵיכֶם זָקְנֵיכֶם

The Covenant Ceremony (29:9–28)

This unit emphasizes the full participation of all the people—women and men from all segments of the community—in the ceremony that establishes the covenant between God and Israel.

PARTICIPATION IN THE CEREMONY AND COMMITMENT TO THE COVENANT (29:9–14)

The two phrases avar bi-vrit (entered into a covenant; v. 11) and karat b'rit (made a covenant; v. 13) designate ratifying a covenant by accepting its terms. In covenant rituals, k-r-t (whose basic meaning is “to cut”) refers to the cutting of animals, and e-b-r (whose basic meaning is “to cross over”) signifies the passing between the parts of the animal (see at Genesis 15:10; Jeremiah 34:18–19). Although this part of the parashah does not describe the covenant celebration, other biblical texts and ancient Near Eastern evidence indicate that sacrificial offerings were part of the acceptance of a covenant (see Genesis 31:44–54; Exodus 24:1–8; Deuteronomy 27:1–8). Furthermore, this section accentuates three conceptual angles of the covenant: its clear hierarchy of the parties, in that it is the people who “cross over” into God’s covenant (v. 11); its content (v. 12); and the people’s commitment to it, whether present in the ceremony or even absent from it (v. 14).

9–10. The inclusiveness described here is a unique feature of the Moab covenant. Compare the general term “the people” used to characterize the participation in the Sinai covenant (Exodus 19:9–13; 24:3, 7). Whereas the text in Exodus raises the question of whether or not women stood at Sinai (see parashat Yitro, pp. 407–424), here there is no doubt that both women and men are the recipients of God’s teachings. The detailed list in this passage mentions various groups according to their social status. Verse 9 opens with leaders and concludes with “all the men of Israel”; v. 10 adds those dependent on the aforementioned men as heads of the household: children, women, and foreign workers. [While in some senses householders’ senior wives were dependent, in other senses their status was complementary to that of their spouses and higher than that of other male members of the household. See further “Women in Ancient Israel—An Overview,” p. xli. —Ed.]

9. You stand... before יְהוָה. This phrase designates one’s presence in front of an authority (as in Exodus 7:15; 34:2).

this day. The first part of Moses’ speech (29:1–8, at the end of parashat Ki Tavo) looked back on key events in the past and the lessons to learn from

- This articulation of free will has been central to Jewish self-understanding for centuries.

ANOTHER VIEW ► I228

- The Torah belongs to every one of us, not just to experts—or to men alone.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► I230

- All future generations of Israel, including all future converts, were at Sinai.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► I228

- I used to mumble many words in the prayer-book... until dear Clara was felled by a stroke.

VOICES ► I232

officials, all the men of Israel,¹⁰ you children, you women, even the stranger within your camp, from woodchopper to water drawer—¹¹to enter into the covenant of your God, יְהוָה, which your God is concluding with you this day, with its sanctions;¹² in order to establish you this day as God's people and in order to be your God, as promised you and as sworn to your fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.¹³ I make this covenant, with its sanctions, not with you alone,¹⁴ but both with those who are standing here with us this day before our God יְהוָה and with those who are not with us here this day.

¹⁵ Well you know that we dwelt in the land of

וּשְׁתַּרְיכֶם כֹּל אִישׁ יִשְׂרָאֵל: ¹⁰ טַפְכֶם נְשִׁיכֶם וּגְרָךְ אֲשֶׁר בְּקָרְבָ מְחֻנִיךְ מְחוּטָב עַצְיךְ עַד שָׁבֵב מִימִיךְ: ¹¹ לְעַבְרָךְ בְּבִרְית יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךְ בְּרִית עַמְךְ הַיּוֹם: ¹² לְמַעַן הַקִּים־אֶת־אָתֶךְ הַיּוֹם | לֹא לְעַם וְהַוָּא יְהִי־לְלֹא לְאֶלְהִים בְּאֲשֶׁר דְּבָרֵלָךְ וּבְאֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַע לְאַבְתָּיךְ לְאֶבְרָהָם לִיצְחָק וּלְיַעֲקֹב: ¹³ וְלֹא אֶתְכֶם לְבָדְכֶם אָנֹכִי כָּרְתָ אֶת־הַבְּרִית הַזֹּאת וְאֶת־יְהָאָתָה הַזֹּאת: ¹⁴ בַּי אֶת־אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁנוּ פֵה עָמְנוּ עַמְךְ הַיּוֹם לְפָנֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ וְאֶת אֲשֶׁר אִינָנוּ בֵה עָמְנוּ הַיּוֹם: ¹⁵ כִּי־אַתֶּם יִדְעָתֶם אֶת אֲשֶׁר־יִשְׁבְנוּ בָּאָרֶץ

them; now the focus shifts to the present moment and even to the future. The leitmotif “this day” (here and in v. 14) functions as a message to the double audience of Deuteronomy, namely, the implicit audience at the time of Moses and the audience contemporary with the author(s) of the book of Deuteronomy, centuries later. The ceremony validates the covenant’s power to obligate the descendants to the treaty and to abide by its stipulations.

you tribal heads. [The text identifies five of the subgroups listed in vv. 9–10 (tribal heads, elders, officials, children, women) via a second-person plural masculine suffix. In order to convey the understanding that each of these subgroups is part of the larger collective whom Moses addresses in this passage, the present translation has rendered the suffix “your” as “you.” —Ed.]

10. you children, you women. Within the groups enumerated in this verse, “children” appear prior to “women” (as in Numbers 32:26; but compare the opposite order in Deuteronomy 3:19; 20:14; 31:12). Women are likewise mentioned last in the common triplet of socially marginal people: stranger, fatherless, widow (see 14:29; 27:19).

stranger. See at 10:19.

from woodchopper to water drawer. These two types of laborers exemplify specific tasks performed by resident non-Israelites (the “stranger” included in the covenant) (see Joshua 9:21, 23, 27).

12. as promised you and as sworn to your fathers. Verse 12 alludes to two separate covenant traditions. The first recalls the promise originally made to the Israelites in Egypt (Exodus 6:7; also Leviticus 26:12); the second refers to the covenant with Abraham (Genesis 17:7–8). The two traditions coalesce here as they each emphasize the institution of a mutual relationship between God and Israel. (On avot translated here as “fathers” instead of “ancestors” as in 30:9, see at 4:31.)

14. those who are not with us here this day. That is, future generations. Binding the descendants to the covenant exemplifies its dynamic force, as it expects an everlasting renewal of this fundamental covenant.

CONCEALED OFFENSE AND OVERT JUDGMENT (29:15–20)

Addressing the people in general, Moses raises another possible transgression of the covenant. He cautions the Israelites that individuals (“some man

Egypt and that we passed through the midst of various other nations;¹⁶ and you have seen the detestable things and the fetishes of wood and stone, silver and gold, that they keep.¹⁷ Perchance there is among you some man or woman, or some clan or tribe, whose heart is even now turning away from our God יְהוָה to go and worship the gods of those nations—perchance there is among you a stock sprouting poison weed and wormwood.¹⁸ When hearing the words of these sanctions, such a one may imagine a special immunity, thinking,

מִצְרִים וְאֵת אֲשֶׁר־עָבֹרָנוּ בַּקָּרְבָּן הַגּוֹיִם
אֲשֶׁר עָבְרָתֶם: ¹⁶ וַתַּرְאֹ אֶת־שְׂקוֹצֵי הָעָם
וְאֵת גָּלְלֵי הָעָם עַז וְאֶבֶן כֶּסֶף וְזָהָב אֲשֶׁר
עַמּוּדָם: ¹⁷ פָּנִיתְשׁ בְּכֶם אִישׁ אֲוֹדָשָׁה אָוּ
מִשְׁפָּחָה אֲוֹדָשָׁט אֲשֶׁר לְבָבוֹ פָּנָה הַיּוֹם
מִעַם יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ לְלִכְתָּה לְעַבְדָּת אֶת־
אֱלֹהֵי הַגּוֹיִם הַהֵם פָּנִיתְשׁ בְּכֶם שָׁרֵשׁ פְּרֵה
רָאשׁ וְלֻעָה: ¹⁸ וְהִיא בְּשָׁמְעוֹ אֶת־דְּבָרֵי
הָאֱלֹהָה הַזֹּאת וְהַתְּבִרֵךְ בְּלִבְבוֹ לְאָמֵר or woman") or larger groups ("clan or tribe") might be tempted to worship other gods. While the offense is concealed, the divine wrath that follows as punishment is apparent and known.

In contrast to Deuteronomy 13 and 17:2–7, which concern cases where the community's fortune may be determined by the misconduct of but a few individuals, the present section focuses on a different aspect of the situation: singling out the persons who sin and threatening them with total annihilation. Deuteronomy's notion of communal responsibility and retribution still governs this passage; but this section also emphasizes the notion that the community is formed from its many individuals, each of whom is personally accountable for her or his own actions.

15–16. Idolatry is usually connected to Canaan and Canaanite influences. Yet this passage mentions worshipping other gods as a temptation to which the people were exposed earlier, in Egypt and on the journey to the Land (mostly by the nations of Transjordan, such as the Moabite women in Numbers 25:1–5). Nevertheless, these verses do not suggest that Israel as a nation was actually carried away to perform idolatrous practices prior to the settlement in the Land (compare the explicit accusations in Ezekiel 20:5–9; Joshua 24:14; Numbers 25:1–3).

17. man or woman. As in 17:2, 5, the text acknowledges the possibility that either women or men might lead the people astray. Cozbi and the whose heart is even now turning away from our God יְהוָה. In contrast to Deuteronomy 13 and 17:2–7, which emphasize visible transgressions, our parashah focuses on the hidden thought and intention and on following the willful or the stiffened heart (bishrirut lev). The heart, which in Deuteronomy is often the innermost organ of intellectual acknowledgment and piety, serves frequently in the Bible as the secret place for self-reflection (as in Ecclesiastes 2:1, 15), personal or political evil-intent (as in Genesis 27:41; I Kings 12:26), or even for theologically illegitimate thoughts (as in 8:17; 9:4; Isaiah 14:13; 47:10). This last context seems to be the background of our passage's repeated usage of the heart as the organ where secret offense against God is concealed.

Moabites in Numbers 25:1–18 illustrate this threat with regard to women.

poison weed and wormwood. These two plants appear together elsewhere in the Bible, where the poisonous nature of the one and the sharp bitterness of the other serve as metaphors to illustrate various points: social injustice (Hosea 10:4; Amos 5:7; 6:12); punishment for disobedience, particularly in worshipping other gods (Jeremiah 8:14; 9:14); and memories of distress and misery (Lamentations 3:19). Hence, this context is unique, as the plants express the danger that the sinner may cause to those around them.

"I shall be safe, though I follow my own willful heart"—to the utter ruin of moist and dry alike.¹⁹ יְהוָה will never forgive such individuals. Rather, יְהוָה's anger and passion will rage against them, till every sanction recorded in this book comes down upon them, and יְהוָה blots out their name from under heaven.

²⁰[As for such a clan or tribe,] יְהוָה will single it out from all the tribes of Israel for misfortune, in accordance with all the sanctions of the covenant recorded in this book of Teaching.²¹ And later generations will ask—the children who succeed you, and foreigners who come from distant lands and see the plagues and diseases that has inflicted upon that land,²² all its soil devastated by sulfur and salt, beyond sowing and producing, no grass growing in it, just like the upheaval of Sodom and Gomorrah, שָׁלוֹם יְהוָה־לֵי בַּשְׁרָרוֹת לְבִי אֶל־לִמְעֵן סְפּוֹת הָרֻחָה אֲתִ־הָצְמָאָה: ¹⁹ לֹא־יָאֵבֶת יְהוָה סְלַחْ לֹא בַּי אָז יַעֲשֵׂן אָפִי־יְהוָה וּקְנַאתָ בְּאִישׁ הַהְוָא וּרְבָצָה בּוֹ בְּלִדְתָּאָלָה הַכְּתוּבָה בְּסֶפֶר הָזָה וּמִתָּה יְהוָה אֲתִ־שְׁמָנוֹ מִתְחַת הַשָּׁמַיִם:

²⁰ וְהַבְדִילוּ יְהוָה לְרֹעה מִכֶּל שְׁבָטוֹ יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּכָל אֶלְוֹת הַבְּרִית הַכְּתוּבָה בְּסֶפֶר הַתּוֹרָה הָזָה: ²¹ וְאָמַר הַדּוֹר הַאַחֲרוֹן בְּנֵיכֶל אֲשֶׁר יַקְוֹמוּ מַאֲחִירָבִים וּוּנְגַבִּרִים אֲשֶׁר יַבָּא מִאָרֶץ רְחוּקָה וּרְאוֹ אֲתִ־מִפּוֹת הָאָרֶץ הַהְוָא וְאֲתִ־תְּחַלֵּאָה אֲשֶׁר־חִלְדָה יְהוָה בָּה: ²² גַּפְרִית וּמְלֹח שְׁרִיפה בְּלָא־צָמֵח וְלֹא תְּצִמַּח וְלֹא־יַעֲלֵה בָה בְּלָעֵשֶׂב בְּמַהְפַכָּת סְדָם וּעֲמֹדוֹת

18. to the utter ruin of moist and dry alike. This idiom is puzzling. It seems to express the inevitable destructive consequences to the righteous as well as to the sinner.

19–20. This passage describes the divine wrath and judgment on the transgressor as an implementation of the covenant's sanctions written in the book of Teaching (torah) (see 28:58). The language is in the third-person singular, thus suggesting the possibility of individual retribution (see at vv. 15–20 above), a concept that existed alongside the notion of collective retribution. While the entire community suffers as a result of the sins of the few, individual offenders still pay for their misdeeds, for they receive special punishments.

LESSONS LEARNED FROM THE DESTRUCTION (29:21–27)

In a sharp change, the text moves from the individual judgment for a concealed sin (29:15–20) to the apparent destruction of both the land and people. In contrast to vv. 19–20, vv. 21–27 present a different concept of retribution: collective judgment and punishment for disobedience that affects even the land's ecological systems. The devastation becomes a lesson for later Israelite generations and foreigners who ask why God decimated the land (vv. 23–27). Destruction and exile are considered justifiable actions that God executes in reaction to Israel's sins. This perspective may reflect Israel and Judah's historical experience, like that of the entire region west of the Euphrates River, when they faced the aggressive Neo-Assyrian Empire (in the 9th–7th centuries, resulting in the destruction of the northern kingdom of Israel in 722 B.C.E.) and then the Neo-Babylonian regime (in the late 7th–6th centuries, resulting in the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.E.).

22. sulfur and salt...just like the upheaval of Sodom and Gomorrah. God rained sulfurous fire over Sodom and Gomorrah (Genesis 19:24). The well-remembered tradition of the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah (Genesis 18–19) is adapted here to describe the ecological consequences of destruction. The text posits no human enemy or human warfare; instead God, as divine Warrior, acts with great might against God's own people and land. This sort

Admah and Zeboiim, which יְהוָה overthrew in fierce anger—²³all nations will ask, “Why did יְהוָה do thus to this land? Wherefore that awful wrath?”

²⁴They will be told, “Because they forsook the covenant that יְהוָה, God of their ancestors, made with them upon freeing them from the land of Egypt; ²⁵they turned to the service of other gods and worshiped them, gods whom they had not experienced and whom [God] had not allotted to them. ²⁶So יְהוָה was incensed at that land and brought upon it all the curses recorded in this book. ²⁷uprooted them from their soil in anger, fury, and great wrath, and cast them into another land, as is still the case.”

אַרְמָה וְצִבְיָם וְצִבְיָם אֲשֶׁר הַפְּקָדָה יְהוָה
בְּאֶפְוֹ וּבְחַמְתּוֹ: ²³ וְאָמָרְלָ פֶּלְ-הָגּוֹם עַל-
מֵה עָשָׂה יְהוָה כִּכְה לְאֶרְץ הַזֹּאת מֵהַחֲרִי
הַאֲפָק הַגָּדוֹל הַזֶּה: ²⁴ וְאָמָרְלָ עַל אֲשֶׁר עָזָבוּ
אַתְ-בְּרִית יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵי אֲבֹתֶם אֲשֶׁר בְּרָת
עָמָם בְּהַזְכִּיאָו אַתֶּם מִארְצָם מִצְרָיִם:
²⁵ וַיַּלְבֹּד וַיַּעֲבֹד אֱלֹהִים אֶחָדים וַיַּשְׁתַּחַוו
לָהֶם אֱלֹהִים אֲשֶׁר לֹא-יִדְעּוּם וְלֹא-חֲלַק
לָהֶם: ²⁶ וַיַּחֲרִיא אֱלֹהִים יְהוָה בְּאָרֶץ הַהוּא
לְהַבְּיאָ עַלְיָה אַתְ-בְּלִ-הַקְלָלָה הַבְּתוּבָה
בְּסִפְר הַזֶּה: ²⁷ וַיַּתְשִׁם יְהוָה מַעַל אַרְמָתָם
בְּאָפָק וּבְחַמְתָּה וּבְקָצֶף גָּדוֹל וַיַּשְׁלַבְנָם אֶל-אָרֶץ אֶחָדרָת בַּיּוֹם הַזֶּה:

of ecological disaster stands in contrast to the divine oath after the deluge: “Never again will I bring doom upon the world on account of what people do” (Genesis 8:21).

25. gods whom they had not experienced. In contrast to relying on gods the people had not experienced, Deuteronomy repeatedly calls attention to the fact that the Israelites witnessed with their own eyes the many marvelous deeds that God performed on their behalf (for instance, 7:19; 11:7).

and whom [God] had not allotted to them. The concept that God allocated other gods for the foreign nations to worship implies that Israel was not fully monotheistic at this stage. The statement reflects a belief called monolatry, which involves the allegiance to one god, but the recognition of the existence of other deities (see also at 4:19–20). Deuteronomy repeatedly makes the point that because Israel was chosen as God’s people, they are forbidden from worshiping any other gods (as in 4:15–20; 5:7–9).

27. יְהוָה uprooted them from their soil in anger. This verse applies agricultural language to the concept of exile, which is treated as another divine action resulting from God’s wrath.

and cast them. Heb. vayashlicheim. Torah scribes write this verb with an enlarged letter lamed in the middle. While later interpreters have sought to derive meaning from this practice, the reason for this custom is unknown. (A midrashic explanation is that the large lamed designates the beginning of a new word, which leads one to read these letters with a different punctuation: v’yesh lachem, meaning, “But you [will] have [God in another land]” [David Zvi Hoffman, Deuteronomy, 1961, p. 516]. This midrashic reading provides a significant ideological comment for those in exile, reassuring them of God’s presence among the people in a foreign land; compare Ezekiel 11:16.)

“as is still the case.” This phrase reveals the possible time of authorship of this section. Since the people presently experience exile (as in 4:29–31; 30:1–10), this suggests the text was written during the Babylonian exile. Another explanation is that these words were secondarily introduced into an earlier original pre-exilic passage that was later updated.

²⁸Concealed acts concern our God יְהוָה; but with overt acts, it is for us and our children ever to apply all the provisions of this Teaching.

30 When all these things befall you—the blessing and the curse that I have set before you—and you take them to heart amidst the various nations to which your God יְהוָה has banished

²⁸ הַבְּסִתְרָתֶךָ לְיְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ וְהַגְּלָתֶךָ לְנֶזֶם וְלִבְנֵיֶךָ עַד-עוֹלָם לְעֵשֹׂות אֶת-כָּל-דְּבָרֵינוּ הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת:

ל וְהִיא קִיְּבָאוּ עַלְיכֶם כָּל-הַדְּבָרִים הָאֱלֹהִים הַבָּרְכָה וְהַקְּלָלָה אֲשֶׁר נִתְּנָה לְפָנֶיךָ וְהַשְׁבָּתָה אֶל-לִבְנֶיךָ בְּכָל-הַגּוֹיִם אֲשֶׁר חִקְּעָה יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם שָׁמָה:

CONCEALED AND OVERT ACTS (29:28)

While this one enigmatic verse has accrued various interpretations over time, its possible plain meaning derives from context: the continuing opposition between the concealed and the overt in this parashah. One reading is that these are Moses' concluding words of assurance to the people. "Concealed acts" refer to sins committed by the individual in secret, thus only God can reveal and judge (following vv. 15–20), whereas "overt acts" refer to public sins of a group or of the whole collective, which human judges must punish according to "this Teaching" (hatorah hazot). Hence, the threat of destruction (vv. 21–27) stands as a punishment only if the people neglect their communal responsibility to punish individual sinners in order to save the innocent majority (so the medieval commentators Rashi and Nachmanides).

Another way to interpret this verse is to understand the concealed and the overt as time references. Hence, "concealed acts" are future events about which only God knows, such as the threatened destruction and exile (29:21–27) or the promised consolation and restoration (30:1–10). "Overt acts" are what God had revealed to the people concerning past divine deeds and the practical duties in God's Teaching (so Samuel R. Driver, Deuteronomy, 1902, p. 328, and others).

28. it is for us and our children. Traditionally these two Hebrew words (lanu ulvaneinu) and the first letter following are written with extraordinary dots (n'kudot) over the letters, a scribal phenomenon that occurs in fifteen places throughout the Bible. In ancient manuscripts, such as the Qumran scrolls as well as Greek and Roman texts, dotted letters or words signify that they should be erased and clearly not pronounced. However, these biblical instances were exegetically reconsidered and the dots gained diverse symbolic values.

Repentance and Restoration from Exile (30:1–10)

Following the blessings and curses in Deuteronomy 28, as well as the description of destruction and exile in 29:21–27, 30:1–10 functions to transition from judgment to salvation. Moses instructs the people on these future circumstances of national existence in exile, when reinstitution of the relationship with God will be a major issue. The theme of repentance stands out as a central topic, reflected in the fact that the verbal root shuv ("to turn or return") repeats as a key word in these verses. The sequence is clear: the initiative to repent should come from the people in exile, as individuals, and it will result in God's restoration of the people (vv. 2–3).

The root shuv holds several different meanings in its eight occurrences in this unit, all of which exemplify an internal process of change and transformation: return from the bad ways, regret, leaving the evil deeds behind, changing the way of life, and finally approaching God in a close relationship. The intertwining occurrences of the root shuv

you,² and you return to your God, יְהוָה, and you and your children heed God's command with all your heart and soul, just as I enjoin upon you this day,³ then your God יְהוָה will restore your fortunes and take you back in love. [God] will bring you together again from all the peoples where your God יְהוָה has scattered you.⁴ Even if your outcasts are at the ends of the world, from there your God יְהוָה will gather you, from there [God] will fetch you.⁵ And your God יְהוָה will bring you to the land that your fathers possessed, and you shall possess it; and [God] will make you more prosperous and more numerous than your ancestors.

⁶Then your God יְהוָה will open up your heart and the hearts of your offspring—to love your God יְהוָה with all your heart and soul, in order that you may live.⁷Your God יְהוָה will inflict all those curses upon the enemies and foes who persecuted you.⁸You, however, will again heed and obey all the divine commandments that I enjoin upon you this day.⁹And your God יְהוָה will grant you abounding prosperity in all your undertakings, in your issue from the womb, your offspring from the cattle, and your produce from the soil. For יְהוָה will again delight in your well-being, as in that of your

² וַיִּשְׁבֶּתْ עַד־יְהוָה אֶל־לְבָבֵךְ וְשָׁמֹעַת בְּקָלוֹ
כִּכְלַל־לְבָבֶךְ וּכִכְלַל־נְפָשָׁךְ: ³ וַיָּשֶׁב יְהוָה
אֶל־לְבָבְךָ אֶת־שְׁבוּתֶךָ וְרַחֲמָךְ וְשָׁב וּקְבָצֶךָ
מִכְלַל־הָעוּמִים אֲשֶׁר הִפִּיצָּה יְהוָה אֶל־לְבָבֶךָ
שָׁמֹה: ⁴ אִם־יְהוָה נִרְחַק בְּקָצָה הַשָּׁמַיִם
מִשְׁם יִקְבְּצֶךָ יְהוָה אֶל־לְבָבֶךָ וּמִשְׁם יִקְחַק:
⁵ וְהַבִּיאָךְ יְהוָה אֶל־לְבָבֶךָ אֶל־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־
יְרַשְׁׁו אֶבֶתְּךָ וַיַּרְשַׁתָּה וַיַּחֲטַבְתָּה וַיַּרְבֶּתָ מַאֲבָתָתְךָ:

⁶ וּמְלֵי יְהוָה אֶל־לְבָבֶךָ אֶת־לְבָבֶךָ וְאֶת־לְבָבֶךָ
וּרְעֵא לְאַהֲבָה אֶת־יְהוָה אֶל־לְבָבֶךָ בְּכָל־
לְבָבֶךָ וּבְכָל־נְפָשָׁךָ לְמַעַן חִיקָּךְ: ⁷ וּנְתַנְתֵּן
יְהוָה אֶל־לְבָבֶךָ אֶת כָּל־הָאֱלֹות הָאֶלְהָה עַל־
אַיִבָּיךְ וּעַל־שְׂנָאָיךְ אֲשֶׁר רְצָפָךְ: ⁸ וְאַתָּה
תָשׁׁוּב וְשָׁמֹעַת בְּקוֹל יְהוָה וְעַשְׁיוֹת אֶת־כָּל־
מִצְוֹתָיו אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מִצְוֹק הַיּוֹם: ⁹ וְהַוִּירֶךְ
יְהוָה אֶל־לְבָבֶךָ בְּכָל־מִعְשָׁה יָרַק בְּפָרֵי בְּטֻנָּךְ
וּבְפָרֵי בְּהַמְתָּךְ וּבְפָרֵי אֲדָמָתָךְ לְתָבָה בַּיִן יְשֻׁב יְהוָה לְזֹהַר לְשֹׁוֹשׁ עַל־יָדֶךָ לְטוֹב בְּאָשָׁר־שָׁשָׁ emphasize the reciprocal nature of the God–human relationship. First, those in exile will “take to heart” (vahashivota; literally, “your heart shall turn back”) what has happened (v. 1), return (v’shavta) to God (v. 2), and obey God’s teachings. In response, God will restore the people’s fortune (v’shav . . . et sh’vutcha; literally, “return a return”) and turn back (v’shav) to gather them to their land (v. 3). The people will again heed (tashuv v’shamata; literally, “turn back and heed”) and be obedient to God (v. 8). As a result, God will again delight (yashuv . . . lasus; literally, “turn back and delight”) in the people’s well-being (v. 9), once they return (tashuv) to God with all their hearts and souls (v. 10).

6. open up your heart. Literally, “circumcise your heart.” The metaphor of the circumcised heart exemplifies the profound internal transformation of each and every person. God needs to act upon the heart, where recognition of the sin develops (v. 2) and where full obedience and devotion reside (vv. 3, 10), in a circumcision-like procedure to ensure the permanency of this change. Deuteronomy previously mentioned circumcision of the heart (“cut away, therefore, the thickening about your hearts,” 10:16) in its demand that the people not close their hearts and stiffen their necks. In contrast, the present circumcision of the heart is a divine action of grace (so Nachmanides), or maybe of compulsion (so according to the prophet Ezekiel, 11:19–20; 36:26–28).

9. your issue from the womb. See at 7:13; 28:4.

ancestors,¹⁰ since you will be heeding your God יְהוָה and keeping the divine commandments and laws that are recorded in this book of the Teaching—once you return to your God יְהוָה with all your heart and soul.

¹¹Surely, this Instruction which I enjoin upon you this day is not too baffling for you, nor is it beyond reach.¹²It is not in the heavens, that you should say, “Who among us can go up to the heavens and get it for us and impart it to us, that we may observe it?”¹³Neither is it beyond the sea, that you should say, “Who among us can cross to the other side of the sea and get it for us and impart it to us, that we may observe it?”¹⁴No, the thing is very close to you, in your mouth and in your heart, to observe it.

עַל־אֲבָתִיךְ: ¹⁰ כִּי תִשְׁמַע בְּקוֹל יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךְ לְשִׁמְרֹ מִצְוֹתָיו וְחַקְתָּיו הַפְּתֻוחָה בְּסֶפֶר הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת כִּי תִשְׁוֹב אֶל־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיךְ בְּכָל־לְבָבֶךְ וּבְכָל־נֶפֶשֶׁךְ: ס

כִּי הַמִּצְוָה הַזֹּאת אֲשֶׁר אָנָּנוּ מִצְוָה הַיּוֹם לְאַ-נְפָלָתָה הוּא מִמֶּךְ וְלֹא רְחִקָּה הוּא: ¹² לֹא בְשָׁמַיִם הוּא לְאָמֵר מַיִּיעַלְהָ-לְנוּ הַשְׁמִימָה וַיַּקְרַחַת לְנוּ וַיִּשְׁמַעַנוּ אֹתָהּ וַיַּעֲשֵׂנָה: ¹³ וְלֹא-מַעֲבֵר לִים הָוּא לְאָמֵר מַיִּיעַבְרָ-לְנוּ אֶל־עַבְרַת הַיּוֹם וַיַּקְרַחַת לְנוּ וַיִּשְׁמַעַנוּ אֹתָהּ וַיַּעֲשֵׂנָה: ¹⁴ כִּי קָרוֹב אֵלֶיךְ הַדָּבָר מִאֵד בְּפִיךְ וּבְלְבָבֶךְ לְעֵשָׂתוֹ: ס

The Choice

LIFE OR DEATH, BLESSING OR CURSE (30:11–20)

Moses' closing remarks in this unit resemble the concluding words of the book of Deuteronomy's prologue (the part that precedes the legal material): compare “See, this day I set before you...” (11:26) to “See, I set before you this day...” (30:15). Whereas in the earlier passage “blessing” and “curse” represent opposite alternatives, here Moses presents the people with a more detailed and radical choice, governed by the alternatives of life and death.

ENCOURAGEMENT THAT THIS INSTRUCTION IS NOT BEYOND REACH (30:11–14)

This passage emphasizes that God's teaching (“the Instruction”) is not unintelligible, but is within the realm of human comprehension. This is a polemic against the notion of wisdom as “hidden from the eyes of all living” (Job 28:21; also 42:2–3) or “elusive and deep” (Ecclesiastes 7:24; see also Proverbs 30:2–4, 18–20).

11. Instruction. Heb. mitzvah, a close parallel to torah (“Teaching,” as in 29:28). Whereas the plural mitzvot is regularly translated as “commandments” (for instance, 4:2; 6:17), in the singular, mitzvah designates the legal corpus as a whole, the instruction which the people should follow in its entirety and by which they exemplify their devotion to God (as in 6:25; 8:1; 11:22; 15:5; 19:9). The noun holds this generic meaning also when it opens the tripartite cluster of mitzvah, chukim, and mishpatim, translated as “the Instruction—the laws and rules” (as in 6:1; 7:11).

12. It is not in the heavens. This verse accords with the general biblical perspective that emphasizes the human inability to reach heaven, the abode of God (Genesis 11; Proverbs 30:4), a theme profoundly anchored in Mesopotamian literature as well. The point is that this teaching is within reach, such that grasping it requires no supernatural help.

¹⁵See, I set before you this day life and prosperity, death and adversity. ¹⁶For I command you this day, to love your God, יְהוָה, to walk in God's ways, and to keep God's commandments, God's laws, and God's rules, that you may thrive and increase, and that your God יְהוָה may bless you in the land that you are about to enter and possess. ¹⁷But if your heart turns away and you give no heed, and are lured into the worship and service of other gods, ¹⁸I declare to you this day that you shall certainly perish; you shall not long endure on the soil that you are crossing the Jordan to enter and possess. ¹⁹I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day: I have put before you life and death, blessing and curse. Choose life—if you and your offspring would live—²⁰by loving your God, heeding God's commands, and holding fast to [God]. For thereby you shall have life and shall long endure upon the soil that יְהוָה swore to your fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to give to them.

¹⁵רָאָה נִתְתַּי לְפָנֶיךָ הַיּוֹם אֶת־הַחַיִם וְאֶת־הַטּוֹב וְאֶת־הַמּוֹת וְאֶת־הַרְעָע : ¹⁶אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מֵצֹוק הַיּוֹם לְאַהֲבָה אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ לְלִכְתָּ בְּדָرְכֵיכָ וְלִשְׁמֹר מְצֻוֹתָיו וְחַקְטוּיו וּמְשֻׁפְטוּ וְחַיִת וְרָבִית וּבָרְכֶל יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ בָּאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר־אָתָה בְּאֶשְׁפָמָה לְרַשְׁתָה : ¹⁷וְאִמְרִיפָנָה לְבָבֶךָ וְלֹא תִשְׁמַע וּנְדַחַת וְהַשְׁתְּחוּת לְאֱלֹהִים אֶחָרִים וּעֲבָדָתָם : ¹⁸הָגַדְתָּ לְכֶם הַיּוֹם כִּי אָבֶד תִּאֲבְדוּ לְאֶתְאָרִיקָן יְמִיט עַל־הָאָדָמָה אֲשֶׁר אָתָה עַבְרֵ אֶת־יְהִירָהָן לְבוֹא שָׁפָמָה לְרַשְׁתָה : ¹⁹הָעֲלָתִי בְּכֶם הַיּוֹם אֶת־הַשְׁמִים וְאֶת־הָאָרֶץ הַחַיִים וְהַמּוֹת נִתְתַּי לְפָנֶיךָ הַבְּרָכָה וְהַקְלָלה וּבְחֶרֶת בְּחַיִים לְמַעַן תִּחְיָה אַתָּה וּזְרֻעָךְ : ²⁰לְאַהֲבֵל אֶת־יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיךָ לְשָׁמֵעַ בְּכָל־וּלְדִבְרָה־בָּו כִּי הוּא חַיִל וְאֶרֶךְ יְמִינָךְ לְשִׁבְתָּ עַל־הָאָדָמָה אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע יְהוָה לְאַבְתֵּיךָ לְאֶבְרָהָם לִיצְחָק וּלְיַעֲקֹב לְתַת לְהָם :

CHARGE: CHOOSE LIFE AND PROSPERITY VERSUS DEATH AND ADVERSITY (30:15–20)

Concluding his words on the covenant, obedience, the land, and blessing and curse, Moses offers a basic choice between two stark alternatives: life and death. He establishes a clear, logical connection between obedience to God and God's covenant on the one hand and the reward of life on the other, which entails prosperity and thriving upon the land (vv. 15–16). In contrast, disobedience will inevitably bring calamity in the land, adversity, and death (vv. 17–18). The passage moves from life to death to life, closing with a hopeful, positive perspective.

19–20. Choose life... For thereby you shall have life. Moses' last command to the people is not redundant. The two consecutive phrases present a close connection between an action and its reward. The verb "to live" and the noun "life" serve as key words in this final passage, occurring interchangeably six times. In Deuteronomy, "life" refers to the reward for obeying specific laws (as in 16:20) or for obeying the Instruction (torah) in general (see 4:1; 30:6). In this passage, this language signifies the "path of life," the way that people choose to live their lives.

20. by loving יְהוָה. As is characteristic of Deuteronomy, love constitutes both the motive and the way to be in relation with God (see also at 7:13).

holding fast. The verbal root d-b-k first appears in Genesis 2:24, describing the close bond between the first man and woman. As this parashah comes to an end, Moses envisions the relationship between Israel and God as an equally intimate connection. (On marriage as a metaphor for the covenantal relationship between God and Israel, see at 5:9.)

—Dalit Rom-Shiloni

Another View

THE CLOSING VERSES of parashat Nitzavim are frequently invoked as evidence of the Torah's insistence on human free will. According to Deuteronomy 30:15–21, God presents Israel with a clear-cut and seemingly obvious choice between obedience, which will lead to life, and disobedience, which will lead to death. This free-will paradigm argues that Israel is responsible for its fate and that national misfortune is caused by Israel's disobedience of the covenant. To modern historians, events like the conquest of the northern kingdom of Israel by the Assyrians (8th century B.C.E.) or the destruction of the southern kingdom of Judah by the Babylonians (6th century B.C.E.) would be evidence of Israel's essential powerlessness in the face of stronger nations. However, this parashah and other biblical texts insist that Israel is not a pawn at the mercy of foreign powers, but instead is wholly responsible for its own fate.

Although the articulation of free will in these verses has been central to Jewish self-understanding for centuries, in the parashah itself this notion was largely theoretical. When the exilic or post-exilic authors or redactors imagined the scene of covenant-making that occurred in the mythic past, they already knew the choice that Israel would make. If Israel experienced exile, Israel must, by definition, have made the wrong choice—namely, disobedience.

The pressing question then becomes not whether Israel has free will, but how Israel can achieve reconciliation after having made its self-destructive choice. This concern generates the other view of history articulated in this parashah: the notion that Israel's history is a repeated sequence of iniquity, judgment, repentance, and deliverance. The Bible reiterates this pattern in the book of Judges, which frames legends

The pressing question then becomes: how can Israel achieve reconciliation?

about Israel's past within statements regarding Israel's disobedience and punishment, followed by Israel's repentance and deliverance (as in Judges 3:5–15). Israel repeatedly disobeys the covenant and embarks on the journey of tshuvah (repentance) that carries it from iniquity to deliverance. Thus, in Deuteronomy and other biblical texts, free will becomes operative not in moments of initial obedience or disobedience, but later, in the choice whether or not to repent, where the right decision ultimately leads to redemption.

—Elsie R. Stern

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

You stand this day, all of you...from woodchopper to water drawer (29:9–10). Midrash Kohelet Rabbah 1.12 teaches that these verses should have been placed at the beginning of Deuteronomy, directly following the initial statement, “These are the words that Moses addressed to all Israel on the other side of the Jordan” (1:1). In this midrash, the Rabbis include Deuteronomy 29:9–10 among other biblical verses cited to substantiate the rabbinic dictum that the Torah does not follow a chronological order (“There is no before and after in Scripture”). With this suggestion, the Rabbis accomplish two things. First, 29:9–10 clarifies that “all Israel” in 1:1 includes tribal heads, elders and officials, children and women, as well as strangers within the camp. Second, they stress that 29:9–10 is a direct address to the people Israel. Juxtaposing these two verses emphasizes that Moses addressed all Israel, and that all Israel stood present “to enter into the covenant of your God תִּמְמָה” (29:11).

NITZAVIM

with those who are standing here with us this day...and with those who are not with us here this day (29:14). This verse is part of Moses’ speech to the Israelites in Moab, but the Rabbis connected it with the revelation at Sinai (Exodus 20), where all

The Talmud teaches that although the Torah was given by God, it remains ours to interpret.

Jews—present and future—are said to have participated in the revelation of Torah. According to Midrash Sh'mot Rabbah 28.6, the Rabbis wondered why the verb “standing” was not also used in the second part of the verse, which simply reads, “who are not with us.” They suggested that the Torah was referring to future prophets and sages, whose words of wisdom appear in later parts of the Written and Oral Torah, respectively, but who were not physically present at Sinai because they had not yet been born: “Those are the souls who will one day be created.... Since there is not yet any substance in them, the word ‘standing’ is not used with them.”

A similar tradition in BT Sh'vuot 39a uses 29:13–14 to teach that all future generations of Israel, including all future converts, were at Sinai. Although these traditions do not refer explicitly to women, Sh'mot Rabbah 28.2 affirms their presence. Noting an apparent redundancy in Exodus 19:3, “Thus shall you say to the house of Jacob and declare to the children of Israel,” the midrash asks why the Torah mentions both the house of Jacob and the children of Israel. The answer is that “the house of Jacob” refers to the women and “the children of Israel” refers to the men. Indeed, the midrash further imagines that God addressed the women first in order to prevent a repetition of the catastrophe in the Garden of Eden when God initially commanded Adam, but Eve (who had not heard God’s directive first-hand) transgressed “and spoiled the world.” God, therefore, addressed the women first so they would not also “nullify the Torah.”

It is not in the heavens (30:12). Midrash D'varim Rabbah 8.6 imagines a dialogue based on 30:12–14 in which the Israelites ask Moses, “If the Torah is not in the heavens, nor beyond the sea, where is it?” Moses answers, “It is in a place very near, in your mouth and in your heart that you may do it.” The emphasis on “doing” Torah, meaning living by it, is made clear by a rabbinic interpretation of Leviticus 26:3, “If you faithfully observe My commandments,” literally “If you keep My commandments and do them.” Midrash Vayikra Rabbah 35.7 teaches of those who learn Torah without “doing” Torah, that it would be better if they had not been born.

In a famous talmudic story known as the “Oven of Achnai” (JT Mo'ed Katan 3:1, 81c–d; BT Bava Mitzia 59a–b), in the midst of a legal dispute ostensibly about the ritual purity or impurity of an oven, Rabbi Yehoshua stands up and quotes this verse, proclaiming, “It [the Torah] is not in the heavens.” Despite miraculous evidence supporting the oven’s purity, Rabbi Yehoshua sides with the majority of the sages in declaring the oven impure. In doing so, he asserts that the Torah belongs to humanity (or at least to the Rabbis) here on earth—not “in the heavens.” Miracles and even divine proclamations cannot overturn a community’s ruling. Thus the Talmud teaches that although the Torah was given by God, it remains ours to interpret.

—Gwynn Kessler

Contemporary Reflection

FOR THE LAST four or five decades, feminist scholars have asserted that the Bible is an androcentric work reflecting a time when men controlled property, politics, and religious life, not to mention women themselves. Those insights de-legitimized the Torah as a source of meaning and authority for many women. How could a sacred text reflect the injustices of patriarchy? It did not seem possible.

However, the extent to which patriarchy de-legitimizes the Bible as a sacred book for women has become more nuanced in recent scholarship. While the Bible's male-centeredness generally goes undisputed, at least in academic circles, various scholars (such as Phyllis Trible, Tikva Frymer-Kensky, and Carol Meyers) have highlighted a number of potentially mitigating or even redemptive elements concerning women. First are the powerful and highly delineated female characters in the Bible, most notably Sarah, Rebekah, Tamar, Miriam, Rahab, Deborah, and Ruth, all of whom are leaders who transform the private or public realms in which they act. Second are the Bible's commandments that express a clear concern for the care of the marginal and/or impoverished in society: the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow. Third are the deep covenantal principles articulated in the Torah that can be used for feminist purposes. Parashat Nitzavim exemplifies this, with its rich, powerful—even revolutionary—concepts that can be used to further the creation of a feminist Judaism.

The parashah begins: “You stand this day, all of you, before your God יהוה—you tribal heads, you elders, and you officials, all the men of Israel, you children, you women, even the stranger within your camp, from woodchopper to water drawer—to enter into the covenant of your God יהוה” (29:9–11). Let’s take a close look at the language surrounding women. First of all, from the nature of the list, one can pretty safely assume that the women were not tribal leaders, elders, woodchoppers, or water drawers. The crucial fact, however, is that they are included. They are standing before God as full members of the covenantal community. In many other instances in the Torah, only the men are addressed or female inclusion is ambiguous—eclipsed by the nature of the Hebrew language itself, which retains a grammatically masculine form whether addressing or referring to an all-male group or a mixed male and female group.

Secondly, the “women” listed belong to the “you” being addressed. (The word is often translated as “your wives,” as if the women are not part of the

*It is time to do no less than to dress
the Torah in the language of women.*

“all of you” in v. 9.) But here “women” are not the only ones subject to belonging. Every individual belongs to a household, a clan, a tribe. In the Hebrew Bible, belonging is what constitutes a people. In this particular passage, leadership and power do not set one apart as an autonomous individual. No one, not even the most powerful male tribal leader, stands alone. For better or for worse, everyone is held in an inescapable web of interconnectedness and belonging.

With all of that, one might still dismiss the applicability of the text to us as contemporary women. Yet I believe we should not overlook the value of this text for women “this day” (29:9). Perhaps the historical context can account for some of the dispiriting force of androcentrism. The biblical authors could not imagine women in roles other than daughters who then became wives (or widows, a state also defined by marriage). Women simply were not necessarily visible if they did not fulfill wifely or maternal duties. Here we can summon the traditional concept of “the Torah spoke in the language of human beings” (dibrat torah kilshon b’nei adam). An alternative translation of this saying would be: “The Torah spoke in the language of men.” It is for us, as students of Torah and members of the covenantal people, to help construct our very lives in a way that takes text out of its historical context, out of its male dress or costume, and applies it to our own time. In this way, we redress Torah—and address it to ourselves and our own community, much as the Rabbis who authored the Midrash and Talmud did. It is time to do no less than to dress the Torah in the language of women.

NITZAVIM

The Torah itself is explicit about the fact that this covenant is not a thing of the past. As 29:13–14 makes clear, this covenant was intended for each one of us in our own time.

The covenant is made not only with those who stood in Moab listening to Moses’ words, but also with future generations. Every Israelite since that day, and every Jew to come into this world in the future, is directly and personally included in this covenant. Thus are we—those reading the Torah now—empowered to forge our own relationship to the contents of the ongoing revelation. The tradition is not fixed;

quite the contrary, it is our very active and receptive listening that gives this text its meaning and its very sanctity. The text gains its k’dushah (“holiness”) from those in every generation who read it and add their voices to the endless, sacred conversation about what this all means. If women exclude themselves from that process, the full power, relevancy, and truth of the Torah are diminished.

To underline that point, the Torah itself adds words of encouragement further on in the parashah concerning our ability to apprehend this text: “Surely, this Instruction which I enjoin upon you this day is not too baffling for you, nor is it beyond reach . . . No, the thing is very close to you, in your mouth and in your heart, to observe it” (30:11, 14). The Torah belongs to every one of us, not just to experts or to certain segments of the community; it does not belong to men alone. As this parashah reminds us, the Torah is far more democratic, fluid, and subjective. We await revelation—and yet revelation is right here, precisely where we stand. “It is not in the heavens . . . No, the thing is very close to you” (30:12, 14)—exceedingly close.

—Dianne Cohler-Esses

Voices

In the Garden

Rahel (transl. Maurice Samuel)

Deuteronomy 30:1–6

Calm is the garden with blue and gray
In the peace of dawn.
I will rise from the dust of yesterday
To faith in the morn,
Accept with humble heart and free
The judgment that was given me.

A girl walks through the garden beds
And scatters rain;
The withered leaves lift up their heads
And live again.
The bitter things that God must do
I will forgive and start anew.

from The Tapestry of Jewish Time

Nina Beth Cardin

Deuteronomy 30:2–3

Some people seek forgiveness face-to-face.
Some find it easier to write a letter. Others may want to give the aggrieved a gift or do them a favor, all in the context of apologizing and making amends. Asking forgiveness may take many guises. But its one common element is that it must be intentional. Both parties must be aware of what is at stake. There is no such thing as accidental or casual forgiveness.

This Place in the Ways

Muriel Rukeyser

Deuteronomy 30:6

Having come to this place
I set out once again on the dark and marvelous way from where I began:
belief in the love of the world,
woman, spirit, and man.

Having failed in all things
I enter a new age
seeing the old ways as toys, the houses of a stage
painted and long forgot;
and I find love and rage.

Rage for the world as it is but for what it may be more love now than last year and always less self-pity since I know in a clearer light the strength of the mystery.

And at this place in the ways
I wait for song.
My poem-hand still, on the paper,
all night long.
Poems in throat and hand, asleep,
and my storm beating strong!

Aphorism

Sigrid Agocsi

Deuteronomy 30:5

I felt myself strange in the country I grew up in.

Now having become a foreigner,
I have arrived at home.

from A Prayer When the Child Is Born

Naomi Levy

Deuteronomy 30:9

Welcome, welcome to this breathtaking world. We have been waiting for you. Waiting to see your beautiful face, to hear the sound of your cry, to kiss you, hold you, rock you. You are the fruit of our love, of our hearts, of our souls.

We have prayed for this day, and now it is here. But no amount of anticipation could have prepared us for you. You are a miracle. You are a gift from God. You are ours.

May God watch over you in love and bless you with health. How can we express our gratitude to You, God? You have sent us a perfect blessing.

Sometimes while I am chanting

Marge Piercy

Deuteronomy 30:14

Sometimes while I am chanting the Hebrew words become liquid as warm rain and I slip through them as if they were water parting to let me down to a clear place.

Sometimes when I am praying the words stop and the darkness rises like water in a basin and I come into silence rich as the heart of a rose.

Sometimes when I meditate light swells along my limbs and opens sweet as apple blossoms from the hard wood of my knobbly spine.

Light slides behind my eyes light rises in my throat light pulses in my chest.
There is no I only you only light burning and unburnt.

I Do Not Ask

Estelle Nachimoff Padawer

Deuteronomy 30:19–20

I used to mumble many words in the prayerbook without much thought even all wise all good all powerful God until dear Clara was felled by a stroke
She who always did for others
now helpless shorn of dignity

The contradiction of those words struck me then forced me to shake my head over and over again

But saying no
and saying nothing are not for me

I need to say yes
—yes to a soap bubble afloat in sunshine
—to a newborn baby's perfect fingernails
—to a child reading a first sentence
—to the look of love that lights a face

I do not ask Who or How
I just say yes

Mikveh Mayim

Ona Siporin

Deuteronomy 30:15–20

Where the island divides the river
you decide to forget to remember.
You dive into the glacial current and, coming up, lift your eyes, now unmarred,

to the clear heavens mapped by the bare branches of spring.

When you dive deeply and spread your fingers so far no grasp is possible

you know what you own.

You waited all your life
for single moments like this one
when you catch your breath, shudder, when your body is a trembling stalk, your mind close, close to the knowledge beyond you.

Torah

Barbara D. Holender

Deuteronomy 30:11–14

Even when you hold it in your arms,
you have not grasped it.
Wrapped and turned it upon itself
the scroll says, Not yet.

Even when you take them into your eyes, you have not seen them; elegant in their crowns the letters stand aloof.

Even when you taste them in your mouth and roll them on your tongue or bite the sharp unyielding strokes they say, Not yet.

And when the sounds pour from your throat and reach deep into your lungs for breath, even then the words say, Not quite.

But when your heart knows its own hunger and your mind is seized and shaken, and in the narrow space between the lines
your soul builds its nest,

Now, says Torah, now
you begin to understand.

וַיֵּלֶךְ ◆ Vayeilech

DEUTERONOMY 31:1–30

The Oral and the Written: Words of Encouragement and Warning

PARASHAT VAYEILECH ("[he] went") is the shortest portion in the Torah, consisting of only thirty verses. It begins with Moses standing before the Israelites in the plains of Moab, just across the Jordan River from the Promised Land. He delivers an encouraging message to Israel (31:1–13), in which he assures the people that although he is about to die, God will lead them into the Land, wiping out any obstacles in their path. To reinforce Joshua's legitimacy as their new leader, Moses appoints him in front of all Israel.

Moses then writes down the Teaching (torah) and instructs the priests and elders regarding future public readings of the written text. As in 29:9–10, the text makes the inclusive nature of the covenant explicit, specifying that men, women, children, and strangers are to listen to and learn from God's Teaching (31:12).

In the second part of the parashah (vv. 14–23), God begins to speak, delivering a darkly pessimistic message. God anticipates that immediately after Moses' death, the people will go astray by worshiping other gods. As a result, Moses must write down the words of a poem as witness against the people.

Finally, Moses again speaks to the people (vv. 24–30); but now, as if infected by God's disappointment, Moses too predicts misfortune in Israel's future. In addition, repeatedly the parashah emphasizes the transmission of God's teaching as a written text.

Regarding the treatment of women in this parashah, they are mentioned explicitly only once (v. 12), although they are included implicitly as part of the "people." Nevertheless,

The parashah makes it clear: women and men must study Torah and apply it to their lives.

readers might consider a number of questions sparked by the parashah:

- What are the repercussions of having the tale narrated by a single dominant male voice, that of Moses? The story as told is shaped by the teller and his particular interests; and, in turn, this story will shape the type of community that Israel will become. What if, instead, the story were to be told from the perspective of a female figure, such as Miriam? What might a female narrator have considered crucial if she were asked to retell the events of the wilderness journey? What vision of community might she propose?
- Moses passes the reins of communal leadership from himself to Joshua. Who would have been a fitting successor to his sister, Miriam—the prophet and leader who died not long beforehand (Numbers 20:1)?

- The depiction of Moses writing down the torah (which in this context refers to the teachings in Deuteronomy) prompts speculation: Could a female author have written a biblical book?

While answers to these questions remain largely conjectural, the parashah makes one thing quite clear: women as well as men must hear and study the Torah and apply it to their lives.

—Adriane Leveen

Outline

I. MOSES ASSURES ISRAEL OF SUCCESS (31:1–13)

- Moses prepares the people for God and Joshua to take over (vv. 1–5)
- Moses encourages the people and Joshua: “Be strong and resolute” (vv. 6–8)
- Moses gives instructions for the public reading of the Torah (vv. 9–13)

II. GOD REBUKES ISRAEL (31:14–23)

- Moses and Joshua meet God in the Tent of Meeting (vv. 14–15)
- God warns of Israel’s future misbehavior and its consequences (vv. 16–21)
- Moses writes down and teaches the poem (v. 22)
- God encourages Joshua: “Be strong and resolute” (v. 23)

III. MOSES COMPLETES THE TEACHING (torah) AND RECITES THE POEM (31:24–30)

- Moses instructs the Levites to place the Teaching in the Ark (vv. 24–27)
- Moses recites the poem as a warning (vv. 28–30)

31:1

Moses went and spoke these things to all Israel. ²He said to them:

I am now one hundred and twenty years old, I can no longer be active. Moreover, God has said to me, “You shall not go across yonder Jordan.” ³It is indeed your God who will cross over before you, and who will wipe out those nations from your path; and you shall dispossess them.—Joshua is the one who shall cross before you, as God has וַיֵּלֶךְ מֹשֶׁה וַיִּרְבֶּר אֶת־דָּבָרִים

הָאֱלֹהָאָלְפָלִיְשָׁרָאָל: ² וַיֹּאמֶר אֱלֹהָם
בְּנֵמָאָה וּעֲשָׂרִים שָׁנָה אָנֹכִי קְיוּם לְאַזְרָקָה
אוּכָל עוֹד לְצַאת וְלִבּוֹא וַיֹּהּוּ אָמָר אֱלֹהָי
לֹא תִּעַבֵּר אֶת־הַיַּרְדֵּן תְּזַהַה: ³ וַיֹּהּוּ אָלְפָלִיְקָה
הָוָא עַבְרָ לְפָנֵיךְ הַוְאִינְשָׁמֵיד אֶת־הָגּוּיִם
הָאֱלֹהָה מִלְפָנֵיכְ וַיַּרְשָׁתָם יְהוָשָׁעַ הַזָּעַן עַבְרָ

Moses Assures Israel of Success

(31:1–13)

Moses reminds the people of God’s plans to take them across the Jordan into the Promised Land, accompanied by Joshua. Once there, the people are to gather and read the torah aloud every seventh year during the festival of Sukkot.

MOSES PREPARES THE PEOPLE FOR GOD AND JOSHUA TO TAKE OVER (31:1–5)

Unable to enter the Promised Land, Moses reassures the people of success and appoints Joshua to take the lead.

1. Moses went. The verse suggests that Moses seeks out the people in order to deliver his message; time is of the essence since he knows that he is about to die.

spoke . . . things. Heb. va-ydaber . . . d’varim, where both the verb and its object derive from the same root (d-b-r). This language echoes the opening verse of Deuteronomy, where the two forms of this root also appear together: “These are the words (d’varim) that Moses addressed (dibber) to all Israel” (1:1). Soon, at the end of his long series of speeches, Moses will write down these precious words as his legacy to Israel (v. 9). At Deuteronomy’s end, the oral and the written become inextricably linked.

2. I can no longer be active. The Hebrew idiom for a lack of physical motion in an aged Moses is more suggestive—literally “I am no longer able to go out or come in.” The image of movement is reinforced by God’s next words, reminding Moses that he cannot cross over the Jordan and enter the land.

3. your God who will cross over before you. Moses turns from his own fate to the people’s, who shortly will leave him behind. Poignantly he speaks of “your God,” not including himself in the address. Since Moses will not cross the Jordan (v. 2), God and Joshua will cross before the Israelites (v. 3) to ensure victory as they settle the land.

Joshua is the one who shall cross before you, as ► Deuteronomy—via Moses—continually insists that no individual should be left out.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 1245

► Whereas the men were there to learn, the women were capable only of listening.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 1245

► We women prepare ourselves for lives in which every possibility is open to us.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 1247

► The keepers of my youth sit in wheelchairs / sunning themselves in the crisp autumn air.

VOICES ► 1249

spoken.—⁴ will do to them as was done to Sihon and Og, kings of the Amorites, and to their countries, when [God] wiped them out. ⁵ יְהוָה will deliver them up to you, and you shall deal with them in full accordance with the Instruction that I have enjoined upon you. ⁶ Be strong and resolute, be not in fear or in dread of them; for it is indeed your God יְהוָה who marches with you: [God] will not fail you or forsake you.

לֹפֶנְךָ בַּאֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר יְהוָה: ⁴ וְעַשֵּׂה יְהוָה
לְהָם בַּאֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה לְסִיחֹן וְלְעֹז מֶלֶךְ
הָאַמּוֹרִי וְלְאֶרְצָם אֲשֶׁר הַשְׁמִיד אֶתְכֶם:
⁵ וּנְתַנְתֶּם יְהוָה לִפְנֵיכֶם וְעַשֵּׂיתֶם לְהָם
בְּכָל־הַמִּצְדָּה אֲשֶׁר צִוִּיתִי אֶתְכֶם: ⁶ חִזְקָה
וְאִמְצָא אֶל־תִּירְאֹו וְאֶל־תִּטְעַרְצֹו מִפְנֵיכֶם פִּי
יְהוָה אֶל־לְבִיךָ הוּא הַהְלָךְ עַמְּךָ לֹא יַرְפַּךְ וְלֹא יַעֲזַבְךָ:

has spoken. The syntax of this phrase is odd, forcing the English translation to add dashes to make sense of the sentence. The prior sentence states that God's destruction of the nations will end with Israel's dispossessing them. Then, almost as an afterthought, Joshua is introduced. This clearly tacked-on phrase suggests an editorial insertion to draw attention to the role that Joshua will assume. The verse reflects a tension between God's actions on our behalf and the human means by which those actions are accomplished.

4. About to die, Moses retells what happened in the past. As in parashat D'varim, he shapes Israel's memories of the wilderness journey in order to teach lessons pertinent to the present moment. (For speculation on how a female narrator might have reshaped the story, see the introduction to this parashah.)

MOSES ENCOURAGES THE PEOPLE AND JOSHUA: “BE STRONG AND RESOLUTE” (31:6–8)

These three verses present the reader with an identifiable section that shows signs of careful editing through the use of repetition and inversion to make a highly political point to the Israelite audience. Verse 6 contains four clauses that claim a cause-and-effect relationship, stressing that the people Israel can be strong and free of fear because God is with them and will not let them down. Verses 7–8 include language nearly identical to that of Moses when he commissions Joshua. One noteworthy difference between vv. 7–8 and v. 6 is the insertion of Joshua's name as the one who will lead the people along with God. Because he assumes this role, Israel should accept his equally important function as the one who divides the land among the tribes. The politics of succession as well as the necessary persuasion to secure Joshua's legitimacy are in play here. The deft weaving together of similar language in each passage signals that God approves the arrangement.

6. Be strong and resolute. This expression of encouragement, particularly used in the context of war, appears three times in this parashah (also vv. 7 and 23) and four times in Joshua 1 as the people prepare to enter the land (vv. 6, 7, 9, 18).

forsake you. Here and in v. 8, Moses assures the people and Joshua that God will not forsake or abandon them. The same verbal root (e-z-b) is used later when God foreshadows that Israel will forsake God (v. 16), which in turn will result in God forsaking them (v. 17). In Isaiah 49:14–15, the identical verb is used when the people in exile express their anxiety that God has deserted them. In response, the prophet reassures them by means of a rhetorical question that compares God to a mother: “Can a mother forget her babe, or stop loving the child of her womb? Even these could forget, but I could not forget you.”

⁷Then Moses called Joshua and said to him in the sight of all Israel: “Be strong and resolute, for it is you who shall go with this people into the land that I, Yahweh, swore to their fathers to give them, and it is you who shall apportion it to them. ⁸And it is indeed I, Yahweh, who will go before you. [God] will be with you—and will not fail you or forsake you. Fear not and be not dismayed!”

⁹Moses wrote down this Teaching and gave it to

⁷ וַיָּקֹרֶא מֹשֶׁה לִיהוָשׁ וַיֹּאמֶר אֲלֵיכָו לְעַינֵּיכָו כָּל-יִשְׂרָאֵל חֻקָּו וְאַמְצָא בַּיּוֹתֶר אֲתָּה הָעָם הַזֶּה אֶל-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע יְהוָה לְאַבְתָּם לְתַת לְהָם וְאַתָּה תִּנְחִילֵנָה אֶתְכֶם: ⁸ וַיֹּהֵה הוּא | קָדְלֶךָ לְפָנֵיךָ הוּא יְהִי עָמָךְ לֹא יִرְפַּךְ וְלֹא יַעֲזַבךְ לֹא תִּרְאֶה וְלֹא תִּחְתַּטְתָּ:

⁹ וַיְכַתֵּב מֹשֶׁה אֶת-הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת וַיִּתְּנֶה

7. Then Moses called Joshua. Just as Joshua prepares to take the lead after Moses’ death, his brother Aaron also has a successor, Eleazar (Numbers 20:26). While no one is designated to succeed their sister Miriam, Deborah would be a fitting choice. Deborah, like Miriam (Exodus 15:20), is called a prophet (Judges 4:4); and she is praised as “Mother in Israel” (Judges 5:7), a title that most likely indicates her role as a leader during the period of the Judges. Also, just as Miriam sings a song of victory and praise after crossing the Sea of Reeds (Exodus 15:20–21), so too does Deborah sing a song of praise after the defeat of Sisera (Judges 5). It is intriguing that both of these two poems, which are thought to be among the oldest compositions in the Bible, are associated with women. (On women as singers of victory songs and other poetic compositions, see at Exodus 15:1–19 and Deuteronomy 32:1–43.)

in the sight of all Israel. That is, Joshua must be seen and accepted as the legitimate successor to Moses.

MOSES GIVES INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE PUBLIC READING OF THE TORAH (31:9–13)

The text now shifts to a description of how Moses wrote down the Teaching and ensured its annual public reading.

9. Moses wrote down this Teaching. Here and in v. 24, we have explicit mention of Moses writing the Teaching (torah). Elsewhere in Deuteronomy, the written torah is discussed without attributing its writing to Moses (see 17:18; 27:8). Thus the later tradition that Moses wrote the entire Torah may begin with this parashah.

In certain passages in Exodus, the word torah refers to divine precepts authoritative for the community (for instance, see torat YHVH in Exodus 13:9). In Leviticus and Numbers, the term typically refers to priestly instructions, either oral or written on separate scrolls that priests keep to themselves; in such cases, the word often is translated as “ritual” (see at Leviticus 6:2). In Deuteronomy, torah generally refers to “this Teaching,” meaning the book of Deuteronomy or perhaps its legal parts (see at 1:5; 17:18; 27:3); it designates a written text that becomes central to Israel’s life as a community, for it contains God’s rules for all of Israel. As many scholars note, Deuteronomy lays the foundation for Judaism’s becoming a religion of the book.

Later biblical books speak of the torah of Moses (for instance, Joshua 8:31; 23:6; I Kings 2:3; II Kings 14:6; 23:25; Ezra 7:6; Nehemiah 8:1). These references to the Teaching of Moses appear in times of instability or crisis, including a transition in rule, a moment of religious or political reform, or the return of the exiles from Babylon. Thus the Teaching (torah) of Moses provides guidance and an anchor for Israel.

No such explicit association exists between a woman and a work of the Hebrew Bible. One possible comparison is Song of Songs. Although attributed to Solomon, this biblical book reproduces the the priests, sons of Levi, who carried the Ark of יהוה's Covenant, and to all the elders of Israel.

¹⁰And Moses instructed them as follows: Every seventh year, the year set for remission, at the Feast of Booths,¹¹when all Israel comes to appear before your God יהוה in the place that [God] will choose, you shall read this Teaching aloud in the presence of all Israel.¹²Gather the people—men, women, children, and the strangers in your communities—that they may hear and so learn to revere your God יהוה and to observe faithfully every word of this Teaching.¹³Their children, too, who have not had the experience, shall hear and learn to revere your God יהוה as long as they live in the land that you are about to cross the Jordan to possess.

אֶל-הַכֹּהֲנִים בְּנֵי לֹוי הַנְשָׁאִים אֶת-אַרְזָן
בְּרִית יְהוָה וְאֶל-כָּל-זֶקְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל:
¹⁰ וַיֹּצְאֵוּ מֹשֶׁה אֹתוֹם לְאמֹר מִקְדָּשׁ | שְׁבֻעָה
שְׁנִים בְּמַעַד שְׁנִת הַשְׁמִטָּה בְּחִגָּה הַסְּפּוֹת:
¹¹ בָּבּוּא כָּל-יִשְׂרָאֵל לְרֹאֹת אֶת-פָנֵי יהוָה
אֶל-הַיּוֹם בַּמְקוּם אֲשֶׁר יִבְחַר תְּקָרְאָ אֶת-הַתּُוֹרָה הַזֹּאת נִגְדֵּל כָּל-יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּאוֹנִיהֶם:
¹² הַקָּהָל אֶת-הָעָם הָאָנָשִׁים וְהַנְשָׁאִים
וְהַطְּף וְגַרְגָּשׁ אֲשֶׁר בְּשֻׁעָרֵיךְ לְמַעַן יִשְׁמַעְוּ
וְלִמְדּוּ וְלִמְדּוּ וְיִרְאֶוּ אֶת-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם
וְשִׁמְרוּ לְעַשׂוֹת אֶת-בְּלִדְבָּרִי הַתּُוֹרָה
הַזֹּאת:¹³ וּבְנֵיהֶם אֲשֶׁר לְאִידְךָוּ יִשְׁמַעְוּ
וְלִמְדּוּ לִירָאָה אֶת-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵיכֶם כָּל-הַיּוֹם אֲשֶׁר אַתָּם חַיִם עַל-הָאָדָمָה
אֲשֶׁר אַתָּם עֲבָרִים אֶת-הַיּוֹם שָׁמוֹה לְרִשְׁתָה:

voice of a woman as its chief speaker or singer. In addition, the book of Ruth could have been written by a woman, given the central relationship of the daughter-in-law to her mother-in-law and the dominance of female economic concerns.

and gave it to the priests, sons of Levi. According to Deuteronomy, levitical priests are in charge of teaching the torah to the people.

10. at the Feast of Booths. Jeffrey Tigay suggests a practical reason for reading the Teaching at this time. Since Sukkot marks the end of the agricultural cycle, the people have some leisure and, depending on the harvest's success, a sense of security and gratitude. As a consequence, Sukkot in Jerusalem would have been the best-attended of the festivals, giving the Jerusalem priests both a large audience and ample time to read the Teaching publicly. He estimates that all of Deuteronomy could be read in three or four hours (Deuteronomy, 1996, pp. 291–92). Note the specific mention of women in 16:13–14 among those instructed to celebrate Sukkot.

11. in the place that [God] will choose. Deuteronomy is a book of religious vision and reform. An unnamed central site (presumably the Temple in Jerusalem) is to replace the many high places and cultic sites found in Judah at that time (see at 12:2–14). The public reading of the scroll would reinforce the centrality of the Temple in Jerusalem as God's Chosen Place.

read this Teaching aloud. The torah is preserved and written down, but it is read aloud to the many who either do not have a copy or would not be able to read it. In narratives about the later periods in Israel's history, such a public reading is said to have occurred during the period of intense religious reform under Josiah (II Kings 23) and after the return from exile, when Ezra reads the Torah aloud (Nehemiah 8). Nehemiah 8:2 emphasizes that the audience is composed of “men and women and all who could listen with understanding” (also v. 3).

12. men, women, children, and the strangers. The list suggests as inclusive a group as possible; knowledge of God's teachings is open to everyone and expected of everyone.

¹⁴ said to Moses: The time is drawing near for you to die. Call Joshua and present yourselves in the Tent of Meeting, that I may instruct him. Moses and Joshua went and presented themselves in the Tent of Meeting. ¹⁵ appeared in the Tent, in a pillar of cloud, the pillar of cloud having come to rest at the entrance of the tent.

¹⁶ said to Moses: You are soon to lie with your ancestors. This people will thereupon go astray after the alien gods in their midst, in the

¹⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵמֶשֶׁה הִנֵּן קָרְבֵּי יְמִינְךָ לְמוֹת קָרָא אֶת־יְהוָשָׁע וְהִתְיצַּבּוּ בְּאַחֲלָמָעָד וְאַצְגָּנוּ וַיַּלְכֵל מִשְׁהָ וְיְהוָשָׁע וַיִּתְיצַּבּוּ בְּאַחֲלָמָעָד מוֹעֵד: ¹⁵ וַיַּרְא יְהוָה בְּאַחֲלָמָעָד בְּעֶמֶד עַנְנָן וַיַּעֲמֹד עַמְּדוֹד הַעֲנָן עַל־פְּתַח הַאַחֲלָמָעָד ¹⁶ וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֲלֵמֶשֶׁה הַנֶּגֶב שָׂבֵב עַמִּי אֲבָתֶיךָ וְקָם הָעָם הַזֶּה וַיָּנָה אֶחָרָיו אֱלֹהִים

God Rebukes Israel (31:14–23)

In comparison to the foreboding message we are about to read, Deuteronomy 30 (in the prior parashah) exhibited a more compassionate tone and a more forgiving God. The contrast suggests the purposeful preservation of two different traditions concerning Moses' last speeches, the first offering a vision of God in harmony with Israel and the second presenting a warning of estrangement and disaster caused by the people's behavior.

MOSES AND JOSHUA MEET GOD IN THE TENT OF MEETING (31:14–15)

God repeats what Moses announced to the people in v. 2, the fact of his impending death. In preparation for the change of leadership, God summons Moses and Joshua to the Tent of Meeting.

14. Tent of Meeting. Heb. ohel mo'ed, which refers to the tent located outside of the camp where God earlier appeared as a pillar of cloud in order to speak to Moses "face to face" and to Joshua as his attendant (see at Exodus 33:7–11). This is the same tent where God spoke directly to Miriam and to her brother Aaron (Numbers 12:4–9).

that I may instruct him. God now speaks directly to Joshua; Moses is not included.

15. in a pillar of cloud. God often appears to Moses, and at times to the people, behind a veil of some kind, shielding the observer from a direct view of God's manifestation. (See also at Exodus 13:21.)

GOD WARNS OF ISRAEL'S FUTURE MISBEHAVIOR AND ITS CONSEQUENCES (31:16–21)

God's warning about the people's misbehavior that will follow Moses' death introduces an angry, melancholy note into the parashah. Just as earlier repentance and reconciliation are depicted as reciprocal (see at 30:1–10), so here are rebellion and rejection. The core message of this section is that since the people will abandon God, God will abandon the people (vv. 16–17; see at v. 6).

16. go astray after. Literally, "go whoring after." Here and in several prophetic books (see Hosea 2; Jeremiah 3:1; Ezekiel 16, 23), prostitution is used as a metaphor for adultery and apostasy. The betrayal involved in adultery forms the basis of an analogy to vividly express God's sense of betrayal when Israel worships other gods. This comparison fits with the broader conception of the relationship between God and Israel as a marriage, a metaphor that conveys both the love that binds the metaphoric husband and wife, as well as God's deep disappointment when Israel turns to "alien gods" (see also at 5:9).

alien gods. This expression refers to Canaanite gods. Yet in v. 3, Moses announces that God will destroy the nations (and presumably their idols) once they cross into the land of Canaan. This contradiction anticipates the tension found in the books of Joshua and Judges between the claim to have wiped out the local inhabitants and the fact land that they are about to enter; they will forsake Me and break My covenant that I made with them.

¹⁷Then My anger will flare up against them, and I will abandon them and hide My countenance from them. They shall be ready prey; and many evils and troubles shall befall them. And they shall say on that day, “Surely it is because our God is not in our midst that these evils have befallen us.” ¹⁸Yet I will keep My countenance hidden on that day, because of all the evil they have done in turning to other gods. ¹⁹Therefore, write down this poem and teach it to the people of Israel; put it in their mouths, in order that this poem may be My witness against the people of Israel. ²⁰When I bring them into the land flowing with milk and honey that I promised on oath to their fathers, and they eat their fill and grow fat and turn to other gods and serve them, spurning Me and breaking My covenant,²¹and the many evils and troubles befall them—then this poem

גָּבָר־הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר הוּא בְּאַשְׁפָמָה בְּקָרְבָוֹ
וְעַזְבֵנִי וְהַפֵּר אֶת־בְּרִיתִי אֲשֶׁר בָּרְתִי אֹתוֹ:
¹⁷ וְתַדְרֵה אֲפִי בּוֹ בַּיּוֹם הַהוּא וְעַזְבָתִים
וְהַסְּטָרָתִי פָנֵי מִתְּמֻמָּת וְהִיא לְאַכְל' וּמְצָאָהוּ
רַעֲוֹת רַבּוֹת וְצָרוֹת וְאַמְלָל בַּיּוֹם הַהוּא הַלְאָ
עַל בִּירָאֵן אֱלֹהִי בְּקָרְבֵי מִצְאָנוּ הַרְעוֹת
הָאָלָה: ¹⁸ וְאַנְבֵנִי הַסְּטָר אַסְתִּיר פָנֵי בַּיּוֹם
הַהוּא עַל כָּל־הָרָעָה אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה כִּי פָנָה
אֱלֹהִים אֶחָרִים: ¹⁹ וְעַתָּה כַּתְבּוּ לְכֶם
אֶת־דְּשִׁירָה הַזֹּאת וְלִמְדָה אֶת־בְּנֵי
יִשְׂרָאֵל שִׁמְמָה בְּפִיהם לְמַעַן תִּהְיָה־לֵי־
הַשִּׁירָה הַזֹּאת לְעֵד בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: ²⁰ כִּי־
אָבִינוּ אֱלֹהָה אֶדְמָה | אֲשֶׁר־נִשְׁבָּעָתִ
לְאַבְתֵּינוּ זֹבֵת חָלֵב וּדְבַשׂ וְאַכְל' וּשְׁבָעָ
וְדְשִׁין וּפָנָה אֱלֹהִים אֶחָרִים עֲבָדָוּם
וְנִצְוֹנוּ וְהַפֵּר אֶת־בְּרִיתִי: ²¹ וְהִיא כִּי־
תִּמְצָאֵנִי אָתוֹ רַעֲוֹת רַבּוֹת וְצָרוֹת וְעַנְתָּה

that Israel repeatedly interacts with those already in the land. The contradiction seems to suggest that a widespread destruction of other peoples did not in fact occur (see also at 2:34; 7:1–5; 7:24; 12:29–31). Rather, Israel came into being in the midst of other cultures and widely and creatively adapted some of their practices and ideas into Israelite religious life.

17. hide My countenance from them. Here and in v. 18, this common biblical image (see, for instance, Isaiah 54:8; Psalm 30:8) depicts the remoteness of God’s presence (literally “face”). The expression here suggests profound divine alienation from the people.

“Surely it is because our God is not in our midst.” The people will blame their troubles on God’s absence, equated here with the denial of divine protection and sustenance.

19. Therefore, write down this poem. God’s response to Moses’ impending absence is to demand a written text. Some interpreters understand the poem to serve as an accusation against the people in the generations to come, preventing them from misconstruing the past. In other words, the poem will testify to the fact that God abandoned them for just cause (Jeffrey Tigay, Deuteronomy, 1996, p. 295). Others have reinterpreted this verse to understand the poem not as a witness against Israel, but as a witness on behalf of Israel, reminding God “not to judge the people Israel harshly in the future, for God was aware of their nature (v. 27) and chose them nonetheless” (attributed to Rabbi Meir “Malbim” in David Lieber, ed., Etz Hayim, 2001, p. 1177).

20–21. These verses reiterate God’s charge in vv. 16–19, but with an added accusation against Israel. After God fulfills the promise made to the ancestors—to settle their descendants in a land flowing with milk and honey—the people will partake of the land’s abundance; but they will fail to connect their prosperity to the God who brought them there.

shall confront them as a witness, since it will never be lost from the mouth of their offspring. For I know what plans they are devising even now, before I bring them into the land that I promised on oath.

²²That day, Moses wrote down this poem and taught it to the Israelites.

²³And [God] charged Joshua son of Nun: “Be strong and resolute: for you shall bring the Israelites into the land that I promised them on oath, and I will be with you.”

²⁴When Moses had put down in writing the words of this Teaching to the very end, ²⁵Moses charged the Levites who carried the Ark of the

הַשִּׁירָה הַזֹּאת לְפָנָיו לִעֵד כִּי لֹא תִשְׁכַּח
מִפִּי וְרֹעֶוּ כִּי יַדְעַתִּי אֲתִידִצְרוּ אֲשֶׁר הוּא
עָשָׂה הַיּוֹם בְּטֻרְם אֲבִיאָנוּ אֶל-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר
נִשְׁבַּעְתִּי:

²²וַיְכַתֵּב מֹשֶׁה אֶת-הַשִּׁירָה הַזֹּאת בַּיּוֹם
הַהוּא וַיְלַמְּךָ אֶת-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל:

²³וַיְצַו אֲתִיהוֹשָׁעַ בֶּן-נֹנֶן וַיֹּאמֶר חִזְקָק
וְאַמְّץ כִּי אַתָּה תַּبִּיא אֶת-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
אֶל-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר-נִשְׁבַּעְתִּי לָהֶם וְאַנְכִּי
אֲהִיה עִמְּךָ:

²⁴וַיְהִי | בְּכָלֹות מֹשֶׁה לְכַתֵּב אֶת-דִּבְרֵי
הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּאת עַל-סִפְר עֵד תְּמִם: ²⁵וַיְצַו
מֹשֶׁה אֶת-הַלּוּם נְשָׁאֵי אָרוֹן בְּרִית-יְהוָה

21. it will never be lost from the mouth of their offspring. God now refers to the descendants who presumably will memorize the poem or talk about it.

MOSES WRITES DOWN AND TEACHES THE POEM (31:22)

This parashah centers on the writing and recitation of two texts: the Teaching (torah) (see at v. 9) and the poem (shirah), the text of which follows in Deuteronomy 32.

GOD ENCOURAGES JOSHUA: “BE STRONG AND RESOLUTE” (31:23)

Completing the preparations for the transition in leadership, God appoints Joshua, echoing the words Moses uttered in vv. 6–8.

Moses Completes the Teaching (torah) and Recites the Poem (31:24–30)

Deuteronomy vacillates between the visionary rhetoric of promise-and-fulfillment and of its opposite, reproach-and-despair. So, too, does Moses. After his death, the people will remember him through his words and the written text.

MOSES INSTRUCTS THE LEVITES TO PLACE THE TEACHING IN THE ARK (31:24–27)

In v. 19, God instructs Moses to write down the poem, a task completed in v. 22. Now the focus reverts to the writing of the Teaching (torah). Verses 24–25 appear to be a resumption and repetition of v. 9, which describes how Moses finished writing the torah and gave it to the Levites. This section mentions only the Teaching—not the poem—which strongly suggests that vv. 16–22 (God’s angry speech and the anticipation of the poem as a witness against Israel) were inserted into the account of Moses’ completion of the writing of the Teaching.

Covenant of יְהוָה, saying: ²⁶Take this book of Teaching and place it beside the Ark of the Covenant of your God יְהוָה, and let it remain there as a witness against you. ²⁷Well I know how defiant and stiffnecked you are: even now, while I am still alive in your midst, you have been defiant toward יְהוָה; how much more, then, when I am dead! ²⁸Gather to me all the elders of your tribes and your officials, that I may speak all these words to them and that I may call heaven and earth to witness against them. ²⁹For I know that, when I am dead, you will act wickedly and turn away from the path that I enjoined upon you, and that in time to come misfortune will befall you for having done evil in the sight of יְהוָה, whom you vexed by your deeds.

³⁰Then Moses recited the words of the following poem to the very end, in the hearing of the whole congregation of Israel.

לֹאָמַר: ²⁶לְקַח אֶת סִפְרֵת הַתּוֹרָה הַזֹּה
וְשִׁמְתָּם אֹתוֹ מִצְדָּךְ אַרְנוֹן בְּרִית־יְהוָה
אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וְהַיְה־שֵׁם בָּכֶם לְעֵד: ²⁷כִּי אַנְכִּי
יַּדְעַתִּיל אֶת־מִרְאֵר וְאֶת־עֲרָפָה הַקְשָׁה חַזְן־
בְּעֻזָּבְנִי תֵּוי עַמְּכֶם הַיּוֹם מִמְּרוּם הַיּוֹתָם עַמְּ
יְהוָה וְאַף כִּי־אַחֲרֵי מוֹתִי: ²⁸הַקְהִילָּו אֶלְيָ
אַתְּ־כָּל־זָקֵנִים שְׁבֵטֵיכֶם וְשָׁטְרֵיכֶם וְאַדְבָּרֶ
בְּאָזְנוֹתֶיכֶם אֶת דְּבָרֵינוּ הָאֱלֹהִים וְאַעֲדִידָה בָּם
אַתְּ־הַשְׁמִים וְאַתְּ־הָאָרֶץ: ²⁹כִּי יַּדְעַתִּ
אַחֲרֵי מוֹתִי כִּי־הַשְׁתָּחַת תְּשַׁחַתְּן וְסַרְתָּמִ
מִן־הַדָּרֶךְ אֲשֶׁר צוִּיתִי אֲתֶיכֶם וְקָרָאתִ
אֲתֶיכֶם הַרְעָה בְּאַחֲרִית הַיּוֹם בִּיתְעַשֵּׂ
אַתְּ־הַרְעָל בְּעֵינִי יְהוָה לְהַכְעִיסָוּ בְּמַעַשָּׂה
יְדֵיכֶם:
³⁰וַיַּדְבֵּר מֹשֶׁה בָּאָזְנוֹ בְּלִקְהָלִיל יִשְׂרָאֵל
אַתְּ־דָבְרִי הַשִּׁירָה הַזֹּאת עד תִּמְמָם: פ

What links the two episodes is the importance and use of the written text. What separates them are their respective tones: optimistically hopeful versus starkly pessimistic.

26. Take this book of Teaching and place it beside the Ark of the Covenant. In contrast to the priestly description of the magnificent ark overlaid with gold found in Exodus and Leviticus (see at Exodus 25:10–22), Deuteronomy 31 values something else: an ark next to which is placed the written Teaching. Ancient Near Eastern political treaties were stored in containers and deposited in temples (see also at 10:5).

let it remain there as a witness against you. This clause forms another linkage between the two disparate passages of Deuteronomy 31. Just as the poem serves as a witness, so too does the Teaching.

27. Well I know how defiant and stiffnecked you are . . . you have been defiant. Moses now joins his wrathful voice to God's, seemingly on the point of despair. Could the repeated use of the verbal root m-r-h ("defiant") allude to the scene in Numbers 20:10 when a frustrated Moses calls the people by the same term after Miriam's death and just before his own punishment?

MOSES RECITES THE POEM AS A WARNING (31:28–30)

The last verses of the parashah appear to return to the subject of the poem (Deuteronomy 32), not the Teaching. In v. 28, Moses gathers together the elders of the tribes and the officials; but v. 30 stresses that all of Israel must hear the words of the poem. While the writing down of texts is central to this parashah, it begins and ends with Moses speaking. Only after his death will the written word speak on his behalf.

—Adriane Leveen

Another View

PARASHAT VAYEILECH DESCRIBES Moses' final preparations before taking leave of Israel. On the verge of his death, Moses appoints Joshua as military commander. He also sets the date on which the Torah should be read publicly; and, in an attempt to protect the people from God's wrath, he teaches the poem Haazinu (the content of Deuteronomy 32, in the next parashah). Knowing that he cannot enter the Promised Land and that he is about to die does not make Moses less committed to the nation. On the contrary, he carries out these preparations with great care and attention to detail, demonstrating his love and devotion to Israel.

One way that the parashah communicates this message is through the repetition of the word "all" (kol). Deuteronomy 31 begins with the statement that Moses addresses "all Israel" (31:1), and that "in the sight of all Israel" (31:7) he appoints Joshua as commander. The expression "all Israel" (kol Yisrael) is used frequently in Deuteronomy, reflecting the continued insistence that no individual should be left out. When Moses charges the priests and "all the elders of Israel" to impart God's Teaching (31:9), he repeats the command that this must be done when "all Israel" appears before God (31:11). Moses specifies that "men, women, children, and the strangers" must be gathered to learn "every word" of the Teaching (kol divrei hatorah) (31:12).

Moses demonstrates his concern and conscientiousness in other ways, too. In particular, he makes sure that women are included. Just as 29:10 makes it clear that women are part of the covenant ceremony, 31:12 states explicitly that women must study and faithfully observe the terms of the covenant. Similarly, Moses writes down the words of this Teaching "to the very end" (31:24), and he also recites the words of the poem "to the very end" (31:30).

The word kol also appears in an earlier passage, one that shows Moses at a rather different point in his life.

Like a loving parent, Moses conscientiously prepares to bid his "children" farewell.

During the course of the wilderness wanderings, Moses uses a striking maternal metaphor when, exasperated, he tries to distance himself from the people: "Did I produce [or: conceive] all this people (kol haam), did I engender [or: give birth to] them, that You should say to me, 'Carry them in your bosom as a caretaker carries an infant,' to the land that You have promised on oath to their fathers?" (Numbers 11:12). Now, at the end of the journey, Moses contemplates death, not birth. Like a loving parent, he conscientiously prepares to bid his "children" farewell as they enter the Promised Land without him.

—Talia Sutskover

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

He said to them: I am now one hundred and twenty years old, I can no longer be active (31:2). Some commentators could not imagine that Moses was deficient in any way. Ibn Ezra suggested that "I can no longer be active" meant that Moses could no longer wage war. A sage in BT Sotah 13b asserted that in his old age the "sources of wisdom" were stopped up for Moses to prevent his being troubled by the transfer of leadership to Joshua.

Gather the people—men, women, children, and the strangers in your communities (31:12). While the Rabbis apparently took for granted that the entire community of Israel was required to hear the divine “Teaching,” medieval interpreters (not usually known for their egalitarianism) wondered why the women were included. Rashi emphasized the distinction between the men and women: whereas the men were there to learn, the women were capable only of listening. Tanna D’Vei Eliyahu, a book of midrashim collected in the 10th century C.E., uses this verse to prove that it is the man’s responsibility to ensure that every member of his household follows the law faithfully (p. 112). The medieval commentator Nachmanides disagreed, emphasizing in his comments on this verse that the women who were present also learned to fear God.

When Moses had put down in writing the words of this Teaching to the very end (31:24). What does this “Teaching” constitute? Most of the Rabbis understood it to refer to the entire Torah, although they debated whether Moses actually wrote the last eight verses of Deuteronomy that recount his death (see BT Bava Batra 14b–15a). This understanding of Mosaic authorship is present in the Dead Sea Scrolls, where quotations from the Torah are often introduced by “Moses said,” or “as written in the Book of Moses.” However, Tanna D’Vei Eliyahu specifically designates God as the author, maintaining that the Torah was composed before the creation of the world (p. 160) (see Midrash B’reishit Rabbah 1.1). According to this midrash, the divinely revealed words are only called the “Torah of Moses” on account of God’s great mercy toward Israel’s greatest prophet. Several early interpretations of the Bible, such as the pseudepigraphical book of Jubilees, note that the purpose of the writing down of the Law was to remind future generations of the terms of the covenant and of Israel’s obligations to fulfill it. The Testament of Moses 10:11, another pseudepigraphical book, emphasizes that it was now Joshua’s responsibility to keep the words and the book.

Take this book of Teaching and place it beside the Ark of the Covenant. . . . Then Moses recited the words of the following poem to the very end (31:26, 30). Rabbinic and medieval commentators wondered about the relationship between the “Teaching” (torah; 31:9, 11–12, 24, 26) and the “poem” (shirah, often translated by others as “Song”; 31:19, 21–22, 30). According to Midrash Sifrei D’varim, this shirah (Deuteronomy 32), in which Moses calls upon heaven and earth as witnesses, is known as the “Song of Moses.” Since 31:26 designates the Torah as witness against Israel, some of the Rabbis smoothed out the relationship between the “Teaching” and the “Song” by equating the two (see BT Sanhedrin 21b and BT Chulin 133a).

Interpreters wondered why the women were required to hear the divine “Teaching.”

Although some commentaries interpret the poem as testimony by Moses against Israel, following the literal reading of 31:26, other rabbinic texts demonstrate that Moses frequently defended Israel to God. Thus, BT B’rachot 32a recalls that following the episode of the Golden Calf, God said, “Let Me alone and I will destroy them” (9:14); but Moses immediately “stood up, prayed vigorously, and begged for mercy” on Israel’s behalf. According to Midrash D’varim Rabbah 3.11, “Moses left no corner in heaven upon which he did not prostrate himself in prayer” on Israel’s behalf (also Midrash Sh’mot Rabbah 42.9). BT Sanhedrin 111a–b teaches that Moses continued to advocate for Israel, even after his death.

Then Moses recited the words of the following poem (31:30). The Rabbis speak of ten sublime “poems” (or “songs”; Heb. shirah) in the Hebrew Bible that mark central events in the history of the people of Israel; although they differ on the exact listing of the ten, they all include this poem (Midrash M'chilta, B'shalach, Shirta 1). Several of the other songs mentioned are specifically associated with women, including the Song of Miriam, in which she sang and led the women in dance (Exodus 15:20–21), and the Song of Deborah (Judges 5). Both celebrate Israel's victories over its enemies. According to the M'chilta, B'shalach, Shirta 1, the tenth song will be recited in the messianic era: “Sing a new song to יהוה; / sing God's praise, all the earth” (Isaiah 42:10).

VAYEILECH

—Meira Kensky

• • • • •

Contemporary Reflection

IT WAS THE MOMENT for which Moses had prepared nearly all his life. Reared in Egyptian luxury, mothered by a princess, Moses might have lived out his 120 years in careless splendor, unconcerned with the fate of hordes of Israelite slaves who labored outside his palace. Yet, from the moment that Moses—still a young man—slays the Egyptian taskmaster, he chooses to cast his lot with the slaves. For their sake—and their God's—Moses spends forty years traversing the wilderness, leading a complaining and defiant people, interceding with an inscrutable and demanding Sovereign, and somehow transforming the despised and oppressed into witnesses of miracles and keepers of revelation. The work is almost finished. God and Moses have brought the people to the edge of the Promised Land, a place Moses will not reach. He will gaze upon it from the heights of Mount Nebo, but he will die before he enters it.

Why will Moses forgo the glorious completion of the task into which he has poured his very life? In parashat Vayeilech, Moses himself explains: “I am now one hundred and twenty years old, I can no longer be active” (31:2). Translated more literally, Moses says, “I can no longer go out and come in.” Either way, the message seems clear: Moses is tired out; he is no longer feeling strong or vigorous. So he will remain on this side of the Jordan River, take a peek at the Promised Land, and then die a peaceful and contented death. It may seem strange that he is willing to miss this crowning achievement; but this appears to be his choice.

Except, of course, that he has not made such a choice. As the verse continues, Moses adds what might seem to be a secondary explanation, an afterthought—yet it contains some crucial information: “Moreover, פָּנָים has said to me, ‘You shall not go across yonder Jordan’” (31:2).

After all, isn't this the real reason that Moses will not enter the Promised Land? The Torah itself is quite clear that what Moses had done at a certain point prompted God to forbid him from crossing the Jordan. We read the unequivocal divine decree first in Numbers 20:12. After devoting his life to serving God's chosen nation, Moses shall not set foot in God's chosen land.

Moses' fate is painful, even tragic. Standing before the people he has so steadfastly led, he prepares not to shepherd them triumphantly into the Promised Land, but to install a new leader who will bring them to their destiny. It is, for Moses, a moment of enormous loss. He may speak as if he has a choice—as if he could lead the Israelites into the Land if only he were a little younger, a little stronger—but truly there is no choice at all. He may act as if he has freely decided to stay behind, but it is clear that the choice was made for him.

Today, we like to make our own choices. We live in a time when almost every institution, every career, every level of leadership beckons us. We swell with pride and optimism as we see women serving in the highest echelons of government, in our universities and in our armed forces, as respected doctors, artists, scientists, teachers, philanthropists. We prepare ourselves and our daughters for lives in which every possibility is open to us. We can choose the life we want to live—except when we cannot.

Except when a 14-year-old girl falls prey to our society's unspoken message to young women—"You are not pretty enough. You are not popular enough. You are not thin enough"—and spends her adolescence battling hateful voices in her head. She may tell you that she chose to watch her weight and eat very little. But in many ways, that choice has been made for her.

Except when a wife endures an abusive relationship, convinced that she is worthless and unable to make her own way in the world. When her husband begins to threaten their children, she finally gathers her courage and flees. Without money or marketable skills, she earns only substandard wages. She may tell you that she chose to go it alone, to work for low pay because she needs a job, to do without health care for herself so that she could provide for her family. But in many ways, that choice has been made for her.

Except when a woman devotes countless eighty-hour workweeks to her career and so is only a year or two away from a prestigious promotion when she and her spouse have a baby. When she returns to the office, her appeals for flexible hours, the chance occasionally to work from home, even a private place to express breast milk, are refused. She may tell you that she chose to quit her job and not work in an unsupportive environment, chose the rewards of at-home motherhood over the rewards of professional life. But in many ways, that choice has been made for her.

We find women all around us submitting to pressures and expectations that undercut our right to

She may tell you that it was her choice, but in many ways that choice was made for her.

choose the life we want to live. And yet, the pressures and the expectations that we encounter are not God's will. Whereas Moses' ability to choose his destiny ended when God made known the heavenly decree, our choices should not—must not—be bound by earthly decrees that dishonor and punish women, that teach young girls they are not good enough, that refuse to assist a persecuted victim in need, that force a mother to decide between her career and her child. Acknowledging the injustice of the choices women often face is surely the first step toward changing the pattern.

—Elaine Rose Glickman

• • • • • Voices • • • • •

The Keepers of My Youth

Karen Alkalay-Gut

Deuteronomy 31:2

At the Jewish Old Age Home in my home town,
the keepers of my youth sit in wheelchairs sunning themselves in the crisp autumn air.

Shriveled hands grasp at my clothes as I pass:
my third-grade teacher, the doctor who set my arm (broken from my first encounter with a bicycle),
the smiling crossing guard, my Hebrew school nurse.
Those who can speak and whose minds are clear reminisce with tears in their eyes; others look on and nod. “You played Haman in the Purim Spiel,” rasps the accompanist from the Folk Shule, “and now you are a grown-up lady with teenage children of your own.” “Look how tall she is—from all the lunches she ate at my house,” my old friend’s mother adds.

Here I am still in my flower. With a gentle hand
I smooth the shawls around their shoulders, tuck the bright wool blankets into their chairs,
and whisper encouraging farewells to my troops at the front.

Moon Is Teaching Bible

Zelda (transl. Marcia Falk)

Deuteronomy 31:10–13

Moon is teaching Bible.
Cyclamen, Poppy, and Mountain listen with joy.
Only the girl cries.
Poppy can’t hear her crying—
Poppy is blazing in Torah,
Poppy is burning like the verse.
Cyclamen doesn’t listen to the crying—
Cyclamen swoons
from the sweetness of the secret.
Mountain won’t hear her crying—Mountain is sunk
in thought.

But here comes Wind,
soft and fragrant,
to honor hope, to sing
the heart of each flying rider, each ardent hunter
swept to the ends of the sea.

Preparing for the Journey

Etty Hillesum (transl. Arnold J. Pomerans)

Deuteronomy 31:2

My heart failed a few times again today, but each time it came back to life. I say my goodbyes from minute to minute, shaking myself free of all outer things. I cut through the ropes that still hold me bound, I load up with everything I need to set out on my journey. I am sitting now by a quiet canal, my legs dangling over the stone wall, and I wonder whether one day my heart will be so weary and worn that it will no longer fly where it wants, free as a bird.

The Old Prayer Book

Miriam Ulinover (transl. Kathryn Hellerstein)

Deuteronomy 31:12

In one hand the old prayer book, tuition fee in her other,
And hanging from its string, the dangling pointer,—
As a child, my grandmother used to run quickly into the kheder
To repeat the alphabet, with the boys, in order.
Everything would have been fine; but the boys would hit her—
A girls' voice yowling can carry high as heaven.
Once long ago she nearly fainted, nearly perished
From the blows and benevolent slaps, what a horror!
But therefore a young wife is put in an ample chain,
With the same old prayer book, only now
without a pointer,
To lead the way through the entire shtetl to the yard of the shul.
How the new wife proudly takes up marching!
Wives stay mute, bashfully, silently, the women stare
At her mouth that does not rest from the Sabbath prayer,
As she, together with the congregation and the cantor,
Draws nearer the Shekhine praying, chanting.
In the shul an envious flurry, sweating,
and brow wiping,
As wives, poor things, can only turn the pages...
She flares up and throws herself afresh into the prayer:
For, of course, she is in her childhood home
in the old siddur!

What We Need

Elaine Marcus Starkman

Deuteronomy 31:19–22

We women need poems—
leaping lines to store

for cold winter nights
when our tongues crave juice;

mirrors to the inside of our heads when we cannot find our own reflections;

fancies that keep us
from meaningless work.

Depressions, holidays, lovers, prayers, friends

won't do the trick alone;
the emptiness only snaps back,

but immersing minds,
losing our bodies

letting our poems
take on an enormity,

grace,
sanctity,

fill us with delicious worth that feeds our hunger.

הָזִינْ ◆ Haazinu

DEUTERONOMY 32:1–52

The Song of Moses: A Foretelling of Future Events

PARASHAT HAAZINU (“give ear”) tells of a relationship gone awry. According to the poem at the heart of this parashah, God had established a special relationship with the people Israel and then lovingly watched over and cared for them, yet they rejected God and turned to other deities. Enraged at their betrayal, God resolves to decimate Israel. But God relents when realizing that the other nations might foolishly misinterpret Israel’s demise as a result of their own power, not as a divinely inflicted punishment. Thus, with a change of heart, God decides instead to avenge the Israelites against their enemies.

In the prior parashah (Vayeilech), God predicted that after Moses’ death, the people would go astray by worshiping other deities, which would prompt God to punish them (31:16–18). To prevent any misunderstanding of these future events, God instructed Moses to write down a particular poem and teach it to the people so that it would serve as a “witness,” testifying to God’s justice in the face of Israel’s wayward behavior (31:19). That poem, which constitutes most of parashat Haazinu (32:1–43), is followed by a confirmation that Moses recites the poem to the people (32:44–47); then, the parashah looks ahead to Moses’ imminent death (32:48–52).

Although the poem is not titled in the biblical text, people refer to it as “the Song of Moses” or “Shirat Haazinu” (“the Song [that begins with the word] Haazinu”). In light of various linguistic and grammatical features, most scholars agree that the Song originated earlier than the rest of the book, as an independent composition. While a precise date remains uncertain, scholars assume that the poem was written in response to some tragedy, in an attempt to make sense of the event and provide hope for the future. Later, Deuteronomy’s creators appended this preexistent poem to the book in order to reinforce the consequences of breaking the Covenant, a central theme in Moses’ parting words to the people.

Women were responsible for crafting and reciting similar sorts of poetic compositions.

While the name “Song of Moses” implies that Moses wrote this poem, authorship of the Song cannot be determined. Note, however, that a number of biblical passages indicate that women were responsible for crafting and reciting similar sorts of poetic compositions. Various women in the Bible perform songs to celebrate military victories (Miriam in Exodus 15:20–21; Deborah in Judges 5; Jephthah’s daughter in Judges 11:34; and the women welcoming the heroes in I Samuel 18:6–7). Combining this textual evidence with other data, some scholars have concluded that another poem attributed to Moses, the Song at the Sea (Exodus 15:1–19), may have been authored by a woman (see pp. 386–87, 392). Other biblical texts indicate that women composed and chanted laments in times of national crisis or personal loss. For instance, God instructs the prophet Jeremiah to summon the “wailing women . . . the skillful ones” (Jeremiah 9:16). Jeremiah then calls all the women, not just the professional female mourners, to listen to God’s word and then teach their daughters and friends a dirge (9:19).

As Shirat Haazinu recounts the troubled relationship between God and Israel, it specifies that both women and men alike will inflame God’s anger (v. 19) and suffer God’s wrath (v. 25).

The Song employs diverse metaphors to describe the Divine. In addition to the gender-neutral representations of God as a Rock (vv. 4, 15, 18, 30, 31, 37) and as an eagle (v. 11), God appears as a father (v. 6), warrior (vv. 23, 41–42), and, most remarkably, a mother who gave birth to and nursed her child, Israel (vv. 13, 18).

—Andrea L. Weiss

Outline

I. THE SONG OF MOSES

Shirat Haazinu (32:1–43)

- A. Introductory invocation (vv. 1–3)
- B. Recollection of God’s early relationship with Israel (vv. 4–14)
- C. Accusation of insubordination and idolatry (vv. 15–18)
- D. Punishment proposed (vv. 19–25)
- E. Punishment reconsidered (vv. 26–42)
- F. Concluding invocation (v. 43)

II. FINAL INSTRUCTIONS (32:44–52)

- A. Moses’ charge to the people (vv. 44–47)
- B. God’s instructions about Moses’ imminent death (vv. 48–52)

32:1

Give ear, O heavens, let me speak;
 Let the earth hear the words I utter!
²May my discourse come down as the rain,
 My speech distill as the dew,
 Like showers on young growth,
 Like droplets on the grass.

לֹבֶן אָזִינוּ הַשְׁמִים וְאֶרְבָּה
 וְתִשְׁמַע הָאָרֶץ אָמְרִי-פִּי:
 2 יִעַרְף בְּמִטְלָל לְקַחַי
 תַּזְלֵל בְּטַל אֲמְרָתִי
 בְּשֻׁעִירִים עַלְיָדְשָׁא
 וּכְרַבִּיכִים עַלְיָעָשָׁב:

The Song of Moses

SHIRAT HAAZINU (32:1–43)

Shirat Haazinu exhibits the defining features of biblical poetry, such as poetic parallelism, terseness, elevated diction, and various forms of repetition and patterning. Biblical poetry typically contains two, sometimes three, lines (called a “bicolon” or “tricolon” in the singular, and “bicola” and “tricola” in the plural) that relate to one another in a variety of ways. Parallel lines often appear to mirror one another, with one colon seeming to echo the general sentiment of the other, as in v. 2: “Like showers on young growth, / Like droplets on the grass.”

In other cases, while the lines as a whole may seem to be fairly synonymous, the individual word pairs within the parallel lines differ grammatically or semantically. For example, the two cola in v. 1 seem to be rather equivalent in terms of their overall meaning: “Give ear, O heavens, let me speak; / Let the earth hear the words I utter.” However, “heaven” and “earth” represent two distinct and complementary entities asked to listen the poet’s words. Plus, the end of the lines display a marked grammatical variance, for “let me speak” is a verbal phrase, whereas “the words I utter” (literally “the sayings of my mouth”) is a nominal (noun) phrase.

Elsewhere, the lines may not echo one another with any degree of grammatical or semantic equivalence or variation, but together may express a continuous idea, as in v. 8: “[God] fixed the boundaries of peoples / In relation to Israel’s numbers.” Being attentive to the dynamics of poetic parallelism can help the reader better understand this challenging text.

INTRODUCTORY INVOCATION (32:1–3)

Previously in Deuteronomy, Moses summoned heaven and earth as witnesses to the terms of the covenant (4:26; 30:19; 31:28), similar to the convention found in ancient Near Eastern political treaties. Here, the poet invites heaven and earth to listen to the words that follow. These two terms form a merism, which is an expression that uses two extremes to indicate a totality (see also at Exodus 10:9 and 11:5). By invoking these two contrasting

- Moses sings of God as faithful and nurturing, but also as violent and vengeful.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 1265

- The God imagery of this parashah encourages us to create new images of the Deity.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 1267

- The Midrash imagines that Israel—personified as a woman—will implore God to listen.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 1265

- The morning you wake to bury me, / you’ll wonder what to wear.

VOICES ► 1269

HAAZINU

DEUTERONOMY 32:3–6

³For the name of יְהוָה I proclaim;
Give glory to our God!

⁴The Rock!—whose deeds are perfect,
Yea, all God's ways are just;
A faithful God, never false,
True and upright indeed.

⁵Unworthy children—
That crooked, perverse generation—
Their baseness has played God false.

⁶Do you thus requite יְהוָה,
O dull and witless people?
Is not this the Father who created you—
Fashioned you and made you endure!

³כִּי שֵׁם יְהוָה אַקְרָא
הַבָּן גָּדָל לְאֱלֹהִינוּ:

⁴הַצּוֹל תְּמִימִים פְּעָלָו
כִּי בְּלִדְרוֹבָיו מִשְׁפָט אֶל אָמוֹנָה וְאֵין עֲוָל
צְדִיק וַיְשַׁר הַוָּא:

⁵שְׁחַת לֹא בְּנֵיו מוֹמָם
דָּוָר עֲקָשׂ וְפִתְלָתָל:

⁶הַלְּיְהֹוָה תְּגִמְלוֹזָאת
עַם נָבָל וְלֹא חָכָם
הַלְּיְהֹוָה אֲבִיךָ קָנָךְ
דוֹא עַשְׂךְ וַיְבִנְךְ:

realms, the poet may also seek to call upon everything in between them, namely, the entire world. Four similes in v. 2 compare Moses' words to water. Just as water is essential for sustaining life, so Moses hopes that the recitation of this message will enable Israel to “long endure on the land” that they prepare to enter (32:47).

RECOLLECTION OF GOD'S EARLY RELATIONSHIP WITH ISRAEL (32:4–14)

The first part of this section (vv. 4–6) establishes a stark contrast between God and Israel: God is “upright” (v. 4), but Israel is “crooked” (v. 5); God's deeds are “perfect” (v. 4), but Israel is “blemished” (rendered here as “unworthy,” v. 5); God is Israel's “Father” (v. 6), but Israel is God's “non-children” (see at v. 5 below). The second part of the section (vv. 7–14) utilizes various metaphors to recount the beneficent acts God performed on Israel's behalf.

4. The Rock! The word “rock” (tzur) stands out as a key word in the Song, recurring eight times: once to designate a literal stone (v. 13), twice as an ironic reference to foreign gods (vv. 31, 37), and five times to depict the God of Israel (vv. 4, 15, 18, 30, 31).

The Bible portrays God metaphorically more than thirty times using the term tzur, which in such contexts conveys the image of a large rock formation or mountain. In the Psalms, tzur appears frequently as a divine name or epithet, as when a psalmist cries out to “my rock and my redeemer” (Psalm 19:15) or praises “my strength . . . my fortress, my rescuer, my God, my rock in whom I seek refuge” (Psalm 18:2–3). In the present verse, however, “the Rock” appears in conjunction with other words that highlight God's steadfast loyalty and righteousness.

5. Various proposals have been suggested for reconstructing this obscure verse, which literally reads: “He has dealt corruptly with him not his children their blemish.” (For proposed solutions, see Jeffrey Tigay, Deuteronomy, 1996, p. 301.) The language in this verse reviles Israel by describing the people as having the opposite qualities as their God.

children. The reference to Israel as God's children anticipates the subsequent metaphors of God as Father (see below at v. 6) and Mother (see at vv. 13, 18). Elsewhere in the Song, the people are envisioned as young eagles (v. 11), unruly animals (v. 15), and servants (v. 43).

6. Father. Far fewer biblical passages (about twelve) refer to God as a father (av) than speak of ⁷Remember the days of old,

Consider the years of ages past;
Ask your parent, who will inform you,
Your elders, who will tell you:
⁸When the Most High gave nations their homes
And set the divisions of humanity,
[God] fixed the boundaries of peoples
In relation to Israel's numbers.

⁷ זִכְרֵי יְמֹת עַזְלָם
בֵּינוֹ שְׁנָוֹת דָּרוֹ-זָדָר שָׂאֵל אֲבִיךְ וַיַּגְדֵּר
זָקְנִיךְ וַיֹּאמֶר לְךָ
⁸ בְּהִנְצָל עַלְזָן גּוּיִם
בְּהַפְּרִידָוּ בְּנֵי אָדָם
יַאֲכִיל גִּבְלָת עָמִים
לְמִסְפָּר בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל:

God metaphorically as a rock (see at v. 4). Here the paternal analogy focuses on God's role as creator (see also Malachi 2:10). Other passages speak of God as a father in order to portray God's love and compassion (Psalm 103:13; Isaiah 63:16) or God's disciplinary role (Proverbs 3:12). Elsewhere, the metaphor highlights the special bond between God and Israel, a relationship that brings with it often unmet expectations (see Jeremiah 3:4, 19; 31:9).

A number of texts speak of Israel metaphorically as God's child without identifying the gender of the parent (see Exodus 4:22; Deuteronomy 1:31; Isaiah 1:2; Jeremiah 31:20; Hosea 11:1–4). Tikva Frymer-Kensky observes that in contrast to metaphors of God as shepherd, king, or master that "emphasize the great gulf in power and wisdom between humans and [the] divine," the metaphor of God as parent in such passages "emphasizes the emotional aspect of the commitment between the partners." She notes that metaphors of God as both father and mother (see at vv. 13, 18) express God's "dependable love" and compassion, as well as the way God nurtures, teaches, punishes, and redeems Israel. Reflecting on how the parental analogy functions in the Song, Frymer-Kensky writes: "It offers hope for the people of Israel in the time of their greatest suffering, for it carries with it a sense of anticipatory forgiveness and the end of suffering, the promises of an eternal bond that remains unbroken even through difficult times" (In the Wake of the Goddesses, 1992, pp. 162–63).

created you. This verb (from the root k-n-h) introduces a string of three verbs used to describe the way the divine Father begot Israel. Elsewhere, this verb is associated with the mother's reproductive capacity. After Eve gives birth to Cain (kayin), she explains the significance of his name: "Both I and יהוה have made (kaniti) a man" (Genesis 4:1). In Psalm 139:13, the speaker describes being created (kanita) by God "in my mother's womb."

7. your parent. Heb. av is used literally here, referring to biological parents, but figuratively in v. 6.

8–9. Tracing the relationship between God and Israel back to the "days of old," the poem refers to when God separated the human races into distinct nations (Genesis 10, 11:1–9) and selected Israel as God's "treasured people" (Deuteronomy 7:6).

8. In relation to Israel's numbers. As it stands, this verse implies that God divided all of humanity into a certain number of nations according to the number of Israelites. Many interpreters assume this means that God established 70 nations (Genesis 10) to match Jacob's 70 offspring (Exodus 1:5). However, variant readings preserved in the Qumran (Dead Sea) Scrolls and the ancient Jewish translation into Greek (Septuagint) suggest that this phrase originally read: "in relation to the number of divine beings" (b'nei elim instead of b'nei Yisrael). In that case, the verse asserts that God allotted lesser deities (such as those mentioned in Psalm 82) to the other nations to worship but set aside Israel as God's own

HAAZINU

DEUTERONOMY 32:9–11

- ⁹For יְהוָה’s portion is this people;
Jacob, God’s own allotment.
- ¹⁰[God] found them in a desert region,
In an empty howling waste.
[God] engirded them, watched over them,
Guarded them as the pupil of God’s eye.
- ¹¹Like an eagle who rouses its nestlings,
Gliding down to its young,
So did [God] spread wings and take them,
Bear them along on pinions;

⁹כִּי תַּלְكֵד יְהוָה עַמֹּוּ
יַעֲקֹב חֶבֶל נַחֲלָתוֹ:

¹⁰וְמִצְאָהוּ בָּאָרֶץ מִדְבָּר
וּבְתַּחַתּוֹ יְלָל יִשְׁמָן
יִסְבְּנָהוּ יְבֹונָהוּ
יִצְרָנָהוּ בְּאִישׁוֹן עַיִן:

¹¹כִּנְשָׁל יְעִיר קָנוּ
עַל־גּוֹזְלָיו יִרְחַף
יִפְרַשׁ בְּנֵפּיו יַקְהַחֵוּ
יְשָׁאָהוּ עַל־אָבְרָתוֹ:

people. As in Deuteronomy 4:19–20, such a reading would reflect a notion called monolatry, which refers to the allegiance to one God without denying the existence of other deities. Scholars assume that later scribes “corrected” the text (see also at v. 43) so that these words would conform to what became the monotheist standard: “I, I am the One; / There is no god beside Me” (v. 39).

10. [God] found them. By using this verb, the poet hints at several possible metaphors for the people Israel. What did God find in the wilderness? Hosea 9:10 employs the same verb when God reminisces: “Like grapes, in the wilderness I found Israel; like the first fig to ripen on a fig tree, I saw your ancestors.” Ezekiel imagines God finding something different when he narrates how God discovered Israel as an abandoned baby girl. According to Ezekiel 16:3–6, Israel was rejected on the day of her birth and left to die in an open field. God passed by, saw Israel wallowing in her blood, and resolved to save the baby girl: “In your blood, live!” Thus, perhaps the language in this passage evokes images of Israel as an abandoned girl or succulent fruit.

desert region. As in this verse, several prophetic passages look back nostalgically at the journey through the wilderness following the exodus from Egypt. For example, Jeremiah speaks of the time when Israel followed God in the wilderness with the devotion of a young bride (Jeremiah 2:2–3; see also 31:2–3; Hosea 2:16–17). Such depictions differ drastically from the way other parts of the Torah depict this time period (compare, for instance, 9:7 or Numbers 16–17).

as the pupil of God’s eye. This simile aims to illustrate how God guarded Israel in the wilderness like the blinking of the eyelid protects the vulnerable pupil. (Other translations employ an English idiom to render this expression as “the apple of His eye,” but the Hebrew text does not literally mention an apple.) Psalm 17:8 pairs this simile with an image of protection found in the following verse of the Song: “Guard me like the pupil of your eye; hide me in the shadow of Your wings.”

11. Like an eagle who rouses its nestlings. Many interpreters explain that this simile compares the way God cared for Israel in the wilderness to the way eagles train their young to fly. They assume the verb translated here as “rouse” implies that the mother or father eagle pushes the baby bird out of the nest and then hovers near by as the young bird tries to fly, ready to catch it should the need arise. Some scholars have questioned this interpretation, pointing out that observations by ornithologists do not confirm this type of behavior and that the verb in question might mean “protects.” In that case, the simile would supplement the depiction of God’s watchful care in the prior verse.

spread wings. Similarly, Exodus 19:4 envisions

¹² יְהוָה alone did guide them,
No alien god alongside.

¹³ [God] set them atop the highlands,
To feast on the yield of the earth;
Nursing them with honey from the crag,

And oil from the flinty rock,

¹⁴ Curd of kine and milk of flocks;
With the best of lambs,
And rams of Bashan, and he-goats;

With the very finest wheat—

And foaming grape-blood was your drink.

¹² יְהוָה בֶּן־יַחְנָנוּ
וְאֵין עִמּוֹ אֱלֹהִים :

¹³ יְרַכְּבָהוּ עַל־בָּמוֹתִי בְּמַתִּי אָרֶץ
וַיַּאֲכֵל תְּנוּבָת שָׂדֵי
וַיַּנְקַחַו דְּבָשׂ מִשְׁלָעָם
וְשֶׁמֶן מַחְלָמִישׁ צָוָר :

¹⁴ חִמָּאת בָּקָר וְחַלֵּב צָאן
עַמְּ-חַלֵּב בָּרִים
וְאַלְים בְּנֵי-בָשָׂן וְעַתְוֹדִים
עַמְּ-חַלֵּב בְּלִיוֹת חַטָּה
וְדַם-עַנְבָּר תְּשִׁתָּה-חַמָּר :

God carrying Israel “on eagles’ wings” (compare 1:31, which speaks of God carrying Israel through the wilderness as a parent). Several psalms speak of “the shadow of God’s wing” as a place of protection (see Psalms 17:8; 36:8; 57:2). Boaz blesses Ruth with the acknowledgment that she has sought to come under God’s sheltering wings (Ruth 2:12).

13. set them. Or “caused them to ride,” which would continue the eagle imagery of v. 11.

To feast. The poet introduces a new metaphor to enhance the argument that God showered Israel with the utmost kindness and generosity, which makes Israel’s subsequent defiance all the more astonishing. Carol Meyers argues that the general notion of God providing Israel with food likewise involves female divine imagery, for women prepared most of the food in ancient Israel (see the introduction to Exodus 15:22–17:16).

Nursing them. In applying to God the Hebrew verb y-n-k (which can be also translated as “suckling”), the poet adds an analogy to a mother with her newborn baby, an unmistakable maternal image. Thus, in describing how God nourished and sustained Israel, the poet juxtaposes the earlier image of God as father (v. 6) with a metaphor of God as mother. Although such specific female imagery for God is not common in the Bible, we do find other examples in which maternal metaphors depict God’s love, devotion, and care for the people to whom God gave birth. For example, in Isaiah 49:15, best translated as “Can a woman forget her nursing child, or show no compassion for the child of her womb?” the prophet’s rhetorical question reassures the people that God has not forgotten them (see also Isaiah 46:3–4 and at Numbers 11:12).

As Jeffrey Tigay observes, the verb y-n-k in this verse implies that “God fed Israel with virtually no effort on its part” by producing abundant food from unexpected sources: “honeycombs, found in the land’s countless caves and fissures, and oil-producing olive trees that flourish in its rocky limestone soils” (Deuteronomy, 1996, p. 305). Whereas other texts tell about God providing water from rocks (Exodus 17:6; Numbers 20:8–11), here the provisions are more lavish, thus emphasizing how God, like a mother, lovingly indulged Israel.

14. Curd . . . milk. The foods listed in this verse represent the type of generous hospitality one would offer a special guest, as Sarah and Abraham do in Genesis 18:6–8. Jael uses these two dairy products to lure the enemy king Sisera to sleep before she kills him (Judges 5:25).

HAAZINU

DEUTERONOMY 32:15–18

¹⁵So Jeshurun grew fat and kicked—
 You grew fat and gross and coarse—
 They forsook the God who made them
 And spurned the Rock of their support.
¹⁶They incensed [God] with alien things,
 Vexed [God] with abominations.
¹⁷They sacrificed to demons, no-gods,
 Gods they had never known,
 New ones, who came but lately,
 Who stirred not your forebears' fears.
¹⁸You neglected the Rock who begot you, Forgot the God who labored to bring you forth.

¹⁵ וַיִּשְׁמַן יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיִּבְעַט
 שְׁמִינַת עֲבֵית פְּשִׁית
 וַיִּטְשֶׁל אֱלֹהָה עַשְׁהוּ
 וַיִּנְבַּל צָוֵר יְשֻׁעָתוֹ:
¹⁶ יְקָנוּאָהוּ בָּרוּאִים
 בְּחֻזְבָּת יְכֻיסְּהוּ:
¹⁷ יַזְבְּחוּ לְשָׂדִים לֹא אַלְעָנָה
 אַלְהָהִים לֹא יִדְעָוָם
 חֲדָשִׁים מִקְרָב בָּאוּ
 לֹא שָׁעֲרוּם אַבְתִּיכְם:
¹⁸ צָוֵר יְלָדֶךָ תְּשִׁיָּה
 וַתַּשְׁבַּח אֵל מִחְלָלֶךָ:

ACCUSATION OF INSUBORDINATION AND IDOLATRY (32:15–18)

The tone of the poem changes sharply as God's graciousness gives way to Israel's ingratitude and worship of foreign deities.

15. grew fat. Four verbs in the first half of this verse emphasize how Israel became bloated and gorged in response to God's sumptuous provisions. Moses repeatedly expresses the concern that once the people have settled in the land and “eaten their fill,” they foolishly will attribute their success to their own actions and not acknowledge God’s role in their success, which then will lead them to forsake God and turn to other deities (6:10–13; 8:11–18; 11:15–16; 31:20). This sequence of events unfolds in the verses that follow.

kicked. This verb seems to introduce a new metaphor for Israel, who is envisioned as a fat, willful animal.

who made them. See at v. 18.

Rock of their support. This phrase invokes the more familiar characteristics associated with the rock analogy, namely, security and salvation (see at v. 4). However, the poet uses the metaphor ironically: the people have rejected God and sought support from alien gods.

16. incensed...Vexed. See at v. 21.

17. demons. Heb. sheidim, referring to protective spirits. Similar language appears in Psalm 106:37, which tells how the Israelites adopted the ways of their Canaanite neighbors and “sacrificed their sons and their daughters to the demons.”

18. the Rock. See at vv. 4, 15. This time, the metaphor calls attention to God as Israel’s creator.

begot you. Heb. y’lad’cha. This verb can signal a comparison between God and either a mother or father (as in Proverbs 23:22). However, nearly ten times as often, this root describes the mother’s role in giving birth (as when Leah, Rachel, and their handmaids Bilhah and Zilpah give birth in Genesis 29–30). Given the ambiguity of the biological sex referred to by this verb, one also could translate this verb with a more gender-neutral locution like “gave birth to you.”

labored to bring you forth. Whereas the previous verb in this verse (“begot”) can be used with men or, more often, with women, the parallel verb (from the root h-y-l) specifically applies to women. Unambiguously, the poet casts God in the role of the Mother who labored to give birth to Israel. The identical verb appears in Isaiah 51:2 when the prophet charges the people: “Look back to Abraham your father, and to Sarah who labored to bring you forth (h-y-l).” (This is the only reference to Sarah outside of Genesis.) Several biblical passages

¹⁹ יְהֹוָה saw and was vexed

And spurned these sons and daughters.

²⁰[God] said: I will hide My countenance from them,

And see how they fare in the end.

For they are a treacherous breed,

Children with no loyalty in them.

²¹They incensed Me with no-gods,

Vexed Me with their futilities;

I'll incense them with a no-folk,

Vex them with a nation of fools.

²²For a fire has flared in My wrath

And burned to the bottom of Sheol,

Has consumed the earth and its increase,

Eaten down to the base of the hills.

¹⁹ וַיִּרְאֶה יְהֹוָה וַיִּנְאַזֵּם

מִבְּעֵס בָּנָיו וּבָנָתָיו :

²⁰ וַיֹּאמֶר אֱלֹהִים פָּנִי מִלְחָמָם

אֲרֹאה מֵה אַחֲרִיתָם

כִּי דָוִר תְּהִפְכֵלֶת הָמָה

בָּנָים לְאַמְנוּן בָּם :

²¹ هֵם קְנָאוֹנִי בְּלֹא־אָלָה

כְּעִסּוֹנוּ בְּהַבְּלִילָם

וְאַנְּיִ אַקְנִיאָם בְּלֹא־עַם :

בָּגָוי נְבָל אַכְעִיסָם :

²² פִּירָאֵשׁ קָרְדָּחָה בָּאָפִי

וְתִיקְרַדְךָ עַד־שָׂאָול תְּחִתָּה

וְתִאְכַּל אָרֶץ וְיַבְלָה

וְתַלְחַט מַוְסְרִי חֲרִים :

use this root when they compare the trembling of people facing some desperate, dire situation to the writhing of a woman in labor (Isaiah 13:8; Jeremiah 4:31; 6:24; 22:23; Micah 4:9–10; Psalm 48:7; see also Jeremiah 30:6; 49:24). Isaiah 42:14, best translated as “Like a woman in labor I will scream, I will pant and I will gasp,” dramatically transforms this simile when using it to describe the powerful way that God will bring about redemption. Reflecting on how this verb functions in Shirat Haazinu, Bernard Levinson observes: “That God had to suffer labor pains to bear Israel only increases the injustice of Israel’s forgetting the divine parent.” He adds that the maternal metaphors for God “provide an important alternative to the normal masculine imagery associated with God” (“Deuteronomy,” Jewish Study Bible, 2004, p. 442).

PUNISHMENT PROPOSED (32:19–25)

After indicting the Israelites with forsaking their God and worshipping beings whose divinity is denied, God announces the consequences: decimation of the population, famine, and other deadly scourges. The One whose “ways are just” (v. 4) ensures that the punishment fits the crime (see at v. 21).

19. sons and daughters. Several prior passages in Deuteronomy recognize the possibility that either women or men might lure the people to worship what the Bible presents as foreign gods (17:2; 29:17); others emphasize the role of women in such acts (7:3–4; see also Numbers 25:1–18 and Jeremiah 7:18).

20. hide My countenance. See at 31:17.

Children. See at v. 5.

21. incensed...Vexed. The repetition of these two verbs in both halves of the verse emphasizes that God intends to respond to Israel’s apostasy with measure-for-measure punishment. (See at 5:9 for how the verb translated here as “incensed” relates to the metaphor of God as a jealous husband and Israel as an adulterous wife.)

no-gods...no-folk. Expressions with the word “no” recur throughout the poem (see at vv. 6, 17, 20); the linguistic repetition emphasizes the link between Israel’s actions and God’s reaction.

22. Sheol. This is the netherworld to which all the dead are believed to descend (see also at Genesis 42:38; I Samuel 2:6).

HAAZINU

²³I will sweep misfortunes on them,
 Use up My arrows on them:
²⁴Wasting famine, ravaging plague,
 Deadly pestilence, and fanged beasts
Will I let loose against them,
 With venomous creepers in dust.
²⁵The sword shall deal death without,
 As shall the terror within,
To youth and maiden alike,
 The suckling as well as the aged.
²⁶I might have reduced them to naught, Made their memory cease among
 humankind,
²⁷But for fear of the taunts of the foe,
 Their enemies who might misjudge
And say, “Our own hand has prevailed;
 None of this was wrought by יְהוָה!”
²⁸For they are a folk void of sense,
 Lacking in all discernment.
²⁹Were they wise, they would think upon this,
 Gain insight into their future:

DEUTERONOMY 32:23–29

²³אָסֵפָה עַלְיָמוֹ רִעוֹת
 חֲצֵי אֶכְלָה-בָּם:
²⁴מִזְרָחַ רָעַב וְלִתְמִימִי רְשָׁף
 וְקַטְבַּב מָרִינִי וְשָׂנִיר-הַמִּזְרָח
 אֲשֶׁלְחָדְבָּם
 עַמְ-חַמְתָּה זְחִילִי עַפְרָה:
²⁵מְחוֹזָן תְּשֵׁבָל-תְּרָבָּה
 וּמְחַדְּרִים אִימָה
 גַּמְ-בְּחֹור גַּמְ-בָּתוֹלָה
 יְוַיָּק עַם-אִישׁ שִׁיבָּה:
²⁶אָמַרְתִּי אֲפָאִיכָּם
 אֲשֵׁבִיתָה מַאֲנוֹשׁ זְכָרָם:
²⁷לוֹלֵי בָּעֵס אָוִיב אָגָור
 פָּנִים-נְבָרוֹ צְרִימָוּ
 פָּנִים-אָמָרוּ יְרָנוּ רְמָה
 וְלֹא יְהֹוָה פָּעֵל כָּל-זָאת:
²⁸בִּינְגָוִי אָבֵד עִצּוֹת הָמָה
 וְאַין בְּהָם תְּבוֹנָה:
²⁹לוֹ חַכְמָוּ יְשַׁכְּבָלוּ זָאת
 יְבִינָנוּ לְאַחֲרִיתָם:

23. My arrows. Mention of weapons here and in vv. 25, 41–42 evokes the metaphor of God as a (male) warrior. This image figures prominently in the Song at the Sea, the victory song that the Israelites recite after fleeing from Egypt (Exodus 15). Carol Meyers emphasizes that depicting God in masculine imagery “does not mean that the Torah’s composer(s) believed God to be a male being” (see at Exodus 14:14; 15:3); this observation also applies to the female divine imagery prominent in Shirat Haazinu. (For more on the warrior metaphor, see Another View, p. 1265.)

25. The poet employs a double merism (see at vv. 1–3), setting up an opposition between female and male, and young and old, to indicate that no one will escape God’s punishing wrath. Commenting on the mention of women and men here and in v. 19, Marc Brettler writes: “The poem thus explicitly includes women within its intended audience; this fits the gender-inclusive tendency present elsewhere in Deuteronomy (for example, 31:12)” (Women in Scripture, 2000, p. 236).

PUNISHMENT RECONSIDERED (32:26–42)

Having asserted that God would be justified in penalizing the people for their transgressions, the Song now takes an unexpected turn. Expressing concern that the foreign nations whom God wielded to punish Israel will attribute their victory to their own power, not to God’s might, God resolves to defeat the enemies and deliver Israel.

³⁰“How could one have routed a thousand,
Or two put ten thousand to flight,
Unless their Rock had sold them,
 יהוה had given them up?”

³¹For their rock is not like our Rock,
 In our enemies’ own estimation.

³²Ah! The vine for them is from Sodom,
 From the vineyards of Gomorrah;
The grapes for them are poison,
 A bitter growth their clusters.

³³Their wine is the venom of asps,
 The pitiless poison of vipers.

³⁴Lo, I have it all put away,
 Sealed up in My storehouses,

³⁵To be My vengeance and recompense,
 At the time that their foot falters.

Yea, their day of disaster is near,
 And destiny rushes upon them.

³⁶For יהוה will vindicate God’s people
 And take revenge for God’s servants,
Upon seeing that their might is gone,
 And neither bond nor free is left.

³⁷[God] will say: Where are their gods,
 The rock in whom they sought refuge,

³⁸Who ate the fat of their offerings
 And drank their libation wine?

³⁰אִיכָּה יְרַקֵּף אֶחָד אֶלְף
וּשְׁנִים יִנְיסֹו רַבָּה
אֲם-לָא בִּיעֲזָרָם מִכְרָם
וַיְהִי הַסְגִּירָם:
³¹כִּי לֹא כִּזְעָרָנוּ צְוָרָם
וְאַזְבָּינוּ פְּלִילִים:
³²כִּי-מְגַפֵּן סְדָם גְּפָנָם
וּמְשֻׁרְמָת עַמָּרָה
עַנְבָּמוֹ עַנְבִּירָושׁ
אֲשֶׁבֶלֶת מְרָתָת לִמוֹ:
³³חַמְתָּת תְּפִינָם יִנְמָם
וּרְאֵשׁ פְּתִינָם אַכְזָר:
³⁴הַלְאֵהָוָא קְמָס עַפְדָּי
חַתּוּם בָּאָזְצָרָתִי:
³⁵לִי נְקָם וּשְׂלָם
לְעֵית תִּמּוֹת רְגָלָם
בַּיּוֹרֵב יוֹם אַיִלָּם
וּחַשׁ עֲתָדָת לִמוֹ:
³⁶כִּירְדֵּין יְהֹוָה עַמּוֹ
וּלְלַעֲבָדָיו יִתְנַחַם
בַּיּוֹרָאָה כִּי-אֶזְלָת יָד
וְאַפְסָעֵצָר וְעַזְוֹב:
³⁷וְאָמַר אֵי אֱלֹהִימָו
צָור חִסְיוּ בָוּ:
³⁸אֲשֶׁר חָלֵב זְבַחִימָו יַאֲכִלוּ
יִשְׁתַּחוּ יִנְזַקְמָם

30. thousand...ten thousand. This word pair illustrates the type of intensification often involved in poetic parallelism, with the second line heightening the language of the first. For example, much to King Saul’s chagrin, the women who come out singing and dancing to greet the victorious troops utter this same word pair, but they associate the higher number with the man who will soon become Saul’s rival: “Saul has slain his thousands; David, his tens of thousands!” (I Samuel 18:7).

31. their rock...our Rock. Here and in v. 37, the poet returns to the rock metaphor, but this time as a way to ridicule those who rely on false deities. The so-called gods of the foreign nations do not exhibit the strength nor provide the refuge typically associated with the rock metaphor (see at v. 4). The meaning of the second half of the verse is uncertain.

32–33. Whereas God nursed Israel on fine wine (v. 14), her enemies will drink poisonous wine and thus die like the people of Sodom and Gomorrah.

HAAZINU

DEUTERONOMY 32:39–43

Let them rise up to your help,
 And let them be a shield unto you!
³⁹See, then, that I, I am the One;
 There is no god beside Me.
 I deal death and give life;
 I wounded and I will heal:
 None can deliver from My hand.
⁴⁰Lo, I raise My hand to heaven
 And say: As I live forever,
⁴¹When I whet My flashing blade
 And My hand lays hold on judgment,
 Vengeance will I wreak on My foes,
 Will I deal to those who reject Me.
⁴²I will make My arrows drunk with blood—
 As My sword devours flesh—
 Blood of the slain and the captive
 From the long-haired enemy chiefs.
⁴³O nations, acclaim God's people!
 For He'll avenge the blood of His servants,
 Wreak vengeance on His foes,
 And cleanse His people's land.

יְקֻומוֹ וַיַּעֲזַרְכֶּם
 יְהִי עַלְיכֶם סָתָרָה:
³⁹רָאֹו | עַתָּה כִּי אָנִי אָנִי הוּא
 וְאֵין אֱלֹהִים עַמְּדִי
 אָנִי אָמִית וְאַחֲרָה
 מְחֻצָּתִי וְאָנִי אַרְפָּא
 וְאֵין מִידִי מַצִּיל:
⁴⁰כְּרִדְאָשָׁא אֶל-שְׁמִים יְהִי
 וְאַמְרָתִי חַי אָנִי לְעָלָם:
⁴¹אִם-שְׁנוֹתִי בָּרָק חַרְבִּי
 וְתַאֲחוּ בְּמִשְׁפָט יְהִי
 אָשִׁיב נְקָם לְצָרִי
 וְלִמְשָׁנָאִי אֲשָׁלָם:
⁴²אֲשָׁכִיר חַצִּיל מְדָם
 וְחַרְבִּי תְּאַכֵּל בָּשָׂר
 מִקְםַ חָלֵל וְשָׁבֵיה
 מַרְאֵשׁ פְּרֻעּוֹת אֹוֵב:
⁴³הַרְנִינוּ גּוֹיִם עַמּוֹ
 כִּי דְמִעֲבָרִיו יְקוּם
 וְנְקָם יִשְׁיב לְעַרְיוֹ
 וּכְפָר אַדְמָתוֹ עַמּוֹ: פ

39. no god beside Me. See at 4:35.
deal death and give life. This verse encapsulates the seemingly contrasting facets of God's nature, a point communicated by the Song's diverse imagery. (See further Another View, p. 1265.)

wounded and...heal. Carol Meyers asserts that the depiction of God as healer may compare God to women as well as men, for both practiced folk medicine in ancient Israel (see at Exodus 15:26).

41–42. On the warrior imagery in these verses, see at v. 23.

CONCLUDING INVOCATION (32:43)

As it stands now, the Song ends by calling upon the foreign nations, those whose bloody demise has just been foretold, to praise Israel. Given various problems with the logic and structure of the current text, as well as alternative readings preserved in the Qumran (Dead Sea) Scrolls and the ancient Jewish translation into Greek (Septuagint), many scholars have concluded that the original version of this verse was markedly different. The first colon likely summoned the heavens, not the nations, to rejoice with God, which would mirror the poem's introduction (v. 1). The current reference to God's servants likely spoke of God's children, which would recall v. 5 and the depictions of God as Father and Mother. More significantly, the first colon likely contained a parallel line that read: "Bow to [God] all divinities" (elohim), which would resemble the reconstructed reading of "divine beings" in v. 8. Later ⁴⁴Moses came, together with Hosea son of Nun, and recited all the words of this poem in the hearing of the people.

⁴⁵And when Moses finished reciting all these words to all Israel,⁴⁶he said to them: Take to heart all the words with which I have warned you this day. Enjoin them upon your children, that they may observe faithfully all the terms of this Teaching.⁴⁷For this is not a trifling thing for you: it is your very life; through it you shall long endure on the land that you are to possess upon crossing the Jordan.

⁴⁸That very day יהוה spoke to Moses:⁴⁹Ascend these heights of Abarim to Mount Nebo, which is in the land of Moab facing Jericho, and view the land of Canaan, which I am giving the Israelites as

⁴⁴וַיָּבֹא מֹשֶׁה וַיְדַבֵּר אֶת-כָּל-דִּבְרֵי הַשִּׁירָה
הַזֹּאת בְּאַזְנֵי הַעֲםָן הוּא וְהוֹשֵׁעַ בְּנֵנוֹן:

⁴⁵וַיָּכֹל מֹשֶׁה לְדַבֵּר אֶת-כָּל-הַדִּבְרִים
הָאֱלֹהָה אֶל-כָּל-יִשְׂרָאֵל: ⁴⁶וַיֹּאמֶר אֶל-הָמִ
שְׁמוֹ לְבַבְלָם לְכָל-הַדִּבְרִים אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִ
מַعֲיד בְּכָם הַיּוֹם אֲשֶׁר תַּצְוֹם אֶת-בְּנֵיכֶם
לְשִׁמְרָה לְעֹשָׂת אֶת-כָּל-דִּבְרֵי הַתּוֹרָה
הַזֹּאת: ⁴⁷כִּי לֹא-זֶה רַק הוּא מִכֶּם כִּי-הוּא חַיָּכֶם וּבְזֶה תָּאִרְיכוּ יָמִים עַל-הָאָדָמָה אֲשֶׁר אַתֶּם עֲבָרִים אֶת-הַיּוֹם

שֶׁמֶה לְרִשְׁתָה: פ

⁴⁸וַיְדַבֵּר יְהוָה אֶל-מֹשֶׁה בְּעַצְם הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה
לְאֹמֶר: ⁴⁹עַלְהَا אֶל-הַר הָעָבָרִים הַזֶּה
הַר-גִּבְעָן אֲשֶׁר בָּאָרֶץ מוֹאָב אֲשֶׁר עַל-פָּנָי
יְרֵחוֹ וּוְרֵאֶה אֶת-אָרֶץ כְּנֻעַן אֲשֶׁר אַנְּנֵנִי scribes then removed this line so that it would not conflict with what became the monotheistic norm. (For further details, see Jeffrey Tigay, Deuteronomy, 1996, pp. 516–18; see also at v. 8 and 6:4.)

Final Instructions (32:44–52)

The prior parashah (Vayeilech) concerned the writing and teaching of both the torah (the “Teaching,” meaning most of Deuteronomy) and the shirah (the poem in 32:1–43), as well as the transfer of leadership in light of Moses’ imminent death. This prose unit touches upon these same topics.

MOSES’ CHARGE TO THE PEOPLE (32:44–47)

This section contains two parts. The first (v. 44) reiterates that Moses indeed taught the Song to the people, as God had instructed (31:19) and as reported earlier (31:22). The second (vv. 45–47) implores Israel to diligently follow the torah (see at 31:9), for their very existence in the land that they prepare to enter is said to hinge on their adherence to the laws and precepts preserved in the book of Deuteronomy.

44. Hosea. A variant of the name Joshua; see Numbers 13:8, 16.

the people. This verse and 31:30 form a prose frame around the poem.

GOD’S INSTRUCTIONS ABOUT MOSES’ IMMINENT DEATH (32:48–52)

According to 3:23–28, Moses had unsuccessfully pleaded with God to allow him to enter the Promised Land. As a concession, God instructed him to climb to the summit of Pisgah and survey the territory across the Jordan. This passage repeats those general instructions, but here God commands Moses to ascend “these heights of Abarim to Mount Nebo.” Shortly, 34:1 will harmonize these two traditions by stating that Moses went up “to Mount Nebo, to the summit of Pisgah.”

their holding.⁵⁰You shall die on the mountain that you are about to ascend, and shall be gathered to your kin, as your brother Aaron died on Mount Hor and was gathered to his kin;⁵¹for you both broke faith with Me among the Israelite people, at the waters of Meribath-kadesh in the wilderness of Zin, by failing to uphold My sanctity among the Israelite people.⁵²You may view the land from a distance, but you shall not enter it—the land that I am giving to the Israelite people.

לְבָנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְאַחֲזָה: ⁵⁰ וְמֵת בְּהֶר אֲשֶׁר
אַתָּה עֹלֶה שָׁמָה וְהַאֲסֵף אֶל-עַמִּיךְ פְּאַשְׁר-מֵת אַהֲרֹן אֲחִיךְ בְּהֶר הָהָר וַיַּאֲסֵף אֶל-עַפְרוֹן: ⁵¹ עַל אֲשֶׁר מִעְלָתֶם בֵּין בָּתּוֹל בָּנִי
יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּמִינִּימָיו בְּקָדְשָׁךְ מִדְבָּר-צִן עַל
אֲשֶׁר לְאַקְדְּשָׁתֶם אֶתְכֶם בְּתֻמָּה בְּנִי יִשְׂרָאֵל:
⁵² כִּי מִגַּד תְּرַא אֶת-הָאָרֶץ וְשָׁמָה לְאָ
תְּבוֹא אֶל-הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר-אָנִי נְתַנְּךְ לְבָנִי
יִשְׂרָאֵל: פ

50. You shall die... and shall be gathered to your kin. These two verbs are imperatives, as in the prior verse (literally, “Die... and be gathered”).

as your brother Aaron. This passage makes no mention of Miriam, the sister whose death and burial are briefly recorded shortly before Aaron’s death (both in Numbers 20).

51. Here God blames Moses’ (and Aaron’s) inability to lead the people into the Promised Land on the incident at Kadesh when Moses aggressively strikes the rock to make it produce water (Numbers 20:1–13). In contrast, prior passages in Deuteronomy assert that Moses was punished as a result of the incident of the scouts (see at 1:35; also 3:26; 4:21). These inconsistencies probably reflect a merging of sources and a desire to preserve multiple perspectives on this most poignant moment.

52. With the very last words in the parashah, God offers Moses the small comfort of seeing the destination of his life’s work from afar, while also reminding him that he will not be able to savor its rewards.

—Andrea L. Weiss

Another View

 PARASHAT HAAZINU PRESENTS us with startling contradictions: Moses sings of God as faithful and nurturing, but also as violent and vengeful. The images of God afflicting “the suckling as well as the aged” and firing arrows “drunk with blood” is disturbing at best. Where does this imagery come from, and how can it be reconciled with images of God as a tender caretaker?

Biblical portrayals of God as a warrior have deep roots in the traditions of the ancient Near East. As soon as warfare entered ancient Near Eastern culture (probably around 3000 B.C.E.), warrior gods rose to prominence throughout the region. Even a deity like Ishtar (sometimes referred to as Inanna), an ancient Mesopotamian goddess of love and fertility, took on a secondary role as a warrior. Likewise, epic poems related how Anat, the Canaanite goddess of love and war, rescues her brother Baal by killing the god Mot. According to the ancients, female and male warrior gods served as patrons to kings, who in turn carried out their warfare in the name of, and with assistance from, their patron deity. And Israel, by worshiping God as its divine ruler as well as the patron deity of its kings, affirmed that God was both willing and able to engage in bloody combat against all enemies.

Moses’ Song in Haazinu demonstrates the violence that, in an ancient context, formed part of the image of God as warrior and king: when Israel rebelled against its divine ruler, honor demanded that the people be punished. God, however, carries out Israel’s punishment by bringing foreign armies against the

Violence, in an ancient context, formed part of the image of God.

land—an event that could easily be interpreted as God’s defeat at the hands of a foreign monarch and his deity. Therefore, God acts “for fear of the taunts of the foe” (v. 27) and destroys the foreign army as well.

The biblical model of divine kingship affirms God’s care, guidance, justice, and certainly God’s power. But ancient kings were also expected to demonstrate their military prowess (hence God’s title Adonai Tz’vaot, God of Armies). In Shirat Haazinu, this view of God as a warrior-king is tempered by images of the same God giving birth to and nurturing the people.

—Julie Galambush

• • • • •

Post-biblical Interpretations

 Give ear, O heavens, let me speak (32:1). Midrash Sifrei D’varim 306 imagines that in the future, Israel—personified as a woman—will implore God to listen to her confession of sins. She will say, “Master of the universe, I now see the places that I corrupted, and I am ashamed”; but God will reply, “I shall cause them to pass away.” She will continue, “Master of the universe, my name is linked with the baalim [foreign gods]”; but God will reply, “I shall cause it to pass away.” Israel will then point out that if a man divorces a woman and she marries another man, he may never remarry her (24:1–4). However, the Almighty will respond, “Have you been divorced from Me, O house of Israel?” Thus, the Rabbis interpret the moment of divine judgment as a time of repentance (t’shuva) and reconciliation, in which the unfaithful Israel confesses her misdeeds and a loving God forgives her offenses and reaffirms their intimate relationship.

Like an eagle who rouses its nestlings (32:11). In Sifrei D'varim 314, the Rabbis expand on this biblical simile, comparing God to an eagle: “Just as the mother eagle does not enter her nest without first shaking her chicks with her wings, as she flies between one tree and another, between one bush and another, in order to rouse them so that they will be strong enough to receive her,” so also when the Holy One revealed the divine Presence in order to give the Torah to Israel, God did so “not from only one direction but from all four directions,” from Sinai, from Seir, from Mount Paran, and from Teman, to alert the people to the seriousness of the moment. Here the Sages evoke the Shechinah, the nurturing female aspect of the Divine, which is often described as drawing both converts and the faithful of Israel under her wings.

In this same midrashic passage, the Rabbis declare that 32:11 also alludes to other divine redemptions of Israel. In the second half of this verse, “So did [God] spread wings and take them” refers to Israel’s emancipation from slavery, recalling “how I bore you on eagles’ wings and brought you to Me” (Exodus 19:4). Similarly, the end of our verse, “Bear them along on pinions,” speaks of the future redemption when the nations “shall cradle your sons in their arms, / and carry your daughters on their shoulders” (Isaiah 49:22).

You neglected the Rock who begot you / Forgot the God who labored to bring you forth (32:18). Rabbinic interpreters were struck by the image of God—whose actions are generally described in male terms—as a woman in labor. They interpreted this verse as follows, “The Holy One... said to them, ‘You caused Me to feel like a male trying to give birth.’ If a woman about to give birth is sitting on the birth-stool, is she not anxious...? If she is in labor and giving birth for the first time, would she not be concerned...? If there are twins in her womb, would she not be uneasy...?” How much more so, “if it is a male, who does not ordinarily give birth but is trying to give birth, would not the pain be doubled and redoubled...?” Yet this is the extent to which God was prepared to labor and suffer out of love for Israel (Sifrei D'varim 319).

The grapes for them are poison, / A bitter growth their clusters (32:32). In P'sikta D'Rav Kahana 20.6, this verse figures in a long debate over the correct identification of the forbidden fruit that Eve and Adam ate in the Garden of Eden (Genesis 3). According to one of the Rabbis, this verse proves that the fruit was grapes, since “those clusters that Adam ate brought bitterness into the world.”

Rabbinic interpreters were struck by the Torah's image of God as a woman in labor.

through it you shall long endure (32:47). In its interpretation of this verse, Sifrei D'varim 336 observes that the study of Torah yields a double reward: one enjoys the fruit in this world and prolongs one’s days in the world-to-come. The midrash goes on to teach that this concept of a twofold recompense also applies to those who honor their fathers and mothers, as well as to people who devote themselves to establishing peace. The midrashic passage concludes with a consolatory prophecy for the days to come: “All your children shall be taught by תִּהְעַד, and great shall be the happiness of your children” (Isaiah 54:13).

—Judith R. Baskin

Contemporary Reflection

PARASHAT HAAZINU TROUBLES US with its extreme, opposing images of deity. Paradoxically, God is envisioned as comforting and frightening: the eternal guardian of Israel who eventually will redeem the people, and the jealous and judgmental deity who threatens to wreak vengeance on those who violate the covenant and turn to other gods. As Moses maintains, God is the giver of life and death, who heals as well as wounds (32:39–40). Thus, in his song to the Israelites contained in this parashah, Moses includes both a solemn warning that their lives as individuals and a people rest on their observing “faithfully all of the terms of this Teaching” (v. 46) and a final message of hope that God will one day deliver them from their enemies and they will “long endure on the land” given to them by God (v. 47).

As a contemporary reader I am prompted to ask numerous questions. For instance, why, in imagining God as comforter, does Moses use the image of an unmoving, unchanging rock (32:4, 15, 18, 30, 31)? Commentators view the metaphor of the rock as a vehicle for communicating the message that God’s righteousness and loyalty to Israel never waver, or for highlighting the superior, incomparable nature of Israel’s God. However, in spite of how the metaphor is used in the context of the Song, one could just as easily argue that this metaphor imagines God as a cold, unfeeling natural object, incapable of entering into a relationship with anyone or anything.

Moreover, why does Moses describe God anthropomorphically as a warrior whose “flashing blade / And... hand lays holds on judgment” (v. 41)? Where is God’s compassion for God’s people and for their enemies (who, after all, are also God’s creations)? Is it not possible to influence and protect one’s people without ruthless killing or threats of killing? Is the price of our deliverance the death of others?

Several feminists suggest that we respond to these questions by re-imagining our relationship with God. For example, in the place of God as rock or warrior, one might reclaim God as a parent who holds us in his or her arms, cares for us, and feels our pain. Some metaphors in the Song suggest such a perception, as when Moses speaks of God as a nursing mother (v. 13) who went through labor to bring forth Israel (v. 18; see also the indirectly maternal metaphor in Numbers 11:12). Jewish medieval mystics envisioned God as Shechinah, God’s feminine presence who went into exile with the Jewish people, weeping with them and sheltering them in her wings (see Va-eira, Contemporary Reflection, p. 351). More recently, this image has been invoked by some Jewish feminists. Identifying Shechinah as “She Who Dwells Within,” Rabbi Lynn Gottlieb envisions God as a Being who connects all of life, expresses our longing for wholeness, and like the God of Deuteronomy, ultimately calls us to justice (She Who Dwells Within: A Feminist Vision of a Renewed Judaism, 1995, pp. 25–48).

Why does Moses describe God via the images of a rock and of a warrior?

Some contemporary theologians have insisted that non-anthropomorphic images of God can also be images of intimacy, love, and creation. Marcia Falk, for example, draws on biblical phrases or concepts to “serve as fresh metaphors for Divinity.” She has created new images drawn from traditional Jewish sources and composed of the basic elements of Creation (earth, water, wind, and fire), such as ein hachayim, “well-spring or source of life,” nishmat kol chai, “breath of all living things,” and nitzotzot hanefesh, “sparks of the inner, unseen self.” Through these images, she hopes “to help construct a theology of immanence that will both affirm the sanctity of the world and shatter the idolatrous reign of the lord/God/king" ("Toward a Feminist Jewish Reconstruction of Monotheism," 1989, pp. 53, 56).

Judith Plaskow pursues a different path. While writing frequently about the importance of new, anthropomorphic images of deity, she maintains that "the traditional image of God as place (makom) evokes both the presence of the world in God and the extraordinary presence of God in particular places." She continues, "Lacking personal communal images to refer to God, we use this richly ambiguous term to point to community as a special place of God's self-manifestation" (Standing Again at Sinai, 1990, p. 165).

Viewed within its historical context, the God imagery of parashat Haazinu is understandable, even justifiable (see Another View, p. 1265). But its problematic vision for our time encourages us to create new images of the Deity that make the poem's underlying messages concerning the nature of God and the relationship between God and the Jewish people more compelling. This leads us to ask: What can we derive from parashat Haazinu? How else does it speak to us today? How can these images lead us to greater responsibility?

One clue may lie in the mention of Sodom and Gomorrah in v. 32. As part of the announcement of the punishment in store for Israel's enemies, this verse states: "Ah! The vine for them is from Sodom, / From the vineyards of Gomorrah." Through the metaphors in this verse, the Song maligns the nations as corrupt and foreshadows their fate. This calls to mind when God threatens to destroy those cities, prompting Abraham to protest: "Must not the Judge of all the earth do justly?" (Genesis 18:25). Perhaps parashat Haazinu can be seen as an invitation for us to act like Abraham and protest against what seems to be an indiscriminate, wholesale destruction. It is an opportunity to raise questions such as: Where is Your compassion, God, not only toward us but toward all of Your creation? Why frighten us with your threats? Will such threats make us abandon other deities or, just as likely, will they lead us to reject You? Such questions express what it means to be covenantal partners, willing to challenge God. Thus, beyond protesting against what we now deem unacceptable, this parashah can prompt us to examine who we mean by God. It also can remind us of what is required in order to create a just society and uphold a covenantal relationship.

—Ellen M. Umansky

• • • • • Voices • • • • •

My People

Else Lasker-Schüler (transl. Janine Canan)

Deuteronomy 32:1–43

The rock is crumbling
from which I arise
and sing my songs of God. . . .
Suddenly I plunge from the path and deep within stream over wailing-stone
alone to the sea.

I have washed so far from the ferment of my blood.
And still, within me, echoes the sound when—shuddering eastward—
the crumbling rock-bones of my People
cry out to God.

The Messenger Came in the Night

Rahel (transl. Robert Friend)

Deuteronomy 32:1–43

The messenger came in the night
and sat on my bed,
his body all protruding bones,
the eye-holes deep in his head;
and I knew time's hands were dangling (as though the words were unspoken), that the bridge between future and past had broken.

A bony fist now threatened,
and I heard aghast
sardonic laughter that said:
“This poem will be your last.”

Like a Poppy Borne by Wind

Esther Raab (transl. Harold Schimmel)

Deuteronomy 32:50

My God, when you come to pluck me, scatter my leaves on wings of the wind
so I'll remain like a headless poppy and bow down to the dust of my land as parched clods gather me — — — let a slate-blue sky
then gaze from above
with a forgotten cloud-end flung at its edge;
let a chain of hills listen and Ebal and Gerizim of grave thoughts blacken in shadow,
as dark cypresses sway in the wind and fields burdened-with-green extend unto them;
let warblers rustle
in the acacia hedgerows and bulbuls scissor orange grove lairs, mustard and chamomile unfurl carpets across expansive sands—
and my spirit hover above them like a poor poppy borne by the wind — — —

Journey's End

Linda Pastan

Deuteronomy 32:50

How hard we try to reach death safely, luggage intact, each child accounted for,
the wounds of passage quickly bandaged up.
We treat the years like stops along the way of a long flight from the catastrophe we move to, thinking: home free all at last.
Wave, wave your hanky towards journey's end;
avert your eyes from windows grimed with twilight
where landscapes rush by, terrible and lovely.

From a Mother to Her Girls

Karyn Kedar

Deuteronomy 32:50

The morning you wake to bury me
you'll wonder what to wear.
The sun may be shining, or maybe it will rain;
it may be winter. Or not.
You'll say to your self, black, aren't you supposed to wear black? Then you will remember all the times we went together to buy clothes: the prom, homecoming,
just another pair of jeans,
another sweater, another pair of shoes.
 I called you my Barbie dolls.
You will remember how I loved to dress you.
How beautiful you were in my eyes.

The morning you wake to bury me
you will look in the mirror in disbelief.
You'll reach for some makeup. Or not.
 And you won't believe that this is the morning you will bury your mother.
But it is. And as you gaze into that mirror you will shed a tear. Or not. But look. Look carefully, for hiding in your expression, you will find mine.
You will see me in your eyes, in the way you laugh.
You will feel me when you think of God,
and of love and struggle.

Look into the mirror and you will see me in a look, or in the way you hold your mouth or stand, a little bent, or maybe straight.

But you will see me.

So let me tell you, one last time, before you dress,
what to wear. Put on any old thing. Black or red, skirt or pants.
Despite what I told you all these years, it doesn't really matter.
Because as I told you all these years, you are beautiful the way you are.
Dress yourself in honor and dignity.
Dress yourself in confidence and self-love.
Wear a sense of obligation to do for this world, for you are one of the lucky ones and there is so much to do, to fix.
Take care of each other,
take care of your heart, of your soul.
Talk to God.
Wear humility and compassion.

When you wake to bury me, put on a strong sense of self, courage, and understanding.
I am sorry. Forgive me. I am sorry.
Stand at my grave clothed in a gown of forgiveness,
dressed like an angel would be, showing compassion
and unconditional love.
For at that very moment, all that will be left of me to give is love.
Love.

וְזֹאת הַבָּרֶכֶת ◆ V'zot Hab'rachah

DEUTERONOMY 33:1–34:12

Moses' Last Words: A Blessing for Israel

PARASHAT V'ZOT HAB'RACHAH (“this is the blessing”) presents Moses’ poetic blessing of the Israelites (33:1–29), which is followed by a brief record of Moses’ death and a tribute to his unparalleled prophetic stature (34:1–12). As we come to the end of Moses’ life, it seems fitting to reflect back on the epic story of Israel’s unrivaled leader.

Moses’ story begins in the book of Exodus (2:1–22), where we read that a Levite woman and a Levite man (later identified as Jochebed and Amram) give birth to a child whose life is imperiled by the Pharaoh’s decree to kill all Israelite baby boys. Although Moses’ mother initially defies the king and hides her son, after three months she is forced to abandon him, so she places him in a basket floating down the Nile. His sister, Miriam, then watches as Pharaoh’s own daughter rescues and adopts the Hebrew child. At Miriam’s suggestion, the princess hands Moses over to his mother, Jochebed, who nurses him for several years. Thus, it takes the courage, ingenuity, and collaboration of these three women to ensure the survival of Israel’s future liberator and leader.

Although raised as Egyptian royalty, Moses eventually identifies with the plight of his enslaved kin. But when defending a beaten Israelite leads to manslaughter, Moses flees to Midian. There, he marries Zipporah, the daughter of the Midianite priest Yitro, and fathers two sons. Then, while shepherding his father-in-law’s flocks on Mount Horeb (also known as Mount Sinai), he glimpses the Divine amidst a bush that burns yet remains unconsumed. Reluctantly, he accepts God’s call to return to Egypt and rescue his people (Exodus 3–4). With the aid of his brother Aaron, Moses orchestrates God’s signs and wonders and eventually persuades Pharaoh to let Israel go (Exodus 5–15).

The exodus from Egypt leads to a second encounter with God atop the same mountain,

It seems fitting to reflect back on the epic story of Israel’s unrivaled leader, Moses.

where God communicates the precepts by which Israel is to live (Exodus 19–20). The rest of the Torah describes how Moses oversees the construction of the Tabernacle and the ordination of the priesthood and then leads the people on a forty-year trek through the wilderness. Once they reach the plains of Moab, Moses reaffirms the covenant and instructs the people how to live in order to thrive in the Promised Land. For Israel, the wilderness journey will culminate in the entry into the land of Canaan, as recounted in the book of Joshua. For Moses, as we read in this parashah, the journey will end atop another mountain, Mount Nebo, as he surveys the land and dies at God's command.

Parashat V'zot Hab'rachah is unique in that it is not designated as a weekly Torah portion. Instead, it is read on Simchat Torah, the holiday that marks the conclusion of the annual Torah reading cycle and the commencement of a new lectionary cycle of weekly Torah readings.

The focus of this parashah is on Moses and the tribes named for Jacob's sons; women are explicitly mentioned only once, in the reference to a mother in 33:9. However, 33:4 states, "Moses charged us with the Teaching [torah] as the heritage of the congregation of Jacob." Who is "us"? Prior passages in Deuteronomy specify that women were included in the covenant (29:10) and were taught the torah (31:12).

Finally, 34:8 mentions that "the Israelites bewailed Moses" for thirty days. Evidence shows that women were trained as singers of laments and likely would have played a main role in mourning Israel's most cherished leader.

—Andrea L. Weiss

Outline—

I. THE BLESSING OF MOSES (33:1–29)

- A. Prose introduction (v. 1)
- B. Prologue: God as warrior and king (vv. 2–5)
- C. Blessing of the tribes (vv. 6–25)
- D. Epilogue: God as refuge and warrior (vv. 26–29)

II. THE DEATH OF MOSES (34:1–12)

- A. Survey of the Promised Land (vv. 1–4)
- B. Moses' death (vv. 5–7)
- C. Mourning for Moses, who is succeeded by Joshua (vv. 8–9)
- D. Tribute to Moses' unrivaled status (vv. 10–12)

33:1

This is the blessing with which Moses, God's envoy, bade the Israelites farewell before he died.² He said:

יְהוָה came from Sinai,
And shone upon them from Seir;

לֹא זָאת הַבָּרֶכה אֲשֶׁר בָּנָה מֹשֶׁה אִישׁ
הָאֱלֹהִים אֲתִ-בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לִפְנֵי מוֹתוֹ:
2 וַיֹּאמֶר

יְהוָה מָسִינִי בָּא
וְזָרָח מְשֻׁעִיר לְמַנוֹּן

The Blessing of Moses (33:1–29)

Moses delivers his final words to the entire assembly of Israel—men, women, and children, everyone from the leaders of the tribes to those who chop wood and draw water (29:9–10)—just before the “Source of the breath of all flesh” (Numbers 27:16) takes his life. Like Jacob, who blessed his sons while he lay on his deathbed (Genesis 49), Moses blesses the tribes of Israel. But, whereas Jacob’s words are often disparaging, Moses’ message is decidedly positive: he looks ahead to a time when the tribes will enjoy prosperity and security. Here, the criticism voiced in Deuteronomy 32 gives way to assurances and praise.

Many scholars maintain that the Blessing of Moses, like the Song of Moses that precedes it (in parashat Haazinu), was originally a separate composition that later was inserted into the concluding section of the book. A number of words and even complete verses continue to baffle scholars, and opinions vary about the likely dating of this text. Some assert that the verses before and after the tribal blessings (vv. 2–5 and 26–29) at one time constituted a separate hymn or might have been written as a framework for the preexisting blessings. Although vv. 2–29 are not laid out in poetic form in Torah scrolls, they exhibit the typical features of biblical poetry (see the introduction to 32:1–43).

PROSE INTRODUCTION (33:1)

This verse labels the poetic composition that follows as a “blessing.” While it has the overall appearance of a father’s last words to his offspring (as in Genesis 27:28–29, 39–40; 49:2–27), parts of the text display affinities to other genres, such as the hymn known as the Song of Deborah (Judges 5), and Balaam’s blessings of Israel (Numbers 23–24).

i. bade...farewell. Literally, “blessed.” See Genesis 27:10.

God’s envoy. Heb. ish ha-elohim, often translated as “man of God.” Although this is the only time that this phrase appears in the Torah, it occurs frequently in the rest of the Bible to designate Moses, certain other prophets, and King David. (For instance, see how the widow uses the expression to refer to Elijah in I Kings 17:18, 24 and the Shunammite woman as a label for Elisha in II Kings 4:9, 16). The present translation takes ish as referring here to

- The Bible names four women prophets: Miriam, Deborah, Huldah, and Noadiah.

ANOTHER VIEW ► 1284

- Jochebed heart-rendingly searches for her son, refusing to accept that he has died.

POST-BIBLICAL INTERPRETATIONS ► 1284

- Moses’ blessing involves the ability to dream of what he will not experience directly.

CONTEMPORARY REFLECTION ► 1286

- I see you as you were, and as you never were ... with the unrelenting mind of Spring ...

VOICES ► 1288

[God] appeared from Mount Paran,
And approached from Ribeth-kodesh,
Lightning flashing at them from on the right.
³Lover, indeed, of the people,
Their hallowed are all in Your hand.
They followed in Your steps,
Accepting Your pronouncements,
⁴When Moses charged us with the Teaching
As the heritage of the congregation of Jacob.
⁵Then [God] became King in Jeshurun,
When the heads of the people assembled,
The tribes of Israel together.

הוֹפִיעַ מָקוֹר פָּאָרֶן
וְאַתָּה מִרְבַּבָּת קְדֻשָּׁה
מִימִינֵנוּ אֲשֶׁר אָשָׁר לִמּוֹ:
³ אָף חַבֵּב עָמִים
בְּלִקְדְּשָׁיו בִּירָכָה
וְהַם תָּפֹר לְרִגְלָךְ
יִשְׂאָמָדְרָתִיךְ:
⁴ תּוֹרָה צְוָה-לָּנוּ מֹשֶׁה
מָוֹרֶשֶׁה קְהַלָּת יִעָּקָב:
⁵ וַיְהִי בִּישְׁרָון מֶלֶךְ
בְּהַתְּאֵסֶף רַאשֵּׁי עַם
יְחִיד שָׁבֵטִי יִשְׁرָאֵל:

the role of representing another party on a mission (as in, for example, Genesis 24:21; Leviticus 16:21; Numbers 13:2; 22:9; Deuteronomy 1:22); in that sense, the expression ish ha-elohim neatly encapsulates Moses' forty-year career as God's agent, which began at the Burning Bush (Exodus 3:10; see also at v. 16, below). (See David Stein, "What Does It Mean to Be a 'Man'?" 2006–7, §§ II.B.1; III.B.8.)

PROLOGUE: GOD AS WARRIOR AND KING (33:2–5)

This section (particularly v. 3) has baffled interpreters, ancient and modern, with its many difficulties. Nevertheless, the general message is that God came from the south to aid Israel (as in Judges 5:4; Habakkuk 3:3) and subsequently was considered Israel's king.

2. Sinai. This is the only time that this word appears in Deuteronomy; throughout the book, Horeb designates this mountain (see at Exodus 18:5).

Lightning flashing at them. Although the Hebrew here remains uncertain, the phrase seems to fit with the verse's underlying image of God as a (male) warrior who comes to Israel's salvation. (For more on the warrior metaphor, see at Exodus 14:14; 15:3; Deuteronomy 32:23; see also Haazinu, Another View, p. 1265.)

4. Moses charged us. Commentators have puzzled over the third-person reference to Moses in a text that he recites, as well as the relationship between this verse and its surrounding context. Some explain that God must have been the original subject; others view this as an acclamation of the people. Deuteronomy 31:12 emphasizes that the Levites are to teach the torah to all Israel—women and men, children and strangers.

Teaching. Heb. torah; see at 31:9.

5. [God] became King. Given the prominence of the image of God as king in Jewish liturgy, where most blessings contain the phrase melech ha-olam ("King of the universe"), it is surprising that the metaphor appears only three times in the Torah: here, Exodus 15:18, and Numbers 23:21. All three are poetic passages, which is where the king metaphor nearly always appears. It is found far more frequently elsewhere in the Bible (as in Isaiah 33:22; Psalm 24:7–10) and in ancient Near Eastern texts, where the notion of the divine king connotes not only power and authority, but also the execution of justice, compassion for the needy, and the maintenance of social order and prosperity (see Psalm 72).

Carol Meyers observes that the frequency and variety of andromorphic (male-shaped) images of God, such as divine king and warrior, "can produce

DEUTERONOMY 33:6–7

V'ZOT HAB'RACHAH

⁶May Reuben live and not die,
Though few be his numbers.

⁷And this he said of Judah:
Hear, the voice of Judah
And restore him to his people.
Though his own hands strive for him,
Help him against his foes.

וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה וְאֶל־יִשְׂרָאֵל
וְיֻחַד מְתַقֵּן מִסְפֵּר: ס זֶה אָתָּה לְיִהוָּדָה וַיֹּאמֶר שְׁמַע יְהוָה קֹול יְהוָה
וְאֶל־עֲמֹקֹת תְּבִיאֵנוּ
יְהִיוּ רָב לָנוּ
וְעֹזֶר מִצְרָיו תִּהְיָה: פ

the impression of God as exclusively male—the so-called patriarchal God of the Hebrew Bible.” She adds that since Hebrew is a gendered language and the words for God generally are masculine, this further contributes to the sense of a male deity (Women in Scripture, 2000, p. 526). Yet as she and other scholars explain, one must look more closely in order to get an accurate picture. The male images actually convey things about God other than gender (see at 10:17). Apart from such imagery and from the linguistic necessity of using masculine wording, the Torah is conspicuously silent about God’s gender, especially compared to ancient Near Eastern descriptions of other deities (see Tikva Frymer-Kensky, In the Wake of the Goddesses, 1992, pp. 83–99, 187–189). Meanwhile, female divine imagery, although less frequent, can in fact be found in the Bible (see at Exodus 15:22–17:16; 15:26; Numbers 11:12; Deuteronomy 32:13, 18). Biblical writers incorporated a range of female, male, and non-gendered metaphors for God as they attempted to articulate their understanding of who God is and how God operates in the world.

Jeshurun. See at v. 26.

BLESSING OF THE TRIBES (33:6–25)

Although Moses and his wife Zipporah have two sons, Gershom (Exodus 2:22; 18:3) and Eliezer (Exodus 18:4), as he approaches his death, Moses blesses not his biological heirs but the tribes, one by one. Usually, the tribes are listed in the birth order of their eponymous ancestors, grouped according to their mothers (see at Genesis 46:8–27 and at 49:1–27). Here, however, Moses addresses the tribes in geographical order, starting with Reuben, in whose territory the Israelites stand, and then moving across the River Jordan from Judah in the south to Asher in the north. Nevertheless, a maternal arrangement can be discerned, a likely reflection of existing geopolitical patterns: three of Leah’s first four sons (Simeon is not mentioned; see at v. 7 below), followed by Rachel’s two sons, then Leah’s fifth and sixth sons, and then the four sons of the handmaids, Zilpah and Bilhah.

6. The blessing for Reuben constitutes a plea that the tribe not perish. Situated in the Transjordan (see Numbers 32), this tribe was cut off geographically from most of the other tribes by the Jordan river and likely would have been vulnerable to attacks by neighbors to the east and south.

7. The blessing for Judah calls upon God to rescue Judah from an unidentified enemy. The depiction of Judah’s being in a precarious situation contrasts sharply with the characterization of Judah in Genesis 49:8–12. There, he is compared to a ferocious lion and described as being in a position of power and wealth. Some scholars posit that this verse originally may have contained a blessing for Simeon.

⁸And of Levi he said:

Let Your Thummim and Urim
Be with Your faithful one,
Whom You tested at Massah,
Challenged at the waters of Meribah;
⁹Who said of his father and mother,
“I consider them not.”
His brothers he disregarded,
Ignored his own children.
Your precepts alone they observed,
And kept Your covenant.
¹⁰They shall teach Your laws to Jacob
And Your instructions to Israel.
They shall offer You incense to savor
And whole-offerings on Your altar.
¹¹Bless, יְהוָה, his substance,
And favor his undertakings.

⁸ וְלֹלוּנִי אָמֵר
תְּמִיקָה וְאֲוֹרֶיךָ
לְאִישׁ חַסִידָךְ
אֲשֶׁר נִסְתַּו בְּמִלְחָמָה
תְּרִיבָבָהו עַל־מִינִי מְרִיבָה:
⁹ הַאָמֵר לְאָבִיו וְלְאָמוֹ לֹא רְאִיתִיו
וְאַת־אָחִיו לֹא דְבִיר
וְאַת־בָנָנו בָנָיו לֹא יִדְע
כִּי שְׁמָרו אָמָרְתָּךְ
וּבְרִיתְךָ נִצְרָרוּ:
¹⁰ יוֹרֵן מְשֻׁפְטִיק לִיעַקְבָּר
וְתוֹרְתָךְ לִיְשָׂרָאֵל
יִשְׂרָאֵל קָטוֹרָה בְאַפְךָ
וּכְלִיל עַל־מִזְבֵּחָךְ:
¹¹ בְּרִךְ יְהוָה חִילּוֹ
וּפְעַל יְדֵיו תְּרִצָּה

8-II. The blessing for Levi emphasizes the tribe's loyalty to God. As a reward, they have merited the privilege of serving as priests, teaching God's precepts, and officiating at the sacrificial altar.

8. Thummim and Urim. These divinatory devices (usually listed in the reverse order) apparently consisted of some sort of lots kept in a pouch attached to the priest's breastplate (see at Exodus 28:30).

Massah...Meribah. The mention of these two place names seems to refer to the incident in Exodus 17:1–7, but there the thirsty Israelites test God and the Levites play no role in the episode. However, the Torah records two other incidents in which the Levites display their faithfulness to God at the expense of their fellow Israelites. In Exodus 32:26–29, following the construction of the Golden Calf, the Levites rally to Moses' call and kill 3,000 of their “kin.” In Numbers 25, the priest (hence also Levite) Phinehas zealously stabs the Simeonite chieftain and the Midianite woman who are engaging in illicit activities at the entrance to the Tent of Meeting.

9. father and mother. This verse refers to an episode in which the Levites disregarded family ties in executing God's laws, possibly meaning the Golden Calf incident (Exodus 32:26–29). By implication, an Israelite man normally does—or at least should—consider the opinions of both his father and his mother. A number of biblical passage mention the mother alongside the father, most famously the command to honor one's father and mother (for example, see at Exodus 20:12 and at Leviticus 19:3, where the order is “mother and father”). In particular, Deuteronomy 13:7 warns against being lured into idolatrous practices by female or male relatives.

10. They shall offer You incense...And whole-offerings. While the priest officiates over the sacrificial system, those who bring the offerings—women and men alike—are to participate to some extent in the sacrificial ritual. (For details, see the Introduction to parashat Vayikra, p. 570.)

Smite the loins of his foes;
Let his enemies rise no more.

¹²Of Benjamin he said:

Beloved of יְהוָה,
He rests securely beside [God],
Who protects him always,
As he rests between God's shoulders.

¹³And of Joseph he said:

Blessed of יְהוָה be his land
With the bounty of dew from heaven,
And of the deep that couches below;
¹⁴With the bounteous yield of the sun,
And the bounteous crop of the moons;
¹⁵With the best from the ancient mountains,
And the bounty of hills immemorial;
¹⁶With the bounty of earth and its fullness,
And the favor of the Presence in the Bush.

מִחַץ מִתְנִינִים קָמִיו¹²
וּמִשְׁנָאֵיו מִן־יִקְרָמוֹן:

לְבָנִים֙ אָמֶר

יְהִיד יְהוָה

יִשְׁבֶּן לְבָטֵח עַלְיוֹ

חַפְּךָ עַלְיוֹ כָּל־הַיּוֹם

וּבֵין בָּתָפְיוֹ שָׁכֵן:

וְלִוּסֶף אָמֶר

מִבְּרָכֶת יְהוָה אֶרְצֶךָ

מִמְּגֹד שָׁמִים מִטְלָ

וּמִתְהָום רְבָצֶת תְּחַת:

וּמִמְּגֹד תְּבוֹאת שָׁמֶשׁ

וּמִמְּגֹד גָּרֵשׂ יְרָחִים:

וּמִרְאֵשׁ הַרְיִיךְרָם:

וּמִמְּגֹד גְּבוּות עֲולָם:

וּמִמְּגֹד אָרֶץ וּמִלְאָה

וּרְצֹן שָׁבֵני סָנָה

12. The blessing for Benjamin expresses a hope for security for this relatively small tribe. The last line is ambiguous; alternatively, it could mean that Benjamin is carried on God's shoulders (see 1:31), or that God dwells amid Benjamin's "slopes."

13–17. Joseph receives the longest blessing, which covers the two tribes named after his sons, Ephraim and Manasseh. The blessing emphasizes the fertility of their territory and their prominence.

13. the bounty. Heb. meqed. This key word repeats five times in vv. 13–16 as Moses elaborates on the fecundity of the land. In her book In the Wake of the Goddesses (1992), Tikva Frymer-Kensky argues that "the biblical understanding of fertility is radically different from that of ancient Near Eastern polytheism" (p. 92). She explains that in ancient Near Eastern polytheism "agricultural fertility is thought to result from the collective activity of male and female deities acting in concert (or consort)" (p. 89); yet in the Bible, God alone is responsible for the fertility of the land. Frymer-Kensky claims that a remarkable aspect of the creation account in Genesis 1 is that God makes the earth fertile, with seed-bearing plants able to reproduce if given the proper conditions. She writes: "To the Bible, God's fertility-bringing power lies in God's power over the rain. The natural state of the earth is fertile: it needs only the rain to activate this natural potential" (pp. 92–93).

16. the deep. Heb. t'hom, a noun that hints at a mythological link between the subterranean waters and the Mesopotamian goddess Tiamat (see at Genesis 1:2 and 7:11).

16. Presence in the Bush. Or "the One who Dwells in the Bush" (shochni s'neh); the later concept of God's Presence as the Shechinah comes from the same root as shochni (see T'rumah, Post-biblical Interpretations, p. 468). This unique epithet alludes to Moses' first encounter with God at the Burning Bush (Exodus 3:1–6).

May these rest on the head of Joseph,
On the crown of the elect of his brothers.
¹⁷Like a firstling bull in his majesty,
He has horns like the horns of the wild-ox;
With them he gores the peoples,
The ends of the earth one and all.
These are the myriads of Ephraim,
Those are the thousands of Manasseh.

¹⁸And of Zebulun he said:

Rejoice, O Zebulun, on your journeys,
And Issachar, in your tents.
¹⁹They invite their kin to the mountain,
Where they offer sacrifices of success.
For they draw from the riches of the sea
And the hidden hoards of the sand.

²⁰And of Gad he said:

Blessed be the One who enlarges Gad!
Poised is he like a lion
To tear off arm and scalp.
²¹He chose for himself the best,

תְּבֹאָתָה לְרַאשׁ יוֹסֵף
וּלְקָרְךָד נִזְרָר אֶחָיו:
¹⁷בְּכָר שׂוֹרֵז הַקָּרְבָּן
וּקְרָנֵי רָאֵם קְרָנֵי
בָּהָם עֲמִים יִנְגַּח
יְחִינְנוּ אַפְסִידָאָרֶץ
וְהָם רְבָבָות אַפְרִים
וְהָם אַלְפִי מְנַשָּׁה: ס

¹⁸וּלְזָבוֹלָן אָמֵר
שְׁמָחָ זָבוֹלָן בְּצָאתָךְ
וַיִּשְׁכַּר וַיִּשְׁכַּר בְּאַחֲלִיכָּה:
¹⁹עֲמִים הַרְיִקְנָה אָוֹ
שָׁם יִזְבְּחוּ זְבַחִיכְדָּק
כִּי שְׁפָעַ יְמִים יִנְקֹנוּ
וּשְׁפָנִי טְמוּנִי חֹול: ס

²⁰וּלְגָד אָמֵר
בָּרוּךְ מִרְחַיב גָּד
כְּלָבִיא שָׁבֵן
וְשְׁרָף זְרוּעַ אַקְרָךְ
²¹וַיֵּרֶא רְאַשִׁית לֹז

17. firstling. Although Joseph was Jacob's eleventh son, not his first, he was Rachel's long-awaited first-born. According to I Chronicles 5:1–2, Reuben lost his status as first-born because he "defiled his father's bed" by sleeping with his father's concubine, Bilhah (Genesis 35:22); as a result, Joseph received the birthright, even though Judah became the most prominent.

bull... wild-ox. These animals were common symbols of virility in the Bible and ancient Near Eastern texts.

18–19. This blessing speaks to the future fortune of both Zebulun and Issachar. It implies that the two tribes occupied the area from the Sea of Chinnereth (also called Lake Kinneret, or Sea of Galilee) as far as the Mediterranean, which allowed them to prosper due to their maritime ventures.

19. they draw from the riches of the sea. Literally, "they suckle," from the same root (y-n-k) used in the description of God nursing Israel with honey and oil (see at 32:13).

riches of the sea . . . boards of the sand. These phrases could refer to various goods, not only fish and shells, but also glass and murex snails—the treasured source of purple dye. (For more on the manufacture of dyed cloths and women's roles in these activities, see at Exodus 35:4 and T'rumatah, Another View, p. 467.)

20–21. The blessing of Gad alludes to this tribe's military might and their request to settle in the choice pastureland east of the Jordan (Numbers 32).

For there is the portion of the revered chieftain,
Where the heads of the people come.
He executed יהוה's judgments
And God's decisions for Israel.

²²And of Dan he said:

Dan is a lion's whelp
That leaps forth from Bashan.

²³And of Naphtali he said:

O Naphtali, sated with favor
And full of יהוה's blessing,
Take possession on the west and south.

²⁴And of Asher he said:

Most blessed of sons be Asher;
May he be the favorite of his brothers,
May he dip his foot in oil.

²⁵May your doorbolts be iron and copper,
And your security last all your days.

²⁶O Jeshurun, there is none like God,

בִּשְׁמָן חָלַקְתְּ מְחֻקָּק סָפָן וַיְתָא רָאשֵ׀י עַם
צְדָקָת יְהֹוָה עֲשָׂה
וּמִשְׁפָטָיו עַם־יִשְׂרָאֵל: ס

²² וְלֹאֵן אָמַר
הָן גּוֹרֶא אֲרֵיה
יְזָנֵק מִזְדְּבָשָׁן:

²³ וְלֹנְפְתָלֵי אָמַר
נְפְתָלֵל שְׁבָע רְצָוֹן
וּמְלָא בְּרִכְתִּי יהֹוָה
יִם וְדָרוּם יְרֵשָׁה: ס

²⁴ וְלֹאָשֵׁר אָמַר
בְּרוּךְ מִבְנָנִים אָשֵׁר
יְהָרֵץ יְאֵחָיו
וְטוּבֵל בְּשָׁמְןִ רְגָלוֹ:
²⁵ בְּרוּל וּנוֹחַשְׁתָּ מִנְעָלָה
וּבִימִיךְ דָּבָאָר:

²⁶ אֵין פָּאֵל יְשָׁרוֹן

²². The blessing of Dan uses a metaphor of a lion to depict their power and prowess (see also v. 20 and Genesis 49:9, where the image applies to Judah).

leaps forth. Heb. y'zanek, from the rare root z-n-k. Jeffrey Tigay notes that some scholars suggest emending this verb to yonek (y-n-k), “to suckle,” as in v. 19 (see also at 32:13). This would mean “that Dan is nourished effortlessly by the cattle and products of the fertile Bashan” (Deuteronomy, 1996, p. 411).

²³. The benevolent blessing of Naphtali reflects the tribe's location in the lush upper Galilee.

^{24–25}. The blessing for Asher revolves around the themes of agricultural fertility (see at v. 13) and security. The blessing seems fitting for the tribe's namesake, whom Leah named to capture her joy at giving birth to another son, through her handmaid Zilpah (Genesis 30:13).

²⁴. May he dip his foot in oil. This expression seems to reflect the abundance of olive trees in Asher's territory, in the highlands of the Galilee.

EPILOGUE: GOD AS REFUGE AND WARRIOR (33:26–29)

In this concluding section, Moses turns his attention from the individual tribes to the people as a whole. As he extols God as Israel's source of security and prosperity, he makes it clear that the key blessings he hopes for the tribes—fertility of the land, military success, and tranquility—depend on God's unparalleled beneficence and power. These are Moses' last words in the Torah.

²⁶. Jeshurun. This fairly uncommon name for Israel also appeared in v. 5, thus forming a frame around the tribal blessings.

Riding through the heavens to help you,
Through the skies in His majesty.

²⁷The ancient God is a refuge,
A support are the arms everlasting.
He drove out the enemy before you
By His command: Destroy!

²⁸Thus Israel dwells in safety,
Untroubled is Jacob's abode,
In a land of grain and wine,
Under heavens dripping dew.
²⁹O happy Israel! Who is like you,
A people delivered by יְהוָה,
Your protecting Shield, your Sword triumphant!
Your enemies shall come cringing before you,
And you shall tread on their backs.

רַכֵּב שָׁמִים בַּעֲזָרֶךָ
וּבְגָאוֹתָו שְׁחַקִּים :
27 מַעֲנָה אֱלֹהִי קָדָם
וּמְפַתַּחַת זְרוּעָת עַזְלָם
וַיִּגְּרַשׁ מִפְנֵיךְ אֹזֵב
וַיֹּאמֶר הַשְׁמָדָה :
28 וַיִּשְׁכַּן יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּطָה
בְּדַל עַיִן יַעֲקֹב
אַלְעָרֶץ דָּגָן וִתְּירֹושׁ
אֶחָשָׁמָנוּ יַעֲרֹבָה טָל :
29 אֲשֶׁר־יְהִי יִשְׂרָאֵל מִי כָּמוֹךְ
עַם נֹשֵׁע בִּיהְוָה
מִגּוֹן עֹזֶר וְאֲשֶׁר־חֶרֶב גָּאוֹתָךְ
וַיַּכְחַשׁ אֹזֵבְךָ לְךָ וְאַתָּה עַל־בָּמוֹתָינוּ תַּרְكָה : ס

there is none like God. A hallmark of Deuteronomy is its insistence on God's unrivaled divinity. Certain passages express a clearly monotheistic perspective (see at 4:35); others herald God's uniqueness while allowing for the existence of other, minor deities—a notion referred to as monolatry (see at 4:19–20; 32:8, 43).

Riding through the heavens. In the Bible, God frequently appears as a (male) warrior riding through the skies in order to rescue Israel from her enemies. Various passages depict God descending to earth on a chariot (such as Habakkuk 3:8), clouds (such as Psalm 104:3), or cherub (such as Psalm 18:11). The image is also found in other ancient Near Eastern texts, particularly Ugaritic poems describing the storm god Baal.

27. arms everlasting. This expression of God's support for Israel seems to portray God embracing or carrying Israel. Similarly, Deuteronomy 1:31 compares God's treatment of Israel in the wilderness to a parent carrying a child. Isaiah 40:11 promises that when God redeems the Babylonian exiles,

God will be like a shepherd who gently gathers and carries the flock in his or her arms (for examples of female shepherds, see Genesis 29:9; Exodus 2:16). Isaiah 46:3–4 expresses a similar message using a maternal metaphor. God addresses the exiles—“who have been carried since birth, / Supported since leaving the womb”—and pledges to them: “Till you grow old, I will be the same; / When you turn gray, it is I who will carry; / I was the Maker, and I will be the Bearer; / And I will carry and rescue [you].”

drove out the enemy. This looks ahead to the defeat of the Canaanites when Israel enters the Promised Land (see at 7:24).

28. Under heavens dripping dew. On the importance of rain or other forms of moisture for the fertility of the land, see at v. 13.

29. Shield...Sword. See at v. 2.

you shall tread on their backs. In the Bible and ancient Near Eastern documents, placing one's foot on the enemy's back or neck symbolizes victory (see Joshua 10:24).

34 Moses went up from the steppes of Moab to Mount Nebo, to the summit of Pisgah, opposite Jericho, and showed him the whole land: Gilead as far as Dan; ²all Naphtali; the land of Ephraim and Manasseh; the whole land of Judah as far as the Western Sea; ³the Negeb; and the Plain—the Valley of Jericho, the city of palm trees—as far as Zoar. ⁴And said to him, “This is the land of which I swore to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, ‘I will assign it to your offspring.’ I have let לְדֹבֶר מֵשֶׁה מִעָרְבַת מוֹאָב אֶל-הָרָבִיב

נָבָרֶךְ רַאשׁ הַפְּסָגָה אֲשֶׁר עַל-פְּנֵי יְרֵחוֹ
וַיַּרְאֵהוּ יְהֹוָה אֶת-כָּל-הָאָרֶץ אֲתִיהָגָלְעָד
עַד-זָן: ² וְאֶת כָּל-נְפָתָלִי וְאֶת-אֶרְצָן אֶפְרַיִם
וּמְנַשָּׁה וְאֶת בָּل-אָרֶץ יְהֹוָה עַד הַיָּם
הַאֲחֶרֶן: ³ וְאֶת-הַנֶּגֶב וְאֶת-הַכְּפֶר בְּקַעַת
יְרֵחוֹ עִיר הַתְּמֻרִים עַד-צָעֵר: ⁴ וַיֹּאמֶר
יְהֹוָה אֱלֹהִים זֹאת הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר נְשַׁבְּעָתִי
לְאַבְרָהָם לִיצְחָק וּלְיַעֲקֹב לְאָמֹר לֹא-רַעֲכָה

The Death of Moses (34:1–12)

The Torah preserves a number of narrative passages that record the deaths of select individuals: Sarah (Genesis 23:1–2), Abraham (Genesis 25:7–10), Ishmael (Genesis 25:17), Rebekah's nurse Deborah (Genesis 35:8), Rachel (Genesis 35:18–20), Isaac (Genesis 35:28–29), Jacob (Genesis 49:29–33), Joseph (Genesis 50:22–26), Miriam (Numbers 20:1), Aaron (Numbers 20:24–29), and Moses. These death reports show certain common elements, not all of which are mentioned for every character. Typical features include the person's age at the time of death, the location where the person died, the person's physical condition, a pronouncement of the death, typically with formulaic, euphemistic language (for example, “Isaac then breathed his last and died; he was gathered to his people old and full of years,” Genesis 35:29), details about the burial, and a comment about the mourning that follows the death. Of all these reports, only Moses' contains every one of these elements. The length of this unit and the way that it characterizes Moses testify to the unparalleled stature of the leader who shepherded the Israelites from the house of bondage to the gateway to the Promised Land.

SURVEY OF THE PROMISED LAND (34:1–4)

In 3:25, Moses recounted how he pleaded with God to reconsider his sentence: “Let me, I pray, cross over and see the good land on the other side of the Jordan.” Although God rejected the first part of Moses' entreaty, God conceded to the second part and agreed to let Moses view the land someday from a mountaintop in Moab (3:27). Finally, that day has arrived.

Having spoken his last words, Moses now performs his two last acts: ascending Mount Nebo, and surveying the land. He first gazes northward along the eastern side of the Jordan and then north to south on the western side, all the way from Dan to the Negev. It would not be humanly possible to see such a vast expanse of land from Moses' vantage point, but such a claim seems only fitting given the extraordinary nature of Moses' death and burial.

1. Moses went up. Two earlier verses record God's command to Moses to ascend a mountain to view the land (Numbers 27:12; Deuteronomy 32:49). In both cases, God reminds Moses that his inability to enter the land comes as a consequence of the incident at the waters of Meribath-kadesh when Moses “disobeyed” and “broke faith with” God (Numbers 27:14; Deuteronomy 32:51; contrast the explanation given in 1:37). Here, as is fitting for the laudatory nature of Moses' death report, neither God nor the narrator mentions anything about Moses' death atop Mount Nebo being a punishment.

Mount Nebo, to the summit of Pisgah. This verse seems to combine two traditions about Moses' death: one associated with Pisgah (3:27) and the other with Mount Nebo (32:49).

you see it with your own eyes, but you shall not cross there."

⁵So Moses the servant of יהוה died there, in the land of Moab, at the command of יהוה.⁶[God] buried him in the valley in the land of Moab, near Beth-peor; and no one knows his burial place to this day. ⁷Moses was a hundred and twenty years old when he died; his eyes were undimmed and his vigor unabated.⁸And the Israelites bewailed Moses in the steppes of Moab for thirty days.

The period of wailing and mourning for Moses came to an end. ⁹Now Joshua son of Nun was filled with the spirit of wisdom because Moses had laid his hands upon him; and the Israelites heeded him, doing as יהוה had commanded Moses.

אתנהה הראיתיך בעיןך ושם לא תעביר:

וימת שם משה עבד יהוה הארץ מואב
על-פי יהוה: ⁶ ויקבר אותו בגי הארץ
מוֹאָב מִלְּאָבֵד בַּיּוֹם הַזֶּה: ⁷ ומשה בן-מֹאָה קָבְרָתוֹ עַד הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה: ⁸ ומשה בן-מֹאָה
ועשׂרים שָׁנָה בָּמְתוּ לְאַכְתָּה עִינָו וְלֹא-נָס לְחָה: ⁹ ויבכו בני ישראל את-משה
בערבת מואב שלשים יומ
ויתנו ימי בכי אבל משה: ⁹ ויהושע בן-
נון מלא רוח חכמה כי-סמן משה את-ידיו עליו וישמעו אליו בני-ישראל ויעשו
באשר צויה יהוה את-משה:

4. "see it with your own eyes." Deuteronomy repeatedly uses this phrase to emphasize the importance of knowledge gained from firsthand experience (for instance, see 4:3, 9, 34).

MOSES' DEATH (34:5–7)

The report of Moses' death emphasizes that he did not die of natural causes, but at God's behest.

7. hundred and twenty years old. Genesis 6:3 appears to establish 120 years as the ideal human lifespan, although thereafter some biblical figures live longer; Sarah, for example, dies at age 127 (Genesis 23:1). This typological number can be accounted for as being three times forty (a key number in the Bible, as in the length of time of the wilderness journey) or two times sixty (important in the Mesopotamian sexagesimal system). As W. Gunther Plaut points out, 120 is the multiple of the first five whole numbers ($1 \times 2 \times 3 \times 4 \times 5$) (The Torah: A Modern Commentary, revised edition, 2005, p. 1387).

his vigor unabated. Literally, "his moisture had not departed [or: dried up]." Earlier, Moses told the people that he "can no longer be active" (31:2). Jeffrey Tigay therefore argues that this clause should be understood instead as meaning "he had not become wrinkled" (Deuteronomy, 1996, p. 338). (Compare Sarah's description of herself as "withered" in Genesis 18:12.)

MOURNING FOR MOSES, WHO IS SUCCEDED BY JOSHUA (34:8–9)

As they did for Aaron (Numbers 20:29), the people mourn Moses for thirty days. Various sources of evidence indicate that throughout the ancient world, women typically were associated with mourning rituals, composing and performing laments in times of collective and personal grief (see Chaye Sarah, Contemporary Reflection, p. 129). This section also confirms the successful transition of leadership to Joshua. Although he is a qualified successor, the subsequent section stresses that no one can rival Moses.

¹⁰Never again did there arise in Israel a prophet like Moses—whom יהוה singled out, face to face, ¹¹for the various signs and portents that יהוה sent him to display in the land of Egypt, against Pharaoh and all his courtiers and his whole country, ¹²and for all the great might and awesome power that Moses displayed before all Israel.

¹⁰ וְלֹא־קָם נִבְיאָה עוֹד בִּיִּשְׂרָאֵל בֶּמְשָׁה
אֲשֶׁר יַדְעֻוּ יְהוָה פָנָים אֶל־פָנָים: ¹¹ לְכָל־
הָאֹתָה וְהַמֹּופְתִּים אֲשֶׁר שָׁלַחוּ יְהוָה
לְעִשּׂוֹת בָּאָרֶץ מִצְרָיִם לְפִרְעָה וּלְכָל־
עַבְדָיו וּלְכָל־אָרְצָו: ¹² וּלְכָל הַיּוֹם הַחֲזָקָה
וּלְכָל הַמֹּרְאָה הַגָּדוֹל אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה מֶשֶׁה
לְעַיִּינִי בְּלִיּוֹן:

TRIBUTE TO MOSES' UNRIVALED STATUS
(34:10–12)

These concluding verses function as a eulogy, acclaiming Moses' incomparable stature as the sole prophet who merited unmediated contact with the Divine. (On women prophets, see Another View, p. 1284.) Following the reference to the covenant with the ancestors in v. 4, the text now highlights another pivotal biblical event: the wondrous acts that Moses performed on God's behalf, resulting in Israel's deliverance from Egypt. Just as the Exodus forms the foundation of the covenantal relationship between God and Israel—as reflected in the first verse of the Decalogue (Exodus 20:2; Deuteronomy 5:6)—so it is appropriate that the book of Deuteronomy, and hence the entire Torah, ends with the recollection of this event. As befits someone who assiduously sought to have Israel recognize and faithfully worship its God, the last words about Moses' life reiterate his deep bond with, and loyal service to, the Divine. For Israel to thrive in the Promised Land, and beyond, they will need both God's “mighty hand” (34:12, translated here as “great might”) and God's comforting embrace, the support of God's “arms everlasting” (33:27).

—Andrea L. Weiss

Another View

DEUTERONOMY 34:10 CLAIMS THAT no other prophet ever matched Moses, whom God had “singled out, face to face.” Albeit unique, Moses is only one of the many prophets who, as God’s spokespersons, guided Israel. In the Bible, Miriam is the very first person to receive the title “prophet” (Exodus 15:20; Genesis 20:7 refers to Abraham’s prophetic gifts, but he is not called “Abraham the prophet”). Along with several passages that mention unnamed female prophets (Isaiah 8:3; Ezekiel 13:17; Joel 3:1), the Bible names three other women prophets: Deborah, Huldah, and Noadiah.

Nothing is known about Noadiah (5th century B.C.E.) apart from Nehemiah’s claim that she opposed him (Nehemiah 6:14); she must have been important enough to disturb Nehemiah, but it is her predecessors Deborah and Huldah who are praised as prominent and influential. Deborah leads the Israelites to victory and is the only chieftain in that period of Israelite history who is also a prophet (Judges 4:4). The poem attributed to Deborah refers to her as a “mother in Israel” (Judges 5:7), a title that probably designates her position as the people’s protector rather than a biological maternity.

Huldah is perhaps Israel’s most successful prophet.

Whereas the messages of other prophets in the Bible often fall on deaf ears during their lifetime, Huldah’s authority goes unquestioned and her words are heeded instantly. According to II Kings 22 and II Chronicles 34, a royal delegation in 622 B.C.E. consults Huldah about the “book of the torah” that was found at the Temple. When she authenticates it as God’s teachings, the king immediately—and unquestioningly—implements the book’s laws. Huldah is identified as a married woman, whose husband is the keeper of the king’s Huldah is perhaps Israel’s most successful prophet: her words are heeded instantly.

wardrobe, while she herself holds “office” in a public area known as the Mishneh. Although the later rabbis express unease about the prominence of Huldah, the Bible presents her authority as a matter of fact. According to many modern scholars, the “book of the torah” that Huldah authenticates is Deuteronomy, or at least portions of it. If so, we owe the binding authority that Deuteronomy holds to none other than Huldah, whose own words confirmed and thus made possible the preservation and transmission of these teachings to us.

—Tamara Cohn Eskenazi

May Reuben live and not die (33:6). In his farewell blessing to the tribes of Israel, Moses first mentions the tribe of Reuben, descended from Jacob’s eldest son. His benediction for Reuben is expressed in biblical poetic parallelism. To the modern reader this may seem redundant, since it expresses the same idea twice, albeit in different words. For the Rabbis, however, this apparent repetition was an opportunity for interpretation. They noticed that while the first half of the verse expresses the hope that Reuben would live, the second half states that he should not die. Both of these outcomes are positive for Reuben, but the former is phrased in upbeat language, whereas the latter uses

Post-biblical Interpretations

May Reuben live and not die (33:6).

In his farewell blessing to the tribes of Israel, Moses first mentions the tribe of Reuben, descended from Jacob’s eldest son. His benediction for Reuben is expressed in biblical poetic parallelism. To the modern reader this may seem redundant, since it expresses the same idea twice,

V'ZOT HAB'RACHAH

negative terminology. Midrash Sifrei D'varim 347 finds different meanings in these linguistic nuances. Thus, the first phrase is said to refer to Reuben's reward for convincing his brothers not to treat Joseph as harshly as they would have liked (Genesis 37:22). The second half of the verse points to a death penalty decree for Reuben that has been reversed ("not die"), referring to the punishment that Reuben deserved for having sexual relations with Bilhah, his father's concubine and the mother of some of his brothers (Genesis 35:22). However, a prominent rabbinic tradition teaches that Reuben atoned for this sin and the decree of death was lifted. This midrash from Sifrei D'varim appears to link these two biblical incidents and implies that Reuben's good actions in one situation helped to atone for his bad actions in the other.

Jochebed outlived her son Moses, entering the land of Israel at the age of 250.

So Moses the servant of הָרָא died there (34:5). A medieval piyut (liturgical poem) begins with the words Azlat Yocheved ("Jochebed went out"), referring to Moses' mother (Exodus 6:20). This piyut is part of the Italian prayer tradition for the holiday of Simchat Torah, when the final Torah portion, including the account of the death of Moses, is read. (While there are no known midrashic parallels for the symbolic ideas in this piyut, it shares common motifs with rabbinic traditions, including a narrative about Moses' death found in Avot D'Rabbi Natan A 12, in which the angel of death, Samael, is the protagonist, rather than Jochebed.) In the piyut, Jochebed heart-rendingly searches for her son. She has heard of his death but refuses to accept that Moses has actually died. Understandably, a mother would not want to learn that her son had preceded her in death. However, Jochebed's refusal to believe in Moses' demise is complicated by the fact that only God knows the circumstances of his death and his burial place. This piyut describes Jochebed traversing the world, including Egypt and various other pivotal places in Moses' life, searching for him. In her travels, she asks inanimate objects to tell her the whereabouts of her son. Her quest, of course, is unsuccessful, because he is, in fact already dead and buried.

The theme of the poem "Azlat Yocheved" is based on the rabbinic premise that Jochebed outlived her son Moses, who was 120 years old at his death (34:7). Jochebed's long life is discussed in a rabbinic midrash in Seder Olam 9, where she is described as surviving all of her children and entering the land of Israel at the age of 250.

[God] buried him in the valley in the land of Moab (34:6). A midrashic tradition physically connects the burial place of Moses, who was interred alone, to the graves of Abraham and Sarah in the Cave of Machpelah (Genesis 25:10). According to Sifrei D'varim 357, the two sites were linked by an underground tunnel.

Moses' grave is unknown to human beings but it is known to God. In fact, according to 34:6, Moses was buried by God. BT Sotah 14a explains that the Torah is framed by two divine demonstrations of loving-kindness. The charitable act in the beginning was "clothing the naked." This was fulfilled when God "made outfits out of skin for Adam and his wife, and clothed them" (Genesis 3:21). The loving-kindness at the end of the Torah was "burying the dead," God's final act of caring for Moses. According to rabbinic sources (BT Shabbat 127a), preparing the dead for burial is one of the ten ethical obligations for which there is no measure and whose reward is without measure.

—Anna Urowitz-Freudenstein

Contemporary Reflection

MOSES' FINAL BLESSING to the tribes of Israel forms the coda for the five books of the Torah traditionally attributed to Moses. Often in Deuteronomy, Moses has admonished the people of Israel, sometimes threatening or even bullying them. Throughout the book, however, he also has offered the people blessings and a vision of God's love and potential rewards. Now, at the very end, Moses fills the people with hope and promise as he speaks to their best selves. As the greatest of teachers, Moses puts into words what they instinctively know what they long for but cannot quite articulate.

Moses and Israel began together as an erstwhile prince leading a band of slaves to freedom. Now, the people Israel are not only free, but also they are about to be responsible for their own lives in their own land. As they become a sovereign people, Moses (as it were) stitches them together, tribe after tribe, weaving a dramatic finale: "Thus Israel dwells in safety, / Untroubled is Jacob's abode" (33:28). This stunning statement confirms the Israelites' greatest hope, as well as ours today, envisioning a time even beyond the battles that lie ahead, when they finally will live in security and safety.

This parashah contains Moses' last blessing, indeed his last words to the entire people, one nation with many attributes and possibilities. Our Jewish religious tradition of blessings is not one of passive acceptance or recognition; instead, blessings demand action. This is why, for the most part, we recite a blessing before we carry out an action.

Some say that the Hebrew word for blessing (b'rachah) shares the same root as the word for knee (berech), as in "bend the knee." (Although there are scholars who dispute that theory, certainly our rabbis delighted in such wordplays.) When we recite a blessing, we bend ever so slightly, diminishing ourselves so as to affirm the Other and look deep into ourselves.

Through prayer, we express our gratitude, ask for more blessings, and strive to reach beyond our present limitations. Acknowledging that which is not necessarily in our control, we hope for God's gifts of a healthy, secure, and bountiful life, a life of purpose and meaning. This is Moses' b'rachah to us, then and now: to gather the best within and around ourselves so as to fulfill the "promise" of the Promised Land.

After Moses blesses the tribes, he then stands atop Mount Nebo and surveys the entire land. Viewing the Negev and the valley of Jericho—city of date palms—south to Zoar, perhaps Moses is able to discard all the Leadership is about affirming the future.

what if's, should have's, maybe's, and if only's. Perhaps he feels some sense of closure, an acceptance of what he could and could not accomplish in a lifetime. There is a certain humility in knowing our limits and recognizing when it is time to move on.

Part of Moses' blessing involves the ability to dream of what he will not see or experience directly. Affirming the future is what leadership is all about: knowing and accepting that our best dreams may be realized by others who come after us. Moses' words remind us that we need to pray and work for the blessings of justice, equality, and peace in order to fulfill our promise as individuals and to build the best family, community, society, and country that we can. We learn from Moses that sometimes we have to scale mountains in order to come closer to these blessings.

The late Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. invoked the scene on Mount Nebo in the famous speech he delivered in Memphis the day before he was assassinated (1968). He said: "Well, I don't know what will happen now. We've got some difficult days ahead. But it doesn't matter with me now. Because I've been to the mountaintop. And I don't mind. Like anybody, I would like to live a long life. Longevity has its place. But I'm not concerned about that now. I just want to do God's will. And He's allowed me to go up to the mountain. And I've looked over. And I've seen the promised land. I may not get there with you. But I want you to know tonight, that we, as a people, will get to the promised land" ("I See the Promised Land," April 3, 1968). This speech turned out to be Dr. King's last. Like Moses, his final words were a blessing for justice and peace in the service of God. This legacy of hope and vision of who we can and must become urges us on, reminding us of the dreams that remain for us to actualize.

V'ZOT HAB'RACHAH

Whenever we finish a book of the Torah in the synagogue's cycle of readings, those who are present respond immediately with three words: Chazak, chazak, v'nitchazek! "Be strong, be strong [in the singular] and we will be strong [in the plural]." My late father, Rabbi Wolfe Kelman, taught: Why do we say chazak twice, when once would be enough? It is to tell us that if you and I each are strong, then together we are even stronger. In other words, this is a true "win/win" situation: I need you to be strong so I can be strong too.

My father's lesson is especially true for the Jewish people today. As Jewish women, we need to be strong so that we can experience and contribute to the fullness of our Jewish tradition. Women's entry into the leadership of Jewish life and their involvement in every aspect of communal, religious, and intellectual life is the blessing of the last 30 years. Women have opened new vistas, introduced innovations in every vital sphere of Jewish living, and empowered themselves and their daughters and granddaughters. The Jewish world has been profoundly reshaped; yet there is still a way to go. Future generations of women must continue to redefine family and work, renew ritual, scale new horizons of scholarship, write liturgy and poetry, and make music, all the while recreating the Jewish community and its structures. The Jewish people can only be strong when it embraces all of its members; it takes the involvement of both Jewish women and Jewish men to make our community fuller and more vibrant.

Thus, the reading of the Torah ends with blessings and the charge to strengthen ourselves and our community. Moses teaches us to reach for blessings for ourselves and others, to strive for the humility to know our task, and to dream of how to transform what is to what can be.

—Naamah Kelman

Voices

Last Prayer

Esther Raab (transl. Harold Schimmel)

Deuteronomy 33

Don't make me so good
so lean and impoverished,
so empty,
"and knowing before whom you stand"— don't darken my final days do not exalt me,
and don't make me
so modest,
and don't offer me
as nourishment
to any abject soul,
to any outcast;
straighten my back,
and strengthen my loins;
let me gather narcissus
in your forbidden
meadows
so I can toss them to the wind, as if just once
the silo still brimmed over with goodness;
let me take in sacks of almonds
shedding a smell of mignonette on the terrace;
a smell of new wine,
in wagons
loaded with grapes
in the yard.

Unfulfilled Promise

Merle Feld

Deuteronomy 34:5–9

I guess I thought you'd lead me to the promised land, but finally I realize I never had a vision of what that would look like, or what it would feel like to be free and whole at last.

All I had was confidence in you as scout, trailblazer, trustworthy and steady guide. I had faith you'd take me the whole way and deliver me safely to the other side.

And now, we stand together
at the crossroads,
and you tell me,

*I've come as far as I can with you,
I've taught you whatever I know about how to find water*

in a wasteland, how to build a temporary shelter, how to read the sky, the stars, the trail and the winds.

I look to the horizon
but all I see ahead of me is more wasteland.

Anniversary

Judy Katz

Deuteronomy 34:5–8

Everywhere I look I see you.
April again. The coffee sitting too long in its white cup leaves a ring the color of your straw hat,
the one you wore in the garden. In forsythia,
I see you.
The small diamond chip in a stranger's ear.
On the bus I see you, and in galleries and cafes.
Your red coat. I see you young and I see you old.
Imagine, I see you old! Illumined by white hair, you are drinking juice. I see you in paintbrushes and water towers.
On evening walks, in the broken sky between buildings, I piece you together.

It is Passover again.
I see you at the seder, your pink and white robe,
in sweet apples and salt water, in the blunt, bitter root.
Tell me, exactly when is the moment of passing?

I travel to the desert, and there you are—the low airport buildings are yours; the sudden mountains,
yours. I see you in the clear light, the thin air,
the fifty shades of green beside the road.
At midday,
the rutted hills are your hands. We drive and I see them all day long.

I see you as you were, and as you never were.
In charcoal and in flesh, with the unrelenting mind

of Spring, I see you. The petal of the crocus that clings to my finger, the purple capillaries sprouting in my leg. You are the pavement
under my feet,
the bucket of daffodils the grocer moves to the front window.

from In the Jerusalem Hills

Lea Goldberg (transl. Robert Friend)

Deuteronomy 33:1–34:4

All the things outside love
come to me now:
this landscape with its old man's understanding begging to live
one more year, one more year,
one generation more,
one more eternity.

To bring forth thorns endlessly, to rock dead stones
like children in their cradles before they sleep.
To silence ancient memories,
one more one more
one more.

How strong the lust for life
in those about to die.
How terrible the longing
and how vain:
to live, to live
one more year, one more year,
one generation more,
one more eternity.

The Death of Moses

Jill Hammer

Deuteronomy 34:1–8

in the end it is we who come the ones who birthed him into life we come to bury him

called by the voices of birds
we come white-haired to the cave of the kisses of God

we carry the burial shroud
we have woven together in the dark of moonless nights ever since he went up the mountain

we are the hands of the Shechinah an old slave woman a midwife
a princess a stranger
our old feet have taken this journey we have lost daughters and husbands

we began redemption together on the banks of the Nile weaving reeds plots baby clothes
now we are the ones who finish the circle we do the last work of the wilderness

he has seen the whole land but we, we have seen the universe how a tiny child can become a river how a salt sea can turn to earth

we bury him in the valley
in the land of Moab
where one day a mother and a daughter will come to love one another and redemption will be born

we bury him in the shifting sands in a shroud white as the moon

“and no man knows his burial place until this day”

Untitled

Muriel Rukeyser

A tree of rivers flowing through our lives;
These lives moving through their starvation and greatness,
Masked away from each other, masked in lack.
Each woman seen as a river through whom lifetime Gives, and feeds. Each man seen giving and feeding.
Under all the images, under all growth and form. The energy of each, which is relation,
A flare of linked fire which is the need to grow,
The human wish for meaning.

Roots of diversity
Each being witness to itself, entering to relate, Bearing the flood, the food, the becoming of power,
Which is our eyes and our lives
Related, in bonds of flow.

There Are Stars

Hannah Senesh (transl. Ziva Shapiro, adapted)

Deuteronomy 34:10–12

There are stars whose radiance is visible on earth though they have long been extinct. There are people whose brilliance continues to light the world though they are no longer among the living. These lights are particularly bright when the night is dark. They light the way for humankind.

Transliteration Guide

Bibliography

Post-biblical Interpretations: About the Sources

About the Authors

About the Voices Contributors

Voices Publication Credits

Index of Voices Contributors

Index of Voices Titles

Index of Subjects and Cited Authors

Confidential -- for Sefaria conversion use only. May not be shared outside Sefaria.

Transliteration Guide

This commentary has adopted the simplified transliteration proposed by Professor Werner Weinberg of HUC-JIR and brought it into consonance with URJ Press style. Rather than provide a character-for-character transcription of how the Hebrew is written, it reproduces how the Hebrew is sounded according to standard Israeli pronunciation. Its features include:

- No distinction for consonants that sound the same: ס/ש and ט/ת and ב/ק and ב/ה
- ח and כ both appear as “ch” (pronounced as in Scottish “loch” or German “buch”)
- צ appears as “tz” (pronounced as in “blitz”)
- Silent letters (and gutturals at the start of a word): omitted except when one separates two vowels inside a word, in which case a hyphen or an apostrophe is introduced (as in רֹאִי, ro-i; מוֹעֵד, mo-eid; עֲקִידָה, raki'dah); in verbal roots, the letters א and ו represent א and ו, respectively.
- Resting schwa is omitted; moving schwa is shown as an apostrophe (as in שְׁמַד, sh'mad)
- An apostrophe sometimes separates consonants to preclude their being misread
- Half vowels are transliterated as full vowels (as in אֶמֶת, emet)

- Other vowels appear as follows:

| | | |
|----------------------------|---------------------------------------|-----------------------|
| א and אַ | kamatz gadol and patach | a |
| אָ | kamatz katon | o |
| אֵ | segol | e |
| אֵי | tzerei | ei or e |
| אִ | chirik | i |
| ׁאֵ and ׁאַ | cholem-vav and cholem | o |
| ׁאֵי and ׁאַ | shurek and kibbutz | u |

- Pronunciation of transliterated vowels:

| | |
|-----------|--------------------------|
| a | as in “aha!” |
| e | as in “red” |
| i | as in “spin” or “police” |
| o | as in “hole” or “north” |
| u | as in “ruler” |
| ai | as in “Thailand” |
| ei | as in “eight” |
| oi | as in “join” |

- ׁאֵ as a vowel letter may be omitted
- Doubled consonants are usually transliterated with single consonants.
- Customary spelling has been maintained of a few Hebrew words that have become part of common usage, especially proper names (for example, Ishmael rather than Yishmael; challah rather than chalab; niddah rather than nidah)

Confidential -- for Sefaria conversion use only. May not be shared outside Sefaria.

Bibliography

REFERENCE WORKS (cited by title)

ANET = Ancient Near Eastern Texts Relating to the Old Testament, 3rd edn., edited by James B. Pritchard. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1969.

The Contemporary Torah: A Gender-Sensitive Adaptation of the JPS Translation. David E. S. Stein, revising ed.; Adele Berlin, Ellen Frankel, and Carol L. Meyers, consulting eds. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 2006.

The Context of Scripture, edited by William W. Hallo et al. 3 vols. Boston: Brill, 2003.

The Torah: Documentation for the Revised Edition, by David E. S. Stein. Reform Judaism Publishing. w3id.org/tawc/01.

The Torah: A Modern Commentary, revised edn. W. Gunther Plaut, general editor; David E. S. Stein, general editor for rev. edn. New York: URJ Press, 2005.

Women in Scripture: A Dictionary of Named and Unnamed Women in the Hebrew Bible. . . . Edited by Carol Meyers et al. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 2000.

OTHER WORKS (cited by author or editor)

Ackerman, Susan. Warrior, Dancer, Seductress, Queen: Women in Judges and Biblical Israel. New York: Doubleday, 1998.

Adelman, Penina V., Ali Feldman, and Shulamit Reinhartz. The JGirl's Guide: The Young Jewish Woman's Handbook for Coming of Age. Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights Publishing, 2005.

Adler, Rachel. Engendering Judaism: An Inclusive Theology and Ethics. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 1998.

Aguilar, Grace. The Women of Israel or Characters and Sketches from the Holy Scriptures and Jewish History Illustrative of the Past History, Present Duty, and Future Destiny of the Hebrew Female, as Based on the Word of God (1845). Reprinted London: G.S. Appleton, 1851.

Alexiou, Margaret. The Ritual Lament in Greek Tradition. Lanham, MD: Rowman & Littlefield, 2002.

Alpert, Rebecca T. Like Bread on the Seder Plate: Jewish Lesbians and the Transformation of Tradition. New York: Columbia University Press, 1997.

Alter, Robert. The Art of Biblical Narrative. New York: Basic Books, 1981.

Baskin, Judith. Midrashic Women: Formations of the Feminine in Rabbinic Literature. Hanover: Brandeis University Press, 2002.

Bellis, Alice Ogden. Helpmates, Harlots, and Heroes: Women's Stories in the Hebrew Bible. Louisville, KY: Westminster/John Knox Press, 1994; rev. edn. 2007.

Berlinerblau, Jacques. The Vow and the "Popular Religious Groups" of Ancient Israel: A Philological and Sociological Inquiry. Sheffield, England: Sheffield Academic Press, 1996.

Bird, Phyllis. "Bone of My Bone and Flesh of My Flesh." Theology Today 50 (January 1994): 573–84.

———. "The Harlot as Heroine." Chap. 9 in Missing Persons and Mistaken Identities: Women and Gender in Ancient Israel. Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1997.

Brenner, Athalya, ed. The Feminist Companion to the Bible. Sheffield, England: Sheffield Academic Press, 1993–97 (10 vols.); second series, 1997–2001 (9 vols.).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Buckley, Thomas and Alma Gottlieb. "A Critical Appraisal of Theories of Menstrual Symbolism." In Blood Magic: The Anthropology of Menstruation, edited by Thomas Buckley and Alma Gottlieb, 1–44. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1988.
- Burns, Rita J. Has the Lord Indeed Spoken Only Through Moses?: A Study of the Biblical Portrait of Miriam. Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1987.
- Bynum, Caroline Walker. Holy Feast and Holy Fast: The Religious Significance of Food to Medieval Women. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1987.
- Cardin, Nina Beth, ed. Tears of Sorrow, Seeds of Hope: A Jewish Spiritual Companion for Infertility and Pregnancy Loss. 2nd ed. Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights, 2007.
- Chirichigno, Gregory. Debt-slavery in Israel and the Ancient Near East. Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1993.
- Cohen, Shaye J. D. The Beginnings of Jewishness: Boundaries, Varieties, Uncertainties. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1999.
- Cohen, Tamara. The Journey Continues: The Ma'yan Passover Haggadah. New York: Ma'yan, 2002.
- Cowley, A. Aramaic Papyri of the Fifth Century B.C. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1923.
- DeSilva, Cara, ed. In Memory's Kitchen: A Legacy from the Women of Terezin. Translated by Bianca Steiner Brown. Northvale, NJ: Jason Aronson, 1996.
- Douglas, Mary. Implicit Meanings: Essays in Anthropology. Boston: Routledge & Paul, 1975.
- _____. In the Wilderness: The Doctrine of Defilement in the Book of Numbers. New York: Oxford University Press, 2001.
- _____. "Mountain, Tabernacle, Body in Leviticus 1–7." Chap. 4 in Leviticus as Literature. New York: Oxford University Press, 1999.
- Ehrlich, Elizabeth. Miriam's Kitchen: A Memoir. New York: Viking, 1997.
- Falk, Marcia. The Book of Blessings: New Jewish Prayers for Daily Life, the Sabbath, and the New Moon Festival. San Francisco: HarperSanFrancisco, 1996.
- Fields, Harvey J. A Torah Commentary for our Times. New York: UAHC Press, 1990–1993.
- Fine, Lawrence. Physician of the Soul, Healer of the Cosmos: Isaac Luria and his Kabbalistic Fellowship. Stanford, CA: Stanford University Press, 2003.
- Fox, Nili Sacher. In The Service of the King: Officialdom in Ancient Israel and Judah. Cincinnati: Hebrew Union College, 2000.
- Fromm, Erich. You Shall Be As Gods: A Radical Interpretation of the Old Testament and Its Tradition. New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1966.
- Frymer-Kensky, Tikva. "The Atrahasis Epic and Its Significance for Our Understanding of Genesis 1–9," Chap. 4 in Studies in Bible and Feminist Criticism. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 2006.
- _____. "Deuteronomy." In Carol A. Newsom and Sharon H. Ringe, eds. Women's Bible Commentary. Louisville, KY: Westminster John Knox Press, 1992.
- _____. In the Wake of the Goddesses: Women, Culture, and the Biblical Transformation of Pagan Myth. New York: Free Press, 1992.
- _____. "Israelite Law: State and Judiciary Law," Encyclopedia of Religion, 2nd ed., New York: Macmillan Reference, 2005, 7:4741.
- _____. "Law and Philosophy: The Case of Sex in the Bible." Chap. 16 in Studies in Bible and Feminist Criticism. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 2006: 239–54.
- _____. Reading the Women of the Bible. New York: Schocken Books, 2002.
- _____. "The Strange Case of the Suspected Sotah: Numbers V 11–31." In Women in the Hebrew Bible: A Reader, edited by Alice Bach, 463–74. New York: Routledge, 1999.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- _____. Studies in Bible and Feminist Criticism. Philadelphia, PA: Jewish Publication Society, 2006.
- Geller, Stephen A. "Blood Cult: Toward a Literary Theology of the Priestly Work of the Pentateuch." Prooftexts 12/2 (1992): 97–124.
- Goldberg, Lea. Selected Poetry and Drama. Poetry selected and translated by Rachel Tzvia Back. New Milford, CT: The Toby Press, 2005.
- Goldstein, Elyse, ed. The Women's Torah Commentary: New Insights from Women Rabbis on the 54 Weekly Torah Portions. Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights, 2000.
- Grant, Alison M. "'adam and 'ish: Man in the OT." Australian Biblical Review 25 (1977): 2–11.
- Gray, Elizabeth Dodson. Sacred Dimensions of Women's Experience. Wellesley, MA: Roundtable Press, 1988.
- Greenberg, Aharon Yaakov, ed. Torah Gems. Translated by Shmuel Himelstein. Brooklyn: Chemed Books and Co., 1992.
- Greenberg, Blu. On Women & Judaism: A View from Tradition. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1981.
- Grosz, Katarzyna. "Some Aspects of the Position of Women in Nuzi." In Women's Earliest Records from Ancient Egypt and Western Asia: Proceedings of the Conference on Women in the Ancient Near East, Brown University, . . . November 5–7, 1987, edited by Barbara S. Lesko. Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1989.
- Grubbs, Judith Evans. Law and Family in Late Antiquity: The Emperor Constantine's Marriage Legislation. New York: Oxford University Press, 1995.
- Gruber, Mayer I. "Breast-Feeding Practices in Biblical Israel and in Old Babylonian Mesopotamia." Journal of the Ancient Near Eastern Society 19 (1989): 61–83. Reprinted in The Motherhood of God and Other Studies, 69–107. Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1992.
- _____. "Women in the Cult According to the Priestly Code." In Judaic Perspectives on Ancient Israel, edited by J. Neusner et al., 35–48. Philadelphia: Fortress, 1987. Reprinted in The Motherhood of God and Other Studies, 49–68. Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1992.
- Grushcow, Lisa. Writing the Wayward Wife: Rabbinic Interpretations of Sotah. Boston: Brill, 2006.
- Herzl, Theodor. A Jewish State: An Attempt at a Modern Solution of the Jewish Question. Translated by Sylvia d'Avigdor. New York: Federation of American Zionists, 1917.
- _____. Old New Land. Translated by Lotta Levensohn. New York: Bloch Publishing, 1941.
- Hirt-Manheimer, Aron, ed. The Jewish Condition: Essays on Contemporary Judaism Honoring Rabbi Alexander M. Schindler. New York: UAHC Press, 1995.
- hooks, bell. Feminist Theory from Margin to Center. Boston: South End Press, 1984.
- Ilan, Tal. "Women and the Rabbis," section of larger article: "Woman." Encyclopaedia Judaica, 2nd ed. Detroit: Macmillan Reference USA, 2007, 21:164–65.
- Josephus, Flavius. The Works of Flavius Josephus: Complete and Unabridged, New Updated Edition, translated by William Whiston. Peabody, MA: Hendrickson Publishers, 1987.
- JPS Hebrew-English Tanakh: The Traditional Hebrew Text and the New JPS Translation—Second Edition*. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 1999.
- Kaufman, Shirley, Galit Hasan-Rokem, and Tamar S. Hess, eds. Hebrew Feminist Poems from Antiquity to the Present: A Bilingual Anthology. New York: Feminist Press at the City University of New York, 1999.
- Keller, Catherine. The Face of the Deep: A Theology of Becoming. New York: Routledge, 2003.
- King, Philip J. Life in Biblical Israel. Louisville, KY: Westminster John Knox Press, 2001.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Klawans, Jonathan. Impurity and Sin in Ancient Judaism. New York: Oxford University Press, 2000.
- Koren, Sharon. "Shekhinah as a Female Symbol," section of larger article: "Shekhinah." Encyclopaedia Judaica, 2nd ed. Detroit: Macmillan Reference USA, 2007, 18:443–44.
- Leibowitz, Nehama. Studies in Bereshit (Genesis); Studies in Shemot (Exodus); Studies in Vayikra (Leviticus); Studies in Bamidbar (Numbers); Studies in Devarim (Deuteronomy). 5 Vols. Translated and adapted from the Hebrew by Aryeh Newman. 4th ed. Jerusalem: World Zionist Organization, 1980.
- Levine, Baruch A. The JPS Torah Commentary: Leviticus. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 1989.
- Levinson, Bernard. "Deuteronomy." In The Jewish Study Bible, edited by Adele Berlin and Marc Zvi Brettler, 356–450. New York: Oxford University Press, 2004.
- Levy, Richard. "Parashat Va-yechi." In Learn Torah With... 5755 Torah Annual: A Collection of The Year's Best Torah, edited by Joel Lurie Grishaver. Vol. 2, No. 12. Los Angeles: Alef Design Group, 1996.
- Maccoby, Hyam. Ritual and Morality: The Ritual Purity System and Its Place in Judaism. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1999.
- Magonet, Jonathan. "'But If It Is a Girl, She Is Unclean for Twice Seven Days': The Riddle of Leviticus 12:5." In Reading Leviticus: A Conversation with Mary Douglas, edited by John F. A. Sawyer, 144–52. Sheffield, England: Sheffield Academic Press, 1996.
- Malamat, Abraham. "You Shall Love Your Neighbor as Yourself: A Case of Misinterpretation?" In Die hebräische Bibel und ihre zweifache Nachgeschichte, edited by E. Blum et al., 111–16. Neukirchen: Neukirchen Verlag, 1990.
- May, Rollo. The Courage to Create. New York: Norton, 1975.
- Meyers, Carol L. Discovering Eve: Ancient Israelite Women in Context. New York: Oxford University Press, 1988.
- _____. Exodus. The New Cambridge Bible Commentary. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2005.
- _____. "Procreation, Production, and Protection: Male-Female Balance in Early Israel." Journal of the American Academy of Religion 51/4 (Dec. 1983): 569–593.
- _____. "The Roots of Restriction: Women in Early Israel?" The Biblical Archaeologist 41/3 (1978): 91–103.
- Milgrom, Jacob. The JPS Torah Commentary: Numbers. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 1990.
- _____. Leviticus 1–16: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary. Anchor Bible. New York: Doubleday, 1991.
- _____. Leviticus 23–27: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary. Anchor Bible. New York: Doubleday, 2001.
- _____. Leviticus: A Book of Ritual and Ethics. Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 2004.
- Mintz, Alan, ed. Reading Hebrew Literature. Hanover, NH: Brandeis University Press, 2003.
- Mirkin, Marsha Pravder. "Hearken to Her Voice: Empathy as Teshuva." In Beginning Anew: A Woman's Companion to the High Holy Days, edited by Gail Twersky Reimer and Judith A. Kates, 62–70. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1997.
- Nizan, Tal, ed. With an Iron Pen: Hebrew Protest Poems 1984–2004 [Hebrew]. Tel Aviv: Xargol Books, 2005.
- Pardes, Ilana. Countertraditions in the Bible: A Feminist Approach. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1992.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Person, Hara E. "Masa'ei (33:1–36:13): Boundaries and Limits." In The Women's Torah Commentary: New Insights From Women Rabbis on the 54 Weekly Torah Portions. Edited by Elyse Goldstein. 321–30. Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights Publishing, 2000.
- Plaskow, Judith. Standing Again at Sinai: Judaism from a Feminist Perspective. San Francisco: HarperCollins, 1990.
- Rich, Adrienne Cecile. An Atlas of the Difficult World: Poems, 1988–1991. New York: W. W. Norton, 1991.
- _____. Facts on a Doorframe: Poems 1950–2001. New York: W. W. Norton, 2002.
- _____. What is Found There: Notebooks on Poetry and Politics. New York: W. W. Norton, 2003.
- Scarry, Elaine. The Body in Pain: The Making and Unmaking of the World. New York: Oxford University Press, 1985.
- Schiff, Daniel. Abortion in Judaism. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2002.
- Schneider, Tammi. Sarah: Mother of Nations. New York: Continuum, 2004.
- Sered, Susan Starr. Women as Ritual Experts: The Religious Lives of Elderly Jewish Women in Jerusalem. New York: Oxford University Press, 1992.
- Stein, David E. S. "What Does It Mean to Be a 'Man'? The Noun 'ish in Biblical Hebrew: A Reconsideration." Unpublished memorandum, 2006–7. w3id.org/tawc/02.
- Suetonius Tranquillus, Gaius. The Twelve Caesars, translated by Robert Graves. Revised by Michael Grant. New York: Penguin, 2003.
- Teubal, Savina. Sarah the Priestess: The First Matriarch of Genesis. Athens, Ohio: Swallow Press, 1984.
- Tigay, Jeffrey. The JPS Torah Commentary: Deuteronomy. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 1996.
- Trible, Phyllis. "Depatriarchalizing in Biblical Interpretation," Journal of the American Academy of Religion 41 (1973): 30–48.
- Umansky, Ellen, and Dianne Ashton, eds. Four Centuries of Jewish Women's Spirituality. New York: Beacon Press, 1992.
- Washbourn, Penelope. "Becoming Woman: Menstruation as Spiritual Experience." In WomanSpirit Rising: A Feminist Reader in Religion, edited by Carol P. Christ and Judith Plaskow, 246–258. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1979.
- Weinfeld, Moshe. Deuteronomy 1–11. Anchor Bible. New York: Doubleday, 1991.
- Weissler, Chava. Voices of the Matriarchs: Listening to the Prayers of Early Modern Jewish Women. Boston: Beacon Press, 1998.
- Wolfson, Elliot R. Circle in the Square: Studies in the Use of Gender in Kabbalistic Symbolism. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1995.
- Zornberg, Avivah Gottlieb. The Particulars of Rapture: Reflections on Exodus. New York: Doubleday, 2001.

Confidential -- for Sefaria conversion use only. May not be shared outside Sefaria.

Post-biblical Interpretation: About the Sources

MODERN SOURCES CITED AND REFERENCE WORKS

Baskin, Judith R. Midrashic Women: Formations of the Feminine in Rabbinic Literature (Hanover, NH: Brandeis University Press, 2002). Analyses of portrayals of women in rabbinic texts.

Berlin, Adele, and Marc Zvi Brettler, editors. The Jewish Study Bible (New York: Oxford University Press, 2004). See particularly the seven essays in the section “Jewish Interpretation of the Bible,” pp. 1829–1919).

Brooten, Bernadette. Women Leaders in the Ancient Synagogue (Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1982).

Ginzberg, Louis. The Legends of the Jews. 7 volumes (Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 1909–1938; reprinted by Johns Hopkins University Press, 1988). Classic collection of midrash aggadah, translated, edited, and indexed by Henrietta Szold.

Holtz, Barry W. Back to the Sources: Reading The Classic Jewish Texts (New York: Touchstone, 1984). Excellent chapters on Talmud, midrash, and medieval biblical commentaries.

Itturei Torah, edited by Aharon Yaakov Greenberg (Tel Aviv: Yavneh, 1965–1991). 7 volumes; Hebrew. Selected comments on the Torah, featuring Chasidic and ethical materials. Available in a 3-vol. abridged English translation, Torah Gems.

Strack, H. L., and Günter Stemberger. Introduction to the Talmud and Midrash. 2nd Fortress Edition (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1996). Clear and inclusive introduction to the major works of rabbinic literature.

Weissler, Chava. Voices of the Matriarchs: Listening to the Prayers of Early Modern Jewish Women (Boston: Beacon Press, 1998). Pioneering study of early modern vernacular spiritual writings written for and by women.

RABBINIC TEXTS

Mishnah Cited by tractate, chapter, and individual mishnah. Edited in the Land of Israel in the 3rd century C.E.

Tosefta Contemporaneous with the Mishnah

Babylonian Talmud Abbreviated as BT. Cited by tractate, page number, and front (“a”) or back (“b”) of page. Edited in the 6th century C.E.

Talmud of the Land of Israel Also known as the Jerusalem Talmud (and thus abbreviated as JT) or the Palestinian Talmud. Edited in the 5th century C.E.

EARLY COMPILATIONS OF MIDRASH

These date from the period of the Talmuds—no later than the 6th century C.E.

B'reishit Rabbah: a commentary on Genesis

M'chilta: a commentary on Exodus; several versions

Sifrei B'midbar: a commentary on Numbers

Sifrei Zuta: a commentary on Numbers

Sifra: a commentary on Leviticus

Sifrei D'varim: a commentary on Deuteronomy

Avot D'Rabbi Natan: a commentary on Mishnah Avot; exists in two versions known as “A” and “B”

SELECTED POST-TALMUDIC
MIDRASH COLLECTIONS

Most of these texts are extremely difficult to date since their contents evolved and were altered over time.

Midrash Kohelet: a commentary on Ecclesiastes

Midrash Ester: a commentary on the book of Esther

Pirkei D'Rabbi Eliezer: a midrashic narrative of important events of the Torah

P'sikta D'Rav Kahana: commentaries on Torah and haftarah readings for festivals and other special occasions

P'sikta Rabbati: commentaries on Sabbath and holiday Torah and haftarah readings

Tanchuma or Y'lamdeinu: midrash collections on all five books of the Torah; several versions

Midrash Sh'muel: commentary on the two books of Samuel

Midrash T'hillim: commentary on Psalms

Midrash Mishlei: commentary on Proverbs

Seder Olam Rabbah (or simply Seder Olam): a midrashic history from Creation to the destruction of the Second Temple

Yalkut Shimoni: midrash collection on the entire Hebrew Scriptures

Tanna D'Vei Eliyahu: thematic midrash compilation on past and future eras of Jewish history

Midrash Rabbah: a large collection of separate commentaries on eight biblical books written in diverse times and places

Midrash HaGadol: a very large 14th-century compilation on the Torah; written in Yemen and preserved by Yemenite Jews

—Judith R. Baskin

About the Authors

Rabbi Judith Z. Abrams, Ph.D., directs Maqom, a school for adult Talmud study that she founded in 1995. She was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1985 and received her Ph.D. from Baltimore Hebrew University in 1993. For ten years she served congregations as their rabbi. She received the Covenant Award for excellence in Jewish education (1999) and was named Senior Religious Advisor to the State of Texas in 2000. Her publications include numerous books on Talmud, as well as liturgies for children, and a wide variety of articles.

Dr. Rachel Adler is Professor of Modern Jewish Thought and Judaism and Gender at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, Los Angeles. She received her Ph.D. in Religion and Social Ethics from the University of Southern California with a concurrent certificate in Judaica from HUC–JIR. She also holds an M.A. in literature from Northwestern University and an M.S.W. from the University of Minnesota. She is the author of Engendering Judaism (1999), which won a National Jewish Book Award, as well as many articles on gender and Jewish theology and law. Her essay “The Jew Who Wasn’t There” (1971) is often cited as the beginning of Jewish feminist thought.

Dr. Yairah Amit is a full professor of Hebrew Bible in the Department of Hebrew Culture Studies at Tel Aviv University, and is head of the Training Program for Teachers of Hebrew Bible at the School of Education at Tel Aviv University. She holds an M.A. from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and a Ph.D. from Tel Aviv University. She has authored books including History and Ideology: An Introduction to Historiography in the Hebrew Bible (1999), Hidden Polemics in Biblical Narrative (2000), and Reading Biblical Narratives: Literary Criticism and the Hebrew Bible (2001).

Dr. Rachel Anisfeld is a Research Associate at the Center for Jewish Studies of the University at Albany. She holds a Ph.D. in Classical Midrash from the University of Pennsylvania and is working on a book about the historical development of amoraic homiletical midrash.

Dr. Carol Bakhos is Associate Professor of Late Antique Judaism in the Department of Near Eastern Languages and Cultures at the University of California, Los Angeles. She earned her M.T.S. from Harvard and her Ph.D. from the Jewish Theological Seminary. She is the author of Ishmael on the Border: Rabbinic Portrayals of the First Arab (2007) and the editor of two volumes: Ancient Judaism in its Hellenistic Context (2004) and Current Trends in the Study of Midrash (2005).

Rabbi Carole B. Balin, Ph.D., is Professor of Jewish History at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York. She was educated at Wellesley College, ordained by HUC–JIR, and earned her Ph.D. at Columbia University. Her book To Reveal Our Hearts: Jewish Women Writers in Tsarist Russia (2000) won a Koret Publication Prize. She is currently working with Dr. Wendy Zierler on an anthology of the writings of Hava Shapiro, and with Dr. Eugene Borowitz on a revision of Liberal Judaism.

Dr. Judith R. Baskin is Knight Professor of Humanities and Director of the Schnitzer Program in Judaic Studies at the University of Oregon. She holds a Ph.D. from Yale University. Her books include Midrashic Women (2002), Pharaoh’s Counsellors (1982), and the edited collections Jewish Women in Historical Perspective (2nd ed., 1998) and Women of the Word: Jewish Women and Jewish Writing (1994).

Rabbi Pauline Bebe was the first woman rabbi on Continental Europe since World War II and the only woman rabbi in France until 2007. She was ordained in 1990 by the Leo Baeck College of London. The founding rabbi of the Communauté Juive Libérale—Île de France, Bebe is also author of Le Judaïsme Libéral (1993), ISHA: Dictionnaire des Femmes et du Judaïsme (2001), Peut-on Faire le Bonheur de Ses Enfants (2003), and Qu'est-ce Que le Judaïsme Libéral? (2006).

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Dr. Adele Berlin is the Robert H. Smith Professor of Biblical Studies at the University of Maryland and holds a Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania. Her main interests include biblical narrative and poetry and the interpretation of the Bible. She has written seven books and many articles. Most recently, she served as co-editor of The Jewish Study Bible (2004, with Marc Brettler), which received a National Jewish Book Award. She is currently working on a commentary on Psalms.

Dr. Elizabeth Bloch-Smith has excavated for 35 years at sites in Israel, Cyprus, Tunisia, and Connecticut—the last 7 years at Tel Dor, Israel—and teaches courses in Bible and in archeology at universities in Philadelphia and New York. She holds a Ph.D. in Syro-Palestinian archeology at the University of Chicago. Her interests focus on the Iron Age and early Israel based on archeological remains together with biblical testimony, and she has written on sacred space and ritual practices, Solomon's temple, family life, and burial practices and beliefs about the dead.

Dr. Athalya Brenner is Professor of the Hebrew Bible/Old Testament at the Universiteit van Amsterdam, The Netherlands. She holds a Ph.D. from the Department of Near Eastern Studies at the University of Manchester in England, and she is the editor of the 19-volume work, Feminist Companion to the Bible (first and second series; 1993–2001). Her most recent book is I Am: Biblical Women Tell Their Own Stories (2005). She lives in Amsterdam and in Haifa, Israel.

Rabbi Silvina Chemen serves Kehilat Beth El, the first Conservative congregation in Latin America, and she is in charge of the Schlichei Tzibur School, a national program of the Argentine Jewish Communities Association. She was ordained at the Seminario Rabinico Latinoamericano, in Buenos Aires, Argentina, within the Conservative Movement, finishing her studies at Machon Schechter in Jerusalem. Her publications include Violence and School (2001) and Torah Umifgash [Torah and Encounter] (2006).

Rabbi Dianne Cohler-Esses serves as Scholar In Residence at UJA Federation in New York. She is the first woman from the Syrian Jewish community in Brooklyn to become a rabbi, ordained by the Jewish Theological Seminary (JTS) in 1995.

Rabbi Rachel Cowan serves as Executive Director of the Institute for Jewish Spirituality. She was formerly the Director of Jewish Life at the Nathan Cummings Foundation. Rabbi Cowan earned her B.A. from Bryn Mawr College and Master's degrees from the University of Chicago School of Social Service Administration and was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1989. She has written Growing Up Yanqui (1975) and Mixed Blessings: Untangling the Knots in Interfaith Marriage (1987, with Paul Cowan), as well as numerous articles.

Dr. Shawna Lisa Dolansky is Assistant Professor of Religious Studies at Northeastern University and is a member of the advisory boards for Jewish Studies and Women's Studies at Northeastern. She earned her M.A. in Judaic Studies and her Ph.D. in History at the University of California, San Diego, where she subsequently taught as a Faculty Fellow. Her various publications in the field of biblical studies include the forthcoming book Now You See It, Now You Don't: Biblical Perspectives on the Relationship Between Religion and Magic.

Rabbi Malka Drucker is the founding spiritual leader of HaMakom: The Place for Passionate and Progressive Judaism, in Santa Fe, New Mexico. She was ordained by the Academy for Jewish Religion. She is an award-winning author of more than twenty books for children and adults, including the Southwest PEN award winner White Fire: A Portrait of Women Spiritual Leaders in America (with photographer Gay Block), and Rescuers: Portraits of Moral Courage in the Holocaust. She is the Jewish volume editor for the forthcoming seven-volume set Women and

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Religion, and her latest children's book Portraits of Jewish-American Heroes will be published in 2008.

Rabbi Lisa A. Edwards, Ph.D., is rabbi of Beth Chayim Chadashim in Los Angeles, founded in 1972 as the world's first synagogue for gay and lesbian Jews. She received ordination from Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1994 and earned her Ph.D. in literature from the University of Iowa in 1984.

Rabbi Denise L. Eger is the founding rabbi of Congregation Kol Ami in West Hollywood, California. She was ordained at HUC–JIR in 1988 and is active in the Board of Rabbis of Southern California and in the Pacific Association of Reform Rabbis. She has published numerous articles on human sexuality, in particular on gay and lesbian issues.

Rabbi Jacqueline Koch Ellenson is currently the Director of the Women's Rabbinic Network. She also serves as the Chair of the Hadassah Foundation. Rabbi Ellenson is a graduate of Barnard College and was ordained at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1983. For four years she has led a "Rosh Hodesh: It's a Girl Thing!" group at Congregation Rodeph Sholom in New York City.

Rabbi Sue Levi Elwell, Ph.D., serves as Pennsylvania Regional Director, Union for Reform Judaism. The founding director of the Los Angeles Jewish Feminist Center, she served as the first rabbinic director of Ma'yan and also has taught at the University of Cincinnati; University of California, Los Angeles; and LaSalle University. A congregational rabbi for more than a decade, she was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion and received her doctorate from Indiana University. Her publications include: The Jewish Women's Studies Guide (1987); The Open Door, the CCAR Haggadah (2002); Lesbian Rabbis: The First Generation (2001); and she was one of the editors of The Journey Continues: The Ma'yan Haggadah (2002).

Rabbi Tamara Cohn Eskenazi, Ph.D., is Professor of Bible at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, Los Angeles. She was the first woman appointed to the rabbinical faculty of HUC–JIR. Previously she was on the faculty at the University of Denver and co-founded the Jewish Women's Resource Center in Denver, Colorado, in 1982. Her Ph.D. is from the University of Denver and the Iliff School of Theology. Publications include In an Age of Prose: A Literary Approach to Ezra-Nehemiah (1988), Telling the Queen Michal Story (1991), and the forthcoming Anchor Bible Commentary on Ezra-Nehemiah.

Dr. Charlotte Elishaeva Fonrobert is Associate Professor of Religious Studies at Stanford University. Previously she taught Talmud at the University of Judaism in Los Angeles. She received her Ph.D. from the Graduate Theological Union. She has written a number of articles on gender in rabbinic Judaism, and her book Menstrual Purity: Rabbinic and Christian Reconstructions of Biblical Gender (2000) won the Baron Prize for a best first book in Jewish Studies. She is also a co-editor of The Cambridge Companion to the Talmud and Rabbinic Literature (2007).

Dr. Nili Sacher Fox is Associate Professor of Bible and Director of the Archaeology Center at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, Cincinnati, and co-director of the Tel Dan Excavations in Israel. She holds a Ph.D. in Biblical Studies from the University of Pennsylvania. She has written a number of articles and the book In the Service of the King: Officialdom in Ancient Israel and Judah (2001). She is currently researching aspects of identity formation in the ancient Near East, specifically phenomena involving costuming and body marking.

Dr. Ellen Frankel is currently the CEO and Editor-in-Chief of the Jewish Publication Society. A scholar of Jewish folklore, she has published eight books, including The Classic Tales: 4000 Years of Jewish Lore (1994); The Encyclopedia of Jewish Symbols (1996, co-authored with artist Betsy Teutsch); The Five Books of Miriam: A Woman's Commentary on the Torah (1998); The Jewish Spirit (1997); and The Illustrated Hebrew Bible (2002). She has also been a regular contributor to the 10-volume series My People's Prayerbook.

Dr. Lisbeth S. Fried serves as a Visiting Scholar at the Frankel Center for Judaic Studies and the Department of Near Eastern Studies at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. She received her Ph.D. in 2000 from New York University. She is the author of The Priest and the Great King: Temple-Palace Relations in the Persian Empire (2004) and has contributed articles and essays to numerous scholarly books and journals. She is working on a commentary of Ezra-Nehemiah for the Eerdmans Critical Commentary.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Dr. Tikva Frymer-Kensky ט'ר was Professor of Hebrew Bible at the Divinity School at the University of Chicago until her death in 2006. Previously, she was Director of Biblical Studies at the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College, and Assistant Professor of Near Eastern Studies at Wayne State University. She earned bachelor's degrees from City College of New York and the Jewish Theological Seminary and her Ph.D. in Assyriology and Sumerology from Yale University. She was the author of many important works, including In the Wake of the Goddesses: Women, Culture, and the Biblical Transformation of Pagan Myth (1992); Motherprayer: The Pregnant Woman's Spiritual Companion (1996); and Reading the Women of the Bible: A New Interpretation of Their Stories (2004). Her essays were collected in Studies in Bible and Feminist Criticism (JPS Scholar of Distinction Series, 2006).

Dr. Esther Fuchs is Professor of Near Eastern Studies and Judaic Studies at the University of Arizona in Tucson. She completed her B.A. at the Hebrew University and earned her M.A. and Ph.D. in Hebrew Literature from Brandeis University. She is the editor of Women and the Holocaust: Narrative and Representation (1999) and the author of Israeli Women's Studies: A Reader (2005) and Sexual Politics in the Biblical Narrative: Reading the Hebrew Bible as a Woman (2000). She co-edited Wisdom on the Cutting Edge: The Study of Women in Biblical Worlds (2003, with Alice Bach and Jane Schaberg). She is working on two volumes, Feminist Theory and the Bible and Biblical Feminisms: An Anthology.

Rabbi Ruth Gais, Ph.D., is rabbi of Chavurat Lamdeinu in Madison, New Jersey. Previously she was the Director of the New York Kollel: The Center for Adult Jewish Studies. She was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion and received her doctorate from Princeton University in Classical Archaeology, and for many years she taught about the ancient world at a variety of institutions.

Dr. Julie Galambush is Distinguished Associate Professor of Religious Studies at the College of William and Mary, in Williamsburg, Virginia. She holds an M.Div. from Yale and received her Ph.D. in Old Testament from Emory University. Raised an American Baptist, she was an ordained minister before her conversion to Judaism in 1994. Her most recent book, The Reluctant Parting: How the New Testament's Jewish Authors Created a Christian Book (2005), examines the Jewish origins of Christianity.

Rabbi Laura Geller was the third woman to be ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, and the first to be the Senior Rabbi of a major metropolitan synagogue, Temple Emanuel of Beverly Hills, where she has been since 1994. She has been a trustee of the Corporation of Brown University and a member of the Board of Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, along with the boards of many other local and national Jewish and progressive organizations.

Rabbi Miriyam Glazer, Ph.D., is Professor of Literature at the American Jewish University and a rabbi with the Conservative Movement. She received her Ph.D. from Brandeis University and holds a M.A. in Rabbinic Studies from the Ziegler School of Rabbinic Studies at the University of Judaism (now the American Jewish University). She writes and lectures frequently on Jewish spirituality and gender. Her books include Dancing on the Edge of the World: Jewish Stories of Faith, Inspiration and Love (2000) and Dreaming the Actual: Contemporary Fiction and Poetry by Israeli Women Writers (2000).

Rabbi Elaine Rose Glickman was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1998. She is the author of Haman and the Jews and the editor of B'chol L'vavcha (2002) and Living Torah: Selections from Seven Years of Torat Chayim (2005). Her work has appeared in The Women's Haftarah Commentary, The Encyclopedia of Anti-Semitism, The CCAR Journal, and The American Rabbi. Her newest book, on Jewish parenting, will be published in 2008.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Rabbi Elizabeth Goldstein was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York, in 2001. She is currently a Ph.D. candidate in Hebrew Bible at the University of California, San Diego. Her research interests include the intersection between anthropology and the Hebrew Bible, the evolution of the purity system in ancient Israelite religion, and biblical attitudes toward women.

Rabbi Elyse Goldstein is the Rabbinic Director of Kolel: The Adult Centre for Liberal Jewish Learning in Toronto, Canada, and the 2005 Covenant Award Winner for Exceptional Jewish Educators. She is the author of ReVisions: Seeing Torah through a Feminist Lens (1998) and Seek her Out (2003), and the editor of The Women's Torah Commentary (2000) and The Women's Haftarah Commentary (2004).

Dr. Elaine Adler Goodfriend teaches at California State University, Northridge, and at the American Jewish University. She earned her Ph.D. in Near Eastern Studies from the University of California, Berkeley. She has written entries for several books including the Anchor Bible Dictionary (1992) and Women in Scripture: A Dictionary of Named and Unnamed Women in the Hebrew Bible, the Apocryphal/Deuterocanonical Books and the New Testament (2001).

Dr. Lisa D. Grant is Associate Professor of Jewish Education at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York. She earned her Ph.D. in Jewish Education from the Jewish Theological Seminary and holds an M.B.A. in public management from the University of Massachusetts. She is the lead author of A Journey of Heart and Mind: Transformative Learning in Adulthood (2004, with Diane Schuster, Meredith Woocher, and Steven M. Cohen), and she has written numerous articles on adult Jewish learning and on the role that Israel plays in American Jewish life.

Dr. Alyssa Gray, J.D., is Associate Professor of Codes and Responsa Literature at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York. She received her Ph.D. in Talmud and Rabbinics from the Jewish Theological Seminary, her LL.M. from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, and her J.D. from Columbia University. She has written on poverty and charity, sexuality in Jewish tradition, and liturgy, and recently published a book on the editing and transmission of talmudic literature, A Talmud in Exile: The Influence of Yerushalmi Avodah Zarah on the Formation of Bavli Avodah Zarah (2005).

Dr. Deborah Green is the Greenberg Assistant Professor of Hebrew Language and Literature, Department of Religious Studies, Harold Schnitzer Family Program of Judaic Studies, University of Oregon. She received her Ph.D. in the History of Judaism from the University of Chicago in 2003. She is co-editing two forthcoming works, Commemorating the Dead: Texts and Artifacts in Context, Studies of Roman, Jewish and Christian Burials and Scriptural Exegesis: The Shapes of Culture and the Religious Imagination.

Blu Greenberg is the founding President of the Jewish Orthodox Feminist Alliance and has been active in Jewish feminism since the early 1970s. She chaired the Jewish Book Council, the National Jewish Family Center, and the Federation Commission on Synagogue Relations; and she was founding chair of the New York Federation Task Force on Jewish Women. Her writings include On Women and Judaism: A View From Tradition (1981) and How to Run a Traditional Jewish Household (1985).

Rabbi Lisa J. Grushcow, D.Phil., serves as Associate Rabbi of Congregation Rodeph Sholom in New York City. She was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion and earned her master's and doctorate in Rabbinics at Oxford University, where she studied as a Rhodes Scholar. She is the author of Writing the Wayward Wife: Rabbinic Interpretations of Sotah (2005).

Rabbi Judith Hauptman, Ph.D., is the E. Billi Ivry Professor of Talmud and Rabbinic Culture at the Jewish Theological Seminary, where she earned her doctorate in Talmud. She was ordained by the Academy for Jewish Religion. She is also the rabbi and founder of a free, walk-in High Holiday service, Ohel Ayalah, and she is a volunteer chaplain to the Jewish residents at the Cabrini Center for Nursing and Rehabilitation. Of her many publications, the best known is Rereading the Rabbis, A Woman's Voice (1998).

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Dr. Rachel Havrelock is an assistant professor of Jewish Studies and English at the University of Illinois at Chicago. She holds a B.A. from the University of California, Santa Cruz, and a Ph.D. in Bible and Rabbinics from the Joint Doctoral Program in Jewish Studies at the University of California, Berkeley, and the Graduate Theological Union. She co-authored Women on the Biblical Road: Ruth, Naomi and the Female Journey (1996), wrote and directed the play From Tel Aviv to Ramallah, and is the author of articles about gender in the Hebrew bible and borders in ancient and contemporary Judaisms. She is currently completing River Jordan: The Mythic History of a Dividing Line.

Rabbi Jocce Hudson is the Director of Religious Education at Temple Beth Sholom in Santa Ana, California. She holds M.A. degrees in Jewish Education and Hebrew Letters and received her rabbinic ordination from Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, Los Angeles, in 2007. During her course of studies at HUC-JIR, Hudson received awards in Bible, liturgy, and Jewish education.

Dr. Tal Ilan is Professor of Jewish Studies at the Freie Universität, Berlin, where she specializes in women and gender in post-biblical times. She received her Ph.D. from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Her publications include Jewish Women in Greco-Roman Palestine (1995); Mine and Yours are Hers: Retrieving Women's History from Rabbinic Literature (1997); Integrating Women into Second Temple History (1999), and Silencing the Queen: The Literary Histories of Shelamzion and Other Jewish Women (2006). She is currently the head of a project to produce a feminist commentary on the Babylonian Talmud.

Rabbi Amy Kalmanofsky, Ph.D., is assistant professor of Bible at the Jewish Theological Seminary. She was ordained by the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College in 1995 and received her Ph.D. in Bible and Ancient Semitic Languages from JTS in 2003. Forthcoming publications include articles entitled “Israel’s Baby: The Horror of Childbirth in the Biblical Prophets” and “Their Heart Cried Out to God: Gender and Prayer in the Book of Lamentations.” She is working on a book, Terror All Around: The Rhetoric of Horror in the Book of Jeremiah.

Dr. S. Tamar Kamionkowski is the Vice President for Academic Affairs and Associate Professor of Bible at the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College. She holds a bachelor’s degree from Oberlin College, a master’s degree from Harvard Divinity School, and a Ph.D. in Near Eastern and Judaic Studies from Brandeis University. She is the author of Gender Reversal and Cosmic Chaos: Studies in the Book of Ezekiel (2003) as well as numerous articles.

Rabbi Patricia Karlin-Neumann is the Senior Associate Dean for Religious Life at Stanford. Ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1982, she has served as a Hillel Director, a congregational rabbi and a Regional Director for the Union for Reform Judaism. She teaches, writes and lectures on Jewish feminism, the nexus of education and religion, rabbinic ethics, and social justice.

Dr. Sharon Keller is Assistant Professor of Bible at the Jewish Theological Seminary. She holds a bachelor’s degree and a master’s degree from New York University’s Hebrew Culture and Education program. She graduated from the joint program between the Jewish Theological Seminary and Columbia University’s School of Social Work, receiving master of arts and master of social work degrees. She received her doctorate in Hebrew and Judaic studies from New York University. She is a member of the Society of Biblical Literature Committee on Egyptology and Ancient Egypt, and has served for many years as a judge for the National Jewish Book Award. She is the author of Jews: A Treasury of Art and Literature (1992), awarded the National Jewish Book Award in 1993.

Rabbi Naamah Kelman is the Director of the Year in Israel Program and Educational Initiatives at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, Jerusalem. She is a descendent of ten generations of rabbis and the first woman to be ordained in Israel by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion (1992). Kelman has been intensely involved in the emerging education system of the Israeli Movement for Progressive (Reform) Judaism and is a board member of Rabbis for Human Rights, MELITZ, and the Tali Education Fund.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Meira Kensky received a B.A. in Liberal Arts from Sarah Lawrence College and an M.A. from the University of Chicago. She is currently a Ph.D. candidate in Biblical Studies (New Testament) at the University of Chicago, where she is working on her dissertation, “Trying Man, Trying God: The Divine Courtroom in Jewish and Christian Literature.”

Dr. Gwynn Kessler is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Religion at the University of Florida in Gainesville and is affiliated with the university’s Center for Jewish Studies and with the Center for Women’s Studies and Gender. She received her Ph.D. in Rabbinics, with a specialization in Midrash, from the Jewish Theological Seminary. Her works include “Let’s Cross That Body When We Get To It: Gender and Ethnicity in Rabbinic Literature” (2005) and “Bodies in Motion: Preliminary Notes on Queer Theory and Rabbinic Literature” (2007), both in the Journal of the American Academy of Religion.

Dr. Beth Kissileff teaches in the English Department at the University of Minnesota and has taught English literature and Bible at Smith and Mount Holyoke Colleges. She holds a Ph.D. in comparative literature from the University of Pennsylvania and is completing a novel entitled Questioning Return.

Rabbi Zoë Klein is the senior Rabbi of Temple Isaiah in Los Angeles. She was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1998. In 2006–2007, Rabbi Klein was an ongoing contributor to Reform Voices of Torah, and her liturgy and poetry are used in houses of prayer around the country.

Dr. Lillian Klein-Abensohn taught at American University in Washington, D.C., following twenty years teaching Literature and Bible in Munich, Germany. She received a Ph.D. in Literary Criticism from the University of California, Irvine. She is the author of The Triumph of Irony in the Book of Judges (1988) and From Deborah to Esther: Sexual Politics in the Hebrew Bible (2003) and a contributor to the Feminist Companion to the Bible series.

Dr. Risa Levitt Kohn is Director of the Jewish Studies Program and Professor of Hebrew Bible and Judiasm at San Diego State University. She was the first to earn a Ph.D. in ancient history and Hebrew Bible from the University of California, San Diego. She is the past-president of the Society of Biblical Literature (SBL), Pacific Coast Region, and serves as chair of the SBL Committee for the Status of Women in the Profession. Levitt Kohn’s publications include A New Heart and a New Soul: Ezekiel, the Exile and the Torah (2002) and the forthcoming book, A Portable God: The Origin of Judaism & Christianity.

Dr. Sharon Koren is an Assistant Professor of Medieval Jewish Culture at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York, where she teaches courses in medieval history, biblical commentary, and Jewish Mysticism. Her research focuses on medieval religious history and Jewish women’s spirituality. Her articles have appeared in Nashim, the AJS Review, and Women and Water, edited by Rahel Wasserfall. She is currently completing a book that explores the absence of female Jewish mystics during the Middle Ages.

Rabbi Nancy Fuchs Kreimer, Ph.D., serves as the Director of the Religious Studies Program at the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College, where as Associate Professor she teaches courses in contemporary Jewish thought. She holds a bachelor’s degree in Religion from Wesleyan University and a master’s from Yale Divinity School. She received the title of rabbi from the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College, and her Ph.D. from Temple University Religion Department. She is the author of Parenting as a Spiritual Journey (1998) and co-author of Judaism for Two (2005, with Rabbi Nancy Wiener).

Rabbi Noa Rachael Kushner serves Congregation Rodef Sholom in Marin, California, and previously was the Hillel Rabbi for Sarah Lawrence College and Stanford University. She holds a B.A. in Religious Studies from Brown University and was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1998. Her poems and essays have been published in several books including, Choosing a Jewish Life (1998), and The Women’s Seder Sourcebook (2006).

Rabbi Gail Labovitz, Ph.D., is Assistant Professor of Rabbinics and chair of the Rabbinic Department at the Ziegler School of Rabbinic Studies of the American Jewish University. She was ordained by the Jewish Theological Seminary, where she also earned her Ph.D. in Talmud and Rabbinics. Her most recent article “The Scholarly Life—The Laboring Wife: Gender, Torah, and the Family Economy in Rabbinic Culture” was published in Nashim (Spring 2007).

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Beatrice Lawrence is Instructor of Bible at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, Los Angeles. She received a B.A. from Carleton College and an M.A. from Emory University, and is also completing her Ph.D. in Hebrew Bible/Jewish Hermeneutics from Emory.

Dr. Lori Hope Lefkovitz holds the Sadie Gottesman and Arlene Gottesman Reff chair in Gender and Judaism at Reconstructionist Rabbinical College, where she directs Kolot: the Center for Jewish Women’s and Gender Studies and is executive editor of Ritualwell.org. She received a Ph.D. in English from Brown University and previously was associate professor of English literature at Kenyon College. She has published books and articles on literature, Bible, and feminist theory, including Shaping Losses: Cultural Memory and the Holocaust (2001, with Julia Epstein).

Dr. Adriane Leveen teaches Bible at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York, having previously taught at Stanford University and at HUC–JIR, Los Angeles. She received her Ph.D. from the University of California, Berkeley, in 2000. She has published articles in the Journal for the Study of the Old Testament and Prooftexts and co-edited an anthology of the poetry of Stanley Chyet. She is also a contributor to Healing in the Jewish Imagination (2007) and the forthcoming volume Women Remaking American Judaism (2007). Her book Memory and Tradition in the Book of Numbers will be published in 2008.

Dr. Amy-Jill Levine is the E. Rhodes and Leona B. Carpenter Professor of New Testament Studies at Vanderbilt University Divinity School and Graduate Department of Religion. From 1995–2006 she was the Director of Vanderbilt’s Carpenter Program in Religion, Gender, and Sexuality. She holds a B.A. from Smith College and an M.A. and Ph.D. from Duke University. Her publications include The Misunderstood Jew: The Church and the Scandal of the Jewish Jesus (2006), the 14-volume edited series Feminist Companions to the New Testament and Early Christian Writings, and the forthcoming Jewish Backgrounds to the New Testament: An Essential Guide.

Rabbi Laura Lieber, Ph.D., is Assistant Professor of Classics and Religion at Middlebury College in Vermont. She received her rabbinic ordination from Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1999 and her Ph.D. in the History of Judaism from the University of Chicago in 2003. She is the author of Study Guide to the JPS Bible Commentary: Haftarat (2002).

Rabbi Valerie Lieber has served as rabbi at Temple Israel of Jamaica in Queens, New York, since 2002 and will become Co-Rabbi in its consolidation with Temple Emanuel of New Hyde Park. She was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York. She has published chapters in The Women’s Torah Commentary (2000) and The Women’s Haftarah Commentary (2004) and served as President of the New York Association of Reform Rabbis.

Dr. Hilary Lipka is a Research Scholar at the Center for the Study of Women at the University of California, Los Angeles. She received her Ph.D. from Brandeis University in Near Eastern and Judaic Studies in 2004 and is the author of Sexual Transgression in the Hebrew Bible (2006).

Dr. Diana Lipton is Lecturer in Hebrew Bible and Jewish Studies at King’s College London. Previously, she was a Fellow of Newnham College, Cambridge, and taught Bible at Leo Baeck College–Centre for Jewish Education in London. She completed a Ph.D. at Cambridge University in 1996. Her publications include her book Revisions of the Night: Politics and Promises in the Patriarchal Dreams of Genesis (1999); the co-edited Feminism and Theology, a volume of Oxford Readings in Feminism (2003); and Longing for Egypt and Other Unexpected Biblical Tales (forthcoming). For many years, she ran the Hebrew School of Beth Shalom Reform Synagogue, Cambridge, where she continues to perform rabbinical functions.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Rabbi Janet Marder is the Senior Rabbi of Congregation Beth Am in Los Altos Hills, California. She graduated from the University of California, Santa Cruz, and was ordained in 1979 by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York. She later pursued graduate studies in the Department of Comparative Literature at the University of California, Los Angeles, specializing in Modern Hebrew and Yiddish. Rabbi Marder was the first woman to serve as President of the Central Conference of American Rabbis. Her articles have appeared in Reform Judaism magazine, the Reconstructionist, Sh'ma, and several anthologies.

Rabbi Susan Marks, Ph.D., is the Klingenstein Professor of Judaic Studies at New College of Florida, the Honors College of the State of Florida. While in rabbinic school she worked as an intern for what would later become Women of Reform Judaism. She was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1988 and received her Ph.D. in Religious Studies from the University of Pennsylvania in 2003. Her article “Women in Early Judaism: Twenty-five Years of Research and Reenvisioning” in Currents in Biblical Research is forthcoming.

Dr. Carol Meyers is the Mary Grace Wilson Professor of Religion at Duke University, where she teaches biblical studies and archeology. An honors graduate of Wellesley College, she received her M.A. and Ph.D. in Near Eastern and Judaic Studies from Brandeis University. Among her hundreds of publications are several books relating to Israelite women, including Discovering Eve: Ancient Israelite Women In Context (1988); Women In Scripture: A Dictionary of Named and Unnamed Women in the Hebrew Bible, the Apocryphal/Deuterocanonical Books and the New Testament (2001), and Households and Holiness: The Religious Culture of Israelite Women (2005).

Dr. Beth Alpert Nakhai is an Associate Professor in the Arizona Center for Judaic Studies at the University of Arizona in Tucson. She received her M.T.S. from Harvard Divinity School and her M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Arizona. She has written numerous publications reflecting her interests in Near Eastern archeology, biblical studies, women in ancient Israel, religion in antiquity, and terracotta figurines, including Archaeology and the Religions of Canaan and Israel (2001).

Dr. Susan Niditch is the Samuel Green Professor of Religion at Amherst College, where she has taught since 1978 after receiving her Ph.D. from Harvard University. Her scholarly interests and approaches are informed by a variety of fields including folklore studies, history of religion, religious ethics, and women's studies. Her books include War in the Hebrew Bible (1995), Ancient Israelite Religion (1998), and Oral World and Written Word (1996). She is currently working on a commentary on the book of Judges.

Dr. Carol Ochs is Director of Graduate Studies and Adjunct Professor of Jewish Religious Thought at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York, where she teaches and provides spiritual guidance for rabbinic students and Doctor of Ministry candidates. She holds a Ph.D. in philosophy from Brandeis University and is professor emerita at Simmons College, Boston. She is the author of eight books, the most recent of which is Reaching Godward: Voices from Spiritual Guidance (2003). Among her other books are Our Lives as Torah (2001); Jewish Spiritual Guidance (1997, with Kerry Olitzky); and Women and Spirituality (1996).

Rabbi Hara E. Person is Editor in Chief of URJ Press. She holds a B.A. from Amherst College, an M.A. in Fine Arts from New York University, and was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1998. Her publications include That You May Live Long: Caring for Aging Parents, Caring for Ourselves (2003, with Rabbi Richard Address), Stories of Heaven and Earth: Bible Heroes in Contemporary Children's Literature (2005, with her mother, Dr. Diane G. Person), and contributions to the forthcoming Women and Religion in the World and to The Encyclopedia of Jewish American Popular Culture.

Dr. Judith Plaskow is Professor of Religious Studies at Manhattan College in Riverdale, New York, and a Jewish feminist theologian. A graduate of Clark University (B.A., 1968) and Yale University (M.Phil., 1973, and Ph.D., 1975), she is author or editor of several groundbreaking works in feminist theology, including Weaving the Visions: New Patterns in Feminist Spirituality (1989); Standing Again at Sinai: Judaism from a Feminist Perspective (1991); and The Coming of Lilith: Essays on Feminism, Judaism, and Sexual Ethics, 1972–2003 (2005).

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Dr. Ora Horn Prouser is Executive Vice President and Academic Dean at the Academy for Jewish Religion. She received her Ph.D. in Bible from the Jewish Theological Seminary, where she was an adjunct faculty member for twenty years. She served as an academic consultant with the Melton Center for Research in Jewish Education on its development of Bible curricula for day schools.

Dr. Shulamit Reinharz is the Jacob Potofsky Professor of Sociology at Brandeis University. As director of the Women's Studies Program, she created the world's first Jewish Women's Studies M.A. program. She founded both the Hadassah-Brandeis Institute (HBI), whose mission is to develop fresh ways of thinking about Jews and gender, and the Women's Studies Research Center, including an art gallery. She is a founder of Nashim: A Journal of Jewish Women's Studies and Gender Issues and of the HBI Book Series on Jewish Women. Her numerous books include Feminist Methods in Social Research (1992), The JGirls Guide (2005, with Penina Adelman and Ali Feldman), and the edited collection of Manya Shohat's letters [Hebrew] (2005, with Jehuda Reinharz and Motti Golani).

Dr. Dasit Rom-Shiloni teaches at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, Jerusalem, as well as the Department of Hebrew Culture, Tel Aviv University. She has also taught at the Rothberg International School of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. She holds a Ph.D. from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, where she was trained in biblical studies and Ancient Semitic languages. She is preparing for publication her book God in Times of Destruction and Exiles: Tanakh Theology, which will appear in both Hebrew and English.

Cantor Sarah Sager has served as Cantor of Anshe Chesed Fairmount Temple since 1980. She graduated from Brown University, holds a M.A. from the New England Conservatory of Music, and was invested by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion School of Sacred Music in 1978. Her keynote speech at the 1993 Women of Reform Judaism Assembly provided the original inspiration for this commentary.

Dr. Tammi J. Schneider is Professor of Religion at Claremont Graduate University, and she currently codirects the renewed excavations at Tel el-Far'ah (South) in Israel. She received her doctorate in Ancient History from the University of Pennsylvania. Her books include Sarah: Mother of Nations (2004) and Judges in the Berit Olam series (2000). She is the editor for the ancient Near East section of the journal Religious Studies Review.

Dr. Claudia Setzer is Professor of Religious Studies at Manhattan College in Riverdale, New York. She received her M.A. from the Jewish Theological Seminary and her Ph.D. from Columbia University. She is the author of Jewish Responses to Early Christians and Resurrection of the Body in Early Judaism and Early Christianity (2004). She is active in Jewish/Christian relations at the scholarly and popular level and is a former chair of the early Jewish/Christian relations group of the Society of Biblical Literature. She is currently working on a book on the Bible and American culture.

Dr. Alise Shafri has most recently been Rector, President, and then Chair of the Executive of the Schechter Institute of Jewish Studies in Jerusalem, which is associated with the Jewish Theological Seminary. She obtained her Ph.D. at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem in 1962, where she taught in the English Department from 1950–1990. From 1975 to 1990 she headed the Pelech Experimental High School for Religious Girls and from 1984 to 2000 served as founding chairwoman of the Israel Women's Network. Her activities have won her many awards, including the 1978 President's Award for outstanding contribution to the quality of life in Israel, the 1991 Rothfield Education for Peace Prize, and the 1994 New Israel Fund's Israel Women's Leadership Award. In 2007 she was awarded the Israel Prize, Israel's highest honor, for lifetime achievement in education and women's rights.

Dr. Diane M. Sharon is on the faculty in Bible at the

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Academy for Jewish Religion. She has served as Director of Curriculum Development for Hadassah-WZOA, after serving as National Education Director of Young Judaea, the Jewish Zionist Youth Movement of Hadassah. Before that, she was Assistant Professor at the Jewish Theological Seminary and the first woman appointed to its Department of Bible and Ancient Semitic Languages. She received her Ph.D. from the Jewish Theological Seminary in 1995. She is the author of Patterns of Destiny: Narrative Structures of Foundation and Doom in the Hebrew Bible (2002), as well as articles on the Hebrew Bible in the context in the ancient Near East, comparative religion, and women's studies.

Dr. Maeera Y. Shreiber is Assistant Professor of English at the University of Utah. She holds a Ph.D. from Brandeis University. She is the author of numerous articles on American poetry. She is the co-editor of Dwelling in Possibility: Women Poets and Critics on Poetry (1998) and Mina Loy: Woman and Poet (1998), as well as the forthcoming book Singing in a Strange Land: Towards a Jewish American Poetics.

Rabbi Suzanne Singer was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 2003. She coordinates a leadership and social responsibility initiative for HUC–JIR, Los Angeles, meanwhile directing the Introduction to Judaism program for the URJ's Pacific Southwest Council, in addition to planning an interfaith social justice conference. She served for two years as a rabbi at Temple Sinai of Oakland, California. She holds three master's degrees and spent twenty years as a television producer and programming executive, primarily for public television, winning two Emmy Awards before becoming a rabbi.

Rabbi Ruth H. Sohn teaches Jewish Studies at the Milken Community High School of Stephen S. Wise Temple and adult education in various settings in Los Angeles. She was ordained by Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion in 1982. Her articles, biblical commentaries, and poetry have appeared in various periodicals, prayerbooks, and books including the anthology Reading Ruth (1996).

Cantor Rachel Stock Spilker has served as Cantor at Mount Zion Temple in St. Paul, Minnesota, since 1997, following her position as Assistant Cantor at Congregation Rodeph Sholom in New York City. She holds a B.A. in Religious Studies from the University of Pittsburgh and a master's degree in Sacred Music and investiture as Cantor from Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion.

Dr. Naomi Steinberg is Associate Professor of Religious Studies at DePaul University, Chicago, Illinois. She holds a Ph.D. from Columbia University and is the author of Kinship and Marriage in Genesis: A Household Economics Perspective (1993) and numerous academic studies on family and gender in ancient Israel. Having worked as an advocate for children, her research is now moving into issues related to children in ancient Israel.

Dr. Elsie R. Stern is Assistant Professor of Bible at the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College. She received her Ph.D. in Bible at the University of Chicago and served as Assistant Professor in the Department of Theology at Fordham University and as Assistant Director for Public Programs at the Center for Advanced Judaic Studies at the University of Pennsylvania. She is the author of From Rebuke to Consolation: Exegesis and Theology in the Liturgical Anthology of the Ninth of Av Season and is a contributor to The Jewish Study Bible (2004).

Dr. Talia Sutskover teaches in the Department of Hebrew Culture at Tel Aviv University. She received her Ph.D. from Tel Aviv University in 2006. In addition to her scholarly interests in semantic fields, biblical narrative, and biblical Hebrew, she has written a book of short stories in Hebrew, As a Woman Writes (2005).

Dr. Masha Turner taught Biblical Studies and Rabbinic Studies at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, Jerusalem, for many years. She also taught at Beit Shmuel in Jerusalem and lectures in Maimonides and Medieval Jewish Philosophy at Bar-Ilan University, Ramat Gan, Israel, where she completed her Ph.D. She has published many biblical entries for the Curriculum Planning Department of Israel's Ministry of Education and has worked to bridge gaps between Israel's religious and secular groups.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Dr. Ellen M. Umansky serves as the Carl and Dorothy Bennett Professor of Judaic Studies at Fairfield University in Fairfield, Connecticut. She received her Ph.D. from Columbia University and is the author of From Christian Science to Jewish Science: Spiritual Healing and American Jews (2005), and two books on Lily Montagu. She is working on a revised edition of Four Centuries of Jewish Women's Spirituality: A Sourcebook (originally published in 1992) and a book-length work of constructive feminist theology.

Dr. Anna Urowitz-Freudenstein is Adjunct Professor of Jewish Studies at Gratz College, Melrose Park, Pennsylvania, and Department Head in Jewish Thought, Community Hebrew Academy of Toronto. From 1999–2006 she was the moderator for H-Judaic, an electronic scholarly forum for Judaic Studies. Previously, she has taught at the Jewish Theological Seminary and Rutgers University, as well as online for Hebrew College (Boston) and Gratz College. She holds an M.A. in Ancient Judaism and a Ph.D. in Midrash, both from the Jewish Theological Seminary. Her doctoral thesis was entitled “An Investigation of Exegetical Methods in the Tannaitic Midrashim: A Study of the Texts that Mention Individual Women.”

Dr. Nili Wazana chairs the Department of Bible at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, where she received her Ph.D. in 1998. She is also a lecturer there in the Department of the History of the Jewish People. Her research deals with cultural, literary and historical contacts between biblical Israel and the ancient Near East. Her first book The Extent of the Promised Land: Issues in Biblical Geography and Ideology in Light of the Ancient Near East (in Hebrew) is forthcoming.

Dr. Dvora E. Weisberg is Associate Professor of Rabbinics and Director of the Beit Midrash at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, Los Angeles. She received her B.A. from Brandeis University and her M.A. and Ph.D. from the Jewish Theological Seminary. She is completing a book on levirate marriage and constructs of the family in rabbinic literature.

Rabbi Andrea L. Weiss, Ph.D., is Assistant Professor of Bible at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York. She was ordained by HUC–JIR and received her Ph.D. from the Department of Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations at the University of Pennsylvania. Her publications include Figurative Language in Biblical Prose Narrative: Metaphor in the Book of Samuel (2006) and articles on biblical poetry.

Dr. Carol Selkin Wise has taught on a number of campuses, including California State University at Long Beach and Washington University in St. Louis. She holds a Ph.D. in Religion from Duke University. Her dissertation “Exegesis and Identity: The Hermeneutics of Miqwa'ot in the Greco-Roman Period” (1993) deals with ancient mikvehs.

Cantor Josee Wolff is interim cantor of Temple Shaaray Tefilah in New York City as well as Director of Student Placement and an adjunct faculty member at the School of Sacred Music of Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York. A native of the Netherlands, Cantor Wolff loves teaching about synagogue music and worship throughout the Progressive Jewish world.

Dr. Wendy Zierler is Associate Professor of Modern Jewish Literature and Feminist Studies at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, New York. Before that, she was Research Fellow in the English Department of Hong Kong University. She received her Ph.D. from Princeton and is author of And Rachel Stole the Idols: The Emergence of Modern Hebrew Women's Writing (2004) and is co-editor, with Carole B. Balin, of a forthcoming collection of the selected writings of Hava Shapiro.

Jill Zimmerman is a rabbinic student at Hebrew Union College–Jewish Institute of Religion, Los Angeles. Her first career was in organizational development, while also serving on the board and executive committee of Women of Reform Judaism. She holds M.Ed. and M.A.H.L. degrees from HUC–JIR.

NOTE: The biographical information represents the diversity of talents among the contributors and their choice of how to identify themselves within the constraints of a brief entry.

About the Voices Contributors

Listed, where known and germane, are: the contributor's name (if it differs from her pen name), birthplace and birth year ("b."), place of residence ("r."), place and date of death ("d."); and the language in which she writes.

Nancy Satuloff Abraham, b. New York, New York, 1956, r. Harrison, New York; English

Rachel Adler, b. Chicago, Illinois, r. Los Angeles, California; English

Sigrid Agocsi, b. Münster, Germany, 1961, r. London, England; English, German, and Hungarian

Marjorie Agosin, b. Bethesda, Maryland, 1955, r. Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts; Spanish/English

Ada Aharoni, b. Cairo, Egypt, r. Haifa, Israel; Hebrew

Lea Aini, b. Tel Aviv, Israel, 1962, r. Israel; Hebrew

Karen Alkalay-Gut, b. London, England, 1945, r. Tel Aviv, Israel; English

Shifra Alon, b. Vienna, Austria, r. Ramat Gan, Israel; Hebrew

Sarah Antine, b. Buffalo, New York, 1975, r. Potomac, Maryland; English

Edna Aphek, r. Jerusalem, Israel; Hebrew

Deborah Ascarelli, b. Rome, Italy, 16th century; Italian/Hebrew

Ellen Bass, b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1947, r. Santa Cruz, California; English

Yochaveh Bat-Miriam, b. Keplits, Belorussia, 1901, d. Israel, 1980; Hebrew

Robin Becker, b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1951; English

Leila Gal Berner, b. San Francisco, California, 1950, r. Kensington, Maryland; English

Mary Loving Blanchard, r. Jersey City, New Jersey; English

Amy Blank, b. London, England, 1898, d. Cincinnati, Ohio, 1990; English

Chana Bloch, b. New York, New York, 1940, r. Berkeley, California; English

Sherry Blumberg, b. Tucson, Arizona, 1947, r. Milwaukee, Wisconsin; English

Shirley Blumberg, b. 1923, r. Mammoth Lakes, California; English

Ruth Brin, b. Saint Paul, Minnesota, 1921, r. Minneapolis, Minnesota, 1921; English

Nina Beth Cardin, b. Baltimore, Maryland, 1953, r. Baltimore; English

Kim Chernin, b. Bronx, New York, 1940, r. Berkeley, California; English

Jennifer Clayman, b. Silver Spring, Maryland, 1972, r. Westfield, New Jersey; English

Enid Dame, b. Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, 1943, d. High Falls, New York, 2003; English

Celia Dropkin, b. Belarus, Russia, 1887, d. United States, 1956; Yiddish/Russian

Anne Ebersman, b. New York, New York, 1967, r. New York, New York; English

Sue Levi Elwell, b. Buffalo, New York, 1948, r. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; English

Esther Ettinger, b. Jerusalem, Israel, 1941; Hebrew

Ruth Fainlight, b. New York, New York, 1931, r. London, England; English

Marcia Falk, b. New York, New York, r. Berkeley, California; English/Hebrew

ABOUT THE VOICES CONTRIBUTORS

Corie Feiner, b. Queens, New York, 1973; English

Elaine Feinstein, b. Liverpool, England, 1930,
r. London, England; English

Merle Feld, b. Brooklyn, New York, 1947,
r. Northampton, Massachusetts; English

Nadell Fishman, r. Vermont; English

Robin Fox, b. Los Angeles, California, 1950,
r. Fresno, California; English

Ellen Frankel, b. New York, New York, 1951,
r. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; English

Debbie Friedman, b. Utica, New York, 1952,
r. New York, New York; English/Hebrew

Tikva Frymer-Kensky, b. Chicago, Illinois, 1943,
d. Wilmette, Illinois, 2006; English

Laura Geller, b. Boston, Massachusetts, 1950,
r. Los Angeles, California.; English

Elaine Rose Glickman, b. El Paso, Texas, 1970,
r. Sarasota, Florida; English

Susan Glickman, b. 1953; English

Lea Goldberg, b. East Prussia, 1911, d. Jerusalem, Israel, 1970; Hebrew

Shelly Goldman, b. Brookline, Massachusetts, 1942,
r. Fairfax, Virginia; English

Nancy Lee Gossels, b. Norwich, Connecticut, 1934,
r. Wayland, Massachusetts; English

Lynn Gottlieb, b. Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, 1945,
r. Ojai, California; English

Nechama Gottschalk, b. Berkeley, California, 1951,
r. Tallahassee, Florida; English

Jessica Greenbaum, b. Brooklyn, 1957, r. Brooklyn, New York; English

Rachel Hadass, b. New York, New York, 1948,
r. New York, New York; English

Jill Hammer, r. New York, New York; English

Ra'aya Harnik, b. Berlin, Germany, 1933, r. Israel; Hebrew

Galit Hasan-Rokem, b. Helsinki, Finland, 1945;
r. Israel; Hebrew

Linda Hepner, b. London, England, 1939,
r. Los Angeles, California; English

Etty Hillesum, b. Middelburg, the Netherlands, 1914,
d. Auschwitz, 1943; Dutch

Linda Hirschorn, b. New York, New York, 1947,
r. Oakland, California; English

Barbara D. Holender, b. Buffalo, New York, 1927,
r. Buffalo, New York; English

Vicki Hollander, b. Cleveland, Ohio, 1952, r. Lubbock, Texas; English

Lisa Hostein, b. Queens, New York, 1961, r. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; English

Sue Hubbard, b. London, England, r. London, England; English

Beyle Hurvits, circa 17th–18th century, Eastern Europe; Yiddish

Regina Jonas, b. Berlin, Germany, 1902, d. Auschwitz, 1944; German

Judy Katz, b. Memphis, Tennessee, 1959, r. New York, New York; English

Shirley Kaufman, b. Seattle, Washington, r. Jerusalem, Israel; English

Karyn Kedar, b. Washington, D.C., 1957, r. Deerfield, Illinois; English

Sharon Kessler, r. Pardes Chana, Israel

Zoë Klein, b. New York, New York, 1971, r. Los Angeles, California; English

Irena Klepfisz, b. Warsaw, 1941; r. New York, New York; English/Yiddish

Feiga Izrailevna Kogan, b. Moscow, Russia, 1891,
d. Moscow, Russia, 1974; Russian

Rachel Korn, b. Podliszki, Galicia, 1898, d. Montreal, Canada, 1982; Polish/Yiddish

Maxine Kumin, b. Germantown, Pennsylvania, 1925;
r. New Hampshire; English

Else Lasker-Schüler, b. Rhineland, Germany, 1869,
d. Jerusalem, Israel, 1945; German

Lara Laufer, b. El Paso, Texas, 1970, r. Alexandria, Virginia; English

Lynn Levin, b. St. Louis, Missouri, 1953;
r. Bucks County, Pennsylvania; English

Lisa Levine, b. Bakersfield, California, 1959,
r. Stamford, Connecticut; English

ABOUT THE VOICES CONTRIBUTORS

Naomi Levy, b. Brooklyn, New York, r. Venice, California; English

Shari Lore, b. New Jersey, 1958, r. Fairfax, Virginia; English

Bonnie Lyons, b. Brooklyn, New York, 1944, r. San Antonio, Texas; English

Sherri Mandell, b. New York; r. Tekoa, Israel; English

Anna Margolin, b. Brest, Belarus, 1887, d. New York, New York, 1952; Yiddish

Golda Meir, b. Kiev, Russia, 1898, d. Jerusalem, Israel, 1978; Hebrew

Pamela Melnikoff, r. London, England; English

Rivka Miriam, b. Jerusalem, Israel, 1952, r. Jerusalem, Israel; Hebrew

Marsha Pravder Mirkin, b. Brooklyn, New York, 1953, r. Wellesley, Massachusetts; English

Agi Mishol, b. Hungary, 1947, r. Gedera, Israel; Hebrew

Kadya Molodowsky, b. Bereza Kartuska, White Russia, 1894, d. New York, New York, 1975; Yiddish

Rachel Luzzatto Morpurgo, b. Trieste, Italy, 1790, d. 1871; Hebrew

Pamela S. Nadell, b. Newark, New Jersey, 1951, r. Rockville, Maryland; English

Clarisse Nicoïdski, b. 1938, Lyons, France, r. Paris, France; French/Judezmo

Vanessa Ochs, b. Rochester, New York, 1953, r. Charlottesville, Virginia; English

Debra Orenstein, b. San Antonio, Texas, r. Los Angeles, California; English/Hebrew

Alicia Suskin Ostriker, b. Brooklyn, New York, 1937, r. Princeton, New Jersey; English

Estelle Nachimoff Padawer, b. Bronx, New York, 1927, r. Fort Lee, New Jersey; English

Grace Paley, b. Bronx, New York, 1922, d. Thetford, Vermont, 2007; English

Helen Papell, b. New York, New York, 1924, r. New York, New York; English

Linda Rose Parkes, b. Jersey, Channel Islands, United Kingdom, 1951, r. United Kingdom; English

Linda Pastan, b. Bronx, New York, 1932, r. Potomac, Maryland.; English

Laurie Patton, b. Boston, Massachusetts, 1961, r. Atlanta, Georgia; English

Haviva Pedaya, b. Jerusalem, Israel; Hebrew

Julie Pels, b. Milwaukee, Wisconsin, 1976, r. Los Angeles, California; English

Debbie Perlman, b. Chicago, Illinois, 1951, d. Evanston, Illinois, 2002; English

Hara E. Person, b. New York, New York, 1964, r. Brooklyn, New York; English

Marge Piercy, b. Detroit, Michigan, 1936, r. Cape Cod, Massachusetts; English

Hava Pincas-Cohen, b. Jaffa, Israel, 1955, r. Rehovot, Israel; Hebrew

Anda Pinkerfeld-Amir, b. Rzesza, Galicia, 1902, d. Israel, 1981; Hebrew

Riv-Ellen Prell, b. Los Angeles, California, 1947, r. Minneapolis, Minnesota; English

Esther Raab, b. Petach Tikva, Israel, 1894, d. Tel Aviv, Israel, 1981; Hebrew

Rachel Bluwstein, b. Vyatka, Russia, 1890, d. Israel, 1931; Hebrew

Nessa Rapoport, b. Canada, r. New York, New York; English

Dahlia Ravikovitch, b. Ramat Gan, Israel, 1936, d. Tel Aviv, Israel, 2005; Hebrew

Barbara Reisner, b. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, 1944, r. Allentown, Pennsylvania; English

Naomi Replansky, b. Bronx, New York, 1918, r. New York, New York; English

Shira Rubenstein, b. Glen Falls, New York, 1991, r. Saratoga Springs, New York; English

Muriel Rukeyser, b. New York, New York, 1913, d. New York, New York, 1980; English

Nellie Sachs, b. Berlin, Germany, 1891, d. Stockholm, Sweden, 1970; German Elizabeth Tikvah Sarah, b. South Shields, County Durham, England, 1955, r. Brighton, England; English

ABOUT THE VOICES CONTRIBUTORS

Sandy Eisenberg Sasso, b. 1947, r. Indianapolis, Indiana; English

Shelley Savren, b. Cleveland, Ohio, 1945; r. California; English

Grace Schulman, r. New York, New York; English

Laya Firestone Seghi, b. Missouri, r. Miami Beach, Florida; English

Hannah Senesh, b. Budapest, Hungary, 1921, d. Budapest, Hungary, 1944; Hungarian/Hebrew

Drora Setel, b. Lausanne, Switzerland, 1956, r. Buffalo, New York; English

Ona Siporin, r. Logan, Utah; English

Ruth H. Sofin, b. Portsville, Pennsylvania, 1954, r. Los Angeles, California; English

Myra Soifer, b. Miami, Florida, 1950, r. Reno, Nevada; English

Elaine Marcus Starkman, b. Chicago, Illinois, r. Walnut Creek, California; English

Priscilla Stern, b. New York, New York, 1934, d. New York, New York, 2002; English

Yerra Sugarman, b. Toronto, Canada, 1955, r. New York, New York; English

Shulamith Surnamer, b. Brooklyn, New York, 1945, r. Long Beach, New York; English

Anna Swanson, b. Vancouver, Canada, 1974, r. Vancouver, Canada; English

Henrietta Szold, b. Baltimore, Maryland, 1860, d. Jerusalem, Israel, 1945; English

Eva Tóth, b. Hungary; r. Hungary; Hungarian

Sophie Trupin, b. Selz, Russia, 1903, d. United States, 1992; English

Malka Heifetz Tussman, b. Volhynia, Ukraine, 1893, d. Berkeley, California, 1987; Yiddish

Miriam Ulinover, b. Lodz, Poland, 1888, d. Auschwitz, 1944; Yiddish

Sheila Peltz Weinberg, b. New York, New York, 1946, r. Amherst, Massachusetts; English

Andrea L. Weiss, b. San Diego, California, 1965, r. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; English, 2007.

Ruth Whitman, b. 1922, d. Middletown, Rhode Island, 1999; English

Eleanor Wilner, b. Ohio, 1937, r. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; English

Shulamis Yelin, b. Montreal, Canada, 1913, d. Montreal, Canada, 2002; English

Hanna Zacks, b. Haifa, Palestine, 1931, r. Binghamton, New York; English

Nurit Zarchi, b. Jerusalem, Israel, 1941, r. Jerusalem, Israel; Hebrew

Zelda, Shneurson Mishkowsky, b. Chernikoff, Ukraine, 1914, d. Jerusalem, Israel, 1984; Hebrew

Anna Ziegler, b. New York, New York, 1979, r. Brooklyn, New York; English

Wendy Zierler, b. Ontario, Canada, 1965, r. Riverdale, New York; English/Hebrew

Linda Stern Zisquit, b. Buffalo, New York, 1947, r. Jerusalem, Israel; English

Voices Publication Credits

Extensive attempts have been made to obtain permission to reprint previously published material. Please inform us of any corrections or additions and we will be pleased to include them in the next printing of the book. The editors are grateful to those who have granted us permission to use their work, both previously published and original.

NANCY SATULOFF ABRAHAM: "Fringes in My Heart" by Nancy Satuloff Abraham. Copyright © Nancy Satuloff Abraham. Used by permission of the author.

RACHEL ADLER: Excerpt from Lifecycles Vol. 2: Jewish Women on Biblical Themes in Contemporary Life © 1997 Debra Orenstein and Jane Rachel Litman (Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights Publishing). $19.95 + $3.95 s/h. Order by mail or call 800-962-4544 or on-line at www.jewishlights.com. Permission granted by Jewish Lights Publishing, P.O. Box 237, Woodstock, VT 05091.

SIGRID AGOCSI: "Aphorism" originally published in Dybuk of Delight: An Anthology of Jewish Women's Poetry edited by Sonja Lyndon and Sylvia Paskin, London, England: Five Leaves Publications, 1995. Copyright by Sigrid Agocsi. Used by permission of Sigrid Agocsi.

MARJORIE AGOSIN: "Sorcery," translated by Cola Franzen, from Sargasso. Copyright © 1993 by Marjorie Agosin. Translation copyright © 1993 by Cola Franzen. Reprinted with the permission of White Pine Press, www.whitepine.org.

ADA AHARONI: "Dear Descartes: Creativity" and "The Second Exodus" by Ada Aharoni. Used by permission of the author.

LEA AINI: "The Empress of Imagined Fertility" from Dreaming the Actual: Contemporary Fiction and Poetry by Israeli Women Writers, selected, edited and with an introduction by Miriyam Glazer (Albany, NY: SUNY Press, 2000). Copyright © by Miriyam Glazer. Used by permission of Miriyam Glazer.

KAREN ALKALAY-GUT: "Annunciation," "The Keepers of My Youth," "Mobilization," and "Military Washing" from Ignorant Armies, Copyright © 1994 by Cross-Cultural Communications and Karen Alkalay-Gut. Jewish Writers, Chapbook 4 (Merrick, NY: Cross-Cultural Communications, 1994). Series Editor: Stanley H. Barkan. Reprinted by permission of the publisher and on behalf of the author.

SHIFRA ALON: "Not Every Day" originally appeared in P'tachim, Tel Aviv.

SARAH ANTINE: "The Ritual Bath" from Bridges: A Jewish Feminist Journal Vol. 12 No. 1. Used by permission of Sarah Antine.

EDNA APHEK: "Sarah," "Enwombed," and "Jacob and Esau." Copyright © by Edna Aphek. Used by permission of Edna Aphek.

DEBORAH ASCARELLI: "Whatever in Me Is of Heaven" reprinted from JPS Guide to Jewish Women: 600 B.C.E.-1900 C.E., edited by Sondra Henry, Emily Taitz, and Cheryl Tallen (Philadelphia, PA: Jewish Publication Society, 2003). Copyright © 2003 by Sondra Henry, Emily Taitz, and Cheryl Tallen. Used by permission of The Jewish Publication Society.

ELLEN BASS: "Eating the Bones" and "Ritual" from The Human Line. Copyright © 2007 by Ellen Bass. Reprinted with the permission of Copper Canyon Press, www.coppercanyonpress.org. "For My Daughter on Her Twenty-First Birthday" from Mules of Love. Copyright © 2002 by Ellen Bass. Reprinted with permission of BOA Editions, Ltd., www.boaeditions.org.

YOCHEVED BAT-MIRIAM: "Before" reprinted from And Rachel Stole the Idols: The Emergence of Modern Hebrew Women's Writing, by Wendy Zierler (Detroit, MI: Wayne State University Press, 2004). Used with permission of Wayne State University Press. "Hagar" from Shirim (Tel Aviv: Sifriat Poalim Publishing House Ltd., 1963), translated by Zvi Jagendorf. Used by permission of Zvi Jagendorf. Excerpt from "Hidden Treasures" from Modern Hebrew Poetry (Iowa City: University of Iowa Press, 1980), translated by Bernhard Frank. "Miriam" translated by Ilana Pardes, reprinted in revised form by translator from Gender and Text in Modern Hebrew and Yiddish Literature, edited by Naomi B. Sokoloff, Anne Lapidus Lerner, and Anita Norich (New York: The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1992). Used by permission of Ilana Pardes and JTS.

ROBIN BECKER: "The New Egypt," "Autumn Measure," and "The Wild Heart" from Domain of Perfect Affection, by Robin Becker, © 2006. Reprinted by permission of the University of Pittsburgh Press.

LEILA GAL BERNER: "A Blessing" by Rabbi Leila Gal Berner. Used by permission of Leila Gal Berner.

MARY LOVING BLANCHARD: "In the Sudan" originally published in Bridges: A Jewish Feminist Journal, vol. 9, no. 1, 2001. Used by permission of Mary Loving Blanchard.

AMY BLANK: "I Know Four" and "Rebecca" used by permission of the CCAR Press and Miriam Sachs. "And Jacob Blessed Pharoah," "Baruch Hu," and "Bezalel" used by permission of Miriam Sachs.

CHANAH BLOCH: "The Flood," and "The Sacrifice" originally published in Secrets of the Tribe, Sheep Meadow Press, 1980. Used by permission of Chana Bloch. "Disquisition" originally published in Women Speak to God: The Prayers and Poems of Jewish Women, edited by Marcia Cohn Spiegel and Deborah L. Kremsdorff. Used by permission of Chana Bloch. "White Petticoats," from The Past Keeps Changing, Sheep Meadow Press, 1992. Used by permission of Chana Bloch.

SHERRY BLUMBERG: "Sarai," excerpt from "Leah to Her Sister," "Timna's Revenge," "Asenath's Plea to Her Husband Joseph," "Lea's Last Words," and "At the Tent of Meeting," used by permission of Sherry Blumberg.

SHIRLEY BLUMBERG: "Family Reunion" and "Yom Kippur Prayer" used by permission of Shirley Blumberg.

RUTH BRIN: "Joseph and Pharaoh" and "They Built the Tabernacle" reprinted from Harvest: Collected Poems and Prayers. Copyright © 1986, 1999 by Ruth Brin. Used by permission of The Reconstructionist Press.

NINA BETH CARDIN: Excerpts from The Tapestry of Jewish Time, by Nina Beth Cardin. © Behrman House, Inc., reprinted with permission www.behrmanhouse.com. Excerpt from Tears of Sorrow, Seeds of Hope: A Jewish Spiritual Companion for Infertility and Pregnancy Loss © 1999 by Nina Beth Cardin (Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights Publishing) $18.95 + $3.95 s/h. Order by mail or call 800-962-4544 or on-line at www.jewishlights.com.

KIM CHERNIN: "Eve's Birth" by Kim Chernin. Used by permission of Kim Chernin. "The Primal Feast" from The Hungry Self: Women, Eating, and Identity (New York: Times Books, 1985). Copyright © 1985 by Kim Chernin.

JENNIFER CLAYMAN: "Celebrating Courage and Vision: An Appreciation of Rabbi Sally Priesand" used by permission of Rabbi Jennifer Clayman.

ENID DAME: "Yahrzeit" used by permission of Donald Lev.

CELIA DROPKIN: "My Mother" from Jewish American Literature: A Norton Anthology edited by Jules Chametzky, John Felstiner, Hilene Flanzbaum, and Kathryn Hellerstein, NY: Norton, 2001. Used by permission of Kathryn Hellerstein.

ANNE EBERSMAN: "Precious Gifts" used by permission of Rabbi Anne Ebersman.

SUE LEVI ELWELL: "Jacob Blesses Dinah," "Elisheba Speaks," and "A Song of Ascent" copyright © Sue Levi Elwell. Used by permission of Rabbi Sue Levi Elwell.

ESTHER ETTINGER: "Believe Me," translated by Marianna Barr, from Dreaming the Actual: Contemporary Fiction and Po- etry by Israeli Women Writers, NY: SUNY Press, 2000. Copyright © Miriyam Glazer. Used by permission of Miriyam Glazer.

RUTH FAINLIGHT: "Dinah" from New & Collected Poems (Bloodaxe Books, 2010). Used by permission of Bloodaxe Books and Ruth Fainlight. "Thankful" and "Prescience" from Burning Wire (Bloodaxe Books, 2002). Used by permission of Ruth Fainlight.

MARCIA FALK: "Will" from The Book of Blessings: New Jewish Prayers for Daily Life, the Sabbath, and the New Moon Festival, by Marcia Falk; Harper (1996), paperback edition, Beacon Press (1999); copyright © 1996 Marcia Lee Falk. Used by permission of the author.

CORIE FEINER: "Nomad Land" reprinted from Zeek: A Jewish Journal of Thought and Culture, May 2006, <http://www.zeek.net/>. Used by permission of Corie Feiner.

ELAINE FEINSTEIN: "A Prayer for my Son," "A Prayer for My Sons," "The First Wriggle," and "Released," from Elaine Feinstein: Collected Poems and Translations, Manchester, England: Carcanet Press Limited, © 2002. Used by permission of Carcanet Press.

MERLE FELD: "We All Stood Together," "Sinai," "Sinai Again," "My Friends Baked Cake and We Ordered Lox and Whitefish from the Deli," and "The First Time We Made Shabbos Together," reprinted by permission of the author and SUNY Press from A Spiritual Life: Exploring the Heart and Jewish Tradition, Revised Edition by Merle Feld, the State University of New York Press © 2007, State University of New York. All rights reserved. "Leaving Egypt," "Still Dreaming of Home," and "Unfulfilled Promise" used by permission of Merle Feld.

ROBIN FOX: "For the Last Time" reprinted from Covenant of the Soul: New Prayers, Poems, and Meditations (NY: Women of Reform Judaism, 2000). Used by permission of Robin Fox.

ELLEN FRANKEL: from The Five Books of Miriam: A Woman's Commentary on the Torah, by Ellen Frankel, copyright © 1996 by Ellen Frankel, PhD. Used by permission of G.P. Putnam's Sons, a division of Penguin Group USA Inc.

DEBBIE FRIEDMAN: Lyrics from "L'chi Lach," courtesy of The Jewish Music Group, LLC www.jewishmusicgroup.com.

TIKVA FRYMER-KENSKY: "The Blood of Birth" and "Mother to Mother" reprinted from Motherprayer: A Pregnant Woman's Spiritual Companion by Tikva Frymer-Kensky, copyright © 1995 by Tikva Frymer-Kensky. Used by permission of Riverhead Books, an imprint of Penguin Group (USA) Inc.

LAURA GELLER: Excerpt from "Jewish Feminism: Go to Yourself!" The Shalom Center, www.shalomctr.org. Used by permission of Rabbi Laura Geller.

ELAINE ROSE GLICKMAN: "Parashat Noach" and "Zilpah Speaks to God," used by permission of Rabbi Elaine Rose Glickman.

VOICES PUBLICATION CREDITS

SUSAN GLICKMAN: "The Country of Old People," copyright © 1983 by Signal Editions of Véhicule Press (Montreal, Canada).

LEA GOLDBERG: "A God Once Commanded Us," "In the Jerusalem Hills," and "Toward Myself," translation by Robert Friend, copyright © Jean Shapiro Cantu. "Somewhere in Samaria," "In Everything," "You Are Wondrous," "At Light's Border," "Songs of a Foreign Woman," "Poems of the Journey's End," and "Olive Trees" reprinted from Selected Poetry and Drama of Lea Goldberg, translated by Rachel Tzvia Back, New Milford, CT: Toby Press, 2005. Reprinted with permission of The Toby Press. "From My Mother's Home," translated by Ezra Spiechandler, reprinted from The Modern Hebrew Poem Itself, Detroit, MI: Wayne State University Press, 1965. Used by permission of Ezra Spiechandler. All poems used by permission of ACUM, Israel.

SHELLY GOLDMAN, LARA LAUFER, AND SHARI LORE: "Looking Toward Shabbat" reprinted from Covenant of the Spirit: New Prayers, Poems, and Meditations from Women of Reform Judaism (NY: Women of Reform Judaism, 2005). Used by permission of the authors.

NANCY LEE GOSSELS: "Somewhere Out of Time" by Nancy Lee Gossels. Copyright © Nancy Lee Gossels. Used by permission of the author.

LYNN GOTTLIEB: "Awakening" and "Prayer for Burning the End Piece of the Challah" from She Who Dwells Within, by Lynn Gottlieb. Copyright © 1995 by Lynn Gottlieb. Reprinted by permission of HarperCollins Publishers.

NECHAMA GOTTSCHALK: "Creation" by Nechama Gottschalk. Copyright © by Nechama Gottschalk. Used by permission of the author.

JESSICA GREENBAUM: "A Box of Clementines in the Maternity Ward" and "Under the Spell of Miscarriage" is reprinted from Inventing Difficulty by permission of Silverfish Review Press, © 2000 by Silverfish Review Press. "Packing Slip" originally appeared in Salamander Vol. II, No. 2, 2006. Used by permission of Jessica Greenbaum.

RACHEL HADAS: "Coda" in The Empty Bed © 1995 by Rachel Hadas and reprinted with permission of Wesleyan University Press. "Weathering" from The River of Forgetfulness by Rachel Hadas, © 2006 David Robert Brooks, Cincinnati, Ohio. "The Mirror" from Mirrors of Astonishment © 1992 by Rachel Hadas and reprinted by permission of Rutgers University Press.

JILL HAMMER: "Zilpah," "Menorah," "Every City Has a Soul," "Gifts," "Moses Leans Over the Stone," "Sinai," and "The Death of Moses" used by permission of Jill Hammer. "Every City Has a Soul" was previously published in Zeek Magazine, May 2004.

ANNETTE BIALIK HARCHIK: "Earrings" reprinted from Ghosts of the Holocaust: An Anthology of Poetry by the Second Generation, Stewart J. Florsheim, ed., 1989. Used by permission of Wayne State University Press.

RA'AYA HARNIK: "I Will Not Offer" reprinted from Profane

Scriptures: Reflections on the Dialogue with the Bible in Modern Hebrew Poetry by Ruth Kartun-Blum and Menashe Kadishman. Copyright © 1999 by Hebrew Union College Press. Used by permission of Hebrew Union College Press.

GALIT HASAN-ROKEM: "[This child inside me]" translated by Kathryn Hellerstein. Reprinted from The Defiant Muse: Hebrew Feminist Poems from Antiquity to the Present, eds. Shirley Kaufman, Galit Hasan-Rokem, and Tamar S. Hess (New York: The Feminist Press of the City University of New York, 1999). Used by permission of Kathryn Hellerstein.

LINDA HEPNER: from "Potiphar's Wife," by Linda Hepner. Used by permission of the author.

ETTY HILLESUM: Excerpts from An Interrupted Life: The Diaries, 1941–1943; and, Letters from Westerbork by Etty Hillesum (New York: Henry Holt, 1996). Copyright © 1986 by Random House, Inc.

LINDA HIRSCHHORN: "Sarah and Hagar" © Linda Hirschhorn 1985, 2002 recorded on Heartbeat with Cantor Linda Hirschhorn and Volocot (<http://www.lindahirschhorn.com>). Used by permission of Linda Hirschhorn.

BARBARA D. HOLENDER: "Torah" excerpted from Lifecycles Vol. 2: Jewish Women on Biblical Themes in Contemporary Life © 1997 Debra Orenstein and Jane Rachel Litman (Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights Publishing). $19.95 + $3.95 s/h. Order by mail or call 800-962-4544 or on-line at www.jewishlights.com. Permission granted by Jewish Lights Publishing, P.O. Box 237, Woodstock, VT 05091, and by Barbara D. Holender.

VICKI HOLLANDER: Section from "After a Miscarriage: Hold Me Now" and "The Passage of Divorce: Paving One's Way" by Vicki Hollander excerpted from Lifecycles Vol. 1: Jewish Women on Life Passages & Personal Milestones © 1994 Debra Orenstein (Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights Publishing). $19.95 + $3.95 s/h. Order by mail or call 800-962-4544 or on-line at www.jewishlights.com. Permission granted by Jewish Lights Publishing, P.O. Box 237, Woodstock, VT 05091. From "An Opening Ceremony" by Vicki Hollander, reprinted from Four Centuries of Jewish Women's Spirituality: A Sourcebook, edited by Ellen M. Umansky and Diane Ashton (Boston, MA: Beacon, 1992). Revised and used by permission of Vicki Hollander.

LISA HOSTEIN: "On Adoption" by Lisa Hostein. Used by permission of Lisa Hostein.

SUE HUBBARD: "Inheritance" and "The Curse" by Sue Hubbard, originally published in The Dybbuk of Delight: An Anthology of Jewish Women's Poetry, edited by Sonja Lyndon and Sylvia Paskin (Nottingham, England: Five Leaves Publication, 1995). Used by permission of the author.

BEYLE HURVITS: "This Tkhine Is Said before Kedushe" translated by Devra Kay. Reprinted from Seyder Tkhines: The Forgotten Book of Common Prayer for Jewish Women, by Devra Kay, Phila, PA: Jewish Publication Society, 2004. Used by permission of Jewish Publication Society.

REGINA JONAS: "Letter to Mala Laaser, 1938" reprinted from Fraulein Rabbiner Jonas: The Story of the First Woman Rabbi, by Elisa Klapheck and Toby Axelrod (NY: John Wiley and Sons, 2004). Copyright © 2004 by John Wiley and Sons.

JUDY KATZ: "Anniversary" used by permission of Judy Katz. Previously published in Bellevue Literary Review, Spring 2005 edition.

SHIRLEY KAUFMAN: "In the Beginning," "They've Rolled the Parchment" and "The Death of Rachel," reprinted from Threshold. Copyright © 2003 by Shirley Kaufman. Reprinted with the permission of Copper Canyon Press, www.coppercanyonpress.org. "The Wife of Moses" reprinted from Rivers of Salt. Copyright © 1993 by Shirley Kaufman. Reprinted with the permission of Copper Canyon Press, www.coppercanyonpress.org. "For the Sin . . ." reprinted from Claims. Copyright © 1984 by Shirley Kaufman. Used by permission of Shirley Kaufman. "His Wife," "Rebecca," "Leah," copyright © Shirley Kaufman. Used by permission of Shirley Kaufman.

KARYN KEDAR: "From a Mother to Her Girls" by Rabbi Karyn Kedar from The Bridge to Forgiveness: Stories and Prayers for Finding God and Restoring Wholeness © 2007 Karyn Kedar (Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights Publishing). $19.95 + $3.95 s/h. Order by mail or call 800-962-4544 or on-line at www.jewishlights.com. Permission granted by Jewish Lights Publishing, P.O. Box 237, Woodstock, VT 05091.

SHARON KESSLER: "Covenant," in Tikkun, July/August 1989. Reprinted from Tikkun: A Bimonthly Interfaith Critique of Politics, Culture & Society. Used by permission of the author.

ZOË KLEIN: "How Much Water Is Inside a Tear" by Rabbi Zoë Klein. Copyright © by Zoë Klein. Used by permission of the author. "Scatter Us in the Sea" originally published for Torat Chayim <http://urj.org/torah/>, a project of the Union for Reform Judaism. Used by permission of the author.

IRENA KLEPFISZ: "The Window" from The Tribe of Dina by Melanie Kaye/Kantrowitz and Irena Klepfisz. Copyright © 1986, 1989 by Melanie Kaye/Kantrowitz and Irena Klepfisz. Reprinted by permission of Beacon Press, Boston.

FEIGA IZRAILEVNA KOGAN: "God: Desert" translated by Rabbi Carole B. Balin. Reprinted from To Reveal Our Hearts: Jewish Women Writers in Tsarist Russia (Cincinnati, OH: Hebrew Union College Press, 2000). Used by permission of Hebrew Union College Press.

BRACHA KOPSTEIN: "Nearing 80" reprinted from P.E.N.: A Collection of Recent Writings in Israel, edited by Chaim Shoham, Shin Shifra, et al. (Tirash Ltd). Used by permission of ACUM, Israel.

RACHEL KORN: "All the Winds" (Rachel Korn, translated by Marcia Falk) from The Book of Blessings: New Jewish Prayers for Daily Life, the Sabbath, and the New Moon Festival, Marcia Falk; Harper (1996), paperback edition, Beacon Press (1999); copyright © 1996 Marcia Lee Falk. Used by permission of the translator.

MAXINE KUMIN: "Turning the Garden in Middle Age" by Maxine Kumin, from Selected Poems 1960–1990. Copyright © 1997 by Maxine Kumin. "Women and Horses" by Maxine Kumin from Jack and Other New Poems. Copyright © 2005 by Maxine Kumin. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Company, Inc.

ELSE LASKER-SCHÜLER: "I Know," "Pharaoh and Joseph," "To God," "My Freedom," and "My People" translated by Janine Canan. From Star in My Forehead: Selected Poems of Else Lasker-Schüler. Translation copyright © 2000 by Janine Canan. Reprinted with the permission of Holy Cow! Press, www.holycowpress.org.

LYNN LEVIN: "To a Nursling Before Dawn" reprinted from A Few Questions About Paradise. Originally published in New Beginnings January/February 1987 (La Leche League International). Used by permission of the author. "And You Shall Love" originally published in Jewish Women's Literary Annual, vol. 4, 2000–2001. Used by permission of the author.

LISA LEVINE: "Forgotten" and "I Am Accursed" used by permission of Cantor Lisa Levine. Copyright © Lisa Levine.

NAOMI LEVY: "A Prayer When the Child is Born" from To Begin Again: The Journey Toward Comfort, Strength and Faith in Difficult Times (NY: The Ballantine Publishing Group, 1998). Copyright © 1998 by Naomi Levy.

BONNIE LYONS: "Deliverance: Puah Explains" and "Zipporah's Return" by Bonnie Lyons, reprinted from In Other Words (San Antonio, TX: Pecan Grove Press, 2004). Copyright © 2004 by Bonnie Lyons. Used by permission of author.

SHERRI MANDELL: Excerpts from The Blessing of a Broken Heart by Sherri Mandell (New Milford, CT: Toby Press, 2003).

ANNA MARGOLIN: "Mother Earth, Well Worn, Sun Washed," translated by Adrienne Cooper, from The Tribe of Dina by Melanie Kaye/Kantrowitz and Irena Klepfisz. Copyright © 1986, 1989 by Melanie Kaye/Kantrowitz and Irena Klepfisz. Reprinted by permission of Beacon Press, Boston, and Adrienne Cooper.

GOLDA MEIR: from The Hungry Self: Women, Eating and Identity by Kim Chernin (New York: Crown, 1985).

PAMELA MELNIKOFF: "For a Child Not Yet Conceived" originally published in The Dybbuk of Delight: An Anthology of Jewish Women's Poetry, edited by Sonja Lyndon and Sylvia Paskin (Nottingham, England: Five Leaves Publication, 1995). Used by permission of the author.

RIVKA MIRIAM: Translations © 2007 by Linda Stern Zisquit. Used by permission of Linda Stern Zisquit.

MARSHA PRAVDER MIRKIN: Excerpted from "Miriam," originally published in Praise Her Works: Conversations with Biblical Women edited by Penina Adelman (Philadelphia, PA:

VOICES PUBLICATION CREDITS

Jewish Publication Society, 2005). Used by permission of The Jewish Publication Society.

AGI MISHOL: "Gravity, Death" and excerpt from "Wax Flowers," originally published in Look There: New and Selected Poems, translated by Lisa Katz. © 2002 by Agi Mishol, reprinted with permission of Graywolf Press, Saint Paul, Minnesota. "Turning to Rest in Sappho's Poems," translation by Tsipi Keller, from Poets on the Edge: An Anthology of Contemporary Hebrew Poetry (Albany, New York: SUNY Press, 2008). Used with permission of Tsipi Keller.

KADYA MOLODOWSKY: All poems originally published in Paper Bridges: Selected Poems of Kadya Molodowsky, translated and edited by Kathryn Hellerstein (Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1999). Copyright © 1999 by Kathryn Hellerstein. Used by permission of Kathryn Hellerstein.

RACHEL LUZZATTO MORPURGO: "Desolate Valleys," reproduced from The JPS Guide to Jewish Women: 600 B.C.E.–1900 C.E., edited by Emily Taitz, Sondra Henry, and Cheryl Tallan, by permission of the University of Nebraska Press. Copyright © 2003 by Emily Taitz, Sondra Henry, and Cheryl Tallan. Published by the Jewish Publication Society.

PAMELA S. NADELL: Excerpt from Women Who Would Be Rabbis: A History of Women's Ordination 1889–1985 (Boston: Beacon Press, 1998). Copyright © 1998 by Pamela S. Nadell.

CLARISSE NICOÏDSKI: "Open Earth" translated by Stephen Levy. Reprinted from Voices within the Ark: The Modern Jewish Poets, edited by Howard Schwartz and Anthony Rudolf. New York: Avon Press, 1980. Copyright © by Stephen Levy.

VANESSA OCHS: "Dina's Own Story" and excerpt from "Yocheved's Own Story" reprinted from Sarah Laughed: Modern Lessons from the Wisdom and Stories of Biblical Women by Vanessa Ochs © 2004. Used by permission of Vanessa Ochs.

MARIE ODLUM: "The Girls That Are Wanted" reprinted from Sarah's Daughters Sing: A Sampler of Poems by Jewish Women, edited by Henny Wenkart (Hoboken, NJ: KTAV, 1990).

DEBRA ORENSTEIN: "A Prayer for Parents of Babies with Disabilities" by Debra Orenstein excerpted from Lifecycles Vol. 1: Jewish Women on Life Passages & Personal Milestones © 1994 Debra Orenstein (Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights Publishing) $19.95 + $3.95 s/h. Order by mail or call 800-962-4544 or online at www.jewishlights.com. Permission granted by Jewish Lights Publishing, P.O. Box 237, Woodstock, VT 05091.

ALICIA SUSKIN OSTRIKER: "A Meditation in Seven Days" and "Move" from The Little Space: Poems Selected and New, 1968–1998, by Alicia Suskin Ostriker, © 1998. Reprinted by permission of the University of Pittsburgh Press. "Dissolve in Slow Motion" from The Imaginary Lover, by Alicia Suskin Ostriker, © 1968. Reprinted by permission of the University of Pittsburgh Press. "mother" from "the red thread" poem cycle, "blood" from the "deaths, transfigurations" poem cycle and "yom kippur" from the second section of "days of awe" from the "turn and return" poem cycle from the volcano sequence, by Alicia Suskin Ostriker, © 2002. Used by permission of the University of Pittsburgh Press and Alicia Suskin Ostriker. "The Nursing Father" and "Rachel Solo" from The Nakedness of the Fathers: Biblical Visions and Revisions copyright © 1991 by Alicia Suskin Ostriker (Piscataway, NJ: Rutgers University Press, 1997). Reprinted by permission of Rutgers University Press.

ESTELLE NACHIMOFF PADAWER: "I Do Not Ask." Used by permission of the author.

GRACE PALEY: "[When this old body]" and "For My Daughter" from Begin Again: Collected Poems by Grace Paley. Copyright © 2000 by Grace Paley. Used by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Nora and Danny Paley.

HELEN PAPELL: "Prophet Miriam at Mount St. Helens, Washington, USA." Reprinted from Jewish Women's Literary Annual, Vol. 1, No. 1, 1994/1995. Used with permission of the author.

LINDA ROSE PARKES: "Seder Eve" reprinted from The Dybbuk of Delight: An Anthology of Jewish Women's Poetry, edited by Sonja Lyndon and Sylvia Paskin. Nottingham, England: Five Leaves Publications, 1995. Copyright © by Linda Rose Parkes. Reprinted by permission of the author.

LINDA PASTAN: "Aspects of Eve" from Aspects of Eve by Linda Pastan. Copyright © 1970, 1971, 1972, 1973, 1974, 1975 by Linda Pastan. Used by permission of Liveright Publishing Corporation. "At the Loom" from The Imperfect Paradise by Linda Pastan. Copyright © 1988 by Linda Pastan. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Company, Inc. "Journey's End" and "Passover" from Carnival Evening: New and Selected Poems 1968–1998 by Linda Pastan. Copyright © 1998 by Linda Pastan. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Company, Inc.

LAURIE PATTON: "Chayei Sarah," "T'rumah," "T'zav," "M'tzora," "Acharei Mot," "Naso," "Sh'lach L'cha," "Balak," "Eikev," and "Korach." Copyright © by Laurie Patton. Used by permission of the author.

HAVIVA PEDAYA: "please with gentleness." Used by permission of Haviva Pedaya and translator Harvey Bock.

JULIE PELC: "Sukkot 2001" from Joining the Sisterhood, edited by Tobin Belzer and Julie Pelc (Albany: SUNY Press, 2003). Copyright © 2003 by Julie Pelc. Used by permission of the author.

DEBBIE PERLMAN: "Psalm 5: Lullaby for Courage," "Psalm 32: A Song of Endings and Beginnings," and "Psalm 50," reprinted from Flames of Heaven: New Psalms for Healing and Praise (Wilmette, IL: Rad Publishing, 1998). Copyright © 1998 by Debbie Perlman. Used by permission of Reid Perlman.

HARA E. PERSON: "Leah at Benjamin's Brit Milah," and "Tamar's Lament," copyright © 1999 by Hara E. Person, revised and reprinted from CCAR Journal, Spring 1999 "Serah bat Asher," "Passover Love Song," "This Night," and "The Land of the Patriarchs" copyright © 2007 by Hara E. Person. Used by permission of the author.

MARGE PIERCY: "V'ahavta" from The Art of Blessing the Day by Marge Piercy, copyright © 1999 by Middlemarsh, Inc.; "How divine is forgiving?" from Available Light by Marge Piercy, copyright © 1988 by Middlemarsh, Inc.; "Rape poem" from Circles on the Water by Marge Piercy, copyright © 1982 by Marge Piercy. "Sometimes while I am chanting" from Colors Passing Through Us: Poems by Marge Piercy, copyright © 2003 by Middlemarsh, Inc. Used by permission of Aldred A. Knopf, an imprint of the Knopf Doubleday Publishing Group, a division of Penguin Random House LLC. All rights reserved.

HAVA PINCAS-COHEN: "The Ineffable Name" from Dreaming the Actual: Contemporary Fiction and Poetry by Israeli Women Writers, NY: SUNY Press, 2000. Copyright © Miriyam Glazer. Used by permission of Miriyam Glazer. "A Mother's Morning Prayer," translated by Jules Harlow and Rochelle Furstenberg, reprinted from Pray Tell: A Hadassah Guide to Jewish Prayer (Hadassah and Jewish Lights Publishing, 2003). Used by permission of Jules Harlow and Rochelle Furstenberg. All poems used by permission of Hava Pincas-Cohen and ACUM, Israel.

ANDA PINKERFELD-AMIR: "And These Are Hagar's Poems to This Very Day" reprinted from And Rachel Stole the Idols: The Emergence of Modern Hebrew Women's Writing, by Wendy Zierler (Detroit, MI: Wayne State University Press, 2004). Used with permission of Wayne State University Press, Wendy Zierler, and ACUM, Israel.

RIV-ELLEN PRELL: "My Entitlement and My Obligation" from The Jewish Woman's Book of Wisdom, ed. Ellen Jaffe-Gill (Secaucus, NJ: Birch Lane Press, 1998). Used by permission of Riv-Ellen Prell.

ESTHER RAAB: Excerpt from "Shirat Ishah," reprinted from Kol HaShirim Shel Esther Raab, translated by Harold Schimmel, edited by Jules Harlow. "Age," excerpt from "Thistles," "Like a Poppy Borne by Wind," "Last Prayer" from Thistles: Selected Poems of Esther Raab, translated by Harold Schimmel. Jerusalem, Israel: Ibis Editions, 2002. Hebrew-language version copyright © 2002 Esther Raab, Ehud Ben-Ezer. English translation copyright © 2002 The Institute for the Translation of Hebrew Literature. Used by permission of Ehud Ben-Ezer and The Institute for The Translation of Hebrew Literature; "Requests" translated by Catherine Shaw and Moshe Dor. Reprinted from After the First Rain: Israeli Poems on War and Peace, edited by Moshe Dor and Barbara Goldberg (Syracuse, NY: Syracuse University Press, 1998), copyright © 1997 by Dryad Press. Used by permission of Dryad Press.

RAHEL: "Rachel" reprinted from And Rachel Stole the Idols: The Emergence of Modern Hebrew Women's Writing, by Wendy Zierler (Detroit, MI: Wayne State University Press, 2004) Used with permission of Wayne State University Press and Wendy Zierler. "My Dead" and "The Messenger Came in the Night" reprinted from Found in Translation: Modern Hebrew Poets, A Bilingual Edition, translated by Robert Friend (Milford, CT: The Toby Press, 2006). Translation copyright © Jean Shapiro Cantu. "To My Country," reprinted from The Defiant Muse: Hebrew Feminist Poems from Antiquity to the Present, translated by Robert Friend, edited by Shirley Kaufman, Galit Hasan-Rokem, and Tamar S. Hess (New York: The Feminist Press of the City University of New York, 1999). Translation copyright © Jean Shapiro Cantu. "In the Garden," "Comfort Me", and "Barren" by Rahel [Blaustein] from The Plough Woman: Records of the Pioneer Women of Palestine—A Critical Edition, edited and annotated by Mark A. Raider & Miriam B. Raider-Roth. Waltham, MA: Brandeis University Press. Copyright © 2002 Brandeis University Press. Reprinted with permission of University Press of New England. "Sorrow Song" by Rahel, translated by Wendy Zierler, from And Rachel Stole the Idols: The Emergence of Modern Hebrew Women's Writing. Translation copyright © Wendy Zierler. Used by permission of Wendy Zierler.

NESSA RAPOPORT: "Undo It, Take It Back" from A Woman's Book of Grieving (New York: William Morrow, 1994). Copyright © 2007 by Nessa Rapoport. Used with permission of Nessa Rapoport. All rights reserved.

DAHLIA RAVIKOVITCH: "Like Rachel," "Delight," "Magic Spells," "From Day to Night," "Pride," "The Sorrow of Night," "Beheaded Heifer," and "A Pure Whole Memory" from Hovering at a Low Altitude: The Poetry of Dahlia Ravikovitch, translated by Chana Bloch and Chana Kronfeld (New York: W. W. Norton, 2009). Copyright © 2009 by Chana Bloch, Chana Kronfeld, and Ido Kalir. Reprinted by permission of Georges Borchardt, Inc., on behalf of Chana Bloch, Chana Kronfeld, and Ido Kalir.

BARBARA REISNER: "The Generations Upon Me." Used by permission of the author.

NAOMI REPLANSKY: "When I Melt Down" and "Gray Hairs" reprinted from The Dangerous World: New and Selected Poems, 1934–1993 (Chicago: Another Chicago Press, 1994). Copyright © 1994 by Naomi Replansky. Used by permission of the author.

CHAVA ROMM: Source unknown.

JUDITH K. ROSE: "I Know About the Woman Who Sits and Waits" by Judith Rose. Reprinted from Sarah's Daughters Sing: A Sampler of Poems by Jewish Women, edited by Henny Wenkart (Hoboken, NJ: KTAV, 1990). Copyright © 1975 by Judith Rose.

SHIRA BRACHA MOTZKIN RUBENSTEIN: "The Other Shore" by Shira Motzkin Rubenstein. Used by permission of the author.

MURIEL RUKEYSER: "Miriam: The Red Sea," "[untitled]," from "The Way Out," "Untitled" ["A tree of rivers flowing..."], "Untitled" ["On your journey..."], and "This Place in the Ways" reprinted from The Collected Poems of Muriel Rukeyser, edited by Janet Kaufman and Anne Herzog (Pittsburgh, PA: University of Pittsburgh Press, 2006). Copyright © Muriel Rukeyser. Used by permission of International Creative Management.

VOICES PUBLICATION CREDITS

NELLY SACHS: "We Mothers" translated by Ruth and Matthew Mead from The Seekers and Other Poems by Nelly Sachs, translated by Ruth and Matthew Mead and Michael Hamburger. Translation copyright © 1970 by Farrar, Straus & Giroux, Inc. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC; "Fleeing," "If I Only Knew," and "O the Night of the Weeping Children" from O the Chimneys by Nelly Sachs, translated by Ruth and Matthew Mead and Michael Hamburger. Translation copyright © 1967, renewed 1995 by Farrar, Straus & Giroux, Inc. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux LLC and Suhrkamp Verlag.

ELIZABETH TIKVAH SARAH: "Meditation for Tefillin" by Rabbi Elizabeth Sarah. Originally published in Dybbuk of Delight: An Anthology of Jewish Women's Poetry edited by Sonja Lyndon and Sylvia Paskin (Nottingham: England: Five Leaves Publications, 1995). Used by permission of the author.

SANDY EISENBERG SASSO: "First a Spark" by Rabbi Sandy Eisenberg Sasso. Used by permission of the author.

SHELLEY SAVREN: "The Butcher's Wife" reprinted from Bridges: A Jewish Feminist Journal, Spring 2007 (Vol. 12, no. 1). Used by permission of Shelley Savren.

GRACE SCHULMAN: "Kol Nidrei, September 2001" and excerpt from "In Place of Belief" from The Broken String: Poems by Grace Schulman. Copyright © 2007 by Grace Schulman. "Offerings" from Paintings of Our Lives: Poems by Grace Schulman. Copyright © 2001 by Grace Schulman. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Company. All rights reserved.

LAYA FIRESTONE SEGHİ: "Listen to the Bird," reprinted from Voices Within the Ark: The Modern Jewish Poets, edited by Howard Schwartz and Anthony Rudolf (New York: Harper-Collins, 1980). Used by permission of Laya Firestone Seghi.

HANNAH SENESH: Excerpts are from Hannah Senesh: Her Life and Diary: The First Complete Edition © 2004 by Eitan Senesh, David Senesh, and Ginsora Senesh (Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights Publishing). $19.95 + $3.95 s/h. Order by mail or call 800-962-4544 or on-line at www.jewishlights.com. Permission granted by Jewish Lights Publishing, P.O. Box 237, Woodstock, VT 05091.

DRORA SETEL: "The Girl's Name Is Forgotten" by Drora Setel excerpted from Lifecycles Vol. 2: Jewish Women on Biblical Themes in Contemporary Life © 1997 Debra Orenstein and Jane Rachel Litman. (Woodstock, VT: Jewish Lights Publishing). $19.95 + $3.95 s/h. Order by mail or call 800-962-4544 or on-line at www.jewishlights.com. Permission granted by Jewish Lights Publishing, P.O. Box 237, Woodstock, VT 05091.

ONA SIPORIN: "there is the river" from Poems for a Primitive Mythology (Bloomington, IN: Raintree Press, 1976). Copyright © by Ona Siporin. "Mikveh Mayim" copyright © by Ona Siporin. Reprinted from www.ritualwell.org. Copyright © Ona Siporin. Both used by permission of the author.

RUTH SOHN: "The Song of Miriam" by Rabbi Ruth Sohn. Copyright © Ruth Sohn. Used by permission of the author.

MYRA SOIFER: "The Dance of the Reform Jew" by Rabbi Myra Soifer, excerpted from Torat Chayim, <http://urj.org/torah/>, a project of the Union for Reform Judaism, 2004, vol. 9, no. 34.

ELAINE MARCUS STARKMAN: "What We Need," by Elaine Marcus Starkman. Copyright © Elaine Marcus Starkman. Used by permission of the author.

PRISCILLA STERN: "We reach for You, our God," reprinted from Covenant of the Heart: New Prayers, Poems, and Meditations from Women of Reform Judaism (New York: 1993). Used by permission of Elsie Stern.

YERRA SUGARMAN: Excerpt from "Home Again," reprinted from Forms of Gone (Riverdale-on-Hudson, NY: Sheep Meadow Press, 2002). Copyright © 2002 by Yerra Sugarman. Used by permission of the author. "Broken Prayer" from The Bag of Broken Glass (The Sheep Meadow Press, 2008). Used by permission of the author.

SHULAMITH SURNAME: "The Kohain's Wife," reprinted from Sarah's Daughters Sing: A Sampler of Poems by Jewish Women, edited by Henry Wenkart (New York: Jewish Women's Resource Center, A Project of National Council of Jewish Women, 1990). Used by permission of the author.

ANNA SWANSON: "Boiled Beet" reprinted by permission from Joining the Sisterhood: Young Jewish Women Write Their Lives, edited by Tobin Belzer and Julie Pelc, the State University of New York © 2003, State University of New York. All rights reserved.

HENRIETTA SZOLD: "Letter to Haym Peretz," reprinted from Four Centuries of Jewish Women's Spirituality, edited by Dianne Ashton and Ellen Umansky (Boston: Beacon Press, 1992).

EVA TÓTH: "Genesis," translated by Peter Jay. Reprinted from Modern Poems on the Bible, edited by David Curzon (Philadelphia, PA: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1994). Used by permission of Peter Jay.

SOPHIE TRUPIN: Excerpt from Dakota Diaspora: Memories of a Jewish Homesteader (Lincoln: University of Nebraska Press, 1988).

MALKA HEIFETZ TUSSMAN: "At the Well," "I Say," "Holy Quiet," from With Teeth in the Earth: Selected Poems, Malka Heifetz Tussman, transl. Marcia Falk; Wayne State University Press (1992); copyright © 1992 Marcia Lee Falk. Used by permission of the translator.

MIRIAM ULINOVER: "The Old Prayer Book," translated by Kathryn Hellerstein. Reprinted from Four Centuries of Jewish Women's Spirituality: A Sourcebook, edited by Dianne Ashton and Ellen Umansky (Boston: Beacon Press, 1992). Used by permission of Kathryn Hellerstein.

RASHELLE VEPRINSKI: "Widows," translated by David Goldberg. Reprinted from A Treasury of Yiddish Poetry, edited by Irving Howe and Eliezer Greenberg (Austin, TX: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1969).

SHEILA PELTZ WEINBERG: "A Prayer for the Journey" and "Aliyah is Ascent" by Sheila Peltz Weinberg. Used by permission of the author.

ANDREA L. WEISS: "Lech L'cha" by Andrea L. Weiss. Used by permission of the author.

RUTH WHITMAN: Reprinted from Whitman, Ruth, The Testing of Hanna Senesh, "Poem 21," p. 101, used with the permission of Wayne State University Press.

ELEANOR WILNER: "Epitaph" and "Judgment," reprinted from Reversing the Spell (Port Townsend, PA: Copper Canyon Press, 1998). Copyright © by Eleanor Wilner. Used by permission of the author. "Miriam's Song," reprinted from Sarah's Choice (Chicago: University of Chicago, 1990). Copyright © 1989 by the University of Chicago. Used by permission of the author.

SHULAMIS YELIN: "In Your Image," reprinted from Seeded in Sinai (Philadelphia: The Reconstructionist Press, 1974). Copyright © 1974 by Shulamis Yelin.

HANNA ZACKS: Excerpt from "Clothes My Mother Made," reprinted from Poems That Happened: Making Sense of Daily

Life (iUniverse, 2003). Copyright © 2003 by Hanna Zacks. Used by permission of Hanna Zacks.

NURIT ZARCHI: "She Is Joseph," translated by Shirley Kaufman. Reprinted from The Defiant Muse: Hebrew Feminist Poems from Antiquity to the Present, edited by Shirley Kaufman, Galit Hasan-Rokem, and Tamar S. Hess (New York: The Feminist Press of the City University of New York, 1999). Used by permission of Shirley Kaufman.

ZELDA: "With My Grandfather," "Moon Is Teaching Bible," "Each of Us Has a Name," from The Spectacular Difference: Selected Poems of Zelda, translated by Marcia Falk; Hebrew Union College Press (2004); copyright © 2004 Marcia Lee Falk. Used by permission of the translator.

ANNA ZIEGLER: "After Fighting All Night We Watch the Sun Rise" and "The Journey" by Anna Ziegler. Copyright © by Anna Ziegler. Used by permission of author.

WENDY ZIERLER: "For Days Miriam Sat Outside" used by permission of Wendy Zierler.

LINDA STERN ZISQUIT: "Posit," "While Three Men Sit in the Next Room Discussing the Talmudic Tractate on How to Prove a Woman Adulterous," and "Elul" reprinted from Ritual Bath (Seattle, WA: Broken Moon Press, 1993). Used by permission of Linda Stern Zisquit. "A Word before the Last about Loss" reprinted from Unopened Letters (Riverdale-on-Hudson, NY: Sheep Meadow Press, 1996). "No Sign" and "How to Resist Temptation" reprinted from The Face in the Window (Riverdale-on-Hudson, NY: Sheep Meadow Press, 2004). Used by permission of Linda Stern Zisquit.

Index of Voices Contributors

- Abraham, Nancy, 892
Adler, Rachel, 677
Agocsi, Sigrid, 1233
Agosin, Marjorie, 1162
Aharoni, Ada, 154, 258
Aini, Leah, 1112
Alkalay-Gut, Karen, 700, 1162, 1163, 1249
Alon, Shifra, 1035
Antine, Sarah, 677
Aphek, Edna, 109, 155
Ascarelli, Deborah, 700
- Bass, Ellen, 612, 935, 987
Bat-Miriam, Yocheved, 84, 471, 867, 959
Becker, Robin, 867, 1035, 1215
Berner, Leila Gal, 842
Blanchard, Mary Loving, 1010
Blank, Amy, 131, 154, 206, 279, 493, 564
Bloch, Chana, 57, 110, 353, 700
Blumberg, Sherry, 83, 181, 208, 258, 302, 566
Blumberg, Shirley, 57, 698
Brin, Ruth, 257, 543
- Cardin, Nina Beth, 614, 892, 1087, 1140, 1232
Chernin, Kim, 34, 1138
Clayman, Jennifer, 613
- Dame, Enid, 745
Dropkin, Celia, 1139
- Ebersman, Anne, 840
Elwell, Sue Levi, 301, 354, 519
Ettinger, Esther, 655
- Fainlight, Ruth, 206, 543, 1214
Falk, Marcia, 518
Feiner, Corie, 1061
Feinstein, Elaine, 156, 764, 1113, 1216
Feld, Merle, 302, 404, 425, 519, 656, 1036, 1087, 1215, 1288
Fishman, Nadell, 636
Fox, Robin, 635
Frankel, Ellen, 230, 472
- Friedman, Debbie, 82
Frymer-Kensky, Tikva, 656, 866
- Geller, Laura, 678
Glickman, Susan, 814
Glickman, Elaine Rose, 57, 279
Goldberg, Lea, 33, 519, 544, 698, 784, 890, 1011, 1034, 1164, 1189, 1216, 1289
Goldman, Shelly, 746
Gossels, Nancy Lee, 1086
Gottlieb, Lynn, 32, 891
Gottschalk, Nechama, 472
Greenbaum, Jessica, 449, 786, 914
- Hadas, Rachel, 544, 592, 720
Hammer, Jill, 182, 494, 812, 842, 936, 1086, 1290
Harchik, Annette Bialik, 543
Harnik, Ra'aya, 110
Hasan-Rokem, Galit, 655
Hepner, Linda, 231
Hillesum, Etty, 354, 472, 1249
Hirschhorn, Linda, 110
Holender, Barbara D., 1234
Hollander, Vicki, 449, 866, 1189
Hostein, Lisa, 329
Hubbard, Sue, 636, 678
Hurvits, Beyle, 493
- Jonas, Regina, 494
- Katz, Judy, 1289
Kaufman, Shirley, 33, 109, 155, 181, 207, 330, 699, 1062
Kedar, Karyn, 1270
Kessler, Sharon, 1113
Klein, Zoë, 58
Klepfisz, Irena, 812
Kogan, Feiga Izrailevna, 1060
Kopstein, Bracha, 786
Korn, Rachel, 764
Kumin, Maxine, 914, 1163
- Lasker-Schüler, Else, 83, 257, 302, 520, 1269
Laufer, Lara, 746
Levin, Lynn, 655, 1088

INDEX OF VOICES CONTRIBUTORS

- Levine, Lisa, 813, 840
 Levy, Naomi, 1233
 Lore, Shari, 746
 Lyons, Bonnie, 328, 426
- Mandell, Sherri, 634, 1189
 Margolin, Anna, 1012
 Meir, Golda, 764
 Melnikoff, Pamela, 1112
 Miriam, Rivka, 34, 58, 131, 180, 208, 231, 353, 520, 785, 936, 959, 1010
 Mirkin, Marsha Pravder, 329
 Mishol, Agi, 720, 722, 987
 Molodowsky, Kadya, 406, 565, 654, 676, 746, 764, 812, 891, 1138, 1190, 1216
 Morpurgo, Rachel Luzzatto, 960
- Nadell, Pamela S., 494
 Nicoïdski, Clarisse, 58
- Ochs, Vanessa, 206, 328
 Odlum, Marie, 1036
 Orenstein, Debra, 745
 Ostriker, Alicia Suskin, 109, 182, 354, 426, 677, 698, 1011, 1061
- Padawer, Estelle Nachimoff, 1234
 Paley, Grace, 700, 1189
 Papell, Helen, 426
 Parkes, Linda Rose, 1139
 Pastan, Linda, 34, 354, 614, 1269
 Patton, Laurie, 132, 471, 613, 676, 699, 841, 890, 913, 958, 1114
 Pedaya, Haviva, 472
 Pelc, Julie, 1140
 Perlman, Debbie, 450, 566, 591
 Person, Hara E., 207, 230, 280, 376, 378, 1214
 Piercy, Marge, 592, 1088, 1190, 1233
 Pincas-Cohen, Hava, 425, 591
 Pinkerfeld-Amir, Anda, 84
 Prell, Riv-Ellen, 892
- Raab, Esther, 33, 722, 960, 1215, 1269, 1288
 Rahel, 155, 182, 301, 450, 612, 634, 1232, 1269
 Rapoport, Nessa, 131
 Ravikovitch, Dahlia, 208, 542, 635, 868, 913, 935, 1034, 1164
- Reisner, Barbara, 1060
 Replansky, Naomi, 612, 721
 Romm, Chava, 330
 Rose, Judith, 988
 Rubenstein, Shira, 405
 Rukeyser, Muriel, 404, 959, 1035, 1232, 1290
- Sachs, Nelly, 83, 378, 634, 654
 Sarah, Elizabeth Tikvah, 378
 Sasso, Sandy Eisenberg, 542
 Savren, Shelley, 841
 Schulman, Grace, 493, 565, 1010
 Seghi, Laya Firestone, 1012
 Senesh, Hannah, 83, 1290
 Setel, Drora, 867
 Siporin, Ona, 156, 1234
 Sohn, Ruth, 406
 Soifer, Myra, 784
 Starkman, Elaine Marcus, 1250
 Stern, Priscilla, 518
 Sugarman, Yerra, 785, 1061
 Surnamer, Shulamith, 745
 Swanson, Anna, 376
 Szold, Henrietta, 721
- Tóth, Eva, 33
 Trupin, Sophie, 891
 Tussman, Malka Heifetz, 180, 812, 960
- Ulinover, Miriam, 1250
- Veprinski, Rashelle, 1139
- Weinberg, Sheila Peltz, 813, 1086
 Weiss, Andrea L., 82
 Whitman, Ruth, 914
 Wilner, Eleanor, 34, 329, 377, 1162
- Yelin, Shulamis, 520
- Zacks, Hanna, 614
 Zarchi, Nurit, 232
 Zelda, 110, 493, 814, 1249
 Ziegler, Anna, 868, 1140
 Zierler, Wendy, 868
 Zisquit, Linda Stern, 180, 232, 612, 699, 840

Index of Voices Titles

- Acharei Mot, 699
After a Miscarriage: Hold Me Now, 449
After Fighting All Night We Watch the Sun Rise, 868
Age, 722
Aliyah is Ascent, 1086
All the Winds, 764
And Jacob Blessed Pharaoh, 279
“And These Are Hagar’s Poems to This Very Day,” 84
And You Shall Love, 1088
Anniversary, 1289
Annunciation, 700
Aphorism, 1233
The Apple Was a Northern Invention, 34
Asenath’s Plea to Her Husband Joseph, 258
Aspects of Eve, 34
At Blue Dawn II, 764
At Blue Dawn VII, 1190
At Blue Dawn IX, 565
At Light’s Border, 890
At the Crossroads, 83
At the Loom, 614
At the Tent of Meeting, 566
At the Well, 180
Autumn Measure, 867
Awakening, 32
Balak, 958
Barren, 450
Baruch Hu, 493
Before, 471
Beheaded Heifer, 1164
Believe Me, 655
Bezalel, 564
A Blessing, 842
Blessing of a Broken Heart, 1189
Blood, 677
The Blood of Birth, 656
Boiled Beet, 376
A Box of Clementines in the Maternity Ward, 914
Broken Prayer, 785
The Butcher’s Wife, 841
Celebrating Courage and Vision: An Appreciation of Rabbi Sally Priesand, 613
Chaye Sarah, 132
Childhood in the Shtetl, 764
Clothes My Mother Made, 614
Coda, 592
Comfort Me, 155
The Compassion of the Shekhinah, 472
Contractions of Death, 634
Covenant, 1113
Creation, 472
The Curse, 678
Dakota Diaspora: Memoirs of a Jewish Homesteader, 891
The Dance of the Reform Jew, 784
Dear Descartes: Creativity, 154
The Death of Moses, 1290
The Death of Rachel, 207
Delight, 542
Deliverance: Pu’ah Explains, 328
Desolate Valley, 960
Dina’s Own Story, 206
Dinah, 206
Disquisition, 353
Dissolve in Slow Motion, 1011
Each of Us Has a Name, 814
Earrings, 543
Eating the Bones, 612
Eikev, 1114
Elisheba Speaks, 354
Elul, 520, 699
The Empress of Imagined Fertility, 1112
Enwombed, 155
Epitaph, 329
Eve’s Birth, 34
Every City Has a Soul, 812
Family Reunion, 57
Fastening the Light of the Sabbath Candles, 959
First a Spark, 542

- The first time we made Shabbos together, 1036
 The First Wriggle, 764
 The Five Books of Miriam, 230
 Fleeing, 83
 The Flood, 57
 For a Child Not Yet Conceived, 1112
 For Days Miriam Sat Outside, 868
 For My Daughter, 1189
 For My Daughter on Her Twenty-First Birthday, 987
 For the Last Time, 635
 For the Sin . . . , 699
 Forgotten, 813
 Fringes in My Heart, 892
 From Day to Night, 913
 From a Mother to Her Girls, 1270
 From My Mother's Home, 544
 Garden, 636
 The Generations Upon Me, 1060
 Genesis, 33
 Gifts, 842
 The Girls That Are Wanted, 1036
 God: Desert, 1060
 A God Once Commanded Us, 33
 God, Take Me by the Hand, 354
 Gravity, Death, 720
 Gray Hairs, 721
 Hagar, 84
 The Hard Rock, 936
 Hidden Treasures, 959
 His Wife, 109
 Holy Quiet, 960
 Home Again, 1061
 How divine is forgiving?, 592
 How Much Water Is Inside a Tear?, 58
 How to Resist Temptation, 840
 I Am Accursed, 840
 I Do Not Ask, 1234
 I Know, 302
 I Know About the Woman Who Sits and Waits, 988
 I Know Four, 154
 I Say, 812
 I Spread Out God's Names in Front of Me, 353
 I Will Not Offer, 110
 If I Only Knew, 634
 I'll Drop My Plea, 1010
 In the Beginning, 33
 In Everything, 698
 In the Garden, 1232
 In the Jerusalem Hills, 1289
 In the Sudan, 1010
 In Place of Belief, 565
 In Your Image, 520
 The Ineffable Name, 425
 Inheritance, 636
 An Interrupted Life, 472
 Isaac, 131
 Jacob and Esau, 155
 Jacob Blesses Dinah, 301
 Jewish Feminism: Go to Yourself, 678
 Joseph and Pharaoh, 257
 The Journey, 1140
 Journey's End, 1269
 Judgment, 1162
 The Keepers of My Youth, 1249
 The Kohain's Wife, 745
 Kol Nidrei, September 2001, 1010
 Korach, 913
 The Land of the Patriarchs, 1214
 Last Prayer, 1288
 L'chi Lach, 82
 Leah, 181
 Leah at Benjamin's B'rit Milah, 207
 Leah to Her Sister, 181
 Leah's Last Words, 302
 Leaving Egypt, 404
 Lech L'cha, 82
 Letter to Haym Peretz, 721
 Letter to Mala Laaser, 1938, 494
 Like a Poppy Borne by Wind, 1269
 Like Rachel, 208
 Listen to the Bird, 1012
 Look There, 987
 Looking toward Shabbat, 746
 Magic Spells, 868
 Meditation for Tefillin, 378
 A Meditation in Seven Days, 109
 Menorah, 494
 Merciful God, 1138
 The Messenger Came in the Night, 1269
 Mikveh Mayim, 1234

INDEX OF VOICES TITLES

- Military Washing, 1162
Miriam, 329, 867
Miriam Argues for Her Place as Prophetess, 330
Miriam: The Red Sea, 404
Miriam's Song, 377
Miriam's Well, 936
The Mirror, 544
Mobilization, 1163
Moon Is Teaching Bible, 1249
Moses Leans Over the Stone, 936
Mother, 426
Mother Earth, Well Worn, Sun Washed, 1012
Mother to Mother, 866
A Mother's Morning Prayer, 591
Move, 1061
M'tzora, 676
My Dead, 634
My Entitlement and My Obligation, 892
My Freedom, 83
My Friends Baked Cake and We Ordered Lox and Whitefish from the Deli, 656
My Mother, 1139
My People, 1269
Naso, 841
Nearing 80, 786
Nearing the End, 302
The New Egypt, 1035
No Sign, 612
Noah, 58
Nomad Land, 1061
Not Every Day, 1035
The Nursing Father, 354
O the Night of the Weeping Children, 378
Offering, 493
The Old Prayer Book, 1250
Olive Trees, 1164
Open Earth, 58
On Adoption, 329
An Opening Ceremony, 866
The Other Shore, 405
Otwock II, 656
Otwock VI, 812
Packing Slip, 786
Parashat Noach, 57
The Passage of Divorce: Paving One's Way, 1189
Passover, 354
Passover Love Song, 376
Pharaoh and Joseph, 257
please with gentleness, 472
Poem 21, 914
A Poem to the Paper Bridge, 891
Poems of the Journey's End, 1034
Posit, 180
Potiphar's Wife, 231
Prayer for Burning the End Piece of the Challah, 891
Prayer for my Son, 1216
A Prayer for My Sons, 156
A Prayer for Parents of Babies with Disabilities, 745
A Prayer for the Journey, 813
A Prayer When the Child Is Born, 1233
Prayers I, 1216
Precious Gifts, 840
Preparing for the Journey, 1249
Prescience, 543
Pride, 935
The Primal Feast, 1138
Prophet Miriam at Mount St. Helens, Washington, USA, 426
Psalm 5: A Lullaby for Courage, 450
Psalm 32: A Song of Endings and Beginnings, 566
Psalm 50, 591
A Pure Whole Memory, 635
Rachel, 301
Rachel Cried There for Her Children, 208
Rachel Solo, 182
Rape poem, 1190
Rebecca, 131, 155
Released, 1113
Requests, 1215
Ritual, 935
The Ritual Bath, 677
River of Light, 493
The Sabbath Song, 746
The Sacrifice, 110
Sarah, 109
Sarah and Hagar, 110
Sarai, 83
Scatter Us in the Sea, 58
The Second Exodus, 258
Seder Eve, 1139
Serah Bat Asher, 280
She Is Joseph, 232

INDEX OF VOICES TITLES

- Shirat Ishah, 33
 Sh'lach L'cha, 890
 Sinai, 1086, 1087
 Sinai Again, 519
 Sometimes while I am chanting, 1233
 Somewhere in Samaria, 519
 Somewhere Out of Time, 1086
 A Song of Descent, 519
 The Song of Miriam, 406
 Songs of a Foreign Woman, 1011
 Sorcery, 1162
 The Sorrow of Night, 1034
 Sorrow Song, 182
 Still Dreaming of Home, 1215
 The Stripes in Joseph's Coat, 231
 The Struggle, 206
 Sukkot 2001, 1140
 Tamar's Lament, 230
 The Tapestry of Jewish Time, 614, 892, 1087, 1140, 1232
 Teach Me, O God, a Blessing, 1216
 Thankful, 1214
 That Very Night, 785
 There Are Stars, 1290
 there is the river, 156
 There's Only One Question, 302
 They Build the Tabernacle, 543
 They Had Names, 814
 They've Rolled the Parchment, 1062
 Thirst IV, 406
 [This child inside me], 655
 This Night, 378
 This Place in the Ways, 1232
 This Tkhine Is Said before Kedushe, 493
 Thistles, 960
 Timna's Revenge, 208
 To a Nursling before Dawn, 655
 To God, 520
 To My Country, 612
 Torah, 1234
 Toward Myself, 1189
 Transforming the Meaning of Purity, 677
 T'rumerah, 471
 The Tune to Jacob Who Removed the Stone from the Mouth of the Well, 180
 Turning the Garden in Middle Age, 914
 Turning to Rest in Sappho's Poems, 722
 Tzav, 613
 Under the Spell of Miscarriage, 449
 Undo It, Take It Back, 131
 Unfulfilled Promise, 1288
 Untitled, 867, 959, 1290
 V'ahavta, 1088
 The Way Out, 1035
 We All Stood Together, 425
 We Mothers, 654
 We reach for You, our God, 518
 Weathering, 720
 What We Need, 1250
 Whatever In Me Is of Heaven, 700
 When I Melt Down, 612
 [When this old body], 700
 Where Did Its Redness Come From?, 34
 While Three Men Sit in the Next Room Discussing the Talmudic Tractate on How to Prove a Woman Adulterous, 840
 White Petticoats, 700
 Widows, 1139
 The Wife of Moses, 330
 The Wild Heart, 1215
 Will, 518
 The Window, 812
 With My Grandfather, 110
 Women and Horses, 1163
 Women Who Would Be Rabbis, 494
 Women-Poems VII, 654
 A Word before the Last about Loss, 232
 Yahrzeit, 745
 Yocheved's Own Story, 328
 yom kippur, 698
 Yom Kippur Prayer, 698
 You are Wondrous, 784
 Zilpah, 182
 Zilpah Speaks to Gad, 279
 Zipporah's Return, 426

Index of Subjects and Cited Authors

This combined index covers the introductory essays and all commentary sections except for Voices.
The cited authors are shown in small capitals.

A

- Aaron, 335, 338, 609, 632–33, 642–43
 - challenge with Miriam to Moses, 859–64
 - as chief priest, 617–19, 681–82, 809, 829 (see also chief priests)
 - daughters, 617
 - death of, 922, 925–26, 1017
 - Golden Calf episode, 502–3, 505, 1099
 - Korah's challenge and, 893–901
 - leadership role, 318, 401
 - role in Egypt's plagues, 342, 345
 - priestly role and affirmation, 476–88, 547, 549–50, 801, 845, 901–4
 - punishment of, 924, 1264
 - sons, 617–18, 620–23, 804–6
 - wife (see Elisheba)
- Aaron's rod, 338, 540, 901, 903–4
- Abel, 19–20
- Abib (Nisan), 363
- Abihu. See Nadab and Abihu
- Abimelech (king)
 - Abraham and Sarah's visit, 95
 - Isaac and Rebekah's visit, 138–39
- Abiram. See Dathan and Abiram
- abortion, 434, 446
- Abraham/Abram, 59, 61–69. See also patriarchs
 - death and burial, 124–26
 - Isaac and, 101–3, 116–17
 - Lot and, 64–65, 67
 - relationship with God, 61, 101–3, 107–8, 1268
 - Sarah and, 51–52, 54, 63–64, 76–77, 79, 88, 107–8, 128
 - transformation, 70, 74
- Abraham's servant, 116–22
- abstentions. See vows
- ABUDRAHAM, DAVID, 1083

- abuse, by husband, 1248. See also violence: against women
- abuse, systemic, of women, 78, 129.
 - See also* parents: abuse of; violence: against women
- acacia wood, 454–55, 463–64
- Achsah, 751, 776, 874, 1047
- ACKERMAN, SUSAN, 894
- Adah, 21
- adam*. See humans
- Adam, 15–18
- ADLER, RACHEL, lviii
- adoption of children, 152–53, 266, 269, 284–86
- adornment, 507. See also jewelry
- adultery
 - penalty, 1173
 - procedure for accused wife (sotah), 821–25
 - prohibition of, 419, 712–13, 1074
 - theological, 504 (see also apostasy)
- Agag, 949
- agriculture and agrarian societies, 27, 63, 749, 753
 - importance of fertility, 53
 - women and, 15 (see also roles, women's)
- AGUILAR, GRACE, xxxviii, 758
- Akedah (binding of Isaac), 101–3, 106
- ALEXIOU, MARGARET, 129
- ALPERT, REBECCA, 838
- ALSHEKH, MOSHE, 492, 718
- altars
 - of incense, 487–88, 534
 - of burnt offering, 464–65, 535–36, 830
- ALTER, ROBERT, 218, 259
- Amalek and Amalekites, 66, 398–99, 1184
- Ammonites, 94, 1048, 1050, 1057, 1175–76

- Amnon, 191–92, 211, 690, 1199
- Amorites, 70, 287, 1051–54
- Amram, 325, 336, 349–51
- Anakites, 874
- Anat (goddess), 1265
- ancestral houses, 791
- angels, 159, 175, 942. See also messengers, divine
- animals
 - slaughtering, 624 (see also meat; sacrificial offerings)
 - speaking, 942
 - treatment of, 441, 733, 1127, 1170, 1182
- animal sacrifices, 267, 341, 344, 569, 682–83, 732. See also sacrificial offerings
 - firstlings, 777–78, 1131
 - unfit, 776, 778
- anointing
 - priests, 483, 556, 605, 801
 - Tabernacle (mishkan) and furnishings, 605
- anointing oil. See oil for anointing
- annunciation of a birth, 73–74, 88
- anthropomorphic representations of God, 342–43, 501, 509, 1095, 1102, 1275. See also God; God, imagery for
- apostasy, 437–38, 1123–24. See also idols and idolatry
 - at Baal-peor, 951–52, 954, 964–65
 - consequences of, 1220–21, 1241–42, 1259–60
- apotropaic customs/items, 319, 363–66, 481, 552
- appearance, 743–44. See also beauty, danger of
- Arachin (valuations), 781
- Arad, 926
- ARAMA, ISAAC, 177

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

Ararat, 42
 ark of Noah, 38–41
 Ark of the Covenant, 1244
 Ark of the Tabernacle, 455, 533, 853, 1101 artisans, in Tabernacle construction, 499, 522, 528–29
 Asenath, 203, 226, 239–40, 253, 269
asham. See reparation offerings (asham)
 Asher (tribe), 1279
 Asherah (goddess), 297, 338, 458, 511, 1119 asherah (sacred post), 511, 1119, 1144 asylum. See cities of refuge Atra Hasis epic, 37
 avenger, gender of, 1022
avot (ancestors, fathers, parents), 272,
 284, 292, 417, 1070, 1092, 1194
 Azazel, 682

B

Baal, 1265, 1280
 Baal-peor, 937, 948, 951–52, 989, 998, 1066
 Babylon/Babylonia, 49–50, 769
 baking. See bread
 Balaam, 937–51, 954, 956–57, 996–97
 donkey, 937, 942–43
 oracles, 944–51
 Balak, 937–50, 956–57
 balance and restoration, 762–63
 baldness, 647
 Bamoth-baal, 944
 Bar Kochba, 950
 BARON, BONNIE ELLEN, 153
 BARON, LAWRENCE, 153
 barrenness, 51–53, 151–53, 1092.
 See also fertility; matriarchs;
 procreation; reproduction
 Bashan, conquest of, 1051 basin. See laver (basin)
 bathing pools. See mikveh (ritual bathing pool) battles. See warfare beauty, women's danger of, 176
 equation of goodness and, 744 biblical mentions of, 63, 162–63, 1167 rabbinic mentions of, 422
 Beersheba, 100
 BELLIS, ALICE, 133, 142
 bells (apotropaic). See vestments, priestly

Benjamin, 242–51, 261–62 birth and naming, 197, 203–4
 status of, 275–76
 Benjamin (tribe), 1277
 Berenice, 781, 837
 Beruriah, 111
 bestiality, 437–38, 692
 women and, 692, 713
 Beth El, 62, 160, 195–96
 Bethuel, 119, 121
 betrayal, 820–25
 betrothal, 127, 437, 1159–60
 betrothal gift (mohar). xlii, 127, 437, 1155, 1159, 1203
 Bezalel, 499, 514–15, 528, 560–61
 biblical interpretation. See interpretation of text and interpretive process
 Bible scholarship, xxxvi–xl, 1230–31
 feminist, xxxviii–xl
 biblical personalities, conflation of,
 324, 350
 Bilhah, 166, 177
 Reuben and, 198, 690
 status of, 269
 binding of Isaac (Akedah), 101–3, 106
 BIRD, PHYLLIS, 10
 birds, 42, 413. See also eagles forbidden as food, 626
 purification rituals and, 660
 treatment of, 1170
 birthing. See childbirth birthright, 137, 285, 289
 birth stories of heroes, 310
 Bithiah. See Pharaoh's daughter bitter herbs, 364 bitterness, 393. See also water blasphemy and blasphemers, 738–39
 BLEDSTEIN, ADRIEN, 142, 147 bleeding. See blood; menstruation blessings, bestowed on artisans, 554
 daughters and sons, 299–300
 Ephraim and Manasseh, 285
 Esau, 142–46, 189
 Isaac, 138–39
 Jacob, 143–46, 187
 Pharaoh, 272
 Rebekah, 122–23
 sons of Jacob/tribes/Israelites, 287–91, 298, 1273, 1275–79
 blessings and curses, 441–42, 765–73, 1092, 1117, 1286–87. See also punishment; rewards and punishment
 Balaam and, 939–40, 945–50

for obeying or disobeying God's commandments, 1197–1207, 1226–27
 blood, 319–20, 573, 674. See also menstruation and menstruants abnormal discharge of, 670 life source/prohibited from consuming, 650, 695, 709, 1121, 1125–27
 plagues and, 339, 364
 protective quality, 319, 363–66 purification agent, 484, 660–62, 917–18
 sacrificial offerings and, 578, 601, 618 symbolic value, 372, 637, 918
 blood avenger, gender of, 1022 bloodguilt, 1024–25, 1156–57
 BLOOM, HAROLD, xxxvii blue (dye color), 453, 467, 480, 524, 885
b'nei Yisrael (people of Israel).
 See Israel (nation/people)
 Boaz, 753. See also Ruth boils (plague), 345
 boils (skin disease), 645 bondage, 357, 370. See also Exodus from Egypt; slaves and slavery
 Book of the Covenant, 427–41
 Book of the Wars of Yehuda, 928 boundaries
 external, 1019–21
 gender and sexual, 688–93, 1170 between holy and profane, 567, 630, 681–82
 markers, 1153
 bread, 394, 882–83, 887. See also challah (dough offering); grains;
 unleavened bread
 of display/of the Presence, 738 preparation of, 364, 394, 770 (see also roles, women's) sacred/offering, 457–58, 599, 882 breast-feeding, 311–12, 719. See also nursing (lactation); wet nurses breastpiece, 478–79, 551
 BRENNER, ATHALYA, xxxix
 BRETTLER, MARC, 1260 bribery, 1143–44, 1199
 bricks and brickmaking, 308, 320–22, 373
 bridegroom of blood, 319–20, 325
 bride imagery, 515
 bride-price. See betrothal gift b'rit bat (covenant ceremony for a baby girl), 80–81

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

b'rit milah (circumcision).
See circumcision (b'rit milah)
 BROOTEN, BERNADETTE, li BROWN, WIDNEY, 205
 BUCKLEY, THOMAS, 668
 BURGESS, FRAN, 374
 burial places and practices, 292, 741–42, 996
 Abraham, 125
 Deborah (Rebekah's nurse), 196
 Dinah, 203
 Jacob, 291–93, 297
 Joseph, 296
 Leah, 214
 Moses, 1281–82, 1285
 priests and, 725–26, 741
 Rachel, 197, 285
 Sarah, 111–15
 burning bush, 314, 540
 BURNS, RITA, 922
 burnt offerings (olah), 572–74, 595–96, 608, 641, 881 business ethics, 1183–84
 BYNUM, CAROLYN, 993

C

Cain, 19–21
 Caleb, 514, 560, 869–74, 876–78, 887, 1047
 CAMP, CLAUDIA, 940
 Canaan and Canaanites, 62, 1018–19, 1149–50. See also foreign women coexistence with Israelites, 1094, 1122 conquest of, 688, 693, 880, 1044–45, 1051–53
 Israel distinguished from, 46, 48, 688, 1019, 1080–81 mythological epics, 387 reconnaissance/preparation for conquest of, 869–71, 873–75, 879, 886–89, 1044–47, 1093 ritual objects, 1118–19
 cannibalism, 770–71, 1205–6, 1211 capital offenses, 434, 1024 abuse of parents, 433, 712, 1168–69
 adultery, 419, 712–13, 1173 apostasy, 437–38, 1123–24, 1144–45
 bestiality, 437–38
 blasphemy, 739–40
 disregard for verdicts of judicial authority, 1146
 kidnapping, 1179
 murder, 432

sorcery, 437–38
 willful desecration of Shabbat, 884 captivity and captives, 1207
 redemption of, 446
 treatment of, 1167–68, 1185
 carcasses, impurity and, 625, 627–29
 CASSIRER, ERNST, 540 categories, maintenance of distinct, 707, 713 cedar wood, 660, 918
 census, 497, 548, 791, 793–94, 965–69
 danger of, 810–11
 of Levites, 815–17, 969–70 ceremonies
 b'rit bat (covenant ceremony for a baby girl), 80–81
 b'rit milah (see circumcision (b'rit milah)) confirmation, lvii
 for “Moab covenant”, 1219–20
chalitzah (release from levirate marriage), 1182, 1187 challah (dough offering), 882–83, 887 challenges. See also rebellions to Aaron's or Moses' leadership, 843–44, 857–64, 869, 893–903 confronting, 888–89
 to God (see disobedience) change, positive effects of, 838–39
 chariots, Egyptian, 383 charitable acts (acts of loving-kindness), 1285 chastity, 1171–73
chatat. See purgation offerings (chatat) cherem (ban), 1094
 cherubim, 18, 456, 460, 469
 chief priests, 728–29, 963–64, 1024.
 See also Aaron; Eleazar childbirth, 16–17, 27 collective female action, 166 death in, 197
 midwives and, 166
 purification rituals and sacrificial offerings, 601, 639–42, 650–51 childlessness. See barrenness children, 650, 1092, 1256
 adoption of, 152–53
 education of, xlvi–xlvii, 1079
 loss of, 22, 216, 261, 277–78, 1204 mamzerim (children of prohibited marriages), 1175 naming (see naming of children) role in Judaism, 152–53
 sacrifice of (see child sacrifice)
 status of, 98–99, 188, 191, 198
 child sacrifice, 711, 770–71, 1122.
 See also Akedah (binding of Isaac); Jephthah's daughter CHIRICHIGNO, GREGORY, 431, 447, 755–56 choices, constraints to making, 1247–48 Chosen Place (for God's sanctuary), 1118, 1121, 1240 festival celebrations, 1131–33
 sacrificial offerings and, 1128
 circumcision (b'rit milah), 193–94, 325, 369, 640 of Abraham and Ishmael, 74–77 of Gershon by Zipporah, 319–20 symbolic meanings, 1110–11
 cities of refuge, 432, 1071, 1152
 Levitical, 1022–23, 1030–31
 civil disobedience. See disobedience civil law. See jurisprudence clan system, 750, 792, 909, 1031, 1230 cleanliness, ritual. See purity, ritual clothing, 211, 481, 582, 661. See also cross-dressing; veil motif; vestments, priestly Joseph and, 211, 222, 236, 238 mourning and, 214, 250, 876–77
 as pledges, 1180–81
 significance of, 15, 18, 265–66
 cloud (showing God's presence), 558–59, 562–63, 850, 853 colors (of dyed fabric), 453, 467, 480, 524 commandments, 733. See also Decalogue; laws obedience to, 1197
 women's observance of, 742, 1083, 1135–36, 1211
 commentary, biblical. See interpretation of text and interpretive process communities and communal responsibility, 956–57, 1221 leaders, 580, 618, 883, 1287 compensation (legal). See jurisprudence competition, 19–20, 164–68. See also sibling rivalry complaints, Israelite, 322, 923–24, 927. See also challenges; meat; rebellions; water concubines, 125, 198, 275–76. See also foreign wives; foreign women; wives, secondary; under individual names confirmation ceremony, lvii confrontation, benefits of, 717 conjugal rights, 432

 consecration of first-born males, 370–71 of nazirites, 826–28
 of priests, 482–86
 of property (land and dwellings), 776–77 of Tabernacle, 555–58 conversion, 79, 421–22 corvée labor. See labor: forced covenant (b'rit), God and Israelites, 487, 1037–38, 1091–92, 1110, 1283.
See also Israel (nation/people) ceremony for “Moab covenant”, 1219–20 ratification, 442–43, 1219
 reaffirmation/restoration of, 333–34, 1070, 1100–1101, 1195–97, 1208–9
 Sinai, 412–20, 423–24, 509–12, 773, 779
 women and, 304, 407, 414–16, 418, 1219, 1228–29 covenant (b'rit), God and patriarchs and their descendants, 65, 68–70, 74–76, 124, 138, 772–73, 1078
 inclusiveness of, 1092
 role of matriarchs, 76–78, 80, 142–46, 164
 signs of, 75, 369
 covenant ceremony for a baby girl (b'rit bat), 80–81 Covenant Code. See Book of the Covenant covenant of salt, 907
 covenants. See also blessings and curses; obedience God and Noah (and humankind), 39, 44–45 memory and, 357
 merger of traditions, 1220 “Moab covenant”, 1208
 signs of, 69–70
 Cozbi, 954, 964–65, 983–84
 creation stories and category boundaries, 691 non-biblical, 5, 9, 22–24, 29, 40 influence on women, 3
 crimson (dye color), 453, 467, 524 crimson stuff (dyed yarn), 660, 918 cross-dressing, 1170, 1186
 cubit. See weights and measures cult places. See shrines, local curses. See blessings and curses
 Cushite woman, 859–61, 863

D
 damages (legal). See jurisprudence damans, 625
 Dan (tribe), 739, 1279
 dancing, 392, 401, 502, 504
 Daniel, 1145
 Dathan and Abiram, 893–900, 909
 daughters. See also Lot's daughters; parents; vows; Zelophehad's
 daughters
 indentured service and, 431, 755 laws of inheritance and, 971–74
 of priests, 617, 730–31, 776, 906
 rebellious, 1172–73 relationship to parents after marriage, 276
 sacred status, 709
 David (king), 215, 1173. See also Ruth dead, the contact with, 1195 (see also death) kindness to, 1161
 role of, 297
 Dead Sea scrolls, 1246, 1255, 1262 death, 18, 1084–85. See also embalming; under individual names
 association with impurity, 637, 642–43, 659–60, 999
 association with scale disease, 861 of first-born sons (see slaying of first-born sons)
 as punishment, 1226–27
 reports of, 1281
 Deborah (judge and prophet), 411, 1239, 1284
 Deborah (Rebekah's nurse), 123, 196
 debts, remission of, 1129–31 debt-slavery and debt-slaves. See servants, indentured; slaves and slavery
 Decalogue, 407, 416–20, 455, 1073–75, 1084–85. See also
 commandments; laws deception and subterfuge, 706. See also manipulators and tricksters Jacob's sons, 193–94, 214
 midwives in Egypt, 310
 to protect self or loved ones, 63–64, 95–96, 138–39, 1074–75
 to secure destiny, 137, 142–44, 217–19, 358
 Tamar, 215–20, 226
 unchaste daughter, 1173
 dedication to God. See consecration Deir Alla texts, 939
 DE LEÓN, MOSES. See LEÓN, MOSES DE depression, 1009
 desecration of corpse, prohibition of,
 1169
 DE SILVA, CARA. See SILVA, CARA DE desire (sexual), 17
 Deuteronomy, book of, xxxvii–
 xxxviii dating, 1038, 1118, 1147, 1223 naming, 1148
 dietary laws, 188, 623–29
 rationale/significance of, 1125–27, 1136 separation of dairy and meat, 440–41, 1127
 socio-political aspects, 630 spiritual and ethical aspects, 1137 women as ritual specialists, xlvi, 610–11, 615
 Dinah, 202–4, 275
 birth and naming, 168
 daughter of, 203, 253
 rape or disgrace of, 190–92, 288 disadvantaged, the. See marginalized,
 the discharges, bodily, 601, 657, 665–71 discolorations (skin disease), 644 disobedience, 13–14, 35, 324, 1091–99.
See also Golden Calf episode
 consequences of, 16–17, 29, 31, 769–73, 1103–6, 1201–7, 1210 (see also blessings and curses)
 divination, 710, 712, 715, 940–41, 947–48. See also necromancy and necromancers; sorcerers, sorceresses, and sorcery; Urim and Thummim prohibition of, xlvi–xlviii, 1123, 1149–50
 divine abode, 390, 391, 454, 558–59, 562–63, 1195. See also sanctuary, the; Tabernacle (mishkan); Tent of Meeting
 divine attributes, 878, 946 divine image, 8, 351, 718–19, 1110 divine mediation, 501–2
 divine messengers. See messengers,
 divine
 divine power, 382–85, 1052
 promoting awareness of, 337–38, 342–43, 346, 349, 357–61, 388
 divine presence/absence, 398, 400, 491–92, 768, 1242
 abode of, 456, 558–59, 562–63
 burning bush, 1277
 maintaining, 711, 820
 Moses and, 507–9

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

divine retribution/wrath. See retribution/wrath, divine divine revelation. See revelation divorce and divorced people, xlivi, 731, 1178–79. See also vows grounds for, 1171–73, 1186 initiation by the wife, 1172, 1179, 1185–86
 priests and, 727–28, 742
 Documentary Hypothesis, xxxvii–xxxviii domestic violence. See violence:
 against women
 donations. See gifts, voluntary donkey, as mounts for women, 942
 dough offering (challah), 882–83
 DOUGLAS, MARY, 572, 610, 625, 630, 640, 681 doves. See birds
 dowries, xlvi, 437
 dreams and interpretation of dreams, 252–53, 1123
 Jacob's, 159–60, 169, 172
 Joseph's, 212, 223
 Pharaoh's, 233, 235–37
 DRIVER, SAMUEL R., 1224 drums and drum playing, 392, 401 dyes, 467

E
eagles

forbidden as food, 626
 symbolic meaning, 413, 1256–57, 1266

Ebal, Mount, 1117, 1196–97
 Eden, ii, 13–18, 29, 31
 Edom and Edomites, 137, 199–202, 925, 1048–49 education, xlv–xlii, 587, 1077–79.
See also Levi (tribe) and Levites:
 educational responsibilities; Moses:
 teaching role; torah (teaching)

Egypt and Egyptians agriculture, 1105
 as distinguished from Israel, 688
 symbolic meaning, 1085
 EHRLICH, ELIZABETH, 610–11
eifah (dry measure of volume).
See weights and measures
 EISEN, ARNOLD, 610
 Eldad, 857
 elderly, the, 710, 1074
 elders of Israel, 843, 856, 1043
 Eleazar, 622, 801
 marriage, 336, 350

priestly role, 809, 925–26, 1239
 role in apportioning the land, 1019–21 elevation offerings (t'nuah), 526, 548–49 Eliezer, 409
 Elisheba, 336, 350, 793
 El Shaddai, 74, 333
 embalming, 292, 296
 emissions, bodily. See discharges, bodily emotional distress, 263–64. See also human condition; matriarchs empathy, 255
 En-dor, medium of, 297, 573, 715, 1126, 1150 enemies, 391. See also Amalek and Amalekites obliteration of, 1093–94
 reaching out to, 1160–61, 1169 treatment of, 439, 939, 1057, 1093, 1154–56 (see also captivity and captives)
 Enoch, 24
Enuma Elish (Babylonian creation story), 40
 ephod, 477–78, 550
 Ephraim and Manasseh, 240, 254, 299–300
 Jacob and, 266, 269, 284–86
 Ephraim and Manasseh (tribes), 285, 290, 1277
 Ephron, 113–15
 EPSTEIN, BARUCH HALEVI, 1031
 Esau, 137, 141
 blessing from Isaac, 142–46
 marriages and wives, 147–48, 151, 199–202 reconciliation with Jacob, 188–89
 Esther (book), 491–92
 Esther (person), 247, 271, 422
 ethical behavior. See also justice; moral order
 in business, 1183–84 relation to the divine, 752
 eunuchs, 1175
 Eve, 14–15, 16–19, 22
 execution, public, 1145. See also stoning exile, 1069, 1222–25, 1228
 Exodus, book of (overview), 303–4
 Exodus from Egypt, 316–17, 355–56, 361–69 basis for obedience to commandments, 733 commemoration of, 363–65, 369–72

 dating, 326–27, 368
 foreshadowing, 281, 293–94
 historicity of, 304, 326–27, 355
 inclusiveness of, 358–59
 Kabbalah and, 352
 Ezra, xxxvii, 1240

F

faithlessness of Israelites, 869–71, 875, 879, 888–89 (see also apostasy; challenges; complaints; disobedience)
 FALK, MARCIA, 1267
 families, 1–2. See also love dysfunctional, 188, 212, 214, 254–55 (see also competition; favoritism; sibling rivalry) extended (see ancestral houses; clan system) preservation of, 1074, 1077 famine, 63, 138, 235, 273, 770–71 fat, hard, of animals (cheilev), 577–78, 601–2, 1127 fatherless, the, 128, 438, 1102, 1128, 1132, 1210. See also orphans. fathers. See also daughters; parents
 honoring, 704, 1074, 1083
 favoritism, 798. See also sibling rivalry Isaac over Ishmael, 98
 Jacob over Esau, 137
 Noah's sons, 55–56
 Rachel over Leah, 164, 188
 Rachel's children over Leah's, 188, 209, 211, 233, 245, 249, 254–55
 favus. See skin or scale disease (tzaraat)
 Feast of Booths. See Sukkot (Feast of Booths)
 Feast of Matzot. See Pesach (Feast of Matzot) Feast of Weeks. See Shavuot (Feast of Weeks) FELD, MERLE, lviii female imagery, 929
 fertility, 52, 1200. See also barrenness; procreation; reproduction agricultural, 1204, 1277, 1279 goddesses of, 297, 341 importance of, 441–42
 national, 307
 festivals, 512, 1131–33, 1135

- festivals (continued) centralization of celebration, 1131, 1134
 inclusiveness of, 742, 1134–35
 Pesach (Feast of Matzot), 363–65, 1131–32
 Shavuot (Feast of Weeks), 351–52, 1132–33, 1193
 Sukkot (Feast of Booths), 737, 1133
 fetal life. See abortion; miscarriage FIELDS, HARVEY, 889 figures of speech. See God, imagery for; merisms; metaphors FINE, LAWRENCE, 783 fire alien, 620
 pillar of, 382, 562–63, 850
 as punishment, 728
 of the sanctuary altar, 596 fire pans, 464
 Korah and, 896–97, 901–2
 Nadab and Abihu and, 620
 first-born males, 371, 511, 802, 805. See also pidyon haben (redemption of the first-born son); slaying of first-born sons
 firstlings, 777–78, 1131, 1135
 fish, forbidden as food, 625–26 flogging, 1181
 flood stories, 37–45
 food, 752. See also bread; famine distribution (family meals), 624 lack of, 394–97, 400
 food preparation, 624, 770. See also roles, women's ritual aspects, 610–11
 foreign wives, 148, 239, 255, 325, 514
 captives, 1167–68, 1185
 foreign women, 210, 229, 983–84
 captives, 1167
 dangerous influence of, 951–53, 964–65, 1083–84, 1147
 Midianite, 996–98
 role in national destiny, 215, 227, 325, 335–36, 964, 1057
 slaves and slavery, 447–48
 forgiveness
 divine, 468, 505, 1255
 human, 264, 861
FRANKL, VICTOR, 229
 freedom, economic and social, 749–51 free will, 374, 1228
FRICK, F. S., 929
FRIEDMAN, RICHARD, xxxvii frogs (plague), 340–41
FROMM, ERICH, 374
 frontlets. See vestments, priestly fruits, 873. See also grapes first, 708–9, 1193
 symbolic meaning, 1256
FRYMER-KENSKY, TIKVA, xxxix, 25, 37–38, 72, 89, 99, 418–19, 434, 823, 893, 1082, 1277
- G
Gad (tribe), 1002, 1007, 1054, 1278
Garden of Eden. See Eden garments. See clothing
gates of settlement, 1143
GELLER, LAURA, lvii
GELLER, STEPHEN, 918
gemstones, 478–79, 527, 551 gender, social, xxxii–xxxiv. See also roles, women's ambiguity, 10–11
 artifacts and, 70
 exclusivity/inclusivity of language, 430–33, 435, 445, 526, 756, 780–81
 God and, xxxiii–xxxiv, 1274–75
 Sinai covenant and, 407, 413, 416, 419, 423–24 genealogies, 50–51, 53. See also kinship
 Esau, 199–201
 Jacob, 198, 266–69, 275
 women and, 47, 187, 198–99, 201, 275, 310, 335
Genesis, book of (overview), 1–2 genital discharges. See discharges, bodily Gerizim, Mount, 1117, 1197
Gershonite clan, 803, 817
ghosts, 710, 712, 715
giants, 874–75
 Anakites, 874
 Nephilim, 25, 874
 Shasu, 874
gifts, voluntary, 469–70, 524, 529
Gilead, 1005, 1025
Gilgamesh epic, 37
God, 1274–75. See also divine presence/absence abandonment of Israel, 1241–42 (see also punishment: for disobedience) accessibility, 451, 454
 anthropomorphic representations (see anthropomorphic representations of God) demands upon Israel, 1097, 1102–3 as father, 1254–55
 female consort of male, 600, 1144 interaction with humans, 26, 185, 267, 487, 835 involvement in history and Israel's experience of, 366, 1079, 1104, 1194 omnipotence of, 355, 357
 in partnership with humans, 783, 1082 relationship to Israel, 975–76, 1068–73, 1077–78, 1081, 1195–96, 1254, 1267–68 (see also covenant (b'rit), God and Israelites; Israel (nation/people))
 worship of, 320, 339–41, 572, 588, 590, 1078
God, feminine aspects/roles. See also Shechinah
 birthing, 1266
 healing/providing, 393–95
 mothering, 351–52, 855–56, 1046
 nursing, 1257–59
God, gender and metaphoric treatment of, xxxiii–xxxiv
God, imagery for. See also anthropomorphic representations of God
 birthing, 1266
 comforter, healer, and protector, 1085, 1256, 1262
 fire, 1097
 king or ruler, 390, 1089, 1265, 1274
 marital, 417, 1109, 1185, 1227, 1241, 1265–66 maternal, 855–56, 1046, 1238, 1245, 1254, 1257 (see also Shechinah) paternal, 1254–55
 rock, 1254, 1258, 1261
 warrior or martial, 384, 386–89, 1097, 1102, 1222, 1260, 1265, 1274, 1280
God, names and titles of, 333, 349. See also Shechinah desecration of, 439, 711–12, 726–27, 738–39
 Ehyeh-Asher-Ehyeh, 315–16
 El, 945
 El Shaddai, 74, 333, 948
 God of Israel, 320
 Y-H-V-H (personal name), 9–10, 316, 333–34
goddesses, Near Eastern Anat, 1265
 Asherah, 297, 338, 458, 511, 1119
 Heqt, 341

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

Inanna, 19, 340, 1265
 Neith, 239
 Tiamat, 5, 29, 35, 40, 389, 1277
 gods, Near Eastern
 Baal, 1265, 1280
 as divine kings, 1274
 Marduk, 29, 40
 God's envoy, 1273–74
 GOLAN, GALIA, 1160–61
 GOLDBERG, LEA, 130
 Golden Calf episode, 501–6, 515, 562, 1098–1101, 1108–9
 Gomorrah. See Sodom and Gomorrah
 Goren ha-Atad, 294
 Goshen, 264, 342
 gossip, 706, 716
 GOTTLIEB, ALMA, 668
 GOTTLIEB, LYNN, 1267
 grains, 339, 362, 394
 grapes, 705, 873, 1266
 grasshoppers, 626
 graven images. See idols and idolatry graves. See burial places and practices
 GRAY, ELIZABETH DODSON, 674
 GREENBERG, BLU, 675
 grinding stones. See millstones GROSZ, KATARZYNA, 741 group and national identity, 2, 1078.
See also Israel (nation/people)
 land and progeny, 68–70
 revelation at Sinai, 412–13
 self-definition, 3, 59–62, 688, 791 separation from surroundings, 63, 65, 111, 116, 148, 1080–81
 signs of, 74–77, 372
 GRUBBS, JUDITH EVANS, 1160
 GRUBER, MAYER, 489, 573 guilt, 264. See also disobedience; sacrificial offerings; transgressions

H

Hagar, 59, 70–74, 78–79, 125–26
 expulsion of, 98–100, 106
 as Keturah, 128
 Haggadah, 375, 1079, 1194
 hail (plague), 345
 hair color of (Israelites), 646
 nazirites and, 826–28
 Ham, 38–40, 43, 46
 Haman, 1184
 Hammurabi. See Laws of Hammurabi
 Hamor, 192–94

Hannah, 602, 774, 994–95
 Hansen's disease. See skin or scale disease (tzaraat)
 Haran (place), 51
 Haran (person), 52
 hares, 625
 HAREUVENI, NOGAH, 540
 HAUPTMAN, JUDITH, 1211
 Hazeroth, 1041
 head coverings, priestly. See vestments, priestly heart, the, 1221
 circumcised, 772, 1102, 1110–11, 1225
 Hebrews. See Israel (nation/people)
 Hebron, 113, 297
 heifers. See red cow (heifer) ritual heirs, designation, 137, 1168
 Helena (queen), 781, 837
 helpmate (helper), 12, 15, 29–30
 henotheism. See monolatry
 Heqt (goddess), 341
 HERZL, THEODOR (BENJAMIN ZE'EV), 1212 HESCHEL, ABRAHAM JOSHUA, lvii high priest, wife of, 695
 hin (liquid measure). See weights and measures
 Hobab, 853. See also Jethro
 HOFFMAN, DAVID ZVI, 1223
 Hoglah. See Zelophehad's daughters holiness, 413–14, 567–68, 607, 897 concept of, 482–83, 596–97, 716, 718–19
 danger of, 620
 democratization of, 701–10
 dietary laws and, 629
 as emulation of God, 629, 703, 710–12 sexual ethics and, 712
 spirituality and, 719
 Holiness Code, 701–15, 723, 726–28
 HOLTZ, BARRY, lvi
 holy nation, concept of, 896.
See also holiness
 Holy of Holies, 453, 455, 462–63, 681–82
 homicide, 432, 1021–25, 1031.
See also murder
 homophobia, 692, 696
 homosexuality, 692, 713, 717
 honey, 874, 1096
 milk and, 874, 898
 Horeb, 398, 410, 507, 1042.
See also Sinai
 Hormah, 880
 horns of the altar, 464
 Hosea. See Joshua householders (male), 848, 991, 1046, 1070, 1095, 1206. See also households: heads of households gods of (t'rafim), 172–73, 178–79, 705–6 heads of, 1046, 1206
 participation in festivals, 1119, 1134 women as essence of, xliii–xlvii, 1134–35 houses, 777
 afflicted by tzaraat, 672–73
 jubilee laws and, 754
 purification, 663–64
 Huldah, xxxvii–xxxviii, 1115, 1284 human condition, 16–17, 31 human limitations, 26, 35, 43 humans, 8, 10–12. See also women creation of, 7–10, 28, 30, 491 isolation of, 12
 human trafficking, 205
 humility, 587–88, 911–12.
See also Moses
 Hur, 399
 hyssop, 660, 918

I

IBN EZRA, ABRAHAM, liv
 idols and idolatry, 417. See also apostasy consequences of worshipping, 1096, 1220–21
 Golden Calf episode, 501–6
 household gods (t'rafim), 172–73, 178–79
 prohibition of, 704, 1068–69, 1198
 ILAN, TAL, 1145
 imitating of God. See divine image; holiness immersion, ritual, 630–31, 673 impurity, ritual, 621, 671. See also purification rituals; purity, ritual accidental, 819–20 associated with death, 637, 642–43, 659–60, 920–21, 999
 carcasses and, 625
 Inanna (goddess), 19, 340, 1265
 incense, 487–88, 499, 534–35
 incest, 689–91, 694–97, 712
 indentured service. See servants, indentured indigenous peoples, 510–11. See also under names of peoples

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

infections. See also skin or scale disease (tzaraat) fabrics and leather (mold or fungus), 648–49 scalp or beard, 646
 infertility. See barrenness inheritance, 731. See also land; Zelophehad's daughters designation of heir, 137, 1168 farmland, 1021–22
 of the Promised Land, 1054
 Sarah's concerns, 98–99
 women and, 178–79, 971–74, 985–86
 injury, bodily, 433
 insects (plague), 342
 intermarriage, 954. See also foreign wives
 prohibition of, 1080, 1083–84
 intermediaries between God and Israelites. See Moses; priests and priesthood; prophets and prophecy
 interpretation of text and interpretive process, 1056, xl ix–lv contemporary, lviii–lix medieval, liii–liv
 investiture. See priests and priesthood Isaac, 87, 97, 101–4
 blessings from God, 138–39
 death of, 198–99
 divine promises and, 111, 124–25
 Ishmael and, 106, 125
 Jacob and, 144–46
 passivity of, 138, 140
 Rebekah and, 123–24, 139
ish (traditionally, “man”; plural anashim), contextual senses of envoy, 871, 1273–74
 householder (male), 1046, 1095, 1206
 member, 13, 525–26, 529, male (opposed to female), 430, 820 parent, 431
 party, 187, 1046, 1095, 1171
 rabbinic readings of, 468, 695, 780–81 representative member, 358, 871
ishah (traditionally, “woman, wife”; plural nashim), contextual senses of, 13, 39, 117, 526, 893–94, 940, 1171
 Ishmael, 73, 76, 80
 death and descendants, 126
 expulsion of, 98–100
 Isaac and, 106, 125

Ishtar. See Inanna
 Israel (nation/people), 192–95, 339, 342. See also group and national identity blessedness of, 937–51, 956–57 emergence of, 274–75, 308, 1241–42 membership, 1175
 relationship to God, 515, 975–76, 1068–73, 1077–78, 1081, 1267–68 (see also covenant (b'rit), God and Israelites) role as God's partner, 413, 1212–13 salvation of, 263–64
 Israel (person), 187–88, 196, 204.
See also Jacob
 Israelites. See Israel (nation/people)
 Issachar (tribe), 1278
 Ithamar, 547, 622, 801, 809

J

Jacob, 137, 147
 angels and, 159, 175, 185
 blessing from Isaac, 143–46
 blessings for sons, 287–91 children and, 191–95, 198, 204, 211–14, 254–55, 266–69 (see also under individual names)
 death and burial, 281–83, 291–94
 dreams, 159–60, 169, 172
 in Egypt, 270–74
 journeys, 157–60, 169, 185
 love and marriages, 163–66, 177, 197, 211, 285, 691
 name change and transformation, 159–60, 185–88, 196, 204
 Rebekah and, 142–44, 147–48, 150
 reconciliation with Esau, 188–89 reunion with Joseph, 266–67, 270
 Jacob's daughters, 267. See also Dinah

JAPHET, SARA, xxxix
 Japheth, 38–40, 43
 Jehoshabeath, 706
 Jephthah, 774, 991–92
 Jephthah's daughter, 992, 1006, 1122
 Jeremiah, 1151, 1185, 1252
 Jeroboam, 501
 Jerusalem, 1118–19, 1202
 Jeshurun, 1279
 Jethro, 313–14, 409–11, 421–22, 856, 1043. See also Hobab jewelry, 507, 515, 526
 Jezebel, 1147
 Joab, 1160
 Job, 56
 Jochebed, 269, 336, 970, 1285
 marriage, 336, 349–51
 Moses and, 310–11, 324–25
 Jonathan, 1006
 Joseph, 381–82, 967, 1278
 blessing from Jacob, 290–91
 death and burial, 296
 dreams of, 212, 223
 imprisonment, 223–25
 marriage and fatherhood, 239–40
 name change and transformation, 239, 263
 Potiphar's wife and, 220–23 reunion with brothers, 263–65 reunion with Jacob, 266–67, 270 rise to and exercise of power, 233–39, 242–43, 249–51, 255, 271
JOSEPHUS, FLAVIUS, 446, 749–51, 781, 1158–59, 1211
 Joshua, 398, 869, 871–73, 876–78
 role in apportioning the land, 1019–21, 1238
 successor to Moses, 975, 1055, 1235–39, 1241, 1243, 1282
 Josiah (king), xxxvii, 1115, 1119, 1240 journeys, 1030. See also Exodus from Egypt from Egypt to Canaan, 382, 559, 849–52, 1015–17, 1041–44
 Jacob's, 157–60, 169, 185
 Rachel's (internal), 157, 164–69 jubilee (fiftieth year), 747, 750–60, 762–63
 Judah, 261–62, 967
 blessing from Jacob, 289
 Tamar and, 214–20, 226, 690–91, 1182–83
 transformation, 245–46, 250–51, 255, 262, 275–78
 Judah (tribe), 1275
 Judaism, liii, lviii perpetuation of, 152–53 (see also group and national identity; memory, institutionalization of) judges. See judicial authority/system judicial authority/system, 409–11, 1143–46, 1151–54. See also jurisprudence Judith, 141
 jurisprudence, 439, 1038. See also judicial authority/system; laws Israelite, 427–37
lex talionis, 740, 1154, 1181
 Near Eastern, 429, 433–34, 447–48
 (see also Laws of Hammurabi)

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

justice, 705–7, 1141, 1144. See also judicial authority/system economic and social, 586, 747–52 safeguarding, 1151–61 violations of, 107–8

K

Kabbalists and Kabbalah, 351–52
Kadesh and Kadesh-barnea, 922, 933–34, 1017, 1042
karet (cutting off), 601, 705, 714, 884, 920–21
kashrut. See dietary laws
KELLER, CATHERINE, 40
KENSKY, TIKVA FRYMER-KENSKY, TIKVA
Keturah, 124, 128
Kibroth-hattaavah, 858
kidnapping, 432, 1179
Klmhith, 809–10
kinship, 601, 621, 753, 755, 1048–49.
See also genealogies; gender, social
women and, 47, 125, 690, 996
kindness, 297. See also Ruth KING, MARTIN LUTHER, JR., 1286–87
kings
divine, 1274
limitations of, 1146–48
political marriages, 1147
Kiriath-arba, 113
kites (bird), 626
KLAWANS, JONATHAN, 919 Kli Yakar (EFRAIM SHLOMO OF LUNTSHITS), 886–87
knowledge, xlviii, 13–14. See also wisdom
Bezalel and, 499, 514–15, 561
of divine power, 337, 342 of God's name, 315
technical expertise, xliv–xlv, xlviii, 525, 527
Kohath clan, 803–4, 806, 818
Korah, 893–901, 909–12
sons of, 966
Korah's wife, 909–10
korban (near-offering). See sacrificial offerings
KOREN, SHARON FAYE, 468
k'tubah (marriage contract).
See marriage contract (k'tubah)

L

Laban, 171–75, 177
Jacob and Rachel and, 162–63

Rebekah and, 119, 121–22, 178–79
labor
division of, xliii–xlvi forced, 308, 364 (see also slaves and slavery)
Lamech, 21 lamentation. See mourning and lamentation
Lamentations (book), 129
lamps, 459, 475, 490
lampstand, the (menorah), 457–58, 533, 540–41, 845 land, 17, 752–53, 1045. See also Promised Land
distribution to tribes, 969 establishing ownership, 1106 fulfillment of divine promise, 1193–94
holdings, 751–54, 776–77, 972–73
inheriting, 971–74, 1129
jubilee legislation and land's Sabbath, 747–49
as reward, 1103–6
women's holdings and property rights, 776 (see also Zelophehad's daughters) land and progeny, promises of.
See promises, divine
language and speech, 5, 49, 55–56, 706
lapis lazuli, 454, 525
LAPSLER, J. E., 178
laughter, 88–89, 97
laver (basin), 498, 535–36, 558 laws, 1115, 1169–70. See also Book of the Covenant; commandments;
Decalogue; jurisprudence; torah (teaching) adherence to and teaching of,
1073, 1076–81, 1118
civil, 1141–46
dating of, 1118
emotions and, 706
governing sexual relations, 1171–75
interpretation and change, 971, 973, 1030
military, 1154–56
Near Eastern (see Laws of Hammurabi; Mesopotamian law)
Promised Land and, 1118
Laws of Hammurabi, 429, 433–34, 694, 821, 1117
leaders and leadership, 1043, 1286–87. See also communities and communal responsibility;
under Aaron; Miriam; Moses
divine, 381
succession of, 974–75 (see also Joshua)
women and, 610–11, 1287
Leah, 162–72, 176–77, 214
Leah and Rachel, order of the two names, 170
legal codes and legislation. See Decalogue; jurisprudence; laws;
Laws of Hammurabi
LEIBOWITZ, NEHAMA, xxxix, 255, 782
LEÓN, MOSES DE, 352
leprosy. See skin or scale disease (tzaraat) lesbianism and lesbians, 717–18.
See also homosexuality
letters (characters), 587–88, 1224
LEVENSON, JON, 540
Levi (person), 194, 288
Levi (tribe) and Levites, 311, 547, 754, 877–78, 1021
blessing from Moses, 1276 educational responsibilities, 1240, 1274
families of, 1148
Golden Calf episode and, 505, 1276
priests and, 818, 846, 905 purification and consecration of, 845–47
religious responsibilities, 796–97, 800–807, 1101, 1276
special protection and economic support of, 1120–21 (see also tithe and tithing)
LEVINE, BARUCH, 576, 639, 749
LEVINSON, BERNARD, 1077, 1143, 1146, 1259
levirate marriage, xlivi, 216, 219, 1182–83, 1186–87
levitical priests, 1148. See also Levi (tribe) and Levites; priests and priesthood
Leviticus, book of (overview), 567–68
lex talionis. See jurisprudence liberty. See freedom, economic and social life, 695. See also blood.
as reward, 1226–27
sanctity of, 44
light, 490

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

light (continued)
 creation of, 5
 of the lampstand, 459, 540–41

Lilith, 29

lineages. See genealogies linen, 459–60, 465

 wool and, 467

literacy, 399

literary devices. See also God, imagery for; merism; metaphors composite narrative, 3 diverse imagery, 1262
 parallelism, 1261
 repetition, 19, 252
 symbolism, 539–41

living water. See water: of lustration loans, 755

locusts, 357, 626

lost objects, 1169

Lot, 64–65
 Lot's daughters, 91–94, 1049–50
 Lot's wife, 92–93, 105–6

love, 3–10
 children for parents, 255, 262 differentiated, 55–56
 for fellow Israelites, 707, 717 of God (see loyalty to God) between God and Israel, 516–17, 561, 1077, 1081

God for Israel, 561

Jacob for Joseph and Benjamin,
 211, 233, 241–47, 254, 261, 277

Jacob for Rachel (see Jacob: love and marriages)

Joseph for Benjamin, 248–49 parents for children, 137, 151 for the stranger, 710, 716 between women and men, 124, 127, 157, 162–64, 176

loyalty to God, 1068, 1077–78, 1092, 1115. See also Israel (nation/people):
 relationship to God motivation for, 1209, 1227

LURIA, ISAAC, 783

lying. See deception and subterfuge

M

Maacah, 104, 296

MACCOBY, HAYM, 999

Machir, 296, 1005

Machpelah, cave of, 113–15, 281, 295, 297–98

magic. See divination; necromancy and necromancers; sorcerers, sorceresses, and sorcery magician-priests, 339, 342–43

MAGONET, JONATHAN, 641

Mahanaim, 175

Mahlah. See Zelophehad's daughters

MAIMONIDES, MOSES, liv, 254, 717–19

MALAMAT, ABRAHAM, 707

“MALBIM,” MEIR, 1242

male dominance of communal life, 473, 808 spiritual leadership and, 610–11
 theme of, 17, 28
 Torah study and, liv, 237

mamzerim (children of prohibited marriages), 1175

Manasseh (person). See Ephraim and Manasseh

Manasseh (tribe), 287, 290, 1054.
See also Zelophehad's daughters

mandrakes, 167–68

manipulators and tricksters. See also deception and subterfuge
 Abraham and Sarah, 63–64
 Jacob, 142–47, 169
 Laban, 163
 Rachel and Leah, 172–73
 Rebekah, 142–44
 Tamar, 215–20, 226

manna, 395–96, 855, 858

MANSI, PAULA DEI, xxxviii

Marah (place), 393, 1016

marginalized, the, 63–64, 107–8, 226, 696–97, 810–11, 1116. See also
 orphans; poor, the; strangers;
 widows
 economic support for, 1102, 1128, 1132–33, 1181
 inequities, 1187–88
 legal protection, 1102, 1180

MARK, DAVID, III

marriage and marital relations, 19, 28, 333–34, 511, 761. See also conjugal rights; remarriage; sexual relations
 arranged or contracted, 121–22, 127, 1203
 conferring status or protection,
 xli–xliii, 191
 endogamous, 148
 exogamous, 141, 151, 239, 511, 514, 859 inheritance and, 1031
 levirate (see levirate marriage) 1186–87
 as metaphor (see marital imagery) political, 1147
 polygynous, xlivi, 53, 1168

property rights and, 1028 of women and divine beings, 25, 38, 55

marriage contract (k'tubah), 1109

masculine, grammatical (Hebrew) as referring to males, 92, 400, 438, 742, 760, 1084, 1110

2nd-person, as inclusive, 8,
 414–16, 418, 430, 445, 622, 750

2nd-person, as inclusive, in
 Deuteronomy, 1063, 1120, 1193,
 1199, 1220, 1230

3rd-person, as inclusive, 220, 361,
 572, 756, 920

3rd-person, as inclusive, in Deuteronomy, 1141, 1143, 1150, 1176

Massah and Meribah, 398

matriarchs, li, 127–28, 151. See also under individual names

barrenness of, 70–72, 133–34, 157, 165, 168

covenant (b'rit) and, 76–78, 80, 104–5, 164

merit of, 695

patriarchal lineage and, 103, 291

role in national destiny, 2, 113–14, 122, 133, 136–37, 142–46

status of, 808, 851

matrilineal descent, 1084. See also
 patrilineal descent

matzah. See unleavened bread meal offerings (minchah), 574–76, 589, 596–97

meaning, quest for, 1085

meat consumption of, 44, 395, 686–88, 1120–21, 1126–27
 craving for, 854–56, 858

Medad, 857

Mehetabel, 201

MEIRI, MENACHEM BEN SOLOMON, 932

Melchizedek (king), 68 memory. See also Exodus from Egypt: commemoration of acts of, 1067

 conflicting, 1187–88
 covenantal relationship and, 357 experience of Egypt and Exodus, 365, 369, 1103
 institutionalization of, 1078, 1103
 as motivation or stimulus, 1212–13, 1238 redemption and, 168

men and women. See women and men

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

- menorah. See lampstand, the (menorah)
- menstruation and menstruants, 88, 173, 351–52, 674–75. See also blood consequences, 637–38
- covenant (b'rit) and, 675
- niddah* (menstrual impurity, indecency, purification), 601, 640, 657–58, 668–70, 673
- prohibition of sexual intercourse and, 670, 691, 713–14
- Merari clan, 804, 818
- Meribah, 923–24
- merisms, 358–59, 362, 1253, 1260
- Mesopotamian law, 429. See also jurisprudence: Near Eastern; Laws of Hammurabi
- messengers, divine, 185, 384. See also angels
- Abraham and, 87
 - Balaam and, 942
 - Hagar and, 73
 - Jacob and, 188
 - Lot and, 91–92
- metals, precious, 453, 464, 481, 524, 547–48
- metaphors, 417, 540–41, 1109, 1241.
- MEYERS, CAROL, xxxix, 15, 21, 23, 123, 143, 228, 335, 410, 437, 774–75, 973, 1127, 1262, 1274–75
- mezuzah* (box on doorpost), 1077–78, 1105
- Michal, 137, 1179
- Midian and Midianites, 312–13, 953, 965, 989, 996–98
- Midrash. See interpretation of text and interpretive process
- midwives, xlvi, 166, 309–10, 324
- Mikraot G'dolot* (Rabbinic Bible), liv
- mikveh* (ritual bathing pool), 630–31, 652–53
- Milcah (daughter). See Zelophehad's daughters
- Milcah (Rebekah's grandmother), 52, 54, 103–4, 118–19
- MILGROM, JACOB, 576, 597, 601, 637, 684, 708, 750, 794, 918–19, 1018, 1028
- military camps, 1176–77
- military deferments, 1154–55, 1158, 1179
- military roles and conscription, 775, 792–94. See also warfare
- milk, 1257
- honey and, 874, 898, 1242
- millstones, 362, 1179
- minchah* (meal offering). See meal offerings (minchah)
- MINTZ, ALAN, 129
- Miriam, 401–3, 514–15, 659, 931–34, 970, 1187–88
- Bezalel and, 560–61
 - challenge to Moses, 843–44, 859–64
 - as composer/singer, 392, 1239
 - death of, 922, 924, 931–32, 1264
 - as leader, 893, 922, 1239
 - as prophet, 335, 392, 1284
 - punishment of, 860–64, 1180, 1186
 - role in saving Moses, 311, 324–25
 - water and, 923 (see also Miriam's well)
 - as wife of Caleb, 887
- Miriam of Palmyra, 781
- Miriam of Tadmor, 837
- Miriam's well, 106, 401, 809, 928, 934
- MIRKIN, MARSHA PRAVDER, 255
- mirrors, 498, 536, 539, 549
- miscarriages, 433–34
- Mishkan*. See Tabernacle (Mishkan)
- mixtures, forbidden, 1170. See also shaatnez (mixture)
- Moab and Moabites, 94, 950–52, 965, 996–97, 1018, 1048–50, 1057.
- See also* Balak; Ruth
- Baal-peor episode, 951–55, 1066
 - denial of membership in Israel, 1175–76
- mohar*. See betrothal gift
- mold or fungus. See infections
- Molech, worship of, 711–12
- monarchy, establishment of. See kings
- money, 1127–28
- monolatry, 1070, 1077, 1223, 1255–56, 1280
- monotheism, 388, 417, 511, 1068, 1070, 1082, 1262–63
- MONTAGU, LILY, lvii
- moral order, 782–83. See also ethical behavior
- MORTON, NELLE, 541
- Moses, 357–60, 386, 409–11, 421–22, 515, 1245–46, 1271–72
- birth, rescue, and naming, 310–12
 - burial and mourning, 1281–82, 1285
 - challenges to leadership, 857–64, 869, 893–903
 - children, 319–20, 409
 - death of, 1281–83, 1285
- divinely appointed mission, 315–19, 334–37, 1273–74
- divine revelation and, 416, 443, 509, 835
- farewell speeches and poem, 1039–44, 1058–59, 1066–70, 1242–44
- humility of, 312, 911–12
- intercession on behalf of Israelites, 503, 506, 877, 927, 1099–1100, 1246
- intermediary between God and Israelites, 548, 1075–76
- as leader, 312, 401, 491–92, 502, 523, 843, 855–56, 1043, 1281
- preparation of Israelites for death of, 974, 1235–45, 1263–64
- as prophet, 1099, 1150, 1283
- punishment of, 924, 984, 1065, 1247–48, 1264
- relationship with God, 507–9, 512–13, 1065
- teaching role, 1063–81 (see also Moses: farewell speeches and poem)
- Torah authorship, xxxvi–xxxviii
- transformation, 512–13
- wife (see Zipporah)
- mother of Rebekah, 122
- mothers and motherhood, 119–20, 1074. See also matriarchs; parents; Shechinah
- honoring, 704, 1074, 1083
 - as protectors, 97–100, 105
 - reversal of maternal instinct, 770–71, 1206, 1211
 - surrogate, 71–72, 166–67, 177
- mourning and lamentation, 214, 609
- for Aaron, 926
 - impurity and, 647–48
 - for Jacob, 292–95
 - for Moses, 1272, 1282
 - for Nadab and Abihu, 621
 - role of women, xlvi, 129–30, 741–42, 1125
 - for Sarah, 114
 - signs of, 250, 709, 876–77, 1125
- m'tzora* (person afflicted with skin or scale disease), 657, 659–62
- murder, 19–20, 45. See also homicide unsolved, 1156–57, 1161
- vengeance, 1022
- musaf* (additional sacrifice), 976
- music, musicians, musical instruments, and performances, xlivi–xlvii, 392, 401

N

Naamah, 21, 35, 53–54
 Naamah (Ammonite), 1057
 NACHMANIDES, MOSES, liv, 203–4,
 468, 695, 716, 1186, 1224–25, 1246
 Nadab and Abihu, 620–22, 632–33, 809
 Nahor, 52
 Nahshon, 402, 793
 name changes
 Abraham and Sarah, 74–76
 Jacob, 186–88, 196
 Joseph, 239
 Joshua, 872
 naming of children, xlv
 Eve's, 19, 26
 Hagar's, 73
 Joseph's, 240, 254
 Leah's and Zilpah's, 165, 167–68
 Moses', 409
 by midwives, 166
 Rachel's and Bilhah's, 166, 168,
 197, 203–4
 Rebekah's, 137
 Sarah's, 97
 Tamar's, 220
 Naomi, 753, 776–77. See also Ruth Naphtali (tribe), 1279 narratives, 374–75, 691. See also stories national destiny, 2. See also Exodus from Egypt; Promised Land; promises, divine
 land and progeny, 1193–94
 women's roles, 122, 133, 136–37, 142–46, 215 (see also foreign wives; matriarchs) national identity. See group and national identity natural order, 782–83
 nazirites, 826–28, 837
 Near East, ancient, 192, 456–57, 484, 755. See also goddesses, Near Eastern; gods, Near Eastern curses, 770
 law, 429, 433–34, 694, 821
 Nebo, 1002, 1263, 1281
 necromancy and necromancers, 712, 715, 1150. See also divination, sorcerers, sorceresses, and sorcery
 nefesh (person), 575, 579, 582
 Neith (goddess), 239
 Nephilim, 25, 874, 886
 New Year, the (Jewish), 363 niddah. See menstruation and menstruants; purification rituals

P

Nile river, 310, 339–40, 1105
 Noadiah, 1123, 1284
 Noah (male), 24–26, 37–46, 53–54, 689
 Noah's sons' wives, 39–40, 43
 Noah's wife, 35, 39–40, 43, 53–54
 Noah (female). See Zelophehad's
 daughters
 Noahite laws, 37, 44
 Numbers, book of (overview), 787–88 numbers, symbolic forty, 874, 1041
 seven (see seven (symbolic number)) seventy, 47, 1255
 ten, 337–38
 twelve, 382, 442, 478–79
 nursing (lactation), 97, 106, 333, 1257. See also breast-feeding; wet nurses

O

oaths, 116–17, 284, 399, 989–96.
See also vows
 during childbirth, 651–52
 women and, 992–96
 obedience, 767
 rewards of, 1105–6, 1110, 1200–1201, 1210, 1226–27
 occupations, women's. See roles, women's; women: professions offerings. See sacrificial offerings
 Og of Bashan, 930
 Oholiab, 499, 528
 oil for anointing, 483, 498, 535, 556, 609, 621
 olah (burnt offering). See burnt offerings (olah)
 olive oil, 475, 524. See also oil for anointing
 omens, searching. See divination
 Onan, 216
 On's wife, 910 oppression, 107–8
 of Israelites, 308–10, 320–22 psychological, 760–61 oracles, 456, 944–51. See also
 divination
 Oral Torah (Oral law), xlix–l, lii–liii, 1030 orphans, 438, 971–72, 1181, 1195.
See also fatherless, the; marginalized,
 the ostraca, 961, 972–73
 OTTO, RUDOLF, 541

P

Pact (covenant document), 397, 455, 476, 806. See also tablets of the Pact parents, 417–18, 422. See also fathers; mothers and motherhood abuse of, 712, 1198
 honoring, 704, 1074, 1083
 transmitting tradition and values, 1085 passover sacrifice, 363–66, 369, 372, 843, 848–49
 centralization of, 1131–32
 patriarchs, 124, 1092. See also Abraham; Isaac; Jacob
 divine promises to, 65, 68–70, 74–76, 138, 772–73 (see also covenant (b'rit), God and patriarchs (and descendants))
 merit of, 694
 patrilineages. See genealogies
 patrilineal descent, 255–56, 641.
See also matrilineal descent pawns, 1179
 peace, pursuit of, 1160–61
 Peniel (place), 188, 204
 PERSON, HARA E., 1032
 Pesach (Feast of Matzot), 363–65,
 367, 1131–32
 Pharaoh (enslavement period),
 309–11, 313
 Pharaoh (Exodus period), 320
 defiance of, 324
 hardening of heart, 337, 349, 357, 374–75, 382
 plagues and, 339–48
 Pharaoh (Joseph period), 235–37,
 252, 271–72
 Pharaoh (patriarchal period), 63–64,
 78–79
 Pharaoh's daughter, 311–12, 324–25, 373, 887
 Philistines, 381
 Phinehas, 336, 951, 953–54, 963–64, 982–84
 pidyon haben (redemption of the first-born son), 371, 511, 781–82, 805 pigs. See swine pilgrimage festivals. See festivals pillars of cloud, 382, 562–63, 850, 853, 1241 of fire, 382, 562–63, 850
 Pisgah, 1263, 1281
 plagues
 in Egypt, 338–47, 358–61

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

- punishment for apostasy, 952–53 punishment for craving meat, 858 punishment for rebelling, 901–3, 937
- PLASKOW, JUDITH, lvii
- PLAUT, W. GUNTHER, 1282
- pledges, conditional. See vows
- poems and poetry, lx–lxiii Torah and, lxi–lxiii
 women and, lxiii–lxiii
- poetic devices. See literary devices
- poetry, biblical, 1253, 1273–80. See also Song of Miriam; Song of Moses; Song at the Sea
 Balaam, 945–51
 composed by women, 1239–40, 1247, 1251–52
 as laments, 130
- Polytheism, 388. See also monolatry; monotheism
- pomegranates (decorative). See vestments, priestly
- poor, the, 438–39, 705, 750. See also marginalized, the
- portions for priests. See priests and priesthood
- posts, sacred, 1144
- Potiphar, 220–23
- Potiphar's wife, 210, 221–23, 226
- Potiphera, 239, 253
- prayers, 186, 1065, 1083 efficacy of, 151, 176–77, 651 for Miriam, 864–65
Sh'ma and V'ahavta passages, 1077, 1083, 1105
- pregnancy, 27. See also miscarriages; Rebekah; reproduction
- priestly blessing, 829, 837
- priests and priesthood, 589–90, 593–600, 603, 723, 776, 801. See also Aaron; chief priests; daughters: of priests; women: exclusion from priesthood clan system and, 909 clothing (see vestments, priestly) consecration, investiture, or ordination, 482–86, 555–58, 603–7 disqualified, 729, 743
 economic compensation, 596–600, 602, 608, 622–23, 730–31, 905–7, 1148 family of, 568, 695, 725–28, 741, 743, 776 hereditary, 788, 963–64, 982
- impurity and, 579–80, 725
 Levites and, 818, 846–47, 897, 1148–49 responsibilities, 621–23, 725, 904–5 ritual items, 477–80, 550–51
 sacrificial offerings and, 571, 575
 skin disease and, 643–44, 659 procreation, 650–51. See also barrenness; fertility; reproduction difficulty of, 16, 28, 71–72
 importance of, 8, 28, 44, 53
 Promised Land, 873–75, 886, 1095–96
 boundaries of, 1042–43 ceremonies upon entering, 1196–98 laws and, 1118
 loss of, 1201–2
 Moses and, 1281 (see also Moses: punishment of) possession or settlement of, 510, 1101 rationale for conquest of, 688, 693, 1051–52
 as reward for obedience, 1103–6, 1200–1201 promises, divine, 116–17, 314–17, 506, 1044–47, 1110. See also blessings and curses; Horeb ambiguity of, 150, 1042–43 to Hagar, 73–74, 100 holiness requirement, 714–15
 to Israel (nation/people), 441–42, 1045, 1106 to patriarchs, 65, 68–70, 76–80, 284–87, 948, 1193–94
- property
 consecrated, 776–77
 offenses, 435–36, 820–21
 proscribed, 778
 rights, 982–86, 1028, 1153 (see also inheritance; Zelophehad's daughters)
- prophets and prophecy, 859, 1149–51. See also Aaron; Deborah (judge and prophet); Huldah; Jeremiah; Miriam; Moses; Noadiah false, 857, 1123
 as intercessors, 1099
 women, li, lvi, 1122, 1150, 1284
- prostitutes and prostitution, xlvii, 709, 727–28, 1177, 1241
- psoriasis. See skin or scale disease (tzaraat)
- Puah, 309, 324
- punishment, 836, 858, 901–3, 937, 1224. See also blessings and curses; rewards and punishment
 Aaron, 924
 for apostasy, 952–53, 1259–61 for disobedience, 1105, 1198, 1201–7
 Dathan and Abiram, 899–900
 Egyptians, 339–47, 360–61, 367, 374, 385
 ethical implications, 362
 Eve and Adam, 16–17, 27, 29
 Golden Calf episode, 505–6
 Korah, 900–901
 for lack of faith, 877–78
 Miriam, 860–64
 Moses, 924, 984, 1065
 Nadab and Abihu, 620–22, 632–33
 public executions, 1145
 reconsideration of, 1260–61
 sacrificial offerings and, 601–2
 skin or scale disease (tzaraat), 642–43, 672 stoning, 712, 739–40, 884, 1173
 transgenerational, 1181 of a wife, 825, 1183
 of women, 204–5
- purgation offerings (chatat), 578–84, 597–98, 617–19, 621–23
 childbirth and, 641–42, 651–52
- purification rituals, 673, 684–85, 921, 999
 after childbirth, 639
 Greek and Near Eastern, 631, 639
niddah (illustration), 919–20
 ritual washing, 604, 630–31
 for skin or scale disease, 660–61
- purity, ritual, 601, 637–79 communal, 819–21
 ensuring, 920–21
 renewing, 568, 642
- purple (dye color), 453, 467, 524
- Putiel, 336, 350
- Q
- quails, 858
- Qumran scrolls. See Dead Sea scrolls
- R
- rabbinic literature, I, liii. See also interpretation of text and interpretive process
- RABBI SHLOMO YITZCHAKI (SOLOMON BEN ISAAC). See RASHI

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

Rachel, 161–73, 176–77
 death and burial, 197, 285, 298
 inheritance and, 178–79
 status of, 164, 188, 269, 298

Rachel (granddaughter of Shuthelah), 373

Rachel and Leah, order of the two names, 170

Rahab, li, 421–22, 871

rains, 1105, 1201

RAMBAM. See MAIMONIDES, MOSES

RAMBAN. See NACHMANIDES, MOSES

Rameses (place), 272, 368, 1016

rape or disgrace of Dinah, 190–95, 288

RASHI, liii–liv, 5, 177, 178, 254, 424, 695, 716–17, 719, 810, 965, 971, 1110, 1185, 1186, 1246

ravens, 42, 626

RAVIKOVITCH, DAHLIA, 130

Re (sun god), 360

Rebekah, 52, 103–4, 128, 150–51
 blessing from family, 122–23 courtship and marriage, III, 116–24, 139
 death of, 199, 203
 fertility and motherhood, 131–37

Jacob and, 142–44, 147–48, 150
 mother of, 119
 nurse of (Deborah), 123, 196
 role in national destiny, 122, 133, 136–37, 142–46

rebellions. See also challenges; complaints, Israelite of Dathan and Abiram, 893–900 against God, 875–79, 911, 1243
 Golden Calf episode, 501–6
 of Korah, 893–901
 of Miriam and Aaron, 859–64
 against Moses and Aaron, 902–3 rebuke, 1056–57. See also blessings and curses

reconciliations
 God and Israel, 506–9
 Jacob and Esau, 188–89
 Joseph and his brothers, 263–65, 295–96, 298–99

red cow (red heifer) ritual, 917–19, 932 redemption acts of memory and, 168, 357

 from Egypt, 885, 946 of first-born males (see pidyon haben (redemption of the first-born son)) role of women, 539

Red Sea. See Sea of Reeds

refuge. See cities of refuge relationships, 59. See also women and men

 God and humankind, 39, 44–45, 49, 563
 God and Israelites, 333–34, 357, 363, 501–13, 561 (see also covenant (b'rit), God and Israelites)

God and Moses, 507–9, 512–13, 1285 religion, 439, 1084–85. See also women: religious devotion/practices

remarriage, 1178–79, 1185

remembrance. See memory, acts of renewal, theme of, 3, 5, 42–45, 51–52, 97

reparation offerings (asham), 59, 585–86, 708

repentance, 1224–25, 1228, 1265.
See also t'shuva (return to the right path)

Rephidim, 397–98, 1016

reproduction, 587, 650–51. See also barrenness; fertility; procreation resident aliens, 1044, 1102–3, 1220.

See also strangers retribution/wrath, divine, 877–79, 893–94, 899–903, 937, 952–53, 1221–22. See also blessings and curses; disobedience; punishment

Reuben, 245–46, 255, 1284–85
 Bilhah and, 198, 690, 1278
 blessing from Jacob, 288

Reuben (tribe), 1002, 1007, 1054, 1275

Reuel. See Hobab; Jethro revelation, lvi, 507–10. See also Moses: divine revelation and contemporary, lvi–lix at Sinai, 347, 412–21

 women and, lvi–lix, 422–24

rewards and punishment, 418, 782, 1092, 1103–6, 1266. See also blessings and curses; punishment

RICH, ADRIENNE, 130

ritual, 610–11, 620

ritual immersion, 652–53

ritual impurity. See impurity, ritual ritual objects, 477–80, 550–51. See also Tabernacle (mishkan) Canaanite, III8–19

ritual purity. See purity, ritual

ritual washing, 639, 661

robes, priestly, 481, 552

roles, women's, xliii–xlvii

aromatic substances production, 528

arts and crafts, 528–29

baking and bread making, 364, 399, 599, 882, 887, 1108 (see also bread: preparation of)

at entrance of the Tent of Meeting, 536

olive oil production, 475, 524 provision of food and water, 393–95, 624, 770 (see also water: drawing of) textile production, 460, 467, 522, 527, 560, 595, 603–4

ROSENBERG, DAVID, xxxvii

Rosh Chodesh, 977–78
 women and, 372–73, 515, 561, 1109

RUANE, NICOLE, 573, 641

RUKEYSER, MURIEL, Ix–lxI, lxiii

Ruth, 166, 716, 1092
 book of, 705, 753, 1240
 role in national destiny, 122, 215, 1057

S

Sabbath. See Shabbat

sabbatical year, 750, 762–63, 1129–31.
See also jubilee (fiftieth year)

sacred objects, 806. See also ritual objects sacrificial offerings, 569–88, 667, 732, 880–84. See also animal sacrifices additional (musaf), 976

 burnt (olah), 572–74, 595–96, 608, 881

centralization of (at Chosen Place), III8, 1127–28

child (see child sacrifice)

childbirth and, 641–42, 651–52

consumption, 596–97, 776

daily, 486

dough (challah), 882, 887 elevation (t'nufah), 526, 548–49

human, 101–3, 370–71

meal (minchah), 574–76, 589, 596–97

occasions and procedures, 571, 595–603, 976–81

priests and, 482–85, 571, 575, 776

purgation (chatat), 578–84, 617–19, 621–23

reparation (asham), 585–86, 708

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

- replacement of, 610–11
for scale disease or abnormal discharge, 661–62, 667 well-being (sh'lammim), 576–78, 599–602, 704–5, 881 women's participation, 570, 572, 976 sages, 339
salt, 907
Samaria Ostraca. See ostraca
Samson, 826
Samuel, 826
sanctuary, the. See also shrines; Tabernacle (Mishkan); Tent of Meeting contamination and, 664 economic resources (votary pledges), 773–80
impurity and, 617, 637, 648, 657, 684
Sarah/Sarai, 35, 59, 61–64
Abraham and, 51–52, 54, 63–64, 76–77, 79, 88, 107–8, 128
death and burial, 111–15, 126
Hagar and, 71–73, 78–79
maternal role, 97–98, 101, 105–6
name change, 76, 79
promise of a child, 76–77, 88, 97
SARNA, NAHUM, 327, 432
SASSON, JACK, 1127
Saul (king), 1006
scaly affection (nega tzaraat), 643
scapegoat ritual, 684. See also Azazel
SCARRY, ELAINE, 129
SCHINDLER, ALEXANDER, 255 scouts (reconnaissance of Canaan), 869–76, 879, 886–89, 1044–47
Sea of Reeds, 359, 381, 383–92
Second Passover (pesach sheni), 848–49 seduction of unbetrothed woman, 437, 1174 self-definition (of individual), 672 self-definition and revelation of God to Israelites, 333–34, 349, 417 to Moses, 315–16, 510
to patriarchs, 69, 160
self-definition of Israel. See group and national identity Septuagint, 1255, 1262
Serah, 268, 276, 372, 969, 984
SERED, SUSAN STARR, 130, 611
serpents (snakes and sea creatures), 14, 16, 338, 927 servant of Abraham, 116–22 servants, indentured, 429–31, 447, 755–59, 1130–31. See also slaves and slavery seven (symbolic number), 39, 338–39, 351 completeness, wholeness, or perfection, 336, 453, 477, 482, 550, 944, 1095 creation or order, 9, 557, 683 seventh year. See sabbatical year sexual identity, 781, 820 sexuality, xliv–xlvi, 19, 30, 653
conjugal rights, 432
responsibility for, 17, 27–28, 437 sexual relations, 351–52, 414–15, 696–97. See also Judah: Tamar and betrothed woman, 1173–74
ethical implications, 697
Eve and Adam, 19, 22
after the Flood, 54
laws, 568, 1171–75
niddah (menstrual impurity) and, 638, 669–70 prohibited, 689–94, 716, 955, 1175, 1198–99 Sarah and Abraham, 88
unbetrothed woman, 437, 1174 sexual slavery, 205
s'FAS EMES, 911
s'firot (aspects of God), 351
SFORNO, OBADIAH, liv, 468, 538–39, 695, 718 shaatnez (mixture), 707, 1170
Shabbat, 9
observance, 500, 523, 759, 1073–74 prohibition of work, 395, 418, 733–34 violation of, 884
Shaddai. See God, names and titles of Shasu, 874
shaving, 661
Shavuot (Feast of Weeks), lvii, 351–52, 1132–33, 1193
Sheba (son of Bichri), 1160
Shechem (person), 190–95
Shechem (place), 62, 191, 287
Shechinah, 28, 351–52, 468, 538, 1266–67
shekel. See weights and measures
Shelomith, 723, 738–39, 742–43
Shem, 38–40, 43, 48
Sheol (netherworld), 245, 901, 1259
shepherds, 270, 312–13
Shiloh, 774
Shiprah, 309, 324
Shirat Haazinu. See Song of Moses Shittim, 955
shivah (mourning period), 294, 633, 741. See also burial places and practices; mourning and lamentation
sh'lammim. See well-being offerings (sh'lammim) Sh'ma and V'ahavta passages, 1077, 1083, 1105
shrines central, 1115–16, 1118–20, 1149, 1240 (see also sanctuary, the) local, 771
Shunammite, the, 982–83
sibling rivalry, 2, 19–20, 164–68, 286.
See also favoritism absence of, 300
Jacob's children, 211–13, 233, 254–55
Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, 859–61 signs and wonders. See plagues Sihon, 1051–52
silence, 55–56, 633
SILVA, CARA DE, 611
Simeon (person), 194, 243, 268, 288
Simeon (tribe), 1275
Sinai (mountain of God), 410, 1274.
See also Horeb; revelation women and the Revelation at, 407, 413, 416, 419, 423–24 sins. See transgressions
skin or scale disease (tzaraat), 642–49 diagnosing and containing, 643–48, 659, 663
impurity and, 657
Miriam and, 637, 642–43, 659, 672
restrictions, 648 slaves and slavery, 71, 757. See also bondage; labor: forced; servants, indentured compensation, 361–62 freedom from, 339
in Israelite culture, 71–72, 429–32, 756–57
redemption of, 757–58, 760
runaway, 1177
women as slaves and as slave owners, 71, 98, 166, 430–31, 445–48, 707–8, 760 (see also sexual slavery) slaying of first-born sons interpretations, 373–75
plagues and, 359, 361, 367

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

social justice, 586, 747–52. See also justice
 Sodom and Gomorrah, 48, 91–93, 1222, 1268
 SOFER, MOSES, 1006
 Solomon (king), 252–53, 1147
 Song at the Sea, 386–92, 400–401, 1260
 Song of Miriam, 386–87, 392
 Song of Moses, 1242–44, 1246–47, 1251–63 sons, 1168–69, 1185–86. See also children; heirs, designation; slaying of first-born sons soot (plague), 345
 sorcerers, sorceresses, and sorcery, 339, 437–38. See also divination; necromancy and necromancers sotah (wayward wife), 821–25, 836–39
 SPERLING, S. DAVID, 310 spies. See scouts (reconnaissance of Canaan) spinning. See textiles spirits, 710, 712, 715
 spiritual identity, 412–13, 719 spiritual leadership. See leaders and leadership standard (degel), 797, 809
 STANTON, ELIZABETH CADY, xxxviii
 STEIN, DAVID, xxxiii–xxxiv, 7, 10, 47, 70, 1022, 1070, 1092, 1274
 STERN, CHAIM, xxxiii
 stoning, 712, 739–40, 884, 1173
 stories. See also creation stories; flood stories; narratives birth, 310
 founding and origin stories, 1–2, 7–24, 61–62, 73, 326–27 mythological, 22, 387
 strangers. See also marginalized, the; resident aliens laws equally binding on, 882–83
 treatment of, 438–39, 710, 716, 750, 1102–3
 subterfuge. See deception and subterfuge succession of leadership. See leaders and leadership succession of property. See property
 Succoth (place), 368
 Sukkot (Feast of Booths), 737, 979–81, 1133, 1240
 Suph, 1041. See also Sea of Reeds surrogate motherhood. See mothers and motherhood

Susanna, 1145
 swine, 625
 symbolism, 539–41. See also numbers, symbolic synagogues, 469–70
 syncretism, 1144

T

Taberah, 854
 Tabernacle (Mishkan), 469–70, 538, 553–58, 829–35. See also sanctuary, the; Tent of Meeting altar, 464–65, 535–36, 830 constructing and structure, 451–66, 468–69, 530–32 courtyard and enclosure walls, 463–66, 535–37 dismantling, transporting, and setting up, 796, 852 interior furnishings, 453–59, 487–88, 525, 532–35, 560 maintenance of, 737–38 of the Pact, 547
 purity of, 904–5, 920–21
 role of, 789, 796–98
 service at, 775
 women and, 561 (see also roles, women's: textile production) tablets of the Pact, 504, 509, 533, 1101. See also Pact talents. See weights and measures
 talion formula. See jurisprudence: lex talionis
 Tamar (Amnon's half-sister), 191–92, 211, 690, 876–77, 1199
 Tamar (Judah's daughter-in-law), 209, 215–20, 227, 277–78, 761, 1182–83 tambourine. See drums and drum playing tassels, 1170–71
 tattoos, 709
 technical expertise. See knowledge
 Temple (in Jerusalem), 538, 1119, 1202, 1240
 Ten Commandments. See Decalogue Tent of Meeting, 456, 476, 487, 526, 572, 588. See also sanctuary, the; Tabernacle (Mishkan) access to, 801–2
 impurity and, 621, 683
 location where leaders meet God, 507–9, 860, 1241
 sanctity of, 807
 women and, 452, 467, 489, 536

test of faith motif, 394, 1094–96
 TEUBAL, SAVINA, 51, 80
 textiles, 452, 467, 527, 595
t'fillin (phylacteries), 370–71, 1077–78, 1105
 thanksgiving offerings, 599–600
 theft, 436, 705–6. See also Decalogue Tiamat (goddess), 5, 29, 35, 40, 389, 1277 timbrel. See drums and drum playing TIGAY, JEFFREY, 1073, 1081, 1195, 1240, 1242, 1257–59, 1263, 1279, 1282
tikkun (mending or repairing), 31, 153 time, concept of, 9
 Tirzah. See Zelophehad's daughters tithes and titheing, 778, 1121, 1127–28, 1194–95
 Levites and, 907–8, 1021, 1128, 1195
 widows and orphans and, 1128, 1195 t'nuah. See elevation offerings (t'nuah)
 TODD, ALEXANDRA DUNDAS, 865
to'evah (abhorrent to God), 1094
 toil and labor, 16, 27. See also labor torah (ritual), 595
torah (teaching), xxxi, 515, 1042, 1071–81, 1115, 1196 adherence to, 1066–67, 1229, 1263 authorship of, 1246 availability and inclusiveness of, 1226–27, 1230–31, 1240, 1245–46, 1274
 interpretation of, 1229
 kings and, 1147
 safeguarding and transmitting, 1077–79, 1239–40, 1243–46
 Torah, the, xxxvi–xl
 authorship and dating of, xxxvi–xxxvii study of (by women), liv, 237, 1109 Tower of Babel, 35, 49–50, 56 transformations, 186, 672
 Abraham, 70, 74
 collective, 685–86
 Eve and Adam, 16–18
 Israel (nation/people), 545, 1224–25
 Jacob, 159–60, 186–88
 Joseph's brothers, 254–55
 Judah, 245–46, 277–78
 Moses, 512–13
 transgressions, 13–14, 1098. See also punishment; rebellions; rebuke; rewards and punishment; t'shuva (return to the right path)

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

as cause of the Flood, 55–56
 consequences of, 829
 inadvertent, 883–84
 sexual, 955
 Sodom and Gomorrah and, 91–93 treaties, 1199–1207
 between God and Israelites (see covenant (b'rit), God and Israelites) between Jacob and Laban, 174–75
 Near Eastern suzerain-vassal, 1092, 1101, 1117, 1199–1200
 Tree of Knowledge, 11
 Tree of Life, 18
 trees, 737
 symbolic value, 540–41
 warfare and, 1156
TRIBLE, PHYLLIS, xxxix tribes of Israel, 1197. See also ancestral houses; clan system blessings from Jacob, 287–91 blessings from Moses, 1275–79 camping and marching orders, 792–800, 851–52 gifts to the Tabernacle, 829–35
t'rumbah (voluntary offerings), 453, 468–69
t'shuvah (return to the right path), 254–55 tunics. See vestments, priestly twelve (symbolic number), 382, 442, 478–79
tzaraat (skin or scale disease).
 See skin or scale disease (tzaraat)
Tzenah U-r'enah, xxxviii–xxxix, liv–lv tzitzit (tassels), 884–85

U
 unleavened bread, 364–65, 367–68, 370, 599
 Ur (city), 51
 Urim and Thummim, 480, 605, 975, 1276

V
 values, 1085. See also ethical behavior Vassal Treaty of Esarhaddon, 1200 veil motif, 123, 217, 227
 vengeance, 707, 1022, 1031
 vestments, priestly, 473, 480–82, 490–91, 549–53, 609 ordination and, 604–5
 women and production of, 476–77, 560, 595, 603–4

Yom Kippur and, 682 victories, military. See warfare violence, 107–8
 as cause of the Flood, 26, 37–38
 Golden Calf episode, 505
 redirecting, 569, 589–90
 Simeon and Levi and, 194–95, 288
 against women, 78, 107–8, 204–5 (see also abuse)
 virgins, 726, 729
 vitiligo. See skin or scale disease (tzaraat) votary pledges and votive offerings, 600, 773–80 vows, 765, 773–74, 989–96. See also Jephthah; Jephthah's daughter; oaths consequences of, 1005, 1008–9 men and, 991–92
 nazirites, 826, 993
 women and, 774, 780–81, 992–96, 1006–9
 vultures, 626

W

wanderings. See journeys warfare, 926. See also military roles and conscription Amalekites and, 398–99
 Amorites and, 928–29
 avoiding, 1160–61
 laws of, 1154–56, 1158
 women and, 1160–61
WASHBOURN, PENELOPE, 674
 water, 1254
 of bitterness, 823–24
 drawing of, 118, 628, 1220
 Exodus and, 339
 lack of, 393, 397–98, 400, 923–24
 of lustration, 917, 919–20, 999
 Miriam and, 923
 perpetually flowing, 660
 purification agent, 660, 682, 684–85, 921
 spirituality and, 652–53
 weaning, 312
 weaving, 467, 595. See also roles, women's: textile production; textiles WEGNER, JUDITH, 568 weights and measures
 cubit, 455
 eifah (dry measure), 397, 977 fair practices and, 710, 1183–84

hin (liquid measure), 881, 977 shekel, 548–49
 talent, 548–49
WEINFELD, MOSHE, 1208
WEISSLER, CHAVA, lv, 887
 well (water). See also water, drawing Abraham's servant meets Rebekah, 118–19 of Hagar, 74
 Jacob meets Rachel, 161–62
 of Miriam, 106, 401, 809
 Moses meets Zipporah, 313
 poem, 928
 well-being offerings (sh'lammim), 576–78, 599–602, 609, 704–5, 881
 thanksgiving offerings, 599–600
 votive and free will offerings, 600 wet nurses, 123, 311–12
 wickedness. See transgressions widows, 228–29, 728–29, 731, 1108–9, 1181, 1195. See also marginalized, the wife-sister episodes, 63–65, 95–96, 138–39 wings, 1256–57, 1266 wisdom, 339, 514–15, 529, 539. See also knowledge desire for, 14
 Miriam and, 561
 "wise woman" (unnamed), 276, 1160
 witchcraft. See divination;
 necromancers and necromancy;
 sorcerers, sorceresses, and sorcery
 witnesses, 1074
 false, 1153–54
 women as, 1145, 1158–59
 wives, xli–xlvi, 144. See also adultery; foreign wives; marriage and marital relations; women: vows of accused of adultery, 821–25 secondary, 269, 275–76 (see also concubines) woman of En-dor. See En-dor, medium of women, xli–xlviii, 3–4, 9, 29, 116, 696–97. See also matriarchs;
 mothers and motherhood; roles, women's; widows; wives access to the divine realm, 710, 715 as authors and poets, lx–lxiii, 1239–40, 1247, 1251–52 (see also Miriam; Song of Miriam) autonomy of, 909, 1144, 1221 (see also inheritance; vows)
 betrothed and unbetrothed (see sexual relations) captive, 876, 1167

INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND CITED AUTHORS

- women (continued)

commandments, observance of, 742, 887, 1109

domain of, 119–20, 514, 624 economic roles of, xlivi–xlvii, 775, 780 (see also roles, women's) education of children, xlv–xlvi (see also children)

exclusion from priesthood, 456, 483, 489, 603, 638 genealogies and (see genealogies: women and) inclusion of, 419, 1073, 1230–31 (see also gender, social) inheritance by (see inheritance; Rachel; Zelophehad's daughters)

kinship and, 47, 125, 690, 996 leadership role, xlviii, 893–94, 1230, 1239 (see also Deborah (judge and prophet); Miriam) legal protection, 433, 982–86 (see also land; widows; Zelophehad's daughters) origins of, 4, 9, 12–13, 28, 30

professions, xlvii–xlvii as prophets (see prophets and prophecy: women)

Rabbinic view, l–liii, 810 religious devotion/practices, xlvi–xlvii, 587–88, 611, 631, 771, 774, 976, 1132–35

reproductive role, 18, 80, 105, 152–53, 310–12

as ritual specialists, xlvii, 610–11, 615

role in national destiny, 122, 133, 136–37, 142–46, 227–28, 310–12, 324, 539

slaves and slavery, 431, 445–48, 707–8, 756–57, 760

status of, 190–92, 275–76, 692, 863, 989, 1230–31 (see also daughters) transportation by donkey, 942 vows of, 774, 780–81, 992–96

women and men, 99

as equals or in partnership, 9–13, 17, 22, 79, 526, 538 world, the, 5, 12. See also creation stories goodness of, 9, 13

 mending/repairing of (tikkun), 31

worship, 320, 339–41, 572, 588, 590, 1078. See also sacrificial offerings worship of false gods, 1123–24. See also apostasy; idols and idolatry

- Y

Yalta, lii

Yannai (poet), 490

Y-H-V-H (personal name of God)

 revelation of name to Moses, 333–34

 in the present translation, 9–10, 316
- Yirmatia (Domitia), 781

Yiscah, 52, 54

Yom Kipur (Day of Atonement), 736 rituals, 682, 685–86

 sacrificial offerings, 694
- Z

zav (man with abnormal bodily discharge). See discharges, bodily zavah (woman with abnormal genital bleeding). See menstruation and menstruants

Zebulun (tribe), 1278

Zelophehad's daughters, 750–51, 961, 971–74, 982–86, 1013–14. See also inheritance

 legal rights and, 1033

 marriage, 1025–28, 1032

 as source of anecdotes, 1031

Zillah, 21

Zilpah, 167, 177, 269

Zimri, 954, 964–65, 983–84

Zipporah, 313, 319, 325–26, 409, 422, 863

ZLOTOWITZ, BERNARD, 255

Zohar, 351–52, 469, 490–91

ZORNBERG, AVIVAH GOTTLIEB, 374–75, 503, 562–63

ZUNDEL, HANOKH, 910

Zur, 983–84

Confidential -- for Sefaria conversion use only. May not be shared outside Sefaria.

Confidential -- for Sefaria conversion use only. May not be shared outside Sefaria.